In connection with the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention to be held at Seattle, Washington, October 9-14, Saturday, October 9, has been set apart for a special all-day prayer and Bible service—prayer for wisdom in all the deliberations of the Convention, for showers of blessings, for a deep spiritual uplift, for peace, and for the speedy overthrow of the liquor traffic. We urge that every local union set apart this day, or one near to it, for special prayer and Bible meditation, and that in the home of every white ribboner the altar fires may be kindled anew with earnest prevailing prayer for the Convention and for nationwide prohibition.

The all-day National evangelistic conference for prayer at Seattle will be held in the auditorium of Plymouth Congregational Church, South Avenue and University street, not far from the Lincoln Hotel, where the Executive Committee will be entertained.

MARY E. KUHL,
National W. C. T. U. Evangelistic Superintendent.

ALCOHOL THE CAUSE OF INSANITY

WILLIAM BRADY, M. D., Chicago, Illinois

Alcoholism, propagated by every nation, licensed by the state, is second only to war as a cause of insanity. Not only does it lead directly to mental disease, but it indirectly predisposes to mental and physical deterioration through heredity. Children of alcoholic parents are notoriously liable to be epileptic, imbecile or insane.

BEING INTERVIEWED BY AN ANGEL

A PARABLE

REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON in The Advance

Once on a time there was a business man in a certain town, who believed that the only way to handle the liquor traffic was to license it. He said it was too great and powerful to kill entirely, and the city ought to get some revenue from a necessary evil.

One evening, just as he was getting ready to leave his office, he had an unexpected visitor.

"You will excuse me for coming at this time," said the visitor, "but I will not trouble you long and I may not come again."

"Who are you?" asked the business man, in astonishment, for he had never seen,, in all his life, a person so beautiful and at the same time so sad.

"I am an angel from heaven," said the visitor. "I have been sent down here to see how the sons of men live in their cities, and to ask a few questions. Will you answer some of them?"

"If I am able," faltered the business man, as he gazed in awe at his heavenly visitor.

"Tell me, then, the exact truth. I do not want you to tell me what you have been brought up to believe, but the real facts. You have a thing in this city called the saloon. What is a saloon?"

"A place where intoxicating liquor is sold."

"What is that?"

"A drink made from alcohol."

"What is alcohol?"

"A chemical made from various grains and plants."

"Is it good for the body?"

"No, it is a poisonous drug."

"What effect does it have on a human being?"

"It makes him drunk."

"What is that?"

"When a man is drunk he loses his reason."

"What does he do in that condition?"

"Sometimes he commits murder. He has even been known to kill his own wife and babies while drunk."

"What other things does alcohol do?"

"It makes thousands of people insane, and causes thousands more to be born defective. It creates pauperism, crime and lust. It beggars families, destroys health, robs men and women of natural affections, fills the ranks of those who have to be cared for at public expense, breaks the hearts of fathers and mothers, creates licentious passions and leads thousands of innocent girls into lives of shame. It is mankind's most terrible enemy, destroying his mind, body and soul."

"Why, then, is such a thing as a saloon allowed to exist in this city?"

"Because it is licensed."

"Who does that?"

"The people."

"What people?"

"The citizens."

"Do business men license a saloon?"

"Yes."

"Do they license any other institutions to commit crimes against humanity?"

"No."

"Is there any place on earth where the making and selling of alcohol is called a crime and forbidden?"

"Oh, yes. All Russia forbids it as a crime; also eighteen states in this country."

"Is it called a crime by law?"

"Yes, the highest court we have has repeatedly so declared."

"Why do you license a saloon to commit these crimes?"

"To get the revenue."

"What is that?"

"The license."

"How much is it?"

"One thousand dollars a year."

"How many saloons have you in this town?"

"One hundred."

"How much money is spent in them for alcohol?"

"Two million dollars a year."

"Does your license fee come out of that?"

"Yes."

"Does the saloon pay for the expense of taking care of the public charges caused by drink?"

"Oh, no."

"Who does?"

"We do."

"What does it cost to take care of all the wrecks in this town caused by alcohol?"

"Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year."

"Do business men call that good business?"

"Many of them do."

"Do you?"

"Yes."

"Would you license a gang of burglars to break into so many banks in this town every year for a license, in order to get a revenue from their business?"

"Of course not."

"Does professional burglary do as much harm to society as a saloon?"

"Not a hundredth part as much."

"Why, then, do you license one and not the other?"

"I don't know."

"Can you name any good thing about a saloon?"

"No, only the revenue we get out of it."

"What revenue do you get?"

"One hundred thousand dollars a year."

"But you said you pay two million a year into the saloon?"

"Yes."

"And you said it cost you $250,000 a year to take care of the defectives caused by the alcohol sold by the saloons?"

"Yes."

"Where, then, do you get any revenue."

Then the business man was silent, and the angel's face grew as sad as the face of God when a father walks into the door of a saloon, takes a drink and then goes out and stumbles into the door of his own home to beat into pulp the most beautiful thing on earth. And the business man is still silent. He has not been able to answer the angel's question.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL DAY AT SAN FRANCISCO FAIR, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1915

Mr. Daniel A. Poling sends the following preliminary announcement of the San Francisco meeting to be held under the auspices of the National Temperance Council in connection with the Fair.

The Panama-Pacific Exposition, in recognition of the continent-wide interest in temperance and prohibition, has officially designated Wednesday, October 20, as "National Temperance Council Day" at the great Fair. On this day it is planned to hold several conferences, a platform meeting and perhaps a great parade and outdoor demonstration in the interests of National Prohibition and with special regard for the campaign already launched against the liquor traffic in California. The details of this gathering of the united temperance forces are being arranged by the officers of the National Temperance Council and will be announced within a few weeks.

A local committee made up of representative leaders from the various temperance and religious organizations of the "Bay District" will co-operate with the officers of the National Temperance Council in perfecting plans for what is hoped will prove to be a gathering of far-reaching significance in its emphasis upon united action against the liquor traffic.

The meeting in San Francisco has been arranged to closely follow the National Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held in Seattle, Washington, which closes on the 14th of October. Many delegates who will be on the coast attending this great gathering of white ribboners are planning their return to the East by way of California and will be present at the conference of the National Temperance Council.

Among the distinguished speakers who will address the meeting in San Francisco are: Miss Anna A. Gordon, President of the National W. C. T. U.; Mr. Ernest H. Cherrington, Editor of the American Issue and Publication Manager of the National Anti-Saloon League; Mr. Virgil G. Hinshaw, Chairman of the National Prohibition Committee; Daniel A. Poling, President's Associate of the United Society for Christian Endeavor. The names of other speakers equally prominent will appear in the completed program which will be issued in the near future.

Address all letters for information to Miss Cora F. Stoddard, Secretary Executive Committee National Temperance Council, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

For distribution at county and state fairs you will want a few hundred copies of the "Fair Number" of THE UNION SIGNAL. Read advertisements on pages 10 and 16.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

AUGUST 28—(Birthday of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes)
SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

A Message From the Mountain Top

New Mexico White Ribboners in Convention 6,000 Feet Above the Sea

Special Correspondence

The coming of the white ribbon hosts from the four quarters of the "Sunshine State" to the "Duke City," Albuquerque, for their annual convention was the signal for "little drops of water." The thirsty land responded gratefully at first but the showers increased in volume and the rains descended until it seemed, as one of the welcoming citizens wittily said, that the delegates had brought the brimming water-wagon to Albuquerque and had literally dumped its contents into the city's streets. Nevertheless the convention opened auspiciously in the First Presbyterian church on the evening of July 20, with Miss Harriet L. Henderson, state president, presiding.

The spacious church was made bright and beautiful with flowers, flags and telling posters. Under the able direction of Mrs. C. E. Vaughn, president of the city union, everything had been done by the efficient local committee to emphasize the welcomes which were to be voiced by the city, the commercial club, the lodges, the press, the bar, the medical association, the State University, the city schools, the Y. M. C. A., the Federation of clubs, the Y. W. C. A., the Ministerial Alliance and, last but not least, the city Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The atmosphere was one of good fellowship and cheer, this whole great welcoming body standing 100 per cent for temperance and clean citizenship. The response was most graciously given by Mrs. S. C. Nutter of Clovis, honorary president of the state W. C. T. U.

The opening devotional service was conducted by Mrs. Katharine Patterson of Santa Fe, National superintendent, and the evening's program was interspersed with choice music by gifted local talent.

The showers continued on Wednesday and wraps and umbrellas were necessary, but the people came and a full program was rendered.

Mrs. Almeda Kunkle of Las Vegas, president of the first organized county, led the consecration service which was a fitting beginning for a busy day. The roll call showed a delegation of twenty-eight—a small number when compared with the hosts which come up to the conventions of the great states of the East, but a large number when the long distances, imperfect connections and heavy mileage are considered. The two Roswell delegates started bravely from home in a Ford "two-passenger" but the rains, after the first one hundred and fifty miles of delightful ride, blocked the way and these two undaunted women finished the journey by train. In our work the great West spells courage.

Reports from over the state showed a marked gain in membership over all losses.

As the convention was in session on the birthday anniversary of our beloved National president, Miss Gordon, a telegram of congratulation and loving fidelity was sent to her.

Reports Full of Enthusiasm

Every report had the right ring and the round-table conducted by the president showed the intense interest of the workers. There was manifested an optimistic spirit from first to last and each speaker in the symposium, "Our Victories, Local, County, State, National, and World-wide," seemed anxious to have the opportunity to send forth a shaft of light for the encouragement of the workers present by telling of some victory. Even through the smoke of battle and the din of terrific carnage in our sister countries God's overruling hand was seen in victories for our cause.

There were demonstrations by the Young Campaigners for Prohibition who have been especially busy over the state during the past months.

A fine medal contest was perfectly conducted by the state superintendent, Mrs. Mollie Leaming of the convention city, and although a difficult task was imposed upon the impartial judges, the decision was finally rendered in favor of Miss Grace Longfellow.

An organ recital was a very enjoyable feature of the evening's program and a brief crayon talk by Mrs. Maude L. Greene, a National W. C. T. U. cartoonist. A solo by Mrs. Bradford was beautifully rendered and the glee club rounded out the evening with fitting selections.

The business hours of the convention were kept to schedule time. In the memorial service led by Mrs. Greene the thought of life and not of death was emphasized. The dear workers who had passed from sight during the year were tenderly remembered by those who knew them best. Miss Henderson spoke most appreciatively of our beloved National treasurer, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, whose loss is felt by all. Mrs. Sutton of Albuquerque sang beautifully "He Knows, My Father Knows."

Prohibition Rally Closes Convention

A prohibition rally was the logical close of this most enjoyable convention. Strong addresses were made by leading men in this world-wide movement, among them Rev. Edward Raley of Phoenix, Arizona, who gave positive assurance of the success of prohibition in Arizona where prohibition does prohibit and the lid is on to stay.

Only one change was made in the roster of general officers of the state. Mrs. Ella O. Wood, of Santa Fe, who has for fifteen years given faithful and efficient service as treasurer, wished this year to be relieved. Her resignation was regretfully accepted and Mrs. Laura Ross of Roswell was elected to fill her place.

A belated midnight train bore the state general officers and a goodly number of the delegates to the beautiful park at Mountainair where the state Chautauqua was in session. The hospitable lodge of the state W. C. T. U. opened wide its doors and the genial hostess, the state superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, Mrs. Anna Wilde Strumquist, extended a hearty welcome.

July 23 was W. C. T. U. Day at Chautauqua, and it proved the crowning occasion of the assembly. The address of the afternoon, "The Challenge to Christianity," was given by Dr. Charles Darling of the Presbyterian church of Roswell. A medal contest by three young ladies and one young gentleman delighted the audience. Charming music was interspersed through the afternoon and evening program. Short addresses were given by Miss Henderson, by the new treasurer, Mrs. Ross, "Wayside Notes" by Mrs. Mason of Roswell and a study in chalk by Mrs. Greene. The evening address by Judge E. E. Abbott of the Santa Fe district court was enthusiastically received. His message was strong and uncompromising. With such men on the firing line we shall win. A beautiful pantomime of "The Ten Virgins," given by Mrs. Strumquist's class of young ladies, was most charmingly rendered and received the ovation it deserved, thus closing a perfect day and a perfect week for the

PLACE YOUR ORDER

Fair Number of The Union Signal

which will be the issue of August 26

Always a popular number and in demand for distribution at fairs and out of door meetings.

Special price, $1.50 per hundred.

Order early and avoid disappointment as the run is based on advance orders.

THE UNION SIGNAL
Evanston, Ill.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Des Moines River Valley at Boone, Iowa

An unbroken trip across the continent is a wearisome journey, but no one will get overtired who travels on the White Ribbon Special to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle in October, for the journey will be enlivened by several stops.

First, will be the day in Chicago, October 5. Many will arrive on early morning trains and will go direct to the North Western Station, where final details in regard to tickets and sleepers may be arranged. It is expected that a special room will be provided where hand baggage may be checked. A visit to Evanston in the morning, leaving on the 10:20 train from Chicago, to see National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage, so full of mementos of Miss Willard and now the home of Miss Gordon, will be greatly enjoyed. Lunch may be procured in Evanston and the visitors may return to Chicago on the 1:08 train and will reach there in time to join the party that will visit the great Marshall Field department store. If Miss Adams is notified in advance, guides will be provided who will conduct the parties through the entire establishment, and it is well worth a visit.

The few hours until the White Ribbon Special leaves the North Western station at 7:15 p. m. can be well employed in sightseeing. Dinner should be eaten before boarding the train, as the diners will not be attached until Wednesday morning.

Parties arriving in Chicago too late to go to Evanston in the morning can take a train at 2 p. m., returning at 5:17. The tour through the Field store can also be made in the morning at ten if preferred.

Our first long stop will be at Omaha, Wednesday morning, a little too early for a demonstration but long enough to get off the train and fill our lungs with fresh air. Comrades from South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa will probably join us here or en route.

Delegates desiring to board the train at any point en route can do so if we are notified long enough in advance to arrange for the train to stop. We reach Cheyenne, Wyoming, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Here delegates from Missouri, Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, and Colorado will join us. As we will remain here for two hours, there will be opportunity for a public meeting, and we can have a little part in the campaign. A half hour at Pocatello, Idaho, where the W. C. T. U. will arrange some kind of a demonstration; another half hour stop at Payette, where the delegates from the South Idaho state W. C. T. U. convention will come to the train in a body, will serve to make Thursday pass quickly. Friday morning will find us in Pendleton and from there on the journey for two hundred miles along the banks of the Columbia River will be full of interest. We are scheduled to arrive in Portland Friday afternoon. Many things are being planned for our entertainment and pleasure and we will enter our train in time to leave at eleven o'clock that night. When we awaken Saturday morning, we will be in Seattle, and can remain in our sleepers until 7:30.

Of the return journey and its many attractions, we will tell you later.

Some Things to Remember

The train will stop at large stations en route to receive delegates and visitors if notified in advance.

All desiring to go to Evanston or to visit Marshall Field's store must send in their names, specifying which place they desire to visit, and at what hour.

Sleeping car reservations must be made in advance. Every effort will be made to assign accommodations asked for, but unless requests are received by September 25 the railroad company cannot guarantee to do so, inasmuch as equipment must be ordered long enough ahead to secure it.

Accommodations will be assigned in order of their reception.

All correspondence in reference to the trip should be addressed to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill. ELLA A. BOOLE, Chairman.

KATHARINE K. ADAMS, Secretary.

AN OMISSION

In reporting the list of newspapers that espoused the dry cause during the recent local option elections in Alaska, the Alaska Sunday Morning Post, published at Juneau, was inadvertently omitted. The editor, Mrs. Lena Morrow Lewis, in commenting on the omission, says: "For three issues prior to the election, the Post published items and editorials in favor of no-license. The issue which was published the day before the election, (extra copies of which were distributed throughout the town) contained a front page article criticising the attitude of the Commercial Club on the license question, a clipping from the Nome Industrial Worker setting forth the saloon as a parasite institution, and six editorials in defense of the dry side."

Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president of the Alaska W. C. T. U., and our correspondent, asks us to make this acknowledgment of the service rendered to the cause of prohibition by the Post, previous omission of which was entirely unintentional.

WOULD STAY IN PRISON UNTIL SALOONS ARE GONE

With tears in his eyes Charles Boyer, sixty-three years old and a prisoner in the Multnomah county jail, Oregon, pleaded with county officials that he might be kept in the jail until the state goes dry on January 1, 1916. "Every time I get near booze," explained Mr. Boyer, "I get drunk. Every time I get drunk I hire a rig and go for a ride. Every time I go for a ride I forget to bring the horse back to the stable." "We will keep you in jail until January 10," the judge assured the prisoner when he heard the plea. "The state ought to be good and dry by that time."

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Minnesota, Fairmont, Aug. 24-27.
South Carolina, Allendale, Sept. 2-5.
Vermont, Barton, Sept. 8-10.
Maine, Skowhegan, Sept. 14-16.
Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington, Colfax, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Kansas, Newton, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Salt Lake City, Sept. 29-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.

NO IDEA

What Caused the Trouble

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled for some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast, and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum. The change came quickly. I am glad to say that I am now entirely free from heart trouble and attribute the relief to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum.

"A number of my friends have abandoned coffee and have taken up Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if made according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

THE PEOPLE NEXT DOOR

GRACE BOTELER SANDERS, Jamestown, Ohio

The people on each side of "Number 777" worried a little when the Sewells moved in, not because their furniture was not handsome enough, for those who watched from behind closed blinds saw that it was unusually fine, but because it is an unfailing custom to worry about new tenants! The husband was a tall old man with snowy beard and hair.

People noticed on Mr. Sewell's appearance that he was slightly intoxicated, and when the last load of goods arrived and the drivers dropped a fine mirror and smashed it, he raved and cursed until he fell in a maudlin heap upon the ground. The same men whom he had abused carried him off to bed. Five minutes later the brewery wagon came with a "pony" and a case of bottles. Inside half an hour the neighbors whispered over phone and back-yard fence that they would let the new people alone.

The neighbor on the north side drank when he wished, but because he had seen Sewell make a fool of himself, as he termed it, he passed him by without a nod. This man's family set the pace for the whole block and so it was not many days until the Sewells knew that their acquaintance was not desired and, as if to retaliate, Mr. Sewell ordered more liquor and drank more heavily than ever before.

Mrs. Ridenour and her daughters, who lived in the big house on the south side of "Number 777," saw more of the new family than the others and pitied Mrs. Sewell intensely. The lady was as small and pale as her husband was large and florid. She attended church regularly. "Poor little woman, she can't help it because her husband drinks," pitied Irene, the brunette daughter, one day. "I am going to be nice to her no matter what the neighbors say."

An hour later when Mrs. Sewell came out into the summer house with a pot of flowers, Irene called, "It is a beautiful day." Mrs. Sewell's face flushed and her eyes danced. "Indeed it is" she breathed, and Irene knew that her words had a plural meaning. They talked then and there of the best way of planting sweet peas and tending them; of children; of various things. Once during their conversation the brewer's employe appeared. "I came for the beer bottles," he blurted out. The red blood rushed to Mrs. Sewell's pale face. Pitying Irene took her departure. "That poor woman lives in perfect torture," she raved. "It's a sin and a shame that she has the neighbors' snubs to bear as well as her husband's abuse. I intend to call on her this afternoon."

Two hours later, arrayed in her best gown and at a time when the neighbors were out on their porches, she marched up the steps and rang the Sewell's bell. When the little lady of the house opened the door, her face shone. She held out both hands. "I'm so glad to see you," she cried, with a happy little flutter. "Do come in."

Before Irene was at all prepared for it, the clock struck four as a reminder of the flight of time. "Dear me, I came to make a fashionable call and I have stayed two hours," she exclaimed. "Do excuse me, Mrs. Sewell."

"If I could only tell you how I enjoyed it," whispered the happy new neighbor. "Please come again." Irene suddenly heard a step and turning beheld Mr. Sewell. He was a fine looking man when he was sober. Evidently pleased because his wife was receiving a call from a member of one of the best families on the street, he talked pleasantly for a moment with her and then with Mrs. Sewell followed the welcome visitor to the door.

Irene Ridenour carried home many things to think over, among them the fact that Mr. Sewell was a real estate man and that the new arrivals were not crippled for money, but that wherever they went they suffered socially on account of the husband's behavior.

At supper Irene described the people next door, her call, and Mrs. Sewell's ever present trouble. "I'm going to invite her to the reception," she finished. The next morning when she set out in the phaeton with the invitations and stopped at the Sewell's door, the head of the house responded. Bowing low, he thanked her for her remembrance of his wife, but he did not know that the affair was to be given by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The annual reception which the union gave was always an elaborate one. All day the Ridenour's door-bell jangled. Girls with baskets, caterers, and delivery men of all kinds were stopping with their wares and there were many women visitors on business. Late the next afternoon the ladies began to arrive and of all the well-dressed company no one was more attractive in appearance than was Mrs. Sewell in her lavender gown trimmed with real lace. How she blossomed in the sunshine of the radiant smiles which greeted her. Not until late in the evening did little Mrs. Sewell learn that the women were white ribboners and that the reception was given by the W. C. T. U. At the knowledge her breath came thick and fast, and her eyes widened with fright. A red spot glowed on each cheek as she listened to the addresses which portrayed scenes which might have been taken from her own life. What would he say when he knew? The very thought made her heart beat tumultuously. He had been unusually cross at breakfast because of the liquor he drank the night before. What would he say when he read the newspaper account of this reception? She rose to go just as Irene Ridenour came up to her. "Won't you pour for me in the pink room?" she whispered. Mrs. Sewell could not refuse. She followed Irene to the room designated and seated herself at the beautifully laid table with its silver pot and egg-shell cups decorated with garlands of pink. She was so happy that she forgot all about Mr. Sewell's displeasure. It was ten o'clock, at the close of one of the happiest evenings which she had spent in years, that she let herself into "Number 777."

Mrs. Sewell slipped into the dining-room and nervously trembled when a book fell on the floor. Too well she knew the consequences of awakening her drunken husband. But a little later she paused in amazement at the threshold of the library. Clothed in dressing gown and slippers and in his right mind, Mr. Sewell sat tilted back in an easy chair, a paper on his knee. He smiled up at her affectionately over his shoulder.

"If anybody had told me the house would be a desert waste without you, I would have laughed at them," he chuckled. "Did the big bugs snub old Sewell's wife? Sit down and tell me all about it."

"I noticed in the evening paper that the Ridenours were to entertain the temperance folks." There was no hint of displeasure in his tone, but the habit of years made the wife tremble.

"I didn't know that at first. I thought I would leave, but when Irene asked me to help, I did not feel like refusing; she has been so nice to us."

"I should say not!" Mr. Sewell exploded. "I reckon it'll be in the papers. I guess some men I know will open their eyes. When I was bragging about you yesterday, even if I was three sheets in the wind, I heard them say you weren't any good or you wouldn't live with me." Sewell shook with rage. "Do you know what I am going to do so long as these folks have taken you up? I will quit drinking. Yes, sir; I'll show those fellows you can go in company their wives can't touch, and I'll do another thing." He brought down his fist on his chair with a thud. "I'll tell that brewer's agent to take his bottles and bring them no more to 'No. 777.' I am beginning to believe that the booze has made our bad luck and friendlessness. We'll try life without it for a year and if there is a change we'll cut it out for good. What do you say to that?"

"O my dear," cried astonished little Mrs. Sewell, burying her face on his shoulder and weeping like a child.

When Mrs. Sewell gave the message to the beer wagon driver, the man impudently pushed back his hat and looked at her curiously. "This here's a scheme of women folks. It don't go with me unless the old soak himself gives me orders," he said roughly.

A hand suddenly caught him and whirled him round. "I'm the old soak himself," thundered a voice, "and if you show your face around here again, I'll report you. Get out of here!" The man picked up his hat and went away. At the curb he almost ran over some white robed women wearing white bows. "Temprunce folks," he muttered as he vented his wrath on the case of bottles which he kicked into the wagon. "They are responsible for this. I should worry. I know Sewell too well to believe that this will last. Good-by, my honorable customer. This time tomorrow you'll be calling for me and I'll let you whistle!"

But the beer driver's prediction did not come true. A week and then a month passed and no call came from Mr. Sewell. His system began to clear itself of the poison, his head became clear, his step quick and his eyes bright. Two months after the day he swore off he was made president of the Real Estate Union and was banqueted by the club. As he hurried home to tell his wife the news he heard two ladies, who had been looking intently at him, say:

"I haven't seen the beer wagon there for two months. If he is trying to reform we ought to help him." Jubilantly he left the car and let himself in at the door, only to find his wife weeping. "Why, Ellie," he cried. Little Mrs. Sewell laughed up at him through her tears. "I am a goose," she confessed, "but every one is so good and I am so happy." With tender words Mr. Sewell told of his triumph.

For a blissful, happy year the Sewells lived at "Number 777." Honor and prosperity and pleasure of which little Mrs. Sewell had not even dreamed made Irene Ridenour, who had been indirectly the cause of all this good fortune, smile happily.

Reception time came again. When the husbands arrived not one proved to be handsomer or more highly respected than Mr. Sewell, who a year before had staggered down the streets. After the music and toasts and speeches were over, the question, "Shall we abandon the union's social feature?" came up for discussion.

Mr. Sewell spoke last. "I say no," he said with an understanding smile. "Why? Just ask my wife."

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

A CAMPING TRIP AND WHAT CAME OF IT

IN TWO PARTS—PART II

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

The woman looked on with open-mouthed curiosity as Charley took the wrappings from the box. It contained a small fruit cake, a jar of jelly and another of chowchow. Packed to one side was a pocket Bible, a Sunday school quarterly and several religious periodicals.

"You see mother didn't want me to forget Sunday, but to keep it even though I was out in the woods. You must take the things to eat, Mrs. Hobbs. I can't eat them and Dick prefers game and fish."

"I'm much obleeged, but—would you mind lettin' me look at the pictures and read some outen them papers? I kin read printin' right along."

"You may have them all, Mrs. Hobbs. My head aches so I can't read and Dick won't care for them."

"Thankee,—thankee, son." She took the papers eagerly and reverently touched the small Bible.

"I had one and I read it every day, but it got soaked up in the big overflow. I sold blackberries to some hunters onct and saved money enough to get me another, but the men folks never could think to git it when they went to town, and at last the old man spent the money. It takes so much for their tobacco."

"I'll be glad to give you this Bible, Mrs. Hobbs." Then to stop her profuse thanks Charley asked: "Is there a church near here?"

"A church! Thar ain't one in over twenty-five mile. I ain't heerd preachin' since I married and come here over twenty-five year ago. I was fifteen then—not as old as you, honey. The men folks never has minded thar bein' no meetin' nor readin' and no women folks to visit. They git out and see folks and fish and hunt the year round. But land, it's that lonesome stayin' here days and days by myself, if I couldn't talk to myself, I'd go looney. I useter try to keep Sunday when the boys was little and I had a Bible, but when they got bigger fishin' folks would come here and pay 'em and give 'em licker and tobacco to show 'em good fishin' places and by and by I lost track of the day. You must have a mighty good ma to want you to remember when it's Sunday."

"Yes, mother's a good woman. She taught us to keep the Sabbath. I am sorry Dick went fishing."

"My ole man got him in the notion. It's mighty easy to git into the ways of other folks, son. Now I'd been a perfesser two year before I married and I was shore I'd always keep Sunday—but you see I give it up. But I been a prayin' all this time for a preacher to come this way, and for my ole man and the boys to get religion. The Lord don't hear me. He's forgot me."

Tears were streaming down the sunburned cheeks, and her voice was tremulous with feeling.

"The Lord never forgets, Mrs. Hobbs," replied Charley confidently. "Keep on praying."

The return of Mr. Hobbs, his two stalwart sons and Dick with strings of fish caused an interruption of the conversation. Charley felt too ill to censure Dick for breaking the Sabbath, and soon fell asleep again. He dozed fitfully until twilight. It was still raining and they could not return to camp.

As the men sat around the fire of pine-knots and smoked, Charley heard Dick ask:

"Got any quinine or medicine that would keep off Charley's chill?"

"Naw, not a mite," drawled Mr. Hobbs. "I'm afeerd he'll have another shake day after tomorrow."

"That's the day we are expected home. If it's not raining we must try to make the trip to-morrow. Could you help us off early, Mr. Hobbs?"

"Ya-as, I'll he'p you. Mighty sorry we ain't got no truck for keepin' off chills."

It was bright and sunshiny next morning and the two boys started up the river. Charley was weak from fever and could only row a short time. Dick complained of feeling tired and out of breath after very little exertion. Both were glad when about noon they came upon a steam launch which was taking on a cargo of fish to be carried up the river. The fishermen were persuaded to take on the two passengers and tow the boat in the wake of the launch. Two miles from Dashton the launch stopped at a village to deliver the fish and the boys again returned to their boat. But it was late afternoon and the rowing was not so hard.

"See here, Charley," said Dick as they neared the home landing, "you are not going to say anything about my going fishing on Sunday, are you?"

"Not if you'll listen while I finish that sermon on water hyacinths."

"Good boy! Fire away, old fellow, and I'll listen with all the ears I have."

"All right. Firstly, these water plants have hindered us as well as others in navigating the river. They started from small rootlets which were thought to be harmless."

"Correct, friend."

"They are fast becoming a menace to travel. Men and boys begin smoking a little at a time. They soon smoke a great deal and it harms the body gradually—as the hyacinths injured the river."

"Can't see it that way, partner."

"Secondly," continued Charley, "people begin desecrating the Sabbath by taking the day for sport and pleasure. The habit grows until like the Hobbses, there is no pretense of recognizing the day. It may take a number of years to get to the place where the Lord's day and everything religious is ignored—but people get there—by and by."

Charley paused and Dick asked glibly, "That the end of the sermon, parson?"

"No. I was calculating."

"Ha! ha! Calculating the distance of the point in your sermon to a little outing on a rainy Sunday?"

"No, I was figuring on the probable cost of tobacco per year for the Hobbs men. Think of the comforts it would buy a lonely old woman! I was also calculating the cost of sending a missionary down the river once a month to preach in desolate places. I believe the tobacco those men use would pay for Mrs. Hobbs' clothes and books and papers to read, as well as a salary for the missionary. The men may enjoy their tobacco in a way, Dick, but does that man consider his wife, or those boys their mother? In wasting good money are they fair to Mrs. Hobbs?"

Dick was silent and Charley continued, "Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs haven't heard a sermon since they were married, she told me. It isn't her fault. Those grown boys never heard a sermon in their lives,—and this a so-called Christian land! I've been tempted to smoke, Dick—more than you ever suspected,—but I'll never be again. I'll think of it as the waste of good money for a harmful pleasure and will remember the need of such people as the Hobbs for the gospel."

Dick made no reply until the lights of the town were in sight. Then he slowly drew a package from his pocket and tossed it into the river. "There goes the last cigaret I'll ever buy, Charley. And, old boy—when you take up a collection to pay that missionary to go down the river let me know. I'll put what's been going up in smoke into his salary. And when we go fishing again I'll take Sunday along with me."

THE SIDE OF TEMPERANCE

Stand on the side of Temperance, and help to win the day,
Our foe is very mighty, and long may be the fray;
But we are not down-hearted, we do not mean to fail,
The flag of hope and freedom most surely will prevail!

Stand on the side of Temperance, and ring our pealing call:
We need you in our warfare, our brothers one and all!
The young, the old, the children, all, all may help the right,
And forward send the standard of freedom, fair and bright.

Stand on the side of Temperance, 'tis safe and calm and blest;
It is the side of mercy, and joy and hope and rest;
Proclaim the drink your foeman, resist ye to the end,
And far and wide, unfearing, our Temperance standard send.

—Onward Reciter

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

OF CONCERN TO COLLEGES

Extracts From Articles Appearing in The North American Student

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE COLLEGE DAILY?

EDWIN NEWELL LEWIS

Critics say that the college daily has not responded to an appeal for higher standards in advertising, notably to the campaign against liquor and tobacco advertisements.

Lack of information is at the bottom of the accusation. The Association of Eastern College Newspapers has gone on record against accepting liquor advertising and the exclusion of the tobacco advertisements has been discussed. Liquor "ads" of any description are a rare exception in the columns of the college dailies. In fact, of all the newspapers studied in a survey, the only mention of liquor in advertising columns was "Wine with Dinner" announced in a restaurant offering in a western college daily. Right next to this restaurant "ad" was one for pasteurized milk, occupying twice as much space.

A former business manager of the Yale News told me that it took courage to exclude the liquor "ads." He said that the importance of tobacco advertisements from the revenue standpoint suffices to keep cigaret firms on the business manager's books. The stand against liquor is a hopeful sign. When learned professors stop arguing over the respective merits and demerits of smoking, the college student's favorite vice, perhaps the college daily will stand with the athletic trainer in banishing cigarets.

WHY I AM OPPOSED TO COMPULSORY SMOKING AT OBERLIN

HENRY CHURCHILL KING, President of Oberlin College

The phrasing of my subject is not my own. Some of our own students failed to get its point, and in the editor's announcements of this article, called my attention to what they thought a curious misstatement of the Oberlin situation. But I do not need to say that the editor had a definite idea in mind, and wanted to get it home to some college men by his seemingly paradoxical statement. He was thinking of his own conviction and mine, that where a college takes no attitude in any way against smoking, it practically often amounts to a kind of compulsion brought to bear upon all to smoke. The non-smoker is in various ways—some subtle and unconscious, and some rather forcible—made to feel, so long as he does not smoke, that he is taking a pharisaic attitude, is unsympathetically puritanic, standing apart from his fellows, distinctly unsocial, and hardly welcome in intimate gatherings. The rather frequent "smoker," held for the discussion of various college matters, and of those things in which the participation of all is both desired and desirable, is a rather important factor in the case. The prevalence of the plan in many learned bodies and associations of turning some of the most interesting and important sessions into "smokers," illustrates the difficulty in another realm. The non-smoker has no choice. He must either consent to be pickled in others' smoke to his own great immediate discomfort and often later lowering of his bodily tone, or give up altogether a fellowship or discussion that he greatly prizes. The persistent, inconsiderate selfishness—I may say in passing—of the smoker here illustrated, shows itself in so many other places and circumstances, that I am coming to feel that one of the most serious effects of the narcotic is quite to blunt the sensibilities of the smoker to others' rights. It sometimes seems as if for many smokers it were true that the non-smoker has no rights that the smoker is bound to respect.

I regard the college student as belonging to a peculiarly privileged class. The community is relieving him from productive work for a time to give him the great privilege of a higher education, that may enlarge and enrich his own life, and fit him for somewhat exceptional later service to his generation. Large resources have been devoted to this purpose, and every student is a beneficiary. So peculiarly privileged an individual seems to be especially bound not to load himself with needless handicaps. He ought to be in dead earnest to get the utmost out of his college years. It does not seem to me he can honorably do less. Is there any doubt that the tobacco habit hinders that result? And ought not the college itself to do something to prevent that handicap?

The statistics concerning the relation of smoking to athletics and scholarship in college, all tend to confirm the physically injurious effects of the use of tobacco. Whether one regards the poorer average scholarship of tobacco-users as directly due to the effect of tobacco on the mental powers, or chooses to say that it is the intellectually inferior men who are likely to smoke, the admitted connection between tobacco using and poorer scholarship offers the college smoker an uncomfortable dilemma. Study is supposed to be the chief business of the student. Has he the right to damage his chief business? And ought the college to think it a matter of indifference that he should do so?

EX-GOVERNOR FOSS AWARDS Y. P. B. PRIZES

The prizes for the best prohibition essays, which were offered in a contest under the auspices of the Lynn (Mass.) Y. P. B., were awarded on June 24 at the classical high school hall by former Governor Eugene N. Foss. One hundred and twenty dollars was distributed among six young men and women. The young people were roundly applauded as they stepped forward to receive the honors they had won.

In advance of the speaking, the English high school orchestra, composed of fourteen pieces, and the boys' choir, rendered selections to the great pleasure of the audience.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. A. B. Lorimer. Mr. Ralph Wade, president of the Y. P. B., gave a short talk about the work of the organization, and then introduced the superintendent of schools, Mr. Frank J. Peaslee, as the presiding officer of the evening. The speaker of the occasion was ex-Governor Foss, who paid a tribute to the Y. P. B. and the W. C. T. U. Other speakers were Principal Charles S. Jackson of the English high school, Principal Francis Hazeltine, Mr. Edward E. Holden and Mr. Freeman Newhall, and Miss Mary E. W. Anderson, Massachusetts' general secretary of the Y. P. B. and National field secretary for the east.

Over 360 essays were written in both high and grammar schools and the Y. P. B. presented the $120 for the six best essays.

The Lynn Y. P. B. was organized by the state Y. P. B. secretary in March, 1914, and has done valiant work for so young a Branch.

Y. P. B. ORGANIZED IN MOTHER THOMPSON'S HOME

Mrs. Marie Thompson Rives of Hillsboro, Ohio, daughter of "Mother" Thompson, on the evening of June 24 entertained in the historic Thompson mansion, long the home of the revered Crusader, the young women of Hillsboro, who responded to her call to be reorganized into a Young People's Branch of the "Mother" Thompson Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At this meeting, at which Mrs. Rives presided, ten charter members were enrolled, the pledges and by-laws read and pledges taken. Miss Minnesota Boatman is the president of the new Branch; Mrs. Gladys Uibel, vice-president-at-large; Elizabeth Cunningham, recording secretary; corresponding secretary, Mary Morrow; Elizabeth Ridgeway, treasurer. Mrs. Rives delighted in showing the young people the historic things about her home, among them her mother's room, quaint and beautiful, charming in its appointments, fragrant with perfume of white lilies. Among other things much admired was the valued urn pitcher and pedestal, that stands at the double doors of the parlor and library, a present to Judge and Mrs. Thompson on their fiftieth wedding anniversary, presented by Mrs. Monroe, the state president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in behalf of the Ohio white-ribboners.

NOTES

A full report of the New York Y. P. B. convention has not yet come in, but already we have heard news of the enthusiasm of the 168 voting delegates, the impressive parade, and also have learned the fact that the collections and money from the contest paid all the expenses of the convention, including the services of Daniel A. Poling, the diamond and gold medals, the parade, printing, and state officers' and superintendents' expenses, with a small sum left over. We should like to have the New York Y. P. B. give us its system of financing.

Mrs. Linnie Carl has recently organized these Branches: Rawlins, with Ruth Frank as president; Hillsdale, with Miss Julia Christenson as president.

The following is clipped from the monthly letter of the Mississippi Y. P. B. secretary, as published in her state paper:

There are so many gems of thought in private letters that need to shine softly into larger circles of influence that the writer of this heart throb, one who wears the ribbon white, will pardon the use of her little sermonette on "keeping sweet," because of the response it will find in the hearts of the young people:

"I wish I might 'keep sweet' always, under every condition."

That's unmistakable missionary work, isn't it—keeping our light burning and letting it shine out for the folks around us?

I want to "keep sweet;" in fact, I make a new start at it every day; but I fail often. It is not so hard as it used to be. I think I am learning many things as I live through each busy, pulsing day.

And one of the sweetest thoughts that comes in this connection is that the Christian always lives, through unending time "the life more abundant."

AMONG OUR WORKERS

There has been organized in the city of Wilkes Barre, Pa., a new union which is to bear the name of Lillian M. N. Stevens.

The Indiana W. C. T. U. is offering as a reward for an increase of five hundred in membership one-half the railroad fare to the state convention.

Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer and lecturer, has been in the field almost constantly since the Atlanta convention, working in Missouri, Ohio, Maryland and Virginia, and gaining many members and friends for the cause. Mrs. Weech is now at work in Virginia and expects soon to go to South Carolina to help in the dry campaign.

Mrs. Viola D. Romans, National lecturer, delivered a suffrage address recently from the bandstand at Punxsutawney (Pa.) to a large and enthusiastic audience. "Were she to speak tonight her audience would be tripled," is the comment of a local paper in referring to the speaker.

Miss Lillian Phelps of Niagara Falls has recently spent five weeks in Vermont, being the speaker for W. C. T. U. conventions. As a result of her efforts many new members were gained and $116 put into the treasury. Her forceful and logical addresses are said to have delighted all who heard her and won many friends for the cause and she is reported to have been one of the best speakers the state has had. Miss Phelps has been engaged for campaign work for the month of February.

PROHIBITION IS EMPTYING MOBILE'S JAIL

"Has prohibition made a difference in the number of prisoners at the city jail?" Commissioner Schwarz of the Mobile, Alabama, jail was asked the other day by a newspaper reporter. "Why, we don't even have enough prisoners to keep the weeds properly cut at the cemetery," was the prompt reply. "They are dwindling in number to one, and two and three a day, while a month ago we had eighteen to work in the cemetery.

"Most of these prisoners are petty offenders, the majority of whom are arrested for drunkenness. During the last year, naturally, there has been decreased drinking among the poor because of 'hard times,' but the first month of prohibition has even cut the 'hard times' total down one-third. The police department is going to strive to enforce the prohibition law always as it was enforced the first month—as far as it is a physical possibility for the officers to do so."

NEW W. C. T. U. PINS

Reproductions of the Popular Scotch Pins, in two styles

SCARF OR STICK PIN
BROOCH PIN

10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

A Wave of Prohibition

FACTS AND FIGURES

ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the new

PROHIBITION FAN

(Octagon in shape; 7 x 8⅝ in.)

Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states on the one side, printed in black; on the reverse side in blue, with white letters surrounded by an artistic arrangement of white ribbon border, the appeal

Protect Our American Youth by Prohibiting the Liquor Traffic

These fans are put up in packages of three dozen (36) and the price is

36 Fans, $1.00

Owing to difficulty in handling and shipping, the smallest order we can fill will be three dozen. Prices on larger quantities will be cheerfully furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

UNDERWOOD

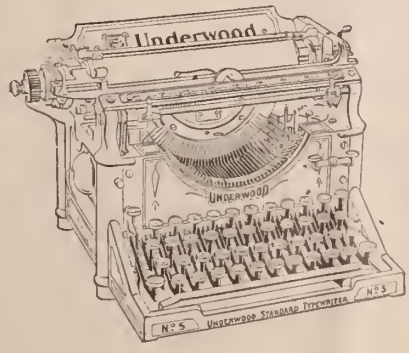
RECEIVES THE

GRAND PRIZE

HIGHEST POSSIBLE AWARD

FROM THE

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, 1915



"The Machine You Will Eventually Buy"

UNDERWOOD BUILDING NEW YORK

Crepe Paper Napkins

Gold or Pink Border with W.C.T.U. Monogram in Gold

Use These for

Luncheons
Porch Parties
Sociables
Picnics

Price per 25, 20 Cents. Per 100, 75 Cents

Drinking Cups

A Folded Cup Made of Wax Paper

Price per Dozen, 10 Cents. Per 100, 50 cents

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

Have you read "The Man Who Forgot," a romance, adventure, and prophecy of National Constitutional Prohibition combined in one? If not, order a copy from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., to slip into your trunk or suit-case for vacation reading.

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscrition Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

"FAIR NUMBER" OF THE UNION SIGNAL, AUGUST 26

The Campaign Edition for August will be a special "Fair Number." It will be just what you will need for distribution at county and state fairs.

Cartoons Prominent Feature

It will contain numerous striking and original cartoons presenting temperance truths and prohibition news in a pictorial form which will attract the indifferent.

Prohibition and the Farmer

The value of prohibition to the farming communities will be treated in articles by prominent residents of agricultural states. A nationwide and worldwide view of the prohibition question will be given by various writers.

Will Make Votes

There will be answers to the objections of the "personal liberty" advocate, the man who thinks the United States government cannot get along without the revenue derived from the liquor traffic, and the man who pretends to believe that prohibition will not prohibit. The paper will win votes for prohibition, local, statewide, and nationwide.

Place your order in advance for a few hundred copies at the special price, 100 copies for $1.50.

HELP ANSWER THEIR QUESTIONS

Everyone is eager nowadays to know the real facts concerning John Barleycorn. It is the popular topic of the day and to be ignorant in regard to it is to show oneself to be "behind the times." The average man depends upon his daily paper to satisfy his curiosity or his desire for knowledge. If that sheet happens to be pro-liquor he gets from its pages falsehood instead of truth concerning the liquor problem, and even if it be of the right kind—and a large proportion of the present day journals are—its supply of information is sadly inadequate.

You are the individual to tell the knowledge-seeker where he can procure the correct information he desires. Direct his attention to the news that appears from week to week in THE UNION SIGNAL. Ask him to read the "Appeal to Reason" by Professor Irving Fisher, on page 3 of this issue. Show him how the enforcement of the prohibition law in Alabama has already decreased crime. Ask if he has heard of the anti-alcohol campaign being conducted by the health department of the city of New York. And when he pleads ignorance of these facts suggest that he subscribe to THE UNION SIGNAL.

TRY IT FOR WORKING MEN, TOO

"I consider THE UNION SIGNAL one of the best tools to place in the hands of a working woman to help the cause of National Prohibition." Thus speaks a good friend of the paper.

Clippings From the Exchange Table

A YEAR OF DROUGHT IN THE NAVY

It is a little over a year since the use or presence of alcoholic liquors on the ships or in the yards of the United States navy was prohibited by order of Secretary Daniels. That order was denounced as clumsy tyranny which would demoralize the service, as an insult to naval officers, as a piece of puritanical folly which would make this nation ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

A year is not a long time—at least, the world did not think so a year ago—but even a year may furnish some hint as to the working of a new policy. What is the verdict of experience on this prohibition order?

Since Daniels dried up the navy, Russia has abolished vodka, France has banished absinthe, Germany has cut down the manufacture of beer more than half, and England has made some tentative moves toward grappling with the matter of drunkenness in the naval repair yards. This would seem to dispose of the charge that it was "ridiculous" to establish prohibition on Uncle Sam's ships.

As for the effect on the service, the nation has the word of Admiral Dewey that the efficiency of our fighting fleet never was so high as it is now.

As for the "insult" of which so much was made, The Journal is told by some very capable navy men that at least three-quarters of our naval officers approve the prohibitory order, and would vote to retain it if the matter were submitted to their ballot. The reason is simple; the average officer saves from $15 to $50 per month by the abolition of the wine mess. Custom, etiquette and the dread of being called "cheap" forbade them to put an end to this expense themselves; but they rejoiced when an executive order settled the question for them. The navy is really getting on very well on a regime of "water, water everywhere."—Chicago Journal.

HOW LONG WILL IT CONTINUE?

The Times-Review of North Chicago Ill., has this story in a nutshell:

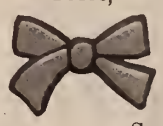
Anthony Moran, who lived near here and who had beaten his wife at their home outside the city limits of North Chicago on Twenty-second street, on a Friday night in February, was arrested, indicted by the grand jury, tried, and convicted of assault with intent to kill, although he sticks to the statement that he "did not know what he was doing." He was sentenced to the penitentiary for fourteen years. The month before Mrs. Moran had written a pathetic letter to her husband's employer. Anthony was spending his money on drinking when the family had to have coal and food. The company tried to get the saloons to stop his liquor, and failing, held his wages for her. Then the husband beat her up. Why isn't the saloon liable for this? Here's a woman half killed, a family broken up, a man in jail for fourteen years, and all for a little money in the till, another remittance to the distiller. How long must the rest of us pay damages for this dirty business?—Collier's, July 17.

KING ALCOHOL LOSES TERRITORY

Kaiser Wilhelm is not so badly off, in the loss of his colonial possessions, as is King Alcohol, who is finding every month that the drys have taken possession of territory to which he is supposed to have an inalienable right. The Associated Press canvass of liquor legislation for the year discloses the fact that, with eighteen states already dry, and two others about to become so, King Alcohol has been driven out of a broad belt which stretches from the northwest on the Pacific to the southeast on the Atlantic. From Washington, Oregon and Idaho it passes through Colorado, Kansas and Oklahoma to Iowa and Arkansas on the Mississippi; east of the latter, it has a clean sweep through the south. From Kentucky and the District of Columbia to Florida the only local option territory is in South Carolina, and in South Carolina a popular vote on prohibition will be taken this coming autumn.—The Standard.

W. C. T. U. BADGES

Loop Bow Pin, white enamel on sterling silver, with letters W. C. T. U.
Price, 60c; per doz. $6.50.
Smaller pin, same style
Price, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.20



Flat Bow, white enamel on silver, without letters
Price 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.35
Same style on gilt
Price 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00

Blue Enamel Button or Pin for honorary members (State whether button or pin is desired)
Price each, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.75

Scarf or Brooch Pin, facsimile of popular Scotch pin, white enamel on gilt.
Price, 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.

¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

The J. L. Mott Iron Works
118-120 Fifth Ave. New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., AUGUST 19, 1915 | No. 34

Corner of the

W. C. T. U. Booth at Panama-Pacific Exposition

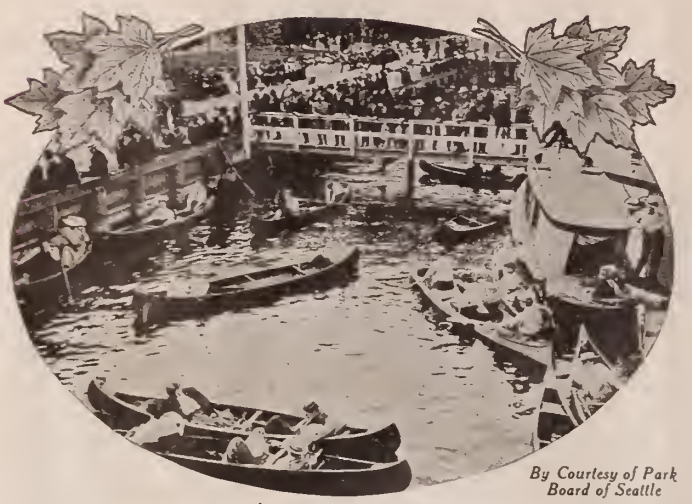
Showing Exhibit of the World's W. C. T. U.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

OUR NATIONAL CONVENTION CITY

SCENIC ATTRACTIONS OF SEATTLE

HELEN N. STEVENS



By Courtesy of Park Board of Seattle

Boating at Leschi Park

A woman who has lived in every climate, and who for the past eight years has made Seattle her home, remarked that it was the only large city in the United States she had found where one could reside in perfect comfort in the same house without change the entire year. There is no oppressive heat or winter cold, the average high temperature being sixty-four degrees and the average low temperature forty degrees. True, Seattle has a "rainy season," extending from November till March, but no one minds that, for the precipitation is so slight that it is really not a "wet" rain—just a little mist that does not interfere with business or pleasure.

From a scenic standpoint, Seattle could not be more advantageously placed. In fact, the entire state of Washington is a constant panorama of pictures. Tall timber, huge mountains, verdant valleys, transparent lakes and rivers, together with the luxuriant foliage covering and bordering all fully justify the name "Evergreen."

The tourist on arrival is puzzled as to which scenic feature to enjoy first. A tour of the boulevards will perhaps be his decision. Olmstead Brothers of Boston laid out the system some years ago, nature furnished a great deal and art supplied what was lacking to make the thirty miles of driveway the wonder of the world. The boulevards lead from park to park, along lake shores and up hillsides, furnishing a scenic drive that is never forgotten by one who takes it. The entire city will be belted in when the fifty miles of roadway, the limit first proposed, has been completed. In less than ten years the city has spent $5,440,000 in beautifying itself and its twenty-eight improved parks, which range in size from five to two hundred acres, are justly the pride of its citizenship. The environment of mountains, lakes and forests no doubt aroused an interest in the beautiful that might otherwise have been unawakened in the work of upbuilding, and it is greatly to the credit of those who have been in charge of the city's beauty spots that they have sought to preserve and enhance, wherever possible, nature's handiwork.

A comprehensive system of providing a park in every section of the city has been followed, and today nearly any street car that might be taken by the visitor would lead him to some lovely recreation spot. Woodland park, the largest in the city, in many ways suggests a natural forest but the hand of man has so aided nature as to make it possible for the visitor to enjoy the beauty of the big trees without the barriers to progress common in a country where underbrush is always heavy. This park has a mile and a half frontage on Green Lake, groves that are the boon of picnic parties, and a very creditable zoölogical exhibit.

Another "natural" park is Ravenna, which contains trees ten feet in diameter and famous sulphur and iron springs. Schmitz park, a beautiful tract of forest on the West Seattle peninsula, is another place of delight for the nature lover. Four of the parks that skirt Lake Washington—Leschi, Madrona, Mt. Baker and Madison, are among the most popular. Kinnear park, on Queen Anne Hill, has an equally advantageous site overlooking the sound.

Seattle claims the only municipal bathing beach on the Pacific Coast. This is Alki Point Beach, located at the exact spot where the pioneers of Seattle first settled, and now the source of endless delight during the summer months for those who find nothing so invigorating and pleasurable as a day in the salt water.

By Courtesy of Park Board of Seattle

In the Wilds of Schmitz Park

THE SALOON AND NATIONAL PROBLEMS

Extract From Sermon by Rev. M. B. Fuller, Lima, Ohio

"The liquor traffic," says John Ruskin, "is the most criminal and artistic method of assassination ever invented by the bravadoes of any age or nation." This business accentuates the difficulty in settling every national question.

(a) Is our problem the reconciliation of the races? Immigration, until the great war began, has been averaging one million yearly. In recent years many have been coming from southeastern Europe. The immigration commission has discovered there are wice as many childless married women among native-stock Americans as among foreigners; the average is twice as great among Americans. After this war, the exodus from Europe, judging from the Franco-Prussian war, will be appalling. Liquor plays havoc among our foreign-born people in our cities.

(b) Our negroes, numbering ten million, are peaceable and quiet save when fired by liquor. Booker T. Washington declares, "Strong drink is one of the supreme causes of negro crime in the south."

(c) Our native stock numbers fifty million. Out of every five boys, two are affected by the saloon. If you vote for liquor, you ought to be willing to furnish your boy as grist for the mill. What sort of a man is it who, having no son, is willing to have his neighbor's son sacrificed?

(d) Is our problem the pacification of industry? This business by furnishing employment to 81 men for every $1,000,000 invested, against 358 men for every other industry; by paying labor 7.63 per cent on wholesale products against 16.53 per cent, the average for 26 industries; by furnishing work for 3.69 days for every $100 spent, against three to five times this amount in other industries; by tying up $771,000,000 in this relatively unproductive industry, is depriving 3,000,000 men yearly of work, to say nothing of the disaster wrought by consumption of drink.

(e) Is it moralization of business? Many business men have been coerced by veiled or open threats. Many more have been blinded to higher values as they have held the brewers' dollars over their eyes.

(f) Is it purification of politics? The first victory gained in the United States House of Representatives and Senate since 1850, was won last year in the vote on the Sheppard bill. A brewers' lobby has held Congress in its grasp while candidates for office from constable to president have preserved discreet silence on this question, in the heat of a campaign.

Relation to Social Vice

(g) Is it the extirpation of social vice? The gambling den, the brothel and the saloon are intimate friends. The nerve of social evil is cut if the saloon is banished.

(h) Is it the Christianization of America? "In God We Trust," reads in many minds "In Gold We Trust;" and hearing the voices from certain business interests politicians and newspapers it seems much like "In Booze We Trust." Uncle Sam for $230,000,000 revenue, promises and gives to John Barleycorn, permission, protection and promotion for his business.

(i) Is it the evangelization of the world? How does our pitiful $16,000,000 given for foreign work compare with our drink bill last year of $2,000,000,000? Our missionaries are carried over in the same vessels that contain strong drink that debauches dependent peoples

The Liquor Traffic an Enemy of the People

JOHN B. LENNON, Treasurer American Federation of Labor

"Who can deny that the liquor traffic is driving men and women to work in factories, workshops and wash-tubs who ought not to be there and boys and girls into industrial life who should be in the school or on the playground? The liquor traffic tends to decrease wages, never to increase them. The use of alcohol makes men less skillful and drives men to lower scales of employment and reward. Every cent spent in the liquor business is wasted. There is no redeeming feature in the saloon. Go anywhere where its influence is felt and you see the demoralization it brings. The saloon is the enemy of the people."

Campaign by the New York City Board of Health Against John Barleycorn

Since the inauguration of the anti-alcohol campaign by the Board of Health of New York City, on the first page of the weekly bulletin which the departments sends out have appeared strong statements or articles dealing with the liquor question.

Especially interesting were the comments on the action taken by the New York City Board, grouped under the heading, "Is Intemperance a Public Health Question?"

Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the Indiana State Board of Health, in a letter to the Commissioner of Health of New York City, said: "Permit me to offer my commendations and congratulations on account of the stand which you have taken against liquor. I have seen a good many newspaper comments among my clippings and not one of them adverse—all were more or less commendatory. I shall make an effort to secure like action from the Indiana State Board of Health. I congratulate the whole country on account of the step you have taken."

The Nova Scotia Department of Health wrote: "The part which alcohol plays in the causation of disease and degeneracy is of such pressing moment that it deserves the fullest consideration of every worker on behalf of the public health. While opinions may differ as to the most efficient means of controlling the drink evil, there can be no doubt as to the need for an intelligent understanding by every one of the limitations of the uses which may reasonably and legitimately be made of a drug, which is so liable to abuse and so potent for harm."

Let the health authorities of all cities follow the lead of those in New York City and declare that the matter is to be taken up solely as a question of public health and they will have the support of the level-headed common people.

Dr. Harvey Wiley, in a special article in the New York Tribune, said: "The fight against alcohol certainly belongs to the province of the Health department, and the mere fact that it has never before been undertaken by this branch of the municipal government should only convince us that there are very valuable opportunities for good which we are constantly overlooking. The Commissioner of Health appears to have hit upon the right solution of the problem of dealing with alcohol. The people must be educated up to an understanding of the harm which the intoxicant inflicts upon them; they must be shown clearly the ravages of alcohol upon the mass of those who use it, and they must be given definite proof of the effect upon the individual."

Professor Irving Fisher, in the Eli Spring Book, May, 1915, wrote: "Whatever degree of power alcohol still possesses is kept alive chiefly by the force or inertia of old traditions, by the assumption that so prevalent a practice must have virtue, by the fear of individuals to break away from custom, and by the well-known difficulty of emancipating oneself from any drug habit. If we look at the alcohol habit squarely, we see that it is merely one of the harmful drug habits; like opium of China, hasheesh of Turkey, cocaine, etc. Alcohol is a poison, and its evil effects are so great that every courageous man should help to eliminate them."

Miss Mary E. Wadley, executive secretary Social Service Department, Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, said: "I wish to express my gratification at the new step the Health department is taking in its campaign against drink; thereby you will be going to the root of two-thirds of the social service problems, with which we are daily confronted. I pledge to your assistance the energies of our staff of social workers in this vital educational work."

W. Frank Persons, Director of General Work, Charity Organization Society, said: "I have been delighted to read of your intention to conduct an educational campaign against the drink habit. A survey of the field is warranted on the consideration of public health alone. I feel sure that the public is ready to support earnestly and effectively the work of the department of Health along this line."

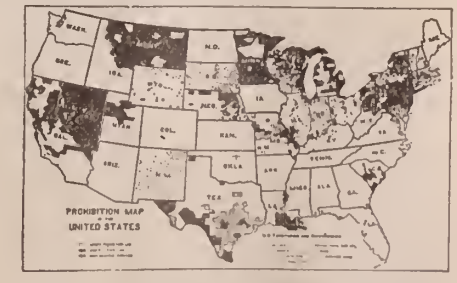
Dr. Walter L. Rathbun, Medical superintendent Municipal Tuberculosis Sanatorium, Otisville, N. Y., wrote: "After long experience in the treatment of patients suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, I realize more than most others how vital this work is to the tuberculous."

Doctor Goldwater has appointed a special committee to assist the Health Department in devising ways and means for carrying on the crusade. The committee contains men who have achieved national and in some cases international fame, and whose connection with a movement of this kind is a surety for its success. Among the names are Clarence Abbott, Secretary of the New York State Commission for the Blind; Dr. John B. Andrews, Secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation; Bailey B. Burritt, General Director of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor; Dr. C. Ward Crampton, Director of Physical Training of the Department of Education; William J. Doherty, Second Deputy Commissioner, Department of Public Charities; Dr. Alvah H. Doty; Dr. L. I. Dublin; Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott; Dr. E. L. Fish, of the Life Extension Institute; Homer Folks, of the State Charities Aid Association; Dr. Leo K. Frankel; Hugh Frayne, of the Central Federated Union; Edward B. Phelps, editor of The American Underwriter; Louis Runkel; Franz Schneider; Professor Henry C. Sherman, of the Department of Nutrition, Columbia University; Dr. Charles R. Stockard, Professor of Anatomy, Cornell University; Dr. Thomas Andrew Storey, Professor and Director Department of Hygiene, of the College of the City of New York.

THIRTY DAYS IN PROHIBITION MITCHELL

Mitchell, S. D., at the end of the first month of its dry régime, reports a most satisfactory condition in police circles. For July there were but 35 arrests, 10 for drunkenness, as compared with 82 arrests in July, 1914, 59 of which were for drunkenness, or with 85 arrests in June, 1915, 51 for drunkenness. The annual report of the chief of police for the year ending April 30, 1915, showed a total of 770 arrests. Of this number, 547 were drunks, making an average of over 45 arrests for intoxication for every month the saloons were in operation.

Of the ten men arrested for being drunk last month, seven of them testified that they obtained their liquor in Ethan, the one "oasis" in Davison county. One man claimed to have imbibed liquor obtained from a store laid in by himself before the saloons went out of business, and two men stated that they obtained their liquor on prescriptions written by a local physician.



EIGHTEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

PROHIBITION ADVOCATES TO CONTROL VIRGINIA'S LEGISLATURE

Returns from the Virginia state primaries, held August 3, indicate that the advocates of prohibition have won and will easily have a working majority in both branches of the legislature for the enactment of laws to carry out the provisions of the prohibition measure passed at the general election last year. It is reported that several leaders of the liquor interests in both the senate and the house have been defeated.

TEMPERANCE WORK AMONG THE KACHINS

FLORA E. STROUT, World's W. C. T. U. Representative in Burma

After the close of the Bible Assembly in Maymyo, which I had the privilege of addressing, I started for Bhamo to spend the rest of the hot season in the Kachin hills, six thousand feet above sea level. It would take too much time to give the details of the long journey by train and boat, ending with a sixteen-mile climb on horseback. It is doubtless sufficient to say that I never would have undertaken the trip, which is not only fatiguing but expensive, had it not been that it offered a chance to begin work among these people of the hills.

Kachin Girl Who Walked 120 Miles to Reach a Missionary School

There are over one hundred languages and dialects spoken in Burma, seventy-five of which are indigenous to the country, and, as our organization is only established among the Anglo-Indians, Burmese, Indians, and Karens, many races are still untouched, among which are the Kachins, numbering over 160,000, who live in small villages all through the hills surrounding Bhamo. They are a very dirty, unlovely people and great drinkers, celebrating everything, even the opening of a spring or well, by getting stupidly drunk on sharu, a deadly stuff made of rice. Besides this habit, they chew tobacco and betel, until, as one missionary puts it, their mouths look like open sewers. Worse than all this they are very immoral; so you can see how much they need our help.

The dress of the people is rather interesting. The men wear loose, baggy trousers, but the women are arrayed in a short, dark blue skirt with a gay, hand-woven border. This garment never strikes below the knee, and has as an accompaniment a jacket of the same color very much decorated with silver buttons. Bamboo rings encircle the hips, and the legs below the knees, and these with a blue turban a foot high for married women, earrings of cloth and silver, and stiff silver hoops about the neck, complete a costume quite picturesque.

The people are nat worshippers, and have their little shrines everywhere, upon which they place rice and fruit to appease the evil spirits. Frequently one sees crossed bamboo upon which bullocks are sacrificed if the nats demand it. One of the first steps in the conversion of the Kachin to Christianity is the casting out of the nats by the missionary or one of the native evangelists.

The men loaf about while the women do all of the work and one wonders if the heavy burdens carried by them in baskets suspended from bands of cloth wound about their foreheads do not have something to do with the prevalence of goitre. The necks of the people are simply awful, and in one Christian service, where there were about sixty men, women and children, I counted at least a dozen people so afflicted. In the mission schools, I am told, goitre is rare.

The Kachins are not progressive, so, generally speaking, if the boys and girls desire an education they must leave home to get it. There is a girl at present in Bhamo who ran away, walking one hundred and twenty miles to reach school. She had no money, but brought her one extra skirt to sell to help her financially.

The missionaries in Bhamo are keen about temperance and are constantly urging the people to stop their bad habits, and, remarkable to relate, the assistant commissioner of the district is equally zealous, always finishing his little address by saying, "I, myself, do not drink alcoholic liquors." I have lectured a number of times before the Kachin and Burmese schools in Bhamo with the result that Dr. and Mrs. Woodin will organize in the latter school both an L. T. L. and a Y. P. B. The missionary in charge of the Kachin school feels that the people are too backward as yet to run a society, although his wife believes she can do something with the girls and women. The chart talks which I have given seem to have made quite an impression, and we can only wait and hope.

Native Associations

From January to April is the period when associations are held in different districts to which hundreds and even thousands of the native people flock. This year, I received more invitations than I could possibly accept. One, however, was of such interest that I must tell you about it. Rev. and Mrs. H. Marshall, who are in charge of the Karen work in Tharrawaddy, have encouraged our efforts in their school and among their women to such an extent that temperance sentiment is flourishing among their people. Mrs. Marshall is the granddaughter of the author of "America." Their sympathy and help have meant much to me, so when I was invited to their association I joyfully accepted, although it meant an all-night cart ride over unspeakable roads. The entertaining village, which was in the hills, consisted of from twenty-five to thirty houses built upon bamboo poles ten feet in the air. The houses were practically under one roof and one had to use a ladder to reach the streets, which consist of one long, main street of unsplit bamboo and several side-streets. It was quite a feat to walk on them without falling through.

Many of the people had never seen a white face before and we were objects of great curiosity, especially when we were preparing to go to bed. All of the live stock was kept under the village and there was such a commotion among the pigs, cows, dogs, etc., that it was almost impossible to sleep. I talked to the people and showed them my charts, but I am sure as they gazed at the organs displayed they did not for one moment believe that those awful looking things could be inside of them!

But the visits to the associations are well worth while, as I frequently hear. Only a short time ago I received a letter from a Karen lawyer, who was present at one of the associations which I attended in March. He wrote asking for pledges and organizing material, saying he had gained the consent of the municipality and the head-masters of all the schools in his town to organize our work among the students. I was treated royally at that association, not only having my expenses paid, but also receiving quite a gift of money to help on the work. But the missionary so kindly disposed to us is on his way home. One of the sad things about Burma is the fact that many missionaries are going away and but few coming back. Fifty or more have gone in the last two or three years and less than a third have returned. That leaves all mission work undermanned, and, of course, spells ruin for our societies. We lose our friends and leaders and the work, established at so much cost, dies.

The war is affecting our finances. Especially does our splendid little paper, the Life Line, suffer. Yet we are not discouraged. Certainly the amount of interest which has been aroused during the last three years, the number of societies that are flourishing, the many boys and girls who are receiving temperance instruction, the fine work of the Vigilance Society are all things to rejoice our hearts. We have a strong finance committee with a prominent business man as chairman, and Miss Mack is a wonder as a money raiser. She has recently worked up a most successful jumble sale. I feel that Burma is much blessed in having as its president Mrs. Phinney, whose interest is unflagging, and as the leader of Y. P. B. work, Miss Mack, who is so fine a help. So we rejoice that the way is open and that we have much to encourage us.

Y. W. C. A., Rangoon.

Typical Kachin House

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

ANNA A. GORDON, Honorary Secretary World's W. C. T. U.

The president of Norway, Mrs. Hirsch, has been obliged to resign the leadership of the work because of ill health. Fru Ignate Carlsen is acting president. A biennial convention for 1915 will not be held, but the executive committee will meet in Christiania.

The Etolie Bleue, the Croix-Bleue, and the white ribbon forces in France are working together in a campaign for a law which will abolish the right to make alcohol from fruits or vegetables without a license. Mlle. Mathilde Weyer, the capable secretary of the W. C. T. U. of France, has recently organized at the Maison Verte a new local union with twenty-seven members.

The corresponding secretary of the Newfoundland W. C. T. U., Mrs. Mitchell, writes that with the help of the clergymen of all denominations, the W. C. T. U. is planning a banquet to which two hundred of the leading professional and business men will be invited to discuss the campaign problem and organize for the November fight. A garden party at the home of Mrs. Pippy to raise funds is also planned.

The president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., Mrs. Gordon Wright, writes that the Dominion union was very busy in a campaign throughout the province re-petitioning the federal government to prohibit, during the war, the use of grain and other food stuffs used in the manufacture of liquor and later circulated a petition from "ocean to ocean" for the abolition of the "wet" canteen from Canadian soldiery over-seas.

Miss Buchanan of Johannesburg, the Transvaal, reports gratifying progress and a noticeable advance in temperance sentiment during the past two years. Persons of high social influence are beginning to declare that total prohibition is the only remedy for the present appalling conditions arising from the liquor traffic in the Transvaal province.

The facts that there is a steady increase in the illicit sale of liquor to natives and a large number of criminals in jails, as well as youths in the reformatories, are at last arousing the people. A campaign is under way that will continue until prohibition is secured.

Mr. Mark Cohen, editor of the Dunedin (New Zealand) Star, has recently been given a jubilee in recognition of fifty years of service. A representative assembly of Dunedin citizens made Mr. Cohen a very handsome gift as he was departing with his wife and daughter for a tour of the United States and a visit to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Mrs. Don, the president of the W. C. T. U. of New Zealand, tells us that the national W. C. T. U. of that country has given to Mr. Cohen a letter of introduction to W. C. T. U. leaders. Twenty-five years ago when the New Zealand white ribboners were fighting for the franchise, he was a giant of strength. He has always been in favor of the political freedom of women, and has taken the platform and used his pen in their favor times without number.

At an entertainment given by all the schools of Ceno de Pasco, Peru, under the auspices of the city council, six temperance recitations were given, four in English and two in Spanish. The Spaniards were sons of prominent saloonists. The Municipal theater was jammed from the doorway to the remotest corner of the platform behind the scenes. One of the recitations in Spanish, "El Moderno Cin," greatly pleased the Peruvians and received loud applause.

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

SHI MA LEI, PRESIDENT OF THE W. C. T. U. OF CHINA

Dr. Mary Stone, the newly elected president of the W. C. T. U. of China, and World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of the Anti-Opium department, is a woman of decidedly interesting personality. As Chinese medical missionary she has accomplished much good and has to her credit nineteen years of fruitful service as the superintendent of the hospital at Kiu Kiang. The thirty nurses under her charge have felt the impress of her constant efforts for their betterment, and she has trained others to do work elsewhere.

In a recent visit to Pasadena Dr. Stone genially consented to be "interviewed" by the papers, one of which has given this account of a reporter's satisfactory half-hour's conversation with her:

"How did you happen to think of coming to America to study?"

"My father became acquainted with the people of the missions and saw the good work they were doing, so he asked them if it would be possible, and when I was nineteen years old I was brought over with three others."

"I imagine you were very lonely and homesick."

"Oh, we were so busy, you see, we were not given time. When I went home again, I went right into the hospital work, and there I am always busy; I just had to tear myself away to come here now."

"Do you operate when it is necessary?"

"Oh, yes, I did from the first."

"You must have felt very shaky at first, just a young girl, to have to depend upon yourself and take such responsibility" She answered quickly that she did, yet you felt back of it all, the indomitable courage and determination that would carry her through anything that was demanded of her.

"What are the diseases most prevalent there?"

"Oh, we get everything. There is much tuberculosis, and I want to make a study of your methods here regarding that malady. Back of all our medical work, you know, is our religious teaching. We heal the body and in doing so, win the confidence of the patients so that they will hear about the Bible."

Dr. Mary Stone, Who Will Be a Distinguished Speaker at the Seattle Convention

"Are they glad to hear?"

"Yes, they are eager. They know perfectly well that those idols of mud, or wood, or stone, cannot help them; they know as well as you do, but they have nothing better until we tell them. While they are waiting in the dispensary, someone reads the Bible to them; my mother is a Bible reader. We have morning prayers, which the nurses take turns in conducting—all my nurses are Christians. When a patient is bedridden, a special nurse is delegated to her. Then, of course, we have churches and Sunday schools, and out from these native workers go to the cities and country places to work and teach."

The doctor came by way of San Francisco, but did not stop to see the exposition, which she hopes to visit later. "We were tired from the long sea voyage," she said, "and the rush and whirl of the big city frightened us. We wanted to get away. We are from the Orient, you see," and her smile conveyed her full realization of the difference.

"Do you live in a small city?"

"There are about 80,000 inhabitants; we are very crowded, but we have no automobiles."

"How do you travel where there are no trains?"

"Walk, or take sedan chairs."

"Are your Chinese women hardy?"

"Well, it is a case of the survival of the fittest; only the strong live. Infant mortality is very great. Our teachers tell them how to care for their babies, and how to have sanitary homes, and it is doing much good."

The doctor herself looks to be in superb health, and overflowing with energy and vitality. She would make things move anywhere. Accompanying her is a Chinese girl who will take a medical course at some institution.

The doctor's name is not Miss Stone. She translated it the better to fit American tongues. Her name in Chinese is Shi Ma Lei.

PROHIBITION PROGRESS IN OTHER LANDS

IMPROVIDENT PEASANTS BECOME THRIFTY UNDER PROHIBITION

The transformation of Russia under prohibition continues to be the twentieth century miracle. Shephen Graham, writing in the World's Work for August of the manifold blessings that have come to the Russian peasants since the Czar issued the edict against vodka, describes the situation in the following graphic words:

The Peasant Becomes Thrifty

"Before 1914 there was comparatively little money in the pockets of the peasants. The money was all in the till of the vodka shop. There was such improvidence on the part of the peasants that they squandered their agricultural capital, less seed was sown, the land was falling out of cultivation. It is an astonishing fact that there is today more than twenty per cent more land under forest than there was in 1860. And this has come about through improvidence. Today there is a superfluity of money, and the tendency will be to sow more, to buy better cattle, better agricultural implements. The country is always poor and needs every penny that can be spared. So the prohibition of vodka means improvement in the harvests.

"Vodka meant poverty in the home and the consequent starving of children. Better harvests mean stronger and more children on the countryside.

"Vodka swallowed up the money that might have been spent on books, on education. It meant also the swallowing up of time. It meant more work for women than they should have to bear. The absence of vodka means first of all a blank in people's lives and a quantity of unspendable cash in their pockets, and then a questioning in the mind and a desire for something new.

"Especially in the mining and spinning villages there is a noticeable blank and an ennui owing to absence of vodka. The latest reports show that the miners and spinners are doing more work simply because there is nothing else to do and not much other way of spending the time. Money is going into the State Savings Bank, which, by the way, pays four per cent interest on deposits.

"There are no shops in the villages, except little chandleries, melotchni lavki. There is nothing exposed for sale, no new frocks for the women, not even concertinas for the men. In order to obtain these it would be necessary to go several hundred, in some cases a few thousand miles. The village, therefore, and especially the remote village, is calling for something on which to spend its extra money, and is wondering what it will find to do in its extra time.

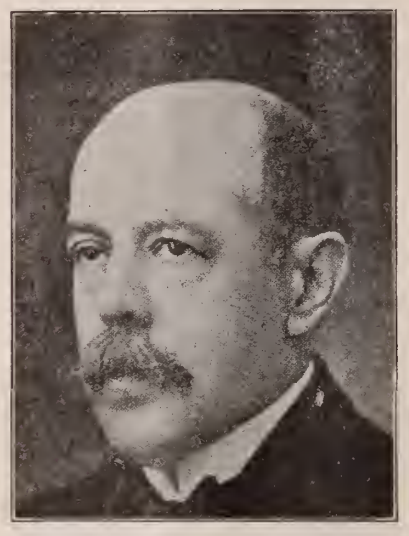
"After the war there must flow from the great cities of the West of Russia books, papers, dress materials, musical instruments, pictures, guns. And more schools must be established, more concert halls, lecture halls. There will be more schooling, reading, music, hunting. If the policy of the Russian government with regard to drink remains unchanged for the next ten years, it is safe to predict a most extraordinary contrast between the condition of the country now and the country as it must be then."

JAPANESE GOVERNMENT ABANDONS AWARDING OF SAKE CUPS

It is understood as a result of a conference of Japanese temperance leaders with Prime Minister Count Okuma that the custom of giving sake cups as rewards for meritorious services will shortly be abolished. Madame Kaji Tajima, president of the national W. C. T. U. of Japan, Miss M. A. Spencer, president of the Foreign Auxiliary of the Japanese W. C. T. U., with Taro Ando of the National Temperance League of Japan, waited upon the count and laid the matter before him.

The premier, after listening to the arguments of the delegation, promised that the awarding of sake cups should be done away with. He announced: "The awarding of sake cups is neither Japan's ancient ordinance nor the inevitable custom. The fact is that since the Restoration, our government has felt the need of awarding something in recognition of meritorious services and simply chose sake cups without any special study or careful consideration, and today finds itself embarrassed. Therefore, we will think about proper articles in their place and abolish the awarding of sake cups."

DR. JOAQUIN DE SALTERAIN



Dr. Joaquin de Salterain, physician, philanthropist and orator, is one of the most distinguished men in South America. He is devotedly interested in the progress of the temperance reform and with his distinguished wife has given much help to Miss Hardynia K. Norville, World's W. C. T. U. representative in South America, and to the work for temperance under the auspices of Mrs. Carrie van Domselaar, president of the W. C. T. U. of Uruguay, and Miss Norville. He is among the most beloved men in the republic of Uruguay and as a writer is well known throughout South America.

THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST INTEMPERANCE IN SOUTH AMERICA

The campaign against intemperance in South America is being well planned, with Peru unmistakably in the lead. Although the victory is sure, there are great obstacles to overcome, for the people of South America are a mixture of Latin and Indian blood, and in the matter of drinking, at least, Indian tendencies predominate. The Indian blood craves drink and is not satisfied to take it moderately.

In telling of intemperance in South America, Bishop Homer C. Stuntz, in World Outlook, says:

"Drink is everywhere. Being set in the European rather than the North American mold, South Americans drink as do the people in France and Spain and Italy. Bishops and archbishops drink. Priestly drunkenness is common. Parents drink before their children, and give wine and beer to them even in infancy. Tiny ten-year-olds come to the mission schools with their feet unsteady and with heavy fumes of alcohol on their breath, the fond parents being eager to have their children make a good recitation.

"Wine and rum are made in the country in immense quantities, and the common wines are so cheap that the poor are soaked in them. Both Chile and Argentina devote immense areas to grapes and practically every stem of them goes into wine to make drunken the people of the lands."

In Peru the leading newspapers are allied with the temperance forces, and there is a distinct gain in public sentiment noticeable. Peru also has compulsory temperance teaching in its schools, and no effort is being spared to train the children. With the government, the schools, and the newspapers united in a temperance crusade results are bound to come.

ALCOHOL CAUSES DECREASE IN BIRTH RATE IN FRANCE

Dr. Levassort, head of the Bon Sauveur insane asylum at Caen, France, in discussing the decreasing birth rate in France, a subject which is receiving careful consideration by French scientists, has this to say concerning alcohol:

"What alcohol has done to this population, formerly so healthy and robust, one cannot realize without living in the region. Peasants in the valley of the Auge, who produce a great deal of cider and distill it at will, drink at least a pint of brandy per day; some, women as well as men, drink double that amount.

"It is with the coffee that the women acquire the habit. Whenever a neighbor pays a visit, the hostess offers a 'drop of coffee'; the cider brandy goes with it and after it until the quantity surpasses by far the quantity of coffee. No one thinks of stinting the cider brandy, since it costs them nothing. Drinking at home leads to drinking in public, and this perhaps accounts for the fact that the communes of less than 4,000 population furnish fifty-four per cent of the total number of drinkers.

"Whether drink may be considered the cause of the decrease in the birth-rate or not, the progression of depopulation seems to have kept pace with the progression of alcoholism. Where the consumption of spirits was formerly a gallon and a half a year per capita, it is now more than three gallons, while the decreased birth-rate traced back through many generations in the same families by Monsieur Benoist shows a decrease from an average of seven children a family in the nineteenth century to three in the twentieth."

SPIRIT MERCHANTS PUSH TRADE IN SOUTHERN NIGERIA

The opening up of Southern Nigeria by railroad and river is seized upon by the spirit merchants to push their traffic into ever-widening areas. The figures of the importation of spirits into southern Nigeria for 1913, just published by the colonial office, Westminster, show an importation of 4,635,000 gallons, an increase of 185,000 gallons over 1912. The duties on spirits amounted to £1,136,000, which is 42.6 per cent of the whole revenue. In 1909 the importation amounted to £2,950,000.

SUFFRAGE—A WORLD WAVE

That the spirit of suffrage is stalking triumphantly through the lands across the seas is convincingly shown by William Hard and V. D. Jordan, writing in Everybody's for July. Of the comprehensive survey by these writers of the status of suffrage in European countries, we give but a part. Since the article was written Denmark has secured full suffrage.

What is it that produces a suffrage movement, a real suffrage movement, in every country that has one?

We answer, unhesitatingly, schools—book-learning.

If you will start on a little feminist tour of Europe you will immediately perceive that the only way to preserve any country from a suffrage movement is to keep the books in one compartment and the women in another.

* * * * * * *

Many of the German states in which women have certain suffrage rights are among the very largest. Bavaria is one of them. Another is Saxony. Another is Prussia itself.

In some states the women vote by proxy; in others, in person. In some they vote only in the rural communes; in others, in the city communes, too. It can be summed up like this:

Just about five-sixths of the population of Germany lives in states in which communal voting rights of some sort are exercised by women.

The fact is that there are no first-rank countries in Europe—and mighty few second-rank ones—in which certain sproutings of suffrage are not to be found.

Even in Rumania and in Bulgaria, so recently delivered from the Asiatic influence of the Turk, there are women who have the right to vote for certain educational bodies which we would call "school boards."

In the world today, outside the United States and therefore not counting the inhabitants of any of our own suffrage communities, there are just about one hundred million people living in countries in which women are found voting in municipal elections.

This includes, by the way, some very odd instances of political feminism. The city of Belize, in British Honduras in Central America! The city of Rangoon, in Burma! The cities of Bombay and of Baroda, in India! In all of them a woman who can meet a certain property qualification may cast a municipal vote.

But what are the real, regular countries in which municipal suffrage is upon us? We attach a list of them. And you will notice at once that it is the Scandinavian and English-speaking peoples who are peculiarly weak in resisting the political ambitions of their women.

These municipal suffrage countries are: Scandinavian: Denmark, Sweden; English-speaking: England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Canada, the Union of South Africa.

France, in suffrage as in everything else, is the cradle—or, when not the cradle, the mirror—of all the revolutionary thoughts ever thought in the world.

The first great book for suffrage was written by a Frenchman, Condorcet, a great mathematician and philosopher. He wrote his suffrage book in 1787, a few years before the French Revolution. And nothing new, worth saying, has been said about suffrage since. Into one simple sentence Condorcet put the whole of the only real argument—good or bad, as may be—for suffrage. He said:

"Either no individual member of the human race has any real rights or else all have the same."

And just as France produced the first great suffrage book, so it also produced the first political women's clubs. In the early days of the Revolution these clubs were so large that one of them had two thousand members in Bordeaux alone. And they were exceedingly numerous. And, finally, they had women leaders of great political prominence.

And they made life miserable for the members of the revolutionary National Assembly—a hundred and twenty-five years ago—demanding suffrage.

We should remember the name of their greatest leader—Olympe de Gouges. And a saying of hers: "If woman has the right to mount the scaffold, she has the right to mount the speaker's platform in the halls of legislation." She did not get that second right. She got the first. They guillotined her. She asked for mercy for the king when he was condemned to die.

Now this suffrage movement in France looks as if it came before education. And it did. And that was why it failed. The men in the national legislature ordered the women's clubs to dissolve. They dissolved. The talk for suffrage ceased. And there was no body of educated women—no mass of them—to revive it. Suffrage in France, as a real movement, was dead for almost a hundred years. But France today has a genuine suffrage movement, just like the suffrage movements of other countries.

In the Austrian Empire there is a bit more of suffrage than there is in Germany. Women who can meet a certain property qualification can vote in most of the provinces of the Austrian Empire for the members of the provincial legislatures.

Further, in Bohemia, which is the most radical of the Austrian provinces, women have the municipal franchise (except in two cities) and can themselves be elected to the provincial legislature. One woman has been elected to it already.

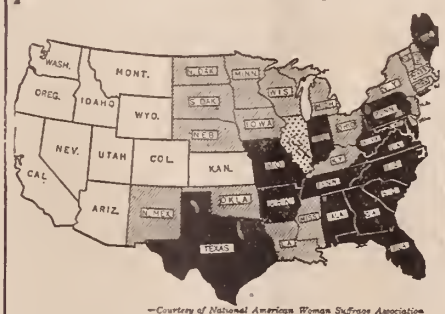
This seems to be the farthest fling of suffrage on the continent of Europe, outside of the Scandinavian countries and Finland.

The remaining countries on the continent have gone just about far enough to have swallowed little doses of "minor" suffrage.

In Belgium, for instance, women can vote, as in France, for the Councils of Conciliation. In Italy they can vote for school-boards and poor-relief boards and

(Continued on Page Eleven)

STATUS OF SUFFRAGE IN THE UNITED STATES



—Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

FULL SUFFRAGE

Wyoming	1869
Colorado	1893
Idaho	1896
Utah	1896
Washington	1910
California	1911
Arizona	1912
Kansas	1912
Oregon	1912
Alaska	1913
Nevada	1914
Montana	1914

PRESIDENTIAL AND MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE

Illinois	1913

STATES TO VOTE ON SUFFRAGE AT NEXT GENERAL ELECTION

New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts

STATES TO VOTE IN 1916

Iowa, South Dakota, West Virginia

SUCCESS OF SUFFRAGE IN NEW ZEALAND

One of the speakers in the discussion before the House of Representatives of the suffrage amendment asserted that all the arguments against woman suffrage have been answered by the operation of equal suffrage in New Zealand, Australia, Finland, Denmark, Norway, Iceland, Isle of Man, and our own states. He quoted Hon. W. P. Reeves, agent general for New Zealand, as saying, "Woman suffrage widens women's lives, brightens their intellects, makes their lives fuller and more useful to the country and none the less charming in the domestic circle."

Charles Edward Russell said: "I have seen a good many New Zealand households, and they seem exactly as well ordered, as bright, cheerful, and happy as any other households anywhere on this celestial globe."

J. B. Connally, United States consul at Auckland, New Zealand, wrote: "The late election refutes the charges made by the opponents of woman suffrage that women are incapable, owing to their inexperience in political affairs, of exercising the privilege intelligently. They have fully demonstrated their unmistakable capacity in this respect, beyond the possibility of a doubt, by their keen appreciation of the issues involved and the sensible discrimination they have displayed in the selection of candidates."

The Right Hon. Sir Joseph Ward, premier of New Zealand, said: "In my opinion, the results of enfranchising the women of New Zealand have been wholly beneficial. The statement that the power to vote renders a woman less attractive or less companionable is utter nonsense. * * It enlarges her mental horizon and inculcates tolerance. * * A proposal to establish a sex line in politics would now be laughed at."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1 00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 62 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, August 19, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

AN INVESTMENT FOR THE FUTURE

The local union that is failing to plan definitely for its future leadership is not only limiting its usefulness but is really pursuing an almost suicidal policy. There can be nothing more important than the selection of prospective leaders and affording them every opportunity to equip themselves for future work. One of the best ways to do this is to arrange for their attendance at a National Convention. The trip across the continent in company with W. C. T. U. leaders and experienced workers and the inspiration of the great convention with its eloquent speakers will be for them a liberal education. The local union which sends some young woman from its community to the convention at Seattle next October will be making a good investment of the money expended. Write to Miss Katharine K. Adams, National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill., in regard to reservations for the White Ribbon Special and carefully read page 11 for particulars.

JOHN BARLEYCORN A WORLD OUTLAW

Six months' experience in the foreign mission field is warranted to transform the most indifferent worker into an ardent advocate of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. An address from a virile, red-blooded foreign missionary which does not incidentally strike staggering blows at John Barleycorn is seldom heard nowadays. "Those who contribute to foreign missions and give nothing to temperance are like those who sow grain and allow the weeds to choke it, or the shepherd who does nothing to destroy the wolves which prey upon his flock," says Rev. Arthur J. Brown, one of the secretaries of the board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church.

That there should be lukewarmness or indifference on the part of any member of a church missionary society on the subject of the liquor evil is incomprehensible to those who have studied the question of missions and liquor. For at least three reasons the movement ought to appeal to them. First, because there rests upon the so-called Christian nations of the world the responsibility for having introduced the liquor habit among the people of the missionary countries. Says Dr. John R. Mott, than whom there is no better authority on the subject of missions, "The drink evil was introduced among non-Christian people by emissaries from Western nations. The responsibility must ever rest upon Christian nations for the introduction of liquor into all Moslem lands. With truth it may be said that so-called Christian nations have been responsible not only for drugging China with opium, but for debauching Africa with alcohol."

In the second place, all who have a vital interest in missions should oppose the drink evil because the testimony of virtually every missionary proves that it is the greatest hindrance of the century to the evangelization of the world.

"In my travels in foreign fields," says Dr. Brown, above quoted, "I learned that not only the customs of the people hinder missionary activities, but I found the slime of the pit as represented in the American saloon had been transferred to those fields. There is a brewery in Jerusalem; there is a distillery on Mount Lebanon; there are American saloons in Damascus. The saloon is the church's greatest foe in its foreign missionary work. The missionary goes to Christianize, while the rum-shop follows in his steps to destroy his work, even to hurl the people into worse than heathen darkness."

But not alone in the foreign field is the liquor traffic a handicap. The men and women who are responsible for financing the world-wide missionary campaign will tell you that the United States spends over $2,000,000,000 for intoxicating liquors and approximately only $21,000,000 for home and foreign missions, or only about one-tenth of the money worse than squandered for alcoholic drinks. What an army of trained workers could be immediately placed in the mission fields of the world if only one-half of the money wasted for liquor could be diverted into these channels of service.

To make John Barleycorn a world outlaw will help mightily in winning "The World for Christ." Every member of a church missionary society should be identified with the W. C. T. U., and every white ribboner should be a member of a missionary society. How is it in your church?

BE A PERIPATETIC PROHIBITION PROPAGANDIST?

Were every man and woman who has been a beneficiary of the blessings of prohibition as faithful in testifying to the benefits as is a certain governor of one of the white states, the country at large would soon experience a revival on the subject which would hasten the coming of National Constitutional Prohibition.

If the thousands of people who have listened to the voice of Governor Capper in the many speeches he has been making on his western trip, and on the Pacific Coast, are not yet convinced that Kansas' star performances in emptying its jails and poor-houses, lowering its death rate and raising its per capita of wealth are due to prohibition, it must be because his listeners are deplorably dense of intellect. In season and out of season, officially and unofficially, the chief executive of the "Sunflower" state, with all the forcefulness and fervor of which the English language is capable, recommends prohibition to the people as a tried and tested panacea for many civic and social ills. Wherever he goes he leaves behind him a trail of public sentiment in favor of prohibition.

But Governor Capper has no exclusive claim to this peripatetic method of proclaiming prohibition propaganda. Every member of the W. C. T. U. or Y. P. B. who is spending her summer at a mountain resort, recreating on the seashore or traveling on the waters of the great lakes, has similar opportunities for training his conversational guns on John Barleycorn.

Remember what Mary Harris Armor says, "It's no use to march if you can't shoot," and prepare yourself with the best possible ammunition to demolish the flimsy sophistries of the ignorant and the indifferent: "personal liberty," "liquor revenue a necessity," and "prohibition does not prohibit."

Let us forestall the campaign of misinformation which the liquor interests are planning in every community by inaugurating campaigns of truth-telling on the question of total abstinence and prohibition.

CRIME PREVENTION DAY

One cannot imagine there being a difference of opinion among decent people on the subject of prevention of crime. Whatever the ethical standards of conduct of an individual, city or state, the instinct of self-preservation would lead one to commend and promote any movement tending to diminish crime. Hence the suggestion of the national observance of September 5 as Crime Prevention Day will undoubtedly meet with universal approval.

However, the measure of value of such a day will be the extent to which it actually arouses the people to investigate the first causes of crime and, having satisfied themselves as to those, to put into effect measures to eradicate these causes.

Is it conceivable that if the common people who vote really knew and believed that between sixty and ninety per cent of all the criminals confined in the penitentiaries were victims of the liquor evil, they would continue, by voting or by a failure to vote, to perpetuate an institution which has commercialized the frightful evil?

If it could be impressed upon the consciousness of the common people that a deplorably large per cent of the worst crimes are committed by morons or feeble-minded individuals whose pitiable condition, so psycopathic experts tell us, is due to the dissipated and degenerate habits of their parents, would it not be almost certain to excite in the public aggressive antagonism to an institution like the legalized dram shop, which is admitted to be so largely accountable for this dissipation and degeneracy?

Crime Prevention Day will be well worth while if it so emphatically and impressively informs the people concerning the first causes of crime that whole communities will be convicted of their responsibility in the matter and will witness to the sincerity of their convictions at the ballot box by voting to forever do away with a traffic that coins money by making criminals and degenerates.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION PLANS FOR SEPTEMBER

1. Advantage should be taken of the wide observance of the first Monday in September as Labor Day. Arrange for National Prohibition features in street parades and in the programs at picnics on that occasion. Special effort should be made, also, on our Red Letter Day, September 28, to enlist L. T. L., public school and Sunday school children as Young Campaigners for Prohibition. Distribute leaflets containing statements by leading labor leaders, for example, John G. Lennon, John Mitchell and John F. Cunneen, as to the relation of prohibition to the working-man. The Union Signal of July 22, on the cover page of which appears the comprehensive and convincing statement of Professor Irving Fisher, may be used on Labor Day with good results.

2. Plan for definite work at every county and state fair. Wherever possible give prominent place to National Constitutional Prohibition posters. Put into the hands of every visitor at these fairs campaign leaflets bearing on the subject. Arrange for a tent rest-room at which an exhibit of all W. C. T. U. literature shall be displayed.

3. At all conventions, conferences, farmers' institutes and state W. C. T. U. conventions, secure the passage of a resolution in favor of the submission to the states by Congress of an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for National Prohibition; and send to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters a record of the number of people voting.

4. If Crime Prevention Day is to be observed in your state in the month of September, see that emphasis is placed on the relation of the use of alcohol to crime.

NO MORE "FAMILY ENTRANCES" OR "PALM GARDENS" FOR MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"Family entrances" and back room "palm gardens" are under condemnation in Milwaukee, and in accordance with the power given him by the Stemper act, Chief of Police Jansen has announced his intention of banishing them from the saloons of the city.

WHAT CAN ACCOUNT FOR THIS?

Of course prohibition does not prohibit, but the Temperance Society of the Methodist Church says it has received reports of not less than thirteen failures of breweries and distilleries within the past few months.

The production of beer has declined during the past eight months millions of barrels, and of whisky, millions of gallons. The federal revenue from this source is falling off rapidly.

The stocks and bonds of the Distillers' Securities Corporation, the American Malting Company and similar concerns are, to say the very least, not quite as lively as a chigger at a picnic.

MUST NOT VOTE FOR NOR ENCOURAGE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

The Atlanta Methodist Stewards' Association, at its last regular meeting, adopted, by unanimous vote of the hundred and twenty-eight members present, the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we, the Atlanta Methodist Stewards' association, do hereby urgently request all the pastors of the Methodist churches of this district not to appoint any member to office in the church or Sunday school nor upon any church board who secretly or openly votes for or otherwise encourages and aids the liquor traffic."

NO DISCONTENT WITH PROHIBITION

"There is no discontent among the Russian people, because the prohibition of the sale of vodka has benefited the peasant and working classes," writes John F. Bass, staff correspondent for the Chicago Daily News in Russia.

LIQUORLESS LUNCHES

Officials of the Illinois Steel Company plant in South Chicago have started a restaurant for employes as a means of keeping them away from the saloons. For some time the company has attempted to prevent the workers from frequenting the saloons, and was meeting with fair success when the liquor dispensers hung in their windows pictures of steaming bowls of soup with the words, "Come in and eat; don't drink." This free-lunch inducement again won the patronage of the men. As a counter attraction the company has installed its own restaurant, where the men will be provided with a luncheon costing less than fifteen cents, and soft drinks will be served instead of beer.

BEFORE AND AFTER PROHIBITION

Aberdeen, S. D., completed its first month without saloons August 1. For July, 1915, there were but 40 arrests, fifteen for drunkenness, as compared with 128 arrests, 71 for drunkenness, the corresponding month last year when Aberdeen had eighteen saloons.

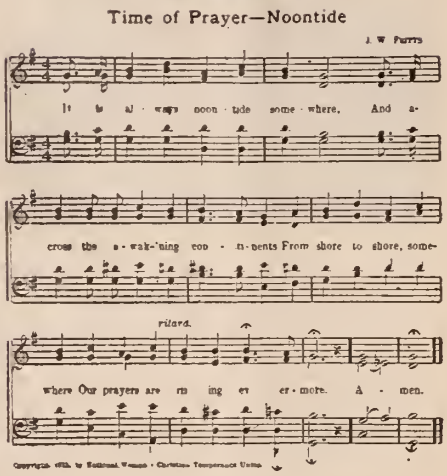
DRY ROCKFORD HAS MONEY TO SPEND FOR EDUCATION

"Rockford, Ill., gets no money from saloon licenses, yet it has spent more money than any other city in Illinois of its rank and proportionally for schools, streets and all city purposes," says a correspondent for one of the Chicago daily papers. "It has few policemen, one to 1,800 of population, while Chicago has one to 500."

PERSONAL MENTION

Announcement has been received of the marriage of Mrs. Minnie U. Rutherford, president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., and also National W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department of Juvenile Courts, Industrial Education and Anti-Child Labor. On August 3, 1915, she became the wife of Dr. Seabron J. Fuller of Galveston, Texas. THE UNION SIGNAL offers its congratulations and best wishes.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. EMILY HOPPIN, of Yolo, California, for eight years the editor of the official organ of the California (Northern) W. C. T. U. and for a number of years state treasurer. Mrs. Hoppin was translated to her heavenly home on August 4, after a brief illness. At the last convention of the California Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Hoppin was elected president. This was not only an honor to her and to the W. C. T. U., but by the election of such a strong advocate of prohibition to the presidency of the clubs of California, the federation honored itself. Mrs. Hoppin was a woman of strong personality and marked ability, and stood for the principles of the W. C. T. U. upon all occasions and under all conditions. She will be greatly missed.

The hearts of white ribboners will be saddened at the news that Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, a National W. C. T. U. organizer, has met with the sudden loss of her husband, REV. LEWIS A. PARSELS. On August 6 he was found dead in bed by Mrs. Parsels, the result of heart trouble. During the recent hot weather Dr. and Mrs. Parsels attended a three-day camp meeting at Hebron, Md., where he was on the program to preach a sermon on "There Is No Night There." When the time came he did not feel equal to the task, so Mrs. Parsels took the notes he had prepared and gave to the audience his beautiful word picture of heaven, the last the clergyman was to write.

"God's finger touched her and she slept." MARGARET AMES, the beloved seventeen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Myrtle G. R. Ames, state L. T. L. secretary for Maine, who was released from bodily suffering July 26, had been a member of the W. C. T. U. since she was ten years old, before that belonging to the L. T. L. When the gentle girl realized that she could not live longer, she talked much of her heavenly Home, where she knew her Father had prepared a place for her. At her request, the white ribbon went with her to her last resting place.

MRS. HARRIET DAVIDSON, Nashville, Ark., a life-long advocate of temperance and an Ohio Crusader in 1873. She later moved to Missouri, where she was interested in the temperance work of the children.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

AUGUST 28—(Birthday of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes)
SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

MAY M. WHITMAN

In response to inquiries regarding the exercise for children mentioned in THE UNION SIGNAL of July 15, let me say that it is adapted from the National W. C. T. U. leaflet, "The License Voter Gets What?" and is used in the following form:

Leader: "From a bushel of corn, what does the distiller get?" First child: "From a bushel of corn the distiller gets four gallons of whisky, which retail at $16.80." "What does the U. S. government get?" Second child: "The U. S. government gets $4.40." "What does the railroad company get?" Third child: "The railroad company gets 80 cents." "What does the drayman get?" Fourth child: "The drayman gets 15 cents." "What does the retailer get?" Fifth child: "The retailer gets $7.00, but I'd like to know what the farmer gets?" Sixth speaker: "The farmer gets 45 cents (sometimes more, sometimes less)." "What does the consumer get?" Seventh speaker: "The consumer gets drunk!" "What does the wife get?" Eighth child: "The wife gets hunger." "What do the children get?" Ninth speaker: "The children get rags." "What does the politician get?" Tenth speaker: "The politician gets office." "What does the man that votes license get?" Eleventh child (a little tot): "The man that votes license gets ashamed when he hears these facts about four gallons of whisky made from one bushel of corn, and we think he won't vote license another time!"

98 Central Ave., Campbell, Cal.

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

As the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle will meet early in October, it will be necessary for the state superintendents to collect their reports before they go to the state convention.

I am particularly desirous to hear from every state this year, and trust that the superintendents have received the report blanks. Please let me hear from you by September 20 at the latest.

212 E. 7th Street, Plainfield, N. J.

A PRACTICAL METHOD OF CO-OPERATION

A HINT FOR LOCAL UNIONS

Several years ago the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Berea, Ohio, sent a box of books to the Manila Methodist Training School. A white ribboner furnished a copy of "What Frances E. Willard Said," writing in it her name and address, and enclosing a W. C. T. U. pledge card. Several months later she received from Miss Crabtree, principal of the school, a warm letter of thanks. This stimulated the Berea W. C. T. U. to make the training school the gift of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Miss Anna A. Gordon.

How delighted were the Berea white ribboners to hear through Miss Crabtree, that the Manila girls were greatly pleased with the book and eager to read it. One student for five weeks carried the biography under her arm as she went from one duty to another, fearing to lay it down, lest some one might appropriate it. The Berea W. C. T. U. now sends regularly to the training school the campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

This incident is an illuminating illustration of a practical method of work—in the department of "Coöperation with Missionary Societies."

NORTH DAKOTA'S NOTABLE DOINGS

MRS. BARBARA H. WYLIE, Corresponding Secretary State W. C. T. U.

Considerable activity has been evident in white ribbon ranks. Early in the year, Mrs. Linnie Carl, field secretary for the National Young People's Branch, spent a month in the state. She spoke with marked effect in twenty-three towns, organized several Y. P. B.'s and made her way financially, putting a good sum in the treasury. She is pleasing, an interesting speaker and a reader of ability.

In April we were fortunate to secure Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, head of the bureau of Scientific Temperance Instruction, for a week's work in the state. Mrs. Davis spoke at our leading schools and colleges, reaching 9,000 people and making a profound impression everywhere she went. Another valued speaker for scientific temperance was Mrs. Lizzie Owen Middleton, of Kansas City, Missouri, who during July visited many of our summer schools, delivering excellent addresses.

Very successful district meetings have been held this summer. Our state president, Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Anderson, spent several weeks in the field, and spoke at many of these gatherings, inspiring the workers by her presence.

Mrs. Anderson also gave an address at the Valley City Chautauqua, where for a week our vice-president, Mrs. Abbie W. H. Best, conducted a helpful institute. Mrs. Best was also the honored guest at two district conventions. Mrs. Kate S. Wilder, president of Fifteenth district, has completed a very successful tour of Morton county, where she organized three local unions, and was the principal speaker at Ninth district convention at Kintyre.

Mrs. Lillie B. Bowers has been afield since last September and has done a splendid work in organizing local unions and L. T. L's., securing new members and raising funds. Her stereopticon lectures have proved very interesting and her talks to mothers exceedingly helpful.

Two unions have been organized among the Indian women on Standing Rock reservation.

Mrs. Callie E. Coates, a worker of long experience, has helped in several district conventions and has organized local unions. Wherever she has gone she has created enthusiasm. These workers have held a number of local institutes, which have proved very beneficial.

Our state convention convenes at Carrington Sept. 23-27 and this year we are to be favored with the presence of Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, National Y. P. B. secretary, will also be our guest of honor. Addresses will also be made by Rev. F. L. Watkins of the State Enforcement League, Hon. A. H. Bronson, who led the fight for woman suffrage in the senate, and other state workers of prominence.

A children's parade, under the direction of Mrs. O. W. McClusky, of Carrington, will be an interesting feature, also a grand gold suffrage contest.

We are working hard to reach our goal of 1,000 new members.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 9-14

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Water Power Dam, Rock River, at Dixon, Ill.

TICKETS Chicago to Seattle and return, good until December 31, $62.50. Chicago to San Francisco, one way via Seattle, $80.

Delegates and visitors from east and south of Chicago should purchase tickets from starting point through to Seattle or San Francisco, as baggage may then be checked through to destination and transfer in Chicago is provided for.

Tickets from New York allow a choice of return route from Chicago, so it is not necessary to return by going route unless preferred.

Delegates desiring to board the train at any point en route may do so if we are notified long enough in advance to arrange for the train to stop.

The Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana delegations will use the Northern Pacific Railway, leaving St. Paul at 11:00 a. m. Wednesday, October 6, via North Coast Limited of the Northern Pacific.

Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, South Dakota, Iowa and Oklahoma delegations will join the White Ribbon Special at Omaha or at the nearest station.

Those who attend the Convention only will purchase tickets to Seattle over the Chicago and North Western and Union Pacific Lines via Omaha, Granger and Portland; tickets to be validated at Seattle, fee 50 cents.

Those who return by way of San Francisco will purchase tickets over the route of the White Ribbon Special via Seattle, tickets to be validated at San Francisco.

RETURN may be over any preferred route, but the official party will leave Seattle via the O., W. R. & N. to Portland, Southern Pacific to San Francisco (stopping over Sunday at Roseburg, Oregon); Southern Pacific or Santa Fe to Los Angeles (with free side trip to San Diego, if requested when purchasing ticket), Santa Fe to Denver via Williams, Albuquerque, Colorado Springs; Union Pacific and North Western lines to Chicago.

STOPOVERS are granted at many points west of Chicago, so that if care is taken in choice of route, those who desire to visit friends will be able to do so without additional expense.

SIDE TRIPS may be made to the Yosemite National Park, the Grand Canyon, etc. Information about these will be given in a later issue of The Union Signal. Preserve your Union Signals for reference as to transportation.

If undecided about RETURN ROUTE, write to H. A. Gross, G. A. P. D., Chicago and North Western Ry., 148 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill., for booklet, "Forty Ways to the California Expositions."

White Ribbon Special BAGGAGE TAGS will be furnished, if asked for when reservation is ordered.

As soon as you reach Chicago, go direct to the North-Western station, where any necessary final details in regard to tickets and sleepers may be arranged. A special room will be provided for our use.

A visit to EVANSTON, leaving Chicago at 10:20 a. m. or 2 p. m., or to the great DEPARTMENT STORE OF MARSHALL FIELD & CO., at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. has been arranged. IF YOU WISH TO MAKE EITHER OF THESE TRIPS, please notify Miss Adams, stating preference as to time.

The White Ribbon Special leaves Chicago at 7:15 p. m., Tuesday, Oct. 5. Dinner should be eaten before boarding the train, as the diners will not be attached until Wednesday morning.

Sleeping car RESERVATIONS must be made in advance. Applications should be sent to Miss Adams, stating whether you desire standard Pullman or tourist, lower or upper berth, compartment or drawing room; names of all in your party and where you will board the train. Also state whether you will return via special train to San Francisco, and if you desire hotel accommodations in San Francisco.

Money should accompany specific orders for reservations and should be made payable to Chicago & North Western Ry.

All correspondence in reference to the trip should be addressed to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

ELLA A. BOOLE, Chairman.
KATHARINE K. ADAMS, Secretary.

SUFFRAGE—A WORLD WAVE

(Continued from Page Seven)

some other such things. In Russia they can vote (under a property qualification, of course) for certain very important local-government bodies called "territorial assemblies." In Holland they can vote for the official Chambers of Commerce and the official Church councils and the Dike associations. In Switzerland they can vote, here and there, for school-boards and poor-relief boards and be elected to them.

And full suffrage begins to be sighted. Italy has appointed a parliamentary commission to study it. In Holland a royal commission has actually recommended it. (Full suffrage is very probable in Holland soon.) And Portugal, strangely, has come very close to jumping straight into the full-suffrage pond without any preliminary swimming-lessons. The law pending in Portugal would give the franchise to all women of twenty-five who have consumed a certain amount of education.

The Scandinavian countries are not only radical in the extent to which they let women vote, but extremely and peculiarly radical in the extent to which they elect them to office.

In Sweden there are more than sixty women who are members of town councils. In Denmark there are nearly two hundred.

We have listed both these countries as municipal suffrage countries. But they are very near full suffrage. They are just on the point of passing over the line. In each of them the lower house of the national legislature has passed a full-suffrage bill several times. And nobody—friend or foe to suffrage—expects anything but full suffrage in both countries very shortly.

As for Norway and Iceland, they are well-known full-suffrage countries already.

And here, omitting the full-suffrage states of the United States, we insert a list of the full-suffrage countries of the world. They are:

Scandinavian: Norway, Iceland; English-speaking: Isle of Man, New Zealand, Australia; neither Scandinavian nor English-speaking: Finland.

WHAT OF THE WAGE-EARNING WOMEN

If women are not to be permitted to vote because "woman's place is the home," what is to be said about the great number of women who have no home except as they go out into the industrial world and earn for themselves a home? In an editorial in The Woman's Journal it is pointed out from figures compiled by the Empire State Campaign Committee that of the 2,757,521 women of voting age in New York state 983,686 are wage-earning women. This means that over one-third of all the women in New York state have no home except as they work outside of the home to make one. Of the 736,659 women of voting age in New Jersey 239,565 are compelled to work outside the home. The number of women of voting age in Massachusetts is 1,074,485, and of this number 444,301, or forty out of every one hundred women, work for a living. Again the number of women in Pennsylvania of voting age is 2,114,008, and of these 605,436 are wage-earning women. Taking these four states as a whole it means that thirty-five per cent of all the women have a home only as they earn it for themselves.

IN THE WHIRLWIND

LUCRETIA MACY GARDNER, Nantucket, Mass.

"Come, Tom, just one drop tonight! I know you want it, and it can't hurt you."

"Not tonight, Ned."

"But," continued the first speaker, "there isn't a bit of harm when we all understand it's just to be a little—not even a glass; just something to brighten us up a bit."

"No, no, Ned, save your talk! I tell you I'll not drink anything stronger than water, or possibly a cup of tea," Tom Willis added with an attempt to smile. In his heart he was growing weary of this constant urging and ridicule, tired of the efforts of his "set" to make him forget the vow that he had taken six months ago to let liquor alone.

"I'm a fool to care," he said to himself, "but I confess I fear I'm not strong enough to resist much longer. The boys would be such jolly fellows if it weren't for this."

A picture came to his mind at that instant of Will Stewart's young wife who had been so care-free and merry only five years ago before the demon drink had taken possession of her husband. Tom Willis blushed to think that he ever belonged to the same company, and yet, what splendid men they all might be if the minister of the church around the corner could but find his way to their consciences as had been the case with Tom.

"I wish, Ned," said Tom, retracing his steps, "that you would stop this foolish talk, and use your time to better advantage. Come, Ned, if I can't persuade you to let that vile liquor alone, go with me and listen to John Spaulding."

"Not tonight," Ned answered, using Tom's words. "I've had a beast of a headache all day, and I don't want to go into that stuffy church. Betty read one of his sermons the other day, and put it where I could find it. Good sense in it, and sounds dead easy for the other fellow—but not for me." With a toss of the head, he left his companion, who murmured: "He will have to learn his lesson. Some one or something will have to teach him better than I can do it. Poor little Betty, perhaps things would have been different if her mother had lived. Ned has gone down hill ever since his wife died."

Tom recalled the conversation which he had had with Betty's cousin a few days previous. "If she can't move her limbs," she said, "Betty's hands simply fly, and Rice & Whittaker will buy all the silk flowers she can make. I don't want to talk against my cousin, Mr. Willis, but I wish he could be made to see his duty. He is down in that saloon every night but one, and the only reason he stays at home Wednesday is because I tell him I must have one evening a week. Betty is worrying herself sick over her father, and something must be done. Oh, this accursed liquor!" The girl's words had sounded over and over in Tom's heart ever since.

Yes, Ned Baker needed something to stir his conscience, and Tom looked up at the sky as if mutely imploring help from the unseen Power with whom all things are possible. But even the heavens did not seem to respond to his gaze, for the moon that had shone brilliantly early in the evening was completely hidden by threatening clouds.

Suddenly there came a deafening crash of thunder, then a bolt of lightning, followed by a wind of hurricane force that hurried the pedestrians homeward, and nearly lifted them from their feet. A louder peal than the others, just as Tom drew near the Baker cottage, made him glance nervously at the house. "No light! What can that mean? Betty alone?" And this was Wednesday. Before he had time to decide what to do next, a dazzling flash played across the chimney. The Baker house was on fire, and Betty, a cripple, possibly alone!

The nearest box was several blocks away. "Whew!" exclaimed a passer-by, "this is a terrific storm."

"Ring in the alarm, won't you?" Tom shouted. "See, that cottage is struck!" and he darted by, rushed to the front door, flew into the living room, where with busy fingers for once idle, Betty lay in her wheel-chair, dazed and horror-stricken.

"Betty, Betty!" Tom cried, "Don't be frightened. I'm here, and the worst is over."

"Father! O father!" she murmured.

"There, there, child," said Tom soothingly, "trust to me, and we'll be out of this before you know it." Suiting his action to the word, he snatched her in his arms.

"That box," she whispered. "My orders for flowers are in it."

"You first, Betty," Tom said, and even as he spoke the hall was so filled with smoke that it blinded them.

But the firemen were already on the spot, and two sturdy fellows darted into the room. "Any one else here?" they shouted.

"Better look around," gasped Tom. "I can't think she was left alone—oh, that box—" Tom could not finish the sentence. He felt the ground slipping from under him.

The last stroke of twelve had sounded when Betty roused from her stupor. "Father, oh, father," she called. "Where am I?"

"All right, dear, and safe as can be," was the reassuring answer.

"Yes, but where are we?"

"At Tom's. Don't talk now. You are safe, and Tom is, too. Tomorrow I'll have something to tell you. Go to sleep, and I promise I'll not leave you." Her father smoothed the girl's hand until the nervous twitching ceased, her breathing grew deeper, and she slept.

The next morning Ned Baker called Tom into the room and said: "God has been kinder than I deserve. I've had my lesson. You saved my Betty while I lay dead-drunk, away from home, a deserter, Tom." The man's voice broke.

"Yes, old chap," exclaimed his friend, taking Ned's hand, "it takes us long to learn our lessons, but I honestly believe that you'll never forget this one. Sometimes God speaks to us in the whirlwind."

THE WOMEN'S DAYS

These are the women's days—and look what the women do!
Heading the civic work of the world, and turning the wrong to true;
Putting themselves in the forward ranks of the laborers of the time
To heal the evil of government and stay the progress of crime.
These are the woman's days;
With her banners of light she goes
To turn the street and the dirty lot
Into a garden of rose.

These are the women's days—and see how they take their place,
Helping with counsel, with skill and toil
the onward march of the race!
Building up first the home, and helping us rear the child,
And then with the cohort marching on to cleanse what is now defiled.
These are the woman's days,
And sane and noble and firm
She plants her banners upon the height
And her foot on the civic worm.

These are the women's days, of broader and nobler creed
Than sewing and sweeping and baking bread for the common daily need;
For the higher soul that she is, and the finer thread of her life,
So in a finer and higher way she comes to the civic strife.
These are the women's days,
And the greatest mothers of all
Are those who have lifted the civic sword,
And marched to the battle call.

For it need not make her less in the tasks of love that she Should set her soul a task of life in the wars of liberty;
Should rise in the widening hour of the world's advancing plan
To plant her banner of force beside the standards of the man.
These are the women's days,
And better the civic state
Of the land in which she takes her stand
To help and consecrate.

—"The Bentztown Bard" in the Baltimore Sun.

PETERKINS' PROBLEM

A. MARIA CRAWFORD, Knoxville, Tenn.

He had been called Peterkins ever since he was a baby in long dresses. The nickname distinguished him from big Peter, who was his father. But when dignified Aunt Julia came to visit in the little boy's home, she declared it was a shame to continue to call him Peterkins when he had arrived at the mature age of seven years. However, the loved nickname seemed to cling to him and no doubt he will be known as Peterkins to the end of the chapter.

Aunt Julia was a woman of great wealth and so she decided to use her money and influence to help her nephew's family socially. Accordingly, she arranged a big lawn party and invited all the well-known people in the little town where Peterkins had been born and reared. The little boy was very much excited over the approaching festivity. Wonderful awning tents had been stretched where there were no trees to shelter the guests and pretty little green tables with chairs that just fitted under them were grouped in convenient places. Great tubs of ferns and palms, boxes of flowers, candy baskets and ice cream frozen in the shape of peaches, cherries and other fruits appeared quite miraculously from the city where Aunt Julia lived in a stately brown-stone house. There was a fountain almost hidden in a network of green vines and flowers where punch was to be served by some pretty girls.

Peterkins stood watching the servants squeeze lemons, oranges and other fruit juices into a mammoth tub. Then Aunt Julia came to taste the punch when it had been sweetened.

"There is a case of champagne on ice, Thomas," Peterkins heard her say to the grave old butler whom she had brought from the city for the occasion. "Pour in about six bottles directly after the first guests arrive and then add the champagne as you need it. The people down here are not accustomed to liquor, so you would better use it only moderately. It may fly to their heads and cause complications." Aunt Julia laughed knowingly and Thomas answered deferentially, "Yes, ma'am."

Peterkins was astonished. All his pretty air castles went tumbling about his ears. The wonderful, wonderful garden party was to be a failure. Aunt Julia expected to serve champagne. Peterkins knew that half the guests would leave as soon as they found it out, for the people there were strong for prohibition, and he also knew that his beloved Sunday school teacher, who was the leader of the temperance union, would think that he and his motber were traitors to the good cause they had promised to assist.

Peterkins was genuinely troubled. He remembered hearing his father say that if it had not been for the good influence and love of Peterkins' mother, he would have been a drunkard himself. And now Aunt Julia was preparing unconsciously to tempt that same dear father. Peterkins tried to make up his mind just what was the right thing and the best thing to do under the circumstances. It was already eleven o'clock and the time set for the party was only four hours away. He determined to go to Aunt Julia and explain matters to her. But what if she resented his plea! Suppose he should make her mad and she would leave suddenly, thereby hurting his father and mother! It was a very complicated state of affairs, but Peterkins was no coward, so he decided to mention his trouble to Aunt Julia. She was the cause of it, so of course she was the very person to remedy it.

She was in the hands of her trim little white-capped maid when, after knocking, Peterkins was admitted to her room.

Peterkins at the Party

"Well, little boy, are you almost ready for the party and have you invited all your nice little friends to come and eat ice cream with you?" asked Aunt Julia, smiling.

"I—I was going to, but—but I haven't, that is, not yet," stammered Peterkins.

"Why, what's the matter? Have you quarreled with all the girls and boys around here?"

"No, ma'am. All of us belong to a temperance society and they wouldn't come if they knew you were going to have wine in the punch, so I just didn't ask anybody."

Aunt Julia looked thoughtful, so Peterkins ran to her quickly and took hold of her hand, patting it much as he did his mother's hand when he was trying to coax her into seeing things his way.

"Dear Aunt Julia, the party is going to be so lovely, can't you leave the wine out of the pretty fountain? Father used to like it and I have heard him say that if it had not been for mother's love and influence, he would have been a drunkard. Couldn't you leave the wine out and have fruit punch like mother does at her parties?"

Aunt Julia laughed. "Why, you funny, funny little boy! Run along and play like any normal, healthy child and don't bother your head over what we have to eat and drink. Isn't he ridiculous?" she questioned her maid, still laughing. "Run along now. I am very busy."

Peterkins stumbled blindly out of the room. Aunt Julia had snubbed him, snubbed him completely. But Peterkins' heart was very brave and he knew that he had done right. He hunted up his father to tell him all about it. Big Peter listened in silence, then he gripped Peterkins' hand tight, so tight that it hurt and the little fellow looked up wonderingly. His father was blinking his eyelids very fast, just as he had done that memorable day when Peterkins' baby sister had only come to live one little day. He had held Peterkins in his arms and looked down at the small face on the lace-edged pillow that Peterkins' mother had made with so much love and care. Big Peter had slipped his finger in the tiny rose-leaf hand and he had swallowed many times and blinked his eyes then just as he was doing now.

"You—you are a fine son, Peterkins. I am proud of you," he said finally. "I think we can make your Aunt Julia see that a little child can lead sometimes."

There was no champagne in the punch that day and everybody had a good time. Peterkins ran around and summoned all his little friends and Aunt Julia herself left the guests and saw that the children were well supplied with ice cream, cakes, candies and all the good things she had provided. When it was all over and the last guest was waving good-bye from the big gate, Aunt Julia sat down on the steps beside a happy, tired little Peterkins and put her arms around him.

"Can you find a white ribbon badge to pin on Aunt Julia, Peterkins?" she asked, using his nickname just as father and mother did. "I am never going to serve wine again in my house or anywhere else, and when you go to your temperance society, give this to your leader and tell her to enroll my name."

Peterkins looked down and saw a crisp bill of three figures in his hand. All at once he forgot that he was tired; his very heart sang for joy. That bill would furnish the room his little band had been trying to make attractive for the men who had nowhere to go except to the saloons. He hugged his Aunt Julia, then his mother and father.

"Thank you, thank you, Aunt Julia," he cried, then seized his father by the hand. "Let's go tell Miss Carry Lou now. She will hurry and get the rooms ready right away."

So, many people profited by one little boy's bravery in standing up for the great cause of temperance. Is there not something that you can do?

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Minnesota, Fairmont, Aug. 24-27.
South Carolina, Allendale, Sept. 2-5.
Vermont, Barton, Sept. 8-10.
Maine, Skowhegan, Sept. 14-16.
Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington, (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Salt Lake City, Sept. 29-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Tennessee. Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington. Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina. Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.

A Wave of Prohibition

FACTS AND FIGURES

ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the new

PROHIBITION FAN

(Octagon in shape; 7 x 8⅝ in.)

Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states on the one side, printed in black; on the reverse side in blue, with white letters surrounded by an artistic arrangement of white ribbon border, the appeal

Protect Our American Youth by Prohibiting the Liquor Traffic

These fans are put up in packages of three dozen (36) and the price is

36 Fans, $1.00

Owing to difficulty in handling and shipping, the smallest order we can fill will be three dozen. Prices on larger quantities will be cheerfully furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

STURDY OAK AND CLINGING VINE ARGUMENT DEMOLISHED

HON. VICTOR MURDOCK, U. S. Congressman for Kansas

The trouble with the argument of the sturdy oak and the clinging vine is that the men who use it think of the American home in the terms of the spinning wheel. The spinning wheel has gone, and several social conditions and relations went with it. The American home is no longer a patriarchal institution; it is a partnership. And it is my observation that the partnership has reached that degree of development that often the more tender and clinging the vine the larger the bills are on the first of the month. I have watched for years the development of woman suffrage in my own state. I have discovered this interesting feature in all suffrage discussions: The ordinary American statesman will face courageously all of American womankind and refuse her the right and privilege of suffrage, but his courage absolutely fails him when his own wife demands it of him. I have heard men in my own state for years before the adoption of suffrage say that suffrage would merely double the vote and that the women would vote with the men. I have seen the same men by hundreds after the adoption of suffrage go to the polls and vote with the women.

It is true that in suffrage states husbands and wives do vote together for the most part, and it is a high tribute to the condition of American home life that they do. But it is equally true that the wife has an intellectual partnership with her husband in the matter of public affairs which was not formerly hers. The very nature of this democracy has wrought the change. Our educational system has given the women complete intellectual participation in political discussion. The early public meetings were attended only by men. Women make up at least half of every modern audience. Often the male American is a hurried reader of headlines. Women are universally more leisurely gleaners of current information. And, moreover, the American woman has found in the last half century the formerly alien economic world to be more and more intimately a part of her home problems. Her responsibilities, therefore, have grown with her capacity to care for them. And with these new intellectual activities has come the knowledge of certain traditional discriminations in the law which women resent. These conditions are the basis and foundation of the demand for suffrage.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

(Continued from Page Five)

A new departure for the W. C. T. U. was a rest tent at a great agricultural show at Johannesburg. This is the first time permission for an enterprise of this kind has been granted the temperance people and they are jubilant over the growth of sentiment which this attests. The Licensed Victuallers' Gazette railed at the tent and exhausted its vocabulary in denouncing the president of the Church council and the president of the W. C. T. U. It called upon "the trade" to rally all its forces against the temperance fanatics, to prevent being completely swamped in the settlement sure to come in the near future.

From Mrs. Human, former president of the W. C. T. U. in Ceylon, comes this word in regard to the unspeakable vice conditions in Singapore: "The conditions are so bad as to be almost incredible. There are streets in two quarters of the town devoted to brothels. The houses are licensed, but no fees are taken for the licenses. The brothel keepers are made responsible under heavy penalties for the health of the inmates. (This implies compulsory examination.) In other parts of the town there are other brothel areas, unlicensed! There is a Malay quarter. In Dhoby Ghat, eight out of thirty houses are brothels. Japanese prostitutes are brought to the Japanese hotels. There must be some 700 registered public prostitutes in all, and they are chiefly imported girls from China and Japan. Some of us here drafted a petition to the governor, Sir Arthur Young, asking that the policy of segregation and "permitted" brothels should be abandoned and the imported women sent back to their countries as soon as possible. But the Singapore Vigilance Committee did not feel ready to take so decided a step as this at present, and the drafted petition has been set aside for the present. O for the divine fire to kindle a few hearts in Singapore so that they shall demand that this iniquity shall be abolished!"

IN DRY WHEATON

"Wheaton, Ill., is a splendid dry argument," writes Allen Steven, a contributor to the column of the Chicago Daily News open to the people. "This town now has a population of about 5,000. It is a residence place and has not had saloons for more than forty years. Of course, a 'blind pig' now and then has to be curbed, but the consumption of liquor, generally speaking, is insignificant.

"One policeman does the work and he can sleep half the time if he cares to. Of course, he has to act as the 'reception committee' at the depots to tramps, bums, hoboes and hoodlums from saloon-afflicted Chicago and other booze centers.

"In Wheaton the water system, sewer system, paved streets, lighting and sidewalks are excellent.

"Batavia, an old saloon town, is bankrupt, although nature gave it river, woods, limestone for paving and drainage. But Wheaton was given little by nature. Wheaton has no natural woods, no limestone or granite quarries, no stream for drainage or navigation and no natural parks. It is surrounded by peat bogs, swamps and sink holes, but still it appeals to more millionaires than any town of its size in the state of Illinois."

The Complete Poems OF Mary A. Lathbury

POET LAUREATE of CHAUTAUQUA and a loyal and devoted member of the WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

The book contains all of her lyrics and hymns and also Portraits of the Author

Introduction by Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT

Foreword by Dr. W. GARRETT HORDER of England

Price, $1.25 Postpaid

THE NUNC LICET PRESS
920 Nicollet Ave. Minneapolis, Minn.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

At the convention of the Vernon county (Mo.) district W. C. T. U. held in Nevada last month delegates and visitors were present from all parts of the county and reports indicated a gain in membership and much work accomplished. The Bronaugh and Montevallo union made an especially good showing. The Nevada union gained seven new members.

The picnic and annual election of officers of the Ballston Spa (N. Y.) union was held recently at the home of Mrs. E. P. Ford. After the delicious dinner Miss Kathryn Starbuck spoke most inspiringly on woman suffrage. Mrs. Jennie E. Wright, county president, brought a message of encouragement for the workers. Mrs. Ida Ellison was re-elected president.

The booklet, "Alcohol and Efficiency," previously referred to in THE UNION SIGNAL, which is being issued by the California board of education for distribution among the teachers of the state, contains as a foreword an appreciative mention of the work of Miss Anna E. Chase, the compiler of the booklet. Miss Chase is a lecturer on scientific temperance for the California W. C. T. U. and has during the past few months spoken to over twenty thousand young people in the California schools.

At a recent joint session of the unions of Elsie and Ashley, Mich., held on the lawn of Mrs. Margaret Pray, president of the Elsie union, the program included songs, readings and an address by Rev. J. E. Wilkinson, pastor of the M. E. church, who commended the work of the W. C. T. U. and promised his co-operation. A welcome visitor was a white ribboner from Arkansas who declared that prohibition prohibits in her state. She expressed belief that because the W. C. T. U. is a "praying organization" victories have come rapidly.

Mrs. Rena Bowers, the president of Sioux City (Iowa) W. C. T. U., has this plan for the summer vacation season: There are eight Sundays on which no night services are held in the churches. She has had topic cards printed, and between five and six o'clock on each of these Sundays holds a Christian Citizenship service. The topics have a wide range. The city reporters "cover" each period, and give a full synopsis on Monday. Mrs. Bowers secured Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, National organizer, on a hurry-up call in August, and within a few hours five meetings were planned. One highly successful one was with the colored people. Another one of which Sioux City papers made considerable mention was a suffrage meeting held in the court-house. Several new members were secured.

The Sterling (Kansas) union, through the local press superintendent, Mrs. Carrie Smith, in one year furnished to the weekly Sterling Bulletin sixty-four columns, the equivalent of 8,320 lines, of temperance news. In a spirit of good-natured rivalry, the Sterling white ribboners assert that this record excels that of Long Beach, Cal., credited with placing through its Press superintendent, Mrs. Martha Hoyt, 5,265 lines of temperance items.

At a very pleasant and profitable reception given by the Canandaigua (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. to about one hundred invited guests, the subject of National Constitutional Prohibition was discussed from three viewpoints, that of the doctor, the lawyer, and the farmer, as presented respectively by Dr. A. W. Armstrong, Anson L. Gardner, and James Roat. Mrs. Arthur M. Cook gave a splendid address on our many lines of work, and good music added to the general enjoyment. Seventeen new members were gained.

Governor Moses Alexander of Idaho is now a full-fledged honorary member of the Coeur d'Alene W. C. T. U. He signed the pledge at the conclusion of an address he delivered recently at the city park at a meeting held under the auspices of the local union. On the same occasion many other prominent people also joined. Among the number were Judge Dunn, Mayor McEwen J. Olmsted and Chief-of-Police Evans. Although this union, of which Mrs. Job Olmsted is president, is but three months old, it has an enrollment of seventy members, all of whom are enthusiastic workers.

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR CAPPER DURING ALBERTA (CAN.) CAMPAIGN

In a signed statement used with good effect in the Alberta (Can.) campaign Governor Capper said:

"I think the greatest blessing ever bestowed upon this state, and the law which is doing more to make good men and women and to bring prosperity and happiness to the people of Kansas, is the law prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors. It may fairly be said that prohibition has been on trial in Kansas for a sufficient time to give adequate evidence of its merits and demerits. And at the end of nearly a generation under prohibition in this state, it may truthfully be said the prohibitory law has never been so well enforced as now, and that this law was never before so generally approved by the people of the state. Approval, indeed, is too mild a word with which to express the attitude of Kansas people toward this provision of the state constitution. Most of them are enthusiastically in favor of it. It is the portion of the fundamental law of the state nearest to their hearts."

Then followed an enumeration of the blessings which Kansas has enjoyed as a result of prohibition—the largest per capita wealth in the nation, 100 per cent increase in bank deposits in ten years, the $30,000,000 saved yearly to the citizens of the state because the saloon is refused admission, etc. and etc.

THE FAIR NUMBER OF THE UNION SIGNAL

WILL BE THE ISSUE OF AUGUST 26

It is always a popular number and in demand for distribution at fairs and out of door meetings.

Special price, $1.50 per hundred.

Order early and avoid disappointment as the run is based on advance orders.

THE UNION SIGNAL
Evanston, Ill.

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Virginia.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. FISKE IRON WORKS
56 & 58 Park Place
NEW YORK

NEW LEAFLETS

Substitutes for the Saloon
Advertise Your Speaker
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents

* * *

Prohibition's Onward March
Revised to date
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents

* * *

Beer from an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
The Brewer's Slaves (Illustrated)
Behind the Bars for Life
Prohibition's Effect Upon Revenue and Business
Size 6x9 inches
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents

* * *

A Plea from a Saloonkeeper's Daughter
Consumption of Liquor Decreasing
Drink and Divorce
Size 3½x6 inches
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents

* * *

POSTER LEAFLET SERIES

Reproductions of posters in small leaflet form

1. Which Will You Protect?
2. Do You Know These Facts?
3. Alcohol
4. Beer
5. Drink Robs the Working Man
6. The License Voter Gets What?
7. Attention, Voters!
8. Figures Tell
9. Saloons Increase Taxes
10. The Trouble Manufacturing Co.
11. Compare These Figures
12. Boys and Girls
13. Not by My Vote
14. State Prohibition and Local Option
15. Railroads and Alcoholic Liquors
16. The Factory and Alcoholic Liquors
17. The Man Who Drinks
18. A Business Proposition
19. The Liquor Traffic Must Go

Price per 100, 10 cents

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

POST CARDS 20 FOR 25c

Artistically printed verses. Your own selection of the following four kinds:

A Prayer.
To My Son.
For Your Birthday.
A Birthday Message.

THE KEADMA COMPANY Rogers Park, Ill.

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75
Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

Fair Number of the Union Signal

The Campaign Edition for August will be a special "Fair Number." It will be just what you will need for distribution at county and state fairs.

Cartoons Prominent Feature

It will contain numerous striking and original cartoons presenting temperance truths and prohibition news in a pictorial form which will attract the indifferent.

Prohibition and the Farmer

The value of prohibition to the farming communities will be treated in articles by prominent residents of agricultural states. A nationwide and worldwide view of the prohibition question will be given by various writers.

Will Make Votes

There will be answers to the objections of the "personal liberty" advocate, the man who thinks the United States government cannot get along without the revenue derived from the liquor traffic, and the man who pretends to believe that prohibition will not prohibit. The paper will win votes for prohibition, local, statewide, and nationwide.

Place your order in advance for a few hundred copies at the special price, 100 copies for $1.50.

Now is the Time

to renew THE YOUNG CRUSADER subscriptions for your public school teachers—nine months' subscriptions for twenty cents.

Kindly send in the subscriptions at once so that the September number may reach the teachers at the very beginning of the school year, that they may count upon its help as they plan the year's work.

"High Joe" or The Logger's Story
By J. BURRITT SMITH
Striking, pathetic, convincing—and a vote-maker. Called "The Uncle Tom's Cabin of the Temperance Reform." Sixteen editions issued.
Paper, 35c; cloth, $1.00
Busy World Publishing Co.
22 S. Henry St. Madison, Wis.

NEW W. C. T. U. PINS
Reproductions of the Popular Scotch Pins, in two styles
SCARF OR STICK PIN
BROOCH PIN
10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

THE BLACK HILLS A BATTLEGROUND

LORA S. LaMANCE, National Organizer

The most modest set of people have been found. They live in the Black Hills of South Dakota, the old land of Indian battles and of the gold excitement of the seventies. Any other land would advertise to the skies the weird, wild beauty of its mountains, its unparalleled castellated rocks, its palisaded canon of Spearfish, and the fact that it skirts the "Bad Lands," the mecca of the world for fossil hunters. In front of a door in Hermosa stands a petrified stump that weighs a ton but it is scarcely noticed for the land is full of such things. At Buffalo Gap is a huge block of eroded stone, and at its top may be found the petrified remains of a python-like snake, a coiled mass six feet across, lying there in its sleep of a quarter of a million years.

The greatest gold mine in the world is the Homestead mine at Lead, valued at $29,000,000 and abounding in all sorts of metals.

In Wild Bill and Calamity Jane days in the Black Hills mining camps, one round of hilarious carousal went on. Saloons, brothels and gambling houses outnumbered the stores. The church was slow in coming. Even yet the majority of churches are mission churches. Largely the wide-open days have passed. Nevertheless the liquor crowd in many towns refuse to read the handwriting on the wall. By methods of the bully and the thug they try to keep their towns full of drink and vice. They are sturdily opposed, however, by a few brave souls who dare to stand for a clean town.

Take Deadwood. Bret Harte could picture no town of a more vivid red than was Deadwood when Editor Senn came there a few years ago. Opening up a Christian man's fight upon the town's evils, he was boycotted and all but ruined financially. He had his presses broken, his office set on fire, and twice was assaulted and badly pounded up. But Editor Senn and his Telegram are still on the job! Nearly two hundred dissolute women have been driven out and half of the saloons. The present régime at Deadwood at the last municipal election browbeat citizens, drove some of the women from the polls and insulted the rest.

During the recent meetings, at which the writer spoke, both Deadwood and its near neighbor, Lead, organized fine unions. The Deadwood union was an open rebuke to the law-defying mayor. The Congressman's wife, the wives of merchants and business men, and officials of the Suffrage and Civic League clubs joined. Deadwood almost went dry the last election in spite of coercion and bulldozing. It is going to redeem its good name and that shortly.

Rev. C. E. Erskine came to Sturgis nine years ago. It had twenty saloons and dives innumerable. It was the rendezvous of the gamblers for two hundred miles around. Mr. Erskine began a relentless battle upon the liquor and vice forces. One by one they have been pushed out. Today the vice district is gone and but one saloon is left, and it is under fire. A fine union was left in Sturgis also.

Buffalo Gap had as hot a fight. Rev. E. P. Johnson, born in Norway, a son of the Vikings, led the prohibition forces. Things became so hot that he was boycotted, insulted, and the Commercial Club demanded his resignation. He could not be run off, and week before last Buffalo Gap's last saloon closed. A new union is there and will help to keep dry the hard-won town.

Hermosa had a similar fight, at the same election. Editor B. F. Reinard led that battle, though the wets cut off his bread and butter for it. The first of July the town went dry. Rapid City is dry, and growing like a weed. Custer is dry at last. These things show that the liquor men's paradise is ready to thrust them out. It is a black day in the Black Hills for the black trade.

The Black Hills has some intrepid workers. At Rockport is Mrs. B. K. Billups, broken in health now but once a power in Iowa and the Dakotas. Rose Bower, who has delighted us so often at National W. C. T. U. conventions with her whistling and her golden cornet, lives in the Black Hills. She is at present in the votes for women campaign in New York. Miss Bower has four sisters, all workers, all rustlers, all white ribboners.

One of the Bower sisters is Mrs. Alice Gossage of Rapid City in the Black Hills. She is the chief editor of the daily and also the weekly Rapid City Journal, sole editor of the White Ribbon Journal, a worker in church, Sunday school and missionary society, local W. C. T. U. president, and also president of the Thirteenth district W. C. T. U. of South Dakota. Mrs. Gossage understands her peculiar field, and its difficulties. Last year she sent Rev. Eugenia St. John, National evangelist, and Mrs. Sena Hartzell Wallace, National organizer, into this mission field. Both did good work, as did Mrs. Gossage herself and Miss Rose Bower.

This year the writer spent the last three weeks of July in the same territory. She spoke in buildings from the church to the recreation hall and the fire-hose building. The church is weak in the Hills, and a weak church means up-hill work for the prohibitionists. But six unions were organized or reorganized, most of them in important centers. Many of the meetings were enthusiastic, particularly one at the Federal Sanitarium for old soldiers at Hot Springs, S. D.

Suffrage is in the air. It will carry without fail in South Dakota in 1916. I believe that state-wide prohibition will sweep the state at the same time. It is coming and even the wets recognize it.

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.

¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

The J. L. Mott Iron Works
118-120 Fifth Ave. New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., AUGUST 26, 1915 | No. 35

America's Choicest Crop

Our Future Citizens

The most valued crop of the American farmer is not grain, corn and wheat, but the boys and girls, healthy of body, clear of intelligence, pure of heart, who are growing up in his home. To insure the protection of these future citizens from that which would retard their development, he pleads for the eradication of the enemy of childhood and the home—the liquor traffic. Let every lover of his kind help in this praiseworthy enterprise by working for NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

CAMPAIGN EDITION—Fair Number

PROHIBITION MAP OF THE WORLD

White means Total Prohibition. Grey means Partial Prohibition or Local Option. Black means alcohol allowed by law.

(This map appears in the "Little Paper," the newspaper supplement to "My Magazine," edited by Arthur Mee.)

It shows that over one thousand million people live today without alcohol. The whole continent of Asia is now under prohibition, either by law or religion—Mohammedans and Buddhists being abstainers by their creed. The black spots mean that there are exceptions in a few cities and ports. Likewise half of Africa, although alcohol creeps slowly inwards in defiance of the international agreement to keep it out. All Australia is under local option, which gives any part the power to stop the traffic any time it likes; and in Europe the war against drink is steadily making its way. The white lines through France, Switzerland, Holland and Belgium indicate that these countries have abolished absinthe.—The Vanguard.

PROGRESS OF PROHIBITION IN THE WAR ZONE

RUSSIA

That the people of Russia have been enriched to the amount of $900,000,000 through prohibition of the liquor traffic is the statement made by Hon. P. Barck, Russian minister of finance, who has reported that the amount of money on deposit in the savings banks of his country in July, 1915, was $900,000,000 greater than the amount on deposit in July, 1914, notwithstanding the war.

A Russian writer in a Petrograd magazine, discussing prohibition of the vodka industry, declares that the extension of the ukase from the period of mobilization in the present case to the period of the war was due not to the Czar primarily, but to the nation. "It was evident," he says, "that the discontinuance of the sale of vodka was a symbol of progress, and the demand that the dramshops should not be reopened spread from one end of the land to the other." The Czar began immediately to hear from public opinion. "Up to the beginning of November the towns and county councils alone had sent in sixty-seven petitions for the extension of the prohibition over the period of the war, and for the termination forever of the traffic."

The petitions poured in from ten capital cities, twenty-one provincial towns and twenty-one county councils. Thousands of local peasant decrees declared for permanent prohibition.

Only the exalted frame of mind of the nation could have brought about such a moral sentiment, for 200,000 men were employed in the government liquor monopoly alone. If it shut the government off from the chief part of its revenue at a critical time, it also threw hundreds of thousands of persons out of employment, not only the 200,000 employes of the government directly, but incidentally 23,000 barkeepers, while 100,000 proprietors of restaurants were so affected that it was necessary to curtail their establishments employing many hundred thousand waiters and other servitors. Owners of 675,000 acres of vineyards, of a billion pounds of potatoes, of hundreds of thousands of head of cattle, the dairy industry and that of vodka being closely affiliated, of thousands of breweries and distilleries, were hard hit, and unexpectedly. They had no time to prepare for the blow.

These are some of the losses. They are already more than compensated by the gains. "The president of the meat exchange—purveyor of meat to the Petrograd prisons—lost his contract for one of these prisons, where the daily consumption of meat amounted to fifty-five pounds, because the prison was empty. Another prison has been turned into a hospital for wounded soldiers. With the closing of the government liquor shops the number of criminal cases brought before justices of the peace in Petrograd decreased eighty per cent, the number of male beggars seventy-five per cent, of female beggars sixty-eight per cent."

Reduction in petty crime and in the number of male beggars might be due to the departure of the petty criminals and beggars to the war, but the decrease in the number of female beggars can not be accounted for in any such way. There should be an increase, with the bread winner gone to the front. Conflagrations are well known to be the bane of Russian villages. If a peasant conceives a grudge against his neighbor, he burns down his house, and whole villages are often destroyed in this way. It has been estimated that all the villages of Russia burn down, on the average, once in seven years. Since the prohibition of vodka, fires have decreased

FRANCE

Shortly after the breaking out of war General Gallieni, military governor of Paris, forbade the sale of absinthe, on the ground that it was responsible for a large percentage of mental diseases, and last February the chamber of deputies prohibited the manufacture of absinthe

ITALY WITHDRAWS 1800 LIQUOR LICENSES

An Associated Press report from Milan, Italy, dated August 22, says, "The authorities withdrew 1,800 licenses to sell alcoholic drinks. Many bars, inns, saloons and refreshment houses have closed."

By direct vote of the people of Alberta, Canada, on July 21, an act prohibiting the sale of liquor within the borders of the province will become operative on July 1, 1916.

Osteopaths Decline To Banquet Until Cocktails Are Removed

When the delegates to the national osteopathic convention entered the blue room of the Multnomah hotel at Portland, Oregon, prepared to enjoy a banquet, it is said they stepped back in angry surprise at the sight that met their eyes. One who was present reports that on the long banquet table, at each plate, was placed a cocktail, cooled with chipped ice and topped off with a dainty maraschino cherry. The liquid ingredients contained a strong amount of alcohol. The osteopathic physicians demanded of the hotel management an explanation.

"We thought we would be real hospitable to you people because you have had such a fine convention and have been such good fellows," was the hotel manager's excuse.

However, according to the report, the explanation did not satisfy the abstemious delegates and they refused to seat themselves at the banquet tables until every cocktail was removed. By which act, they showed themselves to be up-to-date scientists!

Dry Banquets for Georgia Police Chiefs

At the convention of the Georgia Police Chiefs and Town Marshals' Association, held in Macon, Ga., on August 6, a resolution was passed forbidding the serving of intoxicants at banquets and other functions of the organization.

Koochiching County (Minn.) Outlaws Saloons

Forty-four Counties Gained Since March

Koochiching county, which voted to outlaw the liquor traffic on August 3, is the forty-fourth county which has taken that action since the county option law went into effect March 1, 1915.

EIGHTEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

North Dakota Bar Association Favors Nation-Wide Prohibition

The high regard in which the prohibition law of North Dakota is held by the lawyers of that state is shown by the fact that at the recent annual meeting of the state bar association it went on record in favor of nation-wide prohibition.

The report of the committee on interstate commerce acts and penalties which was unanimously adopted "commended the majority of the membership of the house of representatives of the last congress for the courageous stand taken in the consideration of the joint resolution calling for the submission of a prohibitory amendment to the legislatures of the several states, in which 197 congressmen recorded their votes in favor of this just principle, as against 189 who opposed it." The adoption of this report puts the bar association of North Dakota on record as favoring national prohibition.

Crime Decreases in West Virginia

Hon. Fred O. Blue, prohibition commissioner of West Virginia, vouches for the statement that since prohibition went into effect, July 1, 1914, there has been a fifty per cent decrease in crime, and a seventy-five per cent decrease in drunkenness.

Chief Executives of Prohibition States Express Gratification Over Law

An individual somewhat prominent in public life, in a recent speech, questioned the value of state-wide prohibition. His attack called forth the following statements from the governors of four of our long time prohibition states:

Kansas Glories in Prohibition

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER, Governor of Kansas

I think one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed upon this state, and the law which is doing more than any other to make good men and women and to bring prosperity and happiness to the people of Kansas, is the amendment to the constitution prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors. It may truthfully and fairly be said that prohibition has been on trial in Kansas for a sufficient time to give adequate evidence of its merits and demerits. And at the end of nearly a generation under prohibition in this state, it may be said that the prohibitory law has never been so well enforced as now, and never before so generally approved by the people of the state. Approval, indeed, is too mild a word with which to express the attitude of Kansas people toward this provision of the state constitution. Most of them are enthusiastically in favor of it. It is the portion of the fundamental law of the state nearest to their hearts.

Prohibition Vital Force for Betterment

HON. L. B. HANNA, Governor of North Dakota

I wish to say that I am in favor of prohibition. I believe in it. We have had prohibition stamped in the constitution of the state of North Dakota since statehood. I have lived here during all the years since statehood, twenty-six years, and I can say that I believe that prohibition has been a vital force for the betterment of the people of the state, both morally and financially.

Prohibition Brings Incalculable Benefits

HON. LOCKE CRAIG, Governor of North Carolina

In my judgment North Carolina has received incalculable benefits from the passage of the prohibition law. Since this law was enacted North Carolina has made greater progress than in any other period of her history. Many persons who were confirmed drinkers have been made sober citizens, and very many more who were moderate drinkers have quit the habit entirely. It is true that whisky is being sold illicitly in many places. This was to be expected. No reasoning person would believe that the prohibition law could be fully and entirely enforced at once after whisky had been legally sold for many generations. The amount of whisky thus illegally sold, when compared with the quantity sold under license, is so small as to be comparatively insignificant

I do not think that the people of this state could be induced to seriously consider returning to the license system.

Adapted from Capper's National Weekly.

Mississippi Well Pleased With Prohibition

HON. EARL BREWER, Governor of Mississippi

Mississippi for a number of years operated under local option. Several years ago our legislature passed a statewide prohibition bill. Under this law a person cannot order exceeding four quarts of whisky at one time, and when he receives it from the express company he is required to sign an affidavit stating the purpose for which it is to be used, and the express company files these affidavits in the office of the circuit clerk, subject to any one's inspection. This law prevents blind tigers from receiving any large quantities of whisky. There is no doubt that the sale of whisky has been wonderfully reduced in Mississippi and our people are well pleased with the results obtained. Of course all laws are violated to some extent, but the prohibition statutes are about as well enforced as any others. I cannot agree with the statement that "there is more drunkenness in prohibition states than in states where the sale of liquor is allowed." From my own observation and experience I know this is not the fact.

ALCOHOL A "MOCKER"

The Verdict of Science Concerning a Problem That Intimately Affects the Best Interests of Every Nation

C. W. SALEEBY, M. D., F. R. S. E., F. Z. S., in The Vanguard

Thousands of years ago alcohol was called a "mocker," and the truth of that word is the discovery of modern science about this substance. Here are a few representative instances:

Alcohol is reckoned to stimulate the heart. The pulse becomes faster and fuller under its influence. But ask the heart specialist, and he tells a different tale. He prefers foxglove or digitalis, which we used to think a heart depressant, and now is known to be a heart stimulant. It makes the pulse slower instead of faster. Alcohol paralyzes the nerves that rein the heart, and so it paces away to exhaustion. Foxglove says, "Steady, now, take your time; more haste less speed"—and saves the patient. Again alcohol is a "mocker."

Under its influence a man feels brighter, sharper, braver, more competent. Let him be tested. Behold, he shoots less straight (as proved by exhaustive tests, military and naval, all over the world), he adds less quickly and accurately, he takes longer to translate, reply, discriminate. The greatest living authority on such subjects, Professor Kraepelin of Munich, proved as much, years ago, after a decade's research, which persuaded him to abandon alcohol. As a helper of the mind and nervous system, alcohol is, therefore, a "mocker" again. The explanation is that it merely paralyzes the sense or consciousness of effort.

But, at least, you will say, it stimulates conversation and courage. Surely it seems to do so. But merely it paralyzes self-control, under the necessary rule of which we live. We are off our guard, talk freely "in vino veritas," and "don't care if it snows." Similarily, in the Russo-Japanese war, drunken Russian generals gave reckless orders, which cost hosts of lives.

Briefly, and in a word, alcohol is not a "stimulant," but a narcotic. As with other narcotics—opium, ether, chloroform—there is an initial stage of excitement, which is only the narcosis of control, but which superficial judgment calls stimulation. Alcohol is the biggest fraud there is, but we have found it out, and it shall mock us no longer.

Only about two per cent of the five leading grain crops of the United States is used in the manufacture of liquor.

THE VALUE OF PROHIBITION TO THE FARMER

PROHIBITION REMOVES TEMPTATION

HON. WILLIAM HAINES, Ex-Governor of Maine

The condition of the Maine farmer has been greatly improved since I was a boy on the farm by having the temptation of drink removed from the village tavern and other places in the country districts. We see none of this now. What few private pocket peddlers there are among the farmers do little harm comparatively, and they find for patrons only the lowest and cheapest among the rural population. Both they and their customers are in constant disgrace; their business is small and their customers few.

Hard cider is still a nuisance on the farm. But the thrifty farmer is learning that that also injures his health, being the most prolific breeder of rheumatism we have, and but few farmers in comparison to other days have it around, and no one wants a hard cider boozer as farm help. On the whole the progress has been great.

When Congress gets the courage to put the nation out of the rum business by repealing all fees for selling it, the problem of National Prohibition will be two-thirds solved.

LIQUOR INCREASES FARMERS' TAXES

MR. S. C. BASSETT, Gibbon, Neb., Prominent Member of State Grange

In writing of the value of prohibition to the farmer, it seems preferable to discuss the question indirectly—of what value to the farmer is the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage? In this day and generation, no intelligent person advocates that the use, as a beverage, of intoxicating liquors is helpful or beneficial to mankind. It is urged, as against prohibition, that individuals have the right to purchase and drink such liquors, and that, therefore, prohibition is an interference with personal rights; and yet our statutes are full to overflowing with laws which prohibit the doing of certain things which are deleterious to the human race, and the manufacture of harmful articles, drugs and medicines. The most powerful argument for the sale of liquor advanced by the opponents of prohibition is that a revenue is received for licenses issued to permit such sale. In Nebraska the license fee can not be less than $500 and it may be many times that amount and, in addition, villages and cities may impose an occupation tax, but from such revenue the farmer receives no benefit, the license fee going to the school fund in the school district in which the village or city is located, and the occupation tax to the support of the city or village. While the farmer receives no pecuniary benefit from license fees received for the sale of liquors, he is directly taxed for all public expense growing out of the sale and use of such liquors—court costs, the maintenance of penitentiaries, reformatories and asylums in which the presence of so many of the inmates is directly traceable to the use of intoxicating liquors.

The greatest value of prohibition to the farmer and to the public generally lies in the opportunity it affords to raise the younger generation, future generations, free from contact with the debasing influences which invariably accompany the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage; to raise generations of men who have not acquired a taste for liquors and the habit of indulging in their use.

PROHIBITION MAKES HELP MORE EFFICIENT

FOREST HENRY, Conductor of Farmers' Institutes in University Extension Work in Minnesota

Prohibition is valuable to the farmer in many ways that are not applicable to men in other vocations of life. Prohibition would give the farmer more efficient help. The labor problem is one of the greatest of farm perplexities today, and intemperance among farm help causes much annoyance. It frequently happens that a really good man will be led astray. He loses confidence in himself and feels that everyone has lost confidence in him, and he ceases to be faithful. There is no one thing that so discourages the farmer and later drives him from the farm as the shortage, brought about largely through intemperance, of dependable help.

Last but not least prohibition would be beneficial to the farmer as a husband and father. The farmer's wife is more dependent upon her husband than are the women in the city or the village. If any woman on earth needs a sober husband it is the farmer's wife, isolated as she is.

It is universally conceded that if it were not for the fresh blood and strong manhood constantly coming from the country to the city, the latter would languish. These sturdy young men whom the world so much needs do not as a rule come from the homes of intemperate fathers. Every boy or girl born into the world has a right to demand a fair start in life such as would be given through having a sober, industrious and thoughtful father. Nothing would be more instrumental in bringing this about than prohibition.

I know of no class of men who would be more benefited by prohibition than the farmer, inasmuch as the world at large is in so many ways dependent upon him.

BY ITS FRUITS PROHIBITION IS TESTED

AUGUST F. FEHLANDT, Professor of Economics and Sociology, Ripon College, Ripon, Wisconsin

That the future policy of Christendom with reference to the drink traffic will be its prohibition, seems at present all but certain. Alcohol in the form of alcoholic liquors must be removed as an article of daily use, and its sale as a means of private gain. Science and philanthropy and religion, industry and statecraft are all against it. In the growing complexities of civilization, its growing refinements and its increasing exactions, there will be no room for the liquor saloon.

By their fruits ye shall know them. By this test the prohibition policy is destined to gain ascendency. To one who has lived both under prohibition and in states where the saloon is legalized and wide open, as the present writer has done, the advantages of the former need no proof of words. The prohibition state has not only the advantage of a good conscience —North Dakota, for instance, has not received a dollar of liquor revenue in all its history as a state, since 1889—but possesses the added gain of a great economic saving, of gain in health and morals and good order. Occasionally a man will argue that because under prohibition liquor is consumed and now and then illicitly sold, we might as well have saloons. He doesn't take into consideration the greatly diminished quantity that is consumed, nor does he recognize the advantage of the prohibition law as a punitive agency in getting after the man who may attempt illicitly to peddle or sell liquor. The latter, under prohibition, all but flees when no man pursues, while in a saloon state or town the drink-seller is doing a lawful business.

But prohibition is beginning to prohibit in earnest. We have traveled a long way from the time, in the eighties, when a great railway system was sued and fined for refusing to carry liquor into the new prohibition state of Iowa; a long way from the "original package" decision of the United States Supreme Court, which allowed that a man might sell in prohibition territory in such original wrappings, to the Webb-Kenyon law, by which the Federal Government has withdrawn interstate commerce privileges and protection from shipments of liquor to be used for illegal purposes, and to the injunctions served upon railway companies, as in North Dakota at the present time, enjoining them from carrying liquor into the state to be used in violation of the law.

The population of North Dakota has largely increased and considerably changed since in 1889 the territory came into the union as a prohibition state, yet there is little doubt that the sentiment for prohibition in the state is stronger today than ever before. Not a religious denomination, not an organized educational body nor a legitimate industrial interest, not a conspicuous man in business or in the professions, in public or private life, can be found in the state today to stand up and advocate a repeal of the prohibition law.

PROHIBITION FROM THE NORTH DAKOTA VIEW POINT

PROHIBITION A PROMOTER OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP

FRED VAN CAMP, Business Man of St. Thomas, North Dakota

Prohibition has made strong citizens out of weak ones and has proven that, aside from wrecking homes, health and happiness, it is poor business to waste one hundred dollars to bring in one in revenue. This means much, for business men usually vote for that which helps business.

Until I was upwards of twenty years of age, I never saw an intoxicated person. There is little excuse for a boy acquiring the drink habit unless he wishes to run into temptation.

The prohibition law is the best enforced of any on the statute books of North Dakota, our state ranks among the best in distribution of wealth, the smallest number in jails, the fewest paupers (these mostly "drift-wood" from saloon states), accidents, less crime and, in fact, less of every evil incident to the use of strong drink.

PROHIBITION'S MORAL AND ECONOMIC VALUE

BENJAMIN TUFTE, Attorney-at-Law, Cooperstown, N. D.

To my way of thinking, there is no question that prohibition in North Dakota has been a great factor in the rapid development of the state and its resources. In my own county—Griggs—the consumption of liquor has been comparatively very light ever since North Dakota became a prohibition state. It is self-evident that, whatever money a person spends on consumption of intoxicating liquor, as a beverage, is a total loss, and that whatever money is saved by abstaining from the use of intoxicating liquor is a net gain. The sum saved has been used in improving agricultural land as well as city property, or in acquiring additional property. In Griggs county the land is largely in the hands of the people, as distinguished from corporations. This, I think, is to a great extent due to the absence of the saloon, to prohibition, and the savings accruing as a result of prohibition.

True economics and morals are so closely connected that it is hardly possible to create conditions promoting one without also promoting the other. Experience has shown that it is very difficult for a man with liquor on the brain to control his passions, and if the immoral acts, criminal or otherwise, caused by liquor were eliminated from the world, perhaps it would be found that human nature is not so bad after all.

People residing in Griggs county rarely commit any crime and this undoubtedly, to a great extent, is due to the light consumption of intoxicating liquor and to the prohibition law.

WHAT PROHIBITION DOES FOR A PEOPLE

Statistics of North Dakota and Three States Have a Tale to Tell

REV. F. L. WATKINS, Superintendent North Dakota Enforcement League

Prohibition is a great asset for any people and those of North Dakota appreciate it. In twenty-five years not a law has passed nor a bill become a law that was intended to break down the constitutional provision, and each legislature passed from one to six laws intended to aid enforcement.

Note the difference in population of cities on the North Dakota side and on the Minnesota side of the Red River, in a stone's throw of each other. How is the fact that in each case the North Dakota city is far larger to be accounted for?

North Dakota Cities—	Pop.
Pembina	929
Grand Forks	14,000
Fargo (32 grocery stores)	18,000
Wahpeton	3,000
Minnesota Cities—	Pop.
St. Vincent, about	300
East Grand Forks	3,000
Moorhead (8 grocery stores, 28 saloons)	5,000
Breckenridge	2,000

The following are taken from the second report of the board of control of North Dakota institutions and indicate population, number of insane, number of insane per 1,000 population and ratio:

North Dakota, 690,000—942 insane; 1.36 per 1,000; 1 to 731.

South Dakota, 650,000—933 insane; 1.42 per 1,000; 1 to 702.

Montana, 600,000—940 insane; 1.56 per 1,000; 1 to 637.

Minnesota, 2,300,000—5,350 insane; 2.32 per 1,000; 1 to 430.

In studying the above figures it should be borne in mind that South Dakota has so much dry territory by local option that it is known as one of the "near prohibition" states.

Penitentiary Population

North Dakota, 206—.29; 1 to 3,349 of population.

South Dakota, 207—.31; 1 to 3,164 of population.

Montana, 629—1.04; 1 to 953 of population.

Minnesota, 1,450—.63; 1 to 1,586 of population.

Two hundred and ninety-two is the whole number sent to the penitentiary in two years prior to June 30, 1914. Of this number 165 were residents of North Dakota and 127 were non-residents.

Habits of inmates received in two years prior to June 30, 1914, as to use of intoxicating liquors:

Temperate 88

Not temperate 204

Forty-three of those in the penitentiary were sent up for violating the prohibition law.

Ex-Warden F. O. Helstron says that ninety per cent of those in the penitentiary were there directly or indirectly through drink.

Number of inmates in almshouses Taken from the census at Washington D. C.:

North Dakota, 81 total number in alms houses.

South Dakota, 145 total number in alms houses.

Montana, 415 total number in alms houses.

Minnesota, 687 total number in alms houses.

DRUGGISTS WELCOME REVISION OF PHARMACOPOEIA

Druggists throughout the nation are considering it a relief to be freed from the necessity of dealing in liquors, according to the editor of the Weekly Drug Markets of New York City. He comments on the omission of whisky and brandy from the revised U. S. Pharmacopœia, the authoritative list of medicinal preparations recognized by physicians, as follows:

"The sentiment has strongly developed within recent years, among reputable pharmacists and medical men, that liquors should be deleted from the Pharmacopœia on the ground that they are not distinctly medicinal agents and are not necessary in the production of official medicinal preparations. In the present Pharmacopœia, neither whisky nor brandy is directed to be used in the manufacture of other preparations, so that their retention in the official guide up to the present time must be considered solely on the ground of their possible use as medicinal agents. In the face of the sentiment as to the actual remedial value of these spirits, from a medical point of view at least, it would seem that 'Othello's occupation's gone.'

"The fear has been expressed in some quarters that this elimination may make it impossible for druggists after January 1 next to sell whisky or brandy without taking out a saloon license. But this contention is largely problematical. Many druggists will welcome the failure officially to recognize these spirits as an excuse to relieve them from taking out a license and its accompanying restrictive regulations which have proved so onerous to well-meaning men. We have heard many druggists declare that the quantities of these products sold by them in response to legitimate demands were inconsequential, and from such sales they never realized, directly or indirectly, enough to pay the cost of the special tax certificate required by the Internal Revenue authorities. One can well believe that as a matter of financial interest such sales have not been worth the effort and responsibility they cost, while as a nuisance and demoralizing agency they have always required caution and discriminating judgment.

"With the elimination of whisky and brandy from the Pharmacopœia, the fact that the druggist does not keep them for sale as medicines can not be urged as a blot upon his professional reputation. The liquor situation has been one of the most unsatisfactory subjects with which the druggist has had to deal, and the pharmacist who does not wish to have himself classed as a liquor-dealer, or subject himself to espionage or the risks of prosecution for acts he can not foresee, will undoubtedly indorse the verdict of the Pharmacopœial Revision Committee."

SO WHISKY IS NOT A DRUG

So whisky is not a drug! According to a decision of the National Pharmacopœia Committee, after next January druggists must become saloonkeepers if they wish to sell the stuff. What have the brewers and distillers to stand on now? Physicians are rapidly coming to the conclusion that the medical profession could far better get along without one drop of alcohol. One high in that profession stated to us recently that substitutes have already been discovered for all uses to which it is put medicinally. The claim that it is a food product has been exploded. There is only one thing left: To confess that manufacturers and sellers are in the business for money, and the politician is his last support. When politics and whisky fall out, whisky takes to the bottomless pit and politics ascends the mount.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

The National Pharmacopœia Committee last month decided to strike whisky and brandy from the new edition of the United States Pharmacopœia.

WILL A FINANCIAL PANIC FOLLOW NATIONAL PROHIBITION?

In an article which appeared recently in the Chicago Examiner, Joseph Debar, secretary of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of America warns the people of the certainty of an era of frightful business depression that will follow the enactment of a national prohibition measure.

In replying to this cry of alarm Rev. Charles Stelzle, the well-known authority on labor questions, in the same paper says:

"The argument that the abolition of the liquor traffic will create a financial panic is based entirely upon the absurd proposition that if the liquor dealers fail to get the money now spent for beer and whisky nobody else will get it.

It is assumed that if a man doesn't spend a dollar for booze he will throw that dollar into the sewer or into some kind of a bottomless pit, instead of using it to purchase some other commodity, which will do good instead of harm, which will have a permanent value, and which will give the workingmen of the country more work, more wages and greater prosperity every way than if the same amount of money were spent for beer and whisky.

"Every workingman knows that we are not suffering from over-production, but from under-consumption. Therefore it would not injure him particularly if the brewery and distillery owners were to put their 'brains and what is left of their capital' when the liquor business is destroyed, into the production of materials which will give him more of the comforts of life here and now, and less of its torments both here and hereafter.

"As for the 'poor farmer,' who would suffer so grievously, according to the defender of the saloon, because the brewers and distillers would fail to buy his grain and grapes, his apples and cherries—there is no fear that he will buy fewer automobiles and less farm machinery, and all the other modern conveniences which he now enjoys, because somebody else will buy his apples and cherries, his grain and grapes—besides, economists and farm experts are even now afraid that the American farmer will soon be unable to raise enough grain to adequately supply this country.

"Regarding the railroad man who would no longer handle the '2.5 per cent of the total traffic of all manufacturing industries of the country,' which the liquor business now furnishes—nobody doubts for a single moment that the railroad man will get as much business and as much money from the transfer of a given amount of grain, whether that grain is shipped to a brewer or a baker. As for the transportation of the finished product, as well as the raw materials which the liquor industry now furnishes, other industries which would benefit through the transfer of trade from liquor to some other commodity would undoubtedly supply as much business for the railroad man as the brewers and distillers do.

"Reference is made to the large amount of money paid in the form of internal revenue tax by the liquor industry for the privilege of carrying on its business. If it could be said that this business resulted only in good, first to those who are engaged in it, and, second, to those who are consumers of liquor, the millions of dollars which are paid in the form of a tax might be regarded as a blessing. But one cannot discuss this question fairly without reference to the cost and the burden of the liquor business upon the state, because it is compelled to maintain police departments, penitentiaries, asylums of various kinds and other institutions to take care of the victims of alcohol."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department. THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, August 26, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, left Evanston, Wednesday evening, August 25, for Fairmont, Minn., to attend the state W. C. T. U. convention, at which she is to deliver two addresses.

NATIONAL ORGANIZER TRANSLATED

As we go to press the news of the home-going of Mrs. Cora E. Seberry, National W. C. T. U. organizer, is received. A tribute to the memory of this beloved comrade will appear in next week's paper.

A "PERSONALLY CONDUCTED" TOUR ACROSS THE CONTINENT

Are you planning to attend the National W. C. T. U. Convention to be held at Seattle, Washington, October 9-14? Read the many attractions of the trip as outlined in the article on page 11 by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, chairman of Transportation, and decide to join the White Ribbon Special party.

A CHANCE TO SEE YOSEMITE AT REDUCED RATES

All who are contemplating making the trip to Yosemite National Park (see advertisement on page 14) will be interested in knowing that on Friday and Saturday of each week the fare from Merced and return (which is usually $18.50) will be reduced to $14.50.

Prohibition Edict of American Citizens

Temperance teaching and training of the children make deep and lasting sentiment for prohibition and for its enforcement. Mighty is the prohibition edict of the Czar of all the Russias, but mightier far will be the United States prohibition edict. This will come, not through the proclamation of one ruler, but through that of millions of enlightened American citizens, "kings over themselves," who, at the ballot box, will choose for our beloved Republic, the inestimable blessing of nationwide prohibition.

JOHN BARLEYCORN'S SUMMER VACATION

There has long been a tradition that during the summer season the churches and the right-thinking people in large measure suspend all activities and leave the forces of evil unmolested to carry out their programs. However, the record of achievements in the United States and Canada during the past three months is proof that a great change in this respect has taken place in reform circles, and that June, July and August are popular months for prohibition victories.

If you doubt this assertion, look at the rapidly whitening map of Minnesota, forty-four counties voting out the liquor traffic since March 1, averaging almost two a week during the vacation season, not to mention all the scattered cities and counties in other local option states which have taken the same course.

If you desire further proof, glance at the big province of Alberta, Canada, containing 260,000 square miles of territory, which, by a 23,000 majority, in midsummer, voted to sweep the dramshops from its borders.

Of almost equal importance and significance have been the launching of an educational campaign against John Barleycorn by the New York City board of health and the decision of the National Pharmacopœia committee of fifty-one leading physicians to strike whisky and brandy from the new revised edition of the Pharmacopœia.

Other events which make the past few months memorable in temperance history are the action taken by the Kansas Civil Service commission, at the suggestion of Governor Capper, that no user of alcoholic liquors or of cigarets shall hereafter be eligible to an official position in the state of Kansas; the emancipation of the state of Alabama on July 1 from the legalized liquor traffic; the large number of business houses which have announced anti-liquor rules for their employes, the saloons, breweries, distillers, and firms dealing in saloon supplies that have either been forced out of business through bankruptcy or have voluntarily abandoned it in anticipation of national prohibition; and the quite general elimination of alcoholic liquors from the summer camps of the state militia of the different commonwealths.

The summer has in very truth been a vacation season for John Barleycorn such as he has never before experienced, for not only has he been told to vacate much territory heretofore claimed by him but he is finding himself rapidly becoming a persona non grata in nearly every organization—medical, military, commercial and social. In every section of the world, in every class of society, one hears variations of the popular song of the day, "John Barleycorn, goodbye."

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC NO FRIEND TO THE WORKINGMAN

Occasionally it is reported that some representative of the labor movement has made declarations reflecting upon the value of prohibition. That such utterances do not voice the sentiments of the rank and file of the labor organizations is certain. Whole bodies of workingmen have gone on record in favor of prohibition and men in high official positions in the American Federation of Labor have been most emphatic and outspoken against the liquor business. Only last spring the National Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, representing a membership of 70,000, passed a resolution in favor of prohibition, and last year the labor union of Pasadena, California, sent out to the labor unions of the nation a plea to work and vote for the elimination of the saloon, urging the benefits they had experienced from being in dry territory.

We recall the words on the liquor evil spoken by John Mitchell, at one time vice-president of the Federation of Labor of America and head of the Mine Workers' organization: "Almost every disturbance in the ranks of organized labor can be traced back to some connection with the saloon. If a brewery is closed down, in its place springs up a factory. If a saloon is closed, in its place comes a store. It is simply a process well known to union men, the same process as follows the introduction of machinery. It is a readjustment, a changed condition of society."

We are reminded also of the strong statements of John F. Cunneen, of the International Association of Machinists, "Almost every labor union scandal can be traced to the saloons. The downfall of labor union officers who get drunk, neglect their duties, embezzle the funds of the union or sell out the union, can be traced in almost every case to the saloon. It means disgrace to the union to have the short-comings of its officers aired in the courts of the land and the less of it the better for the labor union. Every labor union should fight the saloon with all its power."

Speaking in the resubmission campaign in Maine in 1911, John B. Lennon, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, said, "Go all through the list of things the trade union movement fundamentally stands for and then observe what the saloon is doing in the world upon the same question, and you will find that the influence of the saloon is positively unqualifiedly against the progress of every element of human uplift for which the trade union stands. I am not writing about saloonkeepers. I am writing about saloons. I have no contest with saloon-keepers but I have a contest with the saloon and I am against it and I will do all I possibly can to put it out of business."

The members of the labor unions of this country are too keen observers of the signs of the times, too devoted lovers of their families and homes, too patriotic citizens of their country to tolerate or approve an institution which is so plainly inimical to their interests.

National W. C. T. U. Convention

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, OCTOBER 9-14

A trip to Seattle, Washington, on the White Ribbon Special

WILL AFFORD AN OPPORTUNITY

To spend nearly a week in Seattle, the municipal miracle of the West;

To visit the five great Pacific Coast cities;

To attend an inspiring convention and hear such eloquent speakers as Bishop Walter Sumner, Mr. Daniel Poling and Dr. Mary Stone, the noted Chinese medical missionary;

To visit the Panama-Pacific and the San Diego Expositions;

To be present at the meeting of the National Temperance Council at San Francisco.

For further particulars read article on page 11

STATE HEALTH OFFICERS OF WASHINGTON DECLARE FOR PROHIBITION

Following a general discussion of public health matters, the annual convention of the state, county and city health officers of the state of Washington, on August 17, went on record as favoring national prohibition of the liquor traffic. The discussion developed the feeling among the health officers that indulgence in liquor was the cause of much illness and suffering and by a majority vote of those present the organization decided in favor of the elimination of the saloon evil as favorable to the bettering of health conditions in general.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

The attitude of the agriculturists of the United States toward the prohibition movement is indicated by the fact that the majority of the state granges have passed resolutions in favor of outlawing the liquor traffic from the nation.

The 934 state banks and trust companies of prohibition Kansas at the last report show larger deposits than at any previous time in the history of the state —an increase of $24,000,000 in twelve months. How about the "prohibition-ruination" prophecies of the liquor people?

Two of the periodicals having the largest circulation among the workingmen of the United States, the Yoeman Shield and the Modern Woodmen, continually and emphatically declare against the drink evil. Their continued popularity with the labor element is proof of the sentiment of the man who works.

"The abolition of beer and whisky would be as miraculously beneficial to Great Britain as the abolition of vodka has been to Russia," says the great novelist, Arnold Bennett, in the London News.

"Beer and whisky are among the major curses of this country. At the present time they are doing an unusual amount of harm. They are interfering with the quick delivery war jobs of all kinds, and are, therefore, traitorous in effect; and, further, they are weakening the tenacity which wins. I have seen a middle-aged man lament over a morning glass of whisky that he was too old to serve his country—as though he could not have served it by keeping off whisky!"

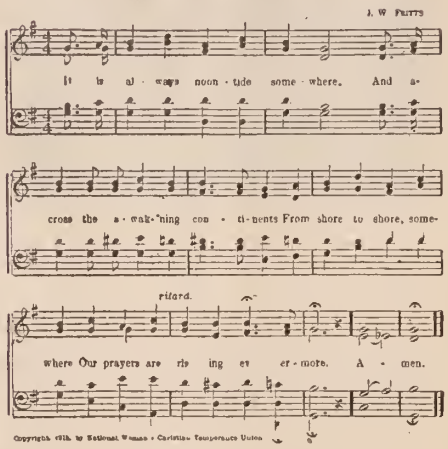
When the province of Alberta, Canada, went dry, last month, the leaders of the prohibition forces sent the following message to Hon. Lloyd George: "England's greatest enemy has been slain by the voters of Alberta."

It is reported that the buildings formerly occupied by the Capitol Brewing Company of Montgomery, Ala., will be used for an enterprise known as the Montgomery Packing Plant. The community is to be congratulated upon the change from a business which took sustenance out of the mouths of whole families to one which will provide the market with nourishing food.

The Crescent Brewery of Nampa, Idaho, is being remodelled for a cold storage plant and a soft drink factory and will change its name to the "Overland Beverage Co." The cooling room, after all beer vats have been removed, will be used for cold storage and will have a capacity of 50,000 boxes of Nampa Valley apples. All former employes will be retained.

A Birmingham (England) employer, who is a staunch teetotaller, recently advertised for a foreman for one of the departments of his works, and a large crowd of men called at the factory. When the employer saw them outside he said genially, "Well, we might as well go and have a drink," pointing to a tavern opposite. He suited the action to his words, and led the way across, the men following When he reached the swing doors of the public house he turned around and saw one man loitering behind the others, and called out to him, "Aren't you coming in?" "I'm a teetotaller, thanks," was the response. "Well, you're the man for me," the employer promptly rejoined, and he there and then engaged him, while all the others were sent about their business.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



OUR CAMPAIGN STATES

At the sacred noontide hour, will not all white ribboners of the nation remember in prayer not only our campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition but also the workers in the campaign states, that in large measure they may be endued with wisdom, strength and power by our Divine leader in our righteous war. The following states vote this fall:

South Carolina, September 14.

Ohio, November election.

BREAD OR BOOZE?

We cannot conceive of any poorer business than that a nation should use the grain which it produces in the manufacture of liquids which sap the vitality and efficiency of its people without adding any desirable or useful quality, thus leaving the nation dependent upon the outside world for its bread and cereal foods. Such a practice is a fundamental economic error, and it seems to have taken this great war to teach the folly of such a method.

The great war of the past nine months has taught the nations of the earth, as no moral wave or religious campaign ever could have taught them, the absolute uselessness of alcoholic beverages. It is not a moral lesson which is being taught so much as it is an economic lesson. And out of this war will come the greatest good which ever yet has been done to the cause of temperance and of personal and national efficiency, for it will have taught very forcefully the individual and national damage which comes from diverting the grains of the world to the manufacture of harmful drinks rather than using them for the manufacture of bread and other foods.—Farming Business of Chicago

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, Hartford, Wis., rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

As a result of the election on August 9, Kennett, Mo., remains dry by a majority of 69, in spite of the vigorous campaign by the liquor interests, in which U. S. Congressman Jacob E. Meeker was the chief speaker.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

AUGUST 28—(Birthday of Mrs. Lucy Webb Hayes)
SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE

MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN

All her life your superintendent has been coveting knowledge and then more knowledge, but now she is coveting foreknowledge. Why? That she may know just when your institutes and county and district conventions are to be held. If she could only have this knowledge beforewards instead of afterwards, she would make so pathetic an appeal that the program-maker could not omit parliamentary "exercises." She would convince whomsoever it concerned that more parliamentary knowledge means conservation of time, greater enthusiasm and the "smoothing away" of all friction. When she reads of the wonderful doings of certain conventions or institutes without so much as a mention of parliamentary work, her heart is pained within her. It seems such ingratitude to give this important "aid" the go-by when without it said convention or institute could not even have been "called." Your National superintendent was grateful when our much loved National Y. P. B. secretary made such gracious mention in the Missouri W. C. T. U. convention of the parliamentary work.

Just here special thanks must be tendered the several state presidents, many of whom are overburdened, but who still take time to write most courteous replies to all requests, thereby emboldening the present writer to beg that in the many state conventions so soon to be held generous space be given to parliamentary exercises. Then, too, there is a prize contest on and the state meeting is the best possible place for the state superintendent to make her appeal and win the prize.

In conclusion, the second week in September is to be the week for "special" parliamentary meetings. How many unions (for this concerns the local workers) will plan and carry to success such a meeting? Invite everybody and then give the most profitable entertainments in all your history. You can use the department literature—Drills 1, 2 or 3, "Voices," or "Why Study Parliamentary Law?" or the leader can formulate her own program. If additional knowledge of "Rank of Motions" is the main desire, No. 3 of the Parliamentary Studies will be all that is needed. Make much of the musical part of the program, and if the entire union has a mind to help, light refreshments will not be "out of order." Be sure to give those present an opportunity to become members of the union and when you have done all report—report. And will every state superintendent keep constantly in mind that the National W. C. T. U. convention is to be held unusually early and see to it that her report is forwarded not later than September 25?

Grand Rapids, Mich.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION FROM ALBERTA

The latest figures from the province of Alberta, Canada, give the majority for prohibition of the liquor traffic at the July 21 election as 23,000. Fully 80 per cent of the possible vote was polled and more than 60 per cent of the vote cast was for prohibition. Alberta is the only province of Canada that has a direct legislation law and this is the first bill to be voted on under that law.

MRS. LOUISE C. MCKINNEY, president of the Alberta provincial W. C. T. U., reporting the victory to THE UNION SIGNAL, says: "You helped us by your speakers, your literature and the example of so many of your states. Go forward in your march towards National Prohibition and Canada will try to keep step with you."

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. SARAH B. MOORE, Easton, Md., a long time member of the W. C. T. U., and subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL. In local, county and state offices she has faithfully served the organization.

MRS. MARGARET AINSLIE, Whitewater, Wis., a faithful member of the local union for many years.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Minnesota, Fairmont, Aug. 24-27.
South Carolina, Allendale, Sept. 2-5.
Vermont, Barton, Sept. 8-10.
Maine, Skowhegan, Sept. 14-16.
Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Nebraska, Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Salt Lake City, Sept. 29-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

Now is the Time

to renew THE YOUNG CRUSADER subscriptions for your public school teachers—nine months' subscriptions for twenty cents.

Kindly send in the subscriptions at once so that the September number may reach the teachers at the very beginning of the school year, that they may count upon its help as they plan the year's work.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Safety signals, smooth road-bed, all steel equipment, trains usually on time, even when trains on other roads were late because of heavy rains, have contributed much to the comfort of my journeyings on the North-Western and Union Pacific during a recent lecture tour in Nebraska, and all who take the trip to the National W. C. T. U. Convention on the White Ribbon Special will agree with me that no better route could have been chosen.

It will not be possible to make the half hour stop at Payette, Idaho, as announced, because we cannot arrive there until midnight, but delegates may board the train and we will give them a royal welcome in the morning.

Note that the return route from Seattle must be decided upon when ticket is purchased, and there are many routes from which to choose.

The Convention will adjourn Thursday night, October 14. Friday there will be meetings of the Official Board and Executive Committee and several pleasant excursions are being planned for delegates and visitors.

Saturday morning those who are going to San Francisco will board the train about eight o'clock. Several interesting stops are arranged for if we are enabled to have a special train from Seattle to San Francisco. Remember that it is necessary that we have one hundred or more in order to have this special service and when you read of the many interesting stops we are planning, I am sure every one of you will wish to make this trip.

At Salem we will call on the governor; at Albany a demonstration is planned. At Roseburg our train will be sidetracked from midnight Saturday night until midnight Sunday night; for this the Pullman company will make an extra charge of $2.50 for standard sleeper lower berth, a little less for tourist. Many meetings are being planned for the day, and the W. C. T. U. will entertain us all for Sunday dinner and supper.

After the evening meeting we will return to our train and when Monday morning comes, we will be well on our way to San Francisco. At Ashland, the last stop in Oregon, where we remain for an hour, the possibility of an auto ride over a wonderful mountain road fills us with pleasant anticipation.

Another stop at Shasta Springs will be well worth the time it takes and we will arrive in San Francisco late in the evening, but that will not inconvenience us, for it is arranged that we are to remain in our sleepers until morning without extra expense.

Tuesday morning, October 19, all who desire to do so will go to the same hotel and every effort will be made to secure one at moderate rates and without a bar.

Tuesday we will of course spend at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, for we will want to see the exhibit of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and I think I can assure you that this will be a personally conducted trip.

Wednesday, October 20, has been designated as Temperance Day at the Exposition. On that day will occur the meeting of the National Temperance Council, in which the National W. C. T. U. will have an important part.

As the length of stay in San Francisco will vary, our party will separate into groups here, but the average stay will probably be four days. The trip to Los Angeles will be by one of the regular trains of the Southern Pacific. A day or two at San Diego and a return to Los Angeles should be included. Those who wish to see the Yosemite National Park can do so en route to Los Angeles, leaving the train at Merced. From Los Angeles there are many routes by which to return, but simply for the convenience of those who are uncertain as to route, we recommend the Santa Fe with side trip from Williams to the Grand Canyon (extra fare $7.50); then a stop may be made at Albuquerque and again at Colorado Springs and Denver; then over the Union Pacific and North-Western to Chicago.

A wonderful trip at a minimum of expense, with congenial company, attendance at a National W. C. T. U. Convention, the National Temperance Council meeting and a chance to help in some campaign states and hold prohibition meetings in other states where prohibition goes into effect January 1, 1916.

Multnomah Falls, near Oneonta, Ore., on O. W. R. & N. R. R.

Points to Remember.

Your destination must be either Seattle ($62.50 round trip from Chicago), or San Francisco, via Seattle ($80 from Chicago), over the route of the White Ribbon Special. Chicago and North-Western and Union Pacific Lines via Omaha, Granger, Pocatello and Portland.

Purchase tickets from starting point through to destination, as baggage may then be checked through and transfer in Chicago is provided for. Special baggage tags will be sent when reservation is ordered.

The White Ribbon Special leaves Chicago at 7:15 p. m. Tuesday, October 5. Dining cars will not be attached until Wednesday morning.

Sleeping car reservations must be made in advance. In making reservations, please state definitely whether you desire standard Pullman or tourist; lower or upper berth, compartment or drawing room; names of all in your party and where you will board the train. Also state whether you will return on the special train to San Francisco. Full information will be sent you on application to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

ELLA A. BOOLE, Chairman.

THE HEART OF A WOMAN

ANNE GUILBERT MAHON, Philadelphia, Pa.

It was early in the morning—so early that the waiting-room in the usually bustling, noisy depot was empty and deserted. The ticket-seller yawned behind his grating. A colored porter lazily mopped the floor. The rush, the excitement of the day had not yet begun.

A plump little woman, in a well-worn, but neatly brushed brown suit, lugging a big basket telescope and followed by a small boy and girl, puffing and panting, hurried into the room.

"Well, I declare, children," she exclaimed, glancing nervously at the clock, "our time-piece must have been fast. We needn't have hurried so, after all." She dropped into a seat and drew a long breath, adding, "We've half an hour to wait."

"Oh!" A duet of disappointment issued from the younger travelers. They had not minded the hurrying and rushing, the scurrying and the flurrying, half as much as to lose—to them—precious moments.

The boy espied a nickel-in-the-slot machine at one end of the depot. His sister at once became interested in the workings of a weighing machine in the opposite direction. Both went to make investigations, and returned with wistful expressions. "I wish you had a penny, mother!" they told their parent.

A shadow crossed the face of the woman. "No use to wish that," she answered. "It will take all my pennies to get us to grandmother's—more than we can afford—but we have to go when she's sick and needs us." She sighed.

The children's eager faces grew sober. "But we love to go to grandmother's," spoke up the little girl. The mother only sighed and in a few moments the boy and girl ran off again, to gaze curiously at a big glass case filled with flowers.

Suddenly there was heard a rustle of silks. A woman in a shimmering satin gown of brilliant hue, with expensive trimmings, a hat encircled by a long, wide plume, and wearing costly jewels in her ears and at her throat, dropped into the seat beside the mother of the children. She was followed by an obsequious porter with a handsome leather traveling bag, which he deposited at her feet, saying, "Your train doesn't go for twenty minutes, ma'am. I'll come for you in plenty of time." Touching his cap, he disappeared.

The richly-dressed woman looked about her superciliously. She bestowed one glance on the shabby person at her side and gazed critically at the bulging wicker telescope, then she sighed and leaned back in her seat.

The little mother saw the glance. The blood rushed to her cheeks as she realized anew her thread-worn appearance.

Suddenly the little boy ran up. "Mother, I couldn't help it," he whispered, holding up a fat leg to show a big hole in the knee of his black stocking.

"Freddy," she exclaimed impatiently, "those were new stockings!"

"I couldn't help it, mother. I fell down," whimpered the boy.

"Well," the mother drew a breath of exasperation, "it can't be helped now, but I do wish you'd be more careful. I simply can't keep you in wearing apparel."

"And mother, look!" He held up a worn but neatly blacked little shoe. The sole had worn through.

"I knew it would not last much longer," said his mother in distress, "but I did hope—" She paused, then, seeing the boy's lip quiver and his eyes fill, added, "It can't be helped, Freddy. But try to be careful, dear."

A train came in at that moment and the children, forgetting all else, ran to the gate to watch the stream of people coming from the cars.

HAPPY DAY OF PROHIBITION

Louisa S. Weightman

Air: "Happy Day"

It's coming fast, that blessed day,
For which we hope, for which we pray,
When morn, nor eve, nor sunny noon
Shall cast its lure, e'en one saloon.

CHORUS

Happy Day! Happy Day!
When all saloons are swept away.
It's coming fast, that blessed day
When prohibition shall hold sway.
Happy Day! Happy Day!
When all saloons are swept away.

But we must watch and work and pray,
If we would see that blessed day;
And 'neath the banner of our king
Must rally 'gainst the hosts of sin.

Then let each heart that beats aright,
Beneath the bow of ribbon white,
Each noon unite in earnest prayer
For victory—our God will hear.

And when our land from rum is free,
We'll praise our God on bended knee;
And thankful voices loud shall sing
Hosannas to our Lord and King.

The mother sighed again. It was a long, half-conscious sigh she gave. Presently she was aware that the richly-dressed woman beside her was looking at her with curiosity not unmingled with kindness. She reddened and looked away.

"Have you trouble, too?" The words were spoken by the woman in the seat next to her.

The little mother flushed and smiled. "I suppose we all have trouble of some kind," she responded.

"Do you think so?" The woman regarded her almost eagerly. She was not as young as she at first appeared to be. Beneath paint and powder the lines in her face could be detected and her eyes had an appealing look, a certain discontented, unhappy expression.

"I'm sure of it," answered the woman in the shabby brown suit. "There's not a person anywhere who doesn't have some kind of a problem. With some it's one thing, with others it's another."

"But you don't carry much of a burden," said the other woman, looking almost envious.

"What makes you think so?" The little mother's eyes opened wide.

"I can tell by your face. Your troubles are all on the surface. They don't cut deep—like mine." She sighed.

"Sometimes I think mine go pretty deep. When you have to count the cost of everything, when you have to deny yourself and your children things you and they want and need, when you have to economize and scrimp, when you can't have pretty clothes and things like other women," involuntarily glancing at the rich clothing of the woman beside her; "when your husband is only a poor clerk who has to work hard from early morning till late night, and then doesn't make enough to keep you and the children decently"—the little woman's voice grew hard—"I don't think those are surface troubles. I think they're pretty important ones!"

"O my dear, my dear!" The other woman shook her head and smiled sadly. "If those are your only troubles, how thankful, how happy you ought to be! You don't know what real trouble is."

The woman in the brown suit stiffened slightly.

"You haven't anything to be ashamed of, have you?" asked the other.

"No, thank God, I can say that," replied the little mother quickly.

"Your husband is an honest, hard-working man. The money he makes, though it may not be much, is good, honest, clean money. Oh, how thankful you ought to be! You don't know what I would give to change places with you!"

The little mother looked at the other with astonished eyes.

"You think you have trouble because you haven't means;" continued the woman with feverish intensity. "My trouble is that I have money—but not the right kind. Oh, yes, I have all the fine clothes and jewels I want. I have a handsome house and plenty of servants. I have two automobiles. I have plenty of money to spend. I have everything money can buy: but, oh"—the lines in her face deepened—"suppose every time you sat down to your table laden with the choicest food, every mouthful choked you when you remembered that it was bought with money which took the bread out of starving children's mouths! Suppose every time you put on a pair of your jewel-bedecked slippers you remembered that the money which paid for them meant that children were going around with bare feet on the ground! Suppose every time you entered your own luxurious home you thought of others who were living in wretchedness and squalor, perhaps even turned out on the street homeless because the money which would have paid for their homes, which would have made them comfortable, had been swallowed up in a business which made you rich, but which not only starved and beggared others but ruined souls as well!"

"That must be dreadful," shuddered the little mother, at length, not knowing exactly what to say.

"Dreadful? No one who hasn't been through with it all knows what it is. No one realizes how many liquor dealers' wives such an experience curses, how many it kills. I know one woman who is in an insane asylum. Another is dead by her own hand. Several have died of nothing but broken hearts because their husbands were in such a business!"

The horrified look in her neighbor's eyes deepened.

"I wasn't always a saloon-keeper's wife," went on the other bitterly. "My husband was in a clean, respectable business once, but he was influenced to buy a saloon. He is a different man now. I've pleaded with him to take up something else, but he won't listen to me. He says he never could make as much—" She closed her eyes as if to shut out some dread picture. "It's getting so I can't stand it," she murmured. "I don't know what will become of me if Henry keeps on—"

The porter came up, touching his cap deferentially. "Train will leave in five minutes now. Better get your chair, ma'am," he said.

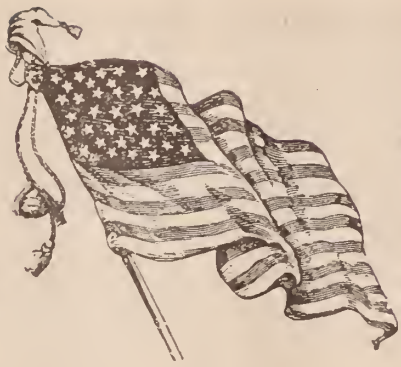
The woman rested her white-gloved hand for a moment on the shabby cotton glove of the little mother. "Goodbye," she said, tears shining in her eyes.

The children ran up, excitedly. "The man's calling our train, mother," they cried. Picking up the wicker telescope, the mother followed them to the train. The engine snorted. They were off. Gleefully the children looked from the window, their voices ringing out happily, but the mother leaned back in her seat and could not shake off the spell which the woman's story had cast over her.

"I never dreamed of such trouble," she said to herself. "Oh, how thankful I am that James is in a good, clean, honest business; that every penny we spend isn't cursed. I'll never grumble again. Why, my trouble—our little inconvenience—is nothing compared to that poor woman's!"

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!



Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

HILDA'S LETTER

MRS. CARL BILBY, Muncie, Ind.

Hilda Bramholt, who was enrolled in a girl's school in the east, was home spending the summer vacation. One morning her father, the proprietor of a prosperous bakeshop, seemed to the girl to be unusually preoccupied.

"Papa, what's the matter?" she asked. "Aren't you feeling well?"

Bridgeville (Del.) Loyal Temperance Legioners Ready for a Picnic and Parade

"Oh, nothing's the matter, Hilda; at least nothing about which little girls should worry their pretty heads," he laughingly answered, patting her hand and kissing her before taking his departure for the day.

"Mama, there is something wrong with daddy, isn't there? He doesn't seem the same. He's sick and worried, or something, isn't he, mama?"

"Yes, dearie, your father is worried, although I don't believe he'd like to have you know about it."

"Oh, please do tell me, mama!"

Mrs. Bramholt looked into Hilda's tearful, pleading eyes, then hesitatingly began: "Well, Hilda, you know there's a local option election next Tuesday and your father is very much concerned about it because of its effect upon his business. Mr. Saylor, the proprietor of the new Grand Hotel, told him that the Grand's trade was going in future to those who had the town's best business interests at heart—meaning those in general who voted wet, and the Shaffer Bakery Company in particular."

"Why, the idea! Does that mean old Mr. Saylor think he can force my father to vote wet just because he buys a few loaves of bread from him?" cried Hilda, indignantly springing up.

"The Grand Hotel's bakery trade is quite an item to your father, Hilda," sighed Mrs. Bramholt.

"What if it is? We can get along without it!"

"We'll have to if your father votes 'dry,' that's sure. There's father now returning for something he's forgotten, I imagine. Don't mention a word of this to him."

Hilda was obliged to return to school the following Saturday in order to have time to "get settled" for the fall term which opened the following Tuesday. All during her return journey she thought of how her poor father was being torn between principle and a desire for profit, and it suddenly occurred to her that if she were not attending this expensive school her father's monthly bills would be greatly lessened; then perhaps he could get along without the Grand Hotel's bakery trade.

Hilda spent a long, restless Saturday night. She loved the school, the teachers, the girls, all the associations connected with the place. But she loved, too, her dear little home town, her mother and father, her home, and the principle of temperance. Sunday afternoon she reached a decision and wrote the following letter to her father:

"Dear Daddy:

"Mother told me how Mr. Saylor threatened to give Mr. Shaffer the Grand Hotel's trade because Mr. Shaffer was a 'wet' man. Now, daddy, darling, don't you worry another minute about it! You just go right straight ahead and vote 'dry' as you've always done for dear old Bardstown, Mama, and me; and I'll give up going to school here and come home. I'd far rather be only daddy's girl, living in a 'dry' town, than to be a graduate with the highest honors this school can give if my expenses here will have to be paid by my dear daddy's sacrifice of his temperance principles or 'going broke' because of a 'wet' boycott! Now don't forget, daddy, that I mean just every word I write. I'll come back home if your income is to be in the least cut down by the happenings of this election. Only, dearest daddy, you'll quit worrying and vote right, won't you?

"Your loving,
"HILDA.

"P. S.—Love to mama and tell her I just couldn't help telling you how I felt about it all."

There was an inscrutable look on Mr. Bramholt's face as he read his daughter's letter. When he had finished he turned to his wife, his eyes moist, his face smiling.

"Read this!" he exclaimed, tossing the letter to Mrs. Bramholt and rising from the table. "I'm going to hustle down to the polls before going to the bakery this morning. My early vote may be the means of encouraging others to do likewise,"—and he walked rapidly away whistling a merry little tune.

On Thursday morning Hilda was delighted to receive the following communication:

"Dearest Daughter:

"Bardstown remains dry and your daddy loses the Grand Hotel trade. But somehow Mr. Saylor's threat must have gotten 'noised about,' for this morning Mr. Lynx of the Imperial and Mrs. Wells of the Travellers called me by 'phone and said they thought they'd prefer to feed their patrons dry Bramholt bread rather than wet Shaffer bread. So I guess the Bramholt bakery's accounts will stand about as usual and your school expenses will be forthcoming in the future as in the past. I think it is now your turn to quit worrying.

"Your loving
"DADDY."

THE HEART OF A WOMAN

(Continued from Page Twelve)

It was a week later when the little mother and her family were at home once more and she was busily clearing off the breakfast dishes, that the small girl picked up the morning paper.

"Mother," she exclaimed, "doesn't this picture look just like that lovely-looking lady who sat and talked to you in the railroad station when we were going to grandmother's?"

The mother set down the dishes and looked over the child's shoulder. Her heart beat strangely as she recognized the handsome but sad face of the woman. Under the picture, in large type, she read the words: "Mrs. Estelle Montague, wife of rich liquor dealer, shot accidentally while cleaning husband's revolver."

Her heart beat tumultuously. She read down the column: "The doctors and the coroner are convinced that the shooting was wholly accidental," ran the newspaper account. "Mrs. Montague had no trouble of any kind. There was no reason for her to take her life. Her husband is prosperous. He was devoted to his wife. There were no domestic difficulties. She had everything a woman's heart could wish."

Tears filled the little mother's eyes as she read the words. "Poor soul!" she murmured. "Poor soul! How little people understand."

Triple Alliance of Deleterious Agencies

DR. B. C. KEISTER, Roanoke, Va.

It is a well known fact that the five per cent of alcohol contained in ordinary beer is the main factor that produces the habit and the uncontrollable thirst among beer drinkers. It is equally well known that the small quantity of alcohol in beer acts precisely as small drinks of whisky on the system. It simply requires a larger amount of beer to satisfy the craving for alcohol. Whisky and brandy, as is well known, contain from forty to fifty per cent of alcohol, hence it requires from eight to ten times as much beer as it does whisky or brandy to satisfy the thirst of a regular drinker.

According to the latest and best authorities, one five cent loaf of bread contains about as much real nutriment as a whole barrel of ordinary lager-beer. Hence, in order to get five cents' worth of food value you must consume a whole barrel of beer, besides taking into the system about ten quarts of alcohol, certain quantities of arsenic, copper, formalin, strychnia, etc., as preservatives and coloring ingredients, all of which act injuriously on the internal organs of the body. It is thus seen that we have a triple alliance of deleterious agencies: The alcohol, the fermented malt and the preservatives and coloring ingredients that constitute the ordinary beer.

It is now recognized by our best authorities in military matters that alcoholic beverages are no longer entitled to a place in the army or navy, in camp or on the field of battle. These facts are borne out today in the great European war by all of the warring powers. At a meeting of the Association of Military Surgeons in Baltimore, Dr. L. M. Maus of the Army Medical Corps made this statement before that distinguished body: "Practically all of the crimes committed in the army are traced directly to the use of alcoholic beverages. These include murders, suicides, courts martial, dismissals, guard-house sentences, desertions, robberies, venereal diseases and insanity." He also made the statement that if alcoholic beverages were interdicted the rate of efficiency would be increased fifty per cent, and the sick rate reduced fifty per cent. When we consider the high standard of physical and mental requirements for military service of some of our sister nations, it seems to me that it is high time for our Federal Government to begin to take notice, lest we, as a nation, be classed with the wine and beer-drinking nations whose standard of mental and physical efficiency has been lowered on account of indulgence in alcoholic beverages. May the time soon dawn when America will come boldly to the forefront and declare to the world her sentiments of Nation-wide Prohibition.

VIRGINIA VITALITIES

Virginia Primaries Result in Prohibition Victory--Poster Day a Great Success

Special Correspondence

The results of the Virginia primaries held on August 3 was another victory for the temperance forces. In almost every instance where a strong contest waged between a man of known prohibition sentiments and a man who worked against statewide, the "right" man won. The house will be overwhelmingly dry, and the senate safely so,—we trust! It is believed that the Virginia legislature of 1915-16 will give the nation an example of clean, honest legislation that has not been excelled in any state or by any body of men similarly entrusted.

August 2 was poster day in Virginia and hundreds of sets were purchased by the unions and posted on trees, buildings, billboards and fences throughout the state. The set is a selected list of six of the best National subjects, printed on heavy paper, half of them 42x27 inches, and half 25x18 inches in dimension. The state president made the selection and it has been most satisfactory to the unions.

The decorative quality of the Virginia poster set was never more noticeable than at the rest-room kept by Mrs. Green at Wharton's Grove. The whole front of the cottage under the porch was decorated with posters in red and black on white, while the hall, off of which opened the rest and dressing rooms, was literally papered with posters, samples of literature and copies of the state and National organs. A beautiful pennant in blue and gold reached across the cottage above the porch roof, and the National temperance fan and the state invitation card were given as souvenirs. This was a bit of state work done partly as an experiment, but it is quite likely the Lancaster county W. C. T. U. will make the institution permanent through local efforts. On Sundays fully 5,000 people were reached by literature, addresses and personal service. The camp is of Baptist denomination, presided over by Dr. H. M. Wharton of Baltimore, Md.

GERMAN TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

The following German pamphlets are issued to help enlist as many as possible of the German-Americans in the fight against the drink habit and the liquor traffic. They appeal to them in their native tongue and on lines which will most easily influence them. Speed the cause of national prohibition by distributing these pamphlets widely.

1. "THE BIBLE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE." 32 pages, 2d edition, ten thousand now issued. Price 5c each, 25c a doz., $1.50 a hundred, postpaid.
2. "THE GERMANS AND THE DRINK QUESTION." 8 pages, forty thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a dozen, 50c a hundred, postpaid, $4.00 a thousand by express.
3. "CHRISTIANITY AND PROHIBITION." 8 pages, twenty thousand now issued. Same price as No. 2.
4. "THE AIMS AND RESULTS OF PROHIBITION." 12 pages, 3d edition, thirty-five thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a doz., 65c a hundred, postpaid, $5.00 a thousand by express.

Of this last a new revised edition has just left the press. It also embodies the latest statistics and statements concerning prohibition in Kansas by the Governors, Stubbs, Hodges and Capper and by the legislature of the state. Send orders to

J. G. EVERT, BOX D, HILLSBORO, KANS.

NEW LEAFLETS

Substitutes for the Saloon
Advertise Your Speaker
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents

* * *

Prohibition's Onward March
Revised to date
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents

* * *

Beer from an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
The Brewer's Slaves (Illustrated)
Behind the Bars for Life
Prohibition's Effect Upon Revenue and Business
Size 6x9 inches
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents

* * *

A Plea from a Saloonkeeper's Daughter
Consumption of Liquor Decreasing
Drink and Divorce
Size 3½x6 inches
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents

* * *

POSTER LEAFLET SERIES

Reproductions of posters in small leaflet form

1. Which Will You Protect?
2. Do You Know These Facts?
3. Alcohol
4. Beer
5. Drink Robs the Working Man
6. The License Voter Gets What?
7. Attention, Voters!
8. Figures Tell
9. Saloons Increase Taxes
10. The Trouble Manufacturing Co.
11. Compare These Figures
12. Boys and Girls
13. Not by My Vote
14. State Prohibition and Local Option
15. Railroads and Alcoholic Liquors
16. The Factory and Alcoholic Liquors
17. The Man Who Drinks
18. A Business Proposition
19. The Liquor Traffic Must Go
20. Successful Men

Price per 100, 10 cents

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"High Joe" or The Logger's Story

By J. BURRITT SMITH

Striking, pathetic, convincing—and a vote-maker. Called "The Uncle Tom's Cabin of the Temperance Reform." Sixteen editions issued.

Paper, 35c; cloth, $1.00

Busy World Publishing Co.
22 S. Henry St. Madison, Wis.

SUPPLY YOUR FRIENDS

WITH THE

LATEST TEMPERANCE NEWS

And Authentic, Up-to-date Information

BY SUBSCRIBING FOR

THE UNION SIGNAL

WEEKLY EDITION, $1.00 PER YEAR

Monthly Campaign Edition, 25 cents per Year

THE UNION SIGNAL

EVANSTON - - - - ILLINOIS

THE RAVAGES OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION

I want to speak to you a little while about the terrible disasters which will follow National Prohibition.

Think of the fine madhouses made empty. Have we the right to stop going crazy if it will throw asylum guards out of work? Think of the employes of our beautiful penitentiaries. Shall we strike down 85 per cent of their prosperity? Shall we cast upon the scrapheap the divorce lawyers of our land, the bone and sinew of our country?

And there is the corkscrew industry. It has not the pull it used to have. Untold fortunes invested in its manufacture are gone.

Take the steel industry. National Prohibition will affect the manufacture of padlocks, jimmies, ball and chains, handcuffs and prison bars. Millions will be thrown out of work.

And this does not include the millions of skilled workmen now engaged in the manufacture of brass knuckles. Gamblers will be reduced not only to want—but to work.

After all, can the American home survive the ravages of sobriety? Can any nation hope to lead the march of human progress if we limit the output of locomotor ataxia?

The constitution provides the right of trial by jury. How are we going to enjoy this right if we remove the incentive to crime? The constitution also guarantees the right of habeas corpus. How are we going to exercise this if the people stop going to jail?

But, in spite of all this disaster, I'm for National Prohibition. I'm for it because no honest government can steal babies' shoes and call it revenue. I'm for it because no civilized nation can run a toll gate on the road to hell. I'm for it because I want a national defense that can defy the world if necessary.

I'm for it because it's more in the scope of the republic's business to protect little children at home than to protect big business abroad. I'm for it because it's the nation's wrong and the nation alone can right it.—Ex-Congressman Landis.

COLORADO NEWS

Governor Carlson, a Popular Speaker at W. C. T. U. Meetings--State Association of Druggists Favors Strict Enforcement of Prohibition Law

MRS. ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS

The annual "Home-Coming Day for Northern Colorado Drys" at the Colorado-Texas Chautauqua held at Boulder, July 29, was an occasion of unusual interest and enthusiasm. There was as usual an all-day program with picnic lunch and tea and coffee served at Rest Cottage, where our state president, Mrs. Hungerford, keeps open house each summer during the Chautauqua session. This day is fast becoming one of the most popular on the six weeks' program. It was said that our morning attendance this year was the best any forenoon meeting had called out. Besides the customary devotional service and music, there were four papers. The first on "Smoke and Success" by Mrs. Elsie Simpson of Loveland, state superintendent of Narcotics, showed plainly and forcefully that our next great fight is to be waged against the cigaret first and finally tobacco in every form.

This was followed by "Prohibition and the World's Work," in which Mrs. Ella Beecher Gittings of the department of Co-operation showed how the whole world is awakening to the knowledge that alcohol is the greatest bar to success in every department of the world's work and the three modern ideals of conservation, eugenics and efficiency are driving it out. Mrs. Myrta Dodds of Greeley, representing the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, made a clear case for her subject, "Scientific Temperance the Corner-Stone of Prohibition," in a most interesting and carefully planned paper. She was followed by our state vice-president, Mrs. F. I. Smith, who spoke of "Our Problems," chief among which will be the enforcement of our prohibition laws.

The Highland Y. P. B. of Denver gave a charming illustrated solo, "Abide With Me," in which several young ladies in exquisite white draperies gave rhythmic pantomimic interpretation of the old song. The effect was beautiful as at the close the young ladies knelt while noontide prayer was offered.

To many the main feature of the day was the diamond medal contest in the afternoon. There were seven contestants from Grand Junction, Denver, Fort Collins, and Englewood. The medal was awarded to Miss Margaret Clark of Englewood, who gave "The Enemy Under the Flag."

As the railroad tickets were good for two days an informal conference was held at Rest Cottage next day, where the women from several towns had heart-to-heart talks on problems, methods and successes—not discouragements. A Greeley woman said that the committee in charge of the Fourth of July celebration, acting for the city, gave the W. C. T. U. ten dollars, saying it was the "best organization in the city." The union furnished for the celebration a decorated auto and rest tent. Another woman told of a certain judge who had worked against them during a municipal dry campaign, who had recently begged permission to speak at one of their public meetings. He said he had bitterly opposed them and had called them objectionable and opprobrious names, but had become converted and wished to make this public apology and express his hearty appreciation of their noble work.

The maintenance of Rest Cottage as state headquarters at Chautauqua gives us increased opportunities each year for the promulgation of our principles, as people from many states summer in the park. Mrs. Hungerford spoke for us in response to a toast at the banquet which closed the School of Missions there, and also was invited to address the students of the summer school at chapel.

Colorado Day, August 1, instituted by the "Sons of Colorado," and recently made a legal holiday by the legislature, fell this year on Sunday. Accordingly our Christian young Governor Carlson issued a proclamation calling for its observance in the churches and for the use of National and Colorado flags in home decorations. The Denver Ministerial Association sent letters to every minister in the state requesting patriotic sermons appropriate to the day. An unique tent-city was set up in Denver. On one side of the governor's tent was one occupied by the Women's Club and on the other side the W. C. T. U. tent in charge of Mrs. R. K. Byles, superintendent of Fairs and Open-Air Meetings. It was, of course, beautifully decorated with flags, pennants, etc., and placarded within and without with instructive posters, which hundreds of people paused to read during the day. Cots and nurses were also provided in anticipation of any sickness or accident which might occur.

In a letter to Mrs. Byles from the secretary of the "Sons of Colorado," he said, in part: "We congratulate you for having had the best equipped tent in all that beautiful city of tents. The absence of your honored state president, Mrs. Hungerford, was one of the disappointments of the day. Certainly we shall expect her attendance in person 'Colorado Day,' 1916."

Mrs. Byles was asked to assist at a reception given in the governor's tent to two visiting governors. The program consisted of a three-minute silent prayer for peace, followed by addresses by Governor Carlson and several city ministers. Truly, it is a wonderful experience to have a Christian prohibition governor.

Great enthusiasm is being shown all over the state in preparation for our Jubilee convention in Denver next month. The district conventions this year have been notable for their distinguished speakers, nearly all of whom have been state officials or members of the legislature, Governor Carlson speaking for the Tenth District at Hugo.

An original open-air meeting was held by the Le Roy L. T. L., under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., a union of several small towns, where some of the members go thirty miles in autos to attend meetings. At this L. T. L. gathering the autos furnished the light, being arranged in a circle, within which the meeting was held.

The State Association of Druggists recently passed a very strong resolution in favor of strict enforcement of the prohibitory laws.

The many friends of our honorary state president, Mrs. Antoinette Hawley, who was two months in the hospital last spring, suffering from a fractured hip, will be glad to hear of her remarkable recovery—"three months ahead of time," say the doctors—and to know that she will be able to speak at our state convention in September. In a letter of greeting in the Messenger, with characteristic naivete, she says: "I have recently learned that a hip broken into four bits really meant death to an aged party, but as that idea didn't occur to me, I proceeded to live, as usual."

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.

¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

The J. L. Mott Iron Works
118-120 Fifth Ave. New York

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

THE NEW SUBSCRIBER

Have you, old subscriber, secured the new subscriber for the weekly edition of THE UNION SIGNAL and thus become a member of the Win One Circle? If not, will you at once find the new subscriber so that your name may be enrolled in the 1915 Win One Circle and the new subscriber have the paper she has needed and ought to have had long ago?

Many are wanting and asking for the information to be found in THE UNION SIGNAL, but do not know where to find it. Old subscriber, you know and can help someone to this information by getting that new subscriber.

WIN ONE CIRCLE

477. Dora B. Terrill, Burr Oak, Kans.
478. Mrs. Florence Kinnan, Canandaigua, N. Y.
480. Mrs. Willa Stevens Norwood, New Orleans, La.
479. Mary J. Willard, Belmont, N. Y.
481. Mrs. Minnie Lyon, Atlanta, N. Y.
482. Mrs. R. C. Franklin, Alexandria, Minn.
483. Mrs. Helen L. Benson, Pierson, Ia.
484. Mrs. Eunice S. Bliss, Osborne, Kans.
485. F. A. Datarman, Chula, Mo.
486. Mrs. G. W. Blackwell, Wellsville, Mo.
487. Mrs. M. S. Riley, Jamestown, N. D.
488. Mrs. Lucetta McCarn, Princeton, Ia.
489. Mrs. E. A. D. Blair, Los Angeles, Cal.
490. E. M. Chamney, Lawrence, Kans.
491. Mrs. S. M. Stahl, Hartford City, Ind.
492. Louisa M. Hodge, Canajoharie, N. Y.
493. Mrs. Datus Quackenbush, Cobleskill, N. Y.
494. Mrs. L. E. Heaton, McKenzie, N. D.
495. Mrs. Minnie Pearson, Kintyre, N. D.
496. Mrs. Lee Cook Smith, Montclair, N. J.
497. Miss Amelia T. Irvine, Buffalo, N. Y.
498. Mrs. Nettie E. Sackett, Stewartville, Minn.
499. Mrs. J. W. Reed, Alliance, Neb.
500. Mrs. Fannie A. Drummond, Oberlin, O.
501. Mrs. L. Tagland, Rushford, Minn.

NEW W. C. T. U. PINS

Reproductions of the Popular Scotch Pins, in two styles

SCARF OR STICK PIN
BROOCH PIN

10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

"THE TOPIC OF THE HOUR," written by Mrs. J. M. Hunter of Hoberg, Mo., and published by the Missouri Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is a temperance play in three parts, suitable for home, hall or church, full of strong and telling arguments. Order from Mrs. Lettie Hill May, 5640 Maple Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

—Come back

--- through California
after the big meeting in Seattle
---You will of course want to see
San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego

---Stop at Grand Canyon

of Arizona---That alone is worth a whole trip---Only $7.50 additional railroad fare and Pullman sleeper takes you to the rim. Insist on having your return trip routed via Santa Fe from San Francisco. Ask for our picture folders: "California Outings," "Grand Canyon Outings" and both Expositions.

Santa Fe
All the way

Geo. T. Gunnip, Gen. Agt., Santa Fe Ry.
78 E. Jackson Street, Chicago

THE POOR FARMER LOSES NINETEEN CENTS A WEEK

The rum demon is making a real hot campaign among the farmers to show them what a terrible injury prohibition will be to the farming business. In a long table of statistics the liquor interests assert that the demon's factories buy $100,000,000 worth of the products of the soil a year. Corn for bourbon whisky, rye for "good old rye," barley for malt, cherries and peaches and apples for brandy, grapes for wine and so on.

Perhaps their figures are right, but what of it? There are 10,000,000 farmers in the United States and their annual products are valued at a total of $10,000,000,000—ten billion dollars, or one thousand dollars for each farmer. Of course every farmer doesn't make $1,000 a year or a $1,000-a-year living, but that's the way it averages.

If the liquor "industry" buys $100,000,000 a year of the farmer's products, prohibition will stop the liquor industry buying $10 worth of produce from each farmer, on the average. Pretty hard on the farmer to lose $10 a year, or 19 cents a week, which the saloon now hands him!

The liquor people say the farmer "loses" it by prohibition. Nothing is farther from the truth. The $10 worth of grain or fruit which the farmer now sells to the demon would not be lost. It would still be valuable as food for man and beast in other forms than drink.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

CALIFORNIA'S GREAT SCENIC ATTRACTION

THE DIRECT AND COMFORTABLE WAY IS VIA THE

YOSEMITE VALLEY RAILROAD TO EL PORTAL

A first-class hotel at the Park line; a scenic trip through the Merced River Canyon; the river within a stone's throw the entire distance; Observation Parlor Cars by day; Pullman Cars by night, from Los Angeles and San Francisco.

YOSEMITE TRANSPORTATION CO. AUTOMOBILE LINE

A macadam road, El Portal to Yosemite, wide and smooth, sprinkled daily, and no dust to mar the pleasure of the trip. Passes in full view of all of the great scenic features, El Capitan, Bridal Veil Falls, Half Dome, Yosemite Falls, etc.

THE BIG TREES OF CALIFORNIA

The Tuolumne Grove is reached as a side trip from El Portal by automobile, requires one half-day. The Mariposa Grove is reached as a side trip from Yosemite by automobile, requires one day to make the trip, returning to El Portal same day.

BUY ROUND-TRIP TICKETS TO YOSEMITE

This is the direct way, this is the comfortable way, the way most people go. Do not be misled and return some other way by automobile over 70 miles of hot, dusty, uninteresting roads.

See Any Railway Ticket Agent for Folder and Rates

YOSEMITE VALLEY RAILROAD CO.

MERCED, CALIFORNIA

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI EVANSTON, ILL., SEPTEMBER 2, 1915 No. 36

OUR CONVENTION CITY

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Courtesy of Seattle Park Board

ONE OF SEATTLE'S MANY FINE BOULEVARDS

NATIONAL W.C.T.U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

WOMAN'S WORK IN WASHINGTON

HELEN N. STEVENS

That Washington is an up-to-date, progressive state is recognized everywhere. To make it a state that our earnest-minded citizens may be even more proud of is the task the women of Washington have determined to achieve. To develop a social and moral conscience is a great educational work that takes zeal and courage—it also takes time. To successfully guard what we obtain requires active and eternal vigilance. The powers of evil are ever on the alert to recover lost ground. A notable example of this was our last mayoralty election. The women were developing a moral public opinion while the friends of a recalled mayor went into the "vindicating business." To the superficial observer the friends of good government lost—but did they? In our ardor to gain the prohibition vote last autumn we were obliged, for lack of time, to forego close investigation of the legislative candidates. The result was that the legislature of 1915 made history, some of which the members themselves are ashamed to have recorded. For instance, in 1913, by legislative enactment we secured a mothers' pension law. At the 1915 session one of the most obnoxious senators sought to abolish it. The storm of disapproval checked that plan, but by cunning amendments the measure was so crippled that there is very little good left in it. To replace the mothers' pension, on the basis that state aid to widows to enable them to properly rear the future citizens is the righteous program, and to eliminate the old-time theory of charitable beneficence, will be one of our next legislative tasks.

Washington Women Making History

By means of "direct legislation" Washington became a suffrage state in 1910, by an almost two to one vote. Equal suffrage is now so much a matter of course that women (and most men, too) when they consider the suffrage question in retrospect wonder why it was that they did not always possess the privilege of the ballot. That Washington did not come into the Union with an enfranchised womanhood was due to a trick perpetrated by the whisky interests and it is a well-known fact that the chief instigator, who was a candidate for a high office at the last state election, failed to make the "primary!"

The women of this great state are busy now, and will be for a long time to come, making history. As striking proof of this we are happy to refer to the prohibition amendment to the state constitution, which measure was voted upon last year and will be in full force January 1, 1916.

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

The noteworthy laws on our statute books in which women are directly interested are the community property law, which has been in force since territorial days, under which law wives are equal partners with their husbands in all property acquired during married life; direct legislation laws—the primary, initiative, referendum and recall—all of which were advanced and supported by women; (a vicious attack on these reform measures by the legislature of 1915 was thwarted by the cooperation of women and earnest men in invoking these same instruments for their own preservation); the mothers' pension law, above referred to; the lazy husband law put on the books three years ago, by whose process a man who refuses to support his family is arrested and put to work at city or county labor and the proceeds of his efforts paid to the dependent family; the red light injunction and abatement law from which we are now getting results owing to our upright prosecuting attorney; the eight-hour law for women workers, strictly and beneficially enforced; the women's minimum wage law, at which there has been directed a powerful opposition; the workmen's compensation and industrial insurance act; the factory inspection law; the law requiring women police and protection officers in cities.

Mrs. Jackson Silbaugh, Member of the Minimum Wage Commission of Washington and State W. C. T. U. Legislative Superintendent

The working plan for legislation adopted soon after suffrage was granted, whereby each separate organization of women—club, union and federation—fosters and promotes one special measure, with the agreement to come together when concerted effort is needed, has achieved results. The fact has been demonstrated that on moral questions all right-minded women are a unit. We in Seattle have been little troubled with female political pretenders and the few we have encountered have served to prepare us for those who may choose in the future to follow that devious path.

Women Secured State-wide Prohibition

It was principally through the efforts of organized women that state-wide prohibition became an issue. Women from all over the state were not only the chief financial supporters in its behalf but by a campaign of education they also thwarted the corrupt political rings and vice combinations that sought its defeat. One organization alone at its own expense sent through the mails 100,000 pieces of literature.

Since the adoption of equal suffrage the special field of industry popularly supposed to belong to women only has had a wonderful impetus in Washington. Home economics, mothers' training schools, better babies' contests and family betterment receive infinitely more consideration than ever before. Washington's experiment has proven that woman's participation in political affairs has not served to alienate her interest from home duties, as many of the opponents of the woman's movement prophesied would be the result.

Prohibition Election in South Carolina on September 14 Assured

The supreme court justices and the circuit judges of South Carolina have handed down a decision refusing to grant the petition of Henry Chappell, a taxpayer, to enjoin the prohibition referendum election set for September 14.

The following statement concerning the decision and its significance has been given out by J. K. Breedin, secretary of the prohibition executive committee:

"The decision of the supreme court in dismissing the petition for an order to enjoin the referendum is just what we expected. No one felt any uneasiness about the outcome. At the same time it is true that the decision saves the state the biggest fight it has had in many a year.

"I travel the state from the coast to the foothills of the mountains and I speak with assurance in saying that the legislature would have met with an overwhelming demand for the prohibition laws direct if the referendum had been set aside. Men in every part of the state have waked to the need for prohibition and this effort to thwart the opportunity of the people to register their will has roused much interest and no little resentment. But since the courts have sustained the legislature we may dismiss that phase of the opposition.

"There is opposition of a different kind, however. Liquor organizations are sending broadcast printed matter that is not the whole truth. Since the press of the state is fairly deluged with this matter I take occasion to express my admiration for the course pursued by most of our South Carolina papers. Even those which do not favor prohibition are above the liquor propaganda."

Labor Leader Declares Prohibition Will Benefit Workingmen

The argument that the closing of the saloons throws men out of work was ridiculed by John Cunneen, the Chicago labor leader, in a recent address in Minneapolis.

"To maintain the saloon simply because its closing will temporarily throw a few out of work is worse than preventing the introduction of machinery, for the closing of the saloon means the diminishing of vice and greater material prosperity for the people," said Mr. Cunneen. "The greatest fighters against the spread of Christianity were the idol makers, who said Christianity would put them out of business.

"Every improvement that has helped to better humanity has been fought by people who said it would throw some people out of work."

Mr. Cunneen said the same thing had been true of the introduction of farm machinery, the discovery of the electric light and many other things.

Money Will Be Spent

"The greater part of the money spent in supporting saloons will be spent in other ways when the saloons are voted out," he continued. "The United States Bureau of Census reports show that money spent for other things besides liquor will give more work to more working people. It will give more business to business men, and it will add to the wealth of the country."

One of Mr. Cunneen's chief arguments was that the saloons are responsible for putting many more men out of business during a year than the number of men they themselves actually employ.

John Barleycorn Barred from Plattsburg (N. Y.) Volunteer Camp

Prohibition of alcoholic liquors is strictly enforced at the Plattsburg (N. Y.) volunteer camp, and it is said that not only is the drink barred from the camp grounds but that the "personal liberty" of the men and officers in this respect is interfered with even to the extent of forbidding their drinking when away from the confines of the camp.

From Chicago Tribune, Aug. 28, 1915

Fewer Drinks, Less Smoking

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 27.—[Special.]—A considerable falling off in the consumption of tobacco and liquors in the twelve months ending June 30, is indicated by the preliminary report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue Osborn for the fiscal year, made public here tonight.

The commissioner reported that the ordinary internal revenue collections from these sources was $25,906,291 less than for the preceding fiscal year.

It was the decrease in liquor taxes which furnished the so-called ordinary collections that was responsible for the larger part of the decreases in total ordinary collections noted by Commissioner Osborn. These collections do not include the special taxes imposed by the emergency revenue law enacted last fall.

The ordinary collections on distilled spirits fell off $16,924,164 from the total for the preceding year. The collections on fermented liquors was $6,466,245 less.

The commissioner's report shows that the quantity of distilled spirits on which taxes were paid in the last year was approximately 15,000,000 gallons less than in the fiscal year 1914.

Promotion of Friend of Temperance Cause

One of the staunch and heroic friends of the prohibition cause in its pioneer days has gone to his eternal reward. Hon. John D. Long, former secretary of the Navy and former governor of the state of Massachusetts, passed on to the higher life on August 28. While Secretary of the Navy during President McKinley's administration, Mr. Long prohibited the sale of beer on naval vessels. For many years he was president of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Association and was always an outspoken and enthusiastic advocate of the temperance movement.

Satisfied with Prohibition in West Virginia

"Nobody need fear that Governor Hatfield will call an extra session of the West Virginia legislature for the purpose of resubmitting the question of prohibition to another vote in the state," Prohibition Commissioner Fred O. Blue is reported to have said to a newspaper reporter the other day when asked his opinion as to the possible effect of the petitions now being circulated in West Virginia with that end in view. He said further, "The scheme was hatched outside the state and has for its main purpose use by the liquor forces in the prohibition fight in Ohio this fall to create the impression that people in West Virginia are dissatisfied with prohibition."

Federal Commission on Industrial Relations Urges Giving Women Suffrage

The enfranchisement of women is strongly urged by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations appointed by President Wilson to investigate and report the causes of social and industrial unrest. The report as drawn up by Basil M. Manly, director of Research and Investigation for the commission, says:

"Among the recommendations is a strong argument urging equal political rights for women as one of the means by which women in industry may obtain living wages."

College Papers Bar Booze

Publishers Take Stand Against Liquor Advertisements

Liquor advertisements were barred from publication in college newspapers of the United States by the Associated College Newspaper Publishers' convention held August 27, at Columbia University.

Des Moines Saloon Buildings Now Occupied by Respectable Business

What use is made of the saloon buildings left empty by prohibition is a question often asked. The Des Moines (Ia.) Capital answers the query as to its own city in the following satisfactory fashion:

"In place of nose paint the energetic occupants of the once famous haunts of the thirsty are now handing over the counters such articles as automobile tires, shoes, clothing, groceries and meats. Soft drinks and luncheonettes are now served to those who feel impelled to tear loose of a few jits. No less than seventeen of the new occupants are giving their customers the sort of refreshments that produce no 'morning after.'

Sell Fruit Instead

"Some of the saloonists themselves, when the edict went forth that put Des Moines in the 'dry,' stuck to their guns and simply changed the nature of their stock. Where they sold booze before they now sell fruits and other necessary commodities."

Why Chicago Will Soon Be Dry

One of the veteran bartenders of Chicago standing in a saloon the other day prophesied that before many months Chicago would be as dry as the Sahara desert, says the Chicago Herald.

"Times have changed," declared the aged bartender as he glanced about the deserted barroom and toward the silent dance hall adjoining. "Segregation is a thing of the past in Chicago and I am glad of it. It was too barbaric. When vice is controlled by men and commercialized it appears in its most vicious form."

Just then a drunken boy in working clothes entered and requested a glass of beer. The youth, who had heard s e of the man's remarks, exclaimed as he staggered out:

"I believe in a wide-open town."

"It is just the hard-working boys like him that is going to make this a dry town," said the old bartender when the youth had left.

"This boy is no tough. He is a boy who works long and hard for his weekly wage which he is spending tonight. The other members of his family will put their heads together and say, 'If Chicago was dry he would come home nights, and save his money as he and his brothers do.' They will all vote for prohibition. The youth will also do so, to protect himself."

THE TEACHER LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

Use may be made of this article in the Harvest Home celebration on Frances E. Willard's birthday, September 28. It will be especially interesting to teachers.

(A group of teachers in conference. The presiding officer—an elderly woman with snow-white hair—is seated at a table facing the others, among whom are a number of younger as well as older teachers.)

Miss Jones (addressing the chairman): Now that our business session is over, Miss Allison, I move that we discuss the teacher life of Frances E. Willard.

Miss Allison (smiling with pleasure): If consent is given (pauses, teachers nod their assent) and I hear no objection from anyone—in fact, everybody appears to consent—we will take up the discussion of the teacher life of Miss Willard, which I am sure must be of profit to us all.

(A young teacher utters a slight exclamation.)

Miss Allison: What is it, Miss Carter? Did you speak?

Miss Carter (hesitatingly): No. I was only a little surprised. I knew Frances Willard was a temperance reformer, but I never knew she had been a teacher.

Miss Allison (reassuringly): A very natural mistake. There are comparatively few people who realize how much Miss Willard did for education. She completed her career as a teacher and made a great record, too, before she began her work as a reformer.

Miss Jones: Yes, she did. I can testify to that. I was one of her pupils in the Woman's College in Evanston, Illinois, in 1874, the last year that she served as dean there.

Miss Barrett: Oh, were you? (gazes at the older teacher with admiration, as do the others). Wasn't that splendid! How I wish I had been alive then! My mother is a white ribboner, and I have heard a great deal about the temperance work and the W. C. T. U., but I never heard anything about Miss Willard's teaching. Do tell us about her. What was she like? Was she attractive? Or was she stern?

Miss Jones: Stern? Oh, no, indeed! She was firm and oh, so kind. She seemed always to be thinking about us and our troubles and how she could help us. I remember best her friendly talks. She loved to gather us girls around her and to lead us to speak of spiritual things. (Gravely.) It is to Miss Frances Willard that I owe my Christian faith. I was a doubter (as she told me she had been, too), and she made all the puzzling things so clear to me!

Miss Clark: Just as you have done for me and others, dear friend! But you never told me that Miss Willard had led you to the light. My aunt is a white ribboner, and "Glimpses," Miss Willard's autohiography, was one of the first big books I read.

Miss Allison: Everybody, especially every teacher, ought to read "Glimpses." It is a wonderful autobiography.

Miss Jones: It certainly is. And it contains a very complete account of Miss Willard's teacher-life as well as of her girlhood, her school days and her public life up to her fiftieth year. (Produces "Glimpses.") Let me read you her own short résume of her work as a teacher:

"Between 1858, when I began, and 1874, when I forever ceased to be a pedagogue, I had thirteen separate seasons of teaching, in eleven separate institutions and six separate towns; my pupils in all numbering about two thousand. In my summer vacation at Forest Home, 1858, I taught district school; in my own home town of Evanston, I taught in the public school one term; in Harlem two terms; in Kankakee Academy, one term; in my alma mater, the Northwestern Female College, two; in Pittsburgh Female College, three; in the Grove School, Evanston, one year; in Genesee Wesleyan Seminary, Lima, N. Y., three terms; the Evanston College for Ladies, two years; the Woman's College, one year; and I was professor in Northwestern University, one year. Nor did I ever relinquish any of these situations save of my own free will, and in every case but one I had from the authorities a warm invitation."

FRANCES E. WILLARD
September 28, 1839—February 17, 1898

Miss Jones (laying the book on the table): That case was her last position as dean of the Woman's College of Northwestern University, Evanston, when Miss Willard resigned because a system of government was forced upon her pupils which she could not endorse. "I will not waste my life in friction," she declared, "when it can be turned into momentum." Putting aside tempting offers from other educational institutions, she entered upon the career of public service which made her famous and for which her fine work as a teacher had so adequately prepared her.

Miss Young (curiously): What was the system of government that she wanted?

Miss Jones: Miss Willard was a firm believer in student self government. When she found that this plan was to be discontinued, she resigned her high position. (Hands "Glimpses" to Miss Young.) In chapter nine (Part IV) of her autobiography I have marked some passages descriptive of Miss Willard's teaching methods which we would all like to hear if you will kindly read them.

(Miss Young reads.)

Miss Allison: I gained great inspiration in my first work as a teacher from Miss Willard's account of her early experiences when all was new and strange to her. She was only twenty when she went away from home to teach a country school, but I was younger than that.

Miss Jones: Those experiences are given in chapter one (Part IV).

Miss Allison: If you have marked the passages, perhaps Miss Ellerton will read them.

(Miss Ellerton reads selections from pages 140, 141, 142, 143.)

Miss Carter: Dear me! I did not know that the life of a country school teacher was so difficult. But that was fifty years ago.

Miss Clark: Conditions are the same now in some rural districts, but the good work of improvement has begun.

Miss Young: How much emphasis Miss Willard puts on character! She had a high ideal of a teacher's duty and responsibility.

Miss Allison: Yes, and that ideal is the ideal of today. She anticipated modern moral training by her plan of a "Bank of Character" which she carried out like a regular bank, each pupil having an account, the "bank notes" being cards of deposit for good behavior.

Miss Barrett: Miss Willard seemed to know beforehand everything that was going to happen in the world—I mean woman suffrage, prohibition, et cetera.

Miss Allison: Her prophetic insight taught her to estimate values. That is one of the signs of greatness. Miss Willard knew what things were relatively most important and she wasted no time over less vital matters.

Miss Jones: As a teacher she showed great attention to detail, however. Will Miss Hathaway please read this?

(Miss Hathaway reads page 187 of "Glimpses," beginning with "One of my hobbies as a teacher.")

Miss Allison: It is almost time to adjourn our meeting. Will Miss Jones tell us, in closing, a little about Miss Willard's personality, so that we may have a realistic idea of this great teacher?

Miss Jones: To put it briefly, I would say that Miss Willard brought to the work of teacher two strong traits, early developed—love and resolution. She was an ideal disciplinarian, winning the love and respect of those she taught. She so stimulated her pupils that after six months under her teaching each had a definite idea of a life work. I recall that she was always reasonable, ready to acknowledge, even to us girls, when she was in the wrong. She talked frankly to us about being good, and seemed to have us constantly on her heart. We loved her sisterly talks—and then, she was so full of wit, and loved a good time just as much as we. Under her genial sympathy and quick appreciation, the talents of even the most backward blossomed fruitfully. It was the same inspiring qualities which won for the great leader such splendid success with the great school of women whom she later directed in the study of methods for the world's betterment.

Wine, Beer and All Intoxicating Beverages Tabooed at Functions of Bankers, Editors and Police Chiefs in Georgia

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

The action of the Georgia bankers in convention at Savannah, to eschew wine from their future banquets "in the interest of efficiency," is seconded by a similar movement on the part of the Georgia Weekly Press Association in session at Eastman. It passed the following vigorous resolution:

"Whereas, we feel it to be the duty of the editors of the papers which enter our homes, mould the character of our youth and fashion the ideals of our citizenship to set before the communities we visit a wholesome example of sobriety, therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that hereafter it shall be the duty of the officers of the association who negotiate the arrangements for our annual conventions, to inform all local committees where we are to be entertained that it is the wish of the association, that no intoxicants of any kind, including beer and 'near beer,' shall be furnished at any of our functions."

Next in order, the association of Georgia police-chiefs in its first annual meeting in Macon, had the wisdom to take similar action, adopting the following resolution upon its submission by the newly elected president, Chief L. M. Sumner:

"Whereas the dignity of sobriety is becoming in an officer of the law, particularly in an officer sworn to enforce the prohibition law, and

"Whereas, the public is demanding more and more complete sobriety in its officials, and in the business world efficiency is being connected with abstinence, therefore be it

"Resolved, that we, the Georgia Association of Police-Chiefs and Town Marshals in first annual convention assembled, determine that it shall be the duty of our officers in arranging for our annual convention to request local committees not to furnish intoxicating beverages at our entertainments."

Ban on Cigarets

The city council of Quitman in its efforts to safeguard the young from the evils of nicotine, put a ban on cigarets and "makings" by raising the license for dealers from $50 to $500. The ordinance took effect August 1 and is proving prohibitory. It is significant that Quitman is the home of Miss Carobel Wilkes, state superintendent of Anti-narcotics. Her efforts are being felt throughout the state. The day is surely coming when statewide anti-cigaret bills will cease to be "lost" in a legislative committee room, but will be recommended, passed, become a law, and prove the salvation of those classes which yearly fall victims to Prince Nicotine.

National Prohibition Float.

The W. C. T. U. of Hawkinsville entered in the civic parade a handsome National Prohibition float which attracted favorable comment. The city was crowded at the time with visitors to the convention of the State Woodmen of the World.

To Discourage the Use of and Traffic in All Distilled, Fermented and Malt Liquors

The Atlanta Methodist District Stewards' Association has unanimously requested pastors of the denomination not to appoint to official positions men who are in any way responsible for the existence of locker clubs and near beer saloons, pronouncing them "the greatest possible menace to moral well-being and commercial prosperity."

Hon. Thos. B. Felder, one of the state's leading lawyers and orators, erstwhile liquor champion and long-time high salaried attorney retained for the brewers and distillers of several states, has been convicted and converted in regard to the liquor traffic. Three years ago severing his connection with the liquor traffic because of his disgust at its atrocities, he is lending his trained mind, varied knowledge and superior ability toward its complete overthrow. Announcement is made that he is soon to fill a number of dates in Georgia in the interest of temperance and prohibition.

Inspiring Words of Mrs. Mary Harris Armor

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor writes: "Since the first of May I have spoken in Connecticut, Maryland, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and at the World's Christian Endeavor Convention in Chicago, closing my itinerary at the great summer assembly at Ocean Grove, New Jersey. Everywhere there is a spirit of splendid optimism in the great fight—nay more—a purpose 'ribbed and edged with steel' to annihilate the liquor traffic and that speedily. The heart of the world is awake, and the voice of the reformer is as insistent and as universal as the cry of the distressed.

"The liquor traffic, antagonized once only by the church, and feebly by that, finds itself beset today by foes on every side—foes implacable, relentless, determined, and armed to the teeth. Not only the religious world, but the business world, the sporting world, the scientific world, and the military world are set in battle array against it, and the only world to which it can look for support is its long time ally, the under-world of vice, which has ever been its dearest friend and its closest ally.

"In every battle for the uplift of humanity and the glory of God the white ribbon is in evidence, and I believe not until 'The Books are opened' will the world have any idea of the marvelous things that have been wrought by this heaven-born organization."

The faith and activities of Georgia white ribboners may be summed up in the words of one verse of our convention song written by Mrs. Annie Jones-Pyron, president of the Bartow county W. C. T. U. and daughter of the great evangelist, Rev. Sam P. Jones.

"Our strength is in Jehovah and our cause is in His care,
And with Him to lead us onward we will work and fight and dare.
For National Prohibition shall be our daily prayer,
Our righteous cause shall win.

Missouri Half Dry--Bars Out, Prosperity In

MRS. FANNIE L. TAYLOR

The call for the state convention to meet at Sikeston, September 14-17, has been sent out by the state officers and Missouri unions are busy these days gathering dues and reports, and completing another year of splendid service in the white ribbon army. Victories and defeats have been met in the true spirit of soldiers of the cross. Soon we will step over the threshold of a new year with

Missouri Over Half Dry

A careful tabulation shows that more than half the people of the state live in territory absolutely dry. For years more than half the territory in the state has been dry, but the large city population meant that a majority of the people lived in wet territory, but as the result of very recent dry victories 50.2 per cent of Missouri's entire population now live in saloonless territory. Between 75 and 80 per cent of the state's territory is dry. Seventy-nine of the 114 counties are dry; nineteen dry with the exception of one town of more than 2,500 population. Sixteen counties and the city of St. Louis are the only entirely wet localities in the state. Missouri white ribboners, with high hopes and unwavering courage, will move forward more rapidly than ever next year in the war to drive out saloons.

Women May Veto Saloons

Judge Thomas L. Anderson, St. Louis, says tax payers, not voters only, may block saloon bars. A state law specifying that only tax paying voters shall be eligible to sign petitions was declared unconstitutional by Judge Anderson in the circuit court. He ruled that women tax payers, though not voters, were eligible to sign saloon license petitions, and when not signing their action should be counted against the petition. He ruled that the law excluding them was a violation of property rights. This decision if upheld by higher courts will make it extremely difficult in many sections of St. Louis to secure mandatory petitions and unless such are presented, the excise commissioner may use his judgment as to granting a saloon license on a mere majority petition.

Judge Anderson said, "Why should men have the exclusive power of dominating the establishment of dram shops? Are not the property rights of women sacred? Are they to have no voice in the protection of home, children, churches and schools?" "Two citizens," he added, "may destroy or greatly injure the value of the property of two hundred others."

Bars Out; Prosperity In

W. C. T. U. workers at Butler, Mo., are rejoicing that their city has prospered since it went dry. The old argument, "a dry town a dead town," is refuted by the history of Butler since it voted out saloons eight years ago. It is a well established fact that the town has been better in every way—morally, financially and physically. The city debt is paid, streets are paved, schools have been built, the water works have been bought, and taxes are lower than ever before. This is also true of other Missouri dry towns.

Those Tamed (?) Saloons

The police commissioners of Kansas City, Mo., "speak in sublime paradoxes." Hear them: "The protested saloon licenses are granted on condition that the bars are conducted so they will not interfere with the peace and contentment and home life of the community."

Does Prohibition Prohibit?

Since several more Missouri towns and counties have gone dry of late, the sales of beer in the state were smaller by 100,000 barrels in July, 1915, than in July, 1914. The wife of a Missouri brewer said, "No, indeed, we cannot send our daughter to college this fall, the business is too poor."

(Continued on Page Twelve)

"VOTES FOR WOMEN"

THE JUSTICE ARGUMENT

Mary Ware Dennett, former corresponding secretary National Woman Suffrage Association, in an article in The Woman's Home Companion, urges placing emphasis on what she terms the "justice argument" in pleading for suffrage:

"We need constantly to remind ourselves, as well as others, that we are merely asking for the opportunity and right which men have, and no more; that the fact that we are twenty-one years of age, native or naturalized, and can read the constitution of the United States, should entitle us to vote, just as it entitles men to vote. We must recall the fact that the young man of twenty-one appearing before the registration clerk for the first time as a practical citizen does not have to bring forth a lot of evidence that other men—his predecessors in voting—have accomplished much good thereby; he does not have to demonstrate that the laws are unsatisfactory to him or unjust to others and that he is bursting with plans for bettering them; he does not have to promise that he will vote at every election; he does not have to show any particular intelligence or capacity in any direction; he has only to answer a few simple questions and there he is, a full-fledged voter. Now we women want the same privilege, and that is all there is to it."

WHY THE LETTER CARRIERS FAVOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

A resolution unanimously endorsing woman suffrage has been passed by the New York Letter Carriers' Association. One of the carriers in an interview by a New York Evening Post reporter gave some of the reasons for the enthusiastic support of the association in the following language:

"You see, this is a very important matter to us, because Congress is our boss, and the voters are Congress' boss. Now, most of us have figured out that women have more time to be sympathetic, because they are not so busy making a living. They have time to think about whether the man they vote for is behaving kindly to the country's employes. I always notice that at Christmas time, when we are so hard worked that we cannot keep from being late, it is the women who are not provoked when they are kept waiting and who find time to pass us a greeting. Postmen go around from door to door, and they have lots of chances to observe human nature—and the most of them think mighty well of women."

"The Church Association," said one of the substitute carriers, "got us our Sundays off, and that association is full of women. It seems to me that women have done us a good turn whenever they have had a chance, and, aside from believing that they will remember us when they have the influence with Congress that their votes will give, we'd like to do them a good turn by helping them get the vote."

The National Association of Letter Carriers has already officially endorsed woman suffrage.

The Illinois state board of administration has ordered that all women employes of state institutions shall receive pay equal to the men for the same work.

The governors of all the suffrage states have been asked to assist in the New York suffrage campaign.

"All the influence of the Pennsylvania Federation of Liquor Dealers will be thrown against the constitutional amendment which gives women the ballot," says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. "Opinions expressed today by dealers from widely scattered sections disclosed that they oppose 'votes for women' and they will aid in financing the anti-suffrage campaign. With women voting, the dealers say, the vote against the saloon would be so big as to sound the death knell for the business."

Conservative Vassar College has decided to add to its curriculum courses in law and journalism.

IT PAYS TO PROTEST

That public spirited citizens may often bring about needed reforms by a direct appeal to the proper authorities has recently been demonstrated by Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, a National organizer. Not long ago while waiting for a train in the Union depot at Sheldon, Iowa, the white ribboner noticed on a billboard put up by the Railroad Service & Advertising Company of New York the following exhaustive array of statements concerning beer:

> DRINK A LITTLE BEER OCCASIONALLY IS WHAT DOCTORS OFTEN PRESCRIBE
>
> Beer will do you good, if you use it moderately, as all people do who know real temperance.
>
> Beer is refreshing, exhilarating, nutritious and a tonic.
>
> Beer promotes digestion and is a wholesome food beverage. When people drink beer they drink and eat at the same time just as when they eat a bowl of soup. The terms "eat" and "drink" are inconsistently used in pointing out the difference between what is merely quenching one's thirst, and what is actually consuming nourishment.
>
> Doctors contend that a person might more properly be said to eat beer than to eat certain soups or even watermelon.
>
> Drink beer and eat moderately—the moderate eater is in a far better position than the total abstainer, who often consumes an excess of solid matter.
>
> BEER BUILDS TISSUE, RESTORES WASTE, FURNISHES HEAT AND PRODUCES ENERGY.

After a careful perusal and study of the foregoing material Mrs. La Mance decided to appeal to the source of the advertisement—the Service Company—asking for its removal. Her letter follows:

Sheldon, Iowa, August 7, 1915.

Railroad Service & Advertising Co.

Gentlemen:

Billboards are supposed to be public directories. They are not supposed to spread the propaganda of a political, sectarian or ethical issue. Last year when the billboard companies of the western states accepted propaganda of the brewers and anti-prohibitionists, such a storm of criticism came that this last winter when the National Association met it passed resolutions that no more liquor propaganda should be placed on public billboards after January 1, 1916.

Forty-six per cent of the people of the United States have declared by their ballots that the traffic in liquor is immoral and all intoxicating liquors are dangerous. Iowa herself is to close every saloon and every brewery on January 1, 1916, and it will then be against the law to make, sell or give away beer or other alcoholic drinks.

Yet this morning, in the public waiting room of the Union depot at Sheldon, a dry town that allows no saloons or sale of beer, I found on your billboard holding ten spaces, liquor advertisements. I need not comment on the bad taste that would thrust such things into the face of a community that by its votes has said it wants none of them. But one of these is so flagrant a violation of moral ethics I must call your attention to it. It is propaganda pure and simple, advertising no brand, but campaigning for beer, in a dry state.

Its heading is—"Drink a Little Beer Occasionally is What Doctors Often Prescribe."

Then follow five paragraphs and after these, in heavy type, these words:

"BEER BUILDS TISSUE, RESTORES WASTE, FURNISHES HEAT AND PRODUCES ENERGY."

It calls beer a food beverage. Baron Liebig, himself a German, said he could thrust the tip of his pen-knife in a barrel of flour, and the flour that would stay on the tip of the blade would have more nutrition in it than five gallons of the best Bavarian beer ever brewed. Chemical analysis shows that 93 per cent of beer is water, 4 per cent alcohol, an acknowledged poison, and 3 per cent is flavoring, food and gum combined, mostly gum that an ostrich cannot digest.

The sour stomach of beer drinkers gives their well known sour breath. Beer acts unfavorably on the kidneys, which leaves waste in the system, and this in turn gives the beer drinker his big waist and his aldermanic stomach. To coolly count beer fat, beer bloat and beer shapelessness as beer-built "tissue" is almost the limit.

I protest against the prostitution for such offensive propaganda of a public railway billboard. I would be glad to learn that under-agents of yours thoughtlessly accepted this brewer-trust advertising, and that it has neither your sanction nor approval. I shall be happier to learn that you will order it taken out.

Very truly,

LORA S. LA MANCE.

In due time the following courtcous and satisfactory reply was received from the Service Company:

August 16, '15.

Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, Nat'l W. C. T. U. Organizer & Lecturer.

Dear Madam:

Your favor of August 7, relative to objectionable liquor advertisements on display in the advertising frame in the C. M. & St. P. station at Sheldon, Iowa, has just reached us. Contracts covering these advertisements were accepted by one of our agents, who was vested with a certain amount of authority. We have ordered the agent at Sheldon, Iowa, to remove the liquor advertisements you object to.

We will see to it that in the future no advertising contracts are accepted covering advertisements for malt or spirituous liquors.

Yours truly,

RAILROAD SERVICE & ADVERTISING CO.,
N. E. Tallman, Vice-President.

ON ELECTION DAY

MRS. MARY P. SAYERS, Martin, Mich.

"They put it all over Colwin yesterday at the club dinner," laughed Jim Bragman as he leaned against the mantel in his luxurious library. Surveying with critical eye the select gathering of men engaged in an after-dinner smoke, he flicked into the open grate the ash from a partially consumed cigar, and glancing once more at his guests, smiled cynically. "I'm glad I wasn't in Colwin's place," he said.

"How's that?" queried Goodwin, a fine, erect specimen of manhood with a pair of understanding blue eyes that twinkled in a knowing way. "I never thought Colwin was a man that people could make sport of."

"H'm! They certainly did yesterday. You see he stayed home and took care of the baby last Monday so his wife could go to the polls! Bah! it makes me sick to think of the silly twaddle these women are putting up. It's turning out—" he stopped abruptly, picked up a box of cigars from a stand and held it out towards Goodwin. Goodwin shook his head. "What! not smoking any more! Getting sanctimonious or the dyspepsia—which? You don't think of giving up one of the greatest comforts a man can have, do you?" Just then he caught Goodwin's eye and his face reddened.

"Call it sanctimonious or anything you like, Bragman. I'm going to stop every habit that I wouldn't approve of in my boy," Goodwin replied with smiling earnestness.

"Going to join Colwin's ranks, I s'pose, and help the women vote the town dry," sneered Bragman. Then, as though he realized that courtesy demanded that as host he forbear from treating a guest with sarcasm, he resumed: "But joking aside, fellows, this woman business is going too far! No wife of mine shall vote!"

"What's that?" quizzed Smith, with a sidewise glance at Goodwin. Evidently, there was something Bragman did not know.

"Fanatics, all of them. The men, too! Muddlers! Some time we'll have a mess to straighten out! Of course, it'll never really amount to anything—" Bragman began.

"You just wait till the next general election!" Goodwin's eyes sparkled. "It was a pretty close call last Monday, let me tell you, my friend! And all owing to the few loyal women who weren't afraid of their domineering husbands, eh, Smith?"

"I should say it was!" answered Smith. "The wets very nearly went under that time! I'm no prohibitionist, but there's got to be something done pretty soon or the town'll bust certain sure!" Goodwin nodded his head, and leaning across the table at his side, extended his hand towards his host seated opposite.

"Bragman, you'll probably concede that I know what I'm talking about when I say that as cashier of our bank, I have taken in within the last year a third less deposits from workingmen than in any one year during the past ten. And instead of the matter growing better, it's growing worse. The saloon men are reaping the profits in this town. And it's because—"

"It's because the poor wretches don't know enough not to make hogs of themselves!" interrupted Bragman wrathfully. "My boy's been taught to stop when he's had enough of anything in the way of a luxury!" Smith glanced at Goodwin. Again that knowing look. Smith took out his watch, opened it, then shut it sharply.

"Ten o'clock!" he exclaimed, getting to his feet. "I think the ladies must be ready to go home."

A few moments later Bragman was left alone pondering indignantly on Goodwin's change of attitude in regard to the trend of public affairs of importance. Presently, Mrs. Bragman came into the library and sat down by the dying fire in the open grate. A comely woman, well in the middle forties, was Betty Bragman, who, despite her well-groomed appearance, yet showed a shade of care in her soft brown eyes. She looked a bit sober, too, just now, and Bragman noticed it. However, he attributed it to weariness due to preparations for the select dinner they had just been giving. It was with genuine pride that he recalled how well she had managed the whole affair.

YES

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As there is wrong to right,
Wail of the weak against the strong,
Or tyranny to fight;
Long as there lingers gloom to chase,
Or streaming tears to dry,
One kindred woe, one sorrowing face
That smiles as we draw nigh;
Long as a tale of anguish swells
The heart, and lids grow wet,
And at the sound of Christmas bells
We pardon and forget;
So long as Faith with Freedom reigns
And loyal Hope survives,
And gracious Charity remains
To leaven lowly lives;
While there is one untrodden tract
For Intellect or Will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living still.

—English Illustrated Magazine.

"Betty," he said, at last, with the certain conviction of one who knew his ground, "Betty, I'm glad you're not one of those ranting suffragists!" He left his place by the table where he had seated himself after the men had gone, and came over to his wife's side. "If there were more women like you, Betty, there'd be better homes," he said, taking a chair close to her and reaching for her hand to give it an appreciative pat. He stopped for a moment and gazed musingly into the fire. "There's Jerry Colwin's wife—"

"I know!" Betty interrupted with a deprecating gesture, "I know!"

"You know!" cried Bragman. "How can you tell what I was going to say about Colwin's wife going to the polls. She told you, eh? I didn't know you'd seen her since election day."

"I saw her on election day," Betty Bragman informed her husband. Bragman gave her a quizzical glance. He began to feel uneasy. Someway he had the impression that Betty had remained at home the day of election. She had said nothing about Mrs. Colwin coming to see her.

"Why, I don't under—"

"I was at the polls myself!" Betty broke in, a note of determination in her voice.

"Betty Bragman!" ejaculated her husband. "You, Betty, at that dirty place! Heaven forbid!"

"And so it's dirty, is it? Well, then, who made it dirty?" Betty Bragman, facing her husband with flaming defiance, rose to her feet. Suddenly she laughed. Bragman felt foolish and looked it. "Your own argument is theoretically ludicrous, Jim. If the men have made the polls dirty places, then we women would better clean them up!" Her face grew serious. "I love you, Jim, and I've always had your best interests at heart, but they demand no sacrifice of honest principle. I've been weak enough to dread an open break with you—but—Jim, the time's come when we must understand each other. Both Ruth and I voted the dry ticket last Monday and Jimmie voted with us!"

"The little fool! After all I've done for him!"

"No, Jim. Jimmie's no fool." She sat down and laid her hand on her husband's arm. "Jim—our boy came home drunk last Saturday night. Think of it, Jim—plain drunk—not intoxicated—just plain drunk!" Bragman saw that her throat was dry and her eyes wore a look of strong determination. After all it might be better not to try to coerce Betty; better explain matters and reason with her. She'd probably made a mountain out of a mole-hill about Jimmie and worked on his feelings to get him to vote dry. Anyway, a little mistake or two in taking too much would bring the boy to his senses. Betty was shaking with dry sobs. He put his arm about her and tried to soothe her. Then he began:

"Listen, Betty. If this town goes dry—I'm a ruined man. I am financially, I mean. Of course, so far as the stuff itself is concerned, I don't care a rap for it. But just last week, Betty, I put all my money in a wholesale liquor house that depends largely on our town for its support, and I've half promised your money, Betty. It will bring us the biggest dividends we've ever yet had. I tell you this town mustn't go dry!" Mrs. Bragman abruptly flung off her husband's caressing arm, which action did not tend to assure him of her concurrence with his own ideas. Nevertheless, he settled back in his chair as though his decision was final. For a brief moment Betty was ominously quiet. Then she turned to her husband.

"Jim," she said, with a slight catch in her voice, "do you suppose that I would take the biggest dividends in the world that came from blood money? Do you think I could revel in luxuries that were bought with the price of misery?" Her eyes were full of appeal. "Think, Jim, before you make your decision. It means much to both our children and to us."

"My decision is already made," he answered sternly.

"Jim! Jim! think of being in business that depends for its support on making wrecks of men and women! Think of it!

"Tragedy!" he sneered. "Next you know these fanatics will be putting you on the platform!"

"They have already!" replied Mrs. Bragman coolly, as she went swiftly from the room. Away down deep in Jim Bragman's soul there was a stirring of conscience. But it was immediately stilled by the man's love of money and by that old, old conscience-quieter that every man should learn to exercise self-control; that to vote a town dry was to interfere with the promise of liberty contained in the very constitution of the United States.

The fury of a thwarted purpose was strong upon him. "A blatant woman platform orator!" he raged, walking back and forth and back again across the soft velvet rug. Then, as if the very softness of the carpet aggravated him beyond endurance, he stalked into the hall, put on his coat and hat and went out into the night.

(To be continued.)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, September 2, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, returned Saturday, August 28, from Fairmont, Minn., where she had been in attendance upon the state convention. She reports that the meeting was one of rejoicing over the forty-five county-wide victories of the past six months and the attendance was the largest in the history of the state.

Mrs. Philip Snowden, the noted suffrage speaker, wife of Hon. Philip Snowden, Member of Parliament, was a caller at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters during the past week, and very graciously granted to the managing editor an interview, a report of which will appear in next week's paper.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1915

Do not forget the date! It is the day the White Ribbon Special leaves the North Western station in Chicago for Seattle, the National Convention city. Of course you are planning to be one of the happy company that is to make the trip across the continent on the Special. If you have not already made your reservations, do not delay, but write immediately to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill., concerning it. You will find interesting reading concerning the trip and our hostess state on pages 2 and 11 of this issue.

"STILL IN THE OPTIMISTIC COLUMN"

The optimism of the liquorites in the face of the uninterrupted succession of victories for total abstinence and prohibition is worthy of a better cause than that which they espouse. "Bonfort's is still in the optimistic column and believes that there will be a healthy reversal of trade as soon as weather conditions warrant," says the Wine and Spirit Circular. "The prohibition movement has, we believe, about spent its force, and will recede rapidly. Localities which adopted prohibition laws now begin to see the fallacy of it, since it places additional burdens on the pocket-book. It probably will not be long before some of the now so-called prohibition states will swing back into the license column."

Either the writer of the above prophecy is religiously refraining from reading the newspapers or he is deliberately living in a fool's paradise of his own imaginative construction which he will all too soon discover is a "fool's purgatory." In no other way can his conclusions be explained. "The prohibition movement rapidly receding" when the public has hardly caught its breath from "hip, hip, hurrahing" over the nine prohibition states acquired less than a year ago; when it is even now gasping delightedly over the continuous performance of Minnesota in sweeping the saloons off the map (forty-five counties since March 1); not to mention the general jubilation over the whole-hearted fashion in which Alberta, Canada (216,000 square miles in size), said good-bye to John Barleycorn!

As to the "pocket-book" argument, the very suggestion of which ought to make every self-respecting voter a rabid anti-liquor advocate, that is shown up as the veriest nonsense in the light of the recent word from Russia that since the prohibition edict went into effect there has been an increase of $900,000,000 in the deposits in the savings banks of the empire, and in view of the reports that continue to come of the transcendant prosperity of prohibition Kansas and other communities that have outlawed the liquor traffic.

In one respect we admit the statement of the liquor editor may be correct, that a change in the conditions of "the trade" is somewhat dependent upon the state of the weather, but all signs at the present time clearly indicate that there is to be increasingly stormy weather ahead for the liquor business which in the near future will culminate in a tempest of such cyclonic force and fury that it will sweep into the ocean of oblivion every saloon, brewery and distillery.

ALWAYS WATER FOR CHRISTENING

There seems to be some confusion on the part of certain good people concerning the attitude of the W. C. T. U. with regard to the christening of ships with champagne. The Outlook says editorially, "The opposition of extreme temperance advocates has always been difficult to understand." It contends that inasmuch as "a bottle smashed on the bow of a battleship is one bottle that can never be drunk, such an event ought to be regarded as another blow to the consumption of liquor."

Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, being asked to give the white-ribboners' viewpoint, said: "Our friends, the non-'extremists,' are taking a narrow and superficial view of the question. They are losing sight of the symbolism of the rite itself. Consider the root meaning of the word christening. One of the dictionary definitions of to christen is: 'to name, as a ship, by a ceremony likened to baptism.' Always baptism in the Christian economy has been with water. If in days gone by spirituous liquors were supposed to give long life and to bring good luck, the revelations of science have thoroughly exploded that theory. Water is a symbol of life, alcohol a symbol of disease, destruction and death, the enemy of life and of efficiency; hence the christening of any ship with champagne is an absurdity and an anachronism."

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER

The desire uppermost today in the thoughts and the prayers of men and women of what we have been wont to call the civilized nations is that speedily there shall come a cessation of hostilities among the European countries. While there may be radical differences of opinion as to the price a nation ought to pay for peace, or the methods to be adopted to secure it, all are agreed in longing for it.

Yet how impotent people seem, in the face of the unspeakable conditions now existing in Europe, to accomplish anything that will really help to bring to pass their desires and prayers. Virtually all that even the peace advocates suggest is that we shall work for and endeavor to promote those interests which will insure to future generations world-wide peace. Chief among these is universal suffrage for women. Said Rabbi Wise of New York City not long ago in speaking on peace, "I believe that never until the women of the world are given the franchise will international peace be assured. When the women of the European nations are possessed of suffrage they will, I feel sure, throw the weight of their influence against their respective governments plunging into war."

This assertion is certainly warranted by the history of the suffrage movement, for that twin-evil of war, the liquor traffic, has had no more tireless and relentless enemy than the woman voter. Indeed, from the beginning of the human race women, the mothers, have opposed heroically everything that was inimical to the welfare of their offspring. Does it not then follow that very directly and definitely the progress of the woman suffrage movement will mean the advance of the peace movement in Europe. It is indeed a truism to say that in no way can we in America so greatly and directly help the suffrage cause across the water as to make it victorious here. If at the fall elections, the states of New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts grant to their women full suffrage rights, it will give to the "Votes for Women" movement in European countries a wonderful impetus, and to that extent bring nearer the day of universal peace.

THE BAYONET CHARGE STORY

Since reference was made in THE UNION SIGNAL to Jane Addams' statement that European soldiers in some cases have been stimulated by alcoholic liquors before the bayonet charge, Miss Addams in an address on "Peace" at Chautauqua, New York, has told more definitely the sources of her information:

"My informants in England, France and Germany were soldiers, officers and well-informed civilians," said Miss Addams. "I don't question the soldiers' courage, but when a prominent official in the Paris office tells me his men are given absinthe before a bayonet charge I believe him.

"When a German lieutenant tells me his men were given a drug formula containing sulphuric ether among other things to stimulate their bloody bayonet work I believe him. And when a big Oxford University professor in England tells me his son and nephew were given rum to stimulate them in battle I believe him.

"When common talk in all countries among the women who have husbands and sons and sweethearts at the front tells the same thing I begin to believe that the average soldier is not sufficiently brutish and beastly to fight with cold steel against his brother men unless primed with drugs or strong drink."

MRS. CORA E. SEBERRY TRANSLATED

MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE

Our loved comrade, Mrs. Cora E. Seberry, National organizer and lecturer and former National secretary of the "Y" Branch, died August 22 in Brooklyn, New York, at the home of her only daughter, Mrs. Albert E. Drake.

She was born in Brooklyn and had lived in that city most of her life. Her father, William Campbell, was a brilliant lawyer, and her mother, Alice Boole Campbell, a successful homœopathic physician who helped to open the way for other women physicians and to make their path an easier one.

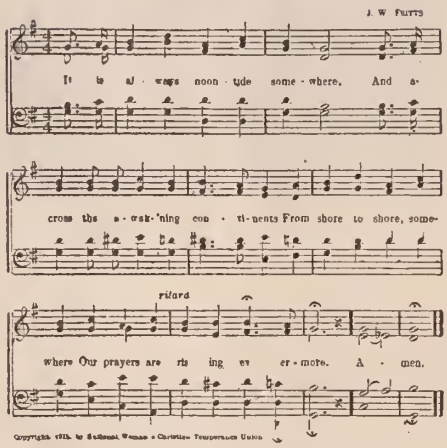
Mrs. Seberry married early, and in addition to the cares of her own family she was for many years the home-maker for her mother and brothers. Even then she found time for writing, and contributed many stories to current magazines. Always interested in temperance, and a member of the Mary Harte W. C. T. U. almost from Crusade times, she began her work as a public speaker in 1896. Her ability as a reader, and her peculiar gift in the selection of recitations illustrative of temperance, purity and suffrage work, combined with a heart-felt devotion to the W. C. T. U., and especially to the young people, made her a winning and popular speaker. Who that heard her read "The Bells," or "Sail On and On and On" will soon forget the impression made.

She served New York state W. C. T. U. as "Y" secretary, first vice-president, and as organizer and lecturer. The National W. C. T. U. she served as "Y" secretary for two years and as lecturer for thirteen years.

Her only surviving son died two years ago and the death of an only grandson almost crushed her, but her faith in God was triumphant and during the suffering of these last months she testified hourly to her faith in God through Jesus Christ. She rests from her labors and from her sorrows, and to those who knew her best there remains the memory of a life spent in the nation's service. Mrs. Seberry's daughter will miss her sadly, for she and her mother were comrades, but there is comfort in the thought that to the beloved one have come eternal joy and freedom from pain and distress.

Mrs. Cora E. Seberry

Time of Prayer—Noontide



OUR CAMPAIGN STATES

At the sacred noontide hour, will not all white ribboners of the nation remember in prayer not only our campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition but also the workers in the campaign states, that in large measure they may be endued with wisdom, strength and power by our Divine leader in our righteous war. The following states vote this fall:

South Carolina, September 14.

Ohio, November election.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Daniel J. Hoge, Hamilton, Virginia, father of Mr. Howard M. Hoge, husband of the assistant recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U. Mr. Hoge has always been very active in temperance work and for twenty-four years has been the president of the Prohibition and Evangelical Association, which holds annual summer meetings in the nature of Chautauquas.

Mrs. Sophia Anderson, Blissfield, Mich., eighty-six years young, a loyal, long-time member of the local union.

MUSIC AT THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM, National Musical Director

During the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle, Wash., a fifteen minute song service each day will precede the opening of the meeting. This plan has worked admirably in past years and is of three-fold advantage. It helps us to become familiar with "The Temperance Songster," Miss Gordon's best compilation for convention use; it brings together the singing delegates who help form the chorus, which in addition to aiding in the song service, assists in singing the opening hymns; and last, but not least, it serves to call the delegates in, so that they are in their places and ready for the opening exercises. There is also an advantage to the singers themselves in the closer acquaintance and comradeship, both musically and personally, which will be a certain result of such an arrangement. A rehearsal will precede each opening song service.

We hope this year to do better chorus work than ever before. To that end the following list of songs selected from "The Temperance Songster" will be published from time to time, in The Union Signal, and in all state papers, so far as possible. If local unions will use these songs at their regular meetings, that will insure good music for county, district and state gatherings, and all will become familiar with them, thus aiding national chorus work. It will be a help to feel that local, county and state white ribboners are all using the same songs during these intervening months.

No. 1 Invocation.
No. 8 Prohibition's Comin'.
No. 17 In the Name of Christ as King.
No. 20 Oh, Sound the Jubilee.
No. 24 When Prohibition Wins.
No. 25 The Home Guard.
No. 32 The Temperance Lighthouse.
No. 36 We March to Victory.
No. 46 Some Glad Day.
No. 51 A Place in the Ranks for Me.
No. 64 White Ribbon Rally Song.
No. 76 To Show My Love.
No. 83 The Rally Song.
No. 92 In His Name.
No. 104 Crown Him King of Kings.
No. 112 Hark, the Temperance Bells.
No. 128 Out for Prohibition.
No. 131 Crusade Glory Song.

AMONG THE STATES

Illinois

Granville (Ill.) holds the distinction of being the first and only city in its section of the state that has gone dry solely because the saloon proprietors so desired. The saloon licenses expired August 1, and the proprietors of the thirst parlors flatly refused to renew their expensive permits when the village board provided that all curtains must be removed from the saloon windows and that tables must also go.

Virginia

The West Virginia prohibition laws will be the model for the bills that are to be introduced in the Virginia legislature of 1916 by the prohibition leaders and, as they will be in the saddle, there is little doubt these bills will be enacted into law in practically the same form in which they are introduced.

Concern has been expressed by some of our Episcopallan friends because "Rev." F. E. J. Lloyd, who is the author of a tract entitled "The Prohibition Movement and the Country Church," has been referred to as a clergyman of the Episcopal Church. They insist that this "prominent divine" is not on the list of the clergy of the Episcopal Church in the annals for 1915 and he therefore cannot be in good standing or have any ministerial power. A man who would make such absurd statements as, "I am abundantly convinced that the prohibition movement has done more than any other single agency of modern times to weaken the influence and nullify the appeal of the rural church," and "It is plain to me that the country church has to choose between prohibition and Christianity" could not be expected to be in "good standing" in any church or organization of intelligent human beings.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Headquarters for Convention, Lincoln Hotel

Convention Meeting Place, Plymouth Congregational Church

CONVENTION COMMITTEES

The local committees in Seattle are at work and anticipating the pleasure of making the members of the Convention comfortable and pleased with their beautiful city. It will not suffer by contrast in beauty with any other city that has entertained it, nor in hospitality.

The chairmen of committees are as follows:

GENERAL CHAIRMAN, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt.
ENTERTAINMENT, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield.
FINANCE, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer.
PUBLICITY, Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher.
RECEPTION AT TRAINS, Mrs. Della Somers.
RECEPTION, Mrs. Frances McLaughlin.
PULPIT SUPPLY, Mrs. S. L. W. Clark.
DECORATIONS, Mrs. E. S. Wood.
PRINTING, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell.
MUSIC, Mrs. Mina Cornish.
BANNERS, Mrs. Mae Cook.
CHECK ROOMS, Mrs. M. C. Good.
REST ROOM, Mrs. Sue N. Wright
PAGES AND USHERS, Mrs. Mary Wade.
INFORMATION, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana.
PLATFORM, Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough.
PLEASURE TRIPS, Mrs. Emma Morrison.

Mrs. Lola Flagg is treasurer for the Convention fund and Mrs. Margaret C. Munns is convener of Convention, representing the National W. C. T. U.

SUPERINTENDENTS

MOTHERS' MEETINGS, WHITE RIBBON RECRUITS AND PURITY

MRS. HELEN L. BULLOCK

It is hoped that all state superintendents will realize that the early date of the National W. C. T. U. Convention makes it necessary to secure their reports promptly so as to send them before September 15, in condensed form, to the National superintendent. This will insure representation at our Convention in Seattle and in the printed annual Report. Never was there a year when more interest was manifested and more literature distributed, but it will require persistent effort to get the complete reports in on time.

Early in the year a large package of literature, with Plans of Work and report blanks, was sent to every state superintendent, and again in July report blanks and literature were sent to them. Many unions have had very successful white ribbon recruit medal contests which have greatly interested the mothers, and your National superintendent has prepared and published at eight cents a set recitations suitable for the little ones. Prizes for efficiency, also for the largest number of local reports secured, are offered in the Plan of Work and it is hoped there will be a wise and commendable competition for these.

I am hoping for early and encouraging reports from every state superintendent.

305 E. Church St., Elmira, N. Y.

HEALTH

MRS. FRANCES WAITE LEITER

Through the Plan of Work sent out early in the year, superintendents have had at hand the list of questions designed for the annual report. This six-page folder is supplied in any quantity needed, for postage only. Please note that special emphasis is placed upon county and local superintendents as evidence of the progress and strength of this department in any state.

In counties having no superintendent local unions that have carried on the work will report direct to the state superintendent. In the absence of a state superintendent, report direct to the National superintendent, mentioning marked items of interest pertaining to community or individual health. To be included in the National Report, word must come from a state not later than the middle of September.

Several new leaflets will be off the press in a few days—first, that bearing upon the dreaded disease, tuberculosis. It is designed for a round table program on "The Great White Plague." For scientific accuracy, so far as is now known, this program bears the approval of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

The importance of this feature of the Health department literature is evident from the printed statement of one of the great life insurance companies, sent out to its policy holders: "In a specified year, in the case of more than every sixth policy settled by the company, death was caused by tuberculosis." Another leaflet is also in press: "Dress from the Standpoint of Health"

By the close of the present W. C. T. U. year, a leaflet outlining a number of department programs will be ready, that state, county, and local superintendents need not be delayed in the work of the coming twelve months.

States that have not yet inaugurated the department of Health are earnestly urged to do so at the coming annual session.

Each local union should have a Health superintendent.

Send 10 cents for envelope of new literature, including "Race Betterment" and Plan of Work.

220 West Park Ave., Mansfield, Ohio.

THE CALL TO PRAYER

The all day Evangelistic conference for prayer and Bible service, to be held in connection with our great National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle, Washington, Saturday, October 9, should be duly emphasized by every white ribboner, because of the great crises through which all nations are passing at this time, which make needful special fervent, importunate prayer, the careful exposition of God's word and a searching for the truth as it is in Christ.

Three special prayer seasons have been arranged for, namely, at ten in the morning, at noon and at two in the afternoon, topics to be voiced in the petitions, namely: For wisdom and spiritual power in all deliberations of the great Convention; for the coming of Christ's kingdom on earth; for international and world peace and for state and National Constitutional Prohibition.

A full program has been prepared. The morning service will be devoted to praise and thanksgiving for the splendid victories of the past, with Bible promises for National Constitutional Prohibition from an evangelistic standpoint. The General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. will be among the speakers. In the afternoon, different branches of Evangelistic work will be considered together with the need for searching the Scriptures, peace methods, woman's suffrage and the sending of God's messengers of love to the sick and those in prison.

Music will be interspersed throughout the program. It is urged that every county, district and state convention take up the topics of prayer at the noon-tide hour. Further, it is urged that every local union hold a special prayer and Bible meeting on October 9 or as near that date as possible. Remember we have three hundred and twenty evangelists who will be in prayer on that day. All are invited to join this prayer circle at this time for great are the needs and most urgent the call. The command is—"Ask largely, that your joys may be full."

Yours for service,

MARY E. KUHL,
National Superintendent

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Tickets Chicago to Seattle and return, good until December 31, $62.50. Chicago to San Francisco, one way via Seattle, $80.

Delegates and visitors from east and south of Chicago should purchase tickets from starting point through to Seattle or San Francisco, as baggage may then be checked through to destination and transfer in Chicago is provided for.

Tickets from New York allow a choice of return route from Chicago, so it is not necessary to return by going route unless preferred.

Delegates desiring to board the train at any point en route may do so if we are notified long enough in advance to arrange for the train to stop.

Those who attend the Convention only will purchase tickets to Seattle over the Chicago and North Western and Union Pacific Lines via Omaha, Granger and Portland; tickets to be validated at Seattle; fee 50 cents.

Those who return by way of San Francisco will purchase tickets over the route of the White Ribbon Special via Seattle, tickets to be validated at San Francisco.

Return may be over any preferred route, but the official party will leave Seattle via the O., W. R. & N to Portland, Southern Pacific to San Francisco, Southern Pacific or Santa Fe to Los Angeles (with free side trip to San Diego. if requested when purchasing ticket), Santa Fe to Denver, via Williams, Albuquerque, Colorado Springs; Union Pacific and North Western lines to Chicago.

The Convention will adjourn Thursday night, October 14. Friday there will be meetings of the Official Board and Executive Committees and several pleasant excursions are being planned for delegates and visitors.

Saturday morning those who are going to San Francisco will board the train about eight o'clock. Several interesting stops are arranged for if we are enabled to have a special train from Seattle to San Francisco. Remember that it is necessary that we have one hundred or more in order to have this special service and when you read of the many interesting stops we are planning, I am sure every one of you will wish to make this trip.

At Salem we will call on the governor; at Albany a demonstration is planned. At Roseburg our train will be sidetracked, from midnight Saturday night until midnight Sunday night; for this the Pullman Company will make an extra charge of $2.50 for standard sleeper lower berth, a little less for tourist. Many meetings are being planned for the day, and the W. C. T. U. will entertain us all for Sunday dinner and supper.

After the evening meeting we will return to our train and when Monday morning comes, we will be well on our way to San Francisco. At Ashland, the last stop in Oregon, where we remain for an hour, the possibility of an auto ride over a wonderful mountain road fills us with pleasant anticipation.

Another stop at Shasta Springs will be well worth the time it takes and we will arrive in San Francisco late in the evening, but that will not inconvenience us, for it is arranged that we are to remain in our sleepers until morning without extra expense.

Tuesday morning, October 19, all who desire to do so will go to the same hotel and every effort will be made to secure one at moderate rates and without a bar.

Stopovers are granted at many points west of Chicago, so that if care is taken in choice of route, those who desire to visit friends will be able to do so without additional expense.

Side trips may be made to the Yosemite National Park, the Grand Canyon, etc. Information about these is given on another page of THE UNION SIGNAL. Preserve your UNION SIGNALS for reference as to transportation.

If undecided about return route, write to H. A. Gross, G. A. P. D., Chicago and North Western Ry., 148 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill., for booklet, "Forty Ways to the California Expositions."

White Ribbon Special baggage tags will be furnished, if asked for when reservation is ordered.

As soon as you reach Chicago, go direct to the North Western station, where any necessary final details in regard to tickets and sleepers may be arranged. A special room will be provided for our use.

A visit to Evanston, leaving Chicago at 10:20 a. m. or 2 p. m., or to the great department store of Marshall Field & Co., at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. has been arranged. If you wish to make either of these trips, please notify Miss Adams, stating preference as to time.

The White Ribbon Special leaves Chicago at 7:15 p. m., Tuesday, Oct. 5. Dinner should be eaten before boarding the train, as the diners will not be attached until Wednesday morning.

Sleeping car reservations must be made in advance. Applications should be sent to Miss Adams, stating whether you desire standard Pullman or tourist, lower or upper berth, compartment or drawing room; names of all in your party and where you will board the train. Also state whether you will return via special train to San Francisco, and if you desire hotel accommodations in San Francisco.

Drafts should accompany specific orders for reservations and should be made payable to Chicago & North Western Ry.

All correspondence in reference to the trip should be addressed to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

ELLA A. BOOLE, Chairman
KATHARINE K. ADAMS, Secretary

Canyon of the Grand River, Colorado, on Main Line of Denver & Rio Grande R. R.

The Complete Poems OF Mary A. Lathbury

POET LAUREATE of CHAUTAUQUA and a loyal and devoted member of the WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

The book contains all of her lyrics and hymns and also Portraits of the Author

Introdnction by Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT

Foreword by Dr. W. GARRETT HORDER of England

Price, $1.25 Postpaid

THE NUNC LICET PRESS
920 Nicollet Ave. Minneapolis, Minn.

MISSOURI HALF DRY

(Continued from Page Five)

Mrs. Lydia M. Chace, Kansas City, Mo., passed the ninety-second "milestone" of her life August 16. Mrs. Chace helped to organize the Arkansas state W. C. T. U., served as its president for seven years, and was ever prominent in the work of this state in her years of activity. At the age of sixteen she knew nothing of golf and tennis but, according to an old reward of merit card, "recited correctly ninety pieces of poetry and 954 verses from the Bible." Mrs. Chace relates many interesting incidents of the work and workers and of her service as a Quaker minister. In 1888, after her husband's death, she threw herself heart and soul into the work of the W. C. T. U.

Flashes from Local and County Unions

The fourth annual convention of Harrison county at Ridgeway was pronounced "the best ever" by members and friends. Fifty voting delegates, and a large attendance with "packed" houses at the two evening sessions, encouraged the workers and inspired the speakers. Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National lecturer, delivered brilliant addresses and gave valuable aid throughout the convention. Mrs. Martha Miner, superintendent, had charge of the splendid medal contest. Mrs. Malissa Platz was re-elected president.

One hundred and fifty-eight new members were secured during the year and one hundred dollars was raised for the prosecution of the work. There are sixteen live unions in the county, one recently organized by Mrs. Weech. Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, National worker, also did fine work in the county preceding the convention.

The convention of Pike county discussed National Constitutional Prohibition and the best way to secure it through department work. Miss Roena Shaner, state vice-president, was the speaker. Reports showed gain in membership and progress along all lines of work. Large pledges were taken for county and state work. Mrs. Emma G. Pitzer, who is a pioneer in the work, was re-elected president. At the gold medal contest on the closing evening Miss Maldee Edmonds won the medal.

Randolph county, the home of the state president, had an unusual convention, with a large delegation, crowds of visitors, fine reports and addresses by the state treasurer, Mrs. Neva Thomas; state organizer, Mrs. M. F. Coppedge; state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Anna Mac Zentmeyer; Mrs. Alice Curtice Moyer, state suffrage speaker, and others. Six hundred and two dollars were raised for state and district work and in addition each union made five year pledges to the state endowment fund.

Mussel Fork union, Chariton county, observed Temperance Sunday with an all day meeting and old fashioned basket dinner. Splendid programs were rendered by the W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. Mrs. Alice Curtice Moyer and Mrs. Iva M. Innis were the speakers. New members were gained.

Born to the Mendon W. C. T. U.—a lusty L. T. L.; "weight," twenty-two members. The Mendon Y. P. B. has over sixty members.

Kirkwood W. C. T. U. held a mothers' meeting at the home of the white ribbon recruit triplets, Alma, Arthur and Archibald Brockelmeyer.

Mrs. Carrie Lee Carter Stokes of Los Angeles, Cal., made a flying trip to Missouri and led the Clinton women in their victorious campaign. Mrs. Stokes spent one Sunday with old comrades in Kansas City, where she delivered two addresses, gaining members and putting money into the treasury.

One year old Perche union has held six contests and is prepared to give a gold medal contest.

An up-to-date and timely temperance play written by Mrs. J. M. Hunter, Hoberg, Mo., and entitled "The Topic of the Hour," has been published by the Missouri W. C. T. U. and may be ordered from Mrs. Lettie Hill May, 2640 Maple Ave., St. Louis, Mo. Price, 25 cents. This will meet a demand that has constantly come to the state officers.

VIRGINIA VITALITIES

Norfolk county camp-meeting and Wharton's Grove camp-meeting in Lancaster county have each enjoyed a rest-room equipped and supported by the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Hortense S. Ropp was the W. C. T. U. speaker at the Loudoun county bush meeting, held early this month at Purcellville, and was hostess at the rest-tent on the campground later. She goes to Ohio on September 1 to give eight weeks of service in the statewide prohibition campaign.

Mrs. Lucy B. De Shazo, president of Brunswick county union, and Mrs. Helen H. Green, state organizer, in a recent six days' "follow-up campaign," made thirteen addresses and drove ninety-eight miles with horse and buggy, the mercury lingering around ninety degrees Fahrenheit!

Dinwiddie county held its recent convention at Carson, with Mrs. Lilian A. Shepherd as state helper.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

South Carolina, Allendale, Sept. 2-5.
Vermont, Barton, Sept. 8-10.
Maine, Skowhegan, Sept. 14-16.
Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Nebraska, Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Salt Lake City, Sept. 29-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Mississippi, Belzoni, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

The Sunday school helps and temperance thoughts of Mrs. Fred Bullock of Waverly are creating most favorable comment among our workers. Mrs. Bullock contends that there is a temperance thought in every Sunday's lesson, and has proceeded to prove it through a series of short articles in the Virginia Call.

Southampton county held at Branchville in June a county institute that was well attended by members from all parts of the county, some traveling over forty miles by auto to get there. A silver medal contest held in the afternoon, varied by children's singing, was an interesting feature.

Miss Christine Tinling will leave Norfolk the last of the month for four weeks of lecture work in West Virginia. Her brain and pen have been busy during her "rest period" with new "hints" and "tales" on temperance for the little people.

Mrs. Amy C. Weech, who has been afield on the eastern shore of Virginia, has been doing excellent work that has endeared her more than ever to the active bi-county of Accomac and Northampton.

"High Joe" or The Logger's Story
By J. BURRITT SMITH

Striking, pathetic, convincing—and a vote-maker. Called "The Uncle Tom's Cabin of the Temperance Reform." Sixteen editions issued.

Paper, 35c; cloth, $1.00

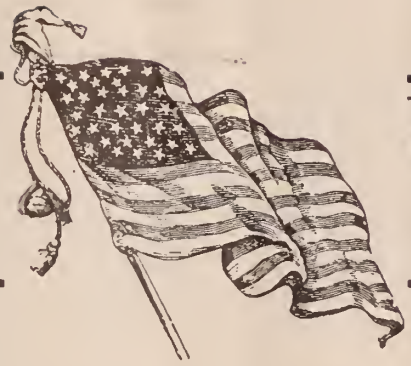
Busy World Publishing Co.
22 S. Henry St. Madison, Wis.

SUPPLY YOUR FRIENDS WITH THE
LATEST TEMPERANCE NEWS
AND AUTHENTIC UP-TO-DATE INFORMATION BY SUBSCRIBING FOR
THE UNION SIGNAL

WEEKLY EDITION, $1.00 PER YEAR
Monthly Campaign Edition, 25 cents per Year

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON - - - - ILLINOIS

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!



Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

A CHAT IN THE VEGETABLE GARDEN

CECILE L. HOUGHTON

It was early Friday morning and the vegetables at the county fair were enjoying a little undisturbed chat among themselves. The conversation really began in the box of lima beans. They felt so elated over their blue ribbon that they scarcely knew how to contain themselves. "Won't Johnnie's eyes shine when he comes this morning and sees his own beans which he planted and hoed and weeded have received the highest prize!" They chuckled and rubbed against each other in delight.

Then up spoke a monstrous yellow pumpkin, bursting with enthusiasm. "You'd never believe that a tiny girl cared for me and brought me for exhibition. She'll be just as happy over my red ribbon as Johnnie will over your blue one."

"My master is the real little farmer. though," shouted the yellow corn from somewhere up above the beans and the pumpkin. "Look at my even rows of kernels! It takes skill to recognize and grow samples like me."

"You all feel pretty smart," snapped a red pepper. "See how beautiful I am! Surely there is no one here to compare with me. Yet I go unnoticed because I am not mentioned in the list for premiums. I say it is a burning shame! There isn't a smarter child in the county than—"

"Hush! Don't let's complain, and of all things, please don't let's quarrel," interrupted the bland voice of a potato. "So far as I can see we all love the children and they all love us. I propose that we give three cheers for happy, healthy boys and girls."

"Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah!" yelled the vegetables in unison.

"I say, Hurrah," came a sickly voice from beyond the corn.

"Who spoke last?" demanded an onion.

"Somebody not worthy of our notice," replied the corn. "I am half ashamed to be obliged to stay up here so near a mere weed. It has always been so, though. His ancestors and mine lived near each other and our names are associated in stories of the Indians. I'd like all the world to know for once, however, what is in my heart. His purpose and mine are and always have been as different as destruction and life can be. I nourish the bodies of growing boys; he poisons them and stunts their growth; I help the boys to have clear brains and to attain success in life; he dulls the mind and keeps the consumer from doing his best; I am the friend of boys and girls; he is their enemy!"

"Corn is right!" shouted all the vegetables. "Down with tobacco! Down with the weed! Let's choke him—put him out!"

"Mercy, have mercy," came the weak plea of the weed. "I do some good in the world. I destroy harmful insects and—and—"

"Enough," cried the corn. "Truly your mission is one of destruction. After all, you are not so much to blame, since you can't help being what you are. We should censure rather the wrong use made of you by mankind."

"Here comes the crowd!" announced the beet nearest the door. "We must stop talking and look as well as we can."

"Hurry," cried the watermelon, "let's yell once more for the children. All together, Hurrah!" But this time the tobacco weed wilted in his corner and was silent.

WHAT CAN A LITTLE CHAP DO?

What can a little chap do
For his country and for you?
What can a little chap do?

He can play a straight game all through;
That's one good thing he can do.

He can fight like a knight
For the truth and the right;
That's another good thing he can do.

He can shun all that's mean,
He can keep himself clean,
Both without and within;
That's a very fine thing he can do.

His soul he can trace
Against everything base,
And the trace will be seen
All his life in his face;
That's an excellent thing he can do.

He can look to the light,
He can keep his thought white,
He can fight the great fight,
He can do with his might
What is good in God's sight;
Those are truly great things he can do.

Though his years be but few,
If he keeps himself true
He can march in the queue
Of the good and the great,
Who battled with fate
And won through;
That's a wonderful thing he can do.

And in each little thing
He can follow the King—
Yes, in each smallest thing
He can follow the King—
He can follow the Christ, the King.
—JOHN OXENHAM.

Reprinted from Princess Mary's Gift Book.

—Come back

--- through California
after the big meeting in Seattle
---You will of course want to see
San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego

---Stop at Grand Canyon

of Arizona---That alone is worth a whole trip---Only $7.50 additional railroad fare and Pullman sleeper takes you to the rim. Insist on having your return trip routed via Santa Fe from San Francisco. Ask for our picture folders: "California Outings," "Grand Canyon Outings" and both Expositions.

Santa Fe
All the way

Geo. T. Gunnip, Gen. Agt., Santa Fe Ry.
78 E. Jackson Street, Chicago

A Wave of Prohibition
FACTS AND FIGURES
ready to be set in motion throughout the country by the use of the new

PROHIBITION FAN
(Octagon in shape; 7 x 8⅝ in.)

Prohibition map, date of adoption of prohibition by various states on the one side, printed in black; on the reverse side in blue, with white letters surrounded by an artistic arrangement of white ribbon border, the appeal

Protect Our American Youth by
Prohibiting the Liquor Traffic

These fans are put up in packages of three dozen (36) and the price is

36 Fans, $1.00

Owing to difficulty in handling and shipping, the smallest order we can fill will be three dozen. Prices on larger quantities will be cheerfully furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HERE AND THERE

Walla Walla (Wash.) white ribboners are turning the tables. They are raising money to put in a men's rest room! They hope to have it in operation by January 1, 1916. This same union, under the direction of the president, Mrs. Emma Moxey, holds two meetings a week with the inmates of the county and city jails. On Mothers' Day, for themselves and the other unions in the state, this union held services in the state penitentiary and gave each inmate a carnation. Mrs. Moxey is studying prison reform from every standpoint, and her women back her heartily in her undertaking.

The Fruitland (Idaho) L. T. L., the largest legion in the southern part of the state, and which for two years has held the beautiful silk membership flag offered to the legion of greatest size, is "out for recruits." It has recently conducted a membership campaign with a silver medal contest as the "forfeit" paid by the losers who will present to the winners free tickets for the entertainment. The Fruitland legion is organized in pioneer territory. Its leader, Mrs. R. G. Wilson, a teacher, takes a deep personal interest in each boy and girl and is ever ready to open her house for "parties" or business meetings. The celebration of the birthday of Miss Anna A. Gordon this year took the form of a big picnic which every Fruitland legioner enjoyed to the utmost.

Delegates to the third annual convention of the New Madrid county (Mo.) W. C. T. U., held at New Madrid last month, were e h presented with a prohibition fan. The event was a notable occasion and the program contained many interesting numbers. The county was especially fortunate in securing the services of Miss Roena E. Shaner, vice-president of the Missouri W. C. T. U. and National W. C. T. U. organizer, who addressed large and appreciative audiences.

Milo (Iowa) W. C. T. U. which was organized only about a year ago has increased from a membership of fifteen to seventy-five, largely as the result of a membership contest. It is also a "front rank" union in the state, having 100 points to its credit. Since the first of the year six medal contests have been held by the union. Mrs. Fear, the mother of nine children and the winner of a silver medal, is the newly elected president of the county (Warren) in which Milo is located, and her daughter is the leader of the L. T. L.

The W. C. T. U. of Schlater, Miss., recently gave a very enjoyable picnic to the children of the community. After an appetizing dinner they went to the Methodist church, where members of the Carrollton L. T. L. rendered an interesting program under the direction of its able and efficient leader, Miss Sallie Harvey. She gave a concise statement of the L. T. L. work and aims and then organized a legion of twenty members.

Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, World's and National superintendent of the department of Peace and Arbitration, was warmly welcomed on her recent return to her home in Winthrop Center, Maine, after months of absence in California. At the annual picnic meeting of the Waterville (Maine) W. C. T. U., Mrs. Bailey's after-dinner address giving glimpses of the Panama-Pacific Exposition and points on prohibition and suffrage was thoroughly enjoyed. Mrs. Bailey is vice-president-at-large of the Maine W. C. T. U.

Woman suffrage was one of the popular subjects discussed at the county institute at Independence, Iowa, held last month. Hon. T. E. Taylor spoke upon the question, "Where Can Woman Best Invest Her Efforts in the Franchise Campaign?" Miss Jennie Young gave an address on "Why the Women in the Homes Need the Ballot." The reports from the local societies indicated much interest in the two great issues now before Iowa voters—the enfranchisement of women and Constitutional Prohibition. The institute was opened with a silver medal contest participated in by boys and girls from Winthrop, Jessup, Hazleton and Independence, the prize being awarded to Church Chappel of Independence. A question box conducted by Miss Cotton of Cedar Falls, district president, was an interesting feature, as was also the discussion by Mr. McHuron of "The Best Way to Handle the Cigaret Question."

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.

¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

The J. L. Mott Iron Works
118-120 Fifth Ave. New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

Now is the Time

to renew THE YOUNG CRUSADER subscriptions for your public school teachers—nine months' subscriptions for twenty cents.

Kindly send in the subscriptions at once so that the September number may reach the teachers at the very beginning of the school year, that they may count upon its help as they plan the year's work.

First Hand Evidence on the Effects of Beer and Wine

DR. A. J. BARTON, in the Home and State

"In The Dallas News of July 3 I noticed an article by Judge Kittrell, renewing his suggestions previously made through the press that a separate vote be made on what he calls 'liquor' and beer. He endeavors to place beer on a higher plane than 'liquor.' In his reference to 'liquor' I am presuming that he means whisky as well as all spirituous liquors.

"While Judge Kittrell's views are worthy of some consideration, since I doubt not he is honest in his convictions, still I can not concur in the same view, and no man can who has had the experience with all kinds of intoxicants that I have had. I know the taste and evils of strong drink from champagne to hard cider, including spirituous, malt and vinous liquors.

"He seems to base his opinion on statistics in arriving at the difference between the effect of 'liquor' and beer. It is next to impossible to obtain statistics that are correct in a matter of this kind, as so much is 'covered' up, just as are the secret sins that go on daily in the cities which are never observed by the public.

Boiled-Down Facts

"In replying to him I am not basing any opinion on statistics, but from 'boiled-down' facts obtained by myself in my acquaintance with the saloon, the heavy drinkers and with drunkards. Having been in some of the principal cities of thirteen states, it has been my fate or 'fortune' to come into contact with the most elaborate saloons, the lowest 'dives' and the underworld, which all go hand in hand, more or less.

"My reason for associating with such was due to the fact that for some two or three years I was a heavy drinker myself; then another reason was that I had a special hobby to acquaint myself thoroughly with facts and to convert myself from a rank anti-prohibitionist to a solid pro. Among my acquaintances were men of extraordinary intelligence and intellect who never taste whisky, but oftimes I have seen them drunk on beer as well as wine.

"I have seen young men, old men and women in the lowest depths of degradation who used nothing but beer to drown (?) their troubles and to remain in an inebriated condition.

Beer Largely Used

"In the 'red-light' district of the larger towns beer is used almost exclusively to produce drunkenness, and I have often seen houses full of men and women drinking nothing save beer, and as drunk as it is possible for a person to get. I have seen quarrels between men who were under the influence of nothing but beer, quarrels over frivolous matters, which would not have occurred had it not been for their intoxication.

"Many a girl falls from drinking heavily of beer or wines, as both these mild drinks are milder and more palatable than whisky, but bring about unnatural desires and produce intoxication. Most of the auto joy ride accidents can be traced to too much beer and wine and such have come under my observation on more than one occasion. A young woman of my acquaintance in relating her experience to me said that a bottle of port wine brought about her downfall. I could vouch for her truthfulness, as I have known her for years and she comes of a good family. It was the first wine she had ever tasted. Beer and wine are sending more innocent girls to the 'red-light' district than whisky ever did. Shall they be protected or shall the 'hellish' traffic continue?

"Shall we undertake to set aside spirituous liquors and let other intoxicants remain to send our boys and girls the route that thousands of them are going daily? I say no, a thousand times no. There should be no compromise when all intoxicants produce the same result, only in different form. You can make no distinction between two evils that are identically the same. I want to say to the advocate of the 'separate' vote that if you do not believe the things I have related to you, get someone who knows to show you around."

THOSE "HORRIBLE EXAMPLES" PROVED PROSPEROUS

When Macon, Mo., voted to outlaw the liquor traffic the "personal liberty" crowd condemned it to death and decay. Today it is a living refutation of the false prophecies, says the Kansas City Star. According to that paper, "In the saloon days there never was a time when a bond issue for public improvement could be liquidated without raising it by taxation. Now business has increased so at the municipal plants—which reflect the business of the town generally—that extensive improvements can be made without costing the people a nickel." These municipal plants, by the way, are now making an annual profit for the city of more than $6,000.

A TOWN BIG WITH POSSIBILITIES

In the state of Wisconsin there is a town known at the state university as "a town with a history of public spirit and co-operative action"—Richland Center by name. Walter A. Dyer, writing in the August number of The World's Work, tells how it represents the spirit of the Middle West in its up-to-date successful commercial enterprises, its magnificently equipped public schools, its public library, pretentious public auditorium for the people, its municipally owned utilities: water works, electric lighting plant, quarry, stone crusher and road-making machinery.

Prosperity Without a "Boom"

"All this has meant prosperity—extraordinary prosperity per capita," says the writer of the article. "The only unhappy person found in the city was the hotel proprietor, who said that all the families in the county were so well-to-do that he couldn't find any girls to employ as waitresses and chambermaids. But this prosperity has come steadily and normally; there has been no unhealthy boom. And with the prosperity there has come to the people a sane desire for the good things of life—good roads, good schools, and the auditorium."

The Explanation

The assistant librarian told the writer in confidence that Richland Center owed its regeneration entirely to the fact that it was a dry town and had been since 1907. "Then," declared the librarian, "the gilt signs came down and the roisterers departed for more congenial regions. And that did not seem to draw trade away from the town, either, for wherever there had been a saloon there seemed to be a merchandise store to take its place. And the stores advertise, which the saloons did not," added the editor, which indicated his views on prohibition.

"There are no saloons, no pool rooms, and no gambling in Richland Center," concludes the writer. "The law is enforced because public sentiment demands it. And this means very little alcoholism in Richland Center, for the man who wants a drink badly enough to journey down to Lone Rock for it must be very thirsty."

PROHIBITION LOS GATOS HAS NO NEED OF JAIL

The following statement appears in the Mail of Los Gatos, a prohibition city in Santa Clara county (California): "During the past four months it has cost Los Gatos seventy-five cents for prison expenses. One person was arrested during this period and the seventy-five cents was paid to take him to the county jail at San Jose. This is a mighty good record for a city of 3,500 people. Another matter—Los Gatos has been without a jail for months."

CARRANZA ORDERS SALOONS IN SONORA TO CLOSE DOORS

Carranza officials are reported to have put absolute prohibition into effect in the larger towns of Sonora, Mexico, now under their control, according to travelers who arrived from interior points.

NEW W. C. T. U. PINS

Reproductions of the Popular Scotch Pins, in two styles

SCARF OR STICK PIN
BROOCH PIN

10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

JOTTINGS

"At the present time the average death-rate in the United States is about fourteen, that is, fourteen out of every 1,000 persons die annually. I am convinced that if syphilis and alcohol could be entirely eliminated, the rate would fall at once to twelve or under," writes Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, food expert of the New York City Health department, in an article in the Scientific American on "Why Do Middle-Aged Men Break Down?"

The Chicago Psycopathic hospital reports that more than sixty-five per cent of the people who go insane in the city are men and the chief cause of their unbalanced condition is alcoholism.

Thirty of the forty-four counties of South Carolina are now dry, and on September 14, it is confidently expected that by an overwhelming majority the citizens of the state will outlaw the traffic in drink.

Pipestone county, Minn., which voted on the liquor question June 7, has been declared dry by the district court, as a result of a contest instituted by the anti-liquor interests.

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75
Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

LITERATURE DEMONSTRATION

M. J. PHILPOT

(Platform with table upon which stands large globe. Enter two women talking, one holding large bow of white ribbon.)

Mrs. A. speaks, holding up white ribbon: "This is our official badge, a true lovers' knot uniting the hearts of over half a million women in labors of love for God and Home and Every Land."

Mrs. B.—"I am interested in what you say. Can you show me some of the methods by which your work is accomplished?"

Mrs. A.—"Yes, through our departments." (Calls.) "Enter, white-ribboners."

Enter twelve—or as many departments as you wish to represent—women dressed in white with blue pennants, "The Liquor Traffic Must Go" on front of waist. Blue or white caps with name of department represented printed on them. Over the shoulder white ribbon about two inches wide hanging in festoons with leaflets fastened to it all along its length, larger ones in center. UNION SIGNAL front page, also YOUNG CRUSADER and state paper. Each one carries on her arm a white-ribbon budget of her department literature. This is made of a big bow with leaflets fastened on it and in her hand is some emblem to represent her department. They file on, singing with piano accompaniment, "We're out for prohibition," and form in a half circle behind the table, making as great a display of literature and emblems as possible. Each one names her department and repeats an appropriate sentence as to the use of its special literature, holding up emblem as she speaks, as follows:

Evangelistic—Emblem, a small Bible. "This represents the chief corner stone in our structure of evangelistic literature through which we keep alive the altar fires of the Crusade."

Good Citizenship—Prohibition Map. "We aim to agitate and educate for a clean and patriotic citizenship that will make our map all white."

Franchise—Yellow banner or poster. "We educate the public as to the value and need of woman's vote."

Scientific Temperance—Posters. "The literature of this department is everywhere recognized as a strong influence in schools and colleges for the saving of children and youth from intemperance."

Flower Mission—Basket of fruit and flowers. "With these we send messages of cheer and comfort through texts and leaflets."

Legislation—An open roll of petitions. "Our literature brings to the notice of legislators the principles for which we stand. Educate the public as to legal measures for the suppression of wrong and the maintenance of right."

Soldiers and Sailors—Flag. "If you want to know of this work read the National superintendent's latest annual report. The Army and Navy are now dry."

White-Ribbon Recruits—A baby. "We help mothers to train these little ones in paths of safety."

Press—Publicity Sheets. "We disseminate temperance truth, elevate standards of the press, and acquaint the public with our work."

Medal Contests—Contest books or card with medals. "Our contest literature places the best oratory and literature of the day in homes and before the public."

Medical Temperance—Bottles tied with white ribbon. "Our literature stands for safe remedies in sickness, against dangerous patent medicines and alcoholic treatment."

Systematic Giving—Small bank. "Tithing literature aids in providing money for carrying on our great campaigns."

Anti-Narcotics—Basket of bottles. "We create sentiment against habit-forming drugs, cigarets and tobacco."

Peace—White dove (which can be made of paper). "We teach that war is cruel and anger outrageous."

Two women enter bearing large baskets of literature and saying: "Time is too short to tell it all, but here you see splendid literature which exploits some thirty other departments."

A young woman speaks for Y. P. B. literature and a lad distributes L. T. L. leaflets and The Young Crusader. When all have told their little story they march around globe, singing, "All round the world the ribbon white is twined." As they march they take the ribbon of literature from their shoulders and lay it around the globe on the table, and leaving it there, march out, still singing and wearing their budget of literature or emblems.

A THREE-DAY TRIP

YOSEMITE VALLEY

Yosemite Falls

A delightful three-day trip, including all of the principal points of interest in the Yosemite Valley, may be enjoyed at cost of approximately $30 from Merced.

Leave San Francisco or Los Angeles by night train over the Southern Pacific or Santa Fe, arrive at Merced the following morning in time for breakfast at the El Capitan Hotel or Harvey House.

Itinerary

First Day: Leave Merced at 8:00 a. m., Yosemite Valley Railroad, through the picturesque Merced Canyon, arrive El Portal at 11:30 a. m. Luncheon at Hotel Del Portal. Leave Hotel Del Portal by auto-stage at 12:30 p. m., arrive hotel or camp in Yosemite Valley at 2:30 p. m. One may then enjoy the magnificent views to be had from vicinity of hotel or camp, or can take a short stroll to the foot of Yosemite Falls and back in time for dinner.

Second Day: Start at 8:00 a. m. for the trail trip to Glacier Point. This trip includes a drive to Mirror Lake and Happy Isles, thence saddle horse by way of Vernal Fall, Emerald Pool, Silver Apron, Diamond Cascades, Nevada Fall, Panorama Point and Illilouette Fall, to Glacier Point Hotel for luncheon. Here the most wonderful views of Yosemite are to be had. The return trip is over the short trail by way of Union Point, arriving at hotel or camp about 5:00 p. m.

Third Day: Walk to Happy Isles. After a short visit at this beautiful spot, climb the foot trail up Grizzly Peak to Sierra Point, where a wonderful view is to be had of four of the great waterfalls of the valley, all to be seen from the same standpoint. Return in time for luncheon. Leave hotel or camp by auto-stage at 3:00 p. m., arrive Hotel Del Portal at 5:00 p. m., to depart by Pullman sleeping car at 8:00 p. m., or rest over night and use the daylight train.

Cost of Three Day Trip.

Fridays and Saturdays, round trip ticket sold for $14.50, good for 15 days.

Side trip ticket from Merced	$18.50
Hotel Del Portal, two meals	2.00
Camp ———, five meals, two lodgings	4.50
Glacier Point Hotel, one meal	1.00
Trail trip to Glacier Point	4.00
	$30.00

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., SEPTEMBER 9, 1915 | No. 37

OUR CONVENTION CITY

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Courtesy Walker's Print Shop, Seattle.

SEE PAGE 2

PLYMOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Where the Meetings of the National Convention will be held

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

PLYMOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

THE MEETING PLACE OF THE 1915 NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

REV. E. A. KING, Formerly Acting Pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church

The Convention Church

Seattle, the city in which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union hosts will gather this fall, boasts of many beautiful buildings, but none more ornate or imposing than Plymouth Congregational Church where the white ribboners will assemble in Convention. This great temple occupies nearly half a block and is located in the very heart of the metropolis on the corner of Sixth avenue and University street. Directly back of it is the Metropolitan Opera House, and across the street, on the corner, is the Labor Temple. Thus the church building may be said to be in the very midst of things.

Plymouth church is one of the oldest organizations in Seattle, having been founded in 1869. It has seen this wonderful city grow up around it, but has persistently resisted the temptation to leave its special down-town responsibilities. A few years ago it sold its old site on the corner of Third avenue and University street and invested something like $350,000.00 in its present church plant which is one of the most complete and up-to-date on the Pacific coast.

Ladies' Parlor

It has a beautiful auditorium finished in white, old ivory and gold, with mahogany seats, contains one of the largest and finest pipe organs in the city and because of perfect acoustic properties is a favorite place for great concerts and mass meetings. It should be said, also, that the decorations of the entire building are in harmony with those in the auditorium. The ladies' parlor is an especially attractive room.

Under the auditorium is a gymnasium and nearby is found a fully equipped manual training department room. In the great wing attached to the main building on the north are ample rooms for a modern Sunday school and accommodations for almost every phase of social activity. There is a beautiful and spacious dining-room on the first floor with a fully equipped modern kitchen opening from it on one side, and a large reception room on the other. The men's club room, the kindergarten, and various halls, store-rooms and lavatories occupy the remaining space. On the second floor are the main offices, the ladies' parlor, and entrances to the church foyer and the main Sunday school auditorium. On the next floor are to be found the pastor's offices and the offices of the state headquarters of the Congregational denomination. The remainder of the building is devoted to class and department rooms for the Sunday school.

Many of Seattle's leading men and women are among the thousand and more members of this great church. As an organization, the church has always taken high ground in all civic and moral affairs and has made itself felt especially along the lines of temperance reform. During the last campaign for statewide prohibition this church was noted for its generous gifts of money and personal service, for its rallies and various other sentiment-making gatherings in the interest of the cause.

Two of the greatest meetings of the campaign were held in Plymouth Congregational church when Dr. Charles M. Sheldon of Topeka spoke on "The Truth About Kansas" and Mrs. Mary Harris Armor of Georgia, dealt with the issues of the campaign. It was a critical moment in the fight when many false statements about Kansas calculated to cause serious harm had been circulated. The church secured Dr. Sheldon to answer these false charges.

When over 10,000 men, women and children marched through the streets of Seattle in the greatest parade ever seen in these parts, carrying banners and singing songs, the church was also to the front. The parade changed the sentiment of thousands of voters in western Washington from indifference and hostility to enthusiastic support of the prohibition measure. The four large down-town churches were represented by their pastors who marched abreast at the head of the monster parade.

In coming to Seattle and to this church the white ribbon delegates from all over the country will find a hearty welcome, for Plymouth church numbers in its membership some of the most active and energetic workers in the Washington W. C. T. U. One may feel here that she is thoroughly welcome among friends of a great cause in a church that has the courage to stand for the things that are true and right. Members of the organization from abroad are not strangers here, by any means, for it was only a few years ago, when the National Convention was held in Portland, Oregon, that delegation from the East, including the National president, were tendered a public reception in what was then Plymouth's new building. Thus, in a sense, the building has been consecrated to the great cause of prohibition by one of the noblest bands of women the world contains. Come, then, to Seattle and enter into the joys of our common service.

Plymouth Church Auditorium

"HOTEL BAR IS AN INSULT TO THE AMERICAN PUBLIC"

Who said it? Not a fanatical prohibitionist but the manager of a fine hotel in the state of North Dakota. His name is Al Leimbacher. He is the proprietor of the Gardner hotel and the statement was made at the annual meeting of the Northwestern Hotel Men's Association, at Davenport, Iowa, on August 27.

Mr. Leimbacher's subject was, "Prohibition an Economic Proposition," and his refcrence to the liquor evil as related to hotels called forth great applause.

The part of his address bearing on the drink question was as follows:

"Efficiency is just as much called for and far more constructive in a country at peace, yet throughout the United States we find every conceivable example of disregard of the truth that temperance and efficiency go hand in hand. Especially is this true of our own particular interest, the hotel. From the manager down to the bell hop booze makes more trouble than any other one thing in our business. If the causes for eight out of every ten hotel failures were to be carefully analyzed, liquor would be found to be the rock on which the business was shattered. It is an indisputable fact that more managers lose their positions on account of booze than through any lack of real efficiency. The same may be found throughout the crew.

"Every year in the hotels of the country there are countless numbers of elevator and boiler accidents due to drunkenness. I have in mind two engineers who cost us several hundred dollars, to say nothing of endangering the lives of our guests, by explosions caused by their carelessness while drinking. The engineer who never drinks is the only one who knows full well that his men are not burning too much fuel, or neglecting to keep the machinery well oiled and sufficient water in the boilers. Depreciation in equipment is safeguarded to a great extent by proper care. Replacements cost money.

"When I assumed the management of the Gardner hotel, I found an unusual consumption of liquor in the kitchen. Enough of the stuff was purchased each month, ostensibly for cooking purposes, to have served rarebits and punches in the most popular cafe for an entire year. When I remonstrated with the chef, he readily acknowledged that it was used by the cooks, but declared that it was entirely necessary for them to be allowed to drink on account of the intense heat. A happy combination, is it not, extreme heat and hot booze, to cool the sweated brow?

"Some years ago a saloon-keeper made this somewhat surprising statement: 'I will not employ a bartender who drinks, even though I have to pay more salary than do my competitors, in order to procure such a man. I do this,' he said, 'to secure prompt and efficient service. A drinking man is an expensive luxury I cannot afford to keep.' If a man engaged in selling liquor knows and admits that drinking impairs efficiency, is it not time for the hotel fraternity to recognize the fact? Turn, any of you, to your records for the past five years and note how many men you have discharged on account of drink. You will find not a few. Still you claim the necessity of the hotel bar. We demand non-drinking employes, while our bar, just as well as any other saloon, helps to spread the drink habit.

"The hotel bar, I believe, is run confessedly for the sake of revenue. A business to yield profit must be popular. To anyone who reads the signs of the times, it is quite apparent that the saloon is doomed. Even the most pessimistic of temperance reformers will admit this fact. The age old popularity of liquor is beginning to wane and the issue must be met. The cafeteria and the tea room will come to take the place of the bar in popularity and in revenue. It is time we ceased to insult the American public by insisting that a hotel cannot be run without a bar."

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS OF WASHINGTON WILL ENFORCE THE PROHIBITION LAW

The prohibition laws of the states of Washington and Oregon, which go into effect on January 1, 1916, bid fair to be well enforced if one may judge from the sentiment of the prosecuting attorneys of both states, as expressed in their recent annual convention. On this occasion Frank P. Christensen, in reading the annual address of the president, made the following informal remarks in regard to the prohibitory law:

"Any prosecuting attorney in this state who fails to give our new prohibition laws the strictest enforcement is a mollycoddle and one of the worst type.

"The people of the states of Washington and Oregon have spoken. They have said in no uncertain terms that they want their states to be dry after January 1. We prosecuting attorneys of Washington want to be unanimous in our procedure on this law. It is up to us to work to enforce it. It is up to us to do what the people of Washington want us to do."

Scott V. Henderson, assistant attorney general of Washington, speaking in the absence of W. V. Tanner, attorney general, echoed the sentiments of Mr. Christensen. "The prohibition law is one that is going to be enforced in Washington," he said. "We are going to see that violations of the act are punished in every village, town, hamlet, city and county in the state."

The sentiment of the attorneys of both Oregon and Washington was in favor of prohibition and vigorous applause greeted each reference to the new law and its enforcement.

PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL UNDERWRITERS' ASSOCIATION SAYS WAR IS LESS COSTLY TO LIFE THAN LIQUOR

John Barleycorn need not apply to the newly elected president of the National Life Underwriters' Association for a life insurance policy. That official has no use for him. In fact, any man who has anything to do with "John" is unpopular in insurance circles.

"Insurance people have come to the definite conclusion that booze and insurance mix about as well as oil and water," remarked Edward A. Woods, of Pittsburg, elected head of the national organization at the recent convention at San Francisco, to a newspaper man, as reported in the Portland Oregonian.

"In other words," said Mr. Woods, "a drinking man is a mighty poor risk. Cold figures have proven to us positively that the drinking man—even the moderate drinker—has less than half as much chance to live out the life of his policy as the teetotaler.

"The mortality of the teetotalers between the ages of thirty-five and fifty years, when men are of the most use to society, is only fifty-six per cent of the average mortality.

"Not even the war has been the subject of as much consideration among insurance men as has the liquor question."

He intimated that the life insurance companies are lending passive support to the prohibition movement.

DRINK PENALTY HEAVY IN PORTLAND, ORE.

Habitual drunkards in the state of Oregon are being given a chance to sober up and become used to total abstinence before the state goes dry the first of next year. Municipal Judge Stevenson of Portland, in accordance with a recently announced policy, sentenced two well-known tipplers to imprisonment until the prohibition law goes into effect.

NEW DAYS FOR BIRMINGHAM, ALA., UNDER PROHIBITION

As one of the evidences of what a splendid thing prohibition is, the following from the Birmingham (Ala.) Ledger concerning a city which claims a population of over 200,000 people, and to which many visitors come, is enlightening: "The city of Birmingham hung up a new record for law and order during the last forty-eight hours. According to officials at the city jail, during this period not one white man, white woman, or negro woman was arrested on any offense. Only about half a dozen negro men were put in jail, and these largely for offenses of a trivial character. Never before has such a situation prevailed in the memory of the oldest member of the Birmingham police department."

FRANCE WILL INCREASE THE TAXES ON ALCOHOL AND LIMIT THE DISTILLATION OF BRANDY

The minister of finance of France, Alexandre Ribot, has introduced in the chamber of deputies a bill providing for a comprehensive reform in the liquor trade. The measure contemplates suppression of privileges enjoyed by private individuals, who are now permitted to distill brandy from their own fruits, and for an increase in the tax on alcohol from 12 francs to 25 francs a gallon. To this is added a tax on consumption of 5 francs a gallon on appetizers and liquors.

Memoranda attached to the bill contain a statement that if consumption of the articles affected showed decrease by one-half the government would nevertheless receive increased revenues to the amount of 10,000,000 francs.

It is also proposed that the state create a monopoly in the manufacture of industrial alcohol and endeavor to find an additional outlet for the product among consumers of fuel, such as owners of automobiles.

MA SEIN'S VICTORY

FLORA E. STROUT, World's W. C. T. U. Representative in Burma

How a Christian Burmese girl kept her village free from toddy-shops

Ma Sein was weeping bitterly; to be perfectly accurate, she was howling with such vehemence that she was heard not only all over the dormitory but also in the mission bouse adjoining. The worst of it all was that Ma Sein had reason to be sorrowful, for she had failed ignominiously in her examinations and, therefore, could not finish the normal course of study as she had hoped to do that year.

Ma Sein's father, Moung Kin, was the headman of bis village, a large and important one for the jungle, and more than all that he was a strong Buddhist of the old-fashioned sort. He was anxious to have his sons acquire an education and was very proud of the progress they were making, for could they not become myooks (big officials), and make plenty of rupees? But Moung Kin had all the contempt of an Eastern man for his women folk and did not see why he should spend money on a girl. His daughter was good-looking and he would be able to marry her to some rich man of the village. Despite his attitude towards women he had a suspicion that his wife possessed far too much authority in the household and ordered him about in a way not conducive to his dignity, yet he had yielded to her entreaties in the case of Ma Sein and moved by her cunning suggestion that their daughter, if educated, would probably make a better marriage, he had sent Ma Sein to a mission school in Rangoon.

Ma Sein's people had not been pleased with her school record, for, sad to relate, she had barely managed to squeeze through, year by year, not because of any fault of her own, for she studied hard enough, but for the very simple reason that her preparation had been poor. The crowning grievance had come when she had decided to be a Christian and had insisted upon uniting with the Rangoon church. It had looked for a while as if she would not be allowed to return home, but her mother, although she was probably the more angry of the two parents, could not make up her mind to turn out her only daughter, though Ma Sein knew she could make things most unpleasant for her. And now she was obliged to go back to her village—a failure! No wonder Ma Sein wept copiously and audibly.

Her worst fears were realized, for upon her return she was met with frowns not only from her family but from her friends, and made to feel an outcast. She was sure that if she could have another year at school she would "make good," and indeed tbe principal had written her father to that effect, but it was useless to suggest such a thing to Moung Kin in his present state of mind. Ma Sein had her ambitions, too—there was a village school and the head-master needed a teacher badly. With a certificate there would be no difficulty in securing the place and she felt it would give her a chance to do good. Besides, with all of her trouble there was creeping over her a dreadful certainty that her father was arranging to marry her to a horrid old man, a widower and a Buddhist.

Poor Ma Sein was unfortunate in all she did. She was a member of the school Y. P. B. and so stoutly refused the betel and cheroots offered her at home and at the homes of her friends, a great discourtesy in the eyes of her people, although she took pains to explain that such things were bad and she was pledged against them. She had even offered to show some leaflets which she had on the subject, but her advances in that direction had been received with scorn. Her parents readily agreed tbat they had spoiled her by sending her to a Christian school where she not only had been made a Christian but pretty much of a fool at the same time. Altogether Ma Sein's spirit was in a fair way to be broken and her pretty eyes were nearly washed away by her frequent tears.

The days dragged wearily on until nearly a month had passed, when one morning Ma Sein heard her father talking in great excitement to some of the village men who had come to see him. She caught the words, "We shall be like the village Minzu if that toddy shop is allowed. Our young men will become drunken and we shall have many dacoities. I have spoken against it, but it has proved of no use."

Ma Sein gathered enough information in the next few days to make it certain that despite her father's protest, the excise officer of the district, who also had the power to issue licenses, intended to allow a liquor shop in their pretty village. She knew how distressed her father would be over the matter, not only because his religion was opposed to the use of alcohol, but principally because he took pride in the record which his village had established for freedom from crime and vice. He had only to look at Minzu to see what would happen when a toddy shop was in operation. He was proud of the fact that he had kept the town free all these years not only from alcohol but also from morphine and cocaine which a wily Chinaman had tried to smuggle in, not once but several times. Ma Sein realized, however, that with the fear of the officials, which all of the people shared, and with the spirit of servility which many of them possessed, the protest probably had not been very vigorous, though she felt it should have prevailed. All of the horrors that she had heard about in the Y. P. B. as the results of the use of alcohol, and all that she bad seen, came back to her with renewed force, and she began to half believe her father's bitter statement that Christianity was a drinker's religion.

What could she do? She could send for literature on the subject, and perhaps the people would read it and be warned, but she feared that the easy-going villagers would yield to temptation, despite all of the information which she might give them. She must do something more than distribute literature. She remembered that her teachers had said that the government wanted to protect the people and help them in their struggle towards better living. Surely if that were true the government would not approve of a thing like this. Was there not some way of getting at an official higher up? It was useless to ask her father, for even if he had been on good terms with her, he would have too much fear to protest again.

She thought of the excise officer; she had never liked his looks and he was not popular either; besides, even if she dared to speak to him it would not be safe, as he had the unsavory reputation of liking Burmese girls too well and to their undoing. There was only one other official whom she was at all likely to see and that was the assistant superintendent of police of the district. She had heard her father say that he was a good man—high praise from him. How could she get a word with this man? It was not the custom for a Burmese girl to speak to an Englishman unless he first addressed her. However, she waited and prayed. She had been driven much to prayer in these days of trial, which perhaps explains her faithfulness to her religious and temperance vows in the midst of sore temptation. One day, when nearly discouraged, she learned that Mr. Everett, the official she wished to see, was in the village and the same evening she heard him talking with her father in fluent Burmese, as her parent knew no English. It was a bold thing to do, but she hastily snatched up cigars and betel box from the shelf and, much to her mother's astonishment, for she had refused to serve these to any one before, she took them in to her father's guest. She did not stop to consider whether she was breaking her pledge; she had only one thought, to gain a chance to talk with the official.

Her father looked at her suspiciously as she came into the room, but Mr. Everett thanked her and said to Moung Kin, "This is your daughter, is she not? She has been away to school." Then he added in his own language, "Do you speak English?"

Here was her chance. She said rapidly, "Oh, yes, your honor, and I have something I want to say."

"What is it you wish?" asked Mr. Everett kindly.

Despite her father's glowering looks, Ma Sein told of the proposed toddy shop, of her father's protest and the feeling in the village. She then asked Mr. Everett to do something quickly as she had been told that the house for the shop was already spoken for. Mr. Everett heard her story in some amazement, gave her leave to retire, and remarking courteously to her father, "Your daughter speaks English well," resumed the conversation which Ma Sein had interrupted.

That evening Mr. Everett studied the case Ma Sein had laid before him. He was not a total abstainer himself, although he had been one when he first came to the country. His mother, who was a member of the British Women's Temperance Association, had brought him up to abhor alcohol, but the customs of the officials bad been too much for his principles, and he felt ashamed as he thought how easily he had been persuaded to forego them. Whether he believed in the use of liquor or not, this thing was enough to make any one angry. It was a shame to force the stuff on people who did not want it. But what could he do? He had risen rapidly and had held the present position only a year. It had looked when the promotion came as if he would be able to send for that dearest girl in England who had waited so long for him, but if he moved in this matter, Rogers, the would-be toddy shop proprietor, who did not like him any too well, at best, would know who was at the bottom of it, and—well, Rogers had influence. It was probable, too, that the government would resent his interference in a matter that did not concern him. Yet it did concern him; it was his business to see that order was maintained and crime prevented, and certainly a toddy shop would interfere with this duty. He might lose his official head. Hang it all! Why had the girl spoken to him? Tbe fact remained, however, that she had appealed to him and he must do something.

All night he struggled with temptation, and it was with a sense of humiliation that he realized in the morning how nearly he had allowed selfish interest to gain the day. He wrote at once to Ma Sein for more information, which she readily supplied, and a day later he dispatched a letter to the proper official and waited for the order for his decapitation. Strange to say, it seemed very slow in coming. In due time—wonder of wonders—he received an answer to his let-

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

Woman Suffrage Movement Will Be Helped By the War Says Mrs. Philip Snowden, the Noted Suffragist

"I cannot bring myself to believe that uffrage will not be granted to women hen this dreadful war is over," said irs. Philip Snowden, the noted suffrage nd prohibition speaker, as she sat in ne editorial office of THE UNION SIGNAL nd in response to questions, told er views on various subjects. The remark was made in reply to the query, What effect do you believe the war will ave on the 'votes for women' movement?"

For a brief moment Mrs. Snowden was ilent. She is a woman whose every utterance inspires confidence—it has back f it so much of serious thought, it is so arefully worded, with such fine discrimination as to language, what she leaves nsaid being often as eloquent as the erse, forceful expression of her opinions.

"I can speak only of Great Britain, for am not sufficiently familiar with conditions in other countries to speak of them. So far as my own country is concerned cannot bring myself to believe that uffrage will not be granted after the war is over, for two reasons, first (the esser reason), the government by men lone has ended in such a horrible catastrophe that even anti-suffragists are disposed to make an experiment in a joint government. To put it into the blunt words of a gentleman with whom I was alking not long ago, 'Women could do o worse, and they might do better.' A reat many anti-suffrage men have been onverted by this very line of argument. The other reason is that the women have hown themselves so equal to the situation, so loyal, so willing to serve; and has been so generally appreciated ince the war began that they are such n important part of the community and hat even the war could not be conducted without their help, that the opposition on he ground that women are not necessary for public service, is silenced. Women are really carrying on all the ctivities and interests of our common ife while the men are away at war. I an only hope that this same line of hought will characterize the men of the ther countries of Europe. I was speaking the other day with a German woman who said that of her own knowledge she new the Kaiser would grant a democratic form of government to Germany after the war was over. Of course, any movement in that direction will greatly help the woman suffrage cause.

"The great danger in Great Britain, and the one that may stand in the way of women securing the vote, is that a arge number of women are entering all kinds of trades and professions that they have never before entered, and many of them are accepting lower wages than were previously given to the men. When the war is over the number of women over the men will be immensely increased—there are now one and a quarter million more females than males and after the war there will be even a larger proportion—and it matters not how positively the employers may promise to turn the women out and put men in their places, it will, I believe, not be done, because they can get women for so much less. This may embitter the men, and they may confuse this condition with the suffrage question, which will, of course, prejudice them against suffrage and injure our cause. That is one reason why we should insist upon women receiving the same pay as the men."

When asked whether she agreed with the advocates of peace who are declaring that one of the most potent factors in securing international peace will be the granting to the women of the nations of Europe and every other country suffrage rights, with deep feeling she replied:

"I believe it would do a great deal to bring about international peace, because when women have served a political apprenticeship, when they realize for what selfish reasons their sons are being sacrificed, I am quite sure they will not consent to war. When they understand that commercialism and not lofty principles are at the foundation of war, that rather war is due to the political ambition of a few (and they will understand that as they become educated in the meaning of politics) they will throw the weight of their influence against war."

Enthusiastic as Mrs. Snowden is on the suffrage question one cannot but feel that it is really secondary to the liquor question in her deepest heart's interest. While very guarded and conservative in making claims as to what women will do with their vote, she said with an earnestness of manner that carried conviction,

Mrs. Philip Snowden

"I think the liquor question is the one question on which we are entitled to prophesy with some degree of confidence as to what women will do with the vote. We can prophesy along that line because of what has already happened. The women have used the franchise not only to lessen the power of drink but to eliminate the traffic entirely in certain places."

It may not be known to all our readers that Mrs. Snowden, who is the wife of a member of the British Parliament, was led to enter suffrage work through her interest in temperance. Quoting her own words, "I began speaking after my husband returned to Parliament in 1905. I began in temperance work. Temperance is a great question in England. There is much drunkenness among women of all classes. I soon discovered that you might go on appealing to women to stop drinking, but with temptation all around them and their homes miserable, there was not much chance to make them sober. So the thing was to get the law to reduce the licenses It was then I discovered the powerlessness of women. They had no votes. Men did not seem to mind whether they sent supporters of the liquor traffic to Parliament or not. I was led by that work to see the necessity of enfranchising women so they might bring their power to bear on this condition and it was then that I began suffrage work."

Apparently Mrs. Snowden has little sympathy with that class of suffrage speakers who studiously refrain from mentioning the liquor evil and the woman voter's attitude toward it.

"I feel that on great matters of principle such as peace and temperance, suffragists have nothing to lose by making themselves clearly understood," said the popular advocate of the feminist movement. "We shall have the opposition of the liquor interests and the militarists whatever we say or leave unsaid. It is because I believe we women stand for purity of living and international righteousness that I am such an enthusiastic supporter of suffrage. If I am simply to urge the question as a matter of theoretical justice, it would be quite enough to do it once a year.

"Let me say that in England the liquor interests are solidly opposed to woman suffrage and that in itself, to my mind, is one of the strongest arguments in favor of it."

Mrs. Snowden expressed regret that Great Britain had not kept pace with Russia and France in anti-alcohol legislation and spoke optimistically of the outlook for the prohibition cause in Europe.

It is interesting to know that the Honorable Philip Snowden, the husband of Mrs. Snowden, and a member of the House of Commons, is one of the members of the committee appointed by Hon. Lloyd George to control the sale of liquor in the munitions area. He was also appointed a member of the committee to discuss with the brewers the price for which they would be willing to sell their interests to the government. To check the evils of drinking in the munitions area attractions are being provided that will counteract the drink habit and draw men away from public houses. Rooms are maintained where temperance drinks are sold and places where men can rest and have a good time when away from work.

Mrs. Snowden expressed unbounded enthusiasm for the work being done by the women of America along suffrage and prohibition lines:

"The last word along organization lines in suffrage campaigns has been said in America. Their methods are wonderful," she exclaimed. "It is the voting women of the United States who have given me courage to go on, because there are more women and better women in public life in the United States than anywhere else. Just think what they have done in the western states—the enthusiasm with which they have attacked the vice question and the way in which they are eliminating the liquor traffic. When I came away from New Zealand quite depressed, I said to my husband. 'So long as America is on the face of the earth I will continue to address two hundred meetings a year, but if it had not been for the American women and their spirit and what they are doing I think I should have reduced that number greatly.'

"I want to see the shuttle weaving across the ocean between the American and British women more and more and I believe each country will gain something from the other for at the bottom we stand for the same ideals. The English women have made wonderful strides in internationalism in the last ten years. When I first came to America they had no concern for their American sisters. Not long ago a friend of mine in England, a highly cultured woman, after listening to Jane Addams, said, 'I do not wonder you like going to America. I have never been able to make up my mind to go because I so hate the lynchings that they have there but now I know why it is that America is so great. It is because of the American women like Frances Willard, Jane Addams, Carrie Chapman Catt and others.'"

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

HO! FOR THE HARVEST HOME!

MRS. ROSS HAYES-SCHACHNER

The "harvest home" month is upon us and with this knowledge there comes a mingled feeling of rejoicing and wonder—rejoicing that throughout another year we have been permitted to labor in the "all white" cause of prohibition and humanity; wonder as to how well our young people have labored and how well others have labored in their behalf. We soon shall know, but whatever the results may be, we realize fully that our valiant bands of total abstaining young people "with heart to heart united in prayer, in work, in song" have accomplished much good which can not be recorded in plain figures. There may be disappointments where results seem hardly commensurate with the efforts put forth—even as there will be disappointments where the heavy rains have destroyed the crops — but no conscientious effort is ever fully lost and so the Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will contribute its quota of recruits to the holy war of prohibition and to the victories of the year.

In these beautiful days of early fall, however, there is abundant opportunity for renewed activity. Crowd the time before the National Convention in Seattle full of endeavor in behalf of our Branch —gain those new members which you perhaps have failed to secure earlier in the year. There is yet a chance to help in the 5,000 gain.

Just as all eyes were turned vacationward not many weeks ago, so many eyes are now turned schoolward. As school duties are resumed by many of you young people, do not, pray, allow attendant interests to crowd out your work through the Y. P. B. for God and Home and Every Land. The first school days should offer splendid opportunities for membership campaigns. In colleges, and even in high schools, you will be "rushed" by various societies, and the like. Why not do a little "rushing" for the Young People's Branch? You know it's worth it, and the days when "rushing" for our cause is necessary, are upon us. Remember that the enlistment of others should be not a duty but a blessed privilege, for by so doing it means that you are helping to sound the call which will end in a Saloonless Nation and a Stainless Flag.

Let us labor as never before during these next few weeks that we may gain a running start for the year that lies just ahead.

A FINAL PLEA FOR THE Y. P. B. MISSIONARY FUND

MRS. FANNIE R. DANSER, Skaneateles, N. Y., Promoter

While the other half of the world is at war, it devolves upon us of the United States to do more than our share, if need be, to uphold the hands of our World's white ribbon missionaries. A special appeal has come to us from Miss Norville of South America in behalf of the young people of that country. Miss Norville wishes two thousand copies of the "Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard," translated and printed in Spanish for distribution in the schools and colleges. Can not we North American Y. P. B.'s gave an offering for this cause? To any Y. P. B. willing to do this I will send, free of charge, a little evening entertainment in pantomime entitled, "The Evolution of the American Woman." Particulars as to staging and costumes will be sent with it. Any contribution for this offering to the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund please forward to me, and it will be credited to you and the state from which it comes. Below are a few extracts from Miss Norville's letter:

"I do need so much more literature than I have for the advancement of our cause. If the good people could only realize the absolute dearth of all helps down here, I am sure they would at least send me some of the old literature that they throw away. All that I had for this great big continent during the past year, would not be considered sufficient for a campaign in a little town of one thousand inhabitants in the United States. The people are not sufficiently interested to give of their means during these hard times, and I am compelled to ask those who really have the work at heart, to help me to get a few leaflets put into Spanish. The brief "Sketch of Frances Willard" would be most useful down here. I could easily put two thousand copies, if I only had them in Spanish, into the hands of dear young women in the universities and colleges, who are just beginning to awaken, and who realize that they may have a part in the glorious upward movement of the world. These young women would eagerly devour such reading and profit by it. The expense for translating and printing it in Spanish would be forty-seven dollars. The young people of the States could not possibly put their money where it is more needed, and I confidently believe, where it would bring forth a more abundant harvest."

Are you ready to help?

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAM

SEPTEMBER

I.

HARVEST HOME MEETING

Song—"Bringing in the Sheaves."

Roll Call—"What I Predict for Our Branch This Year."

Song—No. 4.

Yearly Reports of officers, superintendents and committees.

Song—No. 15.

Election of Officers.

Announce the winning "train" on the "Trip to Seattle" and hold a jubilee celebration.

II.

Study and social meeting.

Y. P. B.'S OF NEW YORK HOLD "SURPASSING" CONVENTION AT FULTON

The following report of the New York Y. P. B. convention is taken from the Y. P. B. convention number of Woman's Temperance Work:

The officers of the state Y. P. B. Federation are: President, Mr. Mason A. Stratton; vice-president, Miss Mildred O. Moody; corresponding secretary, Miss Helen G. H. Estelle; recording secretary, Mr. Clarence Jarvis; treasurer, Miss Mary E. Tozer.

Impressions of the Convention from Friends

For eleven years I have attended state conventions of the Senior L. T. L. and its successor, the Young People's Branch. Many of these have been splendid occasions, but the one at Fulton surpassed them all in attendance, enthusiasm, and consecration to the cause. This record-breaking convention was due in some measure to the increased growth of prohibition sentiment, but more largely to the noble leadership and hard work of those at the head of this great organization in the Empire State.

Personally, it gave me renewed courage for the coming battles and a determination never to lay my arms down till victory comes in the form of nation-wide prohibition, with an administration pledged to its enforcement.—Neal Dow Cranmer, Secretary Intercollegiate Prohibition Association.

With each succeeding Y. P. B. convention my faith in the young people of our great Empire State is strengthened. Before the Fulton convention I believed in them, but now my confidence in their sincerity of purpose and devotion to the cause is absolute. Our work appeals to the highest and best that is in them, and the way in which the young people are responding to that appeal is almost beyond belief. The sessions of the convention were no less faithfully attended by the delegates than are the sessions of our W. C. T. U. conventions. I came home more than ever convinced that the work among the young men and women of our communities does pay and that through the Young People's Branch we are helping to make more truly Christian "the homes that are to be."—(Mrs.) Lyversa M. DeSilva, President of Onondaga County W. C. T. U.

Convention Side-Lights

The diamond medal was won by Miss Laura Alvers of Niagara county. Miss Alvers is only fourteen years old.

An interesting feature of the convention was the use of the new Y. P. B. song book, a neat folder containing thirty-two songs, most of which were written by Branch members. The convention orchestra composed mostly of delegates from Penn Yan, with Ross Osborne as accompanist and Henry Goutremont as musical director, added much to the spirit of the convention.

The registration list showed more than 300 names. The voting delegates numbered 168. Seventeen county Y. P. B secretaries were in attendance, two county W. C. T. U. presidents and one organizer for the state W. C. T. U.

The presence of Miss Helen I. Root state secretary of the L. T. L. Branch did much to stimulate interest in her work. The young people are more determined than ever to have a part in the training of the children.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

The financial report rendered by Miss Tozer showed a balance on hand of $344.20.

The demonstration of publications prepared by Miss Maud Pratt resulted in eighteen subscriptions to the state paper and an equal number for THE UNION SIGNAL. At the request of Mrs. Boole this demonstration will be repeated at the state W. C. T. U. convention at Ithaca.

The Pageant

Among the many features of the convention was the street parade over a half mile long headed by the citizens' band of Fulton. Following the band was a float bearing children and a large banner—"Make Fulton Safe for Us." Behind the float marched fifty children dressed as Young Campaigners and carrying banners. Next in line were two boys carrying a large banner—"A Saloonless Nation by 1920"—followed by eighteen young women representing the eighteen prohibition states. Then came the president of the Fulton Y. P. B. dressed in black to represent New York state, followed by Mrs. Maude Perkins, state Y. P. B. Secretary, and her husband and the state officers of the Federation with the banner —"New York for Prohibition." The state superintendents and prize winning Branches followed the Federation officers. The next section represented the Franchise department with yellow aprons and umbrellas of yellow and white with the words, "Votes for Women," prominently displayed. Next appeared a second band composed of a number of musicians of the convention. The county and local delegations then were seen, each under its own banner. The Prohibition party of Oswego county, the W. C. T. U., representatives of the churches and other organizations carried American flags and occupied conspicuous places.

NEWS FROM THE STATES

Pennsylvania is to have a Standard of Excellence. Every county which attains this standard will be given a banner of red with the word "banner" on it, to be hung on a standard for use during the Lancaster state convention. Should a county the following year not attain the standard, the banner will then be hung at half mast and returned at the close of the convention. The standard is based on the letters in the word "BANNER."

B—Bigger in membership.
A—Annual convention or institute held.
N—New Branches or Legions organized.
N—New graduates of Study Course.
E—Engaging in five lines of department work.
R—Reports on time (corresponding secretary's report).

The Livingston Branch of the Province (R. I.) W. C. T. U. was entertained at the summer home of Mrs. S. R. Harriman at Touisset, Saturday afternoon, August 10. Various sports and a basket luncheon were enjoyed and a hearty vote of thanks accorded the hostess. Mrs. G. F. Rooke, Miss Mary Williamson, Dr. Jessie Mays and Mrs. W. L. Barnes were guests of the occasion.

The following testimonials concerning the work of Miss Carrie Etta Bond, state secretary for Maryland, are clipped from the state W. C. T. U. paper: "Every one who saw the demonstration given by Miss Bond at our school enjoyed it to the full. The address given at the church was indeed excellent." "As our state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Bond is doing the kind of work before the schools to bring forth such commendation as the foregoing. The principal of the Royal Oak school said her demonstration and talk were the best ever given by a W. C. T. U. speaker in her school."

PRIZE WINNING SONG AT THE NEW YORK Y. P. B. CONVENTION

WILLIAM REID, Whitestone, L. I.

Tune: Tipperary

Demon rum's been labeled years with Uncle Sam's big seal,
Spreading wide wild woe, despite humanity's appeal,
But the day is quickly coming when no one can say
That this life-wrecking poison now is "Made in U. S. A."

Chorus

In the great fight for prohibition
Our banner you'll see;
In the great fight for prohibition
Watch the New York Y. P. B.
Come forth, show your colors,
Join ranks, haste the day;
It's a grand, grand fight for "Prohibition
Made in U. S. A."

From the mountain counties, from the Hudson Valley grand
From Long Island towns and beaches with their silv'ry sand,
Old New York is gathering thousands, working for the day
They'll see a pure white nation this—our own old U. S. A.

Uncle Sam will note the push of New York Y. P. B.
Scratch his head, and then he'll say—"This thing convinces me;
Since you all agree I'm wrong, from this time on I'll say
The liquor traffic no more may stay within our U. S. A."

EIGHTEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

APPEAL OF SOUTH DAKOTA SECRETARY SHOULD BE ECHOED BY OTHER SECRETARIES

"My whole heart is in the work for the young people," writes the South Dakota Y. P. B. secretary in the state W. C. T. U. paper, "and I am desperately in earnest or I would at this time be in Illinois engaged in the work of my profession rather than striving with a small appropriation to make my time and talents count for the young people of our state.

"Shortly before our Mitchell convention there came to me two letters, one offering me a position as instructor of English and literature in a prominent seminary near Chicago, the other from our state president asking if I would accept the work of Y. P. B. secretary for South Dakota, should the women of the convention desire to place their trust in me. Through my pleasant associations with the white ribboners of South Dakota I have grown to love you all. Won't you stand by me and lend me your best assistance, that another year may find a Y. P. B. in every community?"

L. T. L. AND Y. P. B. WORK IN ARIZONA

MISS OSCEOLA M. PENDLETON

As the "baby state" seems to be a negative quantity in the reports of the work of the young people, I feel that it is time something is said to make it a positive quantity, for such it certainly is becoming. Arizona had never had a state temperance organization of the young people until last April. We are hoping and praying that by this time next year the state will be traversed by a beautiful network of Loyal Temperance Legions and Young People's Branches.

During the months of June and July four Loyal Temperance Legions and four Young People's Branches were organized with a combined membership of between four and five hundred. One point that has impressed me particularly is the comparative equality of boy and girl members. Phoenix, Buckeye, Liberty and Palo Verde each has a splendid L. T. L. and Y. P. B. with earnest enthusiasm a predominating feature. In fact, the interest shown everywhere is most encouraging and prophetic of good results in the future.

GEORGIA BARACA ASSOCIATION FOR TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND PROHIBITION

At a recent meeting of the Georgia Baracas and Philatheas the following was adopted as a part of the report of the Resolutions Committee:

"Resolved, That we endorse the principle of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation, and that in our meetings for the year, we will make a systematic study of the religious and scientific reasons for the principle."

ACTIVITIES OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE HERE AND THERE

Mrs. J. L. Guthrie, Y. P. B. organizer of Ohio, reports a splendid Branch of eighteen members organized at Covington, O., with Miss Lucille Gump as president; a Branch at Bryan with Mr. C. R. Warren, president; at Montpelier with Miss Irene Stouder, president, and at Pioneer with Rev. Guy W. Chapin, president. These Branches Mrs. Guthrie pronounces "three as fine Y. P. B.'s as are to be found anywhere."

The first evening of the teachers' institute at New Castle, Ky., the Y. P. B. and L. T. L. held an open session in the M. E. church. The program consisted of demonstrations, music and readings. A good offering was received from the large and appreciative audience in attendance. The Y. P. B., which has a membership of twelve regular and two honorary members, has taken up the study course.

Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., addressed the young ladies of Van Buren, Indiana, who were the guests of the W. C. T. U. at an evening meeting at the home of Mrs. J. J. Howard. After the introduction by Mrs. L. L. Dimit, president of the Van Buren union, Mrs. Vayhinger spoke to the young women, taking as her subject, "To Thyself be True."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, September 9, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, left Evanston Saturday evening, September 4, for the East, where she is to attend and address the state W. C. T. U. conventions of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and West Virginia.

"IT'S A SHORT, SHORT WAY TO THE CONVENTION"

That is, it will seem a short, short way, if you go on the White Ribbon Special and have the company of W. C. T. U. workers from other states. In fact there will not be half as much time in the "short" journey from Chicago to Seattle as every white ribboner will desire to hold conferences, exchange suggestions and plans and make and renew acquaintances. Be one of the happy company that leaves the North Western station on the evening of Tuesday, October 5, 1915. Do not delay writing to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, in regard to reservation, and read pages 2, 10 and 11.

South Carolina and New Jersey are to lead the way in the fall elections on the prohibition and suffrage questions. On September 14, South Carolina expects to vote out all the saloons, breweries and distilleries in her state, and on October 19, New Jersey hopes to enfranchise her women. The friends of both movements are praying for and awaiting with confidence the result of these early elections.

ORGANIZED FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

The most popular form of patriotic effort at the present time is training in a citizen soldiery camp. To these centers have flocked the mayors of great cities, ex-presidents, and prominent politicians. Without in the slightest degree discounting the value of this movement we insist that there are now in existence national defense organizations which are of as great value in safeguarding the nation as are these volunteer military camps.

The occasion for this new fashion of summer recreation is the bare possibility that these men may be needed to defend the United States from a foreign enemy. A little over a year ago the mere suggestion of such a necessity would have been laughed at; a year or two hence the preparations may seem equally unnecessary.

Meanwhile there is always present with us in times of peace as well as in times of war an enemy which constantly menaces our health and our prosperity; that attacks us from within; poisons the wells of our patriotism; disrupts our homes; demoralizes our young men and women, and works destruction to our economic life. Is not the existence of such a foe in our midst sufficient cause for the maintenance of organizations to train and equip patriots to protect us, and is it visionary and impractical to say that every Loyal Temperance Legion, every Young People's Branch and their parent organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is such a "center of civic virtue" in an even broader sense than any military camp.

We are living in a time when no one is ashamed to carry his patriotism on his coat-sleeve, and when to affirm one's love for and loyalty to one's country does not lay one open to the charge of sentimentalism. What an opportunity this condition of affairs gives us to enlist in the Young People's Branch the enthusiastic young patriots who are burning to express their emotion in some definite, practical form. In this national defense organization their worthy impulses for the protection of their native land, may be conserved. There they may be trained to wield effectively the sword of truth against the falsehoods of the liquor interests, to puncture their sophistries with the bayonet of logic, and to meet and defeat the Great Destroyer of humanity.

The men who are training in the emergency camps may never be called upon to exercise their newly acquired military skill against a foreign enemy. God grant they never may! The youth who joins our association for national defense becomes a soldier in a war which must be fought to a victorious finish, first in the nation, and after that, in the whole wide world.

THE WOMAN'S DAY OFF—WHAT IT SUGGESTS

"A woman's place is in the home?" We venture to predict that it will be some time before the business men of New York city will flippantly toss off that argument when the question of suffrage for women is presented to them—the "votes for women" organization of the empire state came too perilously near giving to them a demonstration of what a day with women remaining in the shelter of their homes would mean to the activities of the bustling metropolis.

Picture, if you can, a strike, twenty-four hours long, of the women in every line of business in a large city. Imagine the vacant seats at the telephone exchanges; the silent typewriters in the offices; the clerkless counters and the customerless aisles in the department stores; the waiterless restaurants; the hotel beds that would go unmade; the linen that would remain unlaundered, the food uncooked, the garments unstitched and countless forms of labor that would cease if for only one day the women should refuse to engage in their tasks in the business world.

The threatened strike, it is reported, was called off because the employers told the suffrage committee that it would tie up public utilities, close the stores and demoralize affairs in general.

However, the agitation on the importance of women in the industrial world which has grown out of the suggestion of the suffrage committee has been well worth while for not only was the picture presented most impressive to the opponents of suffrage; it was equally so to those who confidently expect that the enfranchised women will help mightily in overcoming the crying evils of our national life. Face to face with this vast army of business women in the United States—many now having the ballot and thousands more soon to possess it—one realizes that the effort of securing suffrage is but a small part of the work to be done.

Wherever women have failed to use their newly acquired rights to down vicious measures, or to drive into political oblivion objectionable candidates for office, it has been due to lack of interest and information on the real issues involved. Our work for suffrage will not be in any sense finished until every woman voter, prospective or actual, has a realization of the responsibility and obligation of her sex in civic matters, and is possessed of the exalted purpose which actuated Frances E. Willard, to make her city, state and nation a homelike place for the rearing of little children. The W. C. T. U. is peculiarly well adapted to inspire in the souls of the busy women of the world this civic idealism and to impart to them an enthusiasm for our great reforms.

With the opening of the fall work why not definitely plan for evening meetings of the local union, with programs dealing with the duties of the women voters and their responsibility, to which shall be invited the school teachers, the women doctors and lawyers, and the rank and file of business women of the community. Enlisting these women in our work will be definitely enriching their lives, for as a great student has said, no one ever discovers herself until she has identified herself with universal ends, and is helping in a great movement for the uplift of humanity.

JOHN BARLEYCORN UNPOPULAR WITH COLLEGE EDITORS

Only a few years ago a member of Congress lamented that John Barleycorn had a strong hold upon our colleges and universities, and urged that his grip must be broken at any cost, for to the colleges the prohibition cause must look for its leaders.

That a radical change of sentiment in college circles has taken place since that statement was made is indicated by the action of the Associated College Newspaper Publishers, at its recent annual convention, in barring from the columns of the leading college newspapers of this country and Canada all liquor advertising and naming expulsion from the organization as punishment for violation of the rule.

It would help the temperance movement in our educational institutions if the editors and publishers of these college journals were to receive a shower of congratulation and commendation from the alumni and friends of the schools represented, accompanied by the expressed hope that this action may be the precursor of further anti-liquor agitation and legislation by the student body.

NEW ZEALAND W. C. T. U. LEADS IN CIVIC REFORMS

On the occasion of the recent visit in Evanston of Mrs. Philip Snowden, Miss Gordon entertained the distinguished suffragist and her hostesses, Mrs. Joseph Leech, and daughter, Miss Caroline Leech, of Kentucky, at a five o'clock tea at Rest Cottage. In relating some of her interesting experiences in the recent prohibition campaign in New Zealand, Mrs. Snowden paid high tribute to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union leaders of that country. "They have enacted splendid legislation in New Zealand," said Mrs. Snowden. "I had ample demonstration that the leading spirits among the women over there in every kind of good work are members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. They really secured suffrage for the women and they are back of the new and commendable legislation."

Mrs. Snowden explained that of the members of parliament a sufficient number have pledged themselves to change the law requiring a three-fifths majority on all votes on the liquor question to a 55 per cent majority. If this change is made, when the liquor question is voted on again in three years, she believes the temperance forces will undoubtedly win.

"I was greatly interested in the neat and attractive appearance of the polling booths, which are usually in school buildings," said Mrs. Snowden. "I visited a great many of them on election day and would frequently see whole school yards filled with baby carriages, while families—father, mother and often babies that had to be carried in arms—would go to the polls. I was in a house on election day at Wellington, and before the father of the family left for business, said: 'Now, girls, don't you forget to go down in good time and have your vote registered.'"

Mrs. Snowden was a speaker at the recent National Education Association meeting at San Francisco, and also addressed the Chautauqua (N. Y.) assembly. During the month of October she is to speak on suffrage every day in the state of New York.

AMONG THE STATES

Idaho

Since July 1 it has been impossible for travelers on trains in Idaho to obtain liquor in dining and buffet cars. The ban on liquor was ordered by the stringent liquor law passed by the Idaho legislature. In complying with the law the Oregon Short Line railroad extended the dry zone to include its lines in Utah. Already several counties in Idaho are dry, although the state-wide liquor prohibition act does not take effect until the first of next year. This makes the Oregon Short Line's entire system dry so far as serving liquor on its trains is concerned.

South Dakota

The supreme court of South Dakota has just handed down two decisions in liquor cases, which are far reaching and sweeping. The first decision holds that the legislature has a right to pass a law saying that no one can sell or give liquor to an intoxicated person, and that doing so is a criminal offense. The second decision holds that commissioners in a city that is governed by a commission form of government have a right to revoke a license upon complaint that a liquor dealer is selling liquor to a minor or a blacklisted person, and that it is not necessary for the commission first to have judicial determination as to whether the law was violated as the license is a permit and not a contract.

Ohio

The Ohio "Temperance Union," organized by the liquor interests of the state to fight state-wide prohibition, has been refused permission to distribute literature under that name on the state fair grounds at Columbus.

Wyoming

Total abstinence from cigarets or tobacco in any form is a condition imposed upon the high school cadets of the state of Wyoming who wish to wear the uniform which the state has provided for the use of student cadets. These uniforms were purchased from an appropriation of $2,100 made by the last legislature. Adjutant-General George M. Sliney in issuing his first order to cadets, began his message with these words, "Certificate must be made by cadet and parent or guardian through the superintendent of schools that the cadet benefiting through the above appropriation is a total abstainer from any and all forms of tobacco."

TEMPERANCE AS APPLIED CHRISTIANITY

REV. J. H. CROOKER in The Congregationalist

The Modern Verdict. The discoveries in scientific laboratories, the experiences of life insurance companies, the observations of captains of great industries, the conclusions of medical science, the tests in athletic sports and military operations, the investigation of child life and school records, the statistics of crime, pauperism and insanity and the testimonies of admirals and generals respecting the skill and endurance of sailors and soldiers may be briefly summarized in the following general statements of temperance aphorisms:

I. The Misfortunes of the Drinker.

1. The drinking athlete is the first to miss the ball:
   he is the last to reach the goal.
2. The man who drinks is the first to fall sick:
   he is the last to get well.
3. The drinking workman is the first to have an accident:
   he is the last to be promoted.
4. The child of the drinker is the first to leave school:
   he is the last to win a prize.
5. The drinker is the first to be discharged:
   he is the last to be employed.

II. The Menace of the Saloon.

1. It harms every noble and helpful institution:
   it helps every evil influence on earth.
2. It is the constant friend of the undertaker:
   it is the greatest enemy of women and children.
3. It makes its patrons poorer men and less desirable citizens:
   it increases taxes, crimes and deaths.
4. It opposes wise and promotes bad legislation:
   it is a constant law-breaker.
5. It opens the door to disease and disgrace:
   it closes the door of opportunity.

III. The Conclusion of the Whole Matter.

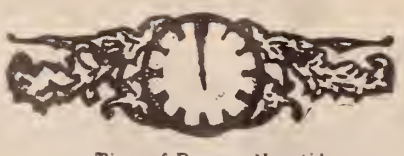
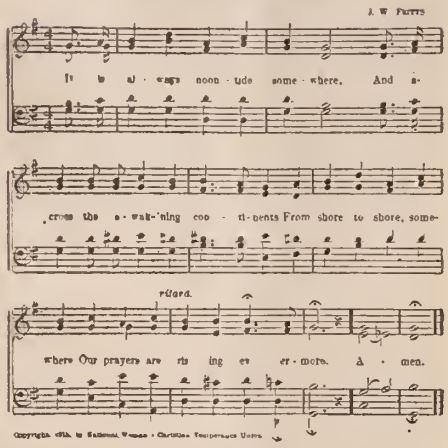
1. Alcohol is a destroyer of life; brain and muscle; reason and conscience:
   it is neither a real stimulant, a true food, nor a safe medicine.
2. The liquor business means production that destroys:
   and consumption that degrades; a waste of life both ways.
3. The maker and seller of liquor is frequently enriched:
   but the user of liquor is always deceived.
4. The use of liquor sometimes gives a transient pleasure:
   in the end it brings debt, disease, dishonor.
5. Drinking shortens the way to jail, asylum and poorhouse:
   it lengthens the way to a noble life and a happy home.

Things Young People Can Do

1. Practice and preach and promote total abstinence.
2. Keep informed: know what science discovers about alcohol, what experience teaches about drinkers and what reformers are doing to destroy this curse.
3. Co-operate with every agency that fosters sobriety and fights the saloon.
4. Vote as you pray: for temperance and against the liquor trade in every form.



Time of Prayer—Noontide



OUR CAMPAIGN STATES

At the sacred noontide hour, will not all white ribboners of the nation remember in prayer not only our campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition but also the workers in the campaign states that in large measure they may be endued with wisdom, strength and power by our Divine leader in our righteous war. The following states vote this fall:

South Carolina, September 14

Ohio, November 2.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. HANNAH TUFT GUILD, Sedalia, Mo., a former National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, and a local and state worker of prominence.

MRS. EVA MUNSON SMITH, Springfield, Ill., one of the pioneer W. C. T. U. workers of Illinois, and well known in the white ribbon sisterhood through her book, "Women in Sacred Song," and her attendance at many National Conventions.

MRS. LIDA STONE, Hansen, Nebr., a loyal member of the W. C. T. U. since the organization of the Hansen union in 1885. At different times she filled all the local offices and served for several years as county treasurer.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Headquarters for Convention, Lincoln Hotel

Convention Meeting Place, Plymouth Congregational Church

CHAIRMEN OF THE COMMITTEES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION

General Chairman, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt.

Convener, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns.

Treasurer, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg.

HOSPITALITY, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St.

FINANCE, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, 1056 Sullivan St.

PUBLICITY, Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PULPIT SUPPLY, Mrs. S. L. W. Clark, 1701 Kilbourne St.

RECEPTION AT TRAINS, Mrs. Della Somers, 4318 7th, N. E.

DECORATIONS, Mrs. E. S. Wood, 1521 24th Ave.

RECEPTIONS, Mrs. Frances McLaughlin, 1806 16th Ave.

PRINTING, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell, 401 W. Dravus.

BANNERS, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring.

CHECK ROOM, Mrs. M. E. Good, 6218 27th N. E.

REST ROOM, Mrs. Sue N. Wright, 2359 N. 61st.

PAGES AND USHERS, Mrs. Mary M. Wade, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PLATFORM, Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough, 1113 18th Ave. N.

INFORMATION, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana, 9738 61st Ave. S.

MUSIC, Mrs. Mina Cornish, 3825 Whitman.

PLEASURE TRIPS, Mrs. Emma Morrison, 338 18th N.

POSTOFFICE, Mrs. Lillie Manney, 6502 10th Ave., N. W.

A GREAT MAN'S TRIBUTE TO THE W. C. T. U.

In the passing of Hon. John D. Long, former Secretary of the Navy, the temperance cause and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union loses a valuable friend. On the occasion of the World's W. C. T. U. Convention, held in Boston in 1906, he acted as toastmaster at a banquet, and paid the following gracious tribute to our organization:

"The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is not a fad, but one of the agencies of that universal reform in society and politics which was never under a more vigorous impulse than it is today. Of the evils of intemperance, its terrible results in poverty, crime, suffering, demoralization and corruption of all sorts, not only have the members of this union a lively sense, but in their sentiment in that respect they represent the best and deepest convictions, not of a mere sect or special organization, but of all good men and women the world over, and to that extent certainly they deserve the cordial co-operation of all who love their fellow men."

CONVENTION NOTES

ATTENTION DELEGATES!

The chairman of the Hospitality committee is Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St., Seattle. State secretaries should promptly report to her the names of all delegates and alternates elected by state conventions.

Each delegate should notify Mrs. Mayfield whether or not she is expecting to attend the convention, and in the event she does not intend to go should supply the name of her alternate. All delegates who do not intend to go should so inform their alternates, who in turn should send notice immediately to Mrs. Mayfield as to whether or not they will be present, when they expect to arrive in Seattle, the route by which they will come, and their choice of room-mates.

Prompt attention to this matter and giving the desired information immediately to Mrs. Mayfield will greatly aid the local committee.

As usual, entertainment of all delegates includes lodging and breakfast.

National Membership Prizes

Please keep in mind the National membership prizes for the largest pro rata gain in membership. For a state, 25 subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL; for a district, 20 subscriptions; for a county, 15 subscriptions; for a local union, 10 subscriptions.

The only one of these prizes which can be awarded on the basis of statistics in the possession of the General Officers at National Headquarters is the state prize. District, county and local treasurers must have their figures ready to produce at the Convention at Seattle.

NATIONAL BANNERS

All persons holding prize banners, either National or departmental, should see to it that they are at the National Convention in Seattle, and that they are placed in the hands of the proper persons. The National W. C. T. U. does not have charge of any banners except those which go from National Headquarters. If you send a banner by express do not address it to any of the officers, National or state, but send, express charges prepaid, direct to the Convention Church. Address, "Plymouth Church, Sixth and University, Seattle, Wash. For National Convention." The chairman of the committee on Banners, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring Sts., Seattle, should be notified when the banner is started.

In addition to the address giving the destination of the box, a card should be fastened to the banner, or nailed on the box, telling where the banner came from, whose property it is, and to whom it shall be addressed in returning it.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Castle Rock, Utah, on Main Line of Denver & Rio Grande Railway

Double Track, Eagle River Canyon, Eastern Slope of Continental Divide as Seen from the Denver & Rio Grande

In our transportation articles we have placed the emphasis upon the plans in connection with the White Ribbon Special which leaves the North Western Station, Chicago, Tuesday, October 5, at 7:15, simply for the reason that in order to have a special train we must have a party of 125, and because we know that just as many as can conveniently do so will want to make the trip. Chicago is centrally located as regards all eastern territory and much of the southern territory. Tickets can be purchased via Chicago as cheaply and the trip be made as quickly as in any other way. Arrangements can be made to board the official train en route, but reservations must be made in advance. Stops will be made at main stations, but we must be notified in order that accommodations may be reserved.

We are aware that many will not find it convenient to take the official train and have designated the Northern Pacific as the official route for northern delegates, simply that it may be a help to those who are uncertain as to which route to take. Delegates in territory west of Salt Lake City will be entitled to rates of a fare and one-third on the certificate plan. These certificates are to be signed by the chairman of Transportation at Seattle. Be sure to secure certificates when tickets are purchased, otherwise the reduced rates will not be available for the return trip.

All who are going to San Francisco should purchase tickets to San Francisco and so take advantage of special rates. They should read "By way of Seattle."

Arrangements will be made for the entire party to stop at a single hotel in San Francisco and the same plan will be adopted at Los Angeles and San Diego. It will probably not be possible to keep the party together after San Francisco. We append a list of expenses in connection with side trips which some of our party may want to take.

Remember that a trip to San Diego is included in round-trip tickets if application is made when ticket is purchased. The other side trips can be decided upon at any time before they are taken.

Royal Gorge, Colo., on Denver & Rio Grande Route.

Trip to Mt. Tamalpais and Muir Woods, from San Francisco, about 20 miles, $2.90.

Yosemite National Park; round trip ticket from Merced to Yosemite, $18.50; Fridays and Saturdays a special rate of $14.50 is made, good for fifteen days. Hotel rates, American plan, $4 to $5 per day; 2 in a room, $3.50 to $4; a special rate will be given for ten or more in a party; camp rates, $2.50 per day. Send to O. W. Lehmer, G. M., Yosemite Valley Railroad, Merced, California, for literature.

Railroad fare Williams to Grand Canyon, $7.50. El Tovar hotel rates, $4 to $6 per day, $6 to $8 per day with bath; Bright Angel Camp, American plan, $1.25 and $1.50 per day.

Round trip to Grand View Point, 13 miles by auto, $4 per capita; Hermit Rim Road trip, 8 miles, $4; Hopi Point, 2 miles, $1 and $1.50; Mohave Point, $2.

Cripple Creek trip, regular rate, $3; ten or more on one ticket, $2.50. If it is desired to combine this trip with an auto trip to the Garden of the Gods, for a party of four or more, $1 additional will be charged; if less than four, $1.50.

Seeing Denver Company will give a discount of 10% if we have 15 or more in a party.

ELLA A. BOOLE,
Chairman Transportation.
KATHARINE K. ADAMS,
Secretary.

ON ELECTION DAY

MRS. MARY P. SAYERS, Martin, Mich.

(Continued from Last Week)

The year had rolled swiftly by and Goodwin's prediction had come true. The women had won their fight and Bragman's home town had gone dry. Simultaneously with this event Bragman had gone on the road as salesman for the wholesale liquor house in which he had invested his money previous to the estrangement between himself and his wife. Mrs. Bragman had offered her own money as capital for the establishment of an honest business, but her offer had been merely the occasion for a sneering rebuff. He had told her that it was all her fault that he himself had been driven to selling liquor.

In the six months that had come and gone since he had left home, Bragman had never for one day relaxed his efforts in working against the prohibition element. Both his home town and that in which the wholesale house was located were lake-shore towns of an old and prosperous state. Being in a district where the liquor business spread with frightful rapidity, vice also flourished, and poverty, sometimes almost abject, followed without delay in its wake. No man with Bragman's natural intelligence could travel day after day through liquor towns and fail to see the misery caused by the business he himself was engaged in. His excuse for participation in it was always that the license money would offset any expense which the country might incur as the result of poverty which the sale of liquor might cause.

Although Bragman was a diligent salesman, as time went on he was compelled to admit that the liquor business was falling off, and though reluctant to do so, that this condition of affairs was to be attributed to the labors of the temperance people. He began to invest his dividends in what he thought to be gilt-edged mining stock. He bought some real estate and in various ways prepared himself for whichever turn the "tide" might take.

It was within a month of election, nearly two years from the time when Bragman's home town went dry, that the mining company went to the wall. At the same time the liquor house failed to pay a dividend. Suddenly, Bragman found himself short of ready funds and the stress of the times was such that no money-lender was willing to advance a penny on liquor stock. At the coming election, the question of no-license was again to be considered. It was his only hope. If a few of the near-by towns should once more be voted wet, it would solve his financial problem.

One day when Bragman had but just returned from a most disappointing trip, he was surprised to have both Goodwin and Smith walk into the comfortably appointed office of the wholesale liquor house. He felt glum, morose and not at all inclined to make himself agreeable, yet it was like a glimpse of the old home days to see these men, and in spite of himself he welcomed them cordially.

"Do you remember Will Briggs?" asked Goodwin, when all three had taken seats and the civilities had been exchanged.

"Briggs—Briggs—" mused Bragman for a moment. Then his face lighted. "Why, sure thing! I remember Will. Good fellow, too! Why, what about him?"

"They say he's pretty badly off. Smith and I came over to look him up. Thought may—"

"Why, he doesn't live here!" Bragman broke in.

"Yes," replied Smith, "he moved here when our town went dry. Worst thing he could have done."

"Pshaw!" scoffed Bragman. "He might have been sick there just the same! Pooh! That's fanatic stuff!"

"But you see he wouldn't have been out of work so long before hand. That helped to make him sick," answered Goodwin.

"You don't mean to tell me that there are no men out of work at home?" queried Bragman, with a sharp look at Goodwin.

"I mean to tell you that never in a good many years has our little town been so prosperous—and that, too, in the face of one of the tightest times for cash I have known in some time. While many are not working full time, there is no one who is not doing enough to make a living. Men who never put a penny in the bank before are making deposits right along. Their debts are all paid and they are saving a little all the while. Parkman told me yesterday that the county-house never had so few inmates. This isn't bosh—it's cold fact! The grocery men are doing a cash business. I'll tell you one thing, Jim—our town mustn't go wet next month."

"It will, though!" asserted Bragman confidently.

"Jim," said Smith, as they both rose to go after Goodwin had mentioned the time of day, "Jim, you can't afford to have our town go wet!"

"Pah! I like that! Every man for himself! That's my motto!"

"What about Jimmie?" asked Goodwin.

"Jimmie! Let Jimmie do as his father's done and not make a beast of himself. Let him exercise a little self-control! But pshaw, boys—what about Briggs? I'd like to help him." He put his hand in his pocket and then drew it back with a frown as he realized that it contained only a few loose coins. He drew out his check-book from his inner coat pocket and then he remembered that he had no bank balance. As there had been no dividend, all surplus had been used for personal purposes. There was one thing sure, however, and that was that he wouldn't give himself away to these temperance fanatics. "Give me Will's address and I'll see what can be done for him," he said to Goodwin as they all started for the street.

Money was Bragman's one aim, yet in matters of charity he was never parsimonious, and when the three men parted down street, he went to hunt up Briggs. He found that Smith and Goodwin had done all that was necessary for the present, and he hoped that something would turn up soon to bring in a little money so that he could do his share next time. Some small rents would be coming in, but according to his mode of living, it would be scarcely more than enough for himself. He could sacrifice some, but —well, there must be some way out for Briggs. Before the following night he had visited several saloons trying to start a fund. Most of the saloon-keepers gave something—but it was very little. Times were tight and they must look out for their own families. Bragman's own house gave a small amount. Feeling disgusted with the little he could raise, in desperation he went to see the county superintendent of the poor. That worthy gentleman informed him that the funds available for distribution were entirely inadequate for the number of applicants. "Whisky's killing this town, Bragman!" he said, as a parting declaration.

Bragman went back to his hotel. A good many of his theories were beginning to fall to pieces. He had always believed that the revenue from liquor more than over-balanced the amount of money required for the poor of any town. He had never believed that a dry town could prosper, and Briggs himself had owned to the fact that whisky was what had brought him to such a plight. On his way to the hotel, as he glanced at a billboard he saw a notice reading: "Mrs. Elizabeth Bragman Will Speak on 'Temperance' at the Town-hall Tomorrow Evening."

Of course Bragman had known that his wife was doing lecture work, but to see her name in large type on a billboard gave him a sort of shock after all. That night he could not sleep. He was almost jealous of Betty's popularity in the temperance cause. Yet he knew well enough that Betty cared nothing for publicity. He almost decided to go and hear what the little woman had to say anyway. But the die was cast, the liquor men were urging him to "stand pat," and he must abide by his own decision. Just the same, the next night found him seated in the third row of seats back near the door, listening to one of the ablest arguments for prohibition he had ever heard. Mrs. Bragman completed her discourse with an appeal to the people to cast their votes for a dry town. "Friends," she said, "we can talk and talk, we can agitate and agitate—and without agitation there can be no victory—but unless we vote as we talk, our cause can never be triumphant. Don't be afraid that if your town goes dry you cannot survive the reconstruction period. It has been proved beyond a doubt that legitimate business is sure to follow the downfall of liquor, bringing with it permanent prosperity. The responsibility for the coming election lies equally with us all. If we women would add our votes to those of our brothers who vote for no-license, our victory would be a landslide. In demanding the franchise we tacitly agreed to use it. Yet there are women today who are casting aside their privilege as they would a tired-of toy when their pleasure in it has vanished. I'm not setting myself up as a judge, for not until the significance of my privilege was brought home to me by the danger to my own child, did I realize just what my privilege entailed. Mothers —wives—sisters and daughters, give us your votes and make the town dry. Help also to make this land beautiful not only in name but in reality. Let us wipe from its record—the stain of debauchery I was about to say. Ah, my friends, I cannot do that. But I can say, let us make its future record clean. Arouse from your lethargy and vote for prohibition!

"And you, my brothers—think not because God has not given you the temptation to drink that it is to your credit! Without temptation there is no victory—there is no reward where the soul has had no scourge! Your weaker brother calls to you."

The speaker stepped close to the front, and in a voice which trembled with emotion finished: "The brother who is tempted! Unwrap from about you your Pharisaical cloak of assumed righteousness and help him! Your brother calls! Don't forget him on election day!" She sat down amid prolonged applause.

Jim Bragman's brain was torn with a mad desire to take Betty in his arms. But he would not. Rather would he fight his battle alone; then he would be strong. All night he wrestled—and on election day, in spite of the protests of his liquor friends, he helped to win for prohibition one of the greatest victories that ever swept the country.

THE TEMPERANCE SCRAP-BOOK IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

"Look! What do you think of this?" said an up-to-date Sunday school teacher to me recently, displaying a temperance scrap-book just completed by her class of twelve-year-old girls.

"It is beautiful," I replied, admiring the soft grey covering tied with white ribbon. The Sunday school artist had gracefully intertwined the white bow with the white lettering. "Oh, that every boy and girl in the United States would make one," I continued, as I turned the pages, and saw pictures of Miss Willard, Mrs. Stevens, the Countess of Carlisle, Neal Dow and other state and national temperance leaders. There were pictures of Rest Cottage and the white-ribbon-encircled globe; scenes depicting the results of the drink habit; hopeful pictures showing that prohibition has power to make glad. There were temperance leaflets, stories, songs, poems, maps, clippings about the observance of Temperance Sundays in that school, quotations from Miss Gordon, General Miles, Captain Hobson, from M. Bark of Russia and Lloyd George of England. Much material was collected, then came the helpful discussions as to what should go in, and why.

In the regular graded course for the quarter this class had a series of four temperance lessons on choice, self-control, the value of organization and the progress of prohibition. The scrap-book as tangible hand or home work, supplemental to memory class work cannot fail to prove beneficial. Why not encourage the children in your class, in your home, to make temperance scrap-books? They awaken and hold interest in the temperance cause, first hand knowledge is thereby acquired about the harm in the use of intoxicants, and methods of individuals and states looking to the extermination of the traffic. "Know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

MA SEIN'S VICTORY

(Continued from Page Four)

ter thanking him for the information and saying that Rogers' activities in the direction of the toddy shop had been checked. As the days went on and nothing further came of the matter, Mr. Everett dared hold up his official head and think once more of the girl in England. When a week or so later Rogers was suddenly and mysteriously removed from the district, he was sure of a speedy reunion with her and resolved that when she came on to marry him she would find him a total abstainer.

Ma Sein saw the growing relief on her father's face as the days went by without the toddy shop's materializing, and when subsequently Rogers disappeared, his satisfaction was patent to every one. How he ever discovered that she had had a share in bringing all this about she never knew, but was sure that he had as he began to show more of his old kindness of manner to her. One day he astonished her beyond measure by asking her when her school in Rangoon reopened. She told him in a voice that trembled between fear and hope.

"That is good," he said. "Ma Ket goes to Rangoon in time and can look after you on your journey. Where are those papers on tobacco which you brought home? I haven't seen them yet; if they are as good as those on alcohol they are worth reading."

PENNSYLVANIA POINTERS

Special Correspondence

If this is not an interesting letter the fault does not lie with the place in which it was written—a spot in the woods where thousands of green leaves dance and rustle and keep the too ardent glances of the sun from the writing desk (the knee) of the writer. We are in one of the oldest and most conservative parts of Pennsylvania where the former generation was essentially German, having entered in the seventeenth century, bringing their religion, customs and language with them. Less than a century ago the public school drove in the wedge of the English language. Progress, however, like young Lochinvar, "stays not for break nor stops for stone": Behold today a farmer who has installed a gasoline engine—to help him in his work? No. To help the women folk with the washing. Then think of this—a real old fashioned church picnic at which a speaker presents the subject of Votes for Women!

Perhaps Pennsylvania can claim an older and more experienced state superintendent than can any other part of Mother National's great domain. Mrs. E. W. Gormley was one of the original Crusaders. As soon as the Pennsylvania Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized she was appointed superintendent of Prisons and Jail work and has faithfully filled the office ever since.

Montgomery county W. C. T. U., early in August provided a rare treat for the visitors to Willow Grove Park by inviting Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard to deliver an address between the concerts. A large audience listened to this splendid speaker and many words of commendation were heard on all sides. Mrs. Shepard told of the many reforms sought by women and of the many denials by the lawmakers of these requests until equal suffrage came into effect when conditions were changed and laws for the betterment of women and children were quickly passed. The women gave the Pennsylvania slogan:

"Pennsylvania slew—Pennsylvania sure;
Pennsylvania will go dry when politics are pure;
When? when? when? Just take note,
Pennsylvania will go dry when women get the vote."

Mrs. Shepard applauded the cry enthusiastically. After the meeting, as white ribboners were distributing suffrage literature, a gentleman said, "What's this —for or against suffrage—because if it's against, I do not want it." Mrs. Shepard was well received wherever she spoke, and no doubt many votes will be cast on November 2 for woman suffrage because of her spirited addresses. Mrs. Katharine Middleton, the sweet singer of Montgomery county, assisted by two friends, gave a number of popular temperance songs which were greatly appreciated.

Mrs. Mary V. Stringer, president of Philadelphia county W. C. T. U., has returned from a trip to the Pacific coast, where she visited the two expositions and Yellowstone Park.

Great sympathy is felt for the vice-president of Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. in her great bereavement. Dr. Lewis Adam Parsels was well known throughout this and neighboring states.

NEW W. C. T. U. PINS

Reproductions of the Popular Scotch Pins, in two styles

SCARF OR STICK PIN
BROOCH PIN

10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Vermont, Barton, Sept. 8-10.
Maine, Skowhegan, Sept. 14-16.
Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Nebraska, Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
Ohio, Dayton, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Mt. Pleasant, Sept. 29-30.
Connecticut, New Haven, Sept. 30-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Mississippi, Belzoni, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

HERE AND THERE

Mrs. Josephine Williams of Grandview, Washington, was among the callers recently welcomed at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage. Mrs. Williams, her husband and two children have been enjoying an automobile tour of some 6,500 miles.

The annual convention of the Lancaster county (Neb.) W. C. T U. was held recently at the state farm at Lincoln. To the University Place union, the home union of Mrs. M. M. Claflin, president of the Nebraska W. C. T. U., was awarded a picture of Frances E. Willard for the largest gain in new members during the year. Mrs. Claflin, in an inspiring address, urged the work of circulating petitions for the election on statewide prohibition. Mrs. Allie Jackson was re-elected president.

The women of Peniel (Texas) W. C. T. U. think their boys are comparatively safe in Hunt county, but they are fortifying them through education to live in the large cities where liquor is sold. The department of Medal Contests is a favorite with this union.

Fort Worth (Tex.) Central union held a matrons' contest at which Mrs. Claudia Hightower, state corresponding secretary, won a silver medal. Another contest will be given soon. The department is increasing in popularity. Fort Worth union belongs to the Missionary Federation which is much interested in securing better picture shows. White ribboners are on the board of censorship.

What Frances E. Willard Said
(Price 50 cents)
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said
(Price 75 cents)
Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

These books should be in every White Ribboner's library. Why not order them at once.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUB. HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

GLEANINGS FROM DELAWARE'S RECORD OF PROGRESS

Special Correspondence

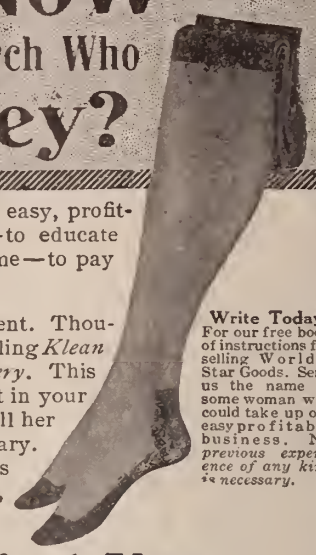
Temperance day at Camden Camp, Del., was an occasion of unusual interest. Kent county white ribboners, under the leadership of Mrs. Ella D. Cordray, county president, and Mrs. Evelyn M. Killen, recording secretary, offered an inspiring program, one of the best ever given on the grounds. The attendance was large and the day was in every respect a success. A roll call at the morning session was responded to by verses from various unions. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Curtiss, president of the Harrington union. Noontide prayer was voiced by Mrs. Emma E. Caulk, a former state W. C. T. U. president. Almost every child on the ground was enlisted for the children's hour. As they marched, each carrying a flag, they sang, "Jesus Loves the Little Children of the World." Many choice recitations and songs were rendered by the little people who afterwards assembled in the auditorium. The Y. P. B. also rendered an excellent program, orations being given by Prof. W. E. Cope of West Chester, Pa., and by Gilbert J. Meredith, Jr., a recent graduate from Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa. Later there were addresses by Rev. Russell Paynter and Prof. A. R. Spaid. Mrs. Addie B. Parsels gave a fine address at the morning session.

The L. T. L. of Bridgeville, seventy-five strong, attended a picnic tendered the legion by the local union, of which Mrs. Lena Messick, state W. C. T. U. president, is a member. Before proceeding to the grove the children marched through the main streets of the town, the legioners carrying alternately in the procession "Liquor Traffic Must Go" pennants and American flags. The program consisted of songs, salute, motto and rally cry. The smaller children sang, "We're Coming" and the largest boys gave a temperance yell. Four little girls with their dolls impersonated mothers of foreign lands singing lullabies to their babies. The older girls gave a very beautiful hoop drill, at the close of which Rev. Howard Davis, pastor of the Bridgeville church, spoke most entertainingly to the children.

Miss Mary F. W. Anderson, Y. P. B. field secretary, spent two weeks in Delaware in the spring. She organized a Branch at Eastlake, Wilmington, and revived many others. She spoke in three schools and received cordial invitations from others. Mrs. Lillie V. Atkins, state Y. P. B. secretary for Delaware, has visited several branches, organizing at Zion in May. A fine demonstration is being planned for the state convention at Harrington in October. The Y. P. B. demonstration in connection with the temperance day celebration at Milton Camp was very successful. The Zion Y. P. B., the youngest of Sussex county, with its thirty members, took an enthusiastic part in the exercises.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 76 East Harrison, CHICAGO

DO YOU KNOW
A Woman in Your Church Who Needs Money?



A woman who would be glad of an easy, profitable occupation to support herself—to educate her children—to buy or furnish a home—to pay off a mortgage—to dress better?

Call her attention to this advertisement. Thousands of women are making money selling Klean Knit Underwear and Fibre Silk Hosiery. This is her opportunity. We want an agent in your home town. She can give part or all her time. No previous experience necessary. No need to travel. Two women agents in California began in their home town, and each made over Write Today For our free book of instructions for selling World's Star Goods. Send us the name of some woman who could take up our easy profitable business. No previous experience of any kind is necessary.

$3,000 the First Year

One woman with a child to support sold $210 in one week. Another agent made $3027 in eight months. Another makes over $4000 every year.

Our goods are easy to sell. With our line, you can supply the entire household, men, women and children. Klean Knit Underwear and Fibre Silk Hosiery have a reputation for superior wearing quality, superior fit and superior style everywhere. Eighteen years of manufacturing quality goods have made us the largest concern in the world selling knit goods direct to the consumer. Agents wanted in every town. It is a refined and pleasant business. Write today for our free catalog and full details. We protect agents in territory and make prompt delivery.

World's Star Knitting Company
Department 607 Bay City, Michigan

The Sussex county union, Miss Lillian Cade, county president, has had a busy summer. The white ribboners of Milton W. C. T. U. presented a rousing program on Temperance day at Milton Camp. A medal contest, an exercise, "Uncle Sam on Patent Medicines," a Y. P. B. demonstration, addresses by Rev. N. O. Gibson, Rev. Chas. A. Behringer and Rev. Z. H. Webster were features much enjoyed.

The county institute at Rehoboth Beach, with the county president as chairman and Mrs. Lena Messick, state president, as a speaker, was an inspiring meeting. Mrs. Messick urged the members to renewed activity and mentioned the charts which were offered to the union making the largest gain in membership by convention time. Milton union was in the lead at that time with Bridgeville second and Nassau and Rehoboth third. One thousand temperance fans were sold to the different unions for use in the churches. At the evening session Miss Christine I. Tinling, National lecturer, was the speaker. At present "effort" meetings are popular in Sussex county, the present effort being for recruits. Each member is expected to secure a new member. The plan is working admirably.

The W. C. T. U. of Bridgeville entered both a temperance "water wagon" and a suffrage float in the Independence Day parade, the suffrage float being awarded first prize.

Now is the Time

to renew THE YOUNG CRUSADER subscriptions for your public school teachers—nine months' subscriptions for twenty cents.

Kindly send in the subscriptions at once so that the September number may reach the teachers at the very beginning of the school year, that they may count upon its help as they plan the year's work.

A GLIMPSE OF THE NEBRASKA W. C. T. U. FIELD

MRS. L. S. COREY

The Nebraska W. C. T. U. convention will be held at Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.

Petitions submitting the question of state-wide prohibition in 1916 have been sent out from W. C. T. U. headquarters to all parts of the state, and filled petitions are being received daily. The present outlook seems to indicate our state president's request that 100,000 names be sent to her will be granted "before snow flies."

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, has just closed a very successful two weeks' engagement in Nebraska. The coming of Mrs. Boole, notwithstanding the many storms and delay in train service, which interfered somewhat with her meetings, has been of untold value. Her gracious personality charmed our women and won for her friends wherever she went, while her logical and forceful arguments pleased and converted her audiences. We are glad she could come to us. She has been an inspiration.

The Epworth Assembly just closed at Lincoln might easily have passed for a gigantic temperance convention, so continuously did temperance and dry campaign sentiment dominate the program. The state W. C. T. U., instead of holding daily meetings, co-operated with the assembly management to make the "temperance hour" a greater success than it would have been had two temperance meetings been held at the same time. Clarence True Wilson, temperance secretary for the Methodist Episcopal Church, had charge of the hour until the last two days, when the state W. C. T. U. furnished the program. The meetings were held each day in the large auditorium, where a great company were reached. Mrs. Ella A. Boole spoke to a fine appreciative audience.

THE ROAD OF A THOUSAND WONDERS

SOUTHERN PACIFIC, SHASTA ROUTE

The traveler approaching California from Seattle and Tacoma via Portland and the "Shasta Route" will see the Oregon metropolis, the Columbia river, Mount Rainier, Mount Hood, Mount St. Helens and Mount Pitt, and will follow the famous Willamette, Umpqua and Rogue river valleys and their picturesque scenery, passing through Salem, the capital, Albany, Eugene, Roseburg, Grant's Pass, Medford, amidst fertile farms and miles of orchards, to Ashland, thence over the grandly picturesque and awe-inspiring Siskiyous into the great and fertile Sacramento valley.

The trains of the Southern Pacific leave Portland from the Union Station, crossing the Willamette river where ocean steamers and ships are seen at their docks, and pass on through the beautiful Willamette valley, which lies between the Cascade mountains on the east and the coast range on the west.

At New Era, snow-capped Mount Hood may still be seen fifty-five miles to the east.

The Home of the "Oregon" Rose

Directly opposite and east of the station at Brooks is the rose garden, where Father Schorner produced the blood-red "Oregon" rose.

Salem, fifty-three miles from Portland, population 15,000, is the state capital and second city in size in Oregon. It is a modern city, settled in 1834 by missionaries who here founded Willamette University (Methodist). The first building erected was an Indian school. The handsome State Capitol and Supreme Court buildings will be seen to the right as the train approaches the station. Mount Jefferson's snow-capped crest is frequently visible sixty-five miles east.

Approaching Albany, the Willamette river again appears to the west. The great Pacific Highway from Portland to San Francisco will frequently be noticed. It parallels the track much of the way between Portland and Ashland.

Albany, on the Willamette river, eighty miles from Portland, population 5,000, is the commercial center of a large farming district, with Southern Pacific lines and branches in all directions. It is in every way modern with substantial business houses, good hotels, many manufacturing industries and pretty residences.

Eugene, 124 miles from Portland, is the home of the University of Oregon. The university buildings and campus are seen south of town directly west of the track. Several Southern Pacific branch lines center at Eugene.

Roseburg, 199 miles from Portland, population 5,000, the county seat of Douglas county, is a railroad division point on the "Shasta Route." It is an attractive, up-to-date city, beautifully situated on a bend of the Umpqua river, in the midst of orchards, berry farms and dairy ranches, encircled by rounded and timbered hills. The land in this section is unusually fertile, its fruits and vegetables being among the first in the markets.

Just beyond Riddle the "Shasta Route" enters Cow Creek Canyon and for thirty-five miles passes through especially beautiful scenery. Few mountain passes are more wild or charming and, when stop is made, the silence of the forested wilderness is broken only by the music of the stream in its rocky bed below.

Wolf Creek, nestling below in its little valley, is approached by a fine horseshoe curve leading into Wolf Creek Canyon.

Approaching Grants Pass, a sweeping view is had across the valley of the Rogue river, with the coast range rising beyond. Grants Pass, 297 miles from Portland, is picturesquely situated on the Rogue river, which, after passing through a narrow gorge from the south, turns westward to the ocean. U. S. Grant, when a lieutenant in charge of Oregon troops in the early fifties, engaged the Indians in the pass to the south through which the line now runs, the pass and the town taking their names from this event.

Oregon's Famous Fruit Shipping Center

Leaving Grants Pass, the "Shasta Route" turns into the Rogue River Canyon. At Medford, 329 miles from Portland, the valley is twelve miles wide. Medford is the fruit shipping center of southern Oregon. Its prize apples and pears have brought record prices in eastern and foreign markets. On the brow of a hill to the east the Sacred Heart hospital is noticeable, one of the most modernly equipped hospitals in the northwest.

Ashland, 342 miles from Portland, a railroad division point on the "Shasta Route" is a charming mountain resort town with many natural attractions, including mineral springs with waters equaling, if not excelling, in curative properties those of Carlsbad and other famous health resorts of Europe. Ashland is situated in the foothills of the Siskiyous, at the base of Mount Ashland, 8,000 feet, and its twin peak, Mount Wagner, 7,000 feet. The outlook to the northeast across the valley rimmed by mountains affords a magnificent view.

Leaving Ashland, the "Shasta Route" commences its climb of the Siskiyous, 4,125 feet above sea-level. The distance from Ashland is seventeen miles and in the trip of one hour we mount 2,252 feet. The remarkable engineering work in overcoming the grades includes horseshoe curves, with the track winding around the mountain and visible at one point in three places, each below the other. In Cougar Gulch one tunnel crosses directly above another tunnel. The ascent affords successive views from car window and observation end that will be long remembered. Such a one is the view between Wall Creek and Siskiyou, looking to the northeast far down into and across the Rogue river valley, with the Cascades forming a barrier in the distance.

After emerging from the tunnel at the summit the first view is had of Mount Shasta, snow-clad and towering in the distance, to the east, above intervening hills. Pilot Knob, a prominent landmark, also appears to the east.

Mount Shasta Visible for Four Hours from Car Windows

The Oregon-California state line is crossed between the stations of Colestin and Cole. The track winds down the southern slope, passing through Cottonwood Canyon and Valley, and descending 1,972 feet in nineteen miles to Hornbrook. Ahead rises Mount Shasta's snow-covered crest, 14,380 feet above sea-level, to remain in sight four hours or more. As we approach nearer and wind around its base it appears now on one side of the train, now on the other, affording the nearest car-window view of any California mountain of such magnitude or beauty. The small peak appearing in the vicinity of Mount Shasta will be noticeable. This is Muir's Peak, or locally Black Butte. While its altitude is but 6,250 feet, it deceptively appears at times to equal Mount Shasta's height.

At Sisson, 337 miles to San Francisco, the Sacramento river has its source on the southwest slope of Mount Shasta, and flows 350 miles south to Suisun Bay.

From Sisson the run is six miles to Mott on a plateau above the Sacramento river canyon. The river at Shasta Springs is a thousand feet below, and at Cantara the line makes a notable loop, turning into the beautiful timbered and rugged canyon, closely following the river and crossing it eighteen times in thirty-two miles.

Shasta Springs, 325 miles to San Francisco, is noted for its natural sparkling mineral water and charming location. All trains stop here, giving passengers ample time to drink at the rustic spring in the station grounds. The hotel and cottages are on the pine-timbered plateau above and east of the station. Electric cars take visitors up the pine-covered side of the canyon past rivulets and cascades. From the top a magnificent view is had of the canyon below. The plateau is also reached by a delightful mountain path that zigzags the canyon's side, across the little torrent that tumbles to the river.

Leaving Shasta Springs, and after crossing the river, immediately on the east is beautiful Mossbrae Falls, foaming through curtains of moss and delicate ferns. A mile or two apart, down the canyon on either side, are summer resort places with little mountain hotels, cottages or log cabins and tents for camping. Shasta Retreat is close on the west of the track, a favorite place in a picturesque nook of the canyon. Upper Soda Springs, one of the oldest resorts, has its cottages on a bend of the river to the east.

Castle Crags, a Wonderful Rock Formation

As we wind down the canyon from Dunsmuir (322 miles to San Francisco) and approach Castle Crag station a glimpse is had from the observation end of snow-capped Shasta, looking wonderfully near. Directly to the west the gray splintered granite spires of Castle Crags, towering 2,084 feet from their base, appear like some medieval castle. Castle Crag Hotel and cottages are among the pines on the east, in a rolling meadow, where Soda Creek joins the river.

We pass Castle Rock, with mineral springs, and cross Crystal Creek, flowing from the west. At Castella, Crag View cottages are in the pines across the river. At Sims, six miles below, we cross Hazel Creek. Fine stretches of river appear on the east at Lamoine. Between Pitt and Kennet the Pitt River, flowing from the northeast joins the Sacramento River. Five miles above, the McCloud empties into the Pitt. Kennet is the center of the copper industry of the region. Between Coram and Keswick, as the canyon widens, the jagged lava-rock bed of the river below is remarkable.

Redding (258 miles to San Francisco) is situated at the head of the great Sacramento Valley. Mount Lassen, 10,577 feet, lies forty-seven miles to the east in the Sierra Nevada Range. On May 30, 1914, it renewed its volcanic activity, believed to have last occurred two hundred years ago. At varying intervals it has since been in eruption, emitting large volumes of smoke with ashes and rock, and has excited much interest.

As we run south to Anderson, thence seven miles to Cottonwood, a plain view is had of Mount Lassen's Peak against the skyline, and when in eruption passengers have the novel experience of a car-window view of an active volcano.

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

REMEMBER

Kindly bear in mind that the books close this year SEPTEMBER 25, and all subscriptions to be credited to our various workers must reach us on or before this date. Again let us emphasize the fact that credits will be given on all subscriptions in our hands by September 25. The morning of September 26 begins a new W. C. T. U. year.

EIGHTY-ONE YEARS YOUNG

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:

Have wanted to thank you for the package of UNION SIGNALS you sent me. I looked them over, selected articles, turned down the leaf, and then took them to the union. Passed them around and asked each one to read the article I had marked. All said the articles were fine and then I told them that no union could prosper without the SIGNAL and that I had taken it since it was first published and could not do without it. I emphasized the fact that the subscription was only $1.00 per year and told the union if it would subscribe I would send it to three ministers.

At the meeting last Friday I asked how many took THE UNION SIGNAL and only three hands were raised. I again told them that it was the best paper they could subscribe for and that it contained news —not only from our country, but the world over. I talked very plainly and tried to show them how much they missed.

I enclose money for one hundred copies of the Fair number and shall attend and give these out personally.

I also enclose one subscription.

I am almost eighty-one years old, but I want to do all the good I can.

God bless THE UNION SIGNAL.

(Signed) MRS. J. A. CLEMMER,
Monroe, Wisconsin.

"BOOSTING" FOR THE OFFICIAL PAPERS

"With much pleasure I herewith enclose subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL to the amount of $7.00, and for The Young Crusader to the amount of $3.25. I secured these at the Grant county convention and am glad to 'boost' a little this way for these splendid papers."

STATE PRESIDENT OF WISCONSIN.

We are hoping Mrs. Lawson will visit the remaining seventy counties in Wisconsin and continue to "boost." She knows the value of these papers.

CIRCULATION MANAGER.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG--COUNT ON ME?
50,000 sold. Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. $1.00 per dozen.
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

The Road of a Thousand Wonders

(Continued from Page Fifteen)

Red Bluff (223 miles to San Francisco) is at the head of navigation on the Sacramento River.

Tehama, ten miles south, junction of Southern Pacific lines running down the valley, one east, the other west of the Sacramento River, as we turn down the west line through Richfield and Corning the characteristic oaks of the valley are here seen—white oaks on the bottom lands and black oaks on the uplands or plains. Through Kirkwood, five miles, to Orland, nine miles, Southern Pacific branch line runs ten miles east to Hamilton on west bank of Sacramento River.

Orland is the site of a Government irrigation project, storing the waters of Stony Creek, which rises southwest in the Coast Range. Passing Greenwood, Germantown and Lyman to Willows, on southern edge of which we cross the Central Canal, irrigating over sixty thousand acres. A Southern Pacific branch line runs west seventeen miles to Fruto, a foothill orchard region.

Through Norman, Delavan and Maxwell to Williams. Foliage of trees marking the Sacramento river, ten miles to the east. To the west appear the blue peaks of the Coast Range rising seven thousand to eight thousand feet. The Marysville or Sutter Buttes, a miniature mountain range of irregular formation, are seen fifteen miles to the east. Arbuckle, eleven miles south, is in a deciduous fruit and grape section. Through Dunnigan, Zamora and Yolo to Woodland, twenty-seven miles, we pass farms, orchards and vineyards. At Yolo, on Cache Creek, are immense natural groves of fine black oaks.

A Southern Pacific branch line extends northeast from Woodland, crossing the Sacramento river at Knights Landing, through Yuba City, crossing the Feather river, to Marysville—on the east side line from Tehama.

From Woodland, nine miles south, we reach Davis (later described), the junction point with Southern Pacific main line to the east, through Sacramento, via the picturesque "Ogden Route;" and west to Oakland and San Francisco, seventy-six miles.

Leaving Tehama via the east side line we cross the Sacramento River and pass Los Molinos, Spanish for "The Mills." Note the fine oaks, the orchards and fields of velvety alfalfa. From Vina is seen Camel Mound, of peculiar shape, in the Sierras to the east. Vina is headquarters of the old Stanford Ranch of 60,000 acres, now the property of and conducted by Stanford University at Palo Alto.

Here is the giant Hooker Oak, the largest in the world, nine feet in diameter, with a top that spreads 150 feet.

We pass through Chico and a number of prosperous agricultural towns. Native walnuts thrive here. At Live Oak, the Sutter Buttes, or Marysville Buttes, rising nineteen hundred feet above the plain to the west, are unique landmarks.

Marysville, 149 miles to San Francisco, is one of the oldest valley towns, with a stirring history. In early days it was a distributing point for the gold mines in the region lying to the east in the Sierras. It is situated at the confluence of the Yuba and Feather rivers.

Just beyond Wheatland the line crosses the Bear River and passes through a hop region, immense fields being seen in the bottom lands. Approaching Lincoln are extensive clay beds and pottery manufactories. Ten miles beyond is Roseville.

Roseville contains the railroad shops of the Southern Pacific, the largest in the west, and is point of junction with the Ogden Route east, across the Sierra Nevadas and Great Salt Lake; and west through Sacramento, to Oakland and San Francisco, 107 miles. To the east lie the foothills of the Sierras. Passing through Antelope, Walgera, Benali, and Elvas to Sacramento. Between Benali and Elvas we cross the American River which joins the Sacramento River just north of Sacramento.

Sacramento, 89 miles to San Francisco, the capital of California and the largest inland city of the state, is situated on the east bank of the Sacramento River, one of the great waterways of the United States, navigable to Red Bluff, 134 miles north.

The Capitol building is an imposing structure situated in a beautiful park of thirty-five acres. Davis, thirteen miles west, is the junction with Southern Pacific's west side Sacramento Valley line, which has been described. At Davis is situated the State Agricultural College farm, conducted by the University of California. Leaving Davis we pass the valley towns of Dixon, Batavia, Elmira and Suisun-Fairfield.

From Suisun-Fairfield the line crosses the Suisun marshes and skirts Suisun Bay to Benicia on Carquinez Straits. Beyond the Contra Costa hills on the opposite shore to the south will be seen Mount Diablo, elevation 3,896 feet.

At Benicia Southern Pacific trains cross Carquinez Straits, one mile in width, to Port Costa on the powerful ferry-boat Contra Costa or the Solano, the largest train ferries in the world, capable of carrying twenty passenger coaches and four locomotives. The trains run on and off the great boats on aprons which rise and lower with the tide.

From Port Costa the railroad skirts the shore of San Francisco Bay to Oakland Pier, twenty-seven miles, affording, as we proceed, sweeping views across the broad waters to the Marin County Hills beyond, with the bold outline of Mount Tamalpais over all. A short distance from Vallejo and against the shore is seen Mare Island, site of the United States Navy-yard, which may be visited by ferry from North Vallejo Wharf. Proceeding, we pass through Selby, Rodeo, Pinole, Giant, Richmond, Stege and Albany to Berkeley, the seat of the University of California, thence on through Oakland to Oakland Pier.

At Oakland Pier passengers for San Francisco are transferred to splendid ferry steamers of the Southern Pacific, the most complete and extensive ferry system in the world. The trip of four miles to San Francisco is made in eighteen minutes, landing at the great Ferry Station at foot of Market Street. With blue sky above, bluer waters beneath, the ferry trip provides a picturesque approach to the most unique and interesting city in America. Midway, on the right, is Yerba Buena Island, where will be seen the United States Naval Training Station. Alcatraz Island, with its lighthouse and military prison, and resembling an immense dreadnaught, lies farther to the right and directly facing the three-mile entrance to Golden Gate, one mile in width. Beyond Alcatraz and forming the southern horn of Golden Gate, are seen the Marin County hills with Mount Tamalpais high in the background. Angel Island, with quarantine station and hospital, lies against the far northern shore. The bay extends in two arms thirty miles north and thirty-five miles south of San Francisco, and is from five to fifteen miles in width.

Send to W. G. Neimyer, Gen. Agt., Southern Pacific Co., 55 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago, for the descriptive pamphlets, "Wayside Notes," "Shasta Route," "Ogden Route," "Sunset Route."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI EVANSTON, ILL., SEPTEMBER 16, 1915 No. 38

OUR CONVENTION CITY

Photo by Curtis & Miller

SEE PAGE TWO

VIEW OF CHERRY STREET, SEATTLE

PROHIBITION WINS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

VOTE THREE TO ONE

OUR NATIONAL CONVENTION CITY

SEATTLE'S INTERESTING INDUSTRIES

With its wonderful harbor which provides easy communication with all the world and the inexpensive water power from the mountain streams Seattle has a double advantage over many cities, and a wonderful basis for the many industries which it successfully carries on.

Here is the home of the Northwest's fishing industry. It is estimated that fully 100,000 tons of fisheries products are handled here each season, says See America First Magazine, in a 1914 number which is devoted largely to a story of the growth and development of Seattle. Canned salmon, the principal fish product, is one of the staple foods of the world and the Alaska salmon as well as that of the nearer fisheries goes through Seattle. The same is true of the great shellfish pack of Puget Sound, the oysters, clams and shrimps.

Seattle's first industry was a sawmill, and though more than a half century has passed since the establishment of that pioneer venture timber products are still the city's greatest source of wealth. Just across the Sound from where the famed Seattle Totem Pole stands as a reminder of the city's beginning, the largest lumber mills in the world—the huge Port Blakeley plant—puff with gigantic activity. As the shipping port of the state which stands first in lumber output, Seattle, for an untold number of years, will continue to look to the forests for many millions of dollars annually.

The grain and flour industry is another which means millions of dollars for Seattle. As the city of export for the Orient and for Alaska, the importance of Seattle in this respect is developing by leaps and bounds annually. Coal, canned goods, flour, laths and numerous other articles of local manufacture are sent to the Philippines, Hawaii, Bering Sea, British Columbia, the Orient, England, Scotland, Germany, South America, Australia, Mexico, Siberia and Africa. Potatoes in enormous quantities and the unequaled Eastern Washington apples are sent out of Seattle on voyages around the world. Beer at one time headed the list of Seattle's exports, but that has all been changed, and after the first of the year not a drop of intoxicants will be included in the cargoes bound for other ports.

Cherry Street, Seattle, as it Appeared in 1889
(Compare with picture on cover page)

In the immediate vicinity of Seattle are situated the famous berry lands, where raspberries, blackberries, strawberries and other varieties produce enormous crops. The fresh fruits are shipped in refrigerator cars as far east as Chicago, while during the height of the season the surplus is canned and sent to all markets of the world.

Here is located the United States assay office, which since its establishment in 1899 has handled, up to January, 1914, 43[illegible] tons of gold, valued at upwards of two hundred millions of dollars. The year 1913 showed an enormous increase over the preceding year in the receipt of gold, due chiefly to the increased shipments from the Iditarnod districts, Nome, Copper River and Tanana, the receipts for 1913 being $8,205,280 as against nearly five million for 1912.

AS THE "SPECIAL" PASSES THROUGH OREGON

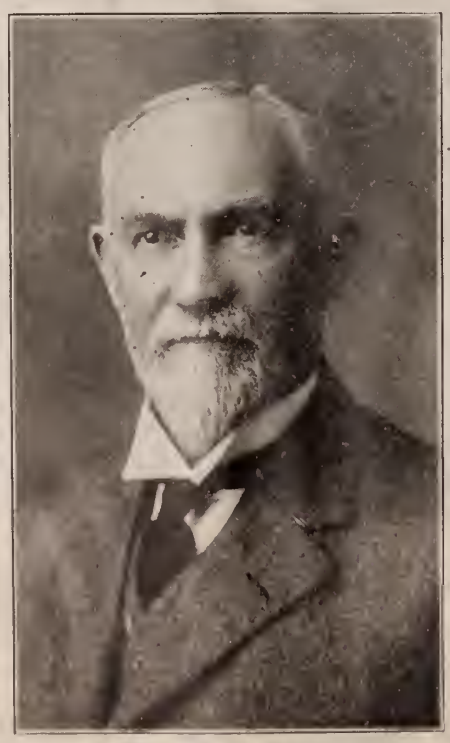
MRS. JENNIE M. KEMP

The traveler who reaches Oregon from the east finds the Oregon Short Line, because of the windings of the Snake River, crossing into the state only to leave it for a time in a very few miles. Our union in Ontario, where Oregon is first entered, while not long organized, is very active and successful. Should the hour and time permit, Ontario will extend Oregon's first greeting to the White Ribbon Special, to whose coming the whole state has been looking forward all the year.

It is unfortunate for us that October days are less than twenty-four hours long. We would like you to enjoy the beautiful mountain scenery and fertile valleys of the far eastern part of our great state. Here you can see the settler struggling with the problems of the pioneer. One is often reminded that there still "remaineth much more land to be possessed."

Between three and four hours after leaving Huntington those who are awake will see to the left of the train the Hot Lake Springs sanatorium, where Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson spent some very happy, restful days last spring. The large, brightly lighted brick building, with mountains in the rear and the steaming lake in front, will be easily recognized. Mrs. G. W. Tape, wife of the superintendent of the sanatorium, expects to join the Special. Her fund of information concerning points of interest along the way to Portland will be most helpful to our guests. It would add greatly to the pleasure of all if Dr. Tape, also, could join the special train.

Pendleton will be the first stop after daylight. This is the home of the "Pendleton Round Up," and is well known for its connection with the early history of the state. It is one of the largest wheat centers in Oregon. The Pendleton Commercial Club and our white ribboners regret exceedingly that the very early arrival of the Special deprives them of the promised long stop. Here the cowboy, and the Umatilla Indians, a fast vanishing type of civilization, may still be seen. Those who wish to see the Indian tepees should watch for them the last half hour before reaching the city. Pendleton will take advantage of the ten-minute stop, which all trains make to give a greeting.



It gives me pleasure to offer greetings to those who visit our state en route to the National W. C. T. U. Convention. In my opinion the best development in every direction is always fostered by meetings where ideas are exchanged and leaders have opportunity to be heard.

JAMES WITHYCOMBE,
Governor of Oregon

Mr. R. H. Atkinson, city passenger agent of the O. W. R. & N. railroad, Portland, will have personal charge of the White Ribbon Special from Huntington to Portland and on to Seattle. Mr. Atkinson is an untiring friend to whom white ribboners are constantly indebted for courtesies. It will be his earnest endeavor to make every moment of the trip through Oregon a pleasure to each passenger.

Leaving Pendleton, the barren country, which is being transformed into a garden and opened for homes by the great irrigation projects, will be more interesting to students of civilization. Mr. Atkinson and Mrs. Tape will be delighted to answer any questions. There is a very large irrigation project at Stanfield and a dairy center which is being developed. At Umatilla the Columbia River is reached. The Umatilla reclamation covers 63,000 acres.

For two hundred miles you will travel along the great Columbia. Across you will see the mountains, hills and valleys of our sister state, Washington. T

(Continued on Page Four)

GOVERNOR KENDRICK OF WYOMING DECLARES FOR STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

"I am convinced that the time has come for us to take our stand with Montana, Colorado and other neighboring states on the prohibition question," said Hon. John B. Kendrick, governor of Wyoming, in an address before the Sheridan County (Wyo.) Teachers' Institute, as published in the news columns of the State Leader of Cheyenne.

In commenting upon this declaration of Wyoming's governor, ex-Senator J. R. Carpenter says in the paper above quoted:

"This utterance of the chief executive of Wyoming is received with gladness by those citizens who look with dread upon what may happen here when state-wide prohibition of the liquor traffic goes into effect in Colorado, Idaho, Oregon, Arizona, Washington and Montana.

"That the use of intoxicants tends to the lowering of individual efficiency and breeds crime, misery and poverty has long been accepted as fact, but until recent years citizens of honest purpose have differed as to the best method to adopt for the control or suppression of the traffic. Every system of regulation that has been tried out has proven a failure until now the consensus of opinion is that, pending national prohibition, which must eventually come, state-wide prohibition is the only reliable remedy.

"The failure of the thirteenth legislature to submit the question of a constitutional amendment to the people, although every member was elected on a platform pledging allegiance to direct legislation, crystallized public sentiment throughout the state.

"Over 50 per cent of the voters in every precinct where the petition was fully circulated signed it, and although but a short time was devoted to its circulation, more than twenty per cent of the voters of the entire state joined in the demand that the question of state-wide prohibition by constitutional amendment be submitted to popular vote.

"It is extremely improbable that at the next state election any candidate for the legislature, on any ticket, can be elected, or even nominated at the primaries, unless he pledges candidly and unqualifiedly that he will, if elected, vote to submit this constitutional amendment to the people."

Governor Hatfield Announces He Will Stand By Prohibition Law

"You can paste it in your hat," declared the governor of West Virginia in an address delivered recently at the Central State Fair, "that Henry D. Hatfield will not call any special session of the legislature for the purpose of repealing or weakening the prohibition laws of the state."

Referring to the petitions now being circulated in certain parts of the state for the purpose of permitting the use of light wines and beer, Governor Hatfield said he believed the people of the state wanted drastic prohibition laws and he intended to carry out their wishes.

Will Not Defend Drinkers

Automobile Legal Association Bars Them From Benefits of Organization

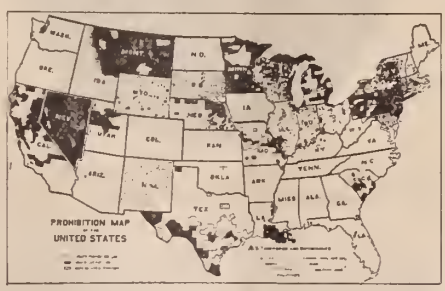
According to the Boston Transcript, the Automobile Legal Association, through its general counsel, William A. Thibodeau, has notified its members that its attorneys will not defend in the courts any person charged with operating an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. In announcing this decision to the members, Mr. Thibodeau said:

"Our directors have voted that our association should take a decided position in this matter, and that its attorneys should not under any circumstances defend any person charged with operating an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquors, without regard to the opinion of its attorneys concerning the guilt or innocence of the person so charged.

"It is hoped that this vote will meet with the approval of our members and that a person who operates an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquors will be regarded in much the same manner as an outlaw, who is not entitled to the sympathy or assistance of any organization."

New Mexico Has "Dry Fever"

Even Mexicans in New Mexico are getting the "dry fever," according to W. J. R. Johnson, a ranchman of Valley Ranch, N. M. In talking with a reporter for the Kansas City Star, Mr. Johnson said: "Pecos, N. M., has a population of about three hundred, made up almost altogether of Mexicans. It had four saloons. There were so many drunken Mexicans lying around in the streets and so many brawls, that the better element of Mexicans got tired of it and voted the town dry. Now the town is becoming a decent place to live in and the money the drinkers formerly spent for beer and whisky is spent for food and clothing."



EIGHTEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

Prohibition Makes Rent and Grocery Payments Easy

The good effects of prohibition are already being felt in Montgomery, Alabama, through the better collection of rents and grocery accounts, says the Montgomery Journal. A leading real estate dealer declared recently that the collection of rents has improved at least fifty per cent since the prohibition law went into effect and he learned from the small grocer, who rents from him, the pleasant news that this class of merchant also has been benefited by the new law.

"I have made a close and careful study of the liquor question," said the real estate dealer, "and I have demonstrated that the money that has gone over the saloon counter indirectly comes to the merchant or the real estate man in nineteen out of twenty cases.

"When we had the open saloon I found that in nine out of ten cases where the tenants failed to pay their rent, it was due to the money being diverted for liquor. I also have several grocers as tenants. Frequently they complained to me of having bad accounts, stating that they could not get their money out of a great many of their customers. I asked these grocers if they had ever investigated the habits of their customers. They had not, but they did so and found that the overwhelming per cent of their customers who were behind in their accounts were victims of liquor. I say, therefore, that liquor has been indirectly responsible for all of these distressing conditions. The grocers tell me now that their collections are much better. I know that my rents are being paid more promptly than ever before.

"I had not been such a rank prohibitionist myself until I made these investigations personally. I am opposed chiefly to the open saloon as it cultivates the liquor habit in our rising generation. It is a kindergarten for our boys to acquire a taste for liquor.

"The money that goes over a saloon counter does no one any good except the man who runs the bar and the man who owns the building."

Drinking Wrecks Consistent Golf

It has been for some time a recognized fact in athletic circles that liquor is the sworn foe of long-time efficiency in baseball and other games and feats of strength. A bit of added testimony is a statement as to the effect of liquor on golf-players which appeared recently at the head of the first column of the sporting section of the Minneapolis Journal, as follows:

"A Philadelphia golfer, A. W. Tillinghast, says he can look back over more than twenty years of golf in America, and recall with sorrow the names of some of our most powerful players, whom the game knows no longer, and whose exit can be attributed to nothing less than drinking.

Booze Hurts Game

"A hard tournament is a drain on vitality; it demands every ounce of reserve force and an active mind at all times.

"Two well-known New York golfers were discussing liquor and golf the other day during a club tournament.

"'I've cut out booze,' said one of them. 'Hurts my game, spoils my putting.'

"'Good,' said the other. 'For heaven's sake, man, tell me how you trace it.'

"'Well. I'm perfectly convinced that the alcohol in increasing the action of the heart oversupplies the eyeball with blood and after the reaction, when the stimulus has passed, there is a change in the visualizing of the putts and hence irregularity in shots.'"

Prohibition Indispensable to The Farmer

The necessity for prohibition in the country was emphasized by Senator H. A. Boykin of the Georgia legislature recently. He said:

"The farms of Georgia cannot be operated without reliable farm labor. Farm labor is not reliable when liquor can be had. A farm hand who gets hold of liquor has a 'hang-over' the first two days of the week, and has a thirst the last two days of the week, thus netting his employer about two days of actual work. Therefore, it is vital to the farming interests for liquor to continue to be banished."

AS THE "SPECIAL" PASSES THROUGH OREGON

(Continued from Page Two)

shifting sand, controlled by sand barricades and oil, will bring before you one of the serious problems confronting the railroad. There is constantly varying scenery, gradually growing more picturesque as the Columbia Gorge is approached.

The Dalles is a city of six thousand population, situated on the Columbia River, eighty-five miles east of Portland. Until the Celilo Canal was finished it was the head of navigation on the Columbia. The canal, built at a cost of $350,000, which was opened this summer, extends the navigable portion of the river five hundred miles. The Dalles is a city of beautiful homes, splendid public buildings and is one of the most progressive cities of the Northwest.

At The Dalles you will be greeted not only by one of the most determined and successful band of white ribboners to be found in any state, but by the whole city under the leadership of its mayor, Dr. J. E. Anderson, father of our prohibition law. The W. C. T. U. has no better friends than Dr. and Mrs. Anderson, and we are glad you are to meet them.

As the train proceeds, the beauty of the scenery proves a constant delight. The many beautiful waterfalls, the grandeur of the view and the interesting rock formations are a kaleidoscope of scenic beauty. As the train will be so splendidly conducted it is not necessary to name in this article the various attractions. One feature of surpassing interest is the new Columbia River Highway, now being built. The highway pierces the Columbia River gorge, which, for fifty years, has been a barrier to all travel except over the O. W. R. & N. railway, which managed to build a single track close to the bank of the river.

In the early days of the pioneer the traveler stopped at The Dalles, on the east, loaded his possessions aboard a flat boat and floated over the rapids and through the canyon, where the mighty Columbia River had used the centuries to cut its way to the sea. From windows of railroad trains and from boats there were glimpses of scenic wonders and people marveled that no other manner of getting closer views was to be had. Then came the highway, constructed on a five per cent grade at a cost of $3,000,000. It hangs on cliffs and surmounts mountains, and then it dips down to the water level. At Crown Point the tourist stands 700 feet above the river and gazes thirty-five miles in either direction, and then he spirals downward over a double figure eight and never gets off a forty acre tract of land. It is a wonderful engineering feat, but it opens fairyland. Eleven great waterfalls spring from cliffs in ten miles of travel, deep canyons are crossed on concrete bridges, some of them one hundred and fifty feet in the air, and at places the road is supported by masonry walls of Italian dry construction, to build which foreign workmen were brought to Portland.

The Columbia River Highway is pronounced by every visitor and globe trotter of reputation to be the most magnificent scenic drive in the world. It combines the features of the Alps of Switzerland, the placid beauty of the Rhine, and the coloring of Italy. It is sixty-seven miles of panorama of waterfalls, color, water and form.

Portland, Oregon, will be one of the stops that every delegate to the Seattle Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union should make. Aside from the fact that Portland is one of the quaintly beautiful cities of America, and the further fact that it is in the center of one of the grandest scenic belts in the world, Portland is the battleground where the W. C. T. U. put over the vote that made Oregon dry. Strictly speaking, it will be dry January 1, 1916.

The party on the White Ribbon Special will stop at Portland, and the big city at the mouth of the Willamette River, with its five hundred miles of ever-blooming rose hedges, its wonderful boulevard drives, and its charming people, extends an invitation to every delegate to do likewise. You will like Portland and you will find it the "homey" city of the west.

Mrs. Hattie M. Sleeth, President Multnomah County W. C. T. U.

Portland's park and playground system is superior to that of any other city of the coast, its urban beauty is appealing, while the three great peaks which stand sentinel above the city and the hills which surround it on every side make a setting that is unequaled.

Terwilliger Boulevard, the Sky-Line Drive, and the Council Crest Loop give glimpses of the wondrous beauties of Oregon and of the city, the last being spread out below in panorama, while the activities of Portland's harbor stand out in splendid and picturesque relief.

The Portland Chamber of Commerce

Dr. J. E. Anderson, Mayor The Dalles, Ore., and Father of the State-wide Prohibition Law and the splendid Multnomah county white ribboners will extend a hearty welcome. Mayor Albee expresses his pleasure in the proposed visit. The Oregon W. C. T. U. closes its annual convention October 7, and the members of the convention are all coming to Portland to welcome Mother National.

Sight-seeing will be enjoyed as time will permit. The Elizabeth Hutchinson Library will be publicly presented to the Portland Surgical Hospital and a banquet at the Chamber of Commerce building will close the all too short stop in Portland.

Following the Seattle Convention the special train will make its trip through Oregon, October 16. Only a short stop will be made in Portland, the first long stop being at Salem, the capital city. From Portland south, the journey will be over the Southern Pacific railroad. This city is the home of nine different state institutions. Within its limits, or adjacent thereto, are the State Hospital for Insane, State Penitentiary, Institute for the Feeble-minded, State Training School, Institute for the Blind, School for Deaf Mutes. Four miles to the north of Salem is the Salem Indian Industrial School conducted by the United States government. It is one of the largest schools of its kind in America. All of these institutions are spaciously located and besides their beautiful surroundings offer to the traveler many interesting and educational features.

In location Salem has been especially favored. The Willamette River serves as the western border; to the west are the Coast range mountains, and to the east the Cascades, with their forest-clad heights and snow-capped peaks. From the heights about Salem these beautiful mountains can be seen surrounded by their halo of mystic beauty.

The visitor soon discovers that Salem is like one great park. The streets are broad and well paved and the citizens have taken special pride in having the grounds about their residences win for their city the name of "Salem the Beautiful." Once outside the business district the avenues are tree-shaded and bordered with beautiful lawns and gardens. In every garden no matter how humble grow the famous Oregon roses and other flowers of equal distinction. Nowhere is there such a profusion of flowers and shrubbery.

Mrs. S. E. Oliver has led our white ribbon band at Salem long and well. The union owns its own headquarters building on the principal street. The Salem Commercial Club has invited us to visit them. Governor Withycombe says he is glad we are coming and our own sisters will add a royal welcome. You'll like Salem, yes, and all the rest of Oregon.

Albany is a beautiful little city, long dry by local option—as is Salem—and at Albany the greeting will be most cordial. For half a century this has been the home of our beloved Mrs. Henrietta Brown, and her many friends from other states will be glad to call on her in her home town.

Again the shadows of night will hide most beautiful scenery. Sunday morning our honored guests will find themselves in Roseburg, in the heart of the fertile Umpqua valley. You will be able to observe for yourselves the difficult conditions being overcome in the development of Douglas county. The Commercial Club rejoices greatly that you will spend the day in Roseburg; the ministers have all opened their pulpits for both morning and evening meetings; the surrounding villages and school houses are asking for W. C. T. U. speakers; a mass meeting is being planned for the afternoon; you will have breakfast at the fine new hotel and be guests in the hospitable homes for dinner and supper; you will receive a most hearty welcome because your presence is so greatly desired.

Roseburg is the home of our Mrs. A. C. Marsters, whom we call "General

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

TEMPERANCE NEWS FROM ACROSS THE SEA

ANTI-LIQUOR WAR MEASURES

A "white paper," issued recently in Great Britain, shows the steps taken in European countries to restrict the sale of intoxicating liquors because of the necessities of war, says the news bulletin of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church:

Austria Hungary—Sale limited to between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. On Sundays and holidays all liquor shops are closed.

Denmark—A more or less absolute prohibition of the sale of liquor to soldiers (and in some cases to civilians) has been issued in sixteen police districts.

France—The sale of absinthe has been forbidden.

Germany—Sale of spirits has been forbidden to soldiers in the district of Berlin and the province of Brandenburg. Local authorities are empowered to prohibit or restrict the sale of spirits. The production of alcohol has been restricted.

Norway—The sale of spirits was forbidden until October 13, 1914. Now the sale is permitted four days a week. The police can prohibit the sale of wine or beer if the public interest makes it desirable. An extensive system of local veto was in force before the war broke out.

Russia—The sale of all intoxicants is absolutely prohibited, except in first-class restaurants and hotels at meals.

Servia—A decree was issued forbidding the proprietors of hotels and cafés to sell liquor in any large quantity to soldiers or persons addicted to drink.

Sweden—Although the restrictions in force and the powers possessed by local authorities were deemed sufficient to meet the conditions, a bill was passed giving extended powers to issue prohibitions "in times of distress and danger of war."

Switzerland—The sale of spirits made by the government is suspended. No licenses are at present granted for the distillation of spirits.

RUSSIA THRIVES UNDER PROHIBITION

"As one who has traveled all over Russia, knowing it in peace time, time of revolution, and time of war, I have to report that prohibition has been good for the country," writes Mr. J. Foster Fraser in the London Chronicle. "I do not imagine there is one person in a hundred thousand who would raise his hand to return to the old condition of things. There has been a considerable decrease in crime since Russia became teetotal; the number of cases of insanity has declined; the suicides are reduced in number." "Manufacturers tell me," continues Mr. Fraser, "that enforced abstinence has increased industrial efficiency by twenty-five per cent. Working men earn more, and though the war has increased the cost of living, their families are better off than before the war, because none of the hard earned roubles go in vodka."

WOMEN JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN AUSTRALIA

Four women have been appointed justices of the peace by the government of South Australia. They are Mrs. E. W. Nicholls, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Australia; Mrs. T. Price, a white ribboner and the widow of the late Hon. T. Price, the first labor premier of South Australia; Mrs. E. Cullen and Miss C. E. Dixon.

OUR WORLD'S W. C. T. U. WORKERS

Mrs. Sibree, a long time leader of our work in Madagascar, has removed her residence to England after heroic service for forty-five years in this field. Mrs. Sibree is succeeded in the presidency of the W. C. T. U. in Madagascar by Mrs. Currie Furavohitea of Tananarive.

Miss Adda Burch, for many years one of our earnest white ribbon leaders in Chile, South America, is now in Los Angeles, and recently gave to a number of white ribboners a Chile reception at her home. Many of Miss Burch's curios were exhibited and ice cream was served as an additional "chilly" feature of the entertainment.

Miss Robertson, who organized the Victoria (Australia) W. C. T. U., has formed a union at Mooroopna, a large town in which three hotels and three wine shops flourish. No temperance society was in existence until Miss Robertson's visit.

The House of Assembly and the Legislative Council of Newfoundland, largely as a result of agitation started by the W. C. T. U., have been considering a bill providing for a plebiscite. The prohibitionists are handicapped by its provisions, however, as they must obtain forty per cent of the electoral votes. Mrs. Cora C. Benedict, president of the Newfoundland W. C. T. U., is enthusiastic over her recent visit to Washington, D. C. She received much help from white ribboners, she affirms, which will be valuable in her efforts to banish the liquor traffic from Newfoundland.

Regular W. C. T. U. meetings are being held at the Y. W. C. A., Bombay, India, and several of the women, with Miss Whealdon, Y superintendent, have been singing at the hospitals on Sunday. The Allahabad W. C. T. U. in connection with the Indian Christian Mela prepared a temperance exhibit. War posters from England and scientific posters from the United States attracted the attention of hundreds of people who stopped to read their message and discuss with those in charge the progress of temperance.

A new union for the official ladies of Paoting Fu, China, with a membership of twenty, was organized by Mrs. Chauncey Goodrich and the new secretary, Miss Chen. "Right then and there they appointed their own officers," writes Mrs. Goodrich in telling of the new union, "all promising to subscribe to the pledge. It is only step by step that one can lead such women to catch the vision of homes and country freed from the evils not only of opium, alcohol and cigarets, but of concubines and slave girls, of all gambling and lotteries. One official's wife was asked, 'What will you do when Mr. Chang (referring to her husband) invites many guests for you to entertain?' 'Oh, I'll drink hot water,' she replied." Mrs. Goodrich also held a meeting in the Memorial Temple, built for Li Hung Chang—a fine large room or hall which seats several hundred, and the place where President Eliot of Harvard addressed large numbers of students. On Sunday, after a short address at the regular service, and an address at a girls' school, Mrs. Goodrich spoke to nearly five hundred, mostly students, three hundred being from the government school. "It takes some courage," writes Mrs. Goodrich "to speak in Chinese to men students, not a few being teachers also, but in my eagerness to make them see the danger in narcotics to themselves and to their country I soon forgot myself. Beside these meetings we formed two societies and fanned to quicker life two others. Miss Chen wins people everywhere. Several of my friends said, 'How did you ever get so fine a young woman to help you?' I answered, 'Oh, I worked hard and prayed and prayed, because I felt she was just the one.'"

Miss Lochhead is doing excellent work in Cape Colony, South Africa, and is carrying out an extensive tour planned by the leaders in South Africa.

The "counter attractions" movement among the soldiers in Scotland is being undertaken with enthusiasm by white ribboners, and in every important center in Scotland amusements without intoxicants are being provided. Concerning the work in one of the towns a Scottish white ribboner writes:

"We have had two rest and reading rooms open, with refreshments, ever since last August. Porridge is a specialty with us, as many as 130 bowls being supplied in one night and we are crowded out every night. At present we have between 5,000 and 6,000 troops in the town and neighborhood. Hundreds of pledges have been taken. In Kilmarnock also free teas have been given." Patriotic teas and clubs for the soldiers' wives have also been a feature of temperance work throughout Scotland. An open-air pledge campaign to follow the king's example is being planned and Glasgow, Edinburgh and Aberdeen have joined with marked success in a house-to-house pledge-signing campaign.

The Patrick white ribboners are conducting (at the workmen's request) a restaurant in one of the shipbuilding yards doing admiralty work. The company is erecting a building and supplying the requisite pans, dishes, cutlery, at a cost of about one thousand pounds. An experienced cook and two assistants have been hired and B. W. T. A. members go at meal hours to assist. The men have been making larger wages than usual and there have been heavy drinking and much wasted time.

Congress of Reforms Held in Connection with Panama-Pacific Exposition

ANNA MARDEN DE YO, State Corresponding Secretary

The annual mid-summer meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of California (North) was held this year in the Civic Auditorium of San Francisco in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The program arranged by the state president, Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, was of unusual interest, dealing with the ever present question of "Prohibition," and our coming 1916 campaign; the all absorbing topic, "Peace," and the "Red Light" abatement law.

The sessions lasted for five days, August 16-20. The opening day dealt with the enforcement of the Red Light abatement law, the county presidents of the W. C. T. U. presenting reports gathered by means of a questionnaire sent out by the state. Every county in the state except San Francisco and Contra Costa reported systematic and effective effort on the part of county officials in carrying out the provisions of the law. Practically every mayor, every district attorney and most of the judges testified to their belief in the need and efficacy of this law. Over and over again was the thought brought out that the brothel was the child of the saloon; that the back door of the saloon was the front door of the house of prostitution. Hundreds of places have been closed since the law went into effect and attention was called to the fact that this law instead of scattering these unlawful places—as claimed by some—served to bring to light resorts of that kind that already existed in residence districts before the closing of the segregated quarter.

The sessions devoted to "Peace" brought out some strong speakers. Dr. David Starr Jordan of Stanford University paid a high tribute to woman's worth in the promotion of peace principles, quoting from Olive Schreiner: "Only a woman knows what a man costs."

Mr. Robert C. Root, Pacific Coast director American Peace Society, spoke on "The Relation of the Public School to Peace," saying, "The school is the recruiting ground—the teachers the recruiting sergeants—for the peace movement; through Peace day exercises, peace prize essays and debates, the twenty million children in our public schools are being educated for peace on earth, good-will to men."

Mr. Mirza Ali Luli Khan, ambassador from Persia to the United States, said, "This congress is a glorious congress because it is a congress of reform, and to reform is to create order out of chaos. We are on the threshold of the perfection of human brotherhood. God is using the exposition to keep the balance of the nations, during the time of this awful struggle, by bringing together the representative people of all lands, and thus demonstrating the universal brotherhood of man."

Wednesday evening the Honorable J. Stitt Wilson, former mayor of Berkeley, gave the address and said in part: "One after another, great wrongs, deep ignorances and colossal world sins pass away into God's waste-basket. Many such have passed. Several such are now ready to fall. One of these is the legalized liquor traffic. The saloon and all its allied evils and industries must go. It cannot stand the acid test of science, of conscience, of common sense, or of simplest human need."

Thursday a Prohibition Parliament was held and speakers representing the W. C. T. U., Anti Saloon League, Prohibition Party, state Sunday School Association, I. O. G. T., Y. P. B. and L. T. L. each gave a solution of "How to Win." A social hour followed when the International Order of Good Templars were the guests of the W. C. T. U.

On Thursday evening a diamond medal contest was held under the direction of the state superintendent, Miss Luella K. Schwab, with a class of seven speakers from various sections of the state. The medal was awarded to Miss Ina Gregg of Santa Cruz, who recited "A Daughter's Sacrifice."

Friday was "Congress of Reforms Day" at the exposition and our people gathered at 10:30 a. m. at the booth of the World's and National W. C. T. U. very graciously presided over by Miss Mary E. Brown, the director in charge, and were presented with the bronze placque commemorative of the occasion. Our state president, Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, in most fitting words of appreciation, accepted the testimonial presented by Commissioner Vogelsang. The remainder of the day was spent by the white ribboners in visiting the worthwhile exhibits in the various buildings.

Mrs. Stella Blanchard Irvine and Mrs. Hester T. Griffith, respectively president and vice-president-at-large of Southern California W. C. T. U., were honored guests during the Congress.

Enlisting the Church for Temperance

NETTIE BARKER FERNALD, Montclair, N. J.

There were about one hundred members—half a hundred more including the honoraries, and it was a union where the men counted greatly as workers and from a financial standpoint.

The great event of the entire year was the annual protest of the women against the granting of licenses for intoxicating drinks. Year after year their objections went in, first in writing, then presented in person by the president. The first appearance of the women startled the councilmen to a certain degree and prepared the way for the next year and the next. Blessed perseverance of the white ribbon host! At the fourth visitation the council hall was packed to the doors, and late arrivals could not find entrance.

At the fifth appearance the attendance was such that the council voted to adjourn to the nearby assembly room of the public school which seated nine hundred people. The crowd moved over in an orderly manner and filled the room. The council sat in state on the platform and the thrilling scene began.

First on the program came the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It had led all the years. It deserved first place. It was "women first" in the minds of the vast company. There was plenty of applause as the one chosen to represent the faithful one hundred and fifty paused in her plea to say, "We are not so lonesome as we used to be." She was followed by representatives from eighteen churches, then by men and women from the Altruist Society, from the Woman's Club, from the Federation of Clubs, and from the Y. M. C. A. It was a perfect avalanche of protests and appeals to the members of the town council, in whose power lay the refusing or granting of the eleven licenses for the city's harm and hurt.

Was it not worth while to persevere through the years to gain so satisfactory a result?

Only those who have worked in a conservative town of twenty-five thousand can form an adequate idea of the wonderful change which had come in the attitude of the churches.

"Honor to whom honor is due," gives first place to the white ribbon company which stood almost alone through the years when minister after minister said, "Better let well enough alone." The reward came when one, then another, of the talented group of preachers declared, "Montclair must be a saloonless city." When that change of heart came it meant business; it meant remarkable opportunity. The churches meant men as well as women. There were audiences ready at hand. There was no drumming up of a handful, already convinced, but group after group to be convinced and to be moulded into a moving mass. The ministers only needed conviction and the "arrest of thought" which comes when once a man opens his mind to the truth and to the facts as the printed page gives them.

For a number of years THE UNION SIGNAL had been sent to every minister. Had that anything to do with results? Vice-presidents for each leading church had been appointed by the union. That move reached many, including the ministers. The churches had been solicited as audience rooms for the best temperance speakers. There had been quiet, persistent work to enlist church members, men and women, and to educate them to the firm belief that Montclair ought to be dry and that they were the instruments in God's hands to make it dry.

It took time, with constant, patient work, and at last as by magic the whole Christian population responded.

The council was overwhelmed. A month elapsed before the vote was to be taken. Again the room was crowded and an overflow meeting was held. The result was that it was agreed that the matter of granting licenses would be submitted to a plebiscite vote of the men in the fall at some time to be settled upon by the committee of one hundred chosen from the community.

In the meantime Montclair was dry for thirteen days until licenses could be granted for a short term pending the vote. It was a strange plan, but relieved the councilmen of all responsibility in the matter. It is now up to the men of Montclair to say whether liquor shall be sold or not.

The state W. C. T. U. convention meets in Montclair in September, and a voting place will be provided each day of the convention where the women in attendance who live in Montclair may register their votes. This registry will be carried on until the end of the day when the men have cast their votes. The names of over a thousand women have already been secured. The state convention brings a strong force to the aid of this important storm center at the precise moment when help from outside is needed. If Montclair goes dry the influence will be felt over the whole state and will tell for state prohibition as no other one thing could do.

When a loyal body of women tried and true combines to work with and through the eighteen churches of a beautiful residential city, there can be but one result. The Lord of Hosts is with us.

Snap-Shots of Indiana "Doings"

MARY E. WOODARD, State Corresponding Secretary

The faces of Indiana white ribboners are turned toward Muncie, where our annual state W. C. T. U. gathering will be held September 30-October 1. We are planning for a great convention although it will be unusually short. The fact that Dr. Ira Landrith and Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston will be our speakers insures inspiring addresses. We are expecting a large attendance and our comrades in Muncie will spare no pains to make our stay in their city pleasant and profitable.

Forty-one new unions have been organized in the state this year, and we expect to help Mother National with the 50,000 new members she is aiming for.

Mrs. Lora S. La Mance did very effective work in Indiana in April and May. Mrs. Lulu Shepard aroused much enthusiasm through the month of June. Both of these workers will receive a glad welcome when they return to our state.

Our local unions have been active in departmental work and some of them have attempted and achieved great things in 1915.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN"

GOVERNORS SPEAK IN APPROVAL OF SUFFRAGE

The chief executives of the eight suffrage states who were in attendance at the recent conference of governors in Boston were enthusiastic in their approval of "Votes for Women." When asked to make statements as to "how suffrage works" in their respective commonwealths they unanimously declared that the ballot in the hands of women is a benefit to all the citizens of the state. Especially emphatic was the statement of Governor Capper of Kansas, as published in a Boston newspaper:

"Kansas gave her women school suffrage and liked it.. Afterward she gave them municipal suffrage and liked it better. Afterward she gave them full suffrage and liked it best.

"Suffrage in Kansas has broadened woman's views of social life. It has centered her thoughts on home and its needs, and has given a new and beneficial influence in the life of the state. It has in no way detracted from her womanliness or her character, but has strengthened both. Kansas will never go back to the rule of all the people by a part of them."

A LESSON IN SUFFRAGE GEOGRAPHY

The status of woman suffrage geographically considered is given in brief, concise form in the following paragraphs quoted from the Western New York Post of Lancaster, N. Y.:

"Territorially, the United States is almost half won for equal franchise. Out of its entire three million, six hundred and some odd thousand square miles, almost eighteen hundred thousand now belong within the suffrage zone. This, of course, includes Alaska territory.

"Our island possessions make an additional area, scarcely equal, all told, to one big, new suffrage state. The Philippines, Hawaii, Samoa, Porto Rico, Guam, and the Canal Zone, are, together, smaller, by twenty-one thousand miles than Montana. Montana could take them all in and tuck in two New Jerseys and a half around the edges.

"In 1914 woman suffrage gained 250,000 square miles. It gained physically as much of continental United States as would make all the campaign states of 1915 put together, and still leave enough land to spare to stretch comfortably over five of the states into which the woman suffrage amendment has recently been introduced."

LEGISLATION SECURED BY WOMEN WHO HAVE ACQUIRED THE VOTE

If women are given the vote on a certain day in a certain state, next day, in all the other states where women do not vote, certain people will rise up and cry, "Aha! What have they done with the vote? They have it, what have they done with it?"

Here are some of the things that they have done with it:

The following suffrage states have good child labor laws: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Montana, Oregon, Nevada, Utah and Washington. Wyoming incorporated into its state constitution a law prohibiting the only kind of child labor which would be likely to affect children. No boy under fourteen can be employed in a mine and no girl of any age and no woman can be permitted around a dangerous mine for the purpose of employment there. Later Wyoming laws have prohibited the employment of children under fourteen as acrobats, or entertainers of any sort for pay.

Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Oregon, Utah and Washington have enacted laws governing woman's labor. Wyoming, besides its constitutional protection of women about mines, has enacted a law giving equal pay for equal work to women in public schools and has required seats in all places where women work, although the state census shows an infinitesimal number of women employed in factories and shops.

Age of Consent

The following states have raised the age of consent for girls to 18: California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Utah, Washington, Wyoming.

Equal guardianship of children is a law in California, Colorado, Kansas, Utah and Washington.

Compulsory education is a law in every equal suffrage state. In seven states the percentage of illiteracy over ten is less than one per cent and in three states it is from one to three per cent. The eleven most illiterate states in the Union are non-suffrage states. Nine of them either have no compulsory education laws or worthless ones.

Anti-Vice

Laws against prostitution have been adopted by California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming. In New Jersey, a non-suffrage state, there is no state law against the keeping of houses of prostitution. Children born out of wedlock in New Jersey may not be legitimatized, even though the parents are afterwards married.

Colorado, Oregon, Arizona and Washington have obtained state-wide prohibition since they gained woman suffrage, and in Illinois the first achievement of women voters was the closing of 1,000 saloons and the adding of twenty-one "dry" counties to the state.

No mention can be made of Montana and Nevada since there has been no general election there as yet in which women have participated.

Wages and Pensions

A minimum wage law for women workers has been obtained in California, Colorado, Oregon, Utah and Washington.

Pensions for mothers have been obtained in Colorado, California, Idaho, Utah, Washington and Oregon.—Western New York Post.

"WE AS WOMEN"

Tbere's a cry in the air about us—
We hear it before, behind—
Of the way in which "We, as women,"
Are going to lift mankind!

With our white frocks starched and ruffled,
And our soft hair brushed and curled—
Hats off! for "we, as women,"
Are coming to help the world!

Fair sisters, listen one moment—
And perhaps you'll pause for ten:
The business of women as women
Is only with men as men!

What we do, "we, as women,"
We have done all through our life;
The work that is ours as women
Is the work of mother and wife!

But to elevate public opinion,
And to lift up erring man,
Is the work of the human being;
Let us do it—if we can.

But wait, warm-hearted sisters—
Not quite so fast, so far.
Tell me how we are going to lift a thing
Any higher than we are!

We are going to "purify politics"
And to "elevate the press."
We enter the foul paths of the world
To sweeten and cleanse and bless.

To hear the high things we are going to do,
And the horrors of man we tell,
One would think "we, as women," were angels,
And our brothers were fiends of hell.

We, that were born of one mother,
And reared in the self-same place,—
In the school and the church together,—
We, of one blood, one race!

Now then, all forward together!
But remember, every one,
That it is not by feminine innocence
The work of the world is done.

The world needs strength and courage,
And wisdom to help and feed—
When "we, as women," bring these to man,
We shall lift the world indeed!

—Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

NEW JERSEY MAN A STAUNCH SUFFRAGIST

Hon. John W. Wescott, attorney-general of New Jersey, is taking a notable part in the "Votes for Women" campaign. As an argument for woman suffrage he is quoted in the Woman's Journal as saying:

"If you want clean streets, pure water, food and market inspection you must give women the vote. If you want good schools, adequate playgrounds and hygienic conditions for children—the growing citizens of the future—you must give women the vote. If you want to be the servant and not the master of society you must give women the vote.

"The more I see of the working of the government and social conditions of this state the more I am in favor of equal suffrage."

WHY SHUT ONE'S EYES TO THE INEVITABLE?

Neither of the two great political parties in New York state will aid or abet the suffrage movement, it is stated. They will not move a finger to help carry the suffrage amendment to the constitution. They will not openly oppose suffrage, but they will do even worse—they will strive to injure it through political manipulation, secretly, underhandedly. They may succeed in defeating the amendment; they may succeed in postponing the triumph of suffrage for several years, but they can hardly do more than this. Eventually, it would seem, suffrage must be victorious. Then, very likely, the managers of the old-line political parties will wonder, and have occasion for wondering why the women cannot be brought into adhesion with them and why there should be so much more political unrest than formerly. It is strange that the old-line managers are unable to realize how much trouble they are piling up for themselves in the future by following their old practice of shutting their eyes to the inevitable.—Christian Science Monitor.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to

THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, September 16, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

TWO THOUSAND MILES OF MOVIES

A trip across the continent by the "moving picture route" is a delightful way to spend an evening, but it is not in any sense a substitute for a real journey, with congenial company, on one of the finely equipped transcontinental railroads. If you join the party going to Seattle next month you will be entertained with 2,000 miles of magnificent moving pictures, showing scenes in Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and California. You cannot afford to miss this wonderful opportunity to see the great western country under such favorable auspices and to attend the inspiring Convention of workers for a great reform. Do not delay longer writing in regard to reservations. Read page 11.

TWENTY MILLION REASONS FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION

The press is today stressing the economic argument for prohibition, and that alone ought to be sufficient to convince every right-minded voter. However, just at this time of the year, the public has brought to its attention approximately twenty million other arguments for the total annihilation of the liquor traffic, every one of them forceful and appealing. This army of good and sufficient reasons why we should abolish John Barleycorn is this very month wending its happy way to the public schools. No one disputes the fact that these twenty million boys and girls are the most important part of our population, on whom, in great part, rests the weal or the woe of the United States in the coming years. On their clearness of vision, their rectitude of conduct, their wi[illegible] and sagacious handling of affairs of state depends the place which this government is to occupy twenty-five, fifty, or a hundred years hence. These prospective patriots are to be our educators and philanthropists, the mayors of our great cities, the law-makers in our states, the Congressmen and Senators in our United States Congress, the judges in our courts, and from them will be selected the men who shall occupy the President's chair.

Is it not the part of wisdom to protect these valuable citizens from anything which shall be detrimental to their health, which may retard their growth, stunt their development or prevent them from coming into their full heritage of usefulness? Nay, is it not shortsighted to the point of foolhardiness to tolerate in their midst an institution which has been proven to be fatally detrimental to human life?

There can be no plea for prohibition so unanswerable as the child, and it is not to be wondered that the liquorites protest vehemently at what they are pleased to term "the injection of the children into the prohibition question." As if the children were not already in it! Think of the boys and girls who enter life defective in body and in mind because of alcoholic parents, and the half-starved, poorly clothed children who, because of irresponsible fathers, are deprived of comfortable homes and educational advantages. Then remember that even the lads and lassies more happily circumstanced who live in license territory are liable to be contaminated by the vicious atmosphere the saloon creates and that from them must come many of the victims who make the continuance of a commercialized drink evil possible.

In the face of these well known facts can we say that we are dealing fairly with the twenty million boys and girls in our schools, from whom we are expecting in the future such great achievements, if we do not at the earliest possible moment remove from their pathway the ever present temptation of the legalized liquor traffic?

"MORAL UPLIFT" IN BAD COMPANY

The liquor interests have prostituted to their own evil purposes a phrase which has heretofore moved only in respectable circles of society. They apparently hope by working the expression "moral uplift" overtime to exalt themselves in the opinion of the public. "We want to enlighten the public as to the true purpose of the liquor dealers," said the president of the National Liquor Dealers' Association at a recent state convention in Pennsylvania. "I appeal to you to endorse the movement for a clean-up, a moral uplift in our business wherever it is necessary."

Their program for reform, among other things, calls for the granting of licenses "only to American citizens of known good character," the elimination of all objectionable practices, and attention to cleanliness and sanitation, and the refusal of service to habitual drunkards or persons apparently intoxicated. The plan evidently presupposes that there are in existence a large number of ideal dramshops and it is proposed, as we understand their program, to standardize all drinking places to the same degree of "moral uplift."

It might be pertinent to ask all who may be inclined to take seriously these suggestions of reform, to point out a few of the model drink-distributing places, to the pattern of which all other drink centers are to conform.

For instance where are we to look for the saloons, the licenses for which are held by "American citizens of known good character." We have no ill-feeling toward saloon-keepers and realize that many of them are far too decent to be engaged in the drink business but the fact remains that a liquor dealer is not eligible for membership in the churches, social clubs or high class fraternal organizations, and this raises the query as to where he gets his certificate of "known good character."

As to discovering a saloon that has eliminated objectionable practices, and is cleanly and sanitary, the very character of the business makes such conditions impossible. The reason for the existence of the liquor traffic is a habit so objectionable that the New York city board of health is at the present time spending thousands of dollars campaigning against it and Commissioner Goldwater sees in alcohol as a beverage a menace to the health of the community.

What there is morally uplifting in the proposal not to sell to habitual drunkards, it is difficult to understand. Perhaps one of the least unforgivable sins of the liquor dealers is continuing to sell to the man who has undermined his system with alcohol and has ruined his life almost past saving (humanly speaking). If the saloons would pledge to refrain from dispensing alcoholic drinks to young men full of possibilities for usefulness and moderate drinkers who have not gone so far on their downward way as to be completely the slaves of the drink habit, then indeed the public might have faith in their sincerity of purpose to "morally uplift" the trade, if indeed such a thing in the nature of the case were at all possible, which it is not.

LABOR MEN DO NOT FEAR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

Any class which outspokenly opposes woman suffrage lays itself open to the suspicion of being afraid of the women's vote. One need turn back the pages of history no further than the elections of last fall to discover a very definite reason for the antagonism of the liquorites, and recent legislation in suffrage states along anti-child labor lines satisfactorily explains the opposition of a certain class of capitalists. On the other hand, when such an organization as the Massachusetts Labor Federation goes on record whole-heartedly for "votes for women" it virtually says to the public, "We have no fear of the women's vote. We are quite willing to submit our cause to the judgment of that sex which is acknowledged to have shown a fair and sympathetic interest in our problems and which, having the leisure to investigate the merits of our demands, will, we believe, use its ballots to further legislation that will be to the advantage of all classes of society."

While the action of the federation will undoubtedly help suffrage, it will as well create a sentiment favorable to the labor element in the minds of the people who think. It certainly shows a friendly attitude of mind toward the prohibition movement on the part of the man who works, for the membership of the labor federations are too keen students of current history to fail to realize that giving the vote to women is almost certain to hasten the coming of state-wide prohibition.

ATTENTION, DELEGATES

Delegates to the National W. C. T. U. Convention from the East and the South who are to join the official party at Chicago may desire, while in that city, to make a tour of the great department store of Marshall Field & Co. Arrangements have been made for parties to be piloted through that establishment at 10:00 a. m. and 2:00 p. m. If time permits, a visit can be made to Rest Cottage and National W. C. T. U. Headquarters in Evanston, leaving Chicago at 10:20 a. m. or 2:00 p. m. Anyone wishing to make either or both of these trips will please notify Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., stating preference as to time.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

The Seattle Convention Committee announces that 200 seats in the first two rows of the balcony of the Convention church will be sold at $1 each. Send immediately your orders, accompanied by draft or money order to MRS. LOLA J. FLAGG, 3187 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Washington.

Resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition to Be Passed by Conventions

In order that the thought and purpose of the moral and uplift forces of the nation may be crystallized into a definite appeal and imperious demand for Congress to comply with the repeated reasonable petitions of the people for a referendum on National Constitutional Prohibition, it is suggested that the following form of resolution be presented to conventions and public assemblies, and that it be acted upon in all state W. C. T. U. conventions:

Since more than 6,000,000 petitioners have duly exercised their constitutional right of petition and formally requested Congress, in the simple exercise of its constitutional duty in such a case, to submit to the states for ratification or rejection an amendment to the constitution, known as the Hobson Amendment, which would prohibit citizens from entering into the transaction of selling or preparing for sale intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, an amendment which would prohibit private individuals and corporations from conducting a public business for private profit at the expense of the highest public welfare;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by this convention (conference, mass meeting, committee, etc.,) of ————, that the duty of Congress to submit the Hobson Amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition to the states for ratification or rejection is now the paramount public duty and will remain the paramount public duty until performed, and we appeal to all United States Senators and Members of Congress and we hereby pledge this convention (conference, mass meeting, committee, etc.,) and the citizens it represents, and we invoke the co-operation of all patriotic citizens who love their country and their fellow-men, to use every legitimate and honorable means to inspire the performance of this duty on the part of Congress at the earliest practicable date.

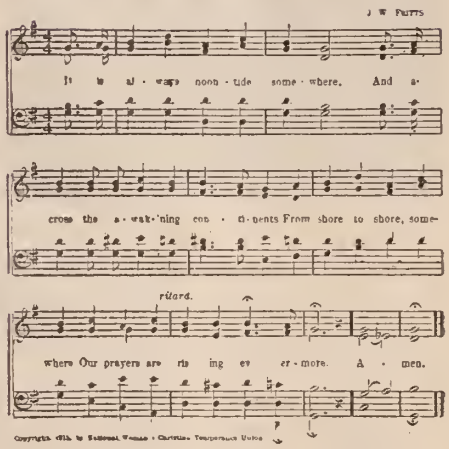
After action has been taken notification of same should be sent to the corresponding secretary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to Members of Congress from the state in which the resolution was passed, to the speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the president of the Senate of the United States.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Missouri, Sikeston, Sept. 14-17.
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Sept. 15-17.
New Hampshire, Somersworth, Sept. 15-17.
Kentucky, Bowling Green, Sept. 17-22.
Wisconsin, Eau Claire, Sept. 17-21.
South Dakota, Ipswich, Sept. 17-22.
West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24.
Nebraska, Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
Ohio, Dayton, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept. 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 4.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Mt. Pleasant, Sept. 29-30.
Connecticut, New Haven, Sept. 30-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Mississippi, Belzoni, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Louisiana, Alexandria, Oct. 30-Nov. 2.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

"FLOWERS OF REMEMBRANCE"

Each volume contributed to the Elizabeth P. Hutchinson library in the Portland (Ore.) Surgical Hospital should contain the name and address of the donor. A very attractive book plate is being prepared. It says the books are "flowers in the garden of remembrance," contributed by loving friends in memory of Mrs. Hutchinson's constant giving of herself to others. Two books, "Just Folks" and "Molly Makebelieve," have come without the name of the sender. Those who expect to bring books for the library when they come to the National W. C. T. U. Convention will please notify me immediately, in each case giving the name of book. The library will be formally presented to the hospital October 8, when the White Ribbon Special is in Portland. We hope that all the books will be here at that time and that we may have the name and address of each friend who contributes a volume.

JENNIE M. KEMP,
607 Dekum Bldg.,
Portland, Ore.

PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION NOTES

A grocer of Carthage, Mo., on a recent visit to the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, declared that his sales have decreased $200 a month since Carthage re-opened its saloons. During the period that the city was dry he did a business of $10,000 a year.

Mrs. Yona Abika and Mr. Jiro Tsuda, the youngest daughter and the son, respectively, of the Mr. Tsuda of Japan who collected the pipes and made for Miss West the bell which is on display in the W. C. T. U.. exhibit, were recent visitors at the booth. Both these young people are bright and well educated, much interested in all the great questions of the day and in the work of a sister, Miss Tsuda, who is principal of the finest private school for young women in the Sunrise Kingdom.

Teachers have shown encouraging interest in the literature and exhibit of the W. C. T. U. Welfare workers have also taken away large quantities of literature for use in work with boys and men. Leaders in temperance work for colored people in the South are eager for helps that can be sent broadcast among the people of their race.

CHAPLAINS TO MEET

The nation owes much to the devoted, courageous and self-sacrificing work of the chaplains of the Army and Navy. To them is due in large part the change of sentiment on the alcohol question in military circles, and through their efforts such conveniences as assembly tents where the men can write letters, read the papers, have evening entertainments and conduct religious worship, have been furnished. Prominent among these public spirited men has been Chaplain Orville J. Nave, now retired, and president of the Association of Chaplains of the Military and Naval Forces of the United States, which organization holds its annual meeting in Washington, on Tuesday, September 28. Any white ribboners who may be in the vicinity of Washington on that date are cordially invited to attend.

The August number of Life and Light for Woman, the periodical of the Congregational Woman's Boards of Missions, contains an interesting article on "Temperance Work in China," by Mrs. Joseph Cook, and other information concerning temperance in its worldwide aspect, including a strong quotation from Dr. Louise C. Purington, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Co-operation with Missionary Societies.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
*MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Headquarters for Convention, Lincoln Hotel

Convention Meeting Place, Plymouth Congregational Church

CHAIRMEN OF THE COMMITTEES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION

General Chairman, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt.

Convener, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns.

Treasurer, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg.

HOSPITALITY, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St.

FINANCE, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, 1056 Sullivan St.

PUBLICITY, Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PULPIT SUPPLY, Mrs. S. L. W. Clark, 1701 Kilbourne St.

RECEPTION AT TRAINS, Mrs. Della Somers, 4318 7th, N. E.

DECORATIONS, Mrs. E. S. Wood, 1521 24th Ave.

RECEPTIONS, Mrs. Frances McLaughlin, 1806 16th Ave.

PRINTING, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell, 401 W. Dravus.

BANNERS, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring.

CHECK ROOM, Mrs. M. E. Good, 6218 27th N. E.

REST ROOM, Mrs. Sue N. Wright, 2359 N. 61st.

PAGES AND USHERS, Mrs. Mary M. Wade, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PLATFORM, Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough, 1113 18th Ave. N.

INFORMATION, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana, 9738 61st Ave. S.

MUSIC, Mrs. Mina Cornish, 3825 Whitman.

PLEASURE TRIPS, Mrs. Emma Morrison, 338 18th N.

POSTOFFICE, Mrs. Lillie Manney, 6502 10th Ave., N. W.

CONVENTION NOTES

The speakers at the Sunday night service at the National Convention are to be the Right Reverend Walter T. Sumner, D. D., Bishop of Oregon, and Mr. Daniel A. Poling, acting president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Dr. Hugh G. Ross of Seattle will deliver the Convention sermon.

Other speakers of prominence are Dr. Mary Stone, president of the W. C. T. U. of China; Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis, president of Texas W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of Indiana W. C. T. U.; and Mrs. T. E. Patterson, president of Georgia W. C. T. U.

Department institutes covering the many and varied activities of the National W. C. T. U. will be held each morning, the discussions to be conducted by the National superintendents.

Distinguished speakers from abroad will address the convention on World's W. C. T. U. night. A grand diamond medal contest, a membership jubilee, and special exercises by the young people and children will furnish entertainment for other evening programs.

PRIZE BANNERS FOR THE SEATTLE CONVENTION

All prize banners, either National or departmental, should be sent direct to the National Convention at Seattle, express charges prepaid, and addressed, "Plymouth Church, Sixth and University, Seattle, Wash., for National Convention." The National W. C. T. U. does not have charge of any banners except those which go from National Headquarters, and no banner should be addressed to any of the officers. The chairman of the committee on Banners, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring Sts., Seattle, should be notified when the banner is started. Please be certain that in addition to the address on the box a card is fastened to the banner or nailed to the box, telling where the banner came from, whose property it is and to whom it shall be addressed in returning it.

SUPERINTENDENTS

SCHOOL SAVINGS AND THRIFT

MRS. SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER

At this time of gathering in the sheaves we are still looking for harvest news from some of the states. The associate superintendent, Mrs. L. O. Middleton of Missouri, has done valuable field work in her own state and Georgia. She goes to Montana for a month after the National Convention. There is continual demand for School Savings Banks information and literature. Your National superintendent has a heavy correspondence embracing letters from nearly all the states. She answers all inquiries which come from leading educators, bankers, clubs and organizations, as well as those from our own faithful women, and sends out literature, methods and statistics. The latter must be furnished free of charge in this great formative work. Often requests come asking that circulars and letters be sent long lists of teachers whose addresses are given. The results have been beyond our hopes. If we had clerical aid, and our finances allowed, we could do more initiative work that would greatly increase the number of schools in which this practical thrift is taught. We are making steady headway, however, and we have reason to congratulate ourselves and be thankful.

The school board of Saginaw, Mich., after full correspondence has just taken up our system of school savings in the public schools of that city. The American Bankers' Association at its September convention in Seattle formulated plans to start a school savings banks campaign from a business point of view. The bankers recognize the value this thrift training will be to them and the community. They have drawn freely from our printed literature and statistics on the subject.

The Child Welfare and Teachers' Associations ask us to tell them of the methods used, and of our twenty five years' experience and its results.

Among the recent letters received are some from school principals in Heber,

(Continued on Page Twelve)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

Please remember that in order to have our special train from Chicago we must have a party of one hundred and twenty-five. It is therefore important that we have your name and reservation early.

The White Ribbon Special leaves Chicago at 7:15 p. m., Tuesday, Oct. 5. Dinner should be eaten before boarding the train, as the diners will not be attached until Wednesday morning.

Tickets Chicago to Seattle and return, good until December 31, $62.50. Chicago to San Francisco, one way via Seattle, $80.

Delegates and visitors from east and south of Chicago should purchase tickets from starting point through to Seattle or San Francisco, as baggage may then be checked through to destination and transfer in Chicago is provided for.

Columbia River Highway

Tickets from the east allow a choice of return route from Chicago, so it is not necessary to return by going route unless preferred.

Those who attend the Convention only will purchase tickets to Seattle over the Chicago and North Western and Union Pacific Lines via Omaha, Granger and Portland; tickets to be validated at Seattle; fee 50 cents.

Those who return by way of San Francisco will purchase tickets over the route of the White Ribbon Special via Seattle, tickets to be validated at San Francisco.

Return may be over any preferred route, but the official party will leave Seattle via the O. W. R. & N. to Portland, Southern Pacific to San Francisco, Southern Pacific or Santa Fe to Los Angeles (with free side trip to San Diego, if requested when purchasing ticket), Santa Fe to Denver, via Williams, Albuquerque, Colorado Springs; Union Pacific and North Western lines to Chicago.

The Convention will close on Thursday night, October 14, to be followed by official board and committee meetings on Friday, after which, for those who desire to visit the San Francisco Exposition and attend the National Temperance Congress, October 20, arrangements for a special train have been made to leave Seattle at 8:00 a. m., Saturday, October 16, arrive Portland at 3:00 p. m., leave Portland at 3:30 p. m., stopping en route at Salem 5:25 p. m., and at Albany 6:45 p. m., where members will meet the Governor and other state officials, arriving at Roseburg at 11:30 p. m., where the party will remain over Sunday. Train will leave Roseburg at 12:01 a. m., Monday, stop at Ashland and Shasta Springs, and arrive at San Francisco Tuesday morning, where sleepers may be occupied until 7:00 a. m.

Arrangements will be made for the entire party to stop at a single hotel in San Francisco and the same plan will be adopted at Los Angeles and San Diego. It will probably not be possible to keep the party together after San Francisco. We append a list of expenses in connection with side trips which some of our party may want to take. The other side trips can be decided upon at any time before they are taken:

Trip to Mt. Tamalpais and Muir Woods, from San Francisco, about 20 miles, $2.90.

Yosemite National Park; round trip ticket from Merced to Yosemite, $18.50; Fridays and Saturdays a special rate of $14.50 is made, good for fifteen days. Hotel rates, American plan, $4 to $5 per day; two in a room, $3.50 to $4; a special rate will be given for ten or more in a party; camp rates, $2.50 per day. Send to O. W. Lehmer, G. M., Yosemite Valley Railroad, Merced, California, for literature.

Railroad fare Williams to Grand Canyon, $7.50. El Tovar hotel rates, $4 to $6 per day, $6 to $8 per day with bath; Bright Angel Camp, American plan, $1.25 and $1.50 per day.

Round trip to Grand View Point, 13 miles by auto, $4 per capita; Hermit Rim Road trip, 8 miles, $4; Hopi Point, 2 miles, $1 and $1.50; Mohave Point, $2.

Cripple Creek trip, regular rate, $3; ten or more on one ticket, $2.50. If it is desired to combine this trip with an auto trip to the Garden of the Gods, for a party of four or more, $1 additional will be charged; if less than four, $1.50. Crystal Park auto trip, special rate, $2.50. These three trips may be made in one day.

Seeing Denver Company will give a discount of ten per cent if we have fifteen or more in a party.

Sleeping car reservations must be made in advance. Applications should be sent to Miss Adams, stating whether you desire standard Pullman or tourist, lower or upper berth, compartment or drawing room; names of all in your party and where you will board the train. Also state whether you will return via special train to San Francisco, and if you desire hotel accommodations in San Francisco.

Drafts should accompany specific orders for reservations and should be made payable to Chicago & North Western Ry.

All correspondence in reference to the trip should be addressed to Miss Katharine K. Adams, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

ELLA A. BOOLE,
Chairman Transportation.
KATHARINE K. ADAMS
Secretary.

IT SLUGS HARD

Coffee a Sure and Powerful Bruiser

"Let your coffee slave be denied his cup at its appointed time! Headache—sick stomach—fatigue. I know it all in myself, and have seen it in others. Strange that thinking, reasoning beings will persist in its use," says a Topeka man.

He says further that he did not begin drinking coffee until he was twenty years old, and that slowly it began to poison him, and affect his hearing through his nervous system.

"Finally, I quit coffee and the conditions slowly disappeared, but one cold morning the smell of my wife' coffee was too much for me and I took a cup. Soon I was drinking my regular allowance, tearing down brain and nerves by the daily dose of the nefarious beverage.

"Later, I found my breath coming hard, had frequent fits of nausea, and then I was taken down with bilious fever.

"Common sense came to me and I quit coffee for good and went back to Postum. I at once began to gain and have had no returns of my bilious symptoms, headache, dizziness, or vertigo.

"I now have health, bright thoughts, and added weight, where before there was invalidism and the blues.

"My brother quit coffee because of its effect on his health and now uses Postum. He could not stand the nervous strain while using coffee, but keeps well on Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

HOW BLACK POINT WENT DRY

W. D. BROWNING, SEABRIGHT, Santa Cruz, California

It was about eighteen months after the poet and I and several of the other boys of the Last Summit Logging Company had declared our independence of King Alcohol, that John Burke, the owner of the outfit, called me into the slab shanty which out of politeness we called his office.

"Sit down, Dave," he said, and when I had settled myself in a chair, he began thusly: "Say, Dave, what do you think about this efficiency business that the papers and magazines are talking so much about lately?"

"Well, if it's handled by an efficient man I think it is a good thing," I replied, a little puzzled to know what he was driving at. He grinned at that until his one stub tooth reminded me of a redwood stump after a timber-fire. "You sized it up about right," he finally said, "and to back up my opinion of your opinion I am going to pick my efficiency expert from my own men instead of sending off for some inefficient college chap. Dave, you are it!"

"I'm what?" I asked, not yet fully understanding him. "You're my efficiency expert," he grinned. "You will get an even hundred dollars a month just to nose around and find more efficient ways of doing things and more efficient men to do them, and remember I don't want reports; results is what I am paying for."

"I understand," I said, "but to get results I must have the right to hire and fire."

"The right's yours from this minute," he answered back, handing me a time-book; "only remember, Dave, that I would rather you would spend a hundred dollars per man in making some of my old hands more efficient, than have you fire them and hire new men. That may be more sentiment than business, but it's the way I feel."

"I understand and appreciate your attitude, Mr. Burke," I answered as I backed out the door.

Now if anyone supposes that I thought I had a snap in my new job he has another guess coming. I knew I was up against the biggest obstacle that our civilization faces today—I mean intemperance. Honest, I have been in wild towns in my day, but most of them were the kind that men come into once a month, do their drinking and leave again. Black Point had been such a town once but there was nothing exciting about the place now. There is only one word that would fittingly describe its condition—sodden. Its streets reeked with the smell of stale liquor and most of its inhabitants were in keeping with their whisky-soaked surroundings.

To tell the truth, Black Point was about as hopeless a place to look for efficiency as ever I ran across, and I was almost discouraged at the start. However, there were a number of things about the Last Summit outfit that needed betterment that I at first thought could be attended to while I was studying how to tackle the master evil. Tools and equipment was one. Everything from the donkey engine down to the hatchet that the cook split kindling with seemed out of shape, and accidents and delays on account of defects of one kind or another were of weekly, almost daily occurrence. Well, I thought I could at least better things in this respect independent of the liquor problem, but you just try any plan for the betterment of a place like Black Point and you will run up against the same old evil before you have gone very far. I did in this case. Both the blacksmith and his helper were drunkards and when I managed to get a thing fixed at all, the work had generally been done so poorly that it might as well have been left unattempted. I simply had to fire that blacksmith, and the difference in the work done by the steady, sober young chap I found for his place set me to scheming to get more sober men for at least the most responsible positions in the camp.

Drinking men are always on the move and though I did not actually fire any of the old hands but the blacksmith and his helper, every one that quit of his own accord was replaced by a teetotaler. Naturally the sober men wanted some place to meet and be sociable, and though I felt rather uncertain of the venture at first, I rented an old restaurant building and fitted it up as a reading-room and coffee-club. Say, that temperance coffee-club was the beginning of the end of the saloons in Black Point, but no one in the squalid little burg thought of it in that way at the beginning of the club's existence. Just a place where we men who did not drink could read and chat awhile without having the smell of liquor in our nostrils and the invitation to drink it dinned in our ears was what the club meant to us. Gradually, too, it became a meeting-place for the different gang bosses to talk over what had been done, and plan methods of handling new work, and the men soon found that it was the ones who were around the coffee club at such times who stood best with the bosses and got the best jobs. That fact kept a good many of them away from the saloons.

But, say, it was a hard old fight, how hard none but those who have tried it can imagine. Just about the time some young chap had straightened up and was in a fair way to be a credit to the gang and make a man of himself, he would be lured into one of those Black Point liquor dens and degraded to the level of the worst of brutes. Honest, I almost cried over some of those cases, but I would get up my grit and go after them again, and at the end of the first year of my work as an efficiency expert I had quite a sprinkling of old-time drinking men patronizing the coffee-club instead of the saloons and the difference in the work they did was little short of remarkable. But—and here is the curious part of the whole thing—although I was putting in my best licks to sober up the old members of the gang and was making sure that every new man I hired was a teetotaler, I never once thought of voting the saloons of Black Point out of existence. The town was such a hopeless old rum-hole that such a thing as having it go dry seemed beyond reason. But all through the long months of my fight for efficiency temperance sentiment had been growing. Many of the old hands who still drank were bitter against the cause of their downfall as they saw their former drinking companions, now sober, advanced to positions which drink debarred them from filling. Then, too, many of the sober new men whom I had hired had families—and the California wives and mothers can and do vote for temperance!

Thus, without any special fight or agitation, it came about that eighteen months from the time John Burke hired me to make the Last Summit outfit more efficient, there was an election and the town just naturally voted itself dry without any outside help or influence whatever! It caused quite a sensation for awhile, and I was about as much surprised as anybody, but I have since figured it out in this way: You can work for efficiency and the result will be temperance, or you can work for temperance and the result will be efficiency. Try it and you will find that I am right!

A CITY GREAT

CHARLES M. SHELDON

In The Advance

What makes a city great and strong?
Not architecture's graceful strength,
Not factories' extended length,
But men, who see the civic wrong,
And give their lives to make it right,
And turn its darkness into light.

What makes a city full of power?
Not wealth's display nor titled fame,
Not fashion's loudly boasted claim,
But women, rich in virtue's dower,
Whose homes, tho' humble, still are great,
Because of service to the state.

What makes a city men can love?
Not things that charm the outward sense,
Not gross display of opulence.
But right, that wrong cannot remove,
And truth, that faces civic fraud,
And smites it in the name of God.

This is a city that shall stand
A light upon a nation's hill,
A voice that evil cannot still.
A source of blessing to the land;
Its strength not brick, nor stone, nor wood,
But justice, love and brotherhood.

SCHOOL SAVINGS AND THRIFT

(Continued from Page Ten)

Calif., Astoria, Oregon, and Grandview, Wash., asking for instruction as to how to establish school savings in their schools and one from Mrs. John of Garden City, Minn., who says: "Our W. C. T. U. is doing well. We did not begin school savings until December 1. Our pupils number less than one hundred and they deposited by June 1, $834. They are anxious to have school open. Vernon City is doing well. Lake Crystal and Mankato are taking up the system." Mrs. Bennett of the Willimantic (Conn.) W. C. T. U. says, "School savings banks are surely a grand success in Willimantic," and Mrs. Purinten of the same union writes a day or two later: "School savings have been a wonderful thing for my grandchildren. We are very grateful for this thrift help."

We are glad to have such impromptu encouraging letters at the harvest time from these and other sections of the country. They give us strength to continue the seed-sowing. May we all be encouraged to go forward with open hands and hearts, sowing and doing year after year at all seasons for the understanding and well-being of those who come after us.

2113 Tioga St., Philadelphia, Pa.

N. B.—I am to take an October vacation from my desk to attend the Seattle Convention. Therefore, some letters addressed to Philadelphia may have to await November replies. Please note, and address communications until October 14 to the Lincoln Hotel, Seattle, Wash., after that until October 25 to Los Angeles, California, care of Mr. S. P. Vickers, Storey Building.

Now is the Time

to renew THE YOUNG CRUSADER subscriptions for your public school teachers—nine months' subscriptions for twenty cents.

Kindly send in the subscriptions at once so that the September number may reach the teachers at the very beginning of the school year, that they may count upon its help as they plan the year's work.

HOW TOMMY WAS CURED

KATE WOODWARD NOBLE, Waterbury, Conn.

Tommy was strutting up and down, back of the barn, smoking a cigaret. He bad tried several times before, on tbe sly, and had finally mastered what he considered quite a manly accomplishment. Mother didn't know it, to be sure, neither did Madge or Minnie, his twin sisters. Women and girls were all right in their place, but they didn't know much about what boys and men had to do to be up-to-date. Tommy reasoned that he was a big boy now, almost fourteen years old, and he must do as the rest of the fellows did. To be sure the teacher talked to tbem and told them cigarets were bad for boys, but the boys scoffed behind her back, despising her advice.

Madge and Minnie, returning home from a playmate's house sooner than Tommy had bargained for, spied Tommy about the time he saw them. He had made haste to throw his cigaret on the ground and scrape the dirt over it with his foot, but the girls had caught a glimpse of it and both exclaimed: "Tommy Harris! You were smoking one of those horrid cigarets!" and Madge added: "We'll tell mama just as soon as she comes home!"

"Aw! shut up!" remarked Tommy in the rough language he had learned from his new school friends in the sixth grade, "I wouldn't be a tattle-tale!"

"'Tisn't tattling," said Minnie indignantly. "It's just telling mama what she ought to know, same as if you were sick or something."

"Well, I'm all right, and I'm not going to be tied to a woman's apron-strings, either. Lots of fellows smoke, and men, too. 'Tain't wicked, only a fellow's women folks make a row about it."

"Aren't you mean, Tommy?" said Madge. "I don't see what makes you so rough and hateful to us lately. You never used to be. And you know the doctor said mama musn't be worried about anything."

"You aren't sure I was smoking, anyway," said Tommy, a little uneasily. "I haven't any cigarets. And if I had, and you went and told mama so, I s'pose she'd go and fret and cry and have a headache and you'd lay it to me. You'd better wait till you catch me at it!" and away ran Tommy, carefully keeping his stained tell-tale fingers in his pockets till he was out of sight.

Madge looked at Minnie. "He was smoking, I just know he was," she said. "Mama would feel dreadfully, for I heard her say he was growing so fast that she was afraid he would outdistance his strength, and the doctor said he'd be all right if she was careful about him."

"It's those horrid boys at school," said Minnie. "Tommy thinks they are all right because they tell bim how big and strong he is, and he just tries to be like them every way he can. I don't want to tell mama, because everything bothers her so, but we'll have to do something to cure him."

"What can we do, I wonder. If we told the teacher she would scold and maybe punish him, and then he would act worse than ever; he's so stubborn, and he doesn't like Miss Brown very well, anyhow."

Just then Mr. Tyler, the new minister, came up the walk. "Is your mother at home?" he asked, pleasantly.

"No, Mr. Tyler, she isn't," said Madge. "She went to the city and won't be home for an hour or more yet. But won't you come in?"

Mr. Tyler accepted the invitation and followed the little girls into the pleasant sitting room. "I met Tommy down street," he said, "so I know he isn't at home, either."

Madge and Minnie never knew just how it happened, but before long they were telling Mr. Tyler all about Tommy; what a good boy he used to be, but how the boys he played with now at school were making him rough and rude like themselves. "And we're afraid he smokes cigarets," said Madge, "and we want to cure him so mama won't know about it and be worried. Since papa died she gets headaches if anything bothers her."

"Please don't think we want to tattle," said Minnie. "We do love Tommy, but we just can't think what to do. It's just like as if he was sick and you were the doctor that could cure him."

Mr. Tyler smiled. He liked boys, and knew pretty well how to get along with them, but he had only been in the place a little while and had not yet had time to get much acquainted with the boys of his parish. He had noted the yellow stains on some of the fingers, and had been thinking over a plan for fighting the cigaret habit.

"It won't do any good to scold Tommy," explained Madge. "He just gets mad and spunky, and won't give in, and he says Miss Brown rubs him the wrong way.

O dear, I don't know what we can do."

"I think I do," said Mr. Tyler. "You keep still till I have a chance to try my plan and see if we don't cure Tommy and some of the other boys before we get through." Then he went on to tell the girls what he wished to do, and as he talked, the sober little faces of the girls brightened and at the end they were laughing heartily. "That's just splendid!" said Minnie, and Madge chimed in, "Yes, that will do it if anything will."

The next Sunday Mr. Tyler told the boys in Sunday school about a new club he wanted to form. "All the boys that wish to do so can belong to it," he said. "We will have a baseball nine, and a football team, and all those things when we get well started. But each member will have to pass the five points and take the three degrees before he will be a real member of the Kwasind Club." He told them the story of the strong man, Kwasind, Hiawatha's friend, for whom the club was named, and asked the boys to meet him the next evening at the parish house, when they would learn more of the club and its requirements.

The next morning Mr. Tyler called on tbe village doctor, who was a college classmate, and unfolded his plan. Then he took a list of names of older boys, given to him by the doctor, and asked them to come to his home that afternoon to perfect the plans. They were there promptly, and by evening everything was ready for starting the club. No one was to know just what was meant by the five points and the three degrees until he had passed into full membersbip, but it sounded delightfully mysterious, and as the minister and the doctor had chosen for the board of officers boys who were sure of standing the tests, they were soon elected. Only a few other boys appeared at the first meeting, but they were questioned a little concerning their desire to become members of a club that required boys who liked athletic games, and received a badge with the name of the club in the center and two points of a star turned up. These badges were of paper only, but Mr. Tyler explained that as soon as they had passed all five points they would have a metal badge and that the badges of the three degrees would be added, as each was received, till the badge was complete. It would be a small five-pointed star, each point of a different color, with three pendants. A most enticing prospectus with all the sports boys love was mapped out, and the first members left, full of enthusiasm, to tell their mates and urge them to join.

Tommy had scornfully held back the first night. "Aw, don't you bother me about Mr. Tyler's club," he said. "I'm going to wait and see what fellows join before I go in and if there's any fun, or if it's just a goody-trap." Tommy's mother was very busy in these days, and the girls did not call her attention to Tommy's actions, so he kept on smoking cigarets, indulging in rough talk, and was altogether changed from the kind, merry brother of the fourth grade, though he was careful to keep his mother in ignorance of the change in him. But the members of the Kwasind club talked so much of the run they were having, and displayed their badges so proudly, and exchanged so freely all sorts of mysterious signs and passwords, that Tommy finally agreed to go to the parish house the next Monday night and see for himself what was going on. He was encouraged to do this by seeing badges on some of the older boys who were known to be athletic stars, and on some of the sixth grade boys, and felt that he was really losing something desirable.

All might have gone well had not Tommy in an unguarded moment, revealed his purpose to his sixth grade chums. He was greeted with such a chorus of jeers, and shouts of "Going to be a nice little Sunday school boy all the week, so he was!" and similar taunts that he weakened and stayed away from the meeting. "I thought you said you were going to the parish house tonight," said his mother, rather surprised that Tommy made no move toward getting ready.

"I don't want to," rejoined Tommy.

"They say the boys have a lot of fun there," his mother persisted. "I wish you would go! They are nice boys, and Mr. Tyler seems to take a lot of interest in them. Why don't you go with them instead of with those rough boys down at your school?"

Tommy looked down at his feet and wriggled uneasily as his mother went on: "First you know you won't have any other friends. I don't care how poor a boy is—yes, I know some of those boys have rich fathers—if he only behaves well. I saw Jack Higgins and Fred Fenner and Henry Halpine, three of the boys I have seen you playing with lately, standing on the corner like three little loafers, smoking cigarets, today, and as I passed I heard

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

Mrs. Mitchner Recounts the Glories of Kansas to Eastern Audiences

Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., who has been taking a "temperance suffrage tramp" through the eastern states, speaking daily in the interest of "Votes for Women," is still loyal to her home state of Kansas, the only state which possesses constitutional prohibition and constitutional suffrage, declares the Topeka Capital in telling of the busy weeks which Mrs. Mitchner has spent in Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania since she started from Kansas in July. At present Mrs. Mitchner is in Pennsylvania where she is speaking every evening, twice on Sunday, often visiting two towns in the same day. She has traveled by train, auto, carriage and trolley, and her meetings have been large and well attended.

"People are always ready to listen to what prohibition and suffrage have done for our state, as told by a Kansas woman," Mrs. Mitchner says. "The trouble here has been that people were not ready for the movement which has placed suffrage foremost among the issues of our nation, but they are waking up and now they seem not only ready, but eager, to listen and be persuaded and convinced.

"The Liberty Bell has been a great educator in Pennsylvania. And from the old farmer who hobbles to his gate to clutch the yellow fliers that the suffragists toss into his dooryard, to the callow youth who swaggers down the street, there is scarcely a man who is not interested in 'Votes for Women.'

"Knots of men stand on the corners discussing woman suffrage. 'Well, you see things are different from what they used to be when our mothers were young.' 'Yes, sir, there are 9,000,000 working women in the country now, and I guess they need the vote.' 'Suffrage is coming, anyhow; so you might as well get into the bandwagon.' These are snatches of street corner conversations I have heard."

Temperance Educational Quarterly

The Temperance Educational Quarterly is in charge of Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction. Her address is Hartford, Wisconsin. This educational magazine is divided into four numbers. The October number is the Counselors' number. The January, the Prize Essay number. The April, the Lecturers' and Teachers' number, and the July, a special number on Tobacco. The October number of this year will be one of great value as it will contain articles by Dr. Saleeby of London, one of the most eminent scientists and physiologists; Dr. W. L. Reid of Glasgow, the ex-President of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons; Dr. Arthur Holmes, Dean of the Teachers' College of Pennsylvania; Dr. Crothers, the veteran scholar in temperance investigation, and others who are up-to-date in temperance research. Indeed, every copy of the Quarterly is packed with the latest scientific investigation. Not alone do teachers of the public schools need the Quarterly, but every worker in the temperance hosts requires its information. A single subscription is fifty cents, in clubs of ten, forty cents, and a single number, fifteen cents.

Mrs. Josephine Williams of Grandview, Washington, was among the callers recently welcomed at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage. Mrs. Williams, her husband and two children have been enjoying an automobile tour of some 6,500 miles.

A W. C. T. U. "Medical Diagnosis"

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the King county (Wash.) white ribboners met recently in the Woodland Park Methodist church, Seattle. "A Medical Diagnosis of the Condition of the Various Unions" was a feature of one of the meetings and some of the diseases which are a foe to the W. C. T. U., as well as to human life, were considered in detail. Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, in place of Mrs. Jessie Millican, who was unable to deliver her address, spoke on "Paralysis."

"Paralysis," said Mrs. Munns, "is caused by the breaking of blood vessels and by blood clots themselves. Its effects are known. Unless the various unions of King county and of the state generally recognize what paralysis is, our organizations are in danger of becoming afflicted. Not that they have it now by any means, but we must prepare for all things. The greatest cause of paralysis in our movement today is the blood clot of inactivity, which declares that because prohibition has been gained, we need do no more. Far from it. Our fight has only begun. The next legislature has the power to repeal the statutory law of prohibition, and we must be on our guard."

Mrs. Murray Gamble, delivering her talk on "Fever," told an original dialect Southern story dealing with this topic. Mrs. W. F. Manney, on "Heart Trouble," said that the W. C. T. U. must guard against all attacks on its most vital organ, the heart, represented by interest and intelligence.

Warned Against Diseases

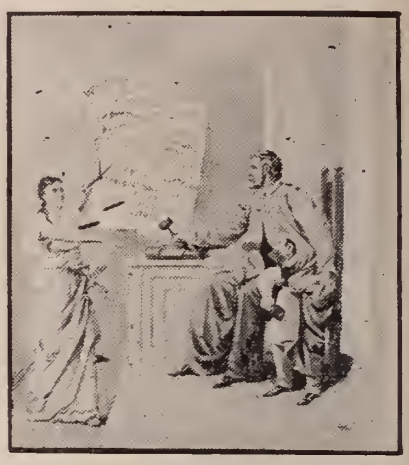
Mrs. Minnie Bardell, on "Dyspepsia," said: "This disease is caused by overeating or by fast eating. It causes loss of strength and stupidity. Now that we have feasted on victory, do not let us succumb." Mrs. Libbie Beach Brown, on "Starvation," declared that the sustenance of the organization lay in its faith and recognition of God. Mrs. Emma Anderson, on "Arterio Sclerosis," which means the hardening of arteries, declared that the union should never permit an inactive condition of its "roots" through general disinterest.

The last day of the convention opened with devotional services by Mrs. Minnie Matthewson. Reports were given by Mrs. Della Somers, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg, Mrs. Minnie Schumacher, Mrs. Jessie Martin, Mrs. Jackson Silbaugh, Mrs. Flora Glazier, Mrs. Emma Parks, Mrs. Alfa Freeman, Mrs. Florence Smith, Mrs. M. S. Good, Mrs. Rebecca A. Best, Mrs. Alma Shuler, Mrs. D. J. Orner, Mrs. J. M. Bruce, Mrs. E. E. Thayer, Mrs. Nettie Olson and Mrs. Clyda Bundy.

The former officers were re-elected as follows: President, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell, who has served in this capacity for six years; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg, who is entering upon her fourteenth year of service in this office; recording secretary, Mrs. M. S. Good; treasurer, Mrs. Della Somers. Mrs. M. G. Duncaster was chosen assistant recording secretary and Mrs. Lillie Rogers was selected by ballot as delegate to the state W. C. T. U. convention.

One of the significant features of the "efficiency institute" held recently in Oshkosh, Wis., was the announcement that forty-one members of the local medical profession had endorsed resolutions similar to those passed by the national convention of alienists and neurologists, "unqualifiedly condemning the use of alcoholic beverages" and declaring that "organized medicine should initiate and carry on a systematic, persistent propaganda for the education of the public regarding the deleterious effects of alcohol."

Under the Arm of the Law



WILL YOU VOTE TO PROTECT HIM?

Temperance Posters

33 kinds; pledge cards, programs, libraries, lantern slides, and information of all kinds, as well as speakers, furnished by

Presbyterian Board of Temperance
First National Bank Building
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Eighteen Prohibition States
Prohibition
State Pennants

A strong paper pennant. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 18 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

How Tommy Was Cured

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

them using language it would break my heart to hear you use. I wish, Tommy, you would choose some other companions before you get into their bad ways."

"O mother," said Tommy, "they aren't so bad. They are good fellows and treat to candy and soda and such things most every day, and they just want to do as the men and the big boys do. Cigarets are too small to hurt anybody, anyhow."

"I know better," said Mrs. Harris. "Cigarets are bad things, and I don't want you to get to using them—you never have, have you?"

(Continued next week)

MINNESOTA REJOICES OVER VICTORIES OF PAST MONTHS

MRS. EVA EMERSON WOLD

The thirty-ninth annual convention of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., for the first time in the history of the organization, had the distinction of being held in saloonless territory, the clean, beautiful and prosperous city of Fairmont. While this convention was of great interest in many ways it was particularly so because of the attendance of Miss Anna A. Gordon, the beloved National president. The church was packed to its very fullest capacity on Thursday evening, August 20, when she gave the convention address. Her loving, helpful, eloquent message won the hearts of all and as she told of the work of our great leaders and how the plans they laid are being realized in the prohibition progress of today she was greeted with rounds of applause.

"You have been having regular Monday wash days here in Minnesota with the result that there are now forty-five counties hanging on the line to dry," said Miss Gordon; "and I think the good women of the W. C. T. U. had a good deal to do with it."

"How proud we were last year at our convention when we had nine state-wide prohibition states," she continued, "and how we named all nine beginning with Maine and down the line. And we thought it was a formidable list. But now we have eighteen state-wide prohibition states and we would have had nineteen if Utah had had the right kind of a governor, for Governor Spry of Utah vetoed the prohibition bill that passed both houses of the Utah legislature by a tremendous majority. He did this after the legislature had adjourned so that there should be no chance of passing it over his veto. But we will soon have nineteen, notwithstanding, for South Carolina is going dry and will join the 'solid south' and make all that section of the map white."

There were 224 voting delegates present besides a large number of visitors, making over 300 in all. The old officers were re-elected as follows: President, Miss Rozette Hendrix; vice-president, Mrs. Eva Waterman; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Kate Kercher; recording secretary, Mrs. Belle Welch; treasurer, Mrs. Della R. Mandigo.

Reports showed a gain of 764 active members during the year and a total active membership of 7,406 with 774 honorary members. The W. C. T. U. of the Eighth ward, Minneapolis, is the largest in the state with a membership of 220. Crookston union made a gain of eighty-nine members, the greatest in the state. The district making the largest gain was number Fourteen, which increased its membership by 126. The Y. P. B. banner for the greatest gain in membership went to the Nelson Y. P. B.

Miss Mary Neddau of Campbell was awarded the $25 prize for the best high school essay and Miss Frances Stark of Kensington won the grade essay prize of $15.

The convention opened Tuesday night, August 24, with a banquet, the toasts being responded to by ex-Senator Haycraft; Frank A. Day, editor of the Fairmont Sentinel; Arthur M. Nelson, Rev. Fred Fredrickson and Mrs. Guthre.

Senator Haycraft characterized Fairmont as "the most progressive, the cleanest and the most enterprising city in the state." In 1914 they had 366 arrests in that city and over 300 were for drunkenness. But on April 6 last the citizens of Fairmont ousted the saloon and while they had blind pigs before they have none now. They went after the offenders and punished them so severely that law breakers do not care to run further risks. He spoke enthusiastically for woman suffrage. "Nothing strikes such terror to evil-doers as a good woman headed towards the ballot box," he said.

Editor Day's advice to the women was to get hold of the ballot and the newspapers. He emphasized the fact that the press of today is the great and mighty force for moulding public opinion. And in saying this he said he did not wish to discredit the women. They had fought for the principle of temperance years before man or press dared to take it up. If you want to hit a blow at something get a good paper everlastingly pounding at it and you can do it, because the newspapers go into homes, offices, saloons, barber shops and everywhere.

The president's address given Wednesday afternoon was a masterpiece. Painstaking, thorough and complete it was a splendid review of the advancement that has been made in the world, nation and state during the past year.

President Hendrix advocated the having of an "All Over the State Campaign Day" to start the state-wide prohibition campaign. The date has since been set by the state officers as September 28, the birthday of our sainted leader, Frances Willard.

Considerable time was devoted to institute work which was very helpful. The topics discussed were "Efficiency," by Mrs. Kate Kercher; "Posters," Mrs. Susie Stageberg; "Papers," Mrs. Carrie Green; "Open Air Meetings," Mrs. Martha Lobeck; "Parades," Mrs. Nella C. Hodge; "Campaign Plans," Miss Anna A. Gordon: "Programs," Mrs. Helen Craig; "Activities," Mrs. Laura Ward; "Finances," Mrs. Della R. Mandigo, and "Attendance," Mrs. Luella Sayre.

Special features of the convention were the parades before the evening programs. The first evening there was a peace parade with about 300 women carrying peace banners and flags, who marched in single file from the Christian church to the convention church. The parade preceded a short peace program and later a diamond medal contest was held. The second parade was the convention march. Leading the procession were the eighteen prohibition states followed by the suffrage states. In the center was Minnesota carrying an umbrella half white and half black, signifying her half "wet" and half "dry" condition. From this umbrella extended streamers to the Young Campaigners, L. T. L., Y. P. B., the departments and the W. C. T. U. workers all along the line, implying that through these we expect in the near future to secure total prohibition. In the division representing the districts of the state, banners were carried naming the counties in each district which have gone dry through county or local option, or by the Indian treaty law. Throughout the convention the utmost good feeling prevailed and it will go down in history as one of the best the state has ever had.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous—full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 75,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

Everyone notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you, I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

SUSANNA COCROFT,

Dept. 37 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound. Price $2.00.

THE MISSION PLAY AN ATTRACTION OF THE CONVENTION RETURN TRIP

Delegates to the National W. C. T. U. Convention who return by way of Southern California will wish to see the Mission Play at San Gabriel, Los Angeles, a pageant drama which tells vividly the thrilling story of the founding of Christian civilization on the western shores of America, and helps the visitor to understand and sympathize with the traditions and history of the state. Some one has said that "this 'Mission Play' is to California what 'The Passion Play' is to Ober-Ammergau." One hundred actors, men, women and children, including thirty native California Indians, take part in the play and its pageants, and it is produced under the personal direction of the author, John Steven McGroarty. It is shown in a specially constructed semi-open-air theater under the very walls of the old mission San Gabriel, which was the fourth of the great hospices erected by the early Franciscan "padres." There were twenty-one of these missions, each one day's journey apart from the other, and connected by a great road known as El Camino Real, or "The King's Highway"—a distance of seven hundred miles between San Diego and Sonoma.

The Mission Playhouse is enclosed in tropical gardens of great beauty, in which are miniatures of all the old missions of California. These gardens are used by the audiences for promenading between acts of the play. Ancient mission bells are rung inside the theater to recall the people to the performance.

The Mission Play, which was first performed in 1912, has been shown for a number of weeks each succeeding year. During 1915 it has been given each afternoon and two evenings a week and will continue until December.

To W. C. T. U. members, in parties of ten or more, a discount of 15 per cent will be allowed on all tickets over 50 cents.

Circulation Department

THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.00 a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 25c a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each. Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries:
THE UNION SIGNAL - - - $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER - - - 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

REMEMBER

Kindly bear in mind that the books close this year SEPTEMBER 25, and all subscriptions to be credited to our various workers must reach us on or before this date. Again let us emphasize the fact that credits will be given on all subscriptions in our hands by September 25. The morning of September 26 begins a new W. C. T. U. year.

OVER HALF A THOUSAND

White Ribboners are members of the Win One Circle for 1915. Over half a thousand are wearing the little white ribbon pin which is sent to every one who is already a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL and sends us a NEW SUBSCRIBER. If you have not already joined this Circle, will you not do so and have your name enrolled during this W. C. T. U. year, which closes September 25?

Members of 1915 Win One Circle

502. Mrs. Lucy Morgan, Pleasant Plains, Ia.
503. Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.
504. Lucy J. Ridings, Solomon, Kans.
505. Mrs. Burton R. De Lambert, Pierson, Ia.
506. Mrs. S. J. Woodhull, Wellsville, Mo.
507. Miss Roena E. Shaner, Jackson, Mo.
508. Mrs. Hattie Leek, Johnstown, N. Y.
509. Mrs. J. M. Wright, Aledo, Ill.
510. Miss Mary A. Ord, Alhambra, Cal.
511. Mrs. Mattie C. McConnell, Gate City, Va.
512. Mrs. J. E. Nowlin, College Park, Ia.
513. Mrs. Jennie Vos, Holland, Mich.
514. Sarah Duffield, Humphreys, Mo.
515. Mrs. Jennie H. Wilson, Washington, Pa.
516. Grace Lowe, New Lexington, O.
517. Miss E. Rayburn, St. Louis, Mo.
518. Mrs. Libbie Bowisier, Stevens Point, Wis.
519. Mrs. J. T. Underhill, Melrose Highlands, Mass.
520. Martha Speicher, Urbana, Ind.
521. Mrs. Alla Dickinson, El Dorado Springs, Mo.
522. Mrs. M. Della Moats, Sherwood, O.
523. Mrs. F. J. Arnold, Hartford, N. Y.
524. Mrs. Julia Trask, Poland, N. Y.
525. Mrs. Sena Hartzell Wallace, Kansas City, Kans.

DESIRABLE BIRTHDAY GIFTS

The enclosed subscriptions to The Young Crusader are birthday gifts to nephews nine and seven years old, trusting that they may grow up with the right training. I have been a subscriber and reader of THE UNION SIGNAL for years.

SUBSCRIBER AT ENID, OKLA.

GRANDCHILDREN REMEMBERED

My granddaughter is to begin her first school soon and I enclose subscription for The Young Crusader for her. If my grandchildren are not temperance boys and girls it won't be my fault. The Crusader is at the head of its class.

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.

View on Columbia River Highway

AS THE "SPECIAL" PASSES THROUGH OREGON

(Continued from Page Four)

Marsters" because of her ability to bring things to pass. Mrs. Marsters and the president of the Commercial Club are working together to secure the success of the day and the comfort of every guest. From away across the Coast Range some Coos county white ribboners are planning to drive the seventy-five miles over mountain roads to get the inspiration of Mother National's visit.

Those who enjoy beautiful scenery should watch from the left side of the train Monday morning, a half hour after passing Grants Pass. There is a dam across the Rogue River where the electricity used in southern Oregon and northern California is manufactured. Rising to the left is Table Rock, the scene of many an Indian battle, and farther away the snowy cone of Mt. Pitt is especially beautiful. The combination is one of the most wonderful views found anywhere in America.

If weather permits, the special train will be met at Medford by autos and our guests will have a beautiful ride of twelve miles or more over a road paved like a city street. The train will then proceed to Ashland and be made ready for the long hard day of mountain climbing over the Siskiyous and around Mt. Shasta. After a drive around Ashland and a welcome from its hospitable citizens and our own white ribboners our friends will return to the train, much refreshed by the early morning ride.

Ashland is located in the foothills of the Siskiyou Mountains, at the upper end of the beautiful Rogue River valley of southern Oregon. It has a population of six thousand, is famous for its wonderful mineral springs, its mild and delightful climate and the charm and beauty of its environment. It is a gem in a rich setting and is destined to be one of the big resorts of the Pacific Coast. It has a park system that is one of the most beautiful in the country. Here is located the Southern Oregon Chautauqua which each year holds a ten-day meeting with a splendid program. The W. C. T. U. is a permanent feature of this Chautauqua. Citizens are spending $175,000 this year on the development of springs and additional parks. Essentially a residence city, most of its citizens own their own homes. Ashland has all the advantages of a modern city, a high type of citizenship, with corresponding standards of education and morals, and is an attractive place to visit or in which to make a permanent home. It is well named "the City Beautiful."

Eighteen miles south of Ashland the train will leave Oregon for California. Our love and interest, which have been with our white ribbon guests every moment of the time, will accompany them on the way.

"Better lo'ed ye canna be."

We hope you'll all come back again very soon.

FOOT COMFORT GUARANTEED
In Simon's EZ WEAR Shoes
For MEN, WOMEN and CHILDREN
Soft, Stylish, Flexible model. Unlined, new live rubber heels. Need no breaking in. Feel like an old shoe the minute you put them on.
$3.90 POSTPAID
It's Free Catalogue of over 500 comfortable Ezwear styles and self measurement blank! Write today.
The F. SIMON SHOE 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG--COUNT ON ME?
90,000 sold. Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. $1.00 per dozen.
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

The Complete Poems OF Mary A. Lathbury
POET LAUREATE of CHAUTAUQUA and a loyal and devoted member of the WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
The book contains all of her lyrics and hymns and also Portraits of the Author
Introduction by Bishop JOHN H. VINCENT
Foreword by Dr. W. GARRETT HORDER of England
Price, $1.25 Postpaid
THE NUNC LICET PRESS
920 Nicollet Ave. Minneapolis, Minn.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., SEPTEMBER 23, 1915 | No. 39

John Barleycorn, Good-bye!

Lyric by
LES WALLACE and J. MALONEY

Music by
ROBERT D. SHARP

John Bar - ley - corn, You have been the curse of man, You mf-ff

stole his ver - y soul, you fiend, De - ny it if you can. Now ev - 'ry na - tion on the globe, Has raised the bat - tle cry, John ff

vigoróso

Bar - ley - corn! "GOOD" bye! bye!

fff

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT SECURED.
All Rights of Reproduction Reserved.
Copyright, 1915, by Robert D. Sharp Co., Denver, Colo.

CAMPAIGN EDITION

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

Lincoln Hotel, National Convention Headquarters

AS CONVENTION DAYS DRAW NEAR

CORNELIA TEMPLETON HATCHER

"Only ——— weeks to Convention!" The exclamation gains a deeper note of satisfaction with each weekly meeting, at state headquarters, of the general Committee on Arrangements. Thirty-five women were present at the last meeting, each committee and sub-committee reporting promptly and lucidly upon the work in hand. "These are they" who think and talk and eat and sleep with the plans for the entertainment of the National Convention. Under the able leadership of "the Margarets," the untiring president and corresponding secretary of the West Washington W. C. T. U., the women of Seattle have met and are continuing to meet and overcome the problems incident to convention entertaining—always present but peculiar to a city that has been "conventioned" to repletion during this California exposition year of 1915.

The passing show of "Shrine week," when 30,000 men kept the streets of Seattle a-glitter with raiment that the bird of paradise would shun (if said bird were of the feminine gender), was succeeded by the more sober, but still festive Knights of Columbus meeting. Then came the chemists of the United States, who demonstrated their fitness for partnership in the medical fraternity by serving four varieties of new non-alcoholic drinks—a radical departure from their custom at annual banquets of the past. Later came the American Bankers' Association, and it is upon the mental wave of prosperity engendered by contact with the financiers of the country, that the W. C. T. U. women will sail serenely into the harbor of happy Convention days.

The Convention Headquarters

The Lincoln Hotel has been selected as Convention headquarters, and a glance at the accompanying illustration will confirm all that might be said of its desirability. To have secured an hotel that is not only without a bar, but has a woman manager, is double cause for congratulation. Mrs. Frank Brown, the hostess of the Lincoln, is an efficient manager and a charming woman, who will do all in her power to make our guests comfortable and happy; and the hotel will be a central gathering place for the delegates who may be housed elsewhere, as the social functions of the Convention will doubtless be held there. The Lincoln is five short blocks from the Convention church, and the walk is almost on a level, a fact which may comfort those who have an antipathy to hill climbing.

Beautiful Plymouth Church, already described to UNION SIGNAL readers, offers abundant hospitality to our many conferences, so there will be no necessity for going from church to church to find the daily gatherings of zealous superintendents and their attendant co-workers. Plymouth will hold them all under her ample roof.

The securing of homes for delegates is proceeding with dispatch and satisfaction under the generalship of Mrs. E P. Mayfield, chairman of the Hospitality committee; and a long list of desirable hotels and rooming houses to be recommended to visitors has been compiled by Mrs. Sadie Ellis, chairman of the sub-committee, who has this work in hand. Mrs. Mayfield's address is 152 Lee St., and Mrs. Ellis' is 4020 14th Ave. N. E.

Special Attractions of the Puget Sound Country

The wonderful scenic attractions of Seattle and the Puget Sound country, "the Mediterranean of the West," have been adequately set forth in recent issues of THE UNION SIGNAL; and while the special excursion season does not extend into October, our climate permits of sightseeing at any time of the year, and the Convention dates are likely to find us in the midst of a beautiful Indian summer.

Our neighbor city of Tacoma is less than two hours away by steamer, and the trip gives one a fine view of the harbors of both cities and many charming glimpses of the Sound. The round-trip fare to Tacoma is fifty cents; and for $1.95 one may make the automobile tour of Tacoma a part of the same trip, with choice between steamer and interurban for the return route.

Bremerton, a bustling little city which is headquarters for the United States Navy Yard, is also a short distance from Seattle, with a round-trip fare of fifty cents; and there are always a sufficient number of battleships and cruisers in port to make the trip exciting and interesting.

For those who wish to spend a whole day on an excursion into the country, there is an automobile ride to Snoqualmie Falls, a trip that gives the visitor a true insight into the great Northwest—through the city, along the shores of Lake Washington, through dense timber yet unmarred by the woodsman, on to the great falls, second in power to Niagara, that were named Snoqualmie by the Indians ages ago. The round-trip fare is $3.00.

Of the Canadian cities on the North, Victoria, said to be "a part of the mother country transplanted to the Pacific coast," may be visited in one day; one hour and forty-five minutes is allowed for a drive between the arrival and departure of the steamer. The round-trip fare is $3.50.

It is expected that a free automobile ride over Seattle's twenty-five miles of boulevards will be provided for all delegates on the afternoon of October 9, between the hours of four and six. For those who wish to visit any particular part of the outlying suburbs there are convenient auto stages arriving and departing from a central depot at two-hour intervals.

The West Washington W. C. T. U. has called "Mother National" to be her guest and counselor at a critical time in the history of the state. We are to rejoice together over the splendid victory for prohibition so hardly won at the polls last November, while we counsel as to the future when all of our resources will be taxed to secure the law enforcement so necessary to the success of the measure for which we stand sponsor. The liquor traffic has not relinquished its hold upon the throat of the fair Evergreen State. Two suits challenging the constitutionality of the prohibition bill are to come before the supreme court, possibly during Convention days. So we turn eager eyes to the East and the South for the messages of courage and optimism born of experience that will rally the Washington clans for the battles still impending.

Washington wants you and needs you; the Seattle comrades want you, and need you. Let the gathering of the clans by the Western sea be of such magnitude that the slogan, "National Constitutional Prohibition in 1920," will convey to the senses of those who question its probability a conviction that though they may dispute every step of the way, it is God's way, and "His errands never fail."

ɜOUTH CAROLINA, NINETEENTH PROHIBITION STATE, OUT-LAWS LIQUOR TRAFFIC BY TWO-THIRDS MAJORITY VOTE

MRS. JOSEPH SPROTT, President South Carolina W. C. T. U.

Our hearts are singing today over the reat victory for prohibition in South arolina. Prohibition carried by a two-ıirds majority, every county except the ıe in which Charleston is located vot-g dry. Governor Richard I. Manning ıs issued the following statement:

"The people of the state have voted r prohibition by a decisive majority. he people have spoken; the law will vern. The prohibitionists have won the st round in this fight. I want to say them that this fight is not completed, ıt the most important part of the battle ıs just begun. The determination of the ccess of the fight will now depend on em and me. I will look to the prohi-tionists, and to all other good citizens, r their active assistance. By this I ean I want information by affidavits or atements which I can use in prosecu-ɔns of violations of the law in the urts, so as to successfully prosecute and flict the penalty which the law pre-ribes for infractions of the law, and ɔt simply rumors and unsubstantiated atements which cannot help me to bring olators to just punishment.

"During the campaign last summer I edged myself to the enforcement of law d order. The people then spoke in no ıcertain terms, and during the few ɔnths I have been governor I have en-avored to fulfill that, and all other omises to the best of my ability.

"The sovereign people of South Carolina, in whom is vested all authority, have again spoken, and by their votes have declared that alcoholic liquors shall not be sold in this state.

Mrs. Joseph Sprott

"I believe in the rule of the people, and as their servant entrusted with a commission direct from them to enforce all laws, I desire to state that with the help of God and the support of the people, the laws shall be enforced so long as I am governor. I fully recognize the fact that the enforcement of law is a 'job,' but with the support of the people it shall be done. I shall continue to do my duty."

We feel that the victory in South Carolina is of peculiar importance because it is a demonstration of the fact that government control of the liquor business under the dispensary system has proven to be as gigantic a failure as any other system of regulation or control. After over twenty years' trial, first under the state and then under county management, South Carolina declares that the only way to control the liquor traffic is to kill it.

The law, which is a statutory measure, goes into effect January 1, 1916.

On the Sunday preceding September 14 meetings were held in many cities for special prayer for the election, and it was the theme in many pulpits and Sunday schools.

One remarkable thing about our campaign was that it was carried on almost entirely by men and women of the state. Lawyers, doctors, teachers, bankers, farmers, merchants gave unstintingly of their time and talents without money and without price. There were no speakers from outside the state till the last three weeks of the campaign.

ɜIZONA MINING MAN ENTHUSIAS-TIC CHAMPION OF PROHIBITION

Prohibition in the state of Arizona has ardent champion in Douglas Moffat, perintendent of the big Ray Consoli-ted Mine located at Ray, with a mill at ıyden, Arizona. When interviewed by representative of the Salt Lake City ws, on a recent visit to that city, he ıs outspoken and enthusiastic in his aise of the law and the benefits being perienced therefrom.

In answer to the question "How has ɔhibition worked out in your section the country?" Mr. Moffat said:

'It is a triumphant success. I have ted twice for prohibition when it has me up in Arizona, and will be glad to so again if necessary. The benefits ɜ so evident and far reaching that they ɜ hardly be overstated. They are own particularly in the case of our la-rers at the Ray Consolidated mill. Pay ys in the past were always more or less moralizing. Many of the men took their ney and spent it in the saloons, and days thereafter did not show up for rk. Labor in our country is scarce and ɜ results of such uncertainty among our nds were of the worst kind. Many men o had no other fault succumbed to their petite for whisky and were worthless laborers till they sobered up."

'What are the conditions today?"

Collection Good—Pay Days Quiet

'Today pay day is the same as any ıer day. Our work proceeds without erruption. More than that, merchants tl me that they make their collections thout difficulty, where they used to ve many hard accounts, and Mr. Blake, nager of the Gila Valley Loan & Trust npany, the savings bank there, in-med me that their savings had grown adily ever since prohibition went into ect. You will see it reflected in the nilies of the working men.

'There are many Mexican laborers ose children never knew what shoes ɜl stockings were. Now you see them aring decent clothing. The arrests are few and far between, and those who try to beat the law are jailed just as vigorously as for any other criminal act. A short time ago a Mexican drove in to our district from across the border, ——— miles away, with a load of liquor. He was promptly arrested, put in jail and his goods destroyed. Everyone in Arizona, so far as I know, business men and laborers alike, believe that state-wide prohibition is a success."

TAKE NORTH DAKOTA'S WORD FOR IT

If the citizens of Hennepin county, Minn., believe the statements of their North Dakota brethren (which are appearing in their newspapers) as to the benefits of prohibition, they will vote out the saloons on October 4.

Some of these statements, taken from letters in the possession of Judge C. A. Pollock, are very convincing. They read as follows:

Former Governor John Miller—I am sure the sentiment of the state in favor of the prohibition law was never so strong as at the present time.

Former Governor John Burke, now treasurer of the United States—The stubborn facts are that prosperity is more general in this state than in any other state in the Union. In my judgment the prohibition law is responsible, in a large degree, for our great increase and prosperity and for the enormous decrease in crime.

William H. White, lumber merchant, the owner of about twenty-five yards in the Red river valley; a 40-year resident—Watching the workings of the law in our state, I am not only convinced that it is right in principle, but decidedly the best policy from an economic standpoint.

James Kennedy, general contractor, Fargo—When the question of changing from a license system to prohibition was first proposed in 1884, and for several years afterward, I was bitterly opposed to prohibition. But I am now glad that the change was made, and there is no man in the state of North Dakota that would fight the return of the saloon in any guise stronger than I would, should the occasion arise, and I do not believe the people of North Dakota will ever permit the saloon's return to our state.

P. Elliott, Fargo, hotelkeeper—I know from actual experience in running a hotel that it is not necessary to keep a bar and sell intoxicating liquors. Prohibition has worked wonders for the good of our community, and our business men generally do not want the saloon brought to our borders.

R. B. Griffith, leading merchant of Grand Forks—When prohibition went into effect in 1890, forty saloons went out of business in our city. The friends of the saloon said grass would grow in our streets. My experience has proven that they were mistaken. My business has grown from a small beginning to about $500,000 annually. It has been clearly demonstrated that the saloon is a competitor of the store and a detriment to every legitimate business. As a purely business proposition, any community is a gainer by abolishing the liquor traffic.

Alexander Stern, Fargo merchant, owner of business houses for rent, and city commissioner—My rents have increased under prohibition rather than diminished. From the standpoint of the landlord, the prohibitory system is far superior to any other.

Hubert Harrington, Fargo hardware merchant—I unhesitatingly say that while originally I was not in favor of the law, yet experience has demonstrated to me its superiority over the license system.

S. S. Lyon, Fargo, cashier of the Merchants' National bank—A much larger proportion of our young men are saving money and opening bank accounts under prohibition than license. Our best business men would strongly oppose the return to the license system.

THE GREATEST COMMON CURSE IN AFRICA

REV. JOHN M. SPRINGER

Corner of Railroad Station at Kambove and Seven Chances for a Drink on the Main Street

[Mr. Springer and his wife, missionaries of the Methodist church, have been engaged for many years in pioneer missionary work in Central Africa, being especially identified with the Congo Mission.—EDITOR.]

The greatest common curse in Africa is not cannibalism, although there are still many tribes which have never been reached by the missionary and the Gospel and where human flesh is still eaten; it is not slavery, though tens of thousands of natives are still held in bondage by their fellow natives and are bought and sold; it is not fetishism, though fetishism slays its hundreds and thousands every year on the altars of its superstition by means of the poison cup and other tests; it is not polygamy, though that is one of the most prolific causes of trouble in the towns and villages; neither is it Mohammedanism, though that is reaching out its tentacles like a mammoth octopus menacing every portion of the continent, deceiving the natives into putting on a cloak of righteousness over their own filthy lives; no, none of these are so great a curse to the whole continent with its millions of black and brown and white peoples as is ALCOHOL, commonly called rum on the west coast, whisky in the interior and wine in South Africa.

Drunkenness has not been introduced into Africa by the white man. Native tribes have had their methods of making beer and many of them have known how to distill liquor from time immemorial. It is a significant feature of this industry that they say that at a certain period of the fermentation, the "nkishi" or evil spirits enter into the beer. Perhaps our forefathers believed the same thing and that is where we get the use of the word "spirits" as applying to such liquors. Certainly it is a right explanation of the effect.

But while the Africans can make liquor from grain and the sap of the palm tree, from certain fruits and other things, they cannot produce enough to imperil the whole continent as do the imported liquors of the white men. A large part of the cargo on the west coast boats is made up of foreign "rum." Missionaries sailing down the west coast are often exposed to one long, frightful orgy of drunkenness on shipboard and at every port until they are sick at heart. Without doubt the early death of many a new missionary soon after landing, a demise that has always been attributed to malarial fever, is largely due to the depressing weeks on shipboard and the constant witnessing of sights which will forever be a disgrace to the white race.

We have been torn with emotion many a time to see tons of death-dealing liquid sent ashore at first one port and then another. Then, just before the ship hoisted her anchors, one could observe the small boats pulling off with some white trader, crazy drunk and held in the boat by the strong hands of his nearly naked black servants, while the boatmen pulled vigorously for the shore. We have seen caravans from the interior arrive at a trading station, where a bucket of vile rum would be set out and a tin cup along with it. A half hour later the men who imbibed the stuff would be howling madmen.

In crossing the continent in 1907, when we reached the outskirts of the trading stations we found an almost empty country, a long line of graveyards taking the place of what had once been prosperous trading stations and native villages. It was an uncanny as well as a tragic sight. At last the Portuguese government has awakened to the economic phases of the situation, and plantation owners in Angola have been compelled to turn their gin distilleries into sugar factories or use them for some other useful purpose.

It is surprising to find that European liquors have gone to the uttermost recesses of Africa far ahead of the missionary. When Mrs. Springer and I came to the capital of Mwata Yamvo in 1912, being the first Protestant missionaries to arrive, we were offered champagne, port wine, palm beer and cigarets by the chief, who found it hard to understand our refusal of them all.

Along the railroad lines, which are rapidly being built to all sections of Africa, a wave of drunkenness sweeps like a devastating tidal wave. Before the railroad reaches a place, the saloons are in full swing. At Kambove a line of shacks was put up where whisky flowed out and most of the wages flowed in to such an extent that we called it "rotten row." At one place, the only one where a passing stranger could lodge and eat, the bar had to be emptied of its drunken men at eleven o'clock at night and the iron beds brought in from out-of-doors and the place turned into a bedroom. Early the next morning every one was routed out and the beds taken out again. One American waited for his breakfast and finally went to the proprietor about the matter. He was informed that he could have his breakfast, but not to let the other men know about it, as the proprietor wanted them to spend the time at the bar, which they would not do if they had something to eat.

Most of the white men who had been working along the railroad for years were in debt, having spent their money or had it stolen from them in the saloons. Just before I left Kambove I officiated at three suicide funerals in two weeks, the result of drink. It is safe to say that outside of the South African republic, fully seventy five per cent of the deaths of white men are due to drink rather than to the climate.

While we lived in Rhodesia, time and again I have seen the natives taking their masters home so drunk that they had to be held to keep them from doing violence. In Rhodesia now there is a very strict law against selling liquor to the natives but with such white men in the country the law is constantly being broken.

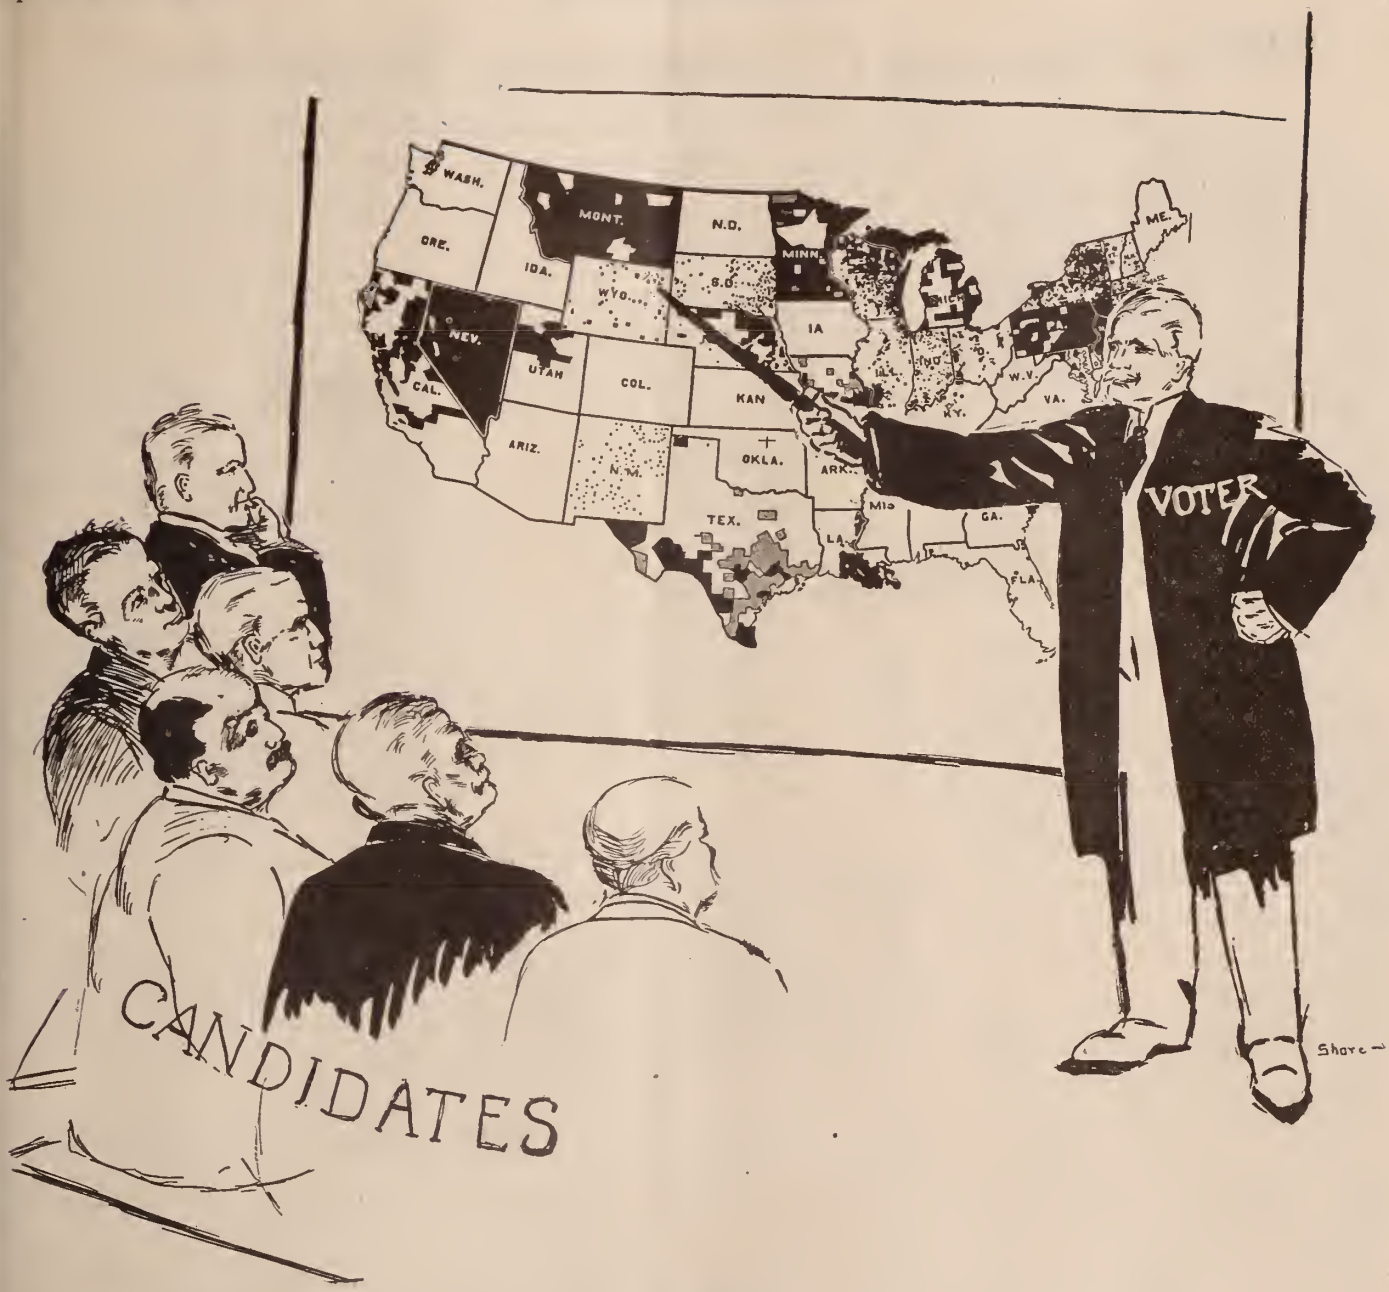
From time to time, natives who have been demoralized by the influence of these most degraded representatives of our own race, have done violence to white women and the cry of "black peril" has rung wildly among the white people. A committee of missionaries who investigated the causes and effects there learned two things: In the first place there were not so many cases of "black peril" in all Africa as there were of "white peril" in England; secondly, almost without exception, the natives were drunk at the time of violence, or attempted violence, on white women.

The Common Type of Trading Shack

In the Belgian Congo, it is allowable to sell up to fifteen per cent of alcohol in liquors to the natives. At nearly all the small trading shacks liquor is on sale. Drunkenness and degradation abound in all the white towns. The conditions are such that they cannot be printed.

Yet there is a brighter side—temperance sentiment is gaining. A man in Capetown told us that it is now a rare thing for one business man to invite another to a bar; that the tea rooms are doing a great deal of the business that used to belong to the saloons. We were ten days in Capetown in January and did not see one drunken man. The soldiers were absolutely prohibited from drinking.

We trust that one result of this awful war will be the hastening of the downfall of the "greatest common destroyer" of the world.



THE CANDIDATES' GEOGRAPHY LESSON

How many prohibition states are there?

Correct, nineteen.

How much of the area of the United States is under prohibition law?

Right, nearly eighty per cent.

How large a proportion of the population lives in no-license territory?

Yes, sixty-five per cent.

How many states have been added during the past year?

Precisely, ten, and South Carolina is the latest.

For your next lesson please find out how long, at that rate, it will take the entire nation to vote out the liquor traffic if every voter, legislator and statesman does his duty.

IT IS COMING THIS TIME TO STAY

The liquor people, whistling vigorously to maintain their courage in the presence of ill omens, declare that the present tidal wave of prohibition will soon have its ebb, like that of fifty years ago which gave "Maine laws" to many states, most of them being repealed within a few years. If they find any real comfort in thinking that history will repeat itself in this matter, it is because they reckon ill, leaving out several very significant factors which are in the present situation, and which were non-existent when prohibition had its first trial.

The prohibitionists of the twentieth century have the following advantages, which have contributed to the adoption of the reform in many states, and which tend to root it deeply in the mass of the citizenship, safe from the storms of passing political agitation:

1. The whole organized movement of Christian women for temperance has been at work for two generations, preparing the public mind morally.

2. Scientific instruction on the physiological effects of alcohol has lodged in the mind of every individual that the man who drinks is laying a foundation for physical weakness.

3. The economic waste caused by the drink habit is recognized by an age which has been lectured by a host of efficiency experts on the elimination of waste.

4. The labor unions, fraternal orders and life-insurance companies have a stake in keeping down the number of claimants on their relief funds, on which intemperance is the heaviest charge.

5. The railway and industrial corporations, now liable for accidents to their employes, are interested in all "safety first" legislation, and they know that the drinking man is the first to be jammed between the cars or maimed at his bench.

6. The world has the benefit of the example of the warring nations of Europe which, in laying aside every weight that they may run their present race successfully, have unanimously turned their alcohol into the gutter.

7. The states are not coming to their present resolution suddenly, or making a revolutionary transition from all wet to all dry. The local option campaigns of the past twenty years have won ground inch by inch, here a township, there a city precinct, here a city, there a county, until the black and white "drink map" of the nation looks like a shepherd's plaid.

In many states more than half the people are already living in dry territory before a state-wide law is enacted.

These considerations—and they are by no means all—confirm the belief that with this foundation under it, and with federal power behind it in the form of the Webb-Kenyon law, the prohibition which is coming now, and which has already happily entered large areas of the land, has come to stay.—The Christian Advocate.

Why National Constitutional Prohibition?

MRS. M. M. ALLEN, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Medical Temperance

A large part of the intelligent public of the United States is ready for prohibition, especially since the European war has shown clearly that nations like Russia, Germany, and France no longer regard alcoholic liquors as in any way beneficial to men in the stress of life, but rather as something to be carefully avoided if men are to be at their best in judgment, health and activity.

"Big Business" is ready for prohibition. The railroads, steel corporations, iron works, electric works, car works, factories, etc., are all becoming more and more opposed to liquor drinking. This is because they have learned that alcohol is a brain disturber that lessens efficiency, spoils materials, delays work, and makes additional expense for accident compensation.

"Safety First" Means No Alcohol

The accident compensation laws have led employers to examine into the causes of accidents. Mr. Wallace H. Rowe, president of the Pittsburgh Steel Company, says: "One of the largest steel companies in this district, after an exhaustive examination of the causes of accidents in the mills, makes the statement that eighty-five per cent of such accidents are attributable directly or indirectly to liquor." Other employers of labor give similar testimony, the Coatesville Steel and Iron Plant showing a decrease of fifty-four per cent in accidents with the town dry.

Police departments are ready for prohibition. The Police Commissioner of New York City recently sent out a booklet to all the policemen of the city in which the men are warned against whisky and other alcoholic drinks as injurious.

Insurance companies are ready for prohibition. The Association of Life Insurance Presidents at a recent meeting held in New York received a report upon investigations made as to the influence of alcoholism in shortening life. The investigation concerned the causes of premature deaths in the last twenty-five years among the 20,000,000 policy holders of forty-three leading insurance companies. The report said: "Among saloonkeepers there was an extra mortality of seventy per cent, and the causes of death indicated that alcoholic beverages had caused many of the deaths. . . . . Among the men who admitted that they had taken alcohol occasionally to excess there were 289 deaths where there would have been only 190 deaths had this group been made up of insured lives in general. The extra mortality was therefore over fifty per cent." The chairman of the bureau that made this investigation said: "If the government of Russia carries out its present intention to abolish permanently all forms of alcoholic beverages the saving in human life will be enormous."

Baseball men and all other athletes are ready for prohibition. The lovers of athletic sports have learned that booze spells misfortune in athletic combats. They know that beer does not give strength, but weakens muscle, and they laugh at the brewers' advertisements of "Beer as Food."

Whisky and Brandy No Longer Drugs

The best part of the medical profession is ready for prohibition. Whisky and brandy have been officially voted out of the revised edition of the U. S. Pharmacopœia by the committee in charge of the preparation of that standard book of medicines. State medical societies have been declaring for prohibition the last few years, and one national society so declared last year, that of the neurologists and alienists. These brain specialists declared: "We unqualifiedly condemn the use of alcoholic beverages, and recommend that the various state legislatures take steps to eliminate such use." The presidents of several medical societies in 1914 in their annual addresses spoke against the use of alcoholic liquors as medicine. The reports of large hospitals, such as Bellevue, New York, and Cook County Hospital, of Chicago, show that physicians are no longer relying upon alcohol as a remedy in disease. Health officials are ready and eager for prohibition. The health department of New York City, and the health departments of some states are carrying on an active campaign of education against alcohol.

The best part of the druggists' business is ready for prohibition. The National Association of Retail Druggists, and the American Pharmaceutical Association have repeatedly declared against the sale of liquors in connection with the drug trade. Some of the leading drugstores do not sell alcoholic liquors even on prescription.

Excessive Taxation Due to Drink

The taxpayers are ready for prohibition, omitting those interested in the sale of drink or those who are strongly addicted to its use. People are tired of the excessive taxation caused by drink. Most of the crime of this age is due to drink, according to the statements of leading judges, and the cost of caring for criminals adds heavily to taxation. The Committee of Fifty reported that twenty-five per cent of all the poverty of the United States is due to drink, directly or indirectly, forty-five per cent of the child destitution, and fifty per cent of the crime exclusive of drunkenness. Dr. Frederick Peterson of the New York State Board of Lunacy, in a bulletin issued by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in 1911, estimates that at least one-fifth of the 150,000 insane in the United States were made insane directly or indirectly by drink. He states that the cost of alcoholic insanity for the nation is $12,000,000 annually. Dr. Gregory of Bellevue Hospital, New York, said in a report of that hospital that of the insane patients cared for there forty per cent owed their condition to alcohol. He added: "It would be the greatest aid to humanity if measures might be taken to reduce the consumption of this poison (alcohol) to a minimum."

Economists Are Advocating Prohibition

Economists are ready for prohibition. The great waste of money and of human life caused by alcoholic drinks is leading thoughtful economists to declare that the liquor traffic must pass out of existence. Patriotic economists are crying out that food stuffs should not be destroyed while so many thousands in our land and in other lands are starving. This thought alone should influence Congress to vote for prohibition. Norway has prohibition because that country wants to conserve its food supply. Germany has officially asked the people to save the food stuffs and consume less alcohol. It is the wisest possible policy now for the United States to pass prohibitory laws which will make it impossible in this time of stress all over the world for grain to be destroyed in order that brain poison may be evolved. It is utter folly to convert millions of bushels of grain into beverages which injure the health and wealth and efficiency of those who consume them, while there is so much poverty and misery in our own land and in lands that we are striving to feed.

All the civilized world will applaud the wisdom of the Congress that votes right on this great question at such a time as this. There will be condemnation for a right stand only from the liquor traffic and its allies. The power of the liquor traffic to punish legislators is not so great as it once was, and the power of the prohibition forces to support those who are brave to do the best thing for the country is growing greater every day. What prohibition has done for Russia already in reducing crime, and in adding to individual wealth as evidenced by bank deposits, prohibition will do for America also. As Kansas says: "Prohibition is the most blessed asset a state can have."

HOW THEY DO IT IN RUSSIA

Two officers of the Russian Army sat with two women at a table in a café in Warsaw. They were eating, and drinking, and laughing, and making eyes at one another, all pleasantly and harmlessly enough, for their food was the food of the country, and their making eyes was the custom of the country, and their merriment was the merriment of youth. But what they were drinking was wine.

An officer came into the café—an officer tall and thin, more than six feet by several inches, and very erect and military in appearance. He wore a long gray overcoat and wide gold shoulder straps, and at his neck there glittered a cross. His eyes were coldly blue. His pointed beard was streaked with white. He carried a riding crop in his hand and was booted and spurred.

The café was full of officers and, as he entered, every one of them rose quickly to his feet and stood rigidly at salute. The two young officers who were sitting with the women jumped up, too, and came to salute. The women sat, rather frightened, in their chairs.

The tall bearded officer with the glittering cross looked about the room keenly and quickly. He returned the salutes. Then he walked to the table where the two young officers were sitting with the women. He reached down and took one of the glasses, holding it to his nose an instant and then threw it to the floor, where it broke to fragments at the feet of one of the young men.

"Vina!" he said sternly.

The two officers, grown gray with fear, trembled as they stood before him. The tall man looked at them with infinite disgust. He reached out, tore off their shoulder straps and threw them on the floor. Then he turned and said a few words in harsh Russian. Some soldiers came forward and surrounded the young men. The tall man made a gesture that meant "Take them away," and the two officers were marched from the room. They were degraded. They were sent to the ranks to serve as private soldiers.

The tall man with the pointed beard streaked with white, the cold blue eye and the glittering cross, was the Grand Duke Nikolai, the commander-in-chief of the Russian Army. By imperial ukase drinking was prohibited in the Russian Empire, owing largely to the demand of the grand duke on the Czar that drinking should be stopped, because of the need for a sober army in the struggle impending. These young men had broken the rule. They had disobeyed not only the ukase of the Czar but also the order of the commander-in-chief. Moreover, they had done their drinking publicly. He found them. Instantly he deprived them of their rank and sent them to the trenches.—By Samuel G. Blythe in Saturday Evening Post.

FOR WHICH WILL HE VOTE?

THE SALOON—AN ENEMY TO THE WORKING MAN AND THE FARMER

JOHN F. CUNNEEN, Chicago, Ill.

The liquor traffic advocates claim that the saloon brings prosperity, good times and high wages to the working man. They boast that more money was spent for liquor in the United States in 1907 than ever before. But a panic followed with more than four million of people out of work, hard times, low wages and starvation in the land. In 1892 the consumption of liquor increased over two gallons per capita, and the terrible panic of 1893 followed. When the consumption of liquor decreased good times returned. The people of Great Britain drink one and one-half times as much liquor per capita as do the people of the United States, but the working men of Great Britain do not get half the wages paid working men of the United States. In Germany, where there is more liquor consumed than in Great Britain, the working men get only half the wages paid those of Great Britain. In France, where there is more pure alcohol consumed than in Germany, the working men get only about two-thirds the wages paid those of Germany. This shows plainly that in the enlightened countries of the world the working man receives the lowest wages and himself and his family must suffer the most where the greatest amount of liquor is consumed.

Money spent in support of the saloon is money wasted, and money wasted is what brings ruin to the working classes.

The difference between the combined amount that goes to labor and the farmer or miner, goes for profit, rent, interest, taxes, etc..

Capital required to keep one person employed in following industries:

Boots and Shoes	$770
Clothing	1,018
Furniture	550
Brick and Tile	1,720
Printing and Publishing	1,376
Slaughtering and Meat Packing	1,481
Iron and Steel	2,220
Liquor	8,837

It would take $77,000 of capital to keep one hundred boot and shoe makers at work. If that amount of capital were turned into manufacture of liquor, it would give employment to only eight persons, throwing out of work ninety-two persons. If the capital required to keep one hundred persons at work in the iron and steel business were turned into the manufacture of liquor, it would give employment to only twenty-four persons, throwing seventy-six persons out of work.

If the money now spent for liquor were spent instead for shoes, clothing, food, furniture and building of new homes, it would give employment to 600,000 more persons than are engaged in the liquor traffic.

The saloon pays rent, taxes, cost of heat, power, light, and living expenses of those conducting the business, and of their families, but so do the grocery, meat market, shoe, dry goods and furniture stores.

One wagon will supply the needs of twenty or more saloons. Most of the other stores will have at least one wagon, some of them several, to bring goods to their stores, and to their customers. That gives work to the farmer that raises horses, and the feed for them, the harness maker, the horseshoer and the wagon maker and drivers.

The liquor traffic costs more money than is paid to the railroads in freight and passenger rates. Compare the insignificantly few persons employed in the liquor traffic with the vast army of people employed in the railroad business of the country.

Working men, vote against your worst enemy, the saloon. When the working men down the whisky trust and the beer trust, then will they get their just rights. No one claims that the saloon is a moral institution. Facts prove that it is an enormous financial loss as well as moral degradation for a community to maintain it.

New, Non-Alcoholic Beverages Served at Banquet of American Chemical Society

The serving of several brand new non-alcoholic drinks, made from the juices of Washington fruits, was a novel feature of a banquet at the fifty-first national meeting of the American Chemical Society, held recently in Seattle.

These beverages, according to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, included a "Washington cocktail," "Puyallupade," "Loju" (loganberry juice), "Tumwater carbonated" and "Washington creme de menthe." The loganberry beverage was made by the Northwest Fruit Products company of Salem, Ore., and Olympia. The other drinks were made through the co-operation of W. H. Paulhamus, president of the Puyallup and Sumner Fruit Growers' Association, and the Olympia Tumwater company.

Souvenirs consisting of small bottles of "Loju" (loganberry juice), tied with ribbons of the society's colors, were given to the guests.

A discussion took place at the feast on the opportunity afforded the chemist for creating new nutritious drinks to be introduced in prohibition territory.

Recent County-wide Victories

Mono county, California, voted out saloons on September 6 by a majority of 50.

Carroll county, Mo., outlawed the liquor traffic on September 11 by a majority of over 1,000.

Freestone county (Texas) voted on August 31, by a majority of more than 300, to abolish the liquor traffic.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, September 23, 1915

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Seattle, Wash., October 9-14, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

SLEEPER RESERVATIONS

Please do not delay sending in to Miss Katharine K. Adams your order for sleeper reservations on the White Ribbon Special. Each order should be accompanied by a draft. Promptly upon receipt of the same, sleeper ticket and baggage check will be sent you, thus saving much delay and confusion when you reach Chicago. Remember the number of lower berths is limited, and unless you give prompt attention to the matter, you may not be able to secure one. A word to the wise is sufficient.

OCTOBER 5, 1915

Does this date mean anything to you? We trust it may, and that you are to be one of the fortunate company that is to leave Chicago at 7:15 on the evening of Tuesday, October 5, on the White Ribbon Special, for Seattle, Washington, the Convention city. The "Quiz" on page 11 will interest you. Save your SIGNAL for future reference.

OUR NEW CARTOONIST

Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will be interested to know that the cartoons which appear on pages 5 and 7 of this issue, as well as those used in the last Campaign Edition, are the work of Miss William Shore Parks younger daughter of Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary.

CONVENTION INFORMATION

Read pages 2 and 10 for information concerning the National Convention.

"DO MEN GATHER FIGS OF THISTLES?"

Almost as appalling as the news of the sinking of an ocean steamship by a German submarine was the recent announcement through the press that there are in the United States fifteen million defectives. Granting that this statement is not grossly exaggerated, it ought to startle every citizen of this republic out of his self-satisfied, "let-well-enough-alone" attitude of mind. Fifteen million defectives out of a population of one hundred million, in the most highly civilized, most nearly Christianized nation on the globe! What does it mean? How can it be explained?

Long years ago the Man of Galilee propounded to his disciples the query, "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?" If he were here today would he not ask, "Can a nation expect a harvest of superior men and women when it legalizes an institution to sow broadcast the seeds of disease and corruption?" An extravagant statement, you say? Not one iota more extravagant than the pronouncement of that body of scientific men, the alienists and neurologists of America, who declared in a resolution at one of their recent annual conventions, "The effects of alcohol poison on the brain and other tissues are directly or indirectly responsible for a large proportion of the insane, epileptic, feeble-minded and other forms of mental, moral and physical degeneracy." The conclusion is plain—alcoholism and insanity are the breeders of defectives, and the liquor traffic is responsible for both.

The remedy prescribed by the Eugenic Society for preventing these unfortunates from burdening society with their offspring is radical—too radical, many social service workers believe—but a course even more radical and sweeping must be pursued if the United States is to produce a race of superior men and women—the eradication by Federal law of the legalized liquor traffic, root and branch.

IN ACCOUNT WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN

Thousands of tax-payers in our large cities have been for years laboring under the delusion that the account of their municipality with John Barleycorn consisted of only one debit and no credit entries; in other words, that the license money received is so much clear profit. That men well known for their acumen and good judgment in their own business affairs should so long overlook the items on the other side of the civic ledger is difficult to understand, except that in the world of politics there are methods used to obscure one's vision and make black look white and two and two equal ten instead of a modest four.

Recently the searchlight of expert knowledge has been thrown on the civic book-keeping of two large cities, Chicago and Minneapolis, and the citizens of these two populous burgs have discovered to their dismay that, instead of pouring wealth into their treasury, John Barleycorn has been doing his level best to bankrupt them.

Suddenly in the light of these disclosures the $400,000 of liquor revenue received by the city of Minneapolis seems appallingly meager by the side of the actual annual cost of the drink evil of approximately $13,000,000. Likewise Chicagoans, who heretofore have feared they could never run the city government without the $7,000,000 received annually from saloon licenses, shudder to contemplate the perilous financial situation of a city that loses annually through the liquor traffic approximately $300,000,000 over and above the revenue received.

If the perusal of these "vital statistics" by the citizens of the aforesaid cities does not convince them that they owe it to their common business sense, not to mention their families and city, to vote out the saloons, they are evidently not amenable to reason. If every license city would clear the vision of its voters by giving publicity to similar statistics it would fill the ballot box at the next election with anti-liquor votes.

MOBILIZING PROHIBITION CONVICTIONS

There is in existence an immense amount of latent sentiment and enthusiasm for prohibition that ought to be utilized in a practical way to help the cause. The positive, definite evidence of North Carolina as to the benefits of its anti-liquor régime is said to have helped South Carolina win its victory of September 14. The whole-hearted fashion in which North Dakota proclaims its satisfaction with prohibition has encouraged the sister state of Minnesota to vote out saloons from forty-five counties in the last six months.

If every individual who has enjoyed the protection of a well-enforced prohibition law in his community would give expression to his convictions as to the value of it, the volume of testimony would convince and arouse the doubtful and indifferent voters in other sections of the country and would help mightily to popularize the anti-brewery, anti-distillery, anti-saloon movement.

Indeed, every individual who has experienced the blessings of prohibition ought to feel a definite obligation to help secure similar beneficent legislation for his fellows, and in no more effective way can he accomplish this than by proclaiming far and wide, with megaphonic volume and emphasis, his personal testimony on the subject.

The convictions and enthusiasm of the people living in prohibition territory should be mobilized for use in our statewide and nation-wide campaigns. To the extent that it is done will the movement for a white nation move forward triumphantly.

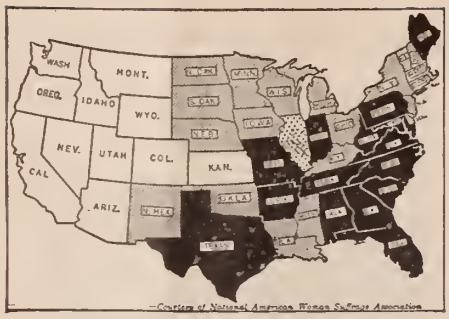
LABOR DAY IN PROHIBITION BIRMINGHAM

As a perfectly harmless and universally effective remedy for the criminal propensities of our big cities, try prohibition! Although a holiday presents unusual leisure and opportunity for lawlessness, prohibition Birmingham, with a population not far from 150,000 and the largest city in the state, made an enviable record on Labor Day this year with a total of only eleven arrests as compared with 106 for this day last year when the saloons were in full operation. A ninety per cent reduction in arrests on a holiday in a city where the prohibition law has been in force only a little more than sixty days is so significant that comment is unnecessary.

The liquor men are not yet quite sure of the attitude of the public toward law violation, but they are being left in little doubt on that score in Birmingham, as police records show. Out of a recent total of 120 arrests there were 88 convictions. With this formidable array of convictions and punishments the desire to run blind tigers will no doubt become less ardent.

NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine
Kansas
Oklahoma
North Dakota
North Carolina
Georgia
Mississippi
Tennessee
Alabama
West Virginia
Virginia
Washington
Oregon
Colorado
Arizona
Iowa
Arkansas
Idaho
South Carolina



THIRTEEN SUFFRAGE STATES

Wyoming
Colorado
Idaho
Utah
Washington
California
Arizona
Kansas
Oregon
Alaska
Nevada
Montana
Illinois

LIQUORITES DEPRIVED OF PET ARGUMENT

An admirable way to put a quietus on the liquorites who advance the time-worn argument, "Prohibition does not prohibit," is to quote from the report recently given out by W. H. Osborn, commissioner of internal revenue, showing that the sale of spirituous liquors for the year ending June 30, 1915, was 14,983,323 gallons less than for the year ending June 30, 1914, and that the sale of fermented liquors (beer, etc.) was 6,358,774 barrels less during the year ending June 30, 1915, than for the year ending June 30, 1914.

It is also said on good authority that the number of retail liquor dealers has decreased in that time 12,295, and the number of wholesale dealers 672; the number of wholesale dealers in malt liquors 1,233, and the number of retail liquor dealers in malt liquors sufficiently to make in all a decrease of nearly 17,000 liquor dealers during the year.

If such a slump has resulted from the increased prohibition territory and the changed attitude of men and women on the subject of drinking during the past twelve months, the outlook for the liquorites after prohibition goes into effect in the states of Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, and South Carolina, January 1, 1916, is not cheerful.

OUTLAWING JOHN BARLEYCORN FROM CANADA

The fashion of "making the map all white" seems nearly as popular in Canada as in the United States. The following summary of the prohibition situation in the territory of our neighbor on the north is furnished by Mrs. S. R. Wright, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U.:

Prince Edward Island

A province-wide prohibitory law obtains in Prince Edward Island, and as far as the powers of the province can secure it, provincial prohibition prevails in the island. It has been such a success since its inception some ten years ago that neither people nor legislature would willingly go back to the old time license régime.

Nova Scotia

In Nova Scotia a prohibitory law applies to all the province save in the capital city, Halifax, to which is given the right of outlawing the traffic by popular vote. The law is administered by the government through deputy inspectors.

New Brunswick

Nine of the fourteen counties of New Brunswick are dry, only 135 licenses being issued in the entire province, these mostly in the cities and larger towns.

Quebec

In Quebec a local option law passed before confederation and which now covers about nine hundred parishes—almost two-thirds of the province—is in use. There is also a recently passed license law administered by the government.

Ontario

Out of Ontario's 847 municipalities, 555 are at present dry; the remaining 292 are under license. The leader of the opposition, Mr. N. W. Rowell, has come out with a clearly defined temperance policy and is so vigorously pressing the issue that it is hoped in the not too distant future there will not be a single licensed bar in Ontario.

Saskatchewan

On July 1 of the present year the province of Saskatchewan passed a prohibitory law whereby all bar and club licenses were abolished until after the war and cannot then be re-established save by a vote of the people. It is to be regretted that the residue of the traffic—its sale in shops—is under the control of the provincial government.

Alberta

On July 21 of this year Alberta passed a "liquor act," which goes into effect July 1, 1916, giving prohibition to the province. On that date three hundred and twenty hotel, club and wholesale licenses will be cancelled and no liquor can then be bought in Alberta save for scientific, medicinal or sacramental purposes—the sale of the same under the control of the government.

Manitoba

In more than fifty municipalities of Manitoba the local option law obtains. License obtains in nearly seventy municipalities—but Manitoba's present objective is the prohibition of the traffic and the enfranchisement of its women, and by an overwhelming majority vote it has just elected a government pledged to make lawful these two great advance steps.

British Columbia

A provincial license law is in force in British Columbia and unfortunately no form of local option prevails.

The sale of liquors in the Northwest Territories is regulated by Dominion license law.

ALCOHOL AND EFFICIENCY DO NOT MIX

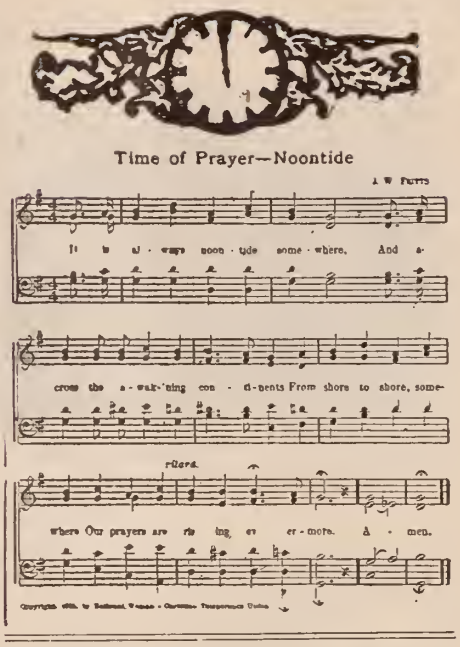
Alcohol as a lubricant of sales is becoming unpopular in big business houses. Commenting on this, the periodical published by the Western Efficiency System says:

"The fact is that alcohol and efficiency don't mix. We have heard this statement questioned a good many times, when applied to salesmanship, but so far no intelligent argument has been advanced against it—nothing really more than weak apologies for a still weaker habit.

"Recent events in the history of the world have taught us that organization, made up of units, subordinated entirely to the accomplishment of a given task with no other influence to claim its attention, is better than having independent units, each engaged in a different undertaking. The individual, which in this case is the salesman, is similarly made up of units, but they are more vitally interrelated than the units of an organization. If the body, for example, is abused with alcohol the mind becomes automatically affected. The inevitable result is lack of efficiency, and finally rank inefficiency. We have no ax to grind—our only concern is that of efficiency, and we ruthlessly condemn any interfering influence. Our observations justify us in saying, without being prompted by any moral scruples, that total abstinence is a fundamental law of all efficiency, and therefore of efficient salesmanship.

"It is no longer true, if it ever was, that alcohol can claim any part in the success of salesmanship. We still hear of instances where big deals are closed at the 'bar,' but we are not willing to believe that any legitimate transaction couldn't have been closed at the office or store; we insist, in fact, that any deals closed at the bar are improperly closed, because at great expense of time and vitality. Nevertheless, some men are successful and drink, and some go as far as to attribute a large part of their success to that fact—a sort of indispensable partnership, they think. Lack of good judgment and logical mind only is responsible for such notions, because it can easily be shown that, while successful in a fashion, these men could be still more so, and moreover maintain their success over a longer period of time if the important law of total abstinence were adhered to.

"Alcohol is the greatest enemy of real efficiency. Its detrimental effect upon organized thought, even when only occasionally indulged in, is easily apparent. Moreover, it establishes a precedent for violating other laws of efficiency and the result is what we see every day—the habitual drinker or human wreck, completely devoid of all efficiency; the occasional drinker, with his occasional efficiency, and the total abstainer, who furnishes the main pillar for the hope that 100 per cent efficiency is not entirely unattainable."



TENNESSEE'S LEADER PROMOTED

The honored and beloved leader of the white ribbon hosts of Tennessee, Mrs. Silena M. Holman, has entered into the perfect life of the other world. The news was received too late for more than a brief mention in this week's paper. The end came early Saturday morning, following an operation for appendicitis.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS ELLA A BOOLE BROOKLYN N Y
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS FRANCES P PARKS EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS E PRESTON ANDERSON JAMESTOWN N D
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS SARA H HOGE LINCOLN VA
TREASURER
* MRS ELIZABETH P HUTCHINSON EVANSTON, ILL

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

SEPTEMBER 28—Children's Harvest Home (Birthday of Frances E. Willard)

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Headquarters for Convention, Lincoln Hotel
Convention Meeting Place, Plymouth Congregational Church

CHAIRMEN OF THE COMMITTEES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION

General Chairman, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt.

Convener, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns.

Treasurer, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg.

HOSPITALITY, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St.

FINANCE, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, 1056 Sullivan St.

PUBLICITY, Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PULPIT SUPPLY, Mrs. S. L. W. Clark, 1701 Kilbourne St.

RECEPTION AT TRAINS, Mrs. Della Somers, 4318 7th, N. E.

DECORATIONS, Mrs. E. S. Wood, 1521 24th Ave.

RECEPTIONS, Mrs. Frances McLaughlin, 1806 16th Ave.

PRINTING, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell, 401 W. Dravus.

BANNERS, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring.

CHECK ROOM, Mrs. C. A. Peterson, 7019 24th N. W.

REST ROOM, Mrs. Sue N. Wright, 2359 N. 61st.

PAGES AND USHERS, Mrs. Mary M. Wade, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PLATFORM Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough, 1113 18th Ave. N.

INFORMATION, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana, 9738 61st Ave. S.

MUSIC, Mrs. Eugene W. Bell, 5719 27th N. E.

PLEASURE TRIPS, Mrs. Emma Morrison, 338 18th N.

POSTOFFICE, Mrs. Lillie Manney, 6502 10th Ave., N. W.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

West Virginia, Fairmont, Sept. 21-24
Nebraska, Grand Island, Sept. 21-24.
Virginia, Lynchburg, Sept. 21-24.
Colorado, Denver, Sept. 22-24.
Delaware, Sept. 22-24.
Ohio, Dayton, Sept. 22-24.
North Dakota, Carrington, Sept. 23-27.
California, (Northern), Oakland, Sept 27 to Oct. 1.
Montana, Livingston, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Kansas, Newton, Sept 28-Oct. 1.
Washington (Eastern), Colfax, Sept. 27-Oct. 1.
Iowa, Iowa City, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Illinois, Waukegan, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
New Jersey, Montclair, Sept. 28-Oct. 2.
Rhode Island, Westerly, Sept. 28-30.
Washington (East), Colfax, Sept. 28-Oct. 1.
Maryland, Rockville, Sept. 29-30.
Utah, Mt. Pleasant, Sept. 29-30.
Connecticut, New Haven, Sept. 30-Oct. 1.
New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.
Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.
Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.
Mississippi, Belzoni, Oct. 1-4.
Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.
Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.
Idaho, (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.
Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Louisiana, Alexandria, Oct. 30-Nov. 2.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

PERSONAL MENTION

Miss May Russell, National W. C. T. U. organizer and lecturer, has met with a great bereavement in the loss of her mother, who went to her heavenly home on September 5. Mrs. Russell was a white ribboner and always deeply interested in the work of the W. C. T. U. Miss Russell has the sympathy of the white ribbon sisterhood.

It gives us great joy to correct a statement recently made in our columns. Through the misinterpretation of a communication received by one of our friends, we were informed that Mrs. Eva Munson Smith of Springfield, Ill. had passed on to the other world, and accepting the information as authentic, we published the notice. We now learn that Mrs. Smith is still with us, and we hope may remain with us for many years to come.

CONVENTION NOTES

SALE OF SEATS

Two hundred seats in the first two rows of the balcony of the Convention church, Seattle, have been reserved by the Convention Committee and they will be sold at $1 each. If you desire such seats, send your order immediately, accompanied by draft or money order, to Mrs. Lola J. Flagg, 3187 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Washington.

Dr. William Foster, president of Reed College, Portland, Oregon, will be one of the speakers on Sunday evening. His subject will be "The War Against Women."

Two meetings will be held on Sunday evening, October 10, one in Plymouth Congregational Church, and the other in the First Methodist Church. A Y. P. B. rally will be held in the latter church immediately preceding the evening service.

The Official Board and Executive Committee meetings will be held in the ladies' parlor of Plymouth church. The Kindergarten room will be used for the L. T. L. Conference, and Intermediate Sunday school room for the Y. P. B. Conference. The Board of Organizers and the Board of Superintendents will each occupy one of the class rooms on the second floor of the Sunday school wing.

Each delegate should notify Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St., Seattle, whether or not she is expecting to attend the convention, and in the event she does not intend to go should supply the name of her alternate. All delegates who do not intend to go should so inform their alternates, who in turn, should send notice immediately to Mrs. Mayfield as to whether or not they will be present, when they expect to arrive in Seattle, the route by which they will come, and their choice of room-mates.

Prompt attention to this matter and giving the desired information immediately to Mrs. Mayfield will greatly aid the local committee.

As usual, entertainment of all delegates includes lodging and breakfast.

To doubt that the issue of our long war against the liquor traffic shall be National Constitutional Prohibition is to doubt the sanity of the race and the power of God.—Mary Harris Armor

QUIZ ON THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

When is the National W. C. T. U. Convention?

October 9-14.

Where?

Plymouth Congregational Church, Seattle, Washington.

When does the White Ribbon Special leave Chicago?

Tuesday evening, October 5, at 7:15, from the North Western Station.

Shall I buy my ticket from home to Chicago and then buy the round-trip ticket to Seattle or San Francisco?

It will be better to buy the round-trip ticket from your home station to the coast, thus including the transfer of yourself and baggage in Chicago.

Will any stops be made en route?

A stop of half an hour will be made at Omaha on Wednesday morning; one at Cheyenne, Wyoming, that evening; one at Pocatello, Idaho, on Thursday afternoon; one at The Dalles Friday noon, and we will spend from 4 to 11 p. m. Friday at Portland, Oregon, arriving in Seattle in time for breakfast, Saturday morning.

What provision has been made for baggage?

Delegates can check their baggage from the point at which they purchase their tickets through to Seattle. Special tags have been provided. They will be sent on application.

Can gentlemen travel on the White Ribbon Special?

Yes, we are very glad to have the friends and relatives of white ribboners make the trip with us, and husbands of white ribboners will be especially welcome. We should, however, be notified when gentlemen are to be in the party.

What about the weather in Seattle?

We are hoping the skies may be favorable as the date of the Convention is early, but all who attend the Convention should be provided with umbrella, storm coat and rubbers. While it is hardly probable the weather will be cold, yet some are sensitive, and it is never wise to plan a long trip without an extra wrap. It will be wise for those who are going to San Francisco to take as little baggage as possible, as with hurried sightseeing it means extra care.

Are there any special advantages in making the trip on the White Ribbon Special?

No one would ask that question who had ever gone with the official party to a National Convention. At each point where the train stops friends will be there to welcome us, but the opportunity to get acquainted on the train, the chance for conference, and the many friendships made, add greatly to the enjoyment of the trip.

What are the plans after the Convention?

The official train will leave Seattle at eight o'clock on Saturday morning, October 16. Stops will be made at Salem and Albany and we will arrive at Roseburg, Oregon, about midnight. Sunday will be spent in this beautiful little city, where a hearty welcome awaits us. Our train will not start until after midnight, Sunday. We expect now to be met at Medford, Oregon, with autos Monday morning, and will have a drive over the beautiful mountain road to Ashland. Here, we will board our train again, making a stop at Shasta Springs long enough to see these wonders of nature, arriving in San Francisco late at night.

Will it be possible for all the party to stop at one hotel in San Francisco?

We will arrange for all who desire to do so to stop at the same hotel, and there will be a personally conducted trip to the Exposition grounds on Tuesday.

How long a stay is advised in San Francisco?

We are assured that four days will enable the party to see the main points of the Exposition, though those who desire to do so can remain longer.

Where is it advised that Sunday, October 24, be spent?

Probably in Los Angeles. There are many pleasant trips so that a stay of two or three days there will be greatly enjoyed. Arrangements will be made for the party to stop at one hotel if desired. Two days will be required for the trip to San Diego.

Can delegates from the North and West who do not come out on the White Ribbon Special take the official train to San Francisco?

Certainly. We will be glad to have as large a party as possible.

When must reservations be ordered?

They should be ordered at once, if possible, unless you are willing to take an upper berth. As soon as all lowers are assigned, late comers must necessarily be given upper berths.

Finally—we could keep on asking questions and answering them and still many queries would remain unanswered. We will leave the remainder for the trip and during the time of the Convention itself. The chairman of Transportation and her secretary will gladly assist delegates and visitors in every possible way, and we feel sure that those who are arranging for the White Ribbon Special will unite in making it a most enjoyable trip.

ELLA A. BOOLE,
Chairman Transportation.

KATHARINE K. ADAMS,
Secretary.

BIG DAILY PAPERS TAKING UP CAUSE AGAINST SALOONS

"It is the press, backed and encouraged by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that is driving the saloon off the face of the earth, and these two mighty influences, working hand in hand, are going to bring about its demolition sooner than most people believe," says the editor of the Fairmont (Minn.) Sentinel. He calls attention to the changed attitude on prohibition of many papers and, referring to an article quoted approvingly by the Minneapolis Tribune, says:

"A year ago the Tribune would not have given any person a pleasant look who offered it, even as a paid advertisement, an article that stigmatized the saloon as 'a breeder of disorder, the friend of anarchy, the inciter of mob violence, of riot, of lawlessness and unrestraint.' And we doubt very much if the Kansas City Star (said by many to be the greatest American newspaper) a year ago would have dared to write such an anathema against one of the most powerful interests of its city, as the following:

"'News reports of the hurricane in Galveston tell of 5,000 men, women and children huddled all night, while the storm was at its height, in the terminal railroad station. As men entered there for shelter each was asked if he carried whisky. If he did he was made to throw it away. None could enter there with whisky upon his person. The following morning, when the storm had begun to subside, one of the first acts of the authorities was to close every saloon in Galveston, and they were kept closed until order had come out of the chaos. Everywhere, in times of public excitement from any cause, one of the first things done by the authorities is to close the saloons. It was so in Kansas City during the flood of 1903. The saloon is a breeder of disorder, the friend of anarchy, the inciter of mob violence, of riot, lawlessness and unrestraint. The authorities so recognize it in every community that has been stricken by calamity.'"

ALCOHOL AND TUBERCULOSIS

Dr. Ellen J. Wetlaufer, president of the Wyoming W. C. T. U., is the author of an article on "Alcohol and Tuberculosis," which appeared in a recent number of The Ladies' Review, the official organ of the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World. In commenting on the progressive attitude of French and continental physicians in general concerning the relation of alcohol to tuberculosis, Dr. Wetlaufer quotes various eminent authorities. She says in part: "Dr. Roubinovitch of the Salpetriere, in an interview in Le Matin says: 'They talk about the great scourge, tuberculosis, which decimates France and ordains its decay. The greatest scourge, however, is alcoholism. It is this which gives up the key of the house and permits the sacking. There is no more burning question than the battle against this cause of all other scourges.' In October, 1905, the following resolution was adopted by the International Congress on Tuberculosis, held in Paris, about 2,000 medical scientists being present: 'That in view of the close connection between alcoholism and tuberculosis this congress strongly emphasizes the importance of combining the fight against tuberculosis with the struggle against alcoholism.' At this congress Prof. Brouardel of Paris, in an important paper made this memorable statement: 'In fact, alcoholism is the most potent factor in propagating tuberculosis. The strongest man who has once taken to drink is powerless against it.'

"At the international alcohol congress at Bremen, Prof. Segran, a distinguished Frenchman, said that the use of alcohol predisposes the system to tuberculosis and also prevents cures. The real individual and social treatment for tuberculosis consists in the strictest total abstinence from alcoholic liquors."

The liquor interests of America are spending a great deal of money advertising a statement of the Russian minister of finance that the suppression of vodka has cost in the loss of revenue $900,000,000 the last year.

They fail to say that the report of the finance minister also stated that within the same period the savings banks of Russia had increased deposits of $900,000,000.

They also fail to say what that former liquor revenue used to cost in misery, in loss of character and in unemployment and in crime.—Kansas City Times.

AT A WAY STATION

MARIAN FLINT, Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Windsor let her busy hands drop to her lap and narrowed her gaze down the quiet village street. In vision she saw the stalwart figure of her husband approaching and their three small children running to meet him. What a strong, noble man Henry had been, and how like him Henry Junior was growing!

The loud closing of the street door dissipated the memory, and the mother turned with a smile to greet her son. Dejection spoke in his every look and gesture. Tossing his cap across the room, he flung himself into his father's chair.

"There's no use looking any further, mother. I simply can't find anything to do. I've been to every man in this town, and it's always the same story. 'Sorry, but there's nothing at present, Henry. Let you know if I need any one,'" the boy mimicked bitterly.

"Oh, don't look like that, dear. 'It is always darkest just before day' was your father's tried and trusted motto. The daylight never failed to come to him after the darkness."

Mrs. Windsor went to her son and tried to kiss his scowling brow into smoothness.

"That motto is all very well, mother, when you can see the daylight coming. Up to this time I have trusted—that's what makes it so hard now." At the tremor in Henry's voice, Mrs. Windsor turned away, for tears seemed dangerously near, and tears were rare to the eyes of her sturdy son.

"Oh, I forgot to tell you," she exclaimed, glad to change the subject: "You have a big, thick letter from your uncle Tom." The boy's face brightened as he reached for it. Hastily he skimmed a page or two, then he fairly shouted as he waved the sheets above his head.

"Listen to this, mother! Listen! I've got a position—a real job—just the thing I want, too! Here's what Uncle Tom says: 'I met Mr. Thompson on the street today—he's president of one of the Southern roads, you remember—and he asked me about you. When I told him you were looking for work, he said, "We want a telegraph operator and sort of general manager down in an out-of-the-way place on our line. The position isn't a very desirable one, and the pay is small; but if the boy wants the job, it is his. Tell him it's as lonely as a desert down there, and about the only persons he would see would be a few rough ranchmen. There isn't enough to keep a man busy much of the time, either. For that reason he might find the days desperately monotonous."'

"What do you think of that, mother? Guess I'll take father's old adage for mine, after all. It certainly was dark enough to make the dawn come. Whoop! Hurrah! Why, what's the matter, mother?" for the bewildered boy was suddenly conscious of the deep perplexity of his mother's troubled face.

"Nothing is the matter, dear—no, nothing—only I was thinking of the loneliness—and of the rough companions. They are probably drinking men who spend much of their time and money in gambling'"

"You aren't afraid I will get to gambling! O mother! you ought to know me better than that—your son and father's son drinking and gambling! How strange it sounds!"

"You are a good boy, Henry, and I know that my teaching and your father's sacred memory would be a strong hold upon you, yet I know, too, how terrible loneliness is to the young and how strong a desire there is for any kind of companionship rather than none. You are only human, dear."

He almost shook off her caressing touch, then, heartily ashamed of his impatience, he said very gently:

"Don't you worry about me, mother dear. I simply couldn't do those things. Now, let's think about all the money I'll be able to send back home. There'll be no more slaving for you and sewing nights to keep the kids in school. Then, there's another side of this good fortune: I ought to be able to influence those rough fellows to leave off some of their bad habits. Probably they never have known any better life."

"Well, we will lay the proposition aside for a few days, son. Your uncle tells you to consider it from all sides and to take your time in deciding."

In a week Henry had convinced himself that the opportunity offered was just what he had been waiting for. He was of age, and it was for him to decide. His mother recognized this fact, and every thought of the new life for her son was a prayer.

———

Although Henry had determined not to be depressed by the change from home comforts and home companionship, he was scarcely prepared to meet the reality. The heat was intense, the wide, treeless desolation came to be maddening. An old box-car, side-tracked, served for station and home. A few chairs, a table, and a bench with a straw mattress for a bed were its furnishings. Only way-freights stopped at this station. Across the road was the only other building—a general store and postoffice, the back room of which was a lounging place for the ranchmen. There they "swapped stories," drank and gambled.

For a time Henry had no desire to mingle with these men—they were not his kind—but at last the awful loneliness undermined his courage. He would just talk to them once in a while, he concluded. There must be some good ones among them, and perhaps he could persuade such to stay away from that place. He tried it, but the men only laughed and called him "Preacher Henry." Then the storekeeper tempted him under the cover of reform. "If you will come and look on," he said, "we will do without the liquor and bets while you are here."

Henry was lonely enough by this time to be blind to any harm that might come from just "looking on," and he continued to argue with himself that his presence might act as a restraint and open the way to better things for the men. He dropped into their wild company—at first only for a few moments, then longer and oftener. Finally he was induced to stay and watch an exciting game or two.

"You will soon be a crack player yourself, old fellow," they said, "then if you will bet some, you will have more money to send the little mother back home."

Slowly, but steadily, Henry's scruples were overcome. Before long he was betting in a small way. At first the men let him win, but later his "luck" changed. At last his salary was lost in advance, and now he played with feverish determination to make good his losses. He could find no rest night or day. His mother needed the money. Mother! He had broken faith! Then he began to drink to drown his worries. He forgot to eat, to sleep—forgot even his work. He was alone now as never before. There was only Jake who cared—Jake who had a son of his own "up home."

The least suggestion of mental dimness frightened the young operator with the certainty that his day of reckoning was close at hand—that something was going to happen; but this made him drink only the more heavily. The dawn! There could be no dawn. Night, only night was coming, was his despairing cry.

One late foggy afternoon, in response to an insistent subconscious belief that something urgent demanded his attention at the station, Henry stumbled across the tracks and fell into his desk chair, only to sink into a drunken stupor while in the very act of reaching for his file of instructions. What was it—what was it he was going to do? urged his struggling, liquor-benumbed brain.

Suddenly he was terrified into partial sanity. What was happening? What was that thundering noise? Who had dared to knock him down—he, Henry Windsor, station master? Not Jake, surely, he told himself, as he lay on the floor still, inert. Yet there sat Jake in his place—yes, Jake, white, ghastly, rigid. Was Jake dead? O God!

The shock brought mental adjustment. He remembered now that President Thompson's special was to be sent over this line at two o'clock. That must have been the noise he had heard. Jake had sent the messages that had cleared the way and prevented a frightful wreck. He had saved the president's life, and had saved him—Henry Windsor—from—murder!

He started up. "Jake!" he sobbed. "Jake, old boy." But the other raised a hand to ward him off. In this supreme moment the man was not able to bear the human touch.

After a night of agonizing self-recrimination Henry arose, weak of body but cleansed of spirit. He would take the next train to the town where Mr. Thompson was to stay for a few days, and make full confession of his guilt. Jake could take his place while he was gone—he had been doing that of late, keeping sober, shielding his young friend, and meeting emergencies. Oh, if God would allow one more chance to build a noble character upon the blackened ruins of youth!

"No, I alone am guilty, sir," objected the young station master, at Mr. Thompson's kindly effort to let down as easily as possible the already sorely repentant boy and give him another trial.

"Of course you are guilty," replied Mr. Thompson, "and yet I acknowledge that a part of the responsibility does rest upon us who have made existing conditions. True, you had your warning, but our road allowed that which fostered danger."

Henry looked at him uncomprehendingly, then suddenly his eyes shone with an inspiration.

"Mr. Thompson," he said, his face strengthening with lines of determination, "what you say about sharing my guilt gives me courage to make a suggestion for bettering things at your way-stations and——." He stopped, realizing his boldness.

"Go on," commanded the president, looking sharply at the boy.

"Well, when I was fighting that terrible loneliness and inactivity, I wondered if things had to be that way at these desert stations. You hint that they don't have to be. Then for God's sake, Mr. Thompson, let's change them and save those poor fellows from going to perdition!"

In his agitation Henry was pacing the floor with rapid step and clenched hands.

"There, there, Henry! What do you mean? What would you do? You know I want things right. While I ask for good service, I want to be just with those who serve me."

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

JOHN BARLEYCORN'S ACCOUNT WITH A GREAT CITY

The city of Chicago for many years has indulged in the "luxury" of over 7,000 saloons. The citizens of the western metropolis have taken it for granted that the liquor business was helping them pay the bills for running the municipal government. Recently the Chicago Dry Federation has issued some literature which will enlighten them on that subject, and cause them to seriously wonder if they can longer afford to be a partner in the drink business. Some of these startling facts and figures we quote:

The Staggering Cost of Saloons.

Illinois.

According to the biennial report of the various state boards in charge of the state institutions of Illinois, year ending Sept. 30, 1914, the cost per annum was as follows:

Joliet Penitentiary, 1,560 average inmates, cost per year	$299,144.93
Chester Penitentiary, 1,272 average inmates, cost per year	217,020.75
Eight Insane Hospitals, Sept. 30, 1912; 16,578 average inmates, cost per year	3,611,354.19
State School for Defectives, 1,358 average inmates, cost per year	204,428.27
Paupers in Almshouses, census 1910, 15,961 average inmates, cost (est.)	2,394,150.00
Total State Charges, 35,728; yearly cost	$6,726,098.14

Cook County

County Hospitals, expense, 1913	$759,059.57
Oak Forest Institutions, 1913	349,906.41
Delinquent Dependent Children's Home, 1913	64,489.52
Families helped by County Agent	313,950.59
Industrial Schools, Dependent Children	183,222.88
County Parents' Pension	132,182.69
Total Cook County	$1,802,811.66

City of Chicago.

Committee on Crime, cost, 1914	$21,130.83
Police Department	7,010,110.48
Municipal Court	854,929.08
House of Correction	337,005.37
Hospitals	20,750.00
Department of Health	1,158,506.33
City Physician	8,206.05
Prosecuting Attorney	55,623.35
Commission on Non-Employed	25,000.00
House of Correction (extra)	15,223.57
Department of Health (extra)	729,812.39
Tuberculosis Sanitarium	780,185.94
Municipal Lodging House	49,861.15
Total Chicago	$11,066,344.54

But on the state and county charges the city of Chicago can not be held responsible for any more than its per-capita share. Chicago is responsible for about two-fifths of the state expense and nine-tenths of the county expense. This would make the final account as follows:

Chicago's share of state expense	$2,690,439.25
Chicago's share of county expense	1,622,530.49
Chicago's own net expense	11,066,344.54
Total	$15,379,314.28

The objection will be made that much of the above expense is overhead and is not properly chargeable to liquor. This is true. 75% of the state, county and city charges is a low estimate of the share due to liquor. This leaves the account about like this:

State defectives 75%	$2,017,829.43
County defectives 75%	1,216,897.86
City defectives 75%	8,299,758.40
Total State, County and City cost	$11,534,485.69
Less Revenue derived	7,052,923.48
Net Loss	$4,481,562.21

Public Charities Enormous.

In a pamphlet issued by the late Dr. Charles R. Henderson (he of sainted memory, head of the United Charities of Chicago and of the faculty of the University of Chicago)—this pamphlet bearing the title of "Studies in Chicago Philanthropy"—the amount spent for charity in Chicago is fixed as definitely as it is possible to arrive at a correct estimate. It is estimated that there are no less than 2,500 charitable organizations of various kinds in Chicago. Private charities cannot be computed. Only 150 of these 2,500 charitable organizations are listed. The books of these 150 are audited by the Association of Commerce of the city of Chicago and for the year ending Nov. 30, 1912, there were spent for public charities in Cook county by these 150 organizations the enormous sum of $6,569,070.99!

If the truth were known the major portion of this enormous amount is due, directly or indirectly, to the ravages of alcoholism. Destitution and dependency are Siamese twins born of the liquor traffic. Estimating 60% of this amount, a very low estimate in all human probability, as due to the liquor business, we have to add to the cost of liquor in Chicago the enormous charge of $3,941,442.59. This, added to the net cost of state, county and city defectives properly chargeable to the city of Chicago, and not included therein, makes the net balance stand at $8,423,004.80.

To this there remain to be added many more items of cost. First, there is the direct cost of the liquor over the bars of Chicago, which amounts to $140,000,000 per year. Then there is the loss of efficiency due to drink which amounts to 21% of the Chicago annual pay roll, or $175,000,000 per year. Adding these items we find the net result as follows:

Net loss on product of saloons	$8,423,004.80
Net cost of liquor over bars	140,000,000.00
Net loss of efficiency	175,000,000.00
Total net loss over revenue	$323,423,004.80
Annual cost of drink to each man, woman and child	$130.42
Annual income from license to each man, woman and child	2.82
Net per capita loss	$127.60

Cost of Accidents.

The above liquor figures represent but a portion of the annual cost of liquor. The loss of time of the 55,000 drunks arrested last year is covered in the loss of efficiency charge, but this charge does not cover the cost of accidents. There were 33,711 accidents in Chicago last year, in which 1,254 people were killed. If the truth were known, perhaps the great majority of these accidents were caused by drink. The economic value of 33,711 injured people, and 1,254 whose whole economic value was lost by death, is incalculable.

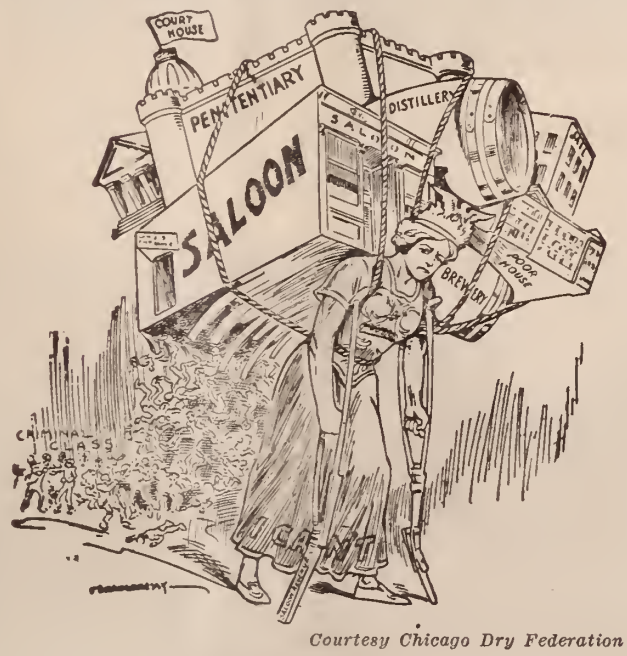
Non-productive Class.

The liquor forces estimate that 27,000 people in Chicago make their livelihood from the saloons. If this is true it is an appalling economic waste. If these 27,000 people were put to earning their living, to producing something instead of living off the unfortunate, it would add, at $1,200 per year each, $32,400,000 to our taxable wealth each calendar year.

Loss in Tax Values.

Then there is the enormous loss in taxable values caused by the utter waste of the liquor traffic. Over $300,000,000 every year is lost to taxation because of

(Continued on Page Sixteen)



Courtesy Chicago Dry Federation

Chicago's Colossal Burden

IS THE YOUNG MAN SAFE?

MRS. JAMES R. SMITH, Dundee, Ill.

"Is the young man safe?"
This heart-wrung cry
Has an age-long ring that brings it nigh.
'Tis a nameless dread of a mother's heart,
As she sees her son from his home depart.
A burden a mother oft carries in prayer
For her boy who wanders she knows not where.
'Tis something that keeps her ever awake,
Night after night, for his dear sake.
So many pitfalls of crime are spread
For the innocent lad so easily led,
A mother can never rest secure
While these dens of vice are open to lure.
Is the young man safe
When the state protects
The dens which make such hopeless wrecks?
Laying snares for all young men—
Do you wonder mothers worry, then?
Is the young man safe?
Let the church and state
Heed the cry at the city's gate
And stop the sale of poison spread
That brings gray hair to the mother's head.
O awake to the call of living truth.
Save the young man still in youth.
More precious his life than choicest wealth,
The young man's vigor, his life, his health.

Beautiful Trip Promised Delegates to Convention

Route Chosen Promises Most in Service and General Interest. Follows Old Overland Trail. Traveled by First Settlers

Castle Rock on the Columbia

The White Ribbon Special, bearing our delegates to the Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Seattle, will leave the North Western Station, Chicago, at 7:15 o'clock in the evening of October 5th over the rails of the Chicago & North Western and Union Pacific System. The trip promises to be one of especial pleasure and interest. The best of these two famous lines' best service assures three delightful days of luxurious travel, while the route traversed carries the party through some of the most famous scenery of the Northwest, with the climax a two hundred mile run beside the Columbia River, alone worth crossing the continent to enjoy.

The more familiar regions of Illinois and Iowa being passed in the night, the first morning (Wednesday) brings the Special to the Mississippi River and Omaha, where the "West" might be said to actually begin. The rich farms of the Platte Valley prove where a large percentage of our national wealth comes from. The views from the car window are a revelation to those making their first trans-continental journey. That this extraordinary agricultural development is the product of less than half a century is all the more amazing. The Union Pacific Railway, completed in 1869, was built through a trackless waste, by what now seems almost superhuman endeavors. The double tracks now serve one of the richest regions of the United States—whose development was made possible by great railway enterprise.

It makes the trip doubly interesting to know that the palatial train you are riding on is following the first Overland Route—the track first tramped by the Buffalo, then followed by Indians, and the early fur traders, next by the Mormons and the Overland immigration to California and Oregon. It was the natural line of least resistance; the line with the fewest obstacles; the lowest grades and least curvature.

These are the characteristics of the Union Pacific today—still the main-traveled road to the Pacific Coast. It is said that in recent years over $200,000,000 have been spent in the improving of the great system and providing the equipment which makes travel today so delightful.

At Cheyenne, the capital of Wyoming, a two hour stop will be made for the purpose of holding a meeting. Here the delegates from Denver and other points will join the train. Thursday the wonderful Alpine scenery of Idaho unrolls before the car windows—the beautiful Snake River Valley, the grandeur of the Saw Tooth mountains. Shoshone Falls are greater than Niagara, following a sheer 210 feet into a gorge which measures 950 feet from cliff to cliff. The scenery of eastern Oregon is wild and rugged, and unexplored mountain wilderness. Next comes the Umatilla country, where orchards and grain fields are flourishing under irrigation. Then the climax of the trip—the 200 mile trip along the Columbia River!

Bradford Island, Columbia River

Here rugged mountains and cliffs rise sheer from the river's bank, along which the train flashes by. Islands break its broad expanse, works guard its shores. There is Castle Rock, 1,146 feet high, and St. Peter's Dome, elevated 2,500 feet. Multnomah Falls drop 840 feet into a rocky basin. There are the Pillars of Hercules, Rooster Rock, Wind Mountain, and the submerged forest, with view of fish wheels in the river and other unusual sights to vary interest.

At The Dalles, the Special will wait an hour so that every one may thoroughly enjoy the grandeur.

Palisades, Columbia River

The long stop at the "Rose City" of Portland gives ample opportunity for more than a glimpse of the extraordinary beauty of its surroundings. From Council Crest, a half-hour's ride from the center of the city, five snow-capped mountain peaks are visible; the windings of the Blue Willamette and the Columbia are in view; the panorama of hamlet, orchards, and rich valley farms spreads as far as the eye can see.

Portland is a city of beautiful homes and mountain roses. Even in winter leaves are green and flowers bloom.

Another night's ride and the White Ribbon Special will roll into Seattle, the modern and beautiful city that commands Puget Sound. From here the list of sight seeing every tourist wants to do is almost portentous. It is enough to briefly mention some world-famous sights.

A visit to Tacoma, another attractive "Sound" city, and a trip to National Park head the list. Every one wants to get as near as possible to the snowy monarch of the north coast whose silvery head is always visible. There are water trips, trolley trips to nearby resorts and water falls, automobile trips around the boulevards.

Following is the schedule of the White Ribbon Special which every traveler will want to know. It has been arranged to afford the utmost in comfort and enjoyment; to see the best and most of the country en route.

Indians Spearing Salmon

SCHEDULE

Lv. Chicago	7:15 p.m., Tues.	Oct.	5	C. & N. W. Ry.
Ar. Omaha	7:45 a.m., Wed.	"	6	"
Lv. Omaha	8:05 a.m., Wed.	"	6	U. P. R. R.,
Ar. North Platte	2:45 p.m., Wed.	"	6	"
Lv. North Platte	1:50 p.m., Wed.	"	6	"
Ar. Cheyenne	8:00 p.m., Wed.	"	6	"
Lv. Cheyenne	10:30 p.m., Wed.	"	6	"
Lv. Granger	8:45 a.m., Thur.	"	7	O. S. L.,
Ar. Pocatello	3:00 p.m., Thur.	"	7	"
Lv. Pocatello	4:00 p.m., Thur.	"	7	"
Ar. Payette	12:01 a.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Lv. Payette	12:15 a.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Ar. Huntington	2:15 a.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Lv. Huntington	1:30 a.m., Fri.	"	8	O.-W.R.R.& N.Co.,
Ar. Pendleton	7:45 a.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Lv. Pendleton	8:00 a.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Ar. The Dalles	12:00 noon, Fri.	"	8	"
Lv. The Dalles	1:00 p.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Ar. Portland	4:00 p.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Lv. Portland	11:00 p.m., Fri.	"	8	"
Ar. Seattle	6:00 a.m., Sat.	"	9	"

On arrival at Seattle sleeping cars may be occupied until 7:30 a. m.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each . . . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

REMEMBER

Kindly bear in mind that the books close this year SEPTEMBER 25, and all subscriptions to be credited to our various workers must reach us on or before this date. Again let us emphasize the fact that credits will be given on all subscriptions in our hands by September 25. The morning of September 26 begins a new W. C. T. U. year.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD

Has proven a most desirable premium. This biography, written by Anna Adams Gordon, is the only authorized biography of Miss Willard for sale today. The price of the book is $1.50, or one may receive it by sending ten subscriptions to the weekly edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. The following have recently received a copy:

56. Mrs. Walter Hall, Salem, N. J.
57. Mrs. R. J. Smith, Wooster, O.
58. Rev. Alice H. Allen, Truman, Minn.
59. Rev. Alice H. Allen, Truman, Minn.
60. Mrs. M. J. Philpot, Cedar Falls, Ia.

A FAMILY PAPER

I can't tell you how much we enjoy your paper. My husband reads it and so often comments on the strong articles. I send my paper to our pastor and his family and we use THE UNION SIGNAL in our union meetings.

ORDWAY, COLORADO.

The local union of Dexter, Maine, forwards forty-eight subscriptions for The Young Crusader.

SEEN THROUGH THE EYES OF A CHILD

The Delineator tells the following story of a child's first impression of a saloon:

A woman from Kansas visited New York recently with her 9-year-old daughter. The child never before had been out of Kansas. She had heard of saloons, but she had never seen one. She showed the same attitude toward saloons that she would have shown toward a chamber of horrors—a sort of fearful fascination.

"In all the big towns we've been in," said her mother, "Clara has clutched my hand whenever she has seen a saloon. In most of the cities we've visited, the clutch has become a continual hand-pressure!"

If all the women who are fighting the drink problem in their homes realized that a child could reach Clara's age without even seeing a saloon, it seems as if there would be an enormous immigration movement into Kansas!

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG--COUNT ON ME?
50,000 sold. Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. $1.00 per dozen.
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

The Union Signal in the South Carolina Campaign

The Union Signals so generously furnished by Mother National were a great help. I got a list of the campaigners in each county, as far as possible, and to these I mailed The Union Signal, and we often recognized parts of the speeches our orators delivered! I consider The Union Signal the very best campaign literature that can be used.

MRS. JOSEPH SPROTT,
President South Carolina W. C. T. U.

AT A WAY STATION

(Continued from Page Twelve)

Soon the two men were deep in plans. The station agents should be married men. There should be comfortable living rooms for their families. No liquor should be sold in the community. A reading room and a recreation room should be established in the storekeeper's annex with newspapers and books in abundance, and temperance literature pockets should be in library and station.

"And I appoint for this new department of Way Station Improvements, Mr. Henry Windsor, manager-at-large!" concluded the president, as he closed the book in which he had been making notes, and rose from his chair.

Henry shrank as from a blow. For a few moments he was unable to utter a word.

"Do you mean it?" he at last asked hoarsely, his gaze riveted on the president's face. "Do you really mean it, Mr. Thompson?"

"I believe in you, my boy, and the offer I have made shows how fully I trust you," was the answer. "Go home to your mother for a month, then come back and begin our new work."

"O Mr. Thompson, I —." But Mr. Thompson had gone.

JOHN BARLEYCORN'S ACCOUNT WITH A GREAT CITY

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

being spent for drink and drunkards and their products. If this money were spent in legitimate lines of industry it would not only greatly improve business, but it would materially increase the taxable property of the city. If this booze money were invested in property it would pay $5.15 tax on each $100, or a total tax of $5,150,000.00 each year—nearly as much as the license revenue!

CHICAGO TO HAVE MAMMOTH DRY PARADE

As one of the incidents of the fight to make Chicago anti-saloon territory and abolish the 7,152 poison dispensaries of that municipality, there will be a parade of all the Prohibition forces on October 9, called "Chicago Day," because it is the forty-fourth anniversary of the great fire of 1871. It is expected that this parade will be the largest demonstration against the saloon ever made anywhere at any time.

KANSAS IN THE LEAD

"New York City is proud of its record for last month—not a murder was committed in the city," remarked a resident of Topeka, Kansas, to a reporter of the Marshalltown (Ia.) Republican, "yet in Kansas, as I have said, twenty-eight counties have not had a criminal prosecution in a year."

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

Nineteen Prohibition States

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

South Carolina

PROHIBITION State Pennants

A strong paper pennant. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 18 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

THE STORY OF A PROHIBITION FAN

As the delegates and officers of the Champaign county (Ill.) W. C. T. U. were going out to our convention one of our ladies gave me one of the new Prohibition Fans on which is the wet and dry map. I was seated by a stranger, a young woman, and I called her attention to the fan, telling her the Champaign union had placed them in all the churches this summer. "They ought to be in all the country churches, too," she replied. I offered her the fan, with the remark, "They don't cost much and will be such a temperance lesson to whoever uses one." "It's so essential to teach all about the liquor business," she answered. "It's evil and wicked, and causes more trouble and crime than anything else. It's the Devil. Take off the 'd' and it leaves 'evil'; place the 'e' at the other end of the word and it's 'vile.'" She could talk temperance faster than I could. Yet I hadn't time to ask who she was or where she lived, for just then I had to get off the interurban car. In the convention I related the incident and it was decided that each union should give some money to purchase fans next year for distribution at the Champaign county fair and also at Chautauqua.

Yours sincerely,
(MRS.) JESSIE C. BUTLER,
President Champaign County W. C. T. U.

The price of the Prohibition Fans:

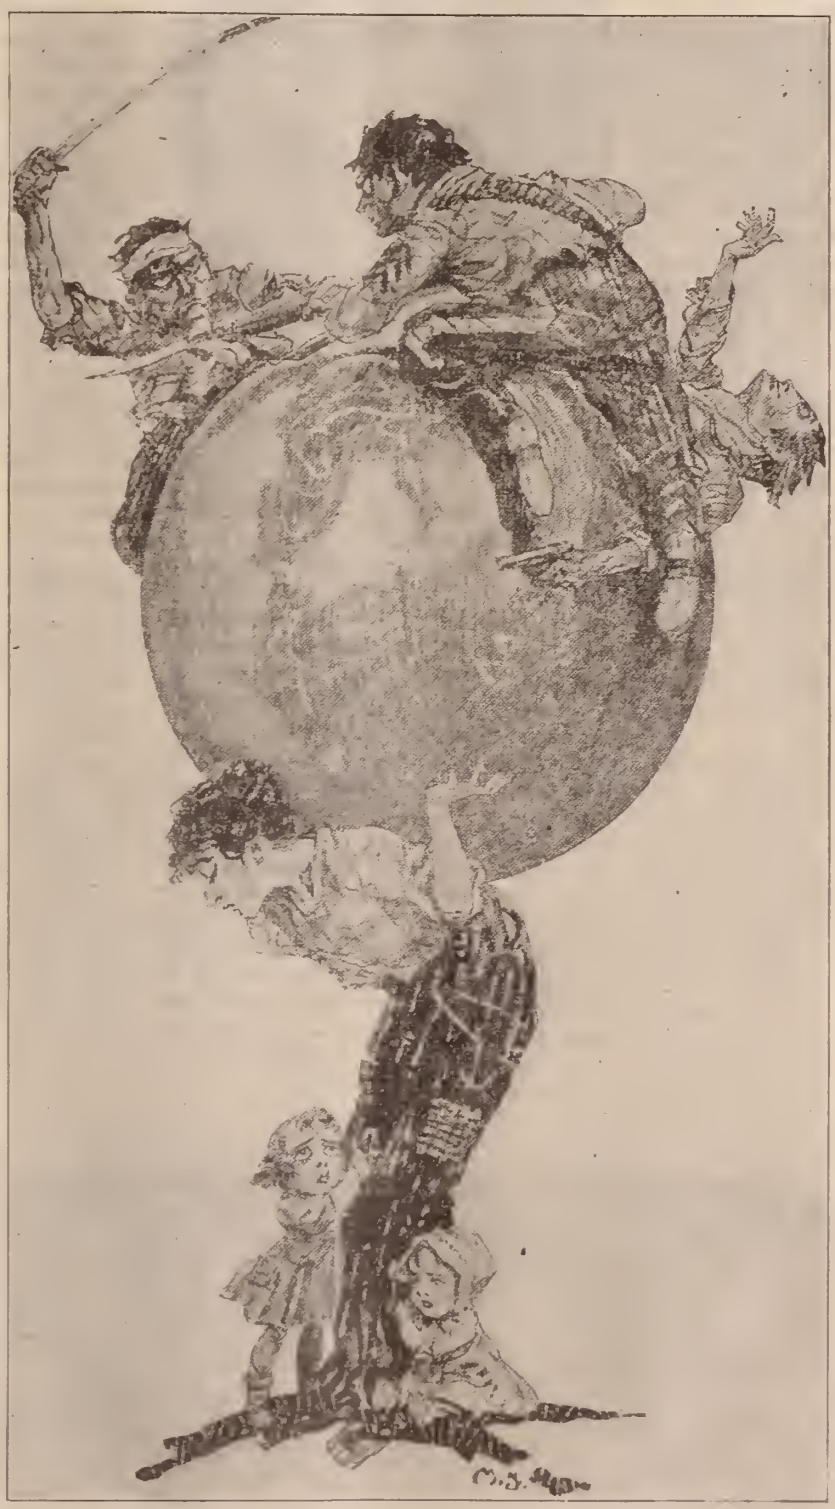
36 .....$1 500 .....$ 1
100 ..... 2 1,000 1

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILL.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., SEPTEMBER 30, 1915 | No. 40



Courtesy of Puck

THE WEAKER SEX

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

CONVENTION ANNOUNCEMENTS

White ribboners are looking forward with keen anticipation to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle, Washington, which they confidently expect will surpass all their great meetings previously held. A large company will leave Chicago, October 5, on the White Ribbon Special. Stops will be made at Omaha, Cheyenne, Pocatello, The Dalles and Portland. The train will reach Seattle Saturday morning, October 9.

Saturday evening will be Welcome Night. Greetings will be extended by Governor Ernest Lister, the mayor of Seattle, representatives of the churches educational interests, Federation of Women's Clubs and the W. C. T. U.

The annual sermon will be delivered Sunday morning in Plymouth Congregational church by the pastor, Rev. Hugh G. Ross. Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock, a mass meeting will be held in the same place, addresses being delivered by Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis and Mrs. Ella M. George.

A feast of good things has been prepared for the Sunday night service—two mass meetings, one in Plymouth church, and the other in the First Methodist church. Both assemblages will be addressed by Mr. Daniel A. Poling, acting president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and Dr. William Trufant Foster, president of Reed College, Portland, Oregon.

The Convention will be formally called to order on Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock. At this session the National President will give her annual address. The afternoon will be largely devoted to the reports of the corresponding secretary and acting treasurer, the general secretaries of the Young People's Branch and the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, and to the consideration of plans and methods for continuing the campaign for National Constitutional

Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Convener of the Convention

Prohibition, including the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

Among the speakers who will participate in the World's W. C. T. U. night program are Dr. Mary Stone, president of the China W. C. T U. and a noted medical missionary; Miss Jennie V. Hughes, a missionary to China sent out by the Methodist Episcopal church of America, who will be remembered as a speaker at the Baltimore National Convention in 1910; Miss Wang, an associate of Dr. Mary Stone in China, and Miss Sarah Ellis who comes as a fraternal delegate from Tokyo, Japan. Miss Ellis was associated with Mrs. Ruth Davis Stevens in W. C. T. U. work in the Sunrise Kingdom.

Tuesday afternoon will be devoted to a consideration of the official papers, an open parliament for discussing the subjects, "Increasing Our Membership," and "Routeing Speakers," consideration of proposed amendments to the constitution and the report of the Committee on Resolutions.

Tuesday evening will be Organization night, when the general subject, "Total Abstinence as Foundation Work," will be presented by Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, Mrs. Viola D. Romans, Mrs. Adah W. Unruh, Mrs. Lora S. La Mance and Mrs. Florence Atkins.

The two important numbers on the program for Wednesday afternoon are the open parliament on, "Running a Campaign—What to Do and What Not to Do," and the election of officers.

A grand diamond medal oratorical contest will occur Wednesday evening.

Thursday evening, the last night of the convention, delegates and visitors will join in a convention march which will be followed by a program participated in by the presidents of states which have made a net gain of one hundred or more in membership, special recognition being given to the states which have added largely to their membership.

In response to a demand for more time for discussion and consideration of practical methods of work it has been arranged to devote the mornings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday to department institutes, the key-note of these meetings to be, "What National Constitutional Prohibition Will Do for Our Departments." Tuesday morning the general subject to be considered will be "Formative Foundations"; Wednesday morning, "Social Service"; and Thursday morning, "Publicity and Protection."

Some of Seattle's finest musicians have volunteered their services for various meetings of the Convention.

United States Senators and Congressmen from the state of Washington have accepted an invitation to attend the Convention and will doubtless speak at some of the evening meetings.

Photo by Curtis and Miller

The Heart of Seattle

LAST DAYS OF THE DISPENSARY SYSTEM

PROHIBITION THE ONLY SOLUTION OF THE LIQUOR PROBLEM

MRS. J. L. MIMS

On September 14, by a majority of more than 20,000, South Carolina voted to become the nineteenth dry state, and the law will become effective January 1, 1916. Fourteen counties will close up their dispensaries on that day, and the legal sale of whisky will be forever banished from the Palmetto state. The governor stands for law enforcement; the majority of the legislators in both senate and house are for prohibition, and every county, wet as well as dry, has given a majority for prohibition except Charleston, which went ten to one for whisky, and Dorchester, which gave a majority of 13 for the dispensary. The Charleston News and Courier and The Columbia State are calling upon the people for the enforcement of the law, and while both these papers stood for local option they will now stand by the prohibition law. The vote cast was about 60,000, a smaller vote than usual, but every man who cast his ballot was required to show his tax receipt, a requirement which had never been exacted before, and many were kept from voting because they had lost or destroyed their tax receipts.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union played a large and important part in the campaign. "Vote Dry" buttons were furnished for the whole state, amounting to about 40,000. A large number of medal contests in oratory and music were held, one county alone holding eighteen at various points. At most of these contests addresses on prohibition were made by persons who knew how to handle the subject. In some counties the name of every voter was secured and literature and personal letters sent. In Florence, a liquor county, a woman's and prohibition edition of the Timmonsville Enterprise was published by the W. C. T. U., which was sent to every voter in the county. A number of counties under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. organized a "flying squadron" and visited many important points. When the result was declared and it was found that only Charleston county had shown friendship to the liquor traffic, a little boy said, "They will just have to let us go over there with our singing; we'll bring 'em around."

Mrs. Amy C. Weech, of Virginia, in a two-weeks' campaign tour of the state, made a wonderful record, both in collecting votes and money. She was everywhere accorded a hearty welcome. Mrs. Weech was one of the speakers at the state convention, where she delighted the audience. Hon. Joseph G. Camp of Atlanta also gave two weeks to South Carolina and was a great factor in the campaign, speaking eighteen times in fourteen days. He won many votes and hearty and vigorous endorsement from the leading citizens of the six counties he visited. He is a splendid aid in any prohibition campaign, eloquent in speech and kindly and sympathetic in manner. W. D. Upshaw of Atlanta spent about two weeks in South Carolina, and did valiant service, especially for Florence county. He was a great power in the campaign.

The department of Co-operation with Missionary Societies, under the leadership of Mrs. R. B. Cannon, was one of the strongest forces in the campaign, Mrs. Cannon securing the sympathy and aid of the many missionary societies. Thousands of programs were printed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and used by societies and individuals for bringing the subject before the people. Many large and representative audiences under the auspices of the missionary societies were supplied with W. C. T. U. speakers.

Mayor of Des Moines Sends Rousing "Prohibition Booster" to Minneapolis

Whether the prohibition prescription will cure or kill a big city seems to be agitating the minds of the voters of Minneapolis at the present time. In helping them to settle the question, Mayor James R. Hanna of Des Moines, Iowa, offers his personal testimony. In answer to a letter written him by R. A. Smith, he replies in the following words (as quoted in the Minneapolis Journal):

"Dear Sir: I have your letter making certain inquiries concerning the effect of closing saloons in this city.

"The saloons were closed on the 15th of February last. All the desirable locations were picked up by other businesses within the next few weeks following. A few out-of-the-way locations are still vacant.

"I cannot see that there is any appreciable effect because of throwing men out of employment and certainly no increase in demands for charity. In fact, it is exactly the other way. The men who lost employment have gone into other lines. Some of them have followed up their former calling in other cities, but the men who were spending in the saloons the money which their families needed are now buying groceries and shoes instead. The consequence is a very much better tone in every way. In the first place their families are not now in want and in the second place, they are paying their bills for the ordinary necessities. This is making collections noticeably better in other lines, so our merchants report.

"Our experience proves that a decisive policy can handle the bootlegging very effectually. There will be some illicit sales, to be sure, but they can be reduced to a very small minimum. In fact, the shipments of liquor into Des Moines have been reduced to a mere fraction of what they were with the open saloon. For example, during the month of August just past the total consignments of liquor to this city footed up to about $16,000. With the open saloon our annual liquor sales were estimated at $2,000,000. You will note that this is almost exactly ten times as much average per month as the total shipments during the month of August. This proportion is borne out in every way.

"Yours very truly,

"James R. Hanna, Mayor."

Official Reasons for State-Wide Prohibition Filed with Ohio's Secretary of State

Under the law of Ohio, when a constitutional amendment is submitted to the voters by petition, the governor appoints a committee to make an official argument for the proposal and another to make an official argument against it. These arguments are filed with the secretary of state and he is required to mail a copy to each voter in the state.

In accordance with this law, the committee prepared and filed the following:

"The amendment provides that no one shall sell, or manufacture for sale, intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The supreme court of the United States has twelve times declared no citizen has an inherent right to sell liquor.

"Last November seventy counties gave majorities for state prohibition. Eighteen counties voted against it. Thirty wet counties voted dry. Outside of Hamilton and Cuyahoga counties, Ohio voted for prohibition by 36,254.

"There was evidence of fraud and miscount in many wet centers. The legislature passed a law to prevent these corrupt methods in the next election.

"Over $100,000,000 annually is spent for liquor in Ohio. This money would buy 50,000 homes worth $2,000 each, a row of houses on each side of a street extending from Toledo to Cincinnati; or build annually thirty-four brick highways from the lake to the Ohio river, or supply food for 250,000 families. Are good homes, improved highways, sufficient food, or saloons the greater benefit to the people?

"Labor would be benefited, because money spent for liquor would be spent for commodities, and furnish employment to more than 60,000 men, instead of 30,000 now employed in the liquor trades in Ohio. More labor is required to produce and handle useful articles than to make and sell liquor of equal cost.

"The industrial world would be benefited, because liquor increases the cost of production, accidents, lost time, and poor work.

"Saloons are a menace to the boys and girls of Ohio. See juvenile court records. Will you vote to protect your boys and girls or the saloons?

"The farmer would be the gainer in an increased market for his crops, safer surroundings for his family, and lower taxes.

"The liquor tax never has paid for the damage and increased cost to the state, in crime, drunkenness, poverty, and wrecked homes. This is the chief reason why tax rates increase in wet territory.

"Science has demonstrated and the world's governments have accepted these facts about alcohol and intoxicating liquor:

"Alcohol is neither food nor medicine, but a poison to all life.

"Alcohol penetrates nerve fibres like chloroform, is a deceptive habit-forming drug, destroying will power, and creates craving for drink.

"Alcohol attacks the brain, entails degeneracy upon which nature visits a curse in premature death, and the blighting of offspring.

"Saloons are on the run everywhere. Liquor dealers realize it. This is why the brewers' stability amendment is submitted. It would prevent further elections on prohibition, but allow additional elections favoring saloons.

"Eighteen states have abolished the liquor traffic. Nine states have adopted prohibition since September, 1914. Russia wholly and other European countries in part have banished liquor.

[This was written before the election in South Carolina.—Ed.]

"Eighty per cent of the territory of the United States, containing sixty-five per cent of the population, has voted dry. Government official reports show greater prosperity, better public health, and less crime, without saloons.

"Keep up with advanced civilization and most enlightened conscience. Vote 'Yes' on the prohibition amendment."

RE-ENFORCEMENT FOR ALCOHOL'S FOES

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

The time is considerably past when the war against alcohol was waged almost entirely by little bands of women recruited here and there, whose equipment for service consisted principally of faith, courage and persistence—good weapons all, but lacking the impact given by the short club of the law backed by the ballots of an informed and purposeful people. However, the cause of prohibition being just, it was inevitable that it should win adherents in constantly increasing number. The marvel of recent years is the rapidity with which individuals and societies of ecclesiastical, educational, political and social prominence and influence have flocked to the anti-alcohol standard, and the despair of liquor's friends today is that not only here and there, as formerly, an isolated individual or state towers alone for prohibition, but that unbroken blocks of states and whole great nations fling aloft a triumphant no-liquor standard and in so doing demonstrate to the world that states and nations, equally with minor units, can live wholesome, contented and prosperous lives yielding no tribute to alcohol in brain, or brawn or treasure.

Alcohol Omitted from the Pharmacopœia

It was but yesterday that alcohol was considered an absolutely indispensable item of a physician's outfit and a prime necessity in hospital equipment. Today it is eliminated from the pharmacopœia, and materia medica is freed from its baleful influence. Soon the members of the medical world will be wondering why they ever invested it with beneficial attributes and some will think with remorse of the lives blighted by the alcoholic prescription.

The next move toward alcohol's "finis" is now due from state and municipal boards of health, and when these powerful bodies, in their campaign in behalf of public health, give to stamping out the alcohol scourge the same energy and insistence that has characterized the movement against tuberculosis we may look for the speedy and complete triumph of alcohol's foes.

Use of Liquor Prolific Source of Disease and Disability

In an address before the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health, Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, after advocating the public treatment of tuberculosis as a potent means of exterminating that ancient foe, said, "The next evil which should be attacked with the utmost vigor by all boards of health is alcoholism. * * * * It should be brought home to the entire population that the habitual use of alcoholic beverages reduces in a serious degree the productive efficiency of the community. * * * * The entire annual bill of the white race for alcoholic drinks is worse than wasted expenditure. * * * * Recent experiments on the nerves and glands of the human body have demonstrated beyond a doubt that alcohol invariably does harm, and never any good either in health or disease. The use of alcohol as a defense against exposure or fatigue has been given up by all sensible persons. * * * * The habitual use of alcohol is the prolific source of a great variety of diseases and disabilities in the human body, causes many frightful disasters in human reproduction, and contributes to produce in innumerable instances family poverty and distress. Degradation through the use of alcohol is the greatest evil the white race is suffering from."

Dr. Eliot refers further to the "uncertain sound concerning the use of alcohol," heretofore given by the medical profession and boards of health, and states that the latter "have not considered it their function to interfere with or protest against the use of alcohol;" arraigns the abortive efforts of legislatures, courts and police authorities to deal successfully with habitual drunkards, adding that the latter "cannot be surpassed in stupidity and inefficiency" and closes by saying, "It remains for the boards of health to attack this hideous evil with the weapons and in the spirit of preventive medicine. They should bring to the work all recent knowledge concerning the effects of alcohol on the human body, call to their aid legislators who can find equivalents for the public revenue now derived from the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks, and re-enforce to the utmost the wise counselors who by moral teachings have brought about during the past fifty years considerable improvement in regard to the use of alcohol in the more intelligent and conscientious classes."

Stimulated by the advice and exhortation of Dr. Eliot and innumerable other high authorities as well as in response to what they cannot fail to recognize as the unevadable expectation of the people, our boards of health will doubtless soon move toward the eradication of the alcohol plague and there can be no stronger ally for alcohol's foes than the medical authorities and health boards of our land. Their enlistment, so long delayed, brings victory near.

HOW TO GET THE GREATEST GOOD FROM A CONVENTION

MRS. MARY M. COMAN, Covina, Cal.

Invariably the degree to which we put our own personality into anything, determines the resultant good and permanent benefit. One person going through the Canadian Rockies sees little beyond "limitless snow, ice and endless mountains," while another, alert and intelligently interested, appreciates the constant wonder of the new snow-capped mountains, the scintillating glory of the countless waterfalls, the magnificent grandeur of the ever-changing scenery, and the beautiful memories of that region will follow her through life. In much the same way a book, a picture, a lecture, uplifts and helps, in so far as we put our personality into its plot, its meaning, its lesson.

"An Inevitable Contagion of Success"

Perhaps in none of life's varied experiences is this truth more evident or potent, than in those connected with that great rally or gathering which we call a convention. Literally, "a coming together," its possibilities of inspiration and helpfulness are well-nigh endless. We are there given special knowledge, expert advice along practical lines, scientific data and accurate statistics deduced from reliable reports, a stirring up of enthusiasm from contact with each other and the inevitable contagion of success, and ultimately we go away with higher ideals, clearer hopes and more definite methods of work, whereby to attain those greatly-to-be-desired ideals.

In a great moral reform movement like our own, there is the deeper undercurrent of Christian faith and consecration, which intensifies the ordinary beneficial results of a great gathering held in the interests of a common purpose. The earnest prayer and sacred songs but add to the general uplift and inspiration.

How most fully to share in these special delightful benefits of a convention is a momentous question with each and every delegate, whether the convention to be attended is county, state or National. The preparation, beginning well beforehand, includes prayer, the accumulation of special information, and a gradual storing up of optimistic enthusiasm. The special route to be taken, the city in which the convention is to be held, the chief leaders and the particular attractions offered in connection with the gathering, should each and all be given thoughtful attention. If possible, all arrangements as to home matters during the expected absence, all minor details as to clothing, etc., should be carefully planned, that the entire attention may be given to the business and profit of the convention.

Furthermore, the great underlying principles of the organization, its special problems and probable plans, should be in a large measure studied and understood. To this end the papers representing our work should be faithfully followed the weeks preceding the convention and all official announcements perused carefully.

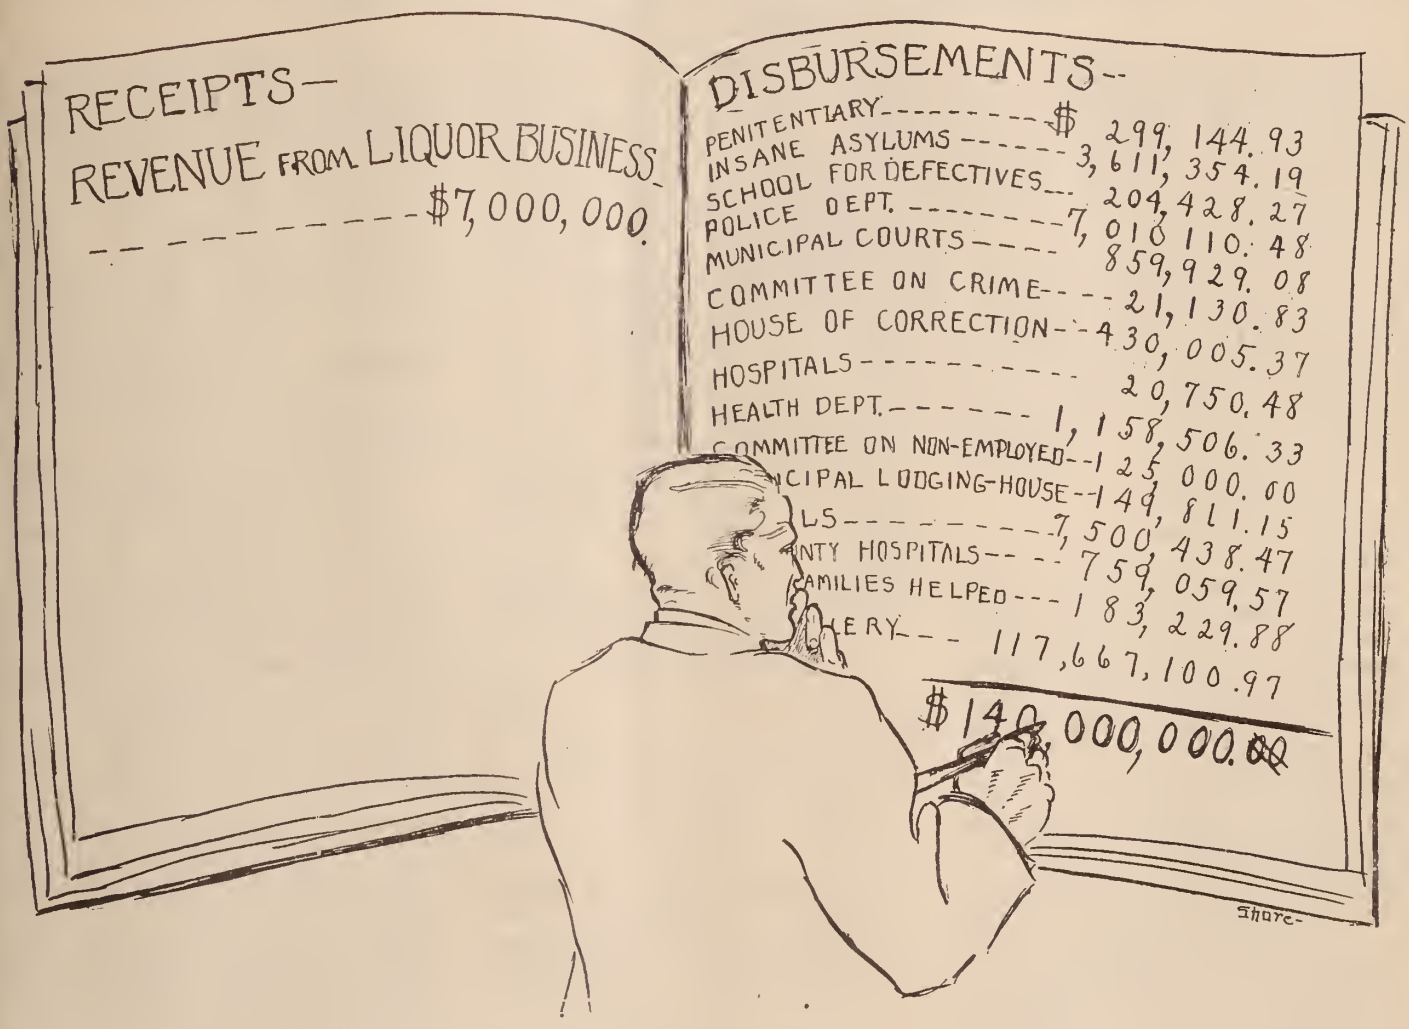
If possible, the trip should be made with others, that from the first there may be gained something of that solidarity of purpose so essential to the highest success of a convention, whether from the standpoint of the individual or of the organization. Loyalty to responsibility and appreciation of opportunity will insure regular attendance, alert attention, systematic note-taking for the benefit of those at home, and a sympathetic understanding of all that is accomplished. It is expected that all W. C. T. U. delegates will observe strict parliamentary usage, address the presiding officer rather than one's neighbors, keep sweet under any and all conditions, be prompt, kind and thoughtful.

An Aid in Solution of Local Difficulties

To get wholly out of one's usual environment and to see how other women do things on a large scale, almost invariably brings a vision or the way in which local problems may be solved and conditions bettered. To look into the earnest faces of the women and to hear the clarion calls of the strong leaders is an inspiration well worth the special effort and time involved. Our conventions, especially the National Convention, show the people in general, and the liquor people in particular, for what we stand, how great has been our success and how near is our ultimate triumph.

In conclusion—the more we put ourselves into both the preparation and enjoyment of a convention, the greater will be the resultant good, not only to oneself, but to the local union, county, state, and always and all the time, to the great cause which we represent.

PAGES FROM A CITY'S ACCOUNT WITH JOHN BARLEYCORN



What Shall it Profit a City if it Receive a Few Thousand Dollars of Liquor License Revenue and Spend a Million Caring for Liquor Victims?

POLK COUNTY, IOWA, SAVES $19,000 BY OUSTING JOHN BARLEYCORN

The officials of Polk county, Iowa, (in which Des Moines is located) claim that the closing of the saloons will save the taxpayers of the county $19,000. The situation is explained fully by the Des Moines (Ia.) Capital, as follows:

"Since the many thirst parlors have closed their doors and paid off their help, the courts have taken a semi-vacation. Inebriate and insane asylums have taken down the 'Standing Room Only' signs and report that business is falling off 'something fierce.'

"As a result, two big expense items have been materially reduced, enabling the board of supervisors to lower the tax levies.

"The levy for the state institution fund has been reduced for the first time in the history of Polk county. Last year the levy was 1 mill. Now it is .8 mills, a difference of .2 mills.

"The levy for court expense has been reduced .3 mills. Last year's figure was 3 mills. This year it is 2.7 mills.

"The net reduction for the two funds amounts to half a mill or $19,000.

"County officials explain the reduction in the court expense levy by the fact that dry conditions have greatly reduced the number of cases. When the saloons were running on all six cylinders, a big percentage of cases were of the intoxication variety.

"With the saloons running full blast, the county derived a revenue of $25,000. Taxpayers are now saving $19,000, with the bars out of business only nine months.

"The supervisors reduced the state institutions fund because of the decrease in patients from Polk county, it is stated. Bills submitted to the supervisors from the various institutions have been growing smaller ever since the county became arid.

"One county official explained the matter in this way:

Insane Patients Fall Off

"'Polk county pays $15 per patient at insane and inebriate institutions. Statistics show that ninety per cent of the insane cases are caused by booze and disease. Since the saloons went out of business the number of Polk county patients has been greatly reduced. That's why we can lower the levy.'"

KANSAS BANKS URGED NOT TO COLLECT MONEY FOR LIQUOR SALES

Sight drafts for liquor shipments will no longer be handled by the members of the Kansas Bankers' association if they comply with a circular sent out recently by W. W. Bowman, secretary of the association, says the Topeka Capital. This is a blow at the brewers and distillers from an unexpected source, for it will greatly diminish their business in the state.

No Legal Responsibility

There is practically no legal responsibility attached to the banks for making the collections for the liquor agents, yet there is a moral issue, Mr. Bowman points out, that the banks cannot overlook.

"We do not know that any Kansas bank was ever proceeded against under the prohibitory law in any court of this state for the mere handling of liquor collections," the circular says. "The bank is neither vendor nor common carrier; it simply has used bank machinery for transmitting funds from one section of the country to another and, having no guilt chargeable to it in the liquor transaction, the bank would not in such a case be liable.

Urges It As Policy

"We venture to suggest that no court would hold a bank liable unless it were in some way a party to the crime, other and greater than that of mere collector.

"All keen observers of the signs of the times, however, cannot fail to see that sterner legislation respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors is on the way and that the probability is that before long, either under state or federal legislation, or both, the issue is likely to be pressed so far as to place legal liability even at remote distances. Just as a matter of prudence, therefore, not to involve any moral consideration, the banks of this state would not go far wrong if, as a mere matter of bank policy, the handling of liquor sight drafts were wholly eliminated."

CAMPAIGNING AT A FUNERAL

SUSANNA M. D. FRY

"Howard was the dearest boy!"

"Yes, Mrs. Lewis, I've heard you say that more than once since you came, but you don't explain anything about your Howard, and there are several boys by that name in the world."

"You don't mean to say, Sarah Ann, that the story didn't get into your papers. Well, it would if it hadn't been a prohibition story. It beats all how a paper will print every fool thing about 'A Noiseless Rooster' in Los Angeles or 'A Three Foot Long Pea-pod in Texas,' and will tell how Wisconsin raises salted and peppered potatoes and expects to raise buttered ones soon—but their space is too limited to give prohibition news."

"All true, Mrs. Lewis, but what about Howard?"

"Well, you remember I told you when I was here before of a family by the name of Merrill that had moved into our neighborhood—kind of gentlemen farmers who talked university talk. Howard was their boy and one of the best I ever knew. He didn't spend his time off on joy rides or dancing the fox trot. When he came home from college vacation times he went right out into the field and did more work than any of their hired hands. He taught the young folks a lot of new stunts to develop their muscles, and a more polite and respectful fellow to old folks I never saw. He was that kind to me when my folks were sick that I was always looking for some way to do him a good turn.

"Well, when the prohibition federation was organized in our neighborhood to help make the state dry, I joined, of course, and they set me to polling my precinct to see who would vote wet and who vote dry.

"The very first family I struck was the Merrill family, and I never was more dumbfounded than when Mr. Merrill said, haughty like, 'I don't believe in it at all. We are not teetotalers. I want my son to learn self-control and not be dictated to by the state.' He gave me a whole lot more of that kind of talk, and Mrs. Merrill stood by nodding her head at every word he spoke.

"I couldn't say much, but I hinted something about danger to the son and Mr. Merrill resented it and said, 'Liquor will never do him any harm. He is too much of a man ever to go near the danger line.' Howard was away at school then, and I made up my mind I'd see him as soon as he came home, for I suspected he would be a voter that very fall.

"Some weeks later, one hot morning, as I was hurrying up my pies so as to send a piece out to the men in the field, Mr. Merrill stepped in, looking white-like and said, 'Mrs. Worth, Howard wants you to come right over if you can.'

"'What's the matter,' I questioned.

"'That's what we don't know, but Howard thinks you'll know, you're so fine in sickness.'

"'I'll be there before you are, Mr. Merrill, if you don't walk fast,' I answered.

"Well, it proved to be a kind of low fever from drinking bad water in his college town, and his father lamented with almost every breath that he hadn't put some champagne in the water and then it would have been all right. He seemed to think that champagne, or California wine, or brandy in cream could work miracles and kept telling his boy he couldn't get well without taking something of the kind.

"'No,' said Howard, 'it's the very worst thing in a fever. All the great doctors will tell you so nowadays. I'll not touch it, father, dear'—though the doctor thought he 'might try it.' You see the doctor was anxious to please Mr. Merrill.

"Well, I stayed by Howard day and night. He and I had our way about the liquor and he pulled through, but it was a close shave. A more grateful father and mother you never saw. You see nursing was what Howard needed most and there were no trained nurses in our county.

"I learned to love that boy as my own. Of course he was rather feeble for some time, and I saw nothing of him, being pressed with my federation work."

Mrs. Worth paused as though in a reverie, and then broke out.

"Two months later, I saw the family doctor check his horse at my door and heard him say, 'Go right over to Merrill's. They're in awful trouble; Howard's dying.'

"That was all I waited to hear, but I learned later that he had gone to a college banquet in the city. The fellows all got hilariously drunk, but they couldn't nag or bully Howard into taking a drop and so they poured it down his throat till he was sent home more dead than alive. There he lay hovering between life and death and"—choking back a sob—"death finally conquered in spite of all we could do.

"The grief of the father and mother was terrible, and mine was little less, but they put it upon me to make every arrangement for the funeral.

"The Merrills had no church affiliations and as there was no minister within calling distance, it being vacation time, I accepted the charge at Mr. Merrill's tearful solicitation on the condition that I was to be free to speak and act as I was moved. Mr. Merrill begged, however, that I should try to make the people understand how it all came about, and how loving and obedient and in every way trustworthy his son had been, which was only a labor of love for me,—but above and beyond this I had a high resolve and purpose.

"The news that a woman was to speak at the funeral spread like running water. This and the horrible details of the banquet brought together a dense crowd of people, few of whom were total abstainers. Curiosity lined the fence and filled the spacious grounds, where, under a wide-armed oak, stood the open casket.

"I announced no text, but the words which burned into my soul were 'It stingeth like an adder.'

"I can only say that I paid the young man the most loving and beautiful tribute of which I was capable, and that I also paid to King Alcohol the most appropriate and scathing tribute of which my vitriolic vocabulary was capable. Then came the most astonishing innovation ever introduced at a funeral. I spoke of the campaign we were in to make the state dry and told what it meant to young men like Howard Merrill, and to unborn children. I spoke of the one thing—the absolutely only thing—which could make the state dry—VOTES. I called upon every man and woman to register a vow in heaven that they would help to make the state a safe place for boys and girls by voting against the liquor traffic and asked them to record that vow by signing their names to a pledge which in deathlike silence was being circulated among them. This done, I said: 'Howard gave his life for others. We are dedicating our lives to the same high purpose. Would it not be a beautiful tribute to him if we should lay these pledges reverently in his casket and let them go with him into the eternal presence? Perhaps the dear father and mother would like to make the first offering.'

"Then and there began a procession the like of which the world probably had never before seen; and it ended with the words 'Amen' and 'Amen' from many lips when the last white slip had been laid lovingly by the side of the transfigured form.

"When the vote was taken in November, every ballot but three cast in our county was dry, and our county carried the state for the prohibition of the liquor traffic."

THE HEROIC AGE

RICHARD WATSON GILDER

He speaks not well who doth his time deplore
Naming it new and little and obscure,
Ignoble and unfit for lofty deeds.
All times were modern in the time of them,
And this no more than others. Do thy part
Here in the living day, as did the great
Who made old days immortal! So shall men,
Gazing long back to this far-looking hour,
Say: "Then the time when men were truly men;"
Tho' wars grew less, their spirit met the test
Of new conditions; conquering civic wrong;
Saving the state anew by virtuous lives;
Guarding their country's honor as their own,
And their own as their country's and their sons';
Proclaiming service as the one test of worth;
Defying leagued fraud with single truth;
Knights of the spirit; warriors in the cause
Of justice absolute 'twixt man and man;
Not fearing loss; and daring to be pure.
When error through the land raged like a pest
They calmed the madness caught from mind to mind
By wisdom drawn from eld, and counsel sane;
And as the martyrs of the ancient world
Gave Death for man, so nobly gave they Life:
Those the great days, and that the heroic age.

—The American Friend.

WEST VIRGINIA'S DRY STATE FAIR A RECORD-BREAKER

Prohibition is in nowise a detriment to a state or county fair. Despite the dismal predictions of the liquor sympathizers to the contrary, the dry West Virginia state fair at Wheeling this year broke all previous records. One West Virginia paper said of it: "Wheeling's great fair reached its greatest proportions with its largest crowds under prohibition." Another, in an interesting front page story, acknowledged the superiority of this year's fair, and added these significant words:

"A particular note of the big crowd was that it was a distinguished delegation of the best people of the Wheeling district, to say nothing of the thousands who came from afar. It was the most orderly crowd that ever collected in the Ohio valley at a similar affair. The police were simply ornaments, for there were no fights or disorders of any kind. Rather different from the stories that appeared when Wheeling was filled with saloons, now isn't it? It also nails a lie of the wets that without booze the state fair could not be held."

MAYORS OF ILLINOIS RECOGNIZE VALUE OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE

A letter was recently sent by the president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, to the mayors of the large cities of the state, asking an expression of opinion as to the value of woman suffrage to their communities. Some of the replies received, as given out by the Illinois Association, are quoted below:

Chicago

To my mind the most important accomplishment of woman suffrage has been the elevation of politics generally to a higher and broader plane. Woman suffrage has brought about the dawn of a new and better era in politics.

WILLIAM HALE THOMPSON,
Mayor of Chicago

Rockford

Rockford declared against the legalized saloon in the spring of 1914, I am sure never to return to the system again so long as women are able to vote.

To say nothing about the moral proposition, it is a great thing for this city as an economic proposition that we are not supporting in times like these the fifty-three legalized saloons that formerly were a drain on this community.

I am sure that the greatest good has been done and will be accomplished through the association with us of the women voters of this state. My sincere desire and hope is that they will be given at no late date universal suffrage.

WILLIAM W. BENNETT,
Mayor of Rockford

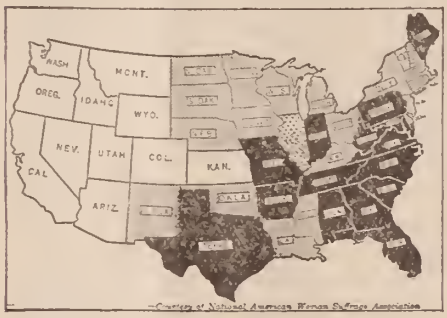
Rock Island

If I were to give my full views on the subject in a few words, I should say that I am a firm believer in suffrage for women and have always been, and that without limitation.

In my opinion if a woman is given credit for having judgment enough to vote on school trustees and municipal offices, she should be given credit for having enough common sense to select our legislators and senators. Even limited suffrage in this part of the state has proven very popular and I believe the women by the way in which they are handling the situation at present will before many days be in full possession of their stolen birthright.

I assure the ladies that I have implicit confidence in their judgment and that I will co-operate with their organization whenever and wherever it is within my power to do so.

WILLIAM MCCONOCHIE.
Mayor of Rock Island



—Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

STATUS OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE

FULL SUFFRAGE

Wyoming	1869
Colorado	1893
Idaho	1896
Utah	1896
Washington	1910
California	1911
Arizona	1912
Kansas	1912
Oregon	1912
Alaska	1913
Nevada	1914
Montana	1914

PRESIDENTIAL AND MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE

Illinois	1913

STATES TO VOTE ON SUFFRAGE AT NEXT GENERAL ELECTION

New York
Pennsylvania Massachusetts
New Jersey to Vote October 19

STATES TO VOTE IN 1916

Iowa South Dakota West Virginia

Galesburg

Our experience with woman suffrage in Galesburg has been indeed very happy. On the wet and dry issue a year ago, somewhat over ninety per cent of the woman's vote was registered against the open saloon. This alone is testimonial enough, but if one needed more he could easily gather it by noting the enemies of woman suffrage in our city, county and state—there is not a single organized iniquity but what is opposed.

J. L. CONGER.
Mayor of Galesburg

Freeport

I believe public sentiment has been awakened as never before to the importance of having better government in all departments of municipal affairs. Moral conditions have been greatly improved and many other benefits derived from and through the franchise for women.

The state as a whole will eventually be better, cleaner, healthier and a more prosperous commonwealth in which to live by having given women a voice in public affairs.

HARRY H. STAHL,
Mayor of Freeport

Sycamore

With the help of the woman's vote, a better class of men have been elected to public offices and from now men seeking office will have to be men of good standing and business ability, and not simply politicians.

J. D. BECKLER,
Mayor of Sycamore

Alton.

The women took an active part in the election held here last April, and the woman's vote nearly equaled the vote of the men. Their services in assisting the municipal authorities in Alton are very valuable and much good has already been accomplished in Alton since giving them the privilege of the franchise.

EDMOND BEALL,
Mayor of Alton

Evanston

The women took a great interest in the last mayoralty campaign in Evanston, and as a consequence the largest vote ever polled in the city of Evanston was that of the last election.

I firmly believe that the women, if they will only get together, organize and work as men do in politics, can accomplish more than they now dream.

HARRY P. PEARSONS,
Mayor of Evanston

Kankakee

The votes of women have made it incumbent for the various political parties to put up for office more acceptable candidates. Especially is this true in the smaller cities of the state.

B. W. ALPINER,
Mayor of Kankakee

Urbana

I have been particularly interested in the advancement toward better civic conditions in the cities, and an improved moral tone therein, by the advent of women in politics. Segregated vice, graft in office and other forms of political and social corruption will be greatly eliminated in proportion to the increase of women in our state and municipal affairs.

O. S. BROWDER,
Mayor of Urbana

SAVINGS OF A DRY RUSSIA

When a nation at war is able to deposit in its savings banks in one month nearly twice the amount of its yearly savings, or nearly twenty-four times its usual monthly deposit in times of peace, it is quite natural to inquire what circumstances made possible so extraordinary an occurrence. In Russia this very thing has occurred and "prohibition" is the explanation given by Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post. He says:

"When vodka was on sale the average saving bank deposits in Russia were in the neighborhood of from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year—a year, not a month. In the thirty-one days of January, 1915, five months after the sale of vodka was prohibited—in one month—the former vodka drinkers put $30,000,000 into the savings banks in the empire. They saved nearly twice as much in one month as they formerly saved in a year.

"Moscow has about two millions people and is far more Russian than Petrograd. The Russians call Moscow 'the heart of Russia;' so vodka figures from that city may be considered really Russian.

"Vodka was prohibited when mobilization began—about August 1, or a few days before. In August, 1913, 667,296 gallons of vodka were sold in Moscow, and in August, 1914, after mobilization, 23,373 gallons. In September, 1913, Moscow drinkers of vodka consumed 759,947 gallons, and in September, 1914, they got along with 7,314 gallons. In October, 1913, they drank 707,688 gallons, and in October, 1914—the third month of prohibition—they drank only 2,913 gallons. The amount is far less now, because vodka was sold by the drink in the restaurants in Moscow during those three months, but the bottle shops, which were the plain people's emporiums were closed.

"I am told that the Moscow proportion is fairly a criterion. Of course in some places in the Caucasus, and in the far eastern points, there is still some consumption; but, as a whole, the Russians are not taking vodka. The nation has sobered up."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

483

Evanston, Illinois, September 30, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, returned to Evanston, Saturday morning, September 25, after an absence of some weeks in the east, where she has been in attendance at the state W. C. T. U. conventions of New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine and West Virginia. She is to be a speaker at the Illinois state convention at Waukegan, October 1, and will leave for the National Convention at Seattle on the evening of October 5, on the White Ribbon Special.

POST-CONVENTION MEETINGS AT SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES

On the return trip from Seattle, the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union expect to stop at San Francisco to attend the National Temperance Congress and visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

From San Francisco they will go to Los Angeles in response to an urgent invitation from the Southern California W. C. T. U. to participate in a mass meeting in that city for the purpose of inaugurating the state-wide prohibition campaign. A side trip will also be made to San Diego, where a great meeting will be held on the Fair grounds. They will return to Evanston by the route outlined in the official booklet as No. 3.

TWO THINGS TO REMEMBER!

The White Ribbon Special leaves the Chicago & North Western station in Chicago at 7:15 p. m., Tuesday, October 5, for Seattle. Preserve this copy of the SIGNAL. It contains much valuable information concerning the Convention. Bring with you your copy of last week's SIGNAL, so you may sing "John Barleycorn, Good by" on the journey.

WHAT ILLINOIS MAYORS THINK OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE

The testimony of the mayors of ten of the largest cities of Illinois, as given on another page, answers very satisfactorily many of the objections raised to giving the franchise to women. "The women do not want the privilege of voting and will not use it when they get it," say the "antis." The evidence of these mayors proves the contrary to be true, one saying the vote nearly equaled that of the men, and others telling of the active interest of the women at the polls.

"Will the majority of the women be for civic virtue?" asks the doubter skeptically. "Woman suffrage has brought about the dawn of a new and better era in politics," says the mayor of Chicago. "I am sure we will never return to the legalized saloon system so long as women are able to vote," declares the chief executive of Rockford. That ninety per cent of the woman vote registered was against the saloon and that there is not a single organized iniquity that does not oppose woman suffrage is the word of the mayor of Galesburg.

"Moral conditions greatly improved," "a better class of men as candidates," and "elimination of segregated vice and social corruption" are the benefits that other heads of Illinois cities have discovered as a result of the women's vote in the brief period that they have had to exercise their right.

Any state or community that hesitates to add to its voting constituency a group of individuals which comes as highly recommended as do the women must have some skeleton in its municipal closet which it does not care to have disclosed, or some dark, dusty corner which it fears to subject to the keen scrutiny of the expert housekeeping sex. The city that really wants to have a genuinely thorough cleaning-up will welcome the help of the women.

CONDEMNED IN THE HOUSE OF ITS FRIENDS

The result of the recent election in South Carolina marks the abandonment of an endeavor to regulate the liquor traffic as a government monopoly. For years the "Palmetto state" has been experimenting with the dispensary, its adoption by counties being optional; but the method proved to be a breeder of graft and corruption and completely failed to materially reduce the use of intoxicants. As in every community, state or nation that has tried it, there was flagrant violation of the law and new relays of citizens were being continually educated in the drink habit.

It is significant that some of the largest dry majorities were given by counties operating dispensaries. "The vote on September 14 is even more a condemnation of the dispensary than an approbation of state-wide prohibition, or at any rate as much so," remarks the Charleston News and Courier. "Even counties which had accepted it and where it was producing a handsome revenue have cast a majority in favor of wiping out the system root and branch."

This demonstration of the failure of what was considered by many the acme of regulation proves that the drink traffic cannot be regulated, therefore it must be exterminated.

The Detroit Times sizes up the situation well when it says, "There must be some reason for such action in a state which was thought by many people to have solved the saloon evil and the brewery and distillery menace, and there is! It is the growing belief in the minds of the people of not only South Carolina but of the whole country, that it is not the saloon system, not the competition between brewers and distillers that is the matter—it is liquor itself. It has been wiped out of South Carolina, as it has been wiped out of other states, and as it will presently be dismissed from the nation, through a combination of the strong, who can keep away from it themselves but are tired of supporting the wrecks it has caused, and of the weak who want to free themselves from its bonds, but who know that they are powerless so long as temptation is at their door."

ANSWERING MINNEAPOLIS' QUESTIONS

The liquor interests are circulating wild prophecies of what will happen in Minneapolis if it outlaws the drink traffic, and some of the timid voters are half believing them. If these fearful individuals would consult the cities in Minnesota which have heretofore climbed upon the water wagon, their fears would be speedily dissipated, for conclusive answers to practically every argument raised by the liquorites are to be found in the dry territory of the state.

"Your streets will be lined with vacant buildings and thousands of people will be out of employment," dolefully predicts the personal liberty orator. "Don't believe it," retorts a resident of dry Blue Earth, "there is not an empty house in our city. We have no poor people; not a single person or family in this city has any help from the county or city."

"Your trade will go to some nearby wet city," warns a liquor advocate. "That isn't the experience in Luverne," says a prominent citizen of that flourishing burg. "The proprietors of two of our largest department stores who both voted for license fearing no-license would hurt their business now declare they have had a larger trade during the past nine months than they ever had during a corresponding period before. The meat shops have enjoyed a great increase in trade and much better pay. Those who used to spend their cash for booze and buy meat on credit now pay cash for their meat."

"You will never again be in a position to make municipal improvements if you have not the license money from the saloon," croaks a friend of the license system. "Turn a deaf ear to such nonsense," replies the Albert Lea Enterprise. "Never in the history of our city has general prosperity been so much in evidence as since we voted out the saloon. No confidence has been lost by our local business people. In fact, immediately after election, business men started building the first six story, exclusive office building block in the state in a city the size of Albert Lea. A sixty-room addition is now being added to one of the best and largest hotels in Southern Minnesota. A forty-room hotel will soon be open for business. Fine business blocks, new garage additions and modern residences are being built in all parts of the city."

From all along the line of prohibition counties and cities in the great wheat state comes the encouraging word: "Prohibition pays in dollars and cents, in health and happiness, in prosperity and progress."

A Marvelous Leader---A Comrade Beloved

MRS. MARY P. BANG

Mrs. Silena M. Holman

On Sunday, September 19, in her home town of Fayetteville, amid the leafy bowers of her own beautiful lawn, the last sad services were held for our beloved and now glorified leader, Silena M. Holman.

A great concourse of people, probably 2,000, gathered in reverent silence and throughout the impressive service stood with uncovered heads. Her parting word to her children was, "Always stand by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and lose no opportunity to help the work." She requested that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have a part in the service, saying to Mrs. Elizabeth Davis Collins, state treasurer, who was present, "Let all that is done be for the good of the work."

After the sermon and a tribute from Dr. H. B. Carré, president of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League, the state officers in attendance, Mrs. Collins and the writer, took charge and conducted the order of service prepared some months ago for use on such occasions. As Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, National W. C. T. U. organizer, spoke in burning words of the life and work of our promoted leader, women sobbed and strong men wept.

With tear-dimmed eyes and aching hearts we turned from that sacred spot in Fayetteville, wondering in our desolation how we could ever go on without the inspiration of our dear white ribbon leader's cheering smile and loving words. But when we call to mind that her brave spirit stood for so many years undaunted and serene in the face of overwhelming difficulties we thank God for her and take courage, well knowing that if she could speak to us from the heavenly heights she would plead with us to lose not even one hour in the great fight that is on for the redemption of our land from liquor's curse—but to press steadily forward in our holy cause with redoubled energy, determination and enthusiasm.

A woman of unusual sweetness of spirit, with unfailing charity even for those who fought her most bitterly, a true patriot, a general of marked ability, Silena M. Holman stands a unique figure in Tennessee's history. That Tennessee is a prohibition state today is due more to her wise, brave, untiring efforts than to those of any other one human being.

A worker of prodigious activity, each year she sent out thousands of letters touching upon all that concerned the public good. Not a newspaper in the state but would gladly publish any article from her pen. Thus her influence was immeasurable. The literature of the Tennessee W. C. T. U. has been greatly enriched by her productions, and some of her leaflets have also been adopted by the National W. C. T. U.

Dr. H. B. Carré, president of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon League, thus characterized her: "She was a leader of marvelous intellectual strength with a clear vision of what was to be accomplished by the temperance forces—a militant Deborah of Tennessee."

Mrs. Holman hoped to be at the National W. C. T. U. Convention, saying she always gained such great inspiration from it she could not afford to stay away. But God's plans for her were different and today she stands with Frances Willard, Lillian Stevens and the triumphant host of great souls who have poured out their lives for others. God grant that the white banner of prohibition, purity and peace, so long held aloft in Tennessee by her devoted hands, may still be borne upward and onward by her loyal comrades, until the goal of National Constitutional Prohibition shall be attained.

A GREAT AND NOBLE WOMAN

EX-GOVERNOR BEN W. HOOPER

A great and noble woman was Silena M. Holman. She embodied a combination of essential characteristics that made her the most effective leader of the forces of temperance and prohibition that Tennessee has produced. In her administration of the affairs of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union she was wise and tactful. In her handling of public questions and in her dealings with public men, she was strong, discreet, diplomatic and powerful. She commanded the respect of all political elements and exerted a potent influence in moulding popular sentiment, shaping party politics and enacting reform legislation. But beyond all that can be said in praise of her qualities as the leader of a great movement, let it be recorded that she was a splendid type of the sweet, kind, gracious, tender, motherly woman, uncontaminated by her contact with the outside world.

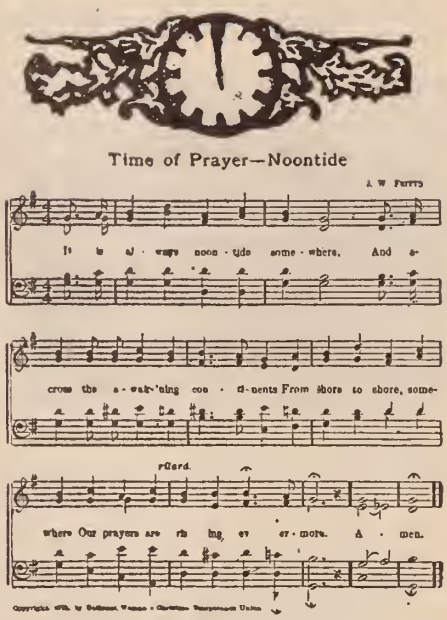
As the builder of a better state, I honor her name; as the once trusted counselor of my official conduct, I remember her with gratitude, and as the friend of my wife and children I love and reverence her memory and mourn her loss.

A CHRISTIAN SERVER OF MANKIND

GOVERNOR T. C. RYE

When the angel of death beckoned to the world beyond Mrs. Silena M. Holman, president of the Tennessee W. C. T. U., and in response to the summons the untiring champion of the white ribbon cause appeared before the Judge of the universe, there stood at the judgment bar no cringing, halting, stammering soul, but the soul of a woman, pure as the white ribbon she had worn for years, standing erect before her God, willing to be judged by the life she had lived here upon earth,—a Christian woman whose life was an open book, on each and every page of which was the record of some self-sacrifice, some noble deed, some generous act, some beautiful expression—all for the betterment of mankind and the elevation of humanity. By her untiring efforts the fires on many a hearthstone, smothered and put out by the rum traffic, had been rekindled; her hands had opened wide the windows of hope in many a darkened home, where the clouds of intemperance lowered, and let in the sunshine of love, devotion and happiness once more; through her service of love the sacred altars of home, overturned and destroyed by the demon rum, had been rebuilded and re-established, and crumbling idols again enthroned there. Hers was a life in which God was honored and His people blessed and benefited by her ministrations, and this shall be the verdict written in the courts above: "She hath done what she could."

May her spirit hover like a benediction over the land and the people she loved and may the work in which she engaged with all her soul soon reach a happy culmination, when not a saloon shall disgrace and curse our civilization, and the nation may proudly boast a sober, law-abiding citizenship.



COURAGEOUS CHAMPION OF PURITY TRANSLATED

Another valiant crusader for righteousness has gone to his reward. Anthony Comstock, secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, the hero of many an anti-vice crusade, died of pneumonia, September 21, in New York City, at the age of seventy-one years. It is said that Mr. Comstock's last illness was brought on by overwork and excitement resulting from the reformer's fight to retain his position as a postoffice inspector, which he had held since his appointment by President Grant in 1873.

Up to 1914 Mr. Comstock had caused the arraignment in state and federal courts of 3 697 persons, of whom 2,740 pleaded guilty or were convicted. Fines were imposed to the extent of $327,134.-30 and imprisonment to the total of 565 years, 11 months and 20 days. Several hundred arrests and several thousand dollars in fines were added in 1914 and 1915.

While many good people did not at all times agree with Mr. Comstock in his criticism of what he deemed immoral or indecent, all agree that he did in his time a work sorely needed, and accomplished it bravely and unflinchingly. History will record his name among the noblest champions of the right.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

NOVEMBER 14—World's Temperance Sunday.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Headquarters for Convention, Lincoln Hotel
Convention Meeting Place, Plymouth Congregational Church

CHAIRMEN OF THE COMMITTEES FOR NATIONAL CONVENTION

General Chairman, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt.

Convener, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns.

Treasurer, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg.

HOSPITALITY, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, 152 Lee St.

FINANCE, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, 1056 Sullivan St.

PUBLICITY, Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PULPIT SUPPLY, Mrs. S. L. W. Clark, 1701 Kilbourne St.

RECEPTION AT TRAINS, Mrs. Della Somers, 4318 7th, N. E.

DECORATIONS, Mrs. E. S. Wood, 1521 24th Ave.

RECEPTIONS, Mrs. Frances McLaughlin, 1806 16th Ave.

PRINTING, Mrs. Mary L. Stilwell, 401 W. Dravus.

BANNERS, Mrs. Mae Cook, 7th and Spring.

CHECK ROOM, Mrs. C. A. Peterson, 7019 24th N. W.

REST ROOM, Mrs. Sue N. Wright, 2359 N. 61st.

PAGES AND USHERS, Mrs. Mary M. Wade, 3187 Arcade Bldg.

PLATFORM, Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough, 1113 18th Ave. N.

INFORMATION, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana, 9738 61st Ave. S.

MUSIC, Mrs. Eugene W. Bell, 5719 27th N. E.

PLEASURE TRIPS, Mrs. Emma Morrison, 338 18th N.

POSTOFFICE, Mrs. Lillie Manney, 6502 10th Ave., N. W.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Connecticut, New Haven, Sept. 30-Oct. 1.

New York, Ithaca, Sept. 30-Oct. 4.

Wyoming, Laramie, Oct. 1-4.

Tennessee, Martin, Oct. 1-4.

Mississippi, Belzoni, Oct. 1-4.

Pennsylvania, York, Oct. 1-4.

Oregon, Newberg, Oct. 5-7.

Idaho (Southern), Payette, Oct. 5-7.

Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.

North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.

Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.

Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.

Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.

Louisiana, Alexandria, Oct. 30-Nov. 2.

Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.

Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

HONOR FOR OREGON WHITE RIBBONER

Mrs. Ida Marsters, who has been the president of the Douglas county (Ore.) W. C. T. U. for fifteen years, has been elected one of the four delegates to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She is the first woman from her conference to be accorded that honor.

HERE AND THERE

"The liquor men haven't had a new idea in forty years," said Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, in a recent address in Ohio, at the same time offering one dollar in cash for every new argument in favor of the liquor traffic.

The beautiful silk flag of the National W. C. T. U. floated triumphantly in front of Rest Cottage and National Headquarters the morning the news of the victory in South Carolina was received. The telegram from the state president read: "Hoist Old Glory high; South Carolina has gone dry."

Miss Julia Lathrop, head of the Federal Children's Bureau in Washington, said in a recent interview:

"I do not care so much for the vote for myself or for men as I do for mothers. The great test is whether it will be useful in the hands of 13,000,000 mothers in their business of rearing our 30,000,000 children. I believe it will."

The sheriff of Hudson county, New Jersey, has a very definite reason for favoring woman suffrage, and he is not afraid to state it. According to The Woman's Journal, he says, "During my service as sheriff of Hudson county I have found that there are fifty men in our jail to one woman. My conclusion is that since women know how to obey the laws better than men, they should know how to aid in framing them intelligently."

CONVENTION NOTES

Two hundred seats in the first two rows of the balcony of the Convention church, Seattle, have been reserved by the Convention Committee and they will be sold at $1 each. If you desire such seats, send your order immediately, accompanied by draft or money order, to Mrs. Lola J. Flagg, 3187 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Washington.

An automobile ride around the boulevards and parks of the city has been arranged for Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, weather permitting.

Dr. Hugh G. Ross, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church of Seattle, the Convention church, in accepting the invitation to deliver the convention sermon, writes that it will give him great pleasure to have the delegates and visitors at the Convention attend his church on Sunday, October 10, for which occasion a special program is being arranged.

ANTE-CONVENTION MEETINGS

The Official Board will meet in the Ladies' Parlor of Plymouth Congregational church at 9:00 a. m., Saturday, October 9.

The Executive Committee will meet in the Ladies' Parlor at 2:00 p. m., Saturday, and in the same room on other days at the call of the president.

An all-day Evangelistic meeting will be held on Saturday in the auditorium of the church. Special music under the direction of Mrs. Frances W. Graham will be a feature of the program prepared by Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, National superintendent of the department of Evangelistic Work. All members of the Executive Committee are invited to be present from eleven to twelve o'clock.

The Board of Superintendents will meet at 9:00 a. m., Saturday, in one of the class rooms on the second floor of the Sunday school wing. The Board of Organizers will meet at the same hour in another class room on the second floor of the Sunday school wing.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURES

The new stereopticon slides will be shown in four illustrated lectures to be given in the Sunday school assembly room at 6:30 p. m. as follows:

Monday evening, "Modern View of an Old Problem," Mrs. L. O. Middleton, lecturer S. T. I. department.

Tuesday evening, "John Barleycorn Must Go," Mrs. Lora S. LaMance, organizer and lecturer.

Wednesday evening, "Our Panama-Pacific Exhibit," Miss Mary E. Brown, director.

Thursday evening, "An Educational Appeal" (department lecture), Mrs. Ella B. Black, superintendent of Work Among Foreign Speaking People.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THE SOUTH CAROLINA ANNUAL MEETING

MRS. J. L. MIMS

The annual convention of South Carolina white ribboners at Allendale, September 2-5, with Mrs. Joseph Sprott, state president, in the chair, was a most encouraging one. Mrs. C. P. Robinson, state treasurer, reported a paid membership of 1,015. Receipts for the year have been 1,744.64; expenditures $1,629.92. For the first time in the history of the state union the membership has passed the one thousand mark and three delegates to Seattle were elected by the convention. All are making preparations to go and will join the White Ribbon Special at Chicago.

A most interesting period of the convention proceedings was the half-minute stories of the delegates telling of the best thing their union had done during the year. It brought to light the popularity with South Carolina unions of membership and medal contests. At one of the evening meetings Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer and lecturer, in an eloquent address, held the large audience spellbound with her oratory. Throughout the convention, as well, she was most helpful. Later in the evening Mr. W. D. Upshaw of Georgia delivered a stirring address in which he prophesied victory for the South Carolina prohibition hosts. Between these two addresses a demonstration was given by twenty-one young people of Allendale, eighteen of whom, dressed in white, represented the prohibition states, with South Carolina clad in black. Little Miss Chevalette Boyd greeted each of the dry states and they were crowned with wreaths of laurel by little Miss Mabel Calhoun. South Carolina was urged to don a white robe and join the prohibition ranks in 1915 by her vote at the September 14 election. (And she has done it.)

A delightful reception was tendered the convention at the commodious and hospitable home of the local Press correspondent, Mrs. W. B. Oswald.

The Sunday meetings were full of enthusiasm and interest. Mr. J. K. Breedin, secretary of the Business Men's League; Prof. T. E. Crane of North Carolina, who is in charge of the Allendale school; Hon. George Bates of Barnwell, and Hon. Joseph Camp of Atlanta made addresses, the latter making an argument of great power for prohibition in South Carolina.

The hostess town was on its best behavior in spite of the local dispensary, and the offerings were generous. Miss Sara Gray, president of the Allendale union, although a very young woman, proved a genius in planning convention entertainment.

Convention demonstrations included medal contests in oratory and song under the direction of Miss Gray, another by the Flower Mission department, the prize, a hand-painted picture, going to Miss Ellen Beech of Sumter. A fine demonstration, arranged by Mrs. W. B. Cogburn, showed how the eighteen prohibition states have been "hung on the dry line" through the department of Literature. The tableau was enlivened by a recitation by little Miss Elizabeth Lott of Edgefield, who has gone to many points in her county as a medal contestant.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Joseph Sprott; vice-president, Mrs. J. L. Mims; corresponding secretary, Miss Cleo Attaway; recording secretary, Mrs. T. R. Denny; treasurer, Mrs. C. P. Robinson.

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature. $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept. 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG--COUNT ON ME?
90,000 sold. Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. $1.00 per dozen.
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

VERMONT IS GOING DRY

White Ribboners Jubiliant in Convention

Special Correspondence

The forty-first annual convention of the Vermont W. C. T. U. was held in the village of Barton, September 8-10. Not even a furious downpour of rain on the first evening could dampen the spirit of enthusiasm which prevailed throughout the meeting. The church was beautifully decorated and a goodly company was present at the reception held in honor of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., who at its close delivered an address to a large and appreciative audience. It is needless to say that she won the hearts of her hearers.

On Thursday the day sessions were devoted to the consideration of the manner in which the different departments could best help in the campaign for prohibition. There were three addresses, one by Mrs. M. L. Pearson, the state president, which was replete with most helpful suggestions; another on "The Great Game," by Mrs. J. B. Estee, of Montpelier, a thoughtful presentation of the subject which sometimes became almost poetry in prose; and later the people listened to an eye-opening talk upon National Prohibition by Miss Gordon. In the evening there were addresses of welcome and a response, followed by a prize-speaking contest. All the contestants did themselves and the town credit, but the first prize was awarded to Lee Emerson, whose subject was "National Prohibition, the Hope of Our Country." The second fell to Ruby Calkins, who gave the recitation, "Loved." Friday morning the election of officers took place as follows: President, Mrs. M. L. Pearson; corresponding secretary, Miss Elsie L. Pease; recording secretary, Mrs. Ellen B. Turner; treasurer, Miss L. Grace Prior. Mrs. E. Mead Denny, who has served as treasurer faithfully and efficiently for many years, and whose judgment and reliability were highly valued, asked to be released from office because of the pressure of home duties. Her request was reluctantly granted.

Mrs. M. L. Pearson, President Vermont W. C. T. U.

Friday afternoon Mrs. Mary Grace Canfield delivered an eloquent and forceful address upon "Christian Citizenship," an ideal combination which she went far to prove did not yet exist. Miss Ellen Wagner gave a helpful and suggestive talk upon "The Place of Young People in the Temperance Movement." The music throughout the meeting was especially fine. When it was announced that the band would open the mass meeting arranged for voters in the evening by playing on the square in front of the hall, it was found that the crowd would be very large, so it was decided to have the addresses given from the band-stand. It was estimated that 2,000 people, standing, attested their interest in the question by listening attentively while three people, Hon. Porter Dale, Mr. John Holland and Rev. W. E. Shaw spoke upon "Prohibition vs. License." The attendance was so much larger than had been expected, the enthusiasm for prohibition so much greater, and the determination to work for it so much more evident that the white ribboners separated at the close of the convention greatly strengthened and encouraged as to the outcome of the campaign when the vote is counted next March.

The temperance people are determined that the voters shall not again be caught napping. Our women are circulating literature, supplying the temperance columns—in one instance paying for space—securing public speakers and organizing bands of Young Campaigners. A very helpful feature of the convention was the part taken by the young people, who assured us in their rally cry that "Vermont is going Dry." We are hoping and trusting and praying and working that the prediction may come true, thus removing from our beloved state the stigma that now rests upon it.

THE CONVENTION SEASON IN KANSAS

Mrs. Carrie Flatter, of Ohio, has finished four months' very successful work for the Kansas W. C. T. U. She is a tireless worker, full of energy and zeal and with a message that arouses the people to a sense of duty in regard to the prohibition movement. She has strengthened old unions, revived dormant ones, organized many new ones, and has given an impetus to the work wherever she has been. The months of August and September in Kansas have been devoted largely to convention work, county and district. More than ever before, speakers and workers have been secured for county conventions. Besides Mrs. Flatter, Rev. Mary Sibbitt, Mrs. Sena H. Wallace, Mrs. C. E. Jones and the state corresponding secretary, Miss Mary E. Dobbs, have given considerable time to the field. Each has done splendid work. Rev. Sibbitt spent three months in West Sixth district and organized some fine unions. She is a host in herself. Kansas has been fortunate in having the services of Mrs. Flatter and Rev. Sibbitt.

Fall styles in lawns this year in Minneapolis, it is reported, will be somewhat unusual if the present plans of the dry forces are carried out. Before October 4, the date of the local option election in Hennepin county, it is expected that hundreds of billboards will grace the lawns of those in favor of a dry county. This plan is being used to counteract the advertising of the liquor men, which is being posted on billboards throughout the city.

What Frances E. Willard Said
(Price 75 cents)
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said
(Price 50 cents)
Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

These books should be in every White Ribboner's library. Why not order them at once.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

The thirty-second annual convention of Fayette county (Pa.) W. C. T. U. was held in Uniontown, September 9-10, with the seventeen unions of the county well represented. The two days were given to discussions, addresses and reports of the presidents and superintendents and resulted in a revival of interest and reconsecration to the cause of temperance. Mrs. Kate Ritenour was re-elected president.

Benton county (Tenn.) W. C. T. U. met in convention Sept. 7, with Mrs. Olivia Robins as presiding officer. Good work for the year was reported by the presidents of the three local unions and by the county superintendents of Flower Mission. Mothers' Meetings, Christian Citizenship, Y. P. B., L. T. L. and Sunday school work. The officers for the following year are: President, Mrs. Mathilie Travis; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Olivia Robins; recording secretary, Mrs. Fannie Pierce; treasurer, Mrs. Lula Dowdy.

The annual convention of the Ottawa county (Mich.) W. C. T. U. was held the latter part of August in the First Reformed church of Spring Lake, with Mrs. Jennie Vos, county president, in charge. In addition to the county officers, there were present Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, state and district honorary president; Mrs. Alberta Dann, district president; Miss Margaret J. Bilz, National organizer and lecturer and district corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Julia Lillie, district recording secretary. A full quota of delegates and a splendid record of accomplishments for the past twelve months added greatly to the enthusiasm of the occasion. Mrs. Benjamin was the speaker for the first evening meeting and her many admirers affirm that never was she more eloquent or convincing. She was very enthusiastically applauded, and a beautiful bouquet tied with white ribbon and a souvenir spoon were presented to her by the entertaining union. The medal contest the second evening and the demonstration by the children of the Addie A. Austin L. T. L. were much enjoyed. Miss Bilz gave a comprehensive review of the progress of temperance and the present encouraging outlook, which was most impressive.

"It was the honor of motherhood that sent me out into the world to do the work that I am doing," explained Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., as she faced an enthusiastic company of Lawrence county (Pa.) white ribboners and their friends, who had gathered on a recent occasion to hear the words of this Kansas woman, who has been for some weeks touring Pennsylvania in the interests of "Votes for Women," and winning universal approval by her recital of the way they do things in Kansas.

"But you have blind tigers?" some one asked. "We have some blind tigers there," Mrs. Mitchner admitted. "However, if a tiger is after my boy, I would rather it were a blind one than one with both eyes open. Prohibition at its worst is better than high license at its best. When you drive the evil into back alleys, livery stables and suitcases, you have driven it into small quarters."

L'ARALDO

The only Evangelical Italian paper publishing W C. T. U. articles and news monthly.

10 Copies to One Address, 10 cents

L'ARALDO

175 Rockaway Ave. Brooklyn, N. Y

The Holyoke (Mass.) W. C. T. U. in a recent civic parade entered a float which attracted much attention. The decorations were green and white with a number of telling placards, among them "Onward Cold Water," and "Safety First Means No Alcohol."

The South Dakota W. C. T. U. has been honored through the official appointment by Governor Byrne of Mrs. Julia McDaniels, state superintendent of the Health department, as a delegate to the Mississippi Valley Conference on Tuberculosis to be held at Indianapolis, Indiana, Sept. 29-Oct. 1. Mrs. McDaniels is the only woman delegate.

Mrs. Mary S. Carey, an esteemed member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of San Jose, Calif., is a most remarkable woman. Although she is ninety-three years of age, she rarely misses a W. C. T. U. meeting and still retains the deepest interest in all departments of work. In the recent membership train contest which lasted about three months she secured seven new members. Mrs. Carey was formerly a teacher among the Chinese and gave to them most beautiful service, from both an educational and religious standpoint.

The temperance parade of the Anna A. Gordon W. C. T. U. of Asbury Park, N. J., on Sept. 6, was a most gratifying success. One float, a life boat on wheels, prettily decorated with flags and posters, was left in front of one of the hotels from nine until four in the afternoon and hundreds of people came up from the board walk to look at it, and most of them read every poster. During the summer the union has enrolled twenty-one new members, one honorary and one life member.

Walworth county (Wis.) W. C. T. U. held its annual convention at Sharon, Sept. 1-2, in the beautiful new Methodist church. Nine of the eleven unions were represented and gave good reports of aggressive work. The county W. C. T. U. will place on the fair grounds this fall a drinking fountain with large cement foundation and canopy top. Mrs. Almena P. McDonald, National organizer and lecturer, gave an address the first evening, and remained throughout the convention.

The W. C. T. U. of Montgomery county, Maryland, won the second prize in an automobile parade at the agricultural fair at Rockville last month. The Federation of Women's Clubs, in an effort to help the fair directors provide more wholesome amusements for their patrons, offered three prizes for the most effectively decorated cars, and the W. C. T. U., with no thought of competing, entered the parade simply as a means of advertising the organization. The prize, a handsome lap robe, was presented to the able county president, Mrs. Martha T. Farquhar, to whose initiative the entering of the car was due. Draped in white and banked with white hydrangeas and clematis, held in place by white bows, the car bore the W. C. T. U. monogram on the front of the radiator and a placard on one side with the word, "Prohibition" in letters a foot high. The L. T. L. of the county was also represented by a large car liberally decorated with flags and starspangled bunting, and filled with small girls and boys in Young Campaigners' regalia. Both cars were received with applause as they passed before the thousands of people in attendance at the fair.

POST THE POSTER

"Posters Make News of Temperance Facts." Give These Facts Wide Publicity by

POSTING THE POSTERS

1. Which Will You Protect?
2. Do You Know These Facts?
3. Alcohol.
4. Beer.
5. Exclusion of Objectionable Pos Cards from United States Mail.
6. Drink Robs the Working Man.
7. The License Voter Gets What?
8. Attention, Voters!
9. Figures Tell.
10. Saloons Increase Taxes.
11. The Trouble Manufacturing Com pany.
12. Successful Men.
13. In Prohibition Kansas.
14. Compare These Figures.
15. Boys and Girls.
16. Not By My Vote.
17. State Prohibition and Local Option
18. Temperance Truths (two).
19. Flag Poster (in colors).
20. Testimony from Governors of Prohi bition States.

Size 19x25. Printed in black and red.

Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; pe 100, $3.50.

SPECIAL CAMPAIGN POSTERS

The Liquor Traffic Must Go. Cloth 28x42. Price, each, 15 cents; two fo 25 cents; per hundred, $10.50.
Cloth, 12x18. Price, each, 5 cents; pe hundred, $3.00.
Paper, 28x42. Price, each, 5 cents; pe hundred, $3.50.

A Business Proposition. Cloth, 28x42 Price, each, 15 cents; two for 25 cents per hundred, $10.50.
Paper, 28x42. Price, 5 cents each; pe hundred, $3.50.

The Man Who Drinks. Paper, 28x42 Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50

BILL BOARD POSTERS.

Printed in two colors, 7x10 feet, pu up in eight sections. Price, 50 cent each.

The Man Who Drinks.
The Treating Evil.
Abraham Lincoln.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Ill.

Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, National organizer and lecturer, has been in Iowa speaking in the interests of suffrage and prohibition in the larger cities and towns. During the first week in September she spent two days in Burlington, where she was tendered a reception by the Y. W. C. A. and addressed two evening meetings, one in the First M. E church and the other in the public library hall. In Keokuk she gave six addresses in two days, three of them to very large and enthusiastic audiences. Mrs. La Mance, by her quiet manner and appeal to commmon sense, is winning friends for the suffrage cause.

Out from the hearthstone the children fair
Pass from the breath of a mother's prayer;
Shall a father's vote on the crowded street
Consent to the snare for the thoughtless feet?

Ah! fathers, your finest gold grows dim,
Black with the rust of such nameless sin!
Oh, say, will your dearest come back as they go,
Fair as the sunshine, pure as the snow?

Mary T. Lathrap in "The Temperance Songster."

HOW TOMMY WAS CURED

KATE WOODWARD NOBLE, Waterbury, Conn.

(Continued from September 16)

If Madge and Minnie had not come in just then and broken off the conversation between Tommy and his mother, it is hard to tell just how Tommy would have answered. He was naturally a truthful boy, and he did love his mother, but he was easily led, afraid of ridicule, and pretty completely under the domination of the boys with whom he associated. In his heart he knew his mother was right, for he had begun to grow tired of the manners of the rougher class of boys, and to suspect that they were not really manly. The cigaret habit was growing on him, however, and he craved the effect of the little paper rolls of tobacco more than he liked to acknowledge. He dreaded being found out, though, and this made him somewhat more cautious in their use than he otherwise would have been. But he still refused to go to the parish house, pleading that he was tired and didn't feel like getting ready. He went to bed early.

Madge and Minnie were greatly disappointed, as they had counted on his becoming interested in the Kwasind Club. "Do you think we ought to tell mama?" they asked each other, over and over, and each time decided to wait a little longer, knowing and dreading the effect of worry upon her health. Tonight they talked it over again, after going upstairs.

"Let's ask Mr. Tyler what to do," suggested practical Madge. "He likes Tommy, he said he did, and if Tommy would only get into the Kwasind Club, I do believe he would be all right again. He used to be so nice before he went with those horrid boys."

The next day two very sober little girls waylaid Mr. Tyler and talked to him for a long time. Their faces were brighter when they came away from his study in the parish house, and all that evening they kept making mysterious signs and breaking out into little giggles, much to the wonderment of their mother and Tommy.

After the next meeting of the Kwasind Club wonderful things began to happen. Caricatures of boys smoking cigarets and swaggering along appeared on fences; the appearance of the youthful smokers was the signal for bursts of jeering laughter from Kwasind badge wearers. Then songs something like this were printed in the school paper:

"Don't you think that you are smart,
Great big manly smoker,
Puffing at your cigaret,
Strutting stiff as poker;
Strut and puff and puff and strut,
Try to be a smarty,
Wish that you could see yourself,
As you look, my hearty."

Sung to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" this greeted the ears of the smokers morning, noon and night. The older boys took it up and soon the life of Tommy and the rest was made a burden in that town.

After a week or so Tommy became thoroughly sick of being a laughing stock for the boys of the Kwasind club, and some of the rest shared his feeling. When Mr. Tyler, meeting a group of them, of which Tommy was one, cordially invited them to come up and see the basketball game of the club the next evening, they accepted quite readily, and became so much interested that they applied for membership. After answering the questions as to whether they were willing to obey the laws of the club and had passed the physical examination, they received the paper badges with two points of the star, which they were told were Obedience to Law, and Activity. "If you break the laws of your school, or of the town, or are found disobedient to your parents, you lose the Obedience point," explained Mr. Taylor. "You have three other points to gain before you can join any of the teams, and must gain three pendants before becoming full-fledged members. But the two points will admit you to the rooms and to all games, as spectators."

Tommy puzzled a good deal as to the other three points. He asked other boys, but was told, "You'll find out when you pass 'em," and with this he had to be content for the present.

Although nothing had been said about cigarets in the club rooms, Tommy knew that none of the members were supposed to use them, and suspected they might have something to do with one or more of the coveted missing points. So he struggled manfully to give them up, helped a good deal, no doubt, by the ridicule which continued to be heaped upon the users of the little rolls of tobacco. The yellow stains gradually faded from his fingers and, after the first fight was over, he felt better than he had in some time. He also began to drop the slang and semi-profanity which had marred his talk when among other boys—he had not dared go as far as that at home—and was much kinder to his sisters and more thoughtful of his mother's wishes. One night, as he entered the parish house, some one tapped him on the shoulder and he was called into the anteroom. Three masked figures awaited him there. "You have finally achieved Cleanliness of Body, by breaking away from the cigaret habit, and thus gained the third point of the star," said one, pinning the point to the paper badge on Tommy's breast. "You have also achieved Cleanliness of Speech, the fourth point," said the next, with similar action, "and by achieving these you have earned the last point, that of Bravery," said the third, completing the star. He was then bidden to take off the paper badge and received in its stead the pretty metal badge with the star complete.

"Go on as you have begun," said the masked figures, in chorus, "and win the three pendants in due time." He was not told what he must do to gain the pendants, but a month later received one, the next month another, and the third month the last. "These pendants stand for Purpose, Pluck and Perseverance," said Mr. Tyler, as he fastened them to Tommy's badge, "and they are yours, so long as you keep on doing well." As he passed out, Tommy received a rousing welcome from the rest of the club.

The Kwasind Club continued to grow and flourish for a long time; indeed, it may still be in existence. Its members were strong and clear-headed and were regarded as valuable assets to the athletic organizations of the towns in which they resided, and their influence was always for good. Mr. Tyler lost no opportunity to impress upon the boys the fact that their bodies were complicated machines, given to them by God to do His work in various lines, and that it was a solemn and sacred duty to keep them in proper condition for that work; showing them that clean minds must dwell in clean bodies, and directing them to the never-failing sources of help provided in the churches with which they were connected—for there was no restriction of creed or nationality in the club membership. The boys were urged to faithful, regular attendance upon church services, and the carrying out, in daily life, of the principles they were taught. Tommy has never ceased to be thankful for his own cure, wrought by the Kwasind Club.

NEW YORK COUNTIES IN CONVENTION

The Chautauqua county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. convention met at Gerry, Sept. 8-9, Mrs. Flora H. Sterling, county president, presiding. An interesting program was presented, consisting of reports, solos, recitations, temperance songs, and a medal contest by the Young People's Branch. The evening address was given by Mrs. Frances W. Graham, of Lockport, vice-president of the New York state W. C. T. U., her subject being "Prohibition and Woman Suffrage." She sang very effectively several temperance songs. The financial report of the treasurer showed a total county membership of 1,566, three new unions and one new Y. P. B. having been organized during the year.

Chenango county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. held a most interesting annual convention September 1 in the Broad Street Methodist church, Norwich. Forty-six delegates from the eighteen unions in the county were present. A considerable gain in membership, the organization of four new unions and a total membership for the county of more than 500 were reported. Mrs. Mary Hyde of Alton was elected president to succeed Mrs. S. E. Johns, who has held the office thirteen years. In the afternoon Miss Clara Goodrich, a returned missionary, spoke most entertainingly of temperance conditions in India. In the evening Rev. A. R. Burke, pastor of the convention church, gave a very forceful stereopticon lecture on the effects of alcohol on the human system.

The thirty-first annual convention of the Saratoga county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. was held in Corinth with forty-five delegates present, and Mrs. Jennie E. Wright, county president, presiding. Addresses by Miss Kate Devereaux Blake, showing the difference in the conditions in the states where women vote as compared with those which have only male suffrage, furnished valuable arguments for woman suffrage. An address on scientific temperance by Dr. Ferris was most convincing.

The thirty-ninth annual convention of Ontario county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. met at Phelps, N. Y., with an attendance of 200, representing a paid membership of more than 1,000. The address of the evening was made by ex-convict Frank E. Howard. Ontario county has held four institutes during the year, with a good attendance at each.

The W. C. T. U of Franklin county (N. Y.) met in the M. E. church, Chateaugay, September 1, for its twenty-seventh annual convention. The attendance was large, interest in the work pronounced, and reports from unions and superintendents most encouraging. Dr. Lucia Heaton, a member of the state board of health, gave an exceedingly interesting and instructive address on "What Women Can Do for Public Health." Interest in woman suffrage is at white heat in New York state and the women of the W. C. T. U. listened with absorbing attention to Mrs. Alexander MacDonald, one of the influential suffrage leaders of the county, who told what a victory for suffrage would mean to the temperance cause. Her brief talks, both afternoon and evening, were most enthusiastically received. The church was filled to its capacity in the evening to hear the double medal contest, oratorical and vocal.

Return from the

SEATTLE CONVENTION

through the most interesting part of the great states of Washington, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota and Minnesota. More than one thousand miles of mountain and river scenery via the Northern Pacific Railway

Special arrangements will be made for through cars to Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago. Stops may be made en route if desired.

For literature and information address

A. C. Odenbaugh, G.A.P.D., N.P.Ry.
144 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CATHOLICS WORKING FOR TOTAL ABSTINENCE

At the forty-fifth national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America which met in Pittsburgh last month, the Very Rev. P. J. O'Callaghan, national president of the organization, in an address quoted the words of Pope Pius X to a delegation of members of the International Federation a year and a half ago, "It is your duty, as Catholics, to be in the very van of the anti-alcohol movement." "In this movement against alcohol drinking the latest blessing of the church of God is upon those who are in the very van of it," declared the president.

"What can we do to save the race from the curse of alcoholism? What share are we Catholics going to have in the eradicating of the monster evil of these days? Catholics should be foremost in this altruistic crusade for the physical, moral and religious salvation of the race. The individualism which sees in the temperance question merely an attack on personal liberty shows small indication of a Christian spirit. A Christian spirit feels that if one member is sick the whole body is sick. How many of us do really suffer because of the thousands that are drunkards? How many of us are asking what are the causes of drunkenness? Who cares? Do you? Are you concerned about the dangers which will beset the path of the rising generation? Are you anxious to save every man that can be saved, and especially anxious to preserve those that are yet uncontaminated in order that the Kingdom of God may be peopled for time and for eternity? When we begin to do our best, we shall make not only Catholics in America sober, but we shall make the nation sober."

The Western Hotel, of Spokane, Washington, has been ordered by the superior court to be closed for six months and a fine of $300 has been assessed against the property in the proceedings brought under the "red light" abatement law against the hotel proprietors and the owner of the building. This is the second conviction in Eastern Washington under the law.

OHIO'S GOVERNOR WILL VOTE FOR PROHIBITION

Governor Willis of Ohio has taken his place with the many governors of the United States who approve of state-wide prohibition. In an address before the Methodist Conference at Columbus recently, he told his hearers that last fall when the question of state-wide prohibition was submitted to a vote of the people he cast a dry ballot, and that he would do the same this year when the matter is again considered at the November election.

Nineteen Prohibition States

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

South Carolina

PROHIBITION State Pennants

A strong paper pennant. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 19 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

Copyright, Benj. A. Gifford, "The Dalles," Oreg.

The Whirlpool, Celilo Falls

These are some of the scenes which our delegates to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention at Seattle will witness on their last day's ride along the Columbia River on the White Ribbon Special, which leaves Chicago on the evening of October 5.

The 200-mile ride down the beautiful Columbia River is a fitting climax to a gloriously beautiful trip. The beauties of the Columbia are world-famous. It is one of the scenic regions of the country — a great river rushing through gorges, across wide sweeping valleys; seeking its way to the sea among huge, magnificent mountains.

Rugged cliffs rise from the river's edge. The train flashes along the foot of them, steady and smooth on a splendid track —one of the triumphs of modern American engineering. Now and then the cliffs crowd the river into a tumbling torrent, tearing at the rocks which impede its flow. The whirlpool at Celilo Falls is such a place.

And now and then a waterfall comes feathering down through a cleft in the cliff. Latourelle Falls, here pictured, is one of a series of such falls near the city of Portland. And here and there, in the broader sweeps of the river, are seen fishing wheels, in which Chinook salmon are caught for the canneries.

Latourelle Falls

Bridal Veil Bluffs

At The Dalles, the Special will wait an hour, so that everyone may enjoy the grandeur. The long stop at the "Rose City" of Oregon gives opportunity for more than a glimpse at the extraordinary beauty of its surroundings. From Council Crest, a half hour's ride from the center of the city, five snow-capped mountains are visible; the windings of the blue Willamette and the Columbia are in view; the panorama of hamlet, orchard, and rich valley spreads as far as the eye can reach.

Portland, at the end of this splendid ride down the Columbia, is one of the beauty cities of the country, where leaves are green and flowers grow throughout the year.

Another night's ride and the White Ribbon Special will roll into Seattle, the modern city that commands Puget Sound, and a revelation to those who have never seen it.

Fish Whirl, Columbia River

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	25c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each	Per 100, $1.75
SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES
THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	37c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

WIN ONE CIRCLE, 1915

With this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL our Win One Circle for 1915 closes. A large circle it is—reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean and from the lakes to the gulf, numbering five hundred and forty members, all enthusiastic over our splendid, OUR VERY OWN UNION SIGNAL.

At the coming great National Convention in Seattle we shall have a Convention Win One Circle and anyone already a subscriber who gives the name of a new subscriber during the convention will become a member of the Convention Win One Circle, receiving a white enamel pin and ribbon badge. Will you who are privileged to attend the coming convention kindly remember the Win One Circle and either take with you the name of a new subscriber, or remember your hostess in the convention city by subscribing for her? All new subscribers secured at the convention will receive the convention numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and next best to being present at a National Convention is the privilege of reading in word-pictures the full account of the great meeting.

526. Miss Emma C. Connor, Magnolia, Del.
527. Mrs. Sarah E. Moss, Pineville, Ky.
528. Mrs. Jennie LaDue, Northampton, Mass.
529. Mrs. W. C. Goff, Waverly, Wash.
530. Mrs. Evelyn B. Street, Dixon, Ill.
531. Mrs. Sarah B. Fisk, Chicago, Ill.
532. Mrs. W. W. Smith, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
533. Mrs. A. V. Carter, Elmira, N. Y.
534. Mrs. J. T. Bell, Soddy, Tenn.
535. Mrs. Della Williams, Moore's Hill, Ind.
536. Mrs. A. T. Perrin, New Hartford, Iowa.
537. Mrs. Charlotte A. Brannon, Jacksonville, Ill.
538. Mrs. Theodore Willard, Nashville, Tenn.
539. Mrs. Ida Dixon, Silver Springs, N. Y.
540. Mrs. M. H. Spotts, Winchester, Ia.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD written by Anna Adams Gordon, has been forwarded to the following as a premium for sending ten subscriptions to the weekly edition of THE UNION SIGNAL:

56. Mrs. Walter Hall, Salem, N. J.
57. Mrs. R. J. Smith, Wooster, O.
58. Rev. Alice H. Allen, Truman, Minn.
59. Rev. Alice H. Allen, Truman, Minn.
60. Mrs. M. J. Philpot, Cedar Falls, Ia.
61. Mrs. Mattie Chambers, So. Akron, O.
62. Mrs. Lillian Minker, Spring City, Pa.
63. Laura E. Corbin, Liberty, Mo.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

SLUMP IN BEER SALES IN MISSOURI

Missouri is slowing down on beer consumption. The records of the state beer inspection department give the figures to prove it. For July of this year their reports show a slump of 100,000 barrels over the same month last year, with a loss of 25,000 barrels for the month of August as compared with the records for August, 1914. This decrease has resulted in a loss of revenue to the state of $20,000 for the two months, $15,000 for July and $5,000 for August. Growth of prohibition territory is given as one cause of this decrease.

CONAN DOYLE'S TEMPERANCE POSTERS

The celebrated story-writer, Sir A. Conan Doyle, M. D., has prepared two temperance posters, which are being widely used throughout the British Empire. They are printed in large letters and read as follows: "To Britain's Workers: Drink by you means death to our soldiers. They give up life for you. Won't you give up drink for them?" The other reads thus: "Alcohol: You will be happier without it. You will be healthier without it. You will be richer without it. Sign off for the war!"

ABSURD!

Congressman Gallivan of Massachusetts is reported as denouncing prohibition, in a recent speech, as "un-American, unjust, inhuman, crazy, making for panic, wage-reduction, hypocrisy, crime, and demoralization!"

"Un-American" to stand for freedom from King Alcohol, the worst tyrant on earth!

"Unjust" to object to paying taxes to support the filthy pleasures of debauchery!

"Inhuman" to heed the prayers of the fathers, mothers, wives, and children of drunkards!

"Crazy" to wage war on delirium tremens!

"Making for panic" to seek to put into savings-banks the $2,000,000,000 annual cost of drink!

"Making for wage-reduction" to abolish the curse that bars workers wholly from the leading industries!

"Making for hypocrisy" to protest against such false statements as that speech contained!

"Making for crime" to close the saloons, the admitted cause of more than three-fourths of all crime!

"Making for demoralization" to prohibit the worst demoralizer of the ages, the sin-filled, satanic, seductive saloon!

Could nine more absurd characterizations of the prohibition movement possibly be made?—Arrow, in Christian Endeavor World.

GERMAN TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

The following German pamphlets are issued to help enlist as many as possible of the German-Americans in the fight against the drink habit and the liquor traffic. They appeal to them in their native tongue and on lines which will most easily influence them. Speed the cause of national prohibition by distributing these pamphlets widely.

1. "THE BIBLE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE." 32 pages, 2d edition, ten thousand now issued. Price 5c each, 25c a doz., $1.50 a hundred, postpaid.
2. "THE GERMANS AND THE DRINK QUESTION." 8 pages, forty thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a dozen, 50c a hundred, postpaid, $4.00 a thousand by express.
3. "CHRISTIANITY AND PROHIBITION." 8 pages, twenty thousand now issued. Same price as No. 2.
4. "THE AIMS AND RESULTS OF PROHIBITION." 12 pages, 3d edition, thirty-five thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a doz., 65c a hundred, postpaid, $5.00 a thousand by express.

Of this last a new revised edition has just left the press. It also embodies the latest statistics and statements concerning prohibition in Kansas by the Governors, Stubbs, Hodges and Capper and by the legislature of the state. Send orders to

J. G. EVERT, BOX B, HILLSBORO, KANS.

Be Sure

to have your ticket read for return from SEATTLE via

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

to

SAN FRANCISCO

and

LOS ANGELES

The Road of a Thousand Wonders

Make the side trip to

Yosemite Valley

and the Big Trees

See Palo Alto, Santa Cruz, Del Monte, Santa Barbara, San Diego and other beauty spots of California

If you desire a Southern Route, return by way of the

Sunset Route

through Yuma, Tucson, El Paso, San Antonio, Houston and New Orleans

Free side trip to Pasadena, Riverside, San Bernardino

Send postal for descriptive booklets

SHASTA ROUTE
OGDEN ROUTE
SUNSET ROUTE

W. G. NEIMYER
Gen'l Agt.
Southern Pacific Co.
55 West Jackson Blvd.
CHICAGO

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., OCTOBER 7, 1915 | No. 41

The Awakening of Women

Frances E. Willard

The awakening of women to a perception of their relation to civic life is an incalculable advantage, for women are the mothers of the race. Organized motherhood is a force the most deeply rooted, the most steadily enduring that this planet knows among all the beneficent forces that the ages have developed. The ballot for women is part and parcel of our prohibition cause; the two sink or rise together.

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Massachusetts Liquor Interests Secretly Oppose Suffrage—George Washington's Views on the Liquor Question—Frances Willard and Woman Suffrage—Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands a Friend of Temperance.

Massachusetts Liquor Interests Secretly Oppose Suffrage

In the four states which vote this fall on woman suffrage the liquor interests are actively engaged in opposing the measure. In Pennsylvania and New Jersey the liquor men voted to oppose suffrage and are liberally aiding the opposition. In Massachusetts the opposition is just as active, but is being secretly carried on. Certain letters which have recently come into the possession of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association and were published by the Association in the Boston Post explain one method by which they are raising funds for the anti-suffrage cause:

The first letter, bearing the heading of the Massachusetts Liquor League, 27 Haymarket Sq., Rooms 41, 42, 43, and dated Boston, Mass., July 17, 1915, reads as follows:

"To whom it may concern:

"This note will serve to introduce Representative Dennis F. Reardon of the 19th Suffolk district, who has been a good friend of our cause in the legislature with voice and vote. He will personally explain his mission.

"Anything you can do to make our cause a success will be appreciated by

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "Edward H. Pinkham."

The second one, on the letter head of the Massachusetts' Voters' Anti-Suffrage League and signed by D. F. Reardon, treasurer, shows the purpose for which the above letter is being used. It reads as follows:

"Dear Sir:—For the purpose of procuring funds to assist us in sending speakers to every city and town in the commonwealth to advance the anti-suffrage cause, a grand picnic and outing will be held at Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury, Wednesday, Aug. 25, 1915.

"The project has the endorsement of the Massachusetts Liquor League, and a copy of their endorsement signed by Edward H. Pinkham, secretary, is herewith enclosed. Enclosed also are ten tickets for the picnic, which you are asked to purchase. As this is a matter in which we are all vitally interested, it is hoped you will make immediate remittance for the tickets. Make checks payable to D. F. Reardon, treasurer of Massachusetts Voters' Anti-Suffrage League.

"Thanking you in advance for the anticipated assistance, we remain, very truly yours,

"M. V. A. S. L.,

"By D. F. Reardon, Treasurer."

State-wide Prohibition Now in Nineteen States

Ohio Next State To Vote on the Saloon Question

Maine	1851	Virginia	1914
Kansas	1880	Colorado	1914
North Dakota	1889	Oregon	1914
Georgia	1907	Washington	1914
Oklahoma	1907	Arizona	1914
Mississippi	1908	Alabama	1915
North Carolina	1908	Arkansas	1915
Tennessee	1909	Iowa	1915
West Virginia	1912	Idaho	1915
		South Carolina	1915

To vote on statewide prohibition this year—Ohio.

To vote on statewide prohibition next year—Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, South Dakota, Vermont, Alaska.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S VIEWS ON THE LIQUOR QUESTION

A most interesting and valuable statement made by George Washington, showing his attitude toward the drink evil, has been discovered by The Vindicator. It was found in a volume entitled, "Letters and Addresses of George Washington," edited by Jonas Viles, professor of history in the University of Missouri, and published by the Sun Dial Classics company of New York, in 1909. It is in the form of a letter written by Washington, at Mt. Vernon, on March 31, 1789, to a Mr. Thomas Green, and reads as follows:

"The sure means to avoid this evil is, first, to refrain from drink, which is the source of all evil and the ruin of half the workmen in this country. Were you to look back and had the means, either from recollection or accounts, to ascertain the cost of the liquor you have expended, it would astonish you. In the manner this expense is generally incurred, that is by getting a little now and a little then, the impropriety of it is not seen, inasmuch as it passes away without much thought. But, view it in the aggregate, you will be convinced at once, whether any man who depends upon the labor of his hands, not only for his own support, but that of an increasing family, can afford such a proportion of his wages for that article. But the expense is not the worst consequence that attends it, for it naturally leads a man into the company of those who encourage dissipation and idleness, by which he is led by degrees to the perpetration of acts which may terminate in his ruin. But, supposing this not to happen, a disordered frame and a body debilitated, renders him unfit (even if his mind was disposed to discharge the duties of his station with honor to himself or fidelity to his employer) from the execution of it. An aching head and trembling limbs, which are the inevitable effects of drinking, disincline the hands from work; hence begins sloth and that listlessness which end in idleness, but which are no reasons for withholding that labor for which money is paid."

A copy of this strong statement should be published in the newspapers of every community to disprove the falsehoods concerning Washington's attitude on the liquor question which have been and are being circulated by the brewers.

NEBRASKA'S PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN WELL UNDER WAY—MR. BRYAN PROMISES HIS ASSISTANCE

At an enthusiastic convention of th Nebraska Dry Federation at Lincoln, N braska's 1916 prohibition campaign wa given an impetus which started it we on its way to victory. Twelve hundre and fifty delegates attended. Hon. Charl W. Bryan, mayor of Lincoln, was the pr siding officer. Hon. William J. Bryan, t letter, gave assurance of his help in th campaign. Greetings from the governo of Kansas and Colorado and from th National Farmers' Congress were exten ed the federation. The cordial spirit ma ifested promises well for the co-operati of the temperance forces of the state.

KANSAS THE TARGET OF LIQUC PUBLICITY BUREAUS, DECLARES GOVERNOR CAPPER

In an address delivered at the thir seventh annual convention of the Kans W. C. T. U., Governor Capper told of t benefits Kansas enjoys as the result prohibition and predicted the aboliti of the liquor traffic by federal law in least ten years. Referring to the way which the state is slandered by the liqu interests, he said:

"Kansas, under the enforcement of t prohibitory law, has made such marv ous advancement in every avenue progress and well-being that the pow fully entrenched liquor interests, alarm lest all the states, or the nation, foll its example, have made Kansas the tar of their various publicity bureaus. Th have covered the entire United Sta with pamphlets and reports in wh statistics are adroitly massed, manuf tured and distorted to prove that Kan actually is damaged by prohibition a that there can be no real prosperity, actual progress without the saloon. (side of their argument is as convinc as the other, but the plausible and parently conclusive and authoritative ray of their alleged statistics, puz many persons who realize at the sa time that they cannot be true or enti true."

NATIONAL CARRIAGE MAKER ASSOCIATION HOLDS LIQUOR-LESS BANQUET

Not a drop of liquor, it is reported, served at the banquet of the Natic Carriage Makers' Association, held cently in Cleveland; yet, despite the sence of John Barleycorn, the affai said to have been a tremendous succ the best the association has held years. To the strains of the finest chestra obtainable and the dulcet to of grand opera stars the men who b made fortunes out of horse-drawn hicles sipped their tea, "and by tea, is meant," declares an Ohio paper, w describes the occasion in the follo words:

"Over $1,200 worth of entertainm stunts took the place of the bubbling p and the gentlemen, who for years h made speeches with their right hand ing on the top of champagne bot which left their remaining hand free gestures, got along finely last night out any rests for their hands."

Former Providence, R. I., Brewery Now Motion Picture Studio

In these days when breweries and distilleries are being closed in considerable numbers throughout the country, it is interesting to note the different uses to which the buildings and machinery are being adapted. The list so far includes ice plants, creameries, pottery works, soft drink factories and many others. And now comes word that a brewery in Providence, R. I., has been transformed into a motion picture studio. The picture herewith shows the new studio and the entire film company and several hundred extras who were employed in making "Captain Eri," a five part Eastern film production. In sending it Mrs. Helen H. Green, UNION SIGNAL correspondent for the Virginia W. C. T. U., encloses a letter from Mr. Bert Ennis, publicity man for the Eastern Film corporation, in which he makes this statement concerning the new studio:

"I believe that the community around is bettered by the fact that a film company now occupies the space where once beer was made, and I think the amusement of Providence, as well as the rest of the country and world, will do more material good than did the concoctions which were mixed by the brewers."

KANSAS BANKS SHOW LARGELY INCREASED DEPOSITS

Kansas has recently given to the world another proof that prohibition promotes the financial prosperity of a state. When the state and national banks were asked in June to make a statement of their condition, the vaults of the Kansas banks were fairly bulging with money. Their books showed combined deposits of $226,666,163.79, an increase of $46,281,306.71 over the deposits reported on June 30, 1914.

MICHIGAN IS GOING DRY!

"Dry times are certainly coming in Michigan," exclaimed a Detroit motorist the other day. "I made a trip recently from Traverse City to Detroit and in following a certain stretch of country having good roads I did not strike one place in which to get a drink until near Detroit. That's going some when you consider it means going pretty well the length of the state."

MINNESOTA CLUB WOMEN FOR A DRY HENNEPIN COUNTY

It is not often that a federation meeting is asked to vote upon a re-endorsement of a resolution already passed, but so strongly did the members of the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs feel on the issue of the October 4 election in Hennepin county that, at the state meeting in Minneapolis last week, there was presented and acted upon a resolution reiterating the one passed last year at Rochester, Minn. It reads as follows:

"Resolved, That as the home is the citadel of womanhood and the liquor traffic is the deadly enemy of the home, we endorse the action of the National Federation of Women's Clubs in favor of national prohibition, commend the movement for state-wide prohibition in Minnesota and pray for victory for the dry forces in Hennepin county, October 4."

TRAMPS SHUN DRY CITY

Kalamazoo, Mich., which has been without saloons since May 1, is not attracting the usual number of tramps. This fact was made known recently at the semi-annual inspection of the jail records. During the four months ending September 20, 1915, less than one-third the usual number of hoboes for this season of the year enjoyed the hospitality of the jail, and the city was thus freed from a large number of undesirables and the lawlessness attendant upon their sojourn within its limits. For the past four months the prison records show only 1,142 tramps as contrasted with 3,500 for the corresponding period of other years.

PROHIBITION CITY HAS NO VICE DISTRICT

Charleston, W. Va., has found that prohibition can be made to prohibit and the law in that city has been so well enforced that even in the vice districts, which were open for a time after the prohibition law went into effect, it was impossible to procure liquor. According to the story of a prominent West Virginia business man published in an Ohio paper, a company of ministers in disguise visited the district for four nights, and were unable in a single house to obtain intoxicants. But the district soon realized that without liquor it was deprived of its strongest ally, and the resorts have since been permanently closed.

"What Is the Matter, Anyway?"

As one state after another outlaws the drink traffic the astonished liquor men ask, "What's the matter, anyway?"

That question is easily answered. The thing that's all wrong is liquor itself, and the people are finding it out. The dispensary plan; the high license plan; the government owned saloon; the family liquor store; Sunday closing; early closing; strict supervision; abolishment of free lunch, music, tables and games; the system of having only one saloon to so many population; local option—all of these are mere subterfuges. They are quack remedies. They do not go to the root of the evil, which is liquor itself. The only cure for the liquor evil is the complete prohibition of its manufacture and sale in the whole nation.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

"SAFETY FIRST"

MRS. McVEAN ADAMS, Mound City, Kan.

It began over the telephone. Mary Rose answered the bell and called back, "Long distance for you, mother."

"Oh, dear, I hope none of the children are sick!" sighed Mrs. Rose, as she hurried to answer the summons.

"This is Mrs. Rose—Yes, this is the president of the Blessington W. C. T. U. —Is that so?—Well, that is too bad.—Why, ye-es, I guess we could, but it is very short notice—I really ought not to decide without 'phoning to the other officers.—Well, if there is only time for her to reach the train, tell her to come; come right to my home. Some of us will try to meet her. Goodbye."

A groan from both daughters greeted Mrs. Rose's return to the sewing room.

"Another W. C. T. U. speaker!" said Alice, "and my dress just has to be done for Friday."

"Yes, it is a Mrs. Jones," said Mrs. Rose. "The road was washed out so that she could not reach her appointment for tonight, so we have the chance to have her here. She had to know definitely about coming so as to get that morning train. We must all work lively now to get out a crowd. I'm glad Central is so willing to help us. She can give the general call on each of the country lines, and so tell all the neighborhood at once, and the people will come in big auto loads. I will ask our pastor to strike off some little bills on his press, as he does the church bulletins, and the neighborhood boys will distribute them. It's lucky that Fred is at home. He must make a poster in his best style and put it up in the post-office. You girls would better make the guest-room fresh and pretty and straighten the whole house, while I stand at the 'phone. I must ask the trustees for permission to use the church, and call up all the members of the union and divide the business of telephoning among them. Oh, yes, Alice, you will play, of course, and I will invite the choirs of each of the churches to meet at three to practice. There should be at least one solo. Just close the door and leave the sewing-room as it is. Don't look so blue, Alice, for I can get your dress done in time. Doubtless Mrs. Jones will bring us a blessing. I have never heard her."

It was a busy day in the little town. Blessington had a fine community spirit, and the union, though small, had been through many such emergencies, and was well trained for team work. Before evening nearly every one knew of the unexpected lecture. There was one woman, a Mrs. Brown, whom the white ribboners had long desired as a member, both because of her abilities and for the sake of her growing family, all boys but one. Mrs. Brown had promised to attend the lecture.

Mrs. Jones arrived. She was not a strong woman and looked pale and worn. Though too late for the noon meal, a nourishing luncheon, daintily served, was given her at once.

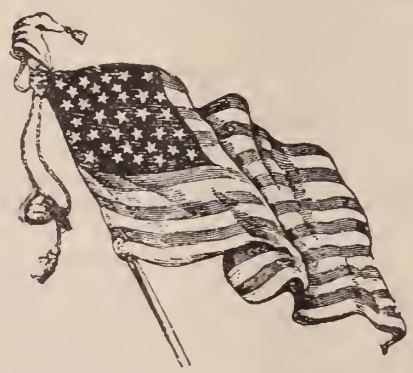
"I suppose you just want to rest and prepare for the evening. I will go on trying to get you an audience," said Mrs. Rose.

"Oh, no," replied Mrs. Jones, "I am alone so much, traveling, let me assist you with your work, and then help the girls sew. I see such pretty things around. It rests me just to be in a home. I really want to forget my work for a while and so come fresh to my lecture this evening."

The style of the new dress delighted Mrs. Jones, and when it came time for Alice to practice with the singers, the lecturer took up the idle needle and beneath her skillful fingers a row of pink floss rose buds grew around the white net collar and cuffs of the new dress. It was just what Alice wanted but lacked the skill to apply.

Night came, with a drizzling rain. Mrs. Jones' audience was small. The solo had to be omitted. Mrs. Brown, the hoped for new member, could not come, but her husband was there and her only daughter. Mrs. Jones was far from famous. She was not a very eloquent or forceful speaker. But her cheeks flushed and her eyes shone with her intense devotion to the cause of prohibition. She gave careful figures showing how many boys in each generation became drunkards and how many daughters became the wives of drinking men.

"One home out of every five," she said, "must give a child to be cursed by drink. Will the lot fall on your home? How much would you give to be certain that your precious daughter would never marry a man who used liquor? Let me tell you how to make sure. It will cost very little—only a constant and loving training in temperance truths. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will help you. The church will help you.



The school teacher must help you, or risk the loss of her certificate to teach. Build into the blood and brain of your girl the truth concerning the evils of strong drink. Instill into her heart and spirit a fear, a horror and a hatred of all intoxicants. Then she will shrink from any person who uses them and thus you can make her safe, absolutely safe from becoming that most pitiful thing, the wife of a drunkard."

The remarks of the speaker sank deep into the heart of Mr. Brown. He looked at the blooming little daughter at his side with a new devotion. That night he repeated the words to his wife, and again next morning at the breakfast table, where his sons and their sister were gathered. "I believe it can be done," he said, "and that you can all learn to have such a loathing for liquor that you will never even go with companions who use it."

As Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Rose parted at the train, they condoled with each other that the hard work of the previous day should seem so nearly lost because of the rain. The collection was small, and not one member had been added to the union.

At the next meeting of the Blessington union, the white ribboners appointed a superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction in the public schools. Mrs. Rose presented a new view of the subject. She said, "We have no Young People's Branch, a fact which we deplore. We have no Loyal Temperance Legion, because we have been unable to get leaders and teachers. Even if we had these organizations, we could not compel children to join, nor to attend if they were members. But we have leaders in the schools, since every teacher has to comply with the law and teach the harm that alcoholics and narcotics do. The children are compelled to attend school. Why not, then, use the machinery already provided for us, with leaders already paid, and put into their hands the material used in L. T. L. organizations, and help them to present the truth as pleasantly as we try to in the L. T. L. That seems to me to be good economy as well as common sense." It was soon learned that the overworked teachers were giving very little attention to temperance instruction, some just enough to comply with the law. The new superintendent was not officious, and they welcomed her as a friend and used the helps she furnished.

The school year had just begun, when the first concerted action of the teachers and the W. C. T. U. was undertaken. September twenty-eighth was observed in all the school-rooms as Frances E. Willard day. The superintendent of city schools raised "Old Glory" to float over the school building all through the birthday of that dear leader who taught and lived the purest patriotism and the sanest statesmanship. In the high school the assembly hour was devoted to eulogies of Miss Willard. In all the grades temperance "pieces" were spoken and temperance songs sung by the pupils.

In the first primary room a large, framed picture of Miss Willard was placed on an easel so low that little hands could wreathe it with flowers, as the children circled it in a beautiful flag drill. A simple pageant was given by five boys, who represented heroes of prohibition. Each one told in stirring words why he hated rum and would give his life to fight the heart-breaking traffic in drink. These boys had learned their verses, practiced them at home till all the family knew them by heart, practiced them at school with the rest and each knew the parts of the other boys. The truths which they spoke in such ringing voices had worn grooves in their brains, and they would never touch liquor nor vote wet for city, state or nation.

A little play, representing Temperancetown and Whiskyville, was presented in costume by both boys and girls. Each speaker acted out his calling as he spoke, the rosy little cook of Temperancetown, five years old, beating her pudding in her bowl and tossing back her golden curls as she declared that no wine or brandy should ever flavor her cooking. It was difficult to find a boy who would represent the dramshop man in Whiskyville. A pupil too young to read, told in her own words the story of the little country girl who stood in the big barn door and watched the rain one lonely Sunday afternoon, and wondered if she would ever go anywhere or see anything or be anybody; and of how little Frankie wrote the family pledge, and of how she grew to be the world's greatest temperance leader.

On the blackboards in all the rooms the teachers had written the words of the song "Give Us A Stainless Flag," and the pupils sang it with a will. As they marched out, each child was given a pledge-card, either red, white or blue, by the county superintendent of schools. These were returned to the teachers after having been signed.

The superintendent of temperance work in the Sunday schools visited every Sunday school in town and presented pledge-cards. Many of these were signed by elderly and middle-aged folks, and by young people beyond school age. One teacher sent in a neat envelope her own pledge and those of every member of her Sunday school class, tied together with white ribbon.

The Blessington W. C. T. U. made the signed pledge-cards into a United States flag, sewing the cards, through the punched holes, by colors, onto an old sheet, in the form of "Old Glory." On the blue cards that formed the blue

(Continued on Page Six)

FRANCES WILLARD AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Some men declare that woman shall not vote because she cannot fight, that is, she shall not save because she lacks power to destroy. . . . Surely she who bears the soldier has done more for her country than he who bears the sword."

The speaker was our beloved great leader, Frances Willard. She was delivering her annual address in Queen's Hall, London, before that great, fruitful biennial convention in 1895 when the World's W. C. T. U. expanded into wonderful power, adding among other leverages the vital department of Franchise.

It was an inspiring occasion and the great leader rose to it. Perhaps none of her annual orations equals the one she then delivered with all the eloquence and power with which she was so richly endowed. Many who had hesitated to declare themselves for woman suffrage were won by the force of her arguments.

"Woman has discovered herself as an individual, and is steadily acquiring the rights that belong to her as such," she said. With winsome appeal and persuasion she called on women to realize that "the destinies of the world are absolutely in their hands" and that "by combined effort they could soon become an army drilled and disciplined, and for this reason dauntless and undefeated," finding "such a sense of safety, solidarity and victory as would take the harm out of life even as blotting paper dries up ink."

"The awakening of women to a perception of their relation to civic life is an incalculable advantage, for women are the mothers of the race," she went on to say. "Organized motherhood is a force the most deeply rooted, the most steadily enduring that this planet knows, among all the beneficent forces that the ages have developed." "The ballot for women is part and parcel of our prohibition cause; the two sink or rise together."

The National W. C. T. U. had long held (as Miss Willard put it), that "the home vote ought to be let loose on the saloon vote," and the British Women's Temperance Association, under the leadership of Lady Henry Somerset, had recently declared for the enfranchisement of women, for the feeling was growing (as Mrs. Eva McLaren, World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of Franchise declared), that until women had the vote, no temperance reform measure could be won.

Miss Willard voiced the sentiment also two years later at the Buffalo (N. Y.) National Convention, declaring prophetically, "Every intelligent person is now perfectly aware that when we seek to win the ballot we shall have the entire liquor traffic against us," a statement verified by the first California campaign in 1896-7 and succeeding campaigns in Michigan, Wisconsin and many other states during the past twenty years.

The methods and way in which white ribboners should work for enfranchisement were outlined by the great leader in "Do Everything" (a campaign of education) and in her declaration of 1897:

"The W. C. T. U. has from the first believed that the most thoroughgoing fashion in which to fight the women's battle for the ballot is to go into the campaign along with our veteran suffrage sisters, but to do so as white ribbon women who seek the ballot that they may protect the home against its deadliest foe. We do not believe that anything is gained by trying to conciliate the liquor oligarchy; to us it seems strategic and honorable to fight it openly."

—Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

STATUS OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE

FULL SUFFRAGE

Wyoming	1869
Colorado	1893
Idaho	1896
Utah	1896
Washington	1910
California	1911
Arizona	1912
Kansas	1912
Oregon	1912
Alaska	1913
Nevada	1914
Montana	1914

PRESIDENTIAL AND MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE

Illinois	1913

STATES TO VOTE ON SUFFRAGE AT NEXT GENERAL ELECTION

New York
Pennsylvania Massachusetts
New Jersey to Vote October 19

STATES TO VOTE IN 1916

Iowa South Dakota West Virginia

The wisdom of this stand has been verified in the experience of the suffrage organizations, which now openly are aligned against their greatest and most malignant foe, the liquor traffic, and everywhere white ribboners and suffragists stand shoulder to shoulder in the campaigns.

Miss Willard was a suffrage pioneer and prophet. Every reader of "Glimpses" recalls how as a young woman she resented the dividing line of enfranchisement (the vote was for him and not for her), which separated her from the brother who had been her companion up to that time. She asked, "Can't we get politics out of the company of thieves into which it has fallen? Are we going to pass by on the other side or are we going to come, like the good Samaritan, and make politics a home question, something that women care for and are greatly interested in?" And she said quaintly, "If ever a place needed 'clarin' out it is the kitchen of Uncle Sam, and nothing on this universal earth will keep us out of it!" calling to the good men in her audiences: "You, and you only, must open the door!"

As long ago as 1888, in her annual address at the New York National W. C. T. U. Convention, Miss Willard called on the churches for recognition of "woman's equality within the house of God." It was to her a source of special joy that on one occasion she delivered an address on "Woman Suffrage as a Means of Home Protection From the Saloon Curse" in the pulpit of that noble but ultra-conservative theologian, Dr. Horace Bushnell, her pleasure being whetted by the fact that Mrs. Bushnell herself was in a front seat. And she declared her "steadfast belief that the ministers of the United States have done more than any other class to hasten the progress of the woman movement," although her heart had been grieved by the utterance on the franchise question of some distinguished representatives of leading denominations.

As to the "antis," she voiced twenty years ago the feeling that prevails today:

"The remonstrants are probably rendering a real service by arranging in line of battle once more the outworn weapons of old controversies, that the people of these times may test their utter inadequacy in the warfare of the present day. For the fact is patent that the only fortress that still holds out against our argument is that of the foreigner and the liquor traffic aided by a minority at the North of conservative-minded men, and at the South by good and unenlightened men, who share the same materialistic views concerning women."

Patiently and hopefully, struggling workers for women's equality under the laws today may take heart from the prophetic words of the great leader which come ringing down the years:

"This greatest of all movements looking toward a real republic moves forward as steadily as the stars in their orbits, for nothing can arrest the progress of a true principle, on its way to the hearts of an intelligent people." . . . "Surely she who bears soldiers need not bear arms, and when she votes, the pugilistic encounters on a large scale that we call wars will cease."

WOMEN ASK FOR FREEDOM

Massachusetts men are receiving small yellow cards from the suffragists of their state on which is printed:

"When the men fought for their freedom the women helped;

"When the men fought for the Union and the freedom of the negroes, the women helped;

"When the men fought for the freedom of Cuba, the women helped:

"Now the women are asking for their freedom. What are the men going to do?

"Vote for the woman suffrage amendment November 2."

"SAFETY FIRST"

(Continued from Page Four)

ground, they pasted stars of silver gilt, one star for each prohibition state.

In November the usual annual program for World's Temperance Sunday was given by the W. C. T. U. in one of the churches. The new pledge-card flag was shown, explained by the superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, and hung upon the wall. The pupils of the public school, seated in a body, rose and, led by a little girl, gave the beautiful flag salute, and then sang the familiar song, "Give Us A Stainless Flag." At the close of this meeting the children crowded to the platform to see the flag, and each one searched for the card that bore his pledge. Many parents, also, examined the flag and read, through tears, the childish writing that spelled (and sometimes mis-spelled) the precious names.

During the holidays a play-party was given to all the pledge-signers. The white ribboners were hostesses, at the rooms of the superintendent of city schools. The only serious part of the program was a tender and earnest talk on the importance of being true to one's word and sacredly keeping the pledge.

When February seventeenth came, the churches joined, according to custom, in a Sunday evening service to commemorate the Home-going of Frances E. Willard. The program was furnished by the schools in this wise: Music by the high school quartet. Scripture concert recitation by boys from the eighth grade. Prayer by the county superintendent of schools. An address on the principles on which the W. C. T. U. was founded by the superintendent of city schools. Songs and recitations by the pupils of lower grades. A violin solo by the principal of the high school. The ushers and collectors for the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund were girls from the high school.

Previous to this, when school began January first, typewritten offers of prizes for temperance essay contests were prepared by Mrs. Rose and the S. T. I. superintendent, and posted in all the schoolrooms for pupils to read. These were also read in school by the teachers, together with the topics for essays and rules for the contests.

Then came a time of hard work for white ribboners, teachers, pupils and parents. The union was small, and had no money in its treasury. Sixteen prizes were promised, ranging in price from a fifteen cent pennant to a three dollar book. Part of this expense was met by the dues of honorary members, part by the gifts of friends and part by the reduction in prices made by the bookseller. Teachers were furnished by the W. C. T. U. members with reliable and up-to-date information. Parents were almost distracted by the demands made upon them by their children; private and public libraries were searched, and books and pamphlets were sent for in haste.

The officers of the W. C. T. U., now quite familiar to most of the pupils, were asked over the telephone, at all hours of the early morning and late evening, for all sorts of information for use in the essays. These were some of the questions: "Please tell me, when did Kansas go dry? I don't mean dry weather." "Did General Neal Dow live in Portland, Maine, or Portland, Oregon?" "How many dry states were there last year? How many are there now?"

In the meantime attention was being paid to the little ones below the school age. Two tea parties were given with mothers of young children as guests of honor. These were not well attended, and the white ribbon women learned anew that they must become neighbors and friends of the young mothers before expecting them to respond to invitations to any social function.

The next step was a baby medal contest by three-year-olds. This was held in the afternoon at a commodious home. The recitations were not judged, but all the baby contestants were given beautiful little linen picture-books, just alike. Then a story-telling contest was held in the first primary room at school. From among the visitors three judges, who had no children in school, were chosen. There was spirited singing, and the excellence of the stories told was amazing. The winning story was that of a little girl whose drunken father was saved by overhearing her childish prayers for him. Three prizes were presented; first, a handsome copy of "Black Beauty"; second, a book of fairy tales, and third, a prohibition pennant.

Again a telephone message came to Mrs. Rose. It was from the mother of the little girl who had won first prize, asking that the little story (which Mrs. Rose had lent her to learn) be given to her to paste beside the inscription in her prize book. It was given with many congratulations.

The Next Step Was a Baby Medal Contest

In all the grades above the first primary, essay contests were held. The judges were three graduates of universities, who had no children, nor any connection with the schools. In the second primary room thirty-four essays of one hundred words each were written on the topic, "Why Should We Sign the Temperance Pledge?" The prizes were large copies of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Beautiful Joe" and a pennant with the words, "The Liquor Traffic Must Go." In the next room thirty-two essays were written on "The Value of Total Abstinence to a Life." The limit was five hundred words. The prizes were handsome books and a pennant. The boy who won first prize danced home, too proud to walk, and showed his beautiful prize, which was Hurlbert's "Heroes of the Bible." His mother was entertaining the literary club, and the rooms were full of ladies. The book was passed from hand to hand, and the boy was requested to read his essay, at once, before the club.

In the seventh and eighth grades, all the pupils wrote essays on "Alcohol and the Human Body," and these were graded and credits in physiology given the writers. The prizes were large, illustrated editions of "Ben Hur" and "The Little Minister" and a pennant as third prize.

Afternoon programs were held in each school-room, with fine music. The winning essays were announced by number, the teacher giving the name of the writer. Each winner read his own essay and was given the prize by a minister whom all the children loved. Many visitors were present.

In the high school only one essay was written for the contest. The other pupils were busy with preparations for the annual high school county oratorical contest. The writer of the lone high school essay was Elsie Brown, only daughter of the Mr. Brown who had heard Mrs. Jones lecture one rainy night in the previous year. Miss Brown was invited to read her essay at one of the W. C. T. U. meetings, which she did. Its merit was so great that the members voted to give her the first prize prepared for the high school, which was a leather-bound and illustrated copy of "Famous Women in History." This was duly presented at school, after her fellow-students had listened to her almost faultless reading of her essay.

After setting forth the injuries, sorrows and crimes due to alcohol, Miss Elsie said:

"Young ladies, you have a high ideal of the type of man you would prefer to marry. You will never marry any man who does not, first, pay you attentions in society. See to it, then, that you never accept the company or attentions of a man who drinks, though ever so little. Never be in the company of such a man. Nay, more, if you would be safe, choose for your escort and companion only a young man who is enlisted, heart and soul, in fighting the deadly liquor traffic. Then you will never become the wife of a drunkard."

This essay, with all the other first prize essays, was printed in the local papers, and received very complimentary comments.

When the high school preliminary contest was held at Blessington to determine who should represent its school at the county contest, the first prize in essay work was awarded to Miss Elsie Brown, for her temperance essay. When the great day arrived Mr. Brown proudly accompanied his young daughter to the county-seat where the annual county field day, track meet and oratorical contest was held. Late that afternoon the telephone rang at Mrs. Rose's home. Mary answered the bell and called, "Long distance for you, mother."

"Oh, dear, I hope none of the children are sick!" sighed Mrs. Rose. An excited, girlish voice came over the wire. "This is Elsie Brown, Mrs. Rose. Father says I must tell you, first, that my temperance essay has won first prize in the county. He is waiting here to phone to mother. We are feeling so happy! Good-bye."

As Mrs. Rose turned away, smiling, the thoughts that flocked into her heart were sweet as flowers and bright as white doves with sunshine on their wings. She thought of the day when the telephone had called her to plan for Mrs. Jones' lecture; of the growth in character and usefulness of the young S. T. I. superintendent. She thought of the beloved names written on the pledge-card flag; of the pledge-signers' party; of the prohibition pennants placed in every church and every school-room in the little town. She thought of the large pennant hung in the entrance hall of the high school bearing the words, "A Dry Nation in 1920;" of the enthusiastic work of interested teachers. She thought of the homes where temperance essays had been read for practice till the smallest child knew some one essay by heart. She thought, too, of the hours of toil, the discouragements, the unexpected difficulties, but they seemed as nothing, now.

With tears of joy in her eyes she laughed—that ready laugh that kept her so young amid many cares—and said to her daughter:

"Mary, I think we ought to adopt a motto for our S. T. I. department, and have one all ready to propose. It is 'Safety First!'"

THE REASONABLE COURSE

GOVERNOR CAPPER of Kansas

National prohibition is the next great step to be taken in this country. We know that the saloon is making more human wreckage than all other agencies. Why should we, an enlightened people, a scientifically informed nation, continue to license this curse, knowing it to be our greatest enemy, our greatest hindrance to national well-being, the greatest destroyer of thrift and happiness, the greatest promoter of vice, crime and disorder, the greatest menace to the life of every boy and girl in the land, the greatest source of expense in government and its most corrupting influence! Could anything be more reasonable, more sensible—more necessary—than national prohibition?

QUEEN WILHELMINA OF THE NETHERLANDS A FRIEND OF TEMPERANCE

CHARLES BAILEY, DONCASTER, ENGLAND

On August 31 Queen Wilhelmina of Holland completed her thirty-fifth year, and the recurrence of her birthday this year has unusual interest by reason of the appalling conflict of nations which has raged so long and so fiercely in proximity to Holland's shores, and not far distant from Holland's frontier. The difficulty of the Dutch people and their monarch during the past months in pursuance of a line of strict neutrality can scarcely be over-appreciated, seeing the numerous directions in which the events of the war have tended to affect them both closely and in some measure adversely. Wisely the Queen and her advisers have striven strenuously to restrain the impulse to precipitate their nation into the maelstrom of the adjoining and ruthless struggle.

Queen Wilhelmina is a worthy descendant of a worthy ancestry. Heroically the House of Orange has stood in history for national independence and personal liberty.

A noble-minded, God-fearing woman, the Queen sets the Dutch people a notably praiseworthy example in many respects. She is regular and devoted in her attendance at Divine worship. In various efforts for the betterment and uplifting of her subjects she is deeply interested. Particularly she has constantly manifested warm sympathy with total abstinence principles and has sought to further the attainment of the temperance movement's aims. Long ago it was stated that she was personally an abstainer from all intoxicants, and on the occasion of her marriage it was reported that Prince Henry was practically the same. While stimulants are not rigidly excluded from the royal table the Queen resolutely has refused, and even ostentatiously also, to permit intoxicants to be served to her. Not satisfied merely with the practice of total abstinence herself, she has striven to induce others to adopt the same course. Princess Pauline of Wurtemberg, it is understood, was thus led largely by Wilhelmina's example and influence to a definite temperance stand, and to become a worker in the crusade against alcoholism.

Strongly desirous to aid the promotion of world-wide temperance sentiment, Queen Wilhelmina cordially invited the International Congress against Alcoholism to be held in 1911 at The Hague, and gave the Congress her marked support. Obviously the Queen's identification with the abstinence cause has done much to strengthen the hands of the temperance reformers in the Netherlands. In recent years considerable progress has been made. The consumption of spirits has declined almost fifty per cent in three decades, and whisky, gin, and similar spirituous drinks have been banished by parliamentary enactment from the railway stations. Striking pluralities—overwhelming in some instances—in favor of local prohibition law have appeared in several electoral districts where unofficial plebescites on the question have lately been taken. From these and kindred evidences it is apparent that the temperance sentiment so pronounced in the palace is spreading widely, too, amongst the people generally.

NEWS NOTES FROM CHINA

The temperance cause in China has received fresh impetus through the work of Mr. Chuan, a very gifted speaker and writer, who is now in this country. "The great thing that China needs," writes Mrs. Sarah B. Goodrich, formerly president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of China, "is men of character, men of self-control. To have such a young man as Mr. Chuan, virile, keen-minded, alert, genuine, up-to-date, and best of all, a true lover of his country and a believer in its possibilities, stand before the people as an exponent of temperance truths means much. It has been the best plea we could have for a temperate life, a life dedicated to highest uses, a life athrill with the love of God. Mr. Chuan closed his work June 10. Just before he left there came from the press his translation of nine of Miss Christine Tinling's tales, with three Chinese folk-tales. A few days after his departure his translation of 'The Life of Frances E. Willard' came from the printers, and 'The Choice Sayings of Miss Willard' is on the press. How we pray that the wish of Mr. Chuan's expressed in the preface of the life-story may find fulfillment soon. It is 'that there shall arise in the Chinese republic a woman of surpassing personality who can stand alone so unmoved as to be a restorer.' He closes: 'With longing eyes I wait.'"

Speaking of the work of Miss Chen, who is laboring in the temperance field under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., Miss Goodrich says: "Most fortunate have we been in securing a young woman like Miss Chen to help us. She speaks most acceptably and has organized many new societies and six Loyal Temperance Legions, besides several unions. These she must not only start but carry on. Over and over I have been asked how I obtained the services of so fine a young woman. She is a graduate of the highest school for young women which we have in China, the Woman's Union College of Peking. She is winsome and winning and we hope much from her work. It is a great deal to secure a young woman who can address, as Miss Chen did at Paotingfu, four or five hundred students in a great hall, and do it with poise and yet with force. China as yet has few young women equipped for such service. Surely the money will be forthcoming to carry on this work begun so auspiciously in Peking and vicinity."

A WORD FROM MAINE

I have lived in Pennsylvania, which has some sort of a license system, and in Massachusetts, that boasts of a fine "high license." Neither amounts to anything, as far as I can see, to hinder the liquor traffic. It shuts its eyes, puts on steam and with flags flying bears down all little obstacles like sheriffs and lawyers and law and high taxes. Why not? It is a perfectly legal business in company with the great American government which is an interested profit sharer to an immense extent. I have lived many years in prohibition Maine, where the liquor interests are bothered a good deal. They can't have things their own way. They are not able to swing things to suit them politically. Even socially they are at a discount and they don't hesitate to say they don't like the Maine laws. Wherever the sworn officials are true to their oath the laws are a very prodigious help, but till the millennium comes, and a year and a half after, there will be a few sneaks who will break this law or any other, and with a laugh snap their fingers in the face of the law. They would rather do it than be decent. At its worst prohibition is a blessed law for decent people. Long live the state of Maine and long live its blessed laws.

MRS. GEORGE D. B. PEPPER,
Waterville, Me.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, October 7, 1915

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

WHITE RIBBON SPECIAL LEAVES FOR SEATTLE

Before this paper reaches our readers the delegates to the National Convention will be on their way to Seattle. A large company of white ribboners from the East and South arrived in Chicago Tuesday morning, October 5, to join the official party which left on the White Ribbon Special at 7:15 p. m. Among the number were Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary; Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary; many state presidents, National superintendents, National organizers and other white ribboners. Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson, National recording secretary, with large delegations from the northern states, went by the northern route. Reports of the greetings received and meetings held en route to the coast will appear in future SIGNALS, as will the full story of the National Convention.

The National W. C. T. U. having furnished the various states with sufficient copies of the program for World's Temperance Sunday to supply each Sunday school in the respective states, offers additional copies of this program for sale at thirty cents per hundred.

It is not too early to begin to prepare for World's Temperance Sunday, November 14. Read carefully Mrs. Irvine's official communication on page eleven.

HOW WILL THE LABOR VOTE GO?

Whatever the outcome of the election in Minneapolis—and we hope before we go to press to announce a victory for the no-liquor forces—the campaign has been of great educational value. The liquorites have spent a fortune in importing speakers who have attempted to convince the labor element that dire calamity to the workingman always follows in the wake of prohibition. It is reported that the saloon interests of the city tried to win the painters' union by promising to spend $40,000 in painting and redecorating their places of business if the election went in their favor, but Senator Richard Jones, an orator for the prohibitionists, retorted with the practical suggestion that if the county goes dry every one of the 430 saloons will have to be remodeled, altered and reconstructed for other business. "To return $40,000 in wages to the workers of Minneapolis, each saloon would have to spend $93," said the senator, "but it is more like the truth to say that each will be remodeled to the extent of $300, thus giving $130,000 not only to the painters but to be distributed among the painters, carpenters, tile-setters, lathers, plumbers, and many other trades. Is there any workman in Minneapolis who cannot see the difference between a $130,000 cinch and a $40,000 question mark?'

The liquor advocates are of course regaling their audiences with hair-raising word pictures of the army of men that will be thrown out of employment if the saloons close, but Charles Stelzle, who is in Minneapolis, helping in the campaign, is meeting this statement in his usual masterly fashion.

"As a matter of fact, more workmen lose their jobs because saloons are open than would be the case if the saloons were closed," reasons Mr. Stelzle. "When liquor puts a man out of a job it unfits him for any other job. It is better that a bartender should lose his job and get a better one than that dozens of his patrons should lose their jobs and be unfitted for any other job."

Level-headed laboring men realize that the liquor traffic is one of the worst enemies of labor. In the words of the Lincoln (Neb.) Journal, "As a mere matter of the reputation of organized labor—and it must be of good repute to hold public sympathy or it organizes in vain—organized labor cannot afford to parade before the country as the tool and defender of the discredited, dying liquor business."

LIQUOR INTERESTS HAVE NOTHING TO FEAR?

The anti-suffragists are making frantic attempts to convince the voters of New Jersey that the ballot in the hands of the women is a perfectly harmless instrument, which never has been and never will be used to do away with any of the vicious "vested interests." Indeed they would like these men to believe that if the facts were known the woman voter has thrown the weight of her influence on the side of the liquor interests. It speaks well for the voters of New Jersey that the opponents of "Votes for Women" find it necessary to use such arguments, for it shows plainly that the public believes the ballot in the hands of the women is an agency for civic regeneration

The facts presented by the "antis" to prove that the temperance cause has nothing to expect from "Votes for Women" are displayed in prominent type in a paid advertisement in the local papers. The statement is made that six states have had woman suffrage from four to forty-six years, yet prior to November 3, 1914, no state having suffrage for women adopted prohibition. This is not absolutely accurate. Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Idaho have had suffrage for a comparatively long period of time, but in all these states the men largely outnumber the women, and the woman's vote would not control the situation. As a matter of fact, however, the dry territory in each of these commonwealths has been rapidly increasing, and in Colorado and Idaho the work of the women in cleaning out the saloons in various communities has culminated in definite action for state-wide prohibition during the past twelve months. In Wyoming, which has had suffrage longer than any other state, the saloon is outlawed from 96,000 of its 97,594 square miles, and only this month Governor Kendrick has definitely declared himself in favor of state-wide prohibition. As to Utah 62,000 of its 82,184 square miles are saloonless, and last spring both houses of the legislature passed by good majorities a state-wide law, which, however, was vetoed by the governor after the legislature had adjourned so that it could not be passed over his veto as it doubtless otherwise would have been.

Washington became a suffrage state in 1910 and from that time until November, 1914, when it voted by a good majority for state-wide prohibition, it made great strides in acquiring new dry territory.

California women were given suffrage in 1911 and while, because of the peculiar local conditions and the political power of the wine interests, they have not yet succeeded in securing a state-wide law, nevertheless since 1911 the number of dry towns and cities has increased from 200 to 690 and there is now in progress a vigorous campaign for state-wide prohibition.

The statement that the women of Springfield, Ill., voted for the retention of saloons may be explained by the fact that the capital city is a center of politics and the methods employed to influence voters are not above reproach. However, this one incident sinks into insignificance beside the fact that over 1,300 saloons have been closed by the vote of the women of that state. That Pasadena, California, "went wet" the first year the women voted is without foundation. Pasadena has been dry for twenty-four years. Saloons are forbidden by charter.

The fact that San Francisco has five times as many saloons as Boston, although Boston is only one and one-half times as large as San Francisco, is of course due largely to local conditions and the history of this metropolis of the Pacific coast. It is a city notoriously controlled by the worst class of politicians, and even good men have failed to accomplish very much along reform lines in past years. However, since the women were given the franchise in California the legislature of 1913 passed a law closing the saloons from two a. m. to six a. m., thus doing away with the vicious all-night saloons.

It is indeed a late day in the history of the suffrage movement to say that "the temperance cause has nothing to expect from 'votes for women'." The situation as the liquor men well know has passed the expectation stage and is a matter of record. With four great states—Oregon, Washington, Colorado and Arizona—voting by magnificent majorities at one election for state-wide prohibition and the liquor interests in every suffrage campaign spending their ill-gotten dollars by the thousands to defeat the movement the evidence is overwhelming.

If on October 19, the good men of New Jersey give the ballot to their wives, sisters and daughters they may be assured they will thereafter have their valuable assistance in sweeping from the state the liquor and vice interests.

IN MEMORIAM

LUCY S. BLANCHARD

Mrs. Lucy Blanchard

Mrs. Lucy Blanchard, ex-president of Southern California W. C. T. U. and one of the greatest temperance workers of the state, has been called to her reward.

Mrs. Blanchard was a woman of rare intellectual ability and qualities of soul which made her a delightfully interesting companion, a whole-hearted friend and a wise counselor. Kindness was the governing principle of her life and prompted her to much self-sacrifice in many lines of Christian activity. She was a woman of exemplary character, deeply spiritual, and was greatly loved by all who knew her.

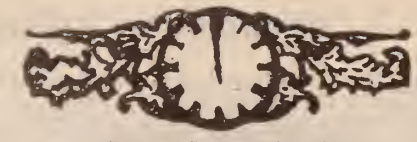
She was born in Lynchburg, Virginia. Her mother was one of the early Crusaders and Lucy, the young daughter, found great delight in leading the singing at the Crusade meetings. Mrs. Blanchard came to California in 1878 and made her home in Los Angeles, where she has since been prominently connected with church, temperance and missionary activities. In 1882 she organized a Band of Hope, later a Loyal Temperance Legion, which she superintended for more than twenty-five years. Through her efforts more than 3,000 children signed the pledge. In 1892 she organized the Los Angeles W. C. T. U., which under her leadership became at one time the largest union in the United States. She was president for twenty-three years and held the presidency of the union at the time of her death. At one time she was president of the Woman's Parliament of Southern California and for three years was the president of Southern California W. C. T. U., holding her last convention only last June. She was a leader of exceptional ability.

Mrs. Blanchard's husband was Hon. James H. Blanchard, a prominent lawyer, an ardent prohibitionist and at one time candidate for governor on the prohibition ticket. Her home life was beautiful and reflected her sweet and gentle nature. She was a devoted prohibitionist, and spoke bravely for that principle at every opportunity. We grieve that she could not have lived to see the fruit of her long years of service looking toward state-wide prohibition. Almost her last words, as she heard of the victory in South Carolina were, "Thank God! One more milestone on the road to National Prohibition!"

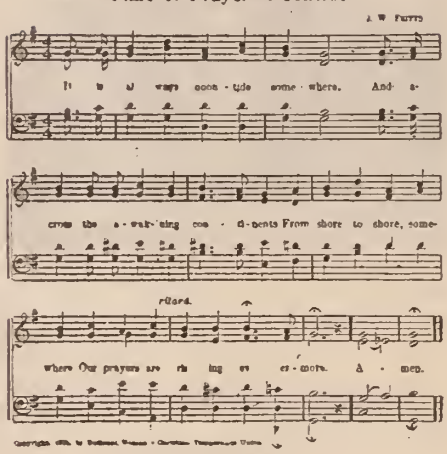
Mrs. Blanchard's funeral was one of the largest ever held in Los Angeles. It was under the auspices of the state W. C. T. U. Dr. Edward Locke, her pastor, spoke of the importance of her life work and paid a beautiful tribute to her whom he called "Saint Lucy." Tender words of appreciation were voiced by Mrs. Hattie M. Doughty, vice-president of the Los Angeles union of which Mrs. Blanchard was president, by Mrs. Julia D. Phelps, county president of Los Angeles county W. C. T. U., and by Mrs. Hester T. Griffith, state vice-president, who was associated with Mrs. Blanchard in local, county and state work.

Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, state president, spoke on behalf of the state W. C. T. U., telling of the love the women bore Mrs. Blanchard, portraying the many beauties of her life and character and emphasizing her great work as a leader of the W. C. T. U. Rev. Frank G. Stevens, one of Mrs. Blanchard's L. T. L. boys, paid a tender tribute to her who developed him from a Loyal Temperance Legioner into an active prohibition worker. As he spoke, a group of about thirty-five men and women rose to bear similar testimony as members of her legion.

The beautiful ritualistic service of the state W. C. T. U. was used, led by the state president and participated in by hundreds of white ribboners. An impressive white ribbon ceremony was conducted at the grave. The earthly life of our comrade and leader has ended and her heavenly activities have begun. Our united prayer is that her sweet spirit may minister to us as we go on in our struggle to drive the liquor traffic from California.



Time of Prayer—Noontide



FRIEND OF W. C. T. U. PROMOTED

Mr. Clarence C. Chapin, husband of Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, the editor of Publications and director of the Publicity Bureau of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, entered into life eternal on Thursday, September 30. Mr. Chapin was a Grand Army veteran and a lifelong advocate and supporter of the temperance and suffrage causes. When a resident of Nebraska some years ago, he represented his district in the state legislature and cast one of the first votes in that body for placing the ballot in the hands of women. In the "History of Woman Suffrage" by Susan B. Anthony, Mr. Chapin's work on that occasion is referred to as that of one who, regardless of his political prospects, advocated the cause of woman along with his own. Needless to say he threw the weight of his influence in favor of every measure for civic righteousness. He was always a loyal and enthusiastic friend of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and was especially beloved by the workers at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, where during the last few years he has been an occasional visitor. The hearts of the white ribbon sisterhood go out in love and sympathy to Mrs. Chapin and her family.

MRS. MUNNS BEREAVED

It is probably not known to many of our readers that Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, convener of the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle, Washington, has during the past months, when she has been preparing for the entertainment of the convention, been bearing a great sorrow in the critical illness of a dear sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Cairns Trimble. Mrs. Trimble entered into rest October 1. She was a devoted worker in the Baptist church and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a former president of the Seattle Federation of Unions, and state superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction. Mrs. Munns has in her bereavement the tender sympathy of her W. C. T. U. comrades.

THEY KNOW TOO MUCH

The brewers should be reminded of the wise saying of Josh Billings, "It is better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so." They have been quoting in display type Dr. Harvey W. Wiley as an advocate of their products, making him say, "Beer is a veritable food product. It can truly be termed liquid food."

Unfortunately for the brewers, Dr. Wiley does not seem to recognize the statement as having been made by him, and, in fact, repudiates it in the last issue of Good Housekeeping, and makes the following emphatic statement of his opinion as a food expert:

"Furthermore, in the last few years I have been irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the best thing for the mental and physical health of our people would be the complete abolition of commerce in alcoholic beverages. This conviction makes it doubly irksome for me to see my name continua'ly used to promote the sale of beer as a food."

"I THOUGHT OF YOU, MOTHER"

MRS. CARL BILBY, Muncie, Ind.

The boat in which a boy, who afterward became governor of Massachusetts, was sailing was capsized and he had to swim more than a mile before reaching shore. Upon arriving home he was relating the accident to his mother. "Swam a mile!" exclaimed the mother. "But how did you manage to hold out so long?"

"I thought of you, mother, and kept on swimming."

The thought of mother helped him in the moment of his greatest need and saved a life valuable to himself, his mother, his state and his nation.

"I thought of you, mother," has saved many boys and girls, and men and women from sinking physically, mentally or morally.

"I thought of you, mother," has not only saved souls from death and disaster, but has inspired them to most noble and heroic achievements.

"I thought of you, mother"—of mother's love, mother's life, mother's toil, mother's advice, mother's sacrifice, mother's example, mother's sleepless nights, and anxious days, mother's great anguish at our birth, mother's constant care for our comfort and safety; these thoughts have helped many of us over the rough and dangerous places in life and God grant may finally bring us into our heavenly Father's house.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

NOVEMBER 14—World's Temperance Sunday.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

Dear Sunday School Workers:

World's Temperance Sunday, November 14, follows so closely our last Temperance Sunday that it makes our work a little difficult. We will need to make haste in the "King's business" in order to get ready for the observance of World's Temperance Sunday.

The quarterly lesson found in Daniel 1:1-21 is the familiar story of Daniel and his purpose not to defile himself with the king's meat and drink. The all-important lesson to be taught is total abstinence from everything that defiles the body and destroys its usefulness. We, therefore, have another excellent opportunity of doing pledge work in the Sunday school. The lesson leaflet gives several blackboard points which will aid in leading up to the work of securing signatures to the pledge. Our first word to the workers is, improve this opportunity and observe World's Temperance Sunday by careful and prayerful pledge-signing. Seek to have every member of every Sunday school have the opportunity to sign the pledge. If the international Sunday school pledge is used the signer not only pledges himself to abstain from all intoxicating liquors, but also to do all he can "to end the drink habit and the liquor traffic." In other words, he is enlisted for service in our peaceful warfare against the legalized liquor traffic.

Our department method leaflets give facts concerning World's Temperance Sunday and suggestions for its observance; how to do effective pledge-signing in the Sunday school; how to make the new international pledge flag, etc. Our second word to the workers is, present the Sunday school petition in all Sunday schools and secure the signature of every member under twenty-one years of age. Let this effort include the signing of the names of little children who can write or print their names after they have had the matter explained to them. Indeed, it would seem that any and every child should be given the privilege to ask for protection from the destructive liquor traffic.

We earnestly ask every member of the W. C. T. U. and every one interested to aid in this petition work. Secure the petition blanks of your National superintendent and provide them for every Sunday school, attending to the work in such a way that all signatures shall be mailed to your National superintendent, who will mount the same and prepare for the presentation of the petition to Congress at the opportune time.

We will continue this petition work with unabated zeal till we have a great number of signatures, and World's Temperance Sunday should yield big returns. Price of petitions is 12 cents per 100, postpaid, or just a trifle over the actual cost to pay for extra help in the workroom of the superintendent.

The new program for Sunday schools, prepared by your National superintendent and published by our National W. C. T. U. Publishing House at Evanston, Ill., is furnished to each state according to the number of Sunday schools. A sample copy will reach each superintendent of the Sunday school free and the distribution will be made by the state officers to whom the programs are sent. A few sample copies have been sent to the Sunday School department, but all orders for them must be sent directly to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. The price per 1,000 for additional lots will be $1.25 per 1,000, plus the cost of postage or expressage. The program has received favorable comment and we think it will be both educational and interesting with just enough of the spectacular to make it pleasing. We urge our workers to see that the schools are provided with a sufficient number to make it effective.

Our budget for the quarter is a pledge-signing and petition budget. Price 15c, or 50c a year, in advance. It contains the usual helps for superintendents, teachers and officers and new helps for the beginners' department of the Sunday school. Enough petition blanks are enclosed in the budget to serve the average school. Send at once for your supply of blanks and make a systematic effort to reach the youth of every community.

At the close of our petition work the state superintendent whose state has sent the largest number of signatures to the petition will receive five dollars worth of Sunday school temperance literature of her own selection.

"Sheaves for the harvest" of our department are coming in and bring great cheer to your superintendent. The year has been a blessed one and your National superintendent desires to thank each person who has helped to make possible one of the best reports we have ever been able to present at our annual meeting.

Our last word is, MAKE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY A GREAT DAY FOR PLEDGE-SIGNING and a day when the youth shall appeal for protection from the liquor traffic through our Sunday school petition to congress.

Yours in loyal service,

STELLA B. IRVINE.

115 Walnut Street, Riverside, California.

County Convention Notes

About forty delegates in all attended the twenty-ninth annual convention of the St. Lawrence county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U., Mrs. Harriet Stanton, president, which was held in the Congregational church of Rensselaer Falls, September 16-17. Good reports were given by department superintendents. Enjoyable features of the meetings were short addresses by Mrs. Lilla P. Huntley and Miss Eva Spaulding, "The Crusader Bonnet" song by children, the reading of two prize essays by the young women authors, and three recitations. Perhaps the best thing on the program was the address by Mrs. Clara Hawkins, on "The Joy and Beauty of Service."

The thirty-sixth annual convention of Monroe county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mary H. Bishop, president, was held in Rochester, September 16-17. Reports showed that every union had been visited by the president, two new unions and two Y. P. B.'s organized and good work accomplished by each department. An interesting feature was the banquet the first evening with an attendance of nearly three hundred, the Nineteenth ward being the guest of honor for the largest increase in membership. Mrs. Bishop was toastmistress, and among those who responded were the state president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, and the state secretary of the Y. P. B., Miss Helen G. Estelle. Their addresses, as well as that given by Clinton N. Howard, were listened to with pleasure by large audiences.

Jo Daviess county (Ill.) W. C. T. U., at its recent convention in Elizabeth, received fine reports from its five unions which showed themselves very much alive on the temperance question. Among the good things of the convention was an evening medal contest and a Sunday afternoon street service at which Senator M. H. Cleary gave an address on "The Effect of the European War on Temperance." Mrs. Wallace of Savannah, served as leader in the absence of Miss Helen L. Hood, state president, who was unable to be present. Excellent music added much to the success of the convention.

The annual convention of the Henry county (Ill.) W. C. T. U. was held at Annawan, September 24, with Mrs. C. M. Turner, county president, in the chair. New methods were discussed and the former departments of work continued for the new year. Mr. C. S. Trevor of Moline was the speaker for the evening meeting, and dealt with the liquor evil from the viewpoint of the business man. The picnic dinner and supper served by the Annawan white ribboners were enjoyed by all the visiting members and delegates. Mrs. Mabel Shureman was elected president, with Mrs. Emma Turner as vice president.

MISSOURI'S TRIUMPHANT RECORD

AS REVEALED AT STATE CONVENTION

MRS. FANNIE L. TAYLOR

Between the months of our labor
When we've tried to do all in our power,
Comes a pause in the year's occupation
That is known as convention hour.

Reports from the work have been gathered,
Our credits and debits all squared;
In the burden and the joy of the labor
Both leaders and members have shared.

This sharing of joys and of labors made the thirty-third annual convention of Missouri white ribboners at Sikeston, the garden spot of the southeastern part of the state, a joyful occasion. It has gone down in history not as the largest in point of attendance, but in the volume of business transacted. Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president, presided over the sessions with grace and wonderful executive ability.

Distinguished Guests and Speakers

Great was the surprise when Mrs. Carrie Lee Carter Stokes of California, a National lecturer and a former president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., came upon the platform accompanied by her husband, Mr. Charles E. Stokes. They were both most cordially received and Mrs. Stokes spoke briefly at various times to appreciative hearers. The convention sermon was delivered by Rev. Berthe Bowers of Iowa. Two splendid addresses by Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., one on suffrage and the other on "Prohibition Prohibits," were greatly enjoyed by both delegates and visitors. Mrs. Mitchner's personal experiences in both lines made it possible for her to "show Missouri" the force of her arguments. Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, National lecturer, "our wanderer," gave a most interesting and instructive though brief address on "Alaska" and her work there. We were sorry she was unable to speak more at length, but she found it necessary to "wander on" further west. Mrs. May L. Woods and Miss Roena Shaner, both National lecturers and favorites with "home folks," delivered excellent short addresses. Mrs. L. O. Middleton, associate National department lecturer, another popular Missouri woman, delivered an address illustrated with S. T. I. charts. It was given in her characteristic pleasant manner and was very well received.

The state lecturers present, Mrs. Neva Thomas, Mrs. Laura Harnois, Mrs. E. G. Emmons and Mrs. M. F. Coppedge, entertained and instructed the convention. Mrs. Coppedge has made a wonderful record in her special line of work, house-to-house visitation. Mrs. Etta F. Winter, a former provisional lecturer on purity, is now a regular lecturer. Her subject is not an easy one to handle, but she has the happy faculty of presenting it in a tactful, careful and convincing manner. Mrs. Ida E. Baity, provisional lecturer, gave a short address and told in an interesting manner of the local option campaign in her home town, Monett, that lost prohibition by a majority of only seven. The drys are contesting the election. Miss Anna MacZentmyer, state Y. P. B. general secretary and lecturer, charmed and pleased the convention with her short address and her intense interest and enthusiasm in the young people's work.

It was a happy arrangement to give an entire half day session to state superintendents who plan and carry forward the department work which is the framework on which the W. C. T. U. superstructure is built. Each one was ready with plans for the coming year's work. The banner counties were named and several prizes were awarded.

The report of the state secretary of the L. T. L. Branch, Mrs. Mollie Blount, was filled with the good news of fine work done during the past year and contained excellent plans for the future.

Seventy-five new Branches and 1,150 members were announced in the report of Miss Anna MacZentmyer, state Y. P. B. secretary, whose plans for the future, as outlined, seem to be laid out with the wisdom and foresight of a general in the work.

Mrs. Lettie Hill May, state corresponding secretary, gave an interesting review of the state work as planned and administered from her office—routeing our own and outside speakers, organizing new unions and re-organizing old ones (125 in all); sending out state supplies and literature, etc. Twenty-eight unions were presented with "The Life of Frances E. Willard" as a prize for carrying out all state plans. She also gave many interesting incidents culled from local union reports and mentioned extraordinary achievements.

The report of the state treasurer, Mrs. Neva Thomas, dealing with figures and to all intents and purposes a "dry" report, proved a very live one. When she announced a balance in the treasury and told the number of new members gained, she received a hearty ovation and the white ribbon salute. Missouri has secured her proportion of the 50,000 new members desired by the National W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, President Missouri W. C. T. U.

When the state president, Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, rose to deliver her annual address she was greeted with great applause. Plans looking toward National Constitutional Prohibition, "The Missouri W. C. T. U. Suffrage Campaign for 1916," one of the slogans of white ribbon clans for the coming year, election facts, the blow struck at John Barleycorn by corporations, the police-woman's law, the child and the state, prison reform, the anti-narcotic act, health, etc., etc., were all topics interestingly handled by the president. The address closed with splendid recommendations and throughout its delivery was received with marked attention.

Plans for Raising Suffrage Funds

The following unique plan for raising suffrage campaign funds was adopted: Local unions will make of strips of yellow ribbon bags one foot long in which to slip dimes. Each coin will be tied with a white bow, and the unions will secure as many feet of dimes as possible to make up the state mile—a goodly sum. Farmers will be asked for a bushel of suffrage corn, and their wives for suffrage hens which will be sold for the benefit of the campaign fund. One-half of the fund will be kept in the local treasury and the rest sent to the state treasury. Mrs. Deborah Livingston will be engaged for seven weeks of suffrage work. Many and varied were the campaign plans adopted. The W. C. T. U. and state suffrage association will co-operate.

State W. C. T. U. Bungalows

The Presbyterian Assembly at Hollister, and the Methodist (South) Assembly at Arcadia, have presented to the state W. C. T. U. lots on which to build bungalows where W. C. T. U. summer training schools may be held. Trustees for both properties, which are located in delightful summer resorts, were elected. Half of the funds for each is to be provided by the state and half raised by the local unions in ten dollar blocks.

The winner in a diamond medal contest was a Sikeston boy, Dallas Beauchamp, Jr., fourteen years old. He received very modestly the congratulations of hundreds of his townspeople.

The Hostess City

Sikeston has the unique distinction of being the only dry city in Missouri in an otherwise entirely wet county. At the spring election when a neighboring wet city defamed the fair name and dry fame of Sikeston, her men rose in a body in defense of their city. The mayor and aldermen signed a declaration to the effect that business had not been injured by local option, the law had been enforced, and there had been exceedingly little drunkenness. The chief of police signed the following written statement: "From a business standpoint, I consider Sikeston in much

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE

Medicine Not Needed in This Case

It is hard to convince some people that coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that, to some systems, coffee is an insidious poison that undermines the health. Ask him if coffee is a cause of constipation, stomach and nervous troubles.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life, and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading an advertisement of Postum I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said, 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily, and in about two weeks I could sleep better and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 146 pounds when I commenced on Postum and now I weigh 167 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

THE MOTHERS OF THE WORLD

CHARLES M. SHELDON

The things that linger longest in the heart,
The thoughts that never vanish when we roam,
The friendships that are never torn apart,
Are those that center longest 'round the home.

The deepest joys, the happiest hours we know,
Are those which cost us only what we give
Of happiness to others here below,
This is the truest life that we can live.

We strive and struggle to succeed, and pass
Our fellows in the hurrying daily race;
And oh, how often burn our hearts, alas!
With envy of our neighbor's wealth and place.

And Time goes on relentlessly to prove
How vain are all the clamor and the strife,
Compared with quiet and enduring love—
The greatest thing for every human life.

Forgotten are the deeds that men call great,
Forgotten are the kings in battle met,
Lost to the memory an empire's fate,
But there are things the heart cannot forget.

As long as earth shall last, it cannot lose
The vision of a home of simple bliss;
As long as men shall have the power to choose,
They cannot choose a better thing than this.

And when the end shall come, as come it must
To every one of us both young and old,
The pomp and fashion shall be "dust to dust,"
And worthless lie the silver and the gold.

But we shall learn the lesson of the years,
And learn what makes a nation small or great.
And say, with gratitude, while fall our tears,
"The mothers of the world control its fate."

—The Congregationalist

IOWA'S ACTIVITIES

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

The Hawkeye state is putting on its war paint. Iowa took a long step forward when it voted to put out the saloons on January 1, 1916, and it took a second long step when it set June 6, 1916, as election day on the question of conferring suffrage on the women of the state. Naturally the liquor men of Iowa are displeased. Their attempts at bravado are almost pitiful.

Their chief bluff, and one that they cannot agree upon as to date among themselves, is to claim that the supreme court will declare the state prohibition measure unconstitutional because it was passed on a legal holiday. One part of the liquor men stoutly assert that the senate of Iowa passed the measure on February 12, Lincoln's birthday. A second part as emphatically declare that the house passed the measure on February 22, Washington's birthday, while yet a third insist it was the governor who signed it on the twenty-second, a public holiday, and thus made it illegal. The senate did pass the bill on February 12, but a public holiday has to be a legal holiday before it nullifies legislation. The files of any newspaper would tell these bugaboo raisers that the house finally passed the prohibition measure on February 24, and the governor signed it even later. But the Iowa liquor men are game. They have put up five straight fights to the prohibitionists, all to come off in twenty-two months' time. When statutory prohibition goes into effect January 1, 1916, they intend to override the law to such an extent as to make it a laughing stock. It is well understood that they have made comprehensive plans to bootleg to the limit, and to throw cases out of court as fast as they come in, so as practically to nullify the law. It remains to be seen whether Iowa will tamely submit to this or will enforce her splendid incoming law to the letter. I, for one, believe Iowa will do the latter.

Next comes the woman suffrage election on June 6, 1916. Suffragists believe if this carries it will insure the winning of all five battles. Iowa has strong women. Its church membership is large, its clubs are numerous, and it has more than 8,000 white ribbon women. The liquor men believe the woman's vote means their defeat at every turn. It goes without saying that it is getting pretty warm at suffrage headquarters.

The third tussle is the election of the next legislature. Liquor men are boasting that they will elect men whom they can control. The legislature that convenes early in 1917 will have its hands full. Next to the suffrage election it is the battle of the five. All that a powerful lobby and a barrel of money can do will be done to put a bar in the way of voting on constitutional prohibition in November, 1917, as the legislature of 1915 granted.

Lastly, if the liquor people fail there they have another chance, which will be the constitutional prohibition election, November, 1917. Iowa will feel at the end of these days very much like the bridegroom who said he felt very much married. He had asked his bride four different times to marry him, and had asked her father and her mother, her grandfather and her grandmother, her brother, her sister and her pastor, and he thought the consent was unanimous.

Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, state W. C. T. U. president, has had to pass through deep waters of affliction. She has bravely thrown herself into the thickest of the fight, even when her heart was bleeding. She is a general in every sense of the word.

Mrs. Laura B. Hale, state organizer, has done hard, persistent work. Other state and district speakers and officers are doing all in their power to hold Iowa in line. The writer gave all August and part of September to the state, speaking ninety-one times in forty-one days. The favorite chorus of the Hawkeye workers is this:

Wake them up, shake them up
And get them up;
Line them up, sign them up
And stir them up;
Heap them up and keep them up
Till the last foe expires.

Suffrage addresses have led. Most of these have been in the open air. There have been some notable occasions where suffrage has scored. At Oakland, where there is the second largest Chautauqua in the state, one or two influential men on the board of managers were determined that no suffrage address should be given. The other members of the board and the W. C. T. U. were determined that the writer should be heard, and they won the day, but the "antis" on the board would not allow a poster to be put up, set the lecture for Saturday night, the poorest in the week to get a crowd, and then side-tracked the lecture for this, that and the other feature so that it was past nine o'clock at night before the lecture began. Nevertheless the great audience tent was crowded, and the congregation that had waited an hour and a half to hear the speaker, rose to the high-water mark of enthusiasm.

At Boone, there was a joint Old Soldiers' reunion and an Old Settlers' gathering. Mrs. Dora Farrow, president of the district, had the management make room on the program for the National speaker. How the old soldiers warmed up to that speech. Plainly the soldier vote of Iowa is solidly for the women.

Six meetings were held at the railroad shops with the railroad men, and they were most appreciative listeners. Several meetings were held with the factory people, and twenty-one meetings were held in shops or towns where foreigners predominate. Mrs. Laura B. Hale assisted the National speaker.

Mrs. Hale's name brings to mind the joke perpetrated at a certain district convention: "State president, Ida B. Wise Smith; state organizer, Laura B. Hale; district vice-president, Thera B. True; local treasurer, Laura B. Smart—when the officers have to be Wise, Hale, True and Smart, the membership must move lively to keep up with them!"

Dry Des Moines is covering itself with glory. The W. C. T. U. has done detective work and all of the jail work, holding 139 meetings in the jail in a year. Their police matron, Mrs. Fischer, has proven the right woman in the right place. It is a rule of the police judges at the four courts to try no case in which a woman is concerned unless Mrs. Fischer is present. The W. C. T. U. of the capital city has also put in a public comfort station.

Waverly had a full-fledged orchestra to play at its meetings; special numbers were also given by the blind violinist, Lawrence Buroker.

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

A NARROW ESCAPE

A STORY LESSON

CHRISTINE I. TINLING

In the days when David was fleeing for his life from his enemy, King Saul, there lived a certain rich man named Nabal. He owned a large quantity of land and raised sheep and goats. If he were living today we should say he had a ranch. His flocks numbered three thousand sheep and one thousand goats. Sheep-raising was quite an important industry, and it is still carried on in the Holy Land in the very same districts as of old. In the spring Nabal's shepherds led their sheep to the uplands of Carmel where there was plenty of juicy grass. Even later in the year, when all was dry and bare, the sheep managed to get enough to eat nibbling diligently in the plain near the ranchman's home.

Nabal belonged to a good family and was a descendant of Caleb, one of the noblest characters in Bible history. But he was a very different man from his great ancestor; he was churlish and evil in his doings and had an exceedingly bad temper. Perhaps the chief reason for this was his love of drink, for alcohol spoils the temper worse than anything.

Nabal had a wife named Abigail, who was altogether better than he deserved. She was a woman of good understanding and of a beautiful countenance. Moreover, she feared God and tried to do right as far as she knew how. We may be sure she was often grieved over the bad temper of her husband and was constantly trying to smooth over his rudeness by her own kind and polite ways.

Once a year came the time of sheep-shearing. You may imagine what a busy season this was and how many men were required to shear those three thousand sheep. Of course extra help had to be employed. "The more, the merrier," we sometimes say, and so it was on that eastern ranch those centuries ago. After each day's task was done the shearers enjoyed an ample feast, and strangers and poor folks were heartily welcome, also. There were stories and jokes and songs when the meal was over, and altogether it was a very jolly time. But it was a pity that strong drink had a place upon the board. Nabal was particularly fond of it and when he began to drink he did not know how to stop.

One day when the shearing was in progress there appeared a party of ten young men to see Nabal. They said they had brought him a message from David. David was at this time an outlaw. He had been obliged to flee because King Saul sought his life. Friends and relatives had gathered around him and formed a little faithful band. Sometimes they lived in caves in the mountains; sometimes they hid among the trees of the forest, and again they wandered about in the desert. It was not always easy to find food to eat, and they needed a good deal, for soldiers living in the open air usually have keen appetites. Often they were able to be of some use to the sheep-masters and received supplies from them in return for their services. Wild Arabs used to scour the country, and it is more than likely that David's men drove them back and protected the flocks of Nabal and other ranchmen. The shepherds were glad to have their help, particularly as they were honest men and David had commanded them not to touch the sheep or goats, however hungry they might be. David would not steal; he preferred to ask politely for what he needed. So he sent these ten young men as a deputation to Nabal.

It was a very respectful and courteous message that they brought. "Peace be to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be to all that thou hast." This was a friendly greeting, and meant that David hoped Nabal and all his family were well and prosperous. Then the message went on:—"And now I have heard that thou hast shearers; now thy shepherds which were with us we hurt them not, neither was there aught missing to them all the while they were in Carmel. Wherefore let the young men find favor in thine eyes, for we come in a good day; give I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants and to thy son David." David was not his son, of course. This was just an affectionate way of speaking. Many a soldier would have demanded from the ranchman all he needed. David only asked modestly for whatever Nabal could best spare, in return for the services he and his men had rendered.

If Nabal had been in his right mind he would gladly have sent what was requested, so as to earn David's continued protection from the Arabs and other robbers. But he had been drinking wine so his brain was muddled. Alcohol poisons the brain-cells so that a man cannot think properly or reason aright. In consequence, he is apt to imagine others are intending injury to him, when this is far from being the case. In this way liquor makes people quarrelsome. It is the cause of more quarrels than anything else in the world.

David was just as polite as he could be, and his young men, too, were polite. They gave the message exactly and then ceased. But the wine made Nabal misunderstand, and he answered most rudely, "Who is David, and who is the son of Jesse?" When he said, "the son of Jesse" he showed that he knew all the time exactly who David was, though he pretended to be ignorant. "There be many servants nowadays that break away every man from his master." This was a rude slap at David, because he had had to leave his master, King Saul; but that was not David's fault in the least. "Shall I then take my bread and my water, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men whom I know not from whence they be?" continued Nabal. Now nobody had asked him to deprive his shearers of their food. David knew he was immensely rich and that there would be plenty to spare at the feast, and he had only asked for whatever it came handy to give. Besides, he and Nabal belonged to the same tribe and it had seemed natural that they should be friendly.

The ten young men did not stop to argue. They turned round and went back the way whence they came and told David all about the insolent reception they had had. David was very angry and he determined to go at once against Nabal and destroy him and all that he had. "Gird ye on every man his sword," he commanded, and they did so. There were six hundred soldiers in the troop, and David started out with four hundred of them, leaving the remainder to guard the baggage.

Happily one of Nabal's servants had more sense than his master. This man was a shepherd and he knew the value of David's protection and realized that Nabal's rudeness would bring dreadful trouble on them all. It was of no use in the world to argue with a man who was the worse for wine, so the shepherd hurried off to the lady of the house. She had not been present when the young men came, and knew nothing about the affair. When the servant found Abigail he told her all, and added that the messengers had stated the exact truth. "They were a wall unto us," he said, "all the while we were with them keeping the sheep. Now, therefore, know and consider what thou wilt do, for evil is determined against our master."

Then Abigail made haste and prepared a very handsome present for David. She took two hundred loaves and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and a hundred clusters of raisins and two hundred cakes of figs, and loaded them on donkeys and started off for David's camp. She did not tell her husband where she was going, or anything about it, for he had not sense to understand.

She sent her servants before her with the presents and she came riding behind on her donkey down the hill. At this very moment David and his band came down the opposite hill towards her. She did not see him, nor he her, until they met in the hollow between the hills. The bushes with which the ground was covered hid soldiers and donkeys and lady and all. David was surely surprised when he saw this beautiful woman coming towards him. Quickly she alighted and came and threw herself at his feet and begged him to listen to her request. She said she was not at home when the messengers arrived and as for her husband she was ashamed of him. The word Nabal means "fool." Fool was he by name, said Abigail, and fool was he by nature. This was plain speaking and it is not often proper to use such a word. But when Abigail thought how nearly Nabal's insolence had caused the death of all her household, when she saw the four hundred soldiers marching to destroy her and her husband and all that they had, she felt that this bad name was no more than he deserved. Certainly there cannot be anything more foolish than to use a poison that will benumb one's brain and so bring disaster on oneself and others.

Abigail apologized to David as humbly as she knew how for her husband's rudeness, which she could not help. She told him she knew he was a servant of God, fighting the battles of the Lord, and that God would bless him and save him from his enemies and finally make him king. She appealed to his mercy and kindness of heart, and said she felt sure he would not come against her people to destroy them. David listened to her very graciously and replied. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me, and blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from avenging myself with mine own hand." Then he took the present that she had brought him and said, "Go up in peace to thine house," and Abigail returned home a happy woman. She had saved, by her promptness and her tact, her husband's life and her own and the lives of all their servants.

When she got back she looked for Nabal, and behold, he held a feast in his house like the feast of a king, and his heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken. Wherefore she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

Next day, when Nabal had slept off the effects of his wine, Abigail related the whole story. When Nabal heard what a narrow escape he had had, and how a small army had marched against him, and had only been turned back by his wife at the foot of the hill, it gave him a great shock. This brought on a severe attack of illness and he seems to have had a fit. Some think it was apoplexy and that he broke a blood-vessel in the brain. At any rate this very thing often happens to those who drink, for alcohol injures the walls of the vessels and makes them brittle. Nabal lingered ten

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

GLEANINGS FROM CONNECTICUT

MRS. E. B. KENDRICK

Practically all the unions of Connecticut omit meetings through July and August but do not omit endeavor. Literature is freely distributed at the agricultural fairs, rest rooms are provided, in some cases out-door meetings are held, and white ribbons are in evidence at many gatherings other than those of the W. C. T. U. For five successive years, Hartford, Litchfield and New Haven counties have united and held a medal contest at the Connecticut Chautauqua. Two gold, two grand gold, and a diamond medal contest is the record. No form of summer meeting can be more effective, as large audiences are assured. This year's contest was for a grand gold medal. There were six contestants, all exceptionally good speakers. Miss Ruth A. Burr of Higganum won the medal, reciting "A Daughter's Sacrifice."

Another summer happening was the annual tri-county field day of the Willimantic camp ground, New London, Windham and Tolland counties uniting. A feature of the day was a matrons' gold medal contest.

At a conference of Hartford county workers it was decided to offer a county prize of $10 for the best essay written by a high school pupil. Heretofore essay writing has been confined to the grades below the high schools.

The state treasury is enriched by a small legacy of $50 from a friend who thus showed her confidence in W. C. T. U. work. A gain in membership is reported by many unions, but how many new white ribboners have been added to Connecticut's working force cannot be definitely known until convention, which is to be held in New Haven, Sept. 30-Oct. 1.

Several towns of the state are preparing for a vote on the license question at the fall elections. The temperance forces of Bristol, one of the cities dry last year, are working tremendously to keep it dry another year and the W. C. T. U. is doing its full share in the campaign. The Hartford prohibition club has resumed regular meetings and has already held a street meeting. The Young People's Societies are circulating petitions asking the daily papers to refuse liquor advertisements. So far as is known but one daily, The Citizen, of Winsted, has taken that stand. The present debt of Connecticut is over $11,000,000 while the drink bill is about $15,000,000 yearly. Certainly a lamentable fact!

DELAWARE WORKERS IN CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The thirty-sixth annual convention of the Delaware W. C. T. U. met in Harrington September 22-24, with Mrs. Lena Messick, president of the state W. C. T. U., in the chair. The M. E. church, in which the convention was held, was beautiful with fall flowers. A portrait of Miss Frances Willard, a large American flag and the county banners added to the attractiveness of the meeting place. In addition to the white ribbons worn by the delegates many "Votes for Women" pins were in evidence. Interesting reports of superintendents and county presidents were given the first day. Mrs. Donnell reported for New Castle county, the largest county in the state. During a year of indefatigable work five National speakers have been afield in the county, Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Miss Rose Davison, Mrs. Lulu Shepard, Miss Christine Tinling and Mrs. Ella H. Thacher. Mrs. Thacher presented to the soldiers' union at Fort du Pont a flag for the largest membership of any union in the United States forts. Mrs. Cordray, for Kent county, reported the organization of a new union at Summit Pleasant with a membership of sixteen. Miss Lillian Cade reported a good year's work for Sussex county, which has nineteen unions with a total of 641 active and 89 honorary members.

Miss Rey Heydrick, president of the Delaware state federation of Women's Clubs, representing about 2,000 women, brought a cordial greeting to the white ribboners. She said:

"It is my happy privilege as president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs to bring to you the most cordial greetings and congratulations on the great and good work you have already accomplished, from the club women of Delaware. Whittier said of Frances Willard:

"'She knew the power of banded ill,
But felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good
The world's united womanhood.'

Mrs. Lena Messick, President Delaware W. C. T. U.

"'United womanhood!' What a power it foretells. Why the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Why the women's clubs? Are we not all one in purpose, and that purpose—service?

"Never was the social and political position of woman more independent than now, so that she can hope to carry out what she sees should be done. May we all have a broader vision, hear the call and see the opportunity for service. What is service, but love in action?

"In our nation today women have a great work to do against irreverence, irresponsibility, and for the quiet observance of the Sabbath, social purity and sobriety. Christ looks to the women to establish and maintain right standards and principles for men. We have a right to do this; yea, more than a right; we have a duty. By quiet social pressure the women of a community can do whatever they will. One fearless, good woman can wield an almost unlimited influence. If so much power lies with one woman, what may a united womanhood not do?"

A parade through the streets of Harrington was one of the big features of the convention. It formed at the public school, where teachers and pupils, each carrying an American flag, marched to the M. E. church. Here another line of march was formed, headed by two cornetists and the Harrington Y. P. B. in pageant costumes, representing Uncle Sam, Aunt Columbia and the nineteen dry states. After the young people came the school pupils, then the L. T. L., and then the convention. It made a long and impressive procession and all the residents came out to see it. In the center of the town the marchers sang "America" and "I Love the U. S. A.," and the L. T. L. gave lusty temperance yells. The parade then proceeded to the school green and after more patriotic airs and temperance yells, William H. Berry, collector of the port of Philadelphia, spoke on prohibition and aroused tremendous enthusiasm. The parade was planned and directed by Mrs. L. T. Jones, the efficient leader of Harrington's L. T. L. with a membership of fifty boys and girls.

Mr. Daniel A. Poling addressed a very large audience at one of the evening meetings, and his ringing challenge inspired his hearers to renewed efforts in the temperance war.

Mrs. Lena H. Messick was enthusiastically re-elected as president of the state W. C. T. U. and was also made a delegate to the National W. C. T. U. convention. She will be accompanied by Mrs. Matilda Sudler of Bridgeville, who goes to the convention as a visitor.

Other officers were elected by the convention as follows: Vice-president, Mrs. Emma Caulk; honorary president, Mrs. Kate E. Smithers; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lizzie Raughley; recording secretary, Miss Levina Lynch; treasurer Mrs. Clara Marshall.

Nineteen Prohibition States

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

South Carolina

PROHIBITION State Pennants

A strong paper pennant.. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 19 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House

Evanston, Illinois

NATIONAL ORGANIZER IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mrs. Emma H. Howland, National W. C. T. U. organizer, is helping in the prohibition campaign in Newfoundland. Writing from St. Johns she says the liquor ftes have commenced their attacks upon her, calling her an "interloper." She is the guest of the American consul, James Sackett Benedict, and his wife. Mrs. Benedict, it will be remembered, is the president of the Newfoundland W. C. T. U. The liquor men insist that Consul Benedict should inform the United States government that Mrs. Howland is not wanted in Newfoundland. The children are to have a large part in the campaign. A company of fifty children in St. Johns are being trained to sing for prohibition

HERE AND THERE

The Black Hills presbytery (South Dakota) enrolling thirty ministers and pastors, and fifty-five elders of the Presbyterian church of the Black Hills, in annual meeting, passed a strong resolution in favor of state-wide prohibition and pledged its loyal support to the movement.

It is well known that the law which gave Texas the College of Industrial Arts in Denton was a W. C. T. U. measure fathered by Judge V. W. Grubbs. A short time ago the Denton Chamber of Commerce raised a large scholarship fund, to be known as the Lydia E. Grubbs endowment fund, to aid girls in securing an education. Soon after this, Judge Grubbs' daughter, Miss Lillie Belle, was chosen as the first person to receive the benefit of this generous donation.

Encouraging testimony as to the decreased consumption of alcohol in Germany was given Miss Mary E. Brown, director of the National W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, by an engineer who showed great interest in the literature exhibit. He said that with forty-six other engineers he visited Germany two years ago. While there the group investigated eight manufacturing plants and they found the men taking a pint bottle of weak tea with their one o'clock lunch instead of using beer with two or three per cent alcohol as formerly. The tea is prepared in the building and sent up in bottles at about one-half the cost of beer. Since substituting tea for beer the efficiency of the workmen has increased from fifteen to twenty per cent.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

The LIQUOR TRAFFIC MUST GO

Pennants

in good quality of felt, red, white or blue, with slogan

The Liquor Traffic Must Go

Eighteen inches long

Price, ten cents each; twenty-five, $2.00, one hundred, $7.00.

A facsimile of this pennant in blue, with white letters, has been made as a seal, to be used upon letters and packages.

Price, per hundred, 20 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
Evanston, Ill.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Washington, Seattle, Oct. 8.
North Carolina, Raleigh, Oct. 8-12.
Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Louisiana, Alexandria, Oct. 30-Nov. 2.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. BESSIE THOMPSON, Gansevoort, N. Y., local superintendent of the department of Mothers' Meetings.

MRS. MAHALA AKERS, Dinuba, Calif., a charter member of the local union.

MRS. LIZZIE A. BEALL, Oakdale, Ill., a loyal member of the local union since its organization in 1884.

The temperance cause, as well as the nursing profession, has met with a great loss in the death of Miss Annie Damer. Her talents would have commanded the highest positions, but for the most part she devoted herself to the care of the poor, and though she did not seek honor, it sought her and she was a number of times chosen president of the national body of nurses, then The Nurses' Associated Alumnae, now The American Nurses' Association. Always and everywhere she was a temperance woman, and when in 1909 the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union asked that the nurses make a statement of their attitude on the temperance question, she took up the matter with cordial interest and as presiding officer of the Associated Alumnae, assisted in the passing of a strong resolution pledging that they would do all in their power to teach the nature and effects of alcohol and other narcotic drugs and discourage their use.

MISSOURI'S TRIUMPHANT RECORD

(Continued from Page Eleven)

better condition than if we had open saloons and from a moral standpoint there is no comparison. Under the first four months of local option there were 10 arrests against 97 during the same months in 1914. During four months with no saloons arrests for drunkenness were 7-0-1-2. During the corresponding four months when we had saloons the number of arrests for drunkenness were 49-19-10-19. The most apparent loss we sustain under local option is the undesirable citizen." All the business firms signed equally strong statements and the general health and prosperity of the city bear out their testimony. Located in the midst of rich farming land Sikeston is the wealthiest town in the state, has a large population of hospitable and prosperous southern people, a flourishing W. C. T. U., and beautiful churches and schools. The inhabitants all joined in efforts to welcome and entertain the state convention, and succeeded in doing so most royally.

The state officers were all unanimously re-elected as follows: President, Mrs. Nelle G. Burger; vice-president, Miss Roena Shaner; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lettie Hill May; recording secretary, Mrs. Emma G. Pitzer; treasurer, Mrs. Neva Thomas.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can, I know you can, because I have reduced 32,000 women and have built up that many more—scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms.

You Can Be So Well!

—if you only knew how well! I build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as

Nervousness, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Indigestion, Etc.

One pupil writes: "I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength."

Another says: "Last May I weighed 100 pounds, this May I weigh 126 and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Won't you sit down and write now for my interesting booklet? You are welcome to it. It is FREE. Don't wait, you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound. Price $2.00.

IOWA'S ACTIVITIES

(Continued from Page Twelve)

Fort Dodge sends thirty Campaign SIGNALS to ministers and priests. This fine union gets up a once-a-month Red-Letter Day program. At one time a doctor talks, on another occasion a minister, and again some lady from a fraternal organization. An annual banquet and an annual picnic are given.

The Iowa W. C. T. U. has two poets, Mrs. Judge Wright of Fort Dodge, and Mrs. McHose, wife of Hon. McHose of Boone. Mrs. Wright is one of the trustees of Benedict Home and Mrs. McHose is vice-president of the state suffrage association. They combine poetry with practicality.

Profitable meetings were held with colored people at Sioux City and Des Moines, our white ribbon sisters giving them one of the very best dates at their disposal in those towns. At Davenport there was a state meeting of the colored missionary societies of the Baptist church. Though their program was a long one they insisted on putting three white speakers of the W. C. T. U. on their program. The colored people intend to stand by both equal suffrage and full prohibition.

Keokuk, Clinton, Council Bluffs, Burlington, Dubuque and Sioux City all have hard problems to solve. They are doing their best. The same is true of Oelwein. Sheldon, Algona and New Hampton have won their territory and will hold what they have won.

Watch Iowa for the next two years!

Among the useful temperance laws passed by the recent session of the Swedish Riksdag is one conferring upon the central government and also upon county governments the right to forbid the retail sale of intoxicants (including wine and beer) in "times of crisis," or to ordain such restrictions, short of complete prohibition, as are deemed desirable. In the case of the central government the power conferred is absolute; but in the case of county governments the decree must receive the sanction of the king in council. The exercise of the power to veto is not restricted to times of war, but is permissible when unemployment or want prevails to an unusual extent.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

The Union Signal . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 25c a year

The Young Crusader . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each . . . . . Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries

The Union Signal . . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 37c a year

The Young Crusader . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

GIFT TO THE MEN'S BIBLE CLASS

A fine list of ten subscriptions to The Union Signal and five to The Young Crusader is received from Liberty, Mo., and the sender asks for the Life of Frances Willard as her premium upon the ten subscriptions, saying, "We will place this in the library of the Men's Progressive Bible class. The subscription list is made up of our five clergymen, two editors, the superintendent and principal of schools and the library of our college. I am glad we are able to put this valuable paper into the hands of so many leaders and moulders of thought, and pray God's blessing upon it as it comes to them."

A HAPPY IDEA

At the last meeting of the Madeline Southard Union of Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 17, there was a Young Crusader Day program given by the children in memory of my sister, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson. Enclosed find eight subscriptions with the order.

Mrs. Reba E. Ross.

LOCAL UNION REMEMBERS THE TEACHERS

"It is with pleasure that I send the names of twenty subscribers to your most excellent magazine. Nineteen of these are teachers in our public schools, and The Young Crusader is a gift to them from the local union which has done this for several years and is happy to tell you that the teachers make good use of the paper."

Jamestown, N. D.

The Young Crusader is furnished to teachers at the special rate of 20 cents for nine months—from September to June.

Circulation Manager

NEW PROGRAM
FOR
WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY

Prepared by Stella B. Irvine for the National W. C. T. U.

A complete program for the Sunday school hour, containing responsive service, prayer in unison, addresses, the Triumph song, by Anna A. Gordon, and Prohibition Victory, by Stella B. Irvine.

Price, 30 cents per hundred.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Ill.

"VICTORY" KEYNOTE OF MAINE CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

Beautiful for situation is the thriving town of Skowhegan, where the forty-first annual convention of the Maine W. C. T. U. was held in the fine Bethany Baptist church, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion with flowers. The motto in white and green, which hung over the desk—"Skowhegan welcomes the Maine W. C. T. U."—was indicative of the spirit of hospitality manifested by our hostesses. Automobiles were at the service of the delegates at all times, and between the meetings many delightful rides were taken. Other courtesies were generously extended.

The most impressive features of the convention were the splendid annual address of the state president, Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, and the address given by Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, in which she most tenderly referred to some of the cherished experiences connected with the work of her dear mother in the early days of the W. C. T. U.

The address of Wednesday evening, given by our National president, Miss Anna Adams Gordon, on "Prohibition's Victorious Progress," was cheering, uplifting and inspiring. She showed the growth of the prohibition movement from Maine to South Carolina, indicating how rapidly the map is growing white. The cheers that greeted the news that South Carolina had gone dry prove that Maine has caught some of the western enthusiasm. Miss Gordon said she came to us to be comforted, but she it was who brought cheer to our bereaved hearts. The auditorium and adjoining rooms were filled during the convention and the music was of a high order. "John Barleycorn, Good-bye." was sung very pleasingly by Miss Marble, daughter of the local president, assisted by a double male quartet, and was enthusiastically encored. Solos were rendered by Miss Jennie Chenery and others from the local churches, and Mrs. Georgia Shepard Vaill, our own musical director, sang "Victory" with wonderful effect.

The resolutions, especially the one on prohibition and law enforcement, were strong and to the point.

The county presidents' processional, which was the most unique feature of the convention, originated in the fertile brain of the state president. It was composed of representatives of the new unions and L. T. L.'s and also of those counties and unions which had made gains during the year. It was greeted with cheers.

The department work was ably reported and nothing delighted the hearts of the white ribboners of Maine more than did the fact that young women are acting in the capacity of superintendents of a number of the departments.

The state officers were re-elected with the exception of Miss Clara M. Farwell, recording secretary, in whose place Miss Vena Leighton Johnson will serve. Miss Farwell for thirty-five years has faithfully carried on the duties of the office named and her resignation was accepted with great reluctance. She was a close friend of our great chieftain, Mrs. Stevens.

A NARROW ESCAPE

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

days, cared for by his faithful wife, and then he died. He left behind him only the memory of a foolish life, spoiled by strong drink. He was one of those of whom the Bible says:

"Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink, that continue until night, till wine inflame them! And the harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands."

POST THE POSTER

"Posters Make News of Temperance Facts." Give These Facts Wide Publicity by

POSTING THE POSTERS

1. Which Will You Protect?
2. Do You Know These Facts?
3. Alcohol.
4. Beer.
5. Exclusion of Objectionable Post Cards from United States Mail.
6. Drink Robs the Working Man.
7. The License Voter Gets What?
8. Attention, Voters!
9. Figures Tell.
10. Saloons Increase Taxes.
11. The Trouble Manufacturing Company.
12. Successful Men.
13. In Prohibition Kansas.
14. Compare These Figures.
15. Boys and Girls.
16. Not By My Vote.
17. State Prohibition and Local Option.
18. Temperance Truths (two).
19. Flag Poster (in colors).
20. Testimony from Governors of Prohibition States.

Size 19x25. Printed in black and red.
Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; per 100, $3.50.

SPECIAL CAMPAIGN POSTERS

The Liquor Traffic Must Go. Cloth, 28x42. Price, each, 15 cents; two for 25 cents; per hundred, $10.50.
Cloth, 12x18. Price, each, 5 cents; per hundred, $3.00.
Paper, 28x42. Price, each, 5 cents; per hundred, $3.50.

A Business Proposition. Cloth, 28x42. Price, each, 15 cents; two for 25 cents; per hundred, $10.50.
Paper, 28x42. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50.

The Man Who Drinks. Paper, 28x42. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50.

BILL BOARD POSTERS.

Printed in two colors, 7x10 feet, put up in eight sections. Price, 50 cents each.

The Man Who Drinks.
The Treating Evil.
Abraham Lincoln.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

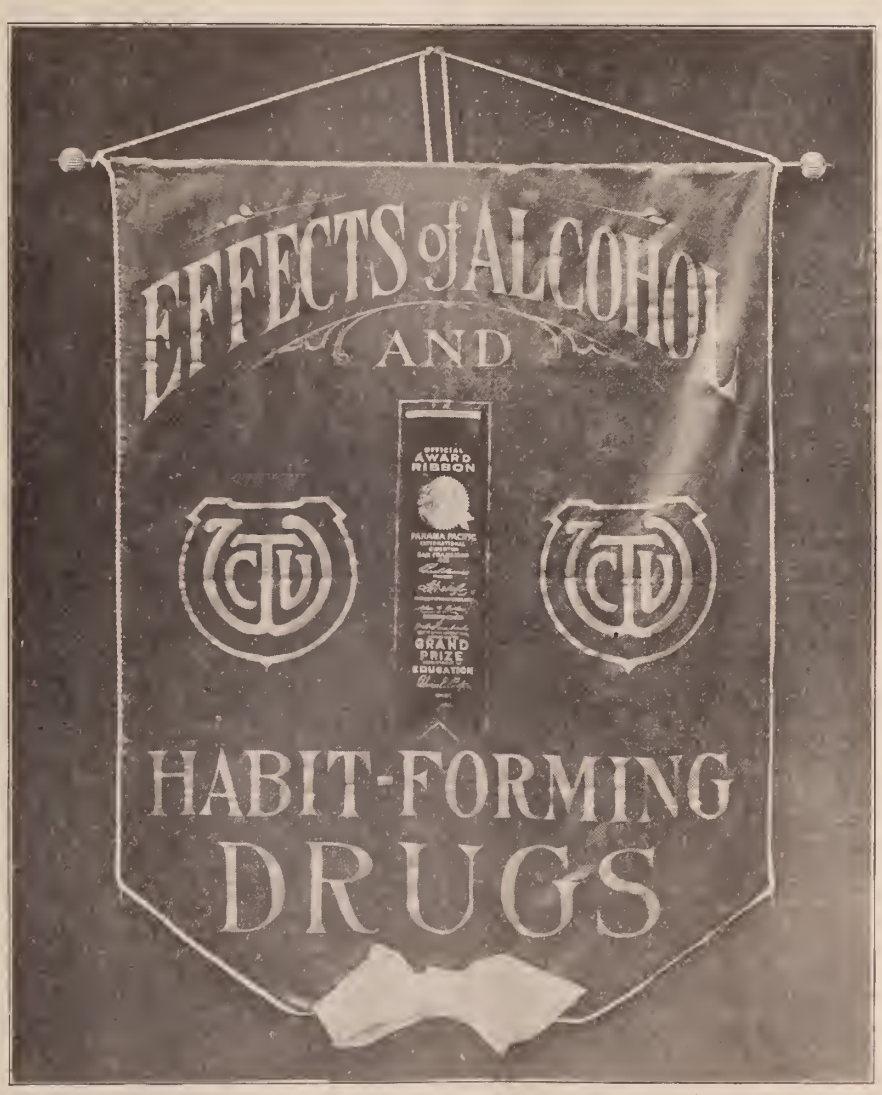
THE CRUSADER FOR VERMONT TEACHERS

As a help in the 1916 campaign to make Vermont white on the map, the Morrisville (Vt.) W. C. T. U. has presented The Young Crusader to six teachers in the village graded school and eleven district teachers who declared their willingness to use the paper in temperance teaching in the school room. The permanent fund of the local union has so increased that one year's interest is now the equivalent of dues for ten members.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., OCTOBER 14, 1915 | No. 42



Grand Prize Awarded the Exhibit of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the Panama-Pacific Exposition

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Massachusetts Statesman Declares for National Prohibition—"Big Business" Opposes Drinking Habit among Workmen—The Woman with the Hoe—Chicago's Mayor Orders Enforcement of Sunday Closing Law—Young People's Branch.

CHICAGO'S MAYOR ORDERS ENFORCEMENT OF SUNDAY CLOSING LAW

Like a bolt out of a clear sky on a recent morning came the order of William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, closing the city saloons at midnight every Saturday night, to remain closed the following twenty-four hours, thereby making effective the state law which provides that the lid shall be put on liquor shops on Sunday. Prohibition leaders and woman suffrage workers were immediately aroused and congratulatory telegrams and letters from various organizations and individuals began to pour in upon the city executive. The announcement came just as the white ribboners were entraining for the National Convention at Seattle and called forth from Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., this utterance: "We consider the mayor's edict a great send-off for the trip to our annual meeting. It certainly takes a remarkable type of courage to enforce a Sunday law in Chicago, but when Chicago does take a step we know it is a big one, for the Chicago foot is proverbially large. It will prove a great benefit to the city morally and financially." Later, from the White Ribbon Special, Miss Gordon wired the following words of congratulation to Mayor Thompson:

"Two hundred and fifty delegates representing the eastern, middle, southern and western states, en route to the forty-second annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Seattle, Washington, congratulate you on the determined stand you have taken in the cause of law and order in your announcement that the laws forbidding the sale of liquor on Sunday will be enforced. You have recognized the best sentiment of the city in the stand you have taken. We thank you."

The Rock River Methodist Conference, meeting in Chicago on the day the mayor's action was made public, telegraphed Mayor Thompson:

"We congratulate the city of Chicago on your courageous action in ordering that all saloons, or dram shops, be closed on Sunday in compliance with the law of the state. We hail with joy this step toward sobriety and righteousness, this additional prophecy of the ultimate doom of a traffic that debauches every day of the week. We pledge ourselves to stand by you in such a cause with voice and vote and prayer to Almighty God."

Other organizations are sending words of praise to Chicago's mayor, and men and women of prominence are expressing their personal thanks for his advance step which many predict will bring about the enforcement of the Sunday closing law all over the state and ultimately the enactment of a state prohibitory law.

SEATTLE'S MAYOR TO ENFORCE DRY LAW

In an informal address to Christian Endeavorers recently Mayor Hiram C. Gill declared that he is tired of hearing that the prohibition law cannot be enforced and insisted that he will make it effective as long as he is in office. In these emphatic terms he gave assurance that he intends to foster respect for the law and make it a stern reality:

"I can, and will, make this prohibition law absolutely effective in Seattle the first two months after the first of the year—because I last that long. And my successor can enforce it if he wants to.

"You young folks," continued the mayor, "will live and work in a state where prohibition has been established. The only thing I regret about this prohibition law is that it allows liquor to be shipped into this state—but it will not be long before an amendment prevents any liquor whatever from being handled here.

"Upon you will devolve the task of keeping this state forever free from that which has been the curse of humanity since time began. I speak as one who knows. Day after day I sit in my office at the city hall and hear citizens' troubles, and ninety-nine of every one hundred are due to drink. I have learned to hate it.

"I want to say that I am tired of hearing men say to me every day: 'Well, it can't be enforced. What's the use of having it, anyway?' I can—and will—make this law absolutely effective in Seattle while I am mayor."

PROHIBITION INCLUDED IN GEORGIA GOVERNOR'S CALL FOR EXTRA SESSION OF LEGISLATURE

Honorable Nat Harris, governor of Georgia, recently issued a proclamation convoking an extraordinary session of the general assembly on Wednesday, November 3, to consider certain subjects, among them prohibition. In addition to the various new prohibition bills which will be introduced it is expected several other bills bearing on the question of liquor legislation will be presented. The governor gives the following reasons for including prohibition among the provisions in the call: "I have included the prohibition legislation because of the fact that I have been asked by fully two-thirds of the legislators, and a vast number of the citizens outside to do so. The legislators believe that this is emergency legislation, and the adjournment was forced in order to secure it. Its consideration, therefore, will be submitted to the extraordinary session inasmuch as a large majority of the people's representatives have demanded it."

ROOSEVELT LENDS AID TO NEW JERSEY SUFFRAGISTS

The Montclair Equal Suffrage League is giving publicity to the following message received from Colonel Theodore Roosevelt:

"I want to speak to the men who have the right to vote and who are recreant in their duty if they don't see that the women share it with them," says Colonel Roosevelt. "I ask every decent, self-respecting citizen who has the right to vote to join the movement to secure for women the suffrage now denied them. We have woman suffrage in the western states. I don't think the east will permanently lag behind. Civilization is spreading."

SECRETARY McADOO WILL VOTE FOR SUFFRAGE

Secretary McAdoo has announced that he will vote for the suffrage amendment to the New York constitution. "The American women have made a game fight and a fair fight for suffrage and are entitled to win," says Mr. McAdoo.

AMERICAN INDIANS URGE PROHIBITION

Amid vigorous applause, the Society of American Indians, at the fourth annual conference recently held in Lawrence, Kansas, unanimously adopted resolutions declaring for the strict enforcement of anti-liquor provisions in all Indian treaties and also declaring for state and national prohibition of the liquor traffic.

The resolutions which were made a part of the platform demands of the society read: "We invite attention to the fact that the first law enacted by congress looking to the curtailment of the liquor traffic was enacted through the efforts of Little Turtle, the Miami chief; that the Cherokee legislature began the enactment of laws prohibiting the liquor traffic as early as 1819, a quarter of a century before any such laws were enacted by white law-making bodies, and that the Indian for two centuries has pleaded for the elimination of this curse.

"We now call upon all Indians to promote the prohibition of the traffic entirely by state and national legislation."

DECREASE IN NUMBER OF NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN SALOONS

For the coming twelve months, according to reports in the eastern papers, New York and Brooklyn are to have approximately 300 less saloons than they had the past year. Long Island City has also decreased the number of its saloons by fifty. This decrease is owing to the failure of saloonkeepers to make application for renewal of their saloon licenses, a state of affairs caused partly by the fact that the business of selling liquor is not so profitable as formerly, and partly by the 25 per cent raise in the price of saloon licenses. In discussing the subject recently Deputy Excise Commissioner McAvoy stated his belief that "the public drinks less liquor now than a few years ago, and very nearly 50 per cent of the saloons are not breaking even, and a majority could not stay open without outside aid."

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS IN ALABAMA

That prohibition in Alabama does prohibit, and that it has not caused the predicted business losses, were assertions made recently by Judge S. D. Weakley of Birmingham, late chief justice of Alabama, speaking at a public meeting: "The time has passed when a city may declare itself more powerful than the state. Do not believe it when you hear that in Mobile, Montgomery and Birmingham prohibition does not prohibit, for I declare to you on my honor as a man and on my record as a judge that prohibition does prohibit in Alabama, and that the prohibition laws are the best on the statute books and are being enforced.

"In July, 1914, there were, in Birmingham, 321 arrests for drunkenness. In July of 1915 there were just 51 arrests. On Labor Day, 1914, there were 106 arrests in Birmingham, and on the same day in 1915 there were just eleven arrests. In Elmore county there were, at one barbecue 5,000 persons in attendance on Labor Day and not one drunk."

Answering the query as to whether Birmingham stores are vacant, Judge Weakley gave figures to prove that they are not only not vacant but are being enlarged to take care of their increasing business. He spoke of one of these enterprises, a new $20,000 restaurant being put up in Birmingham.

Speaking of education, he cited the increase in North Carolina in the past few years, from $2,000,000 for education in 1908, when prohibition went into effect, to $6,000,000 at the present time, and the fact that there has never been more money spent on education, or a larger attendance in Birmingham schools than at present.

PRESIDENT WILSON BACKS SUFFRAGE AS STATE ISSUE

President Wilson will vote for woman suffrage in the New Jersey election, October 19. Coupled with the announcement of his engagement to Mrs. Norman Galt, an ardent suffragist, Washington papers regard this as significant. Suffragists the country over are inclined to believe the President's support of state suffrage foretells his future attitude toward national suffrage.

Massachusetts Statesman Declares for Prohibition

The question of state-wide prohibition is arousing a great deal of attention in Massachusetts at this time, and is one of the big issues in the gubernatorial campaign. Many prominent men of the state are rallying to the support of prohibition, among them Hon. Joseph Walker, former speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives and erstwhile candidate for governor on the Progressive ticket. In a recent issue of the Boston Post, Mr. Walker gives this statement of his views on national prohibition:

"When a great issue is once fairly presented to the American people, an issue which vitally affects their welfare, prosperity and happiness, it will not down until it is settled and settled right. This is one of the beneficent results of free speech and free political action.

"Since the foundation of this government one great issue after another has commanded the attention of the American people and, for the time being, has become the dominant issue in the politics of the country. State rights, slavery, gold vs. silver, are no longer issues because they have been settled right.

"The question of prohibition, which has been agitated for years, has at last become a dominant national issue. It has gradually arisen from a local and state issue to be a national issue simply because it vitally affects the welfare, prosperity and happiness of the American people. It will not down until it is settled and settled right. No political party can escape it.

Source of Corrupt Politics

"The liquor traffic destroys the welfare, prosperity and happiness of the people. To this traffic may be directly traced crime, insanity, industrial inefficiency and poverty. It has broken up many a home and bears most heavily on women and children. It has always been one of the chief sources of political corruption. No one will deny these facts and it is time to face them squarely.

"This is not the only country which is today facing the liquor question. England, France, Russia and Germany have come to realize that alcohol weakens the efficiency of the soldier.

"It no less weakens the efficiency of the industrial worker. Many of our great industries are alive to this fact and require total abstinence of their employes. It is indeed a live and a world-wide question.

"What is America to do about it? The evil is eating into the very vitals of the nation with alarming rapidity. The facts and statistics are appalling.

"All attempts at restriction and regulation have proved to be utter failures. I am convinced that the nation must destroy the liquor traffic or the liquor traffic in the end will destroy the nation.

"Official reports show that, as a check to the liquor evil in Massachusetts, local option is ineffective. The liquor traffic fights every measure designed to lessen the evil and to protect communities which have voted for no-license.

"The facts demonstrate that alcohol is a dangerous habit forming drug. There are few fathers and mothers, even those who use liquor themselves, who would not be glad to have their children total abstainers. They realize the danger.

"I claim that the greatness of the evil and the impossibility of its restriction and regulation justify such a drastic remedy. I simply cannot face the facts and refuse to give my support to prohibition as a national policy.

Prohibition Only Remedy

"I am convinced that prohibition is the only real remedy for this insidious and widespread evil. Prohibition will be effective only when the nation, by constitutional amendment, forbids the manufacture, sale, transportation and importation of all alcoholic liquor. Therefore I favor a constitutional amendment. The states must co-operate in its enforcement.

"I am not impressed with the argument that prohibition entails a loss of revenue, for aside from all moral questions, the money cost of the liquor traffic to the municipality, state and nation, far exceeds the loss of revenue. Moreover, the money loss, due to inefficiency in industry, caused by the use of liquor, is enormous.

"I am not impressed with the argument that prohibition means loss of employment. I believe that for every working man who loses his job through prohibition many will find new employment. The billions of dollars spent every year for liquor would, if spent for the necessaries and comforts of life, greatly increase the demand for these good things. Total abstinence means that the people, as a whole, will earn more and spend more.

"The issue is before us. Let us not hesitate to face it squarely and vote for prohibition."

"Big Business" Opposes the Drink Habit Among Workmen

"EFFICIENCY AND SAFETY FIRST" THE BATTLE CRY

In an effort to secure definite, reliable facts regarding industrial prohibition, the Research department of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church has been making a careful study of the attitude of "big business" toward liquor. The results of its survey it reveals in a bulletin, from which we quote:

"The Illinois Steel Company located at Joliet, Illinois, maintains a club house for the use of its men. During the winter months many bowling clubs are formed. Recently a member of one of these clubs secured a position in Pittsburgh. Before his departure his fellow-members gave a banquet in his honor at one of the hotels with twenty-five guests, foremen and men holding clerical positions with the Illinois Steel Company, present. When these men went to the table there was a glass of cocktail at each plate. When they left the table there was still a glass of cocktail at each plate. Not one had been touched.

"Our investigation covers the iron and steel trades of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and West Virginia. Information was secured from 140 companies, many of which have more than one plant. This investigation shows conclusively that the tendency of industrial corporations is to take every practicable measure to prevent drinking on duty or off. Almost without exception they testify that the abstainer is more efficient in his work and that he alone is considered when a place of responsibility is open. Many of these concerns are conducting extensive propagandas to induce their men to abstain at all times. The motto of the Illinois Steel Company is 'Safety, Sobriety, Cleanliness,' and that motto is typical. Not so many years ago it was quite the custom for workmen to send boys out for beer during working hours. Of 120 concerns replying, only six say that they permit this at the present time.

Absolute Prohibition

"Ten concerns not only prohibit drinking during working hours, but absolutely prohibit it at any time. One hundred others, in giving information on this point, say that they do everything possible to prevent drinking by their employes out of hours, but that the practical difficulties prevent their announcing a blanket policy of prohibition. The ten concerns which have undertaken the Herculean task of preventing all drinking by their employes are: The Illinois Steel Company, Joliet, Ill.; The Berkshire Iron Works, Pa.; The American Sheet and Tin Plate Company, W. Va.; The Lukens Iron and Steel Company, Pa.; The Reading Iron Company, Pa.; The Howard Iron & Tool Company, Pa.; Joseph E. Thropp, Pa.; Hubbard Steel Foundry Co., Ill.; The Interstate Iron & Steel Company, Cambridge, O.; The West Steel Casting Company, O.

"'Any attempt to interfere with the habits of the men outside of working hours would be resented by them, but we recognize that even the moderate use of liquor is hurtful, and we exert every moral influence to promote abstinence among our employes,' says the Lockhart Iron & Steel Company of Pennsylvania. 'It is impossible to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors by employes while they are off duty, but we use every means to discourage and prevent it,' says the Jackson Iron & Steel Company of Ohio. The American Car Foundries Company of Pennsylvania dismisses men who go into saloons on the way to or from work, and the Lukens Iron & Steel Company, of the same state, suspends an employe one week for his first offense; for the second he is often discharged. The Lukens company prohibits drinking both during working hours and out of working hours. These replies indicate the nature of many others.

"Eighty-three of the concerns queried discriminate against those who use alcoholic liquors in employing and advancing men. Even the most 'moderate' use is fatal to a man's chance of advancement.

"Sixty-three concerns have taken steps to determine the influence of the moderate use of liquor on working efficiency and reliability, and without exception they testify that it is bad.

"Safety First"

"The industrial abstinence propaganda has become closely allied with the 'Safety First' campaign. The whole movement is conducted in the name of efficiency, and abstinence campaigns are managed in the great industrial plants of the country in an attitude of sympathetic co-operation with the men themselves. Employers give detailed information as to the splendid effect of these abstinence campaigns upon the accident rate and the work output. Several of them announce that they are adopting more drastic rules because of new compensation laws which are going into effect, and many of them take pains to express their sympathy with prohibition laws as an effective aid to the promotion of abstinence.

"Perhaps the most significant thing developed by the whole inquiry is the universal recognition of the fact that moderate drinking has a distinctly bad effect upon the efficiency and reliability of working men. There does not seem to be two opinions upon this point."

OHIO STATE ADULT BIBLE CLASS CONVENTION FAVORS DRY LAW

The First Ohio State Adult Bible Class convention, representing 23,000 organized Bible classes, which met recently for a two-day session in Columbus, went on record as in favor of state-wide prohibition and woman suffrage. At one of the meetings following a wet and dry debate a resolution was adopted declaring "emphatically and without equivocation for the speedy and complete elimination of every brewery, distillery, saloon and grogshop from both the commonwealth of Ohio and the nation as a whole.

"There is no excuse for Ohio longer to tolerate the liquor traffic since it endangers the public welfare, menaces public morals, debauches public officials, is a parasite on industrial life, a pirate on the commercial sea, and is labor's worst foe. It stands opposed to everything the church undertakes, therefore its destruction should be swift and certain. We pledge the support of the Federated Bible Classes of the state to every legitimate effort to bring about this glad end, and urge every member of every such class to at once ally himself to his dry county organization, where he can do his most effective work, and to contribute his means and every ounce of his energy from this time on until the polls close on election day, toward making Ohio dry."

GOVERNOR OF SOUTH DAKOTA GIVES VIEWS ON LIQUOR QUESTION

Hon. Frank M. Byrne, governor of South Dakota, in a speech at Mitchell on September 9 of this year, among other things, said:

"I have given the most careful consideration to our prison population and have examined with as much care as possible the history and records of those unfortunate people confined there. I am convinced that the delinquency of approximately seventy per cent is directly due to drink, and many; many more to its indirect influence and effect. In fact, it is rarely that I find a prisoner whose life has not in some degree been unfavorably influenced by drink on the part of himself, his parents or others, or whose delinquency cannot be traced, either directly or indirectly, to the liquor traffic.

"In fact and in truth, were it not for the effects of intoxicating liquor, directly or indirectly, the cells of our prison houses would mold and decay for want of occupants, and we literally might tear down our prison walls. The cases of individual prisoners are constantly coming before me and it is remarkable to note the steady recurrence of the same strain, from every angle, from the judge on the bench, from the attorneys prosecuting and defending, from the peace officers and from the prisoners themselves, the ever recurring refrain that liquor is the cause of the downfall."

KANSAS SCHOOLS HONOR FRANCES WILLARD

The first annual observance of Frances Willard Day in the Kansas schools occurred on September 28, the birthday of the well-loved temperance leader. As a part of the Willard Day services at the Junior High school, Chanute, 415 young people, by resolution, pledged their influence to the securing of national prohibition. Fifty students, one after another, told of benefits that have come to Kansas through its state-wide prohibition law. Mrs. Parsons made the principal address of the occasion. In referring to the bronze tablets of Miss Willard, which were some time ago presented to the Junior High school, Mrs. Parsons said:

"In placing before the children this splendid bronze monument of Frances Willard, we call their attention to a mighty movement favoring prohibition that has placed Kansas in the front rank of the states of the Union. It proclaims that the Kansas people love to honor those who have given their best gifts to make possible our present prohibition law.

"Kansas has the distinction of being the first state in the Union to provide a law insuring temperance instruction to the children. Miss Willard's own words seem prophetic in this connection.

"'Kansas is away out on the picket line of progress where mortal commonwealth has never gone before. It may be called with entire propriety the state of First Things—the pleasant garden plat on which God experiments with humanity to see how large and great we are capable of growing.'"

JAPANESE WOMEN AS GOVERNMENT ENTERTAINERS

The white ribboners of Kyoto, Japan, are patterning after their American sisters in proving themselves equal to emergencies. Just now it looks as if they would step courageously forward to discourage the further continuance of that evil feature of government coronation ceremonies—the geisha girls. The Kyoto municipal officers expect during the coronation festivities to give a very large and elaborate entertainment in which they are to act as hosts. The guests are to be foreigners from the various embassies, strangers from abroad, and many important and influential Japanese people. Influenced by the persistent appeals from the Kyoto W. C. T. U. to do away with the appearance of geisha girls at the festival season, the city authorities say they will do their best to co-operate with the white ribboners provided the women will themselves be responsible for entertaining the visitors. "In one word," says the Woman's Herald, in writing of the movement, "these elegant, well-bred ladies are asked to step out of their shielded homes, and take the place of professional public entertainers, whose occupation has always been looked upon by the wives of Japan as questionable and inferior. The women realize that the custom of giving up all entertainment into the hands of geisha girls, is a poison to society, and feel that without abolishing the traditional custom, little can be done toward the elevation of womanhood, or increasing her opportunities for usefulness to the nation; and yet, the question of who will venture, and how it can be accomplished, is a very serious one. Not only reluctance to act as substitutes for such characters, is felt, but the difficulty of a quiet group of dignified ladies being able to infuse any spirit of gayety into the feast, or to appear with their usual ease and graciousness in the midst of unfamiliar surroundings, is to be encountered. The ceremonious occasion of the crowning of our latest and most progressive Emperor, is a peculiarly fitting time to introduce a new and progressive plan for entertaining with cordiality and dignity. The Kyoto W. C. T. U. ladies have been requested to ask the assistance of the members of the Japanese Ladies' Patriotic Society and the ladies of the Red Cross Society. The wives of all the officials are members of one or the other of these societies. Thus, representative women of Japan will, for the first time since the beginning of feudalism, have an opportunity outside of home, of showing sympathy and interest in the lives of their husbands. If they can do this in an important public function and thus usurp the place of women of an inferior class—they will show the world that the quiet woman of Japan is no longer to be pitied, or her husband looked upon as a man of low ideals."

ARTISTS' OPINIONS OF ALCOHOL

Not long ago an effort was made by the Students' Total Abstinence Union in Sweden to find out from well-known artists and literary men what their views were as to the influence of alcohol on the inspiration of ideas. The question put to them was: "Is alcohol, in your opinion, adapted to assist or hinder an artistic or literary worker?" The answers, almost without exception, were that its use hindered rather than helped.

Among those whose opinions were asked we find Auguste Rodin, the great sculptor. His answer was short and to the point: "Those who depend on the use of alcohol to give them inspirations or suggestions are doomed to see themselves and their work soon forgotten."

WINAMAC (IND.) DRUGGISTS STOP SALE OF INTOXICANTS

The druggists of Winamac, Ind., are advertising in the local paper that they intend to abolish whisky and brandy from their shelves. The notice they are serving reads: "After mature deliberation we have decided to act on our convictions, with many other druggists, that liquor has no place in a reputable drug store!

"The new Pharmacopoeia will not recognize brandy or whisky as medicine, and no honest drug store can sell it under the law."

COLLEGE PAPERS WILL PRINT NO MORE LIQUOR ADS

The Associated College Newspaper Publishers, meeting at Columbia University, voted unanimously to bar all liquor advertisements from the columns of the college papers of the United States and Canada. The college newspapers represented at the meeting were as follows:

Amherst Student.
Brown Daily Herald.
Daily Californian.
Central College Contro.
Colorado College Tiger.
University of Colorado Silver and Gold
Columbia Daily Spectator.
The Dartmouth.
DePauw Daily.
Harvard Crimson.
Hobart Daily.
Daily Illini.
Indiana Daily Student.
Iowa State Student.
Daily Kansan.
Lehigh Brown and Wh...
Maine Campus.
M. I. T. Tech.
Michigan Daily.
University Missourian.
Nevada Sage Brush.
N. Y. U. New Yorker.
Ohio State Lantern.
The Pennsylvanian.
Daily Princetonian.
University of Pittsburg Weekly.
Purdue Exponent.
Leland Stanford Daily Palo Alto.
Stevens State.
Syracuse Daily Orange.
Daily Texan.
University of Toronto Varsity.
Tulane Weekly.
Union Concordiensis.
University of Washington Daily.
Wesleyan Argus.
Williams Record.
Wisconsin Daily Cardinal.
Yale Daily News.

More than 100,000 students and instructors are among the readers of the publications of the thirty-nine branches of the association, which are located in every section of the United States and Canada.

THE MAN-IN-THE-MOON COMES TO EARTH

MRS. HATTIE C. VAUGHAN, Issaquah, Washington

The Man-in-the-Moon carefully guided his airship to a safe landing, and then stepped out to begin the study of—to him—a new world. Mr. Moon-Man pursued his investigations by himself for a time, but some of the conditions baffled his comprehension. For instance: There was a church on one of the beautiful, shaded streets. From the quiet seclusion of a retired pew he had listened to the urgent appeal of the speaker for a more vigorous warfare against wrong; voluntary service to root out evil; and a determined stand for the right. He had seen eyes kindle in response, and lips settle in firm resolve. Just around the corner, and but a stone's throw away, he had watched, from a darkened entrance opposite. a gilded, luring den of vice. Out from its doorway came inflamed, vacant-eyed and crime-marked souls.

These were things he could not understand. In his dilemma he thought of a man of whom he had heard much since his advent to this new world. He must certainly be a person possessed of great knowledge, to be thus looked up to. Yes, he would interview Mr. Public Opinion.

After introduction, Mr. Moon-Man began:

"Sir, I hear that this is a free country?"

"Yes, indeed, and we are proud of the fact!"

"Will you tell me just what the word 'free' means? May people all do as they please?"

"Yes,—well—that is if it's not something wrong."

"Oh! Then they do as they please if it's right, but not as they please if it's wrong?"

"I never heard it stated that way, but I think that's about it."

"Well, who has the authority to say what is right and what is wrong?"

"They vote on it."

"Oh, I see! So they all vote, and the side that has the most votes comes out ahead?"

"Well, of course, only Americans vote—or the ones from other countries who have been naturalized, thus becoming citizens. Criminals and the insane, however, cannot vote."

"Is that fellow we see over on the corner a citizen?"

"The colored boot-black, you mean? That's Tim Mason. Oh, yes, he can vote. He's native born."

"Educated?"

"Bless you, no; he can't write his name. Many of them can, but not he. Now that fellow you see going down the street—that is Tony Civiri, who runs a saloon on Lowdown street. He can vote because he's got his papers."

"He doesn't look as if he knew how to vote."

"He knows which side his bread is buttered on."

"Look at that fine lady in the automobile. Can she vote?"

"Well, if there isn't the governor's wife. She's the first lady in the state. She can't vote, though."

"Surely she's not too illiterate?"

"Illiterate! I should say not! Why, she's a college graduate, and a lawyer besides."

"Foreign born, is she?"

"No, indeed."

"Surely not a criminal?"

"What are you talking about! She's a fine Christian lady."

"Has she any children, or property?"

"Both."

"And do you mean to tell me she can have no say about the laws that govern her children, and her property?"

"Well, being a woman, of course she can't vote, but she may use her influence."

"Do I understand that Tim Mason and Tony Civiri can dictate the environments of this lady's children and home, and that she can have no voice in the matter?"

"Well, yes, for you see they're men."

"I do see they are dressed in men's clothes!"

"They're citizens."

"I conclude from your remarks, then, that citizenship is not determined by nationality, intelligence, morality, or color, but by sex. If that is your idea of right I think I do not care to stay," and disgusted, Mr. Moon-Man flew away home.

THE WOMAN WITH THE HOE

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

The term "farm woman" has a different meaning now in the warring nations of Europe where "the woman with the hoe" has made her appearance in large numbers, and the burden of war falls most heavily upon women.

Without doubt the women with the hoe are playing a considerable part in keeping Europe on its feet while most of the men folk (and chiefly the young and able-bodied) are busy endeavoring to kill each other.

Even in neutral countries the burden is tremendous. From Holland (where the soldiers are mobilized to be ready in case of invasion) has come the word: "The men are well cared for. They are fed, clothed, housed and given medical attendance by the government and eight cents a day pocket money to boot." With the women it is another story. A farmer's wife may have young children to care for; she must still do the spring ploughing. The shopkeepers' wives must keep their shops. When application is made for it, the wife of a soldier in the militia receives a guilder a day (forty cents) but even with this official assistance there are still thousands of cases of hideous misery."

With the war continuing for at least the current season of farming and harvesting, there is a big load of labor placed on the backs of women on the farms. Farm women abroad, in addition to being farm home-makers and child trainers, are forced to take up the additional and unusual burden of practical agriculture in order that their families may be fed and clothed and provision made for the winter.

Conditions in Great Britain are indicative of those in other lands, where war's death toll and the departure of men for the battle fields of Europe have made necessary the employment of women as farm laborers. Many of these are drawn from the ranks of domestic service, which has been hardest hit by the war. Most of the families, especially those of France and other warring European nations, reduced the wages of household helpers during the first week of mobilization, and many were discharged.

When the British government circular (issued by the British Cabinet through the board of trade) urged all government departments to replace, wherever possible, men employes of military age with women, there was a quick response by women eager to enter war service at home. The government labor exchange was for the first time opened to women who had hitherto been barred because of sex. By the first of April the number of women applicants registered had reached 33,000 and since then it has been greatly increased. Among this number are several thousand who have registered with the board of trade for special service during the war, in the various branches of agricultural work, as gardeners, and in dairy work. The British government has arranged to give women willing and qualified to undertake dairy or agricultural work a fortnight's training in agricultural colleges, paying them meanwhile five dollars a week living allowance.

Various districts have taken up the plan of the use of women as farm laborers during the war. Special short courses of instruction in farm work for women are being held at a number of agricultural colleges and farm institutes under the auspices of the local chamber of Agriculture and the Education Committee. In one district, Gloucestershire, it has been proposed to fix the rate of wage for women laborers at $3.65 a week for those "living out" and at $1.95 to $2.19 a week for those "living in" (receiving board).

The government has fixed the salary of women in farm and other work at the same rate as that of men on piece work. But no regulation has been made for women in regular employment who are getting much less than was paid men for the same work, advantage being taken of their necessity. The English Board of Agriculture has reported a shortage of 170,000 men farm hands in England, Scotland and Wales. In Cheshire, Dorset and Berks dairy farms, women hands are already in service, receiving from $3.50 to $5.00 per week. One feature of their work is the daily drive to the station with milk and the milk delivery to customers, which is done chiefly by women in Ireland.

Women have helped to plant the potato crop and have engaged in truck gardening in several counties including Essex, Norfolk, and Lincolnshire.

The English Agricultural Board has also introduced a new practice, that of sending out high school and college girls to the country districts to do the haymaking, declaring, "If a girl were trained to drive a mowing machine, the work of the hayfield might well be done entirely by women."

It is generally recognized that Great Britain's farm crops like those of the European continent would be sickly affairs this year were it not for the work that the willing women are doing in the fields.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

"LET US RENEW OUR TRUST IN GOD AND GO FORWARD"

MRS. ROSS HAYES-SCHACHNER

When the October Y. P. B. edition of THE UNION SIGNAL reaches you the forty-second annual Convention of the National W. C. T. U. will have adjourned and the part the Young People's Branch had in the success of the year will have been made known. As I write, I am hoping that the members of our Branch appreciate to the full extent the blessed privilege they enjoy. To be a part of so great and so altogether altruistic a body of women is a signal honor from the hand of God.

In this day of social activity, service is like a great wheel, with consecration as the hub and the various lines of endeavor as the spokes. We can but feel that just now there is a central spoke in the social wheel around which all others revolve—the spoke which represents the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition. We know that with the annihilation of the liquor traffic will come a mighty impetus to all the other spokes in the wheel. What an important line of activity, then, you have elected to pursue. You are now practically launched on another Y. P. B. year of work and I give you, by way of admonition, these words of Lincoln: "Having chosen our course, let us renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts."

With the reading of the report of the Young People's Branch for the past year there should come to you the knowledge that the great movement for temperance and prohibition among young people is not confined to any particular locality, nor to city nor country. I hold fast to a vision of a great line of earnest, zealous, enthusiastic young people stretching from shore to shore, representing the young people fresh from school and college, the young men and young women already engaged in business, the fine specimens of young manhood and young womanhood which come from the farms of the land, those, too, who have not exactly leisure but unlimited time to serve, and even those in institutions where fortune has placed them but where God inspires them—all, with service written large in their lives and shining from their faces, marching under the white banner of purity and right. And I hold the vision of that line some day surrounding the Capitol at Washington. What a great day that will be! You who are already enlisted should not fail to go out at once and recruit others that they, too, may feel the pulse of conflict and the joy of service, for the line is swiftly marching on.

Another secretary will lead you next year and my sincerest wish is that her faith in the young people may grow as mine has grown. I pass on to her a duty which has been a joy—a responsibility which has been an uplift. I could not frame a message so complete and so inspiring as the one left us by that departed leader and lover of young people, Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens—"Let us never lose sight of the fact that God is in the forefront of every conflict leading the hosts of right against the citadels of wrong. The call comes to us with renewed emphasis that WE GO FORWARD."

"Y. P. B. Special" Wins in Trip to Seattle

The general secretary is most pleased to give the following account of the successful working of "The Trip to Seattle," (the plan for which she outlined in the February UNION SIGNAL) furnished by Miss Alice J. Kester of the local Branch:

"The Millville (Pa.) Y. P. B. adopted the plan for the 'Trip to Seattle' and chose the 'Y. P. B. Special' and the 'Prohibition Whirlwind' as the trains. After selecting engineers, conductors and firemen for each train from among the members the others were divided into equal companies as passengers. The trip began the middle of March. It is 2,930 miles from Millville to Seattle. We followed the directions in THE SIGNAL except that we allowed seventy-five miles instead of fifty for new members. Sometimes one train was ahead and sometimes another. At each stop we had some one give an account of the place and surrounding country, which was exceedingly interesting and instructive.

"We reached Seattle in August, the 'Y. P. B. Special' being the first to reach its destination. It was, therefore, up to the 'Whirlwind' to furnish the banquet which it did September 28. It had been planned to have it on the lawn, but it poured and so it was necessary to hold it in the church. It was a splendid success, about seventy-five being present. It so happened that one of the passengers on the 'Whirlwind' had made the trip, going to the Exposition, also, and he gave an excellent toast on the subject. We also had a toast on 'Suffrage' and one on 'The Temperance Question,' reviewing the subject from 1865 to 1915. These, together with the supper, made a most enjoyable evening.

"We gained sixteen new members and created sentiment as we could have done in no other way. I hope the return trip will be insisted upon as it is an excellent idea. We interested those who had previously cared nothing for Y. P. B. work. We may make the return trip after the convention and by invitation take visitors with us.

"Altogether we think it the best thing the Y. P. B. has ever tried."

PRINCETON PRESIDENT SPEAKS

In a letter recently published in the Alumni Weekly, President John Grier Hibben of Princeton University makes a strong appeal to the alumni to discontinue liquor at their class gatherings. He says:

"I am profoundly convinced that the time has come for the alumni to consider most seriously the advisability of a general movement to discontinue the free serving of beer in the reunion tents. We must not allow Princeton to fall behind the conspicuous movements of the age in which we live. The spirit of self-restraint and self-control as regards drinking has grown so rapidly both abroad and in this country during the last year that it would be well for us to face the facts as they are and endeavor to create through a free and frank discussion a strong Princeton sentiment on this question. From my own observation and from letters which I have received from true and sincere friends of Princeton since commencement time, I am convinced that the fair name and honor of Princeton are at stake, and that we, as Princeton men, must see clear and think straight on this subject.

"I am writing this letter not merely in my official capacity, but also as an alumnus and as the president of the class of 1882, and speaking as one who has had for the past years a share in the responsibility of the conduct of our own class reunions.

"I wish to bring this matter to the very thoughtful consideration of all class presidents and secretaries who are contemplating reunions during the commencement of 1916."

TOBACCO AND CANCER

In an article having to do with cancer, its cause and cure, Dr. William A. Evans, in The Chicago Tribune, calls attention to the part which tobacco plays in producing cancer. He says in part:

"Among the more important cancers are those of the mouth—the lips, the tongue, and the gums. A large part of the cancers are located in these organs. Therefore, when a man of authority says that cancer of the lip and tongue is needless, should not be and, furthermore, tells how it can be prevented, we are disposed to listen to what he says and some of us will act on the advice.

"Dr. Robert Abbe says in the New York Medical Journal that in this country cancer of the tongue, nine times out of ten, is chargeable to tobacco. The most of the other tenth come from rough teeth, though a few cases are due to hot, burning drinks. Of cancer inside the cheek, thirteen out of 100 cases investigated resulted from the use of tobacco, many from the habit of holding a small quid between the teeth and the cheek. The irritation from the teeth is the leading cause of cancer on the inside of the cheek.

"Practically all the lip cancers are the result of smoking. Pipe smokers are more subject to lip cancer than are cigar or cigaret smokers. Women rarely have lip cancer.

"In 100 cases of cancer of the mouth investigated by Dr. Abbe, thirty-six were on the tongue; fifteen on the cheek; twenty-one on the gums; fourteen on the lip; fourteen in the throat. Ten were in women; ninety in men. The men were all heavy smokers.

"Dr. Abbe's experience is that of every other man. He has given his opinion to a great many smokers. Each smoker told of the danger is certain it does not apply in his case. 'Here am I, a heavy smoker for twenty years, and no trouble.' This means that the thing must be said and resaid until it is heeded."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

AN APPEAL FROM SOUTH AMERICA

MAY THERE BE HEARTY RESPONSE

My Dear Friends:

This letter about the work of the young people of South America is especially designed to arouse your interest in their behalf.

True to my promise, I began my work with the young people of Montevideo soon after my arrival, and though regular monthly meetings with the women and children and scientific talks to thousands of children in the public schools have occupied much of my time, yet the work that I have felt to be the most worth while has been that among the young men and women of our Scientific Club.

We opened with a social, when Bacchus, converted, served a temperance drink to more than three hundred. Since that social last February, we have had regular monthly meetings with from one hundred and fifty to four hundred in attendance. Some prominent doctors and professors have delivered splendid lectures. We have had debates and concerts but the special feature of every meeting has been a model scientific lesson for the children—all present playing children, and thoroughly enjoying the lessons which were given by the dearest little woman I have ever known, the superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction. Sra. Minnie Gattinomi is her name. She is an English woman, wife of the native pastor, and mother of six children. In spite of her many home and church duties she finds time for the temperance work because her heart is thoroughly in it.

We call the union a "Scientific Club." Ninety were enrolled as charter members; since then the number has grown to 200. All of these are not, however, pledged abstainers. We invited those who were interested in the temperance cause, and who would help to promote it in every way possible to unite with us.

I am glad to say that the young people have most faithfully aided me in preparing attractive programs for our social and philanthropic gatherings, and are rendering especially valuable service in our temperance mass meetings in the penitentiary. They prepare pretty choruses and recitations and help to secure flowers and plants for the prisoners. When I tell you that never before has any diversion for the prisoners been allowed in the republic, you will not be surprised to hear of the tears of gratitude, and poems, and "discursos," and notes of thanks with which I am being deluged. The newspapers, too, write most flattering articles about our good work. Of the four hundred inmates three hundred and twenty have signed for total abstinence for life, most of them affirming, "Had we only been led to do this in childhood we would never have committed the horrible crimes which brought us here." The young people are so delighted with the work and the result that they are begging to visit all the prisons and correctional schools. I have a government permit to do so, but as yet have only found the time to visit three, one for men, the penitentiary for women, and the correctional school for five hundred girls. Our scientific literature was well received in all these institutions, our charts placed upon the walls and the promise given that the teachers would give the lessons to the inmates.

Dr. Joaquin Salterain, one of the most distinguished men of the republic, and the senator who presented a sweeping bill for prohibition some years ago, has consented to serve as honorary president of the Scientific Club, and to deliver a lecture for us. We are told that his name and influence are worth much in the republic, because of his high social standing, his literary ability, and wide reputation as the founder of the Anti-Tuberculosis League. We are elated at the thought of having him for president and are hoping for great good and a permanent organization which will command national respect through his influence. Other prominent senators and doctors have promised to co-operate with us. Dr. Salterain's charming wife went with me to the penitentiary three Sundays ago, and presented to each of the prisoners who had written to me a copy of her husband's poems.

The vegetarians of Uruguay, who have formed a "Liga Popular Anti Alcoholica," have volunteered to affiliate with our Scientific Club, and to pay their dues to the World's organization. Their president, Prof. Valeta, has lectured for us (and a magnificent lecture it was). He has published a fine booklet on "The Evils of Alcohol" and offers to us the columns of his tri-monthly magazine.

In reporting this larger organization I must not fail to tell you of our smaller, yet extremely interesting Y. P. B.—"Helping Hand Club" as they call themselves—all pledged abstainers who are doing a beautiful work.

The Branch came into existence in this way: Seeing so much poverty, and longing to aid in some way, as well as to advance the interests of our temperance cause, I proposed to the older girls of the Crandon Institute that we should give a temperance concert for the benefit of the poor. They and their parents agreed, several public school teachers co-operated with us and the concert was pronounced a great success. The public was so pleased with the rose drill, which I taught the Crandon girls, that they were invited to repeat it on four occasions, once for the benefit of the Y. M. C. A., once for their school, and twice for the poor.

The week following our first concert, the girls met to discuss how best to use our money. When one of them said, "Why can't we go on doing good all the time?" the others chimed in, "We will if Miss Norville will help us." I assured them that it was the thing I most desired to do, so a permanent organization was formed before we parted with seventeen charter members. The membership now numbers thirty, with several young men as honorary members. All are most enthusiastic workers. Since its organization the Branch has met every week to sew for the poor. On Christmas day these fine young girls, who had never before denied themselves pleasures for the sake of others, gave a beautiful "fiesta" for two hundred poor children, having worked like Trojans for days that the Christmas tree, the booths, and everything might be attractive. When putting on the finishing touches on Christmas eve, one of them, Rachel Vasquez, a beautiful young girl just blossoming into young womanhood, said: "They think we are babies, but we will show them that we can do something." And they did surprise everybody. After an interesting program they distributed toys, bags of candy, garments, and sacks of groceries to mothers that they had visited and found to be most needy and worthy. Then we adjourned to the patio, which had been beautifully decorated with flags and flowers, and served refreshments. When our grateful guests were retiring, the flower committee placed a jessamine or rose in the hand of each one. I'm not sure who were the happier that afternoon, the givers or the receivers.

Let me tell you this little story about the influence of Senorita Maria Carlota More Franco, who is at the head of the young people's society. Wine had always been taken in her home, and she had never signed the pledge. The day after she was elected president of the Branch she went to school wearing her white ribbon and urging the other girls to join in the good work. A few days later her little brother came running to meet me, saying, "I want to sign the pledge for always, and my mama says I'm not big enough. Don't you think I am?" I told him that I was just his age (eight years) when I signed the pledge with my little boy friend whose father was a drunkard, and said: "You tell your mama that I knew then just as well as I know now what I was doing—I was trying to help my little friend." He said, "All right, you bring my badge tomorrow." The next morning he came running to meet me, his happy face telling the tale before he had breath to cry out: "She said yes, and you may put her name down for a year. She is going to try it, too." Sra. More Franco, led by her children, has been a regular attendant upon our W. C. T. U. meetings since then.

A word about literature: It is my continued cry, my friends. I do need so much more than I have for the advancement of our cause. If the good people only realized the absolute dearth of all helps down here, I am sure they would at least send me some of the old literature they throw away. All that I have had for this great big continent during the past year would not be considered sufficient for a campaign in a little town of 1,000 inhabitants in the States. The people are not sufficiently interested to give of their means during these hard times, and I am compelled to ask those who really have the work at heart to help me to get a few leaflets put into Spanish.

The Y. P. B. literature is very attractive. The pamphlets, "A Word to the Y's of the World," and a "Brief Sketch of the Life of Frances Willard," would be most useful down here. I could easily place two hundred copies of each of them right away where I think they would bring forth fruit, and if I only had them in Spanish, I could place 1,000 each in the hands of young women in the universities and colleges who are just beginning to awaken, and to realize that they may have a part in the glorious uplift movement of the world. They would eagerly devour such reading and profit by it. Is it too much to ask the interest of the Y. P. B.'s of the United States in the publication of these two helps? I can get them translated, but I have not the funds for printing. Everything is shockingly high here. When I showed the Y. P. B. literature to a printer yesterday, he said that the paper alone for one copy of the "Sketch of Frances Willard's Life" would cost him thirty cents. The young people could not possibly put their money where it is more needed, and I confidently believe where it would bring forth a more abundant harvest. That God will turn the hearts of our dear young people towards the undeveloped, yet thoroughly worthy young people of South America is my earnest prayer.

HARDYNIA K. NORVILLE
Calle San Martin 245, Buenos Aires, Argentina

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, October 14, 1915

ATTENTION!

The October Campaign Edition will be a combination number, under dates of October 21 and 28 and will be issued Thursday, October 28. Report of the Seattle Convention will be given in the issues of November 4, 11, 18. The price is 10 cents for the three numbers, and we urge the placing of advance orders.

WHITE RIBBON SPECIAL LEAVES FOR SEATTLE

With great enthusiasm, and filled with the joy of conquest, two hundred and fifty delegates to the National W. C. T. U. Convention left Chicago at 7:15 on the evening of October 5 bound for Seattle, Washington. Fifty more white ribboners joined the party at Omaha. When this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL reaches our subscribers, the great Convention will already have adjourned and the National General Officers and other members of the Executive Committee with many of the delegates will be on their way to California where they will visit the Panama-Pacific and San Diego Expositions and attend the meeting of the National Temperance Council at San Francisco.

CHICAGO'S GREAT DRY PARADE

The greatest temperance demonstration that Chicago or the state of Illinois ever witnessed occurred Saturday, October 9, at two o'clock in the afternoon, when thousands of prohibition advocates of all creeds and predilections fell into line in a mammoth parade and marched over two miles to show their sympathy with the mighty cause of temperance. Further mention of this demonstration will appear in a later issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

QUESTIONS EASILY ANSWERED

The difficulty and even impossibility of finding arguments against woman suffrage is the trying experience of the editors of papers who have opposed the movement and are not big enough to admit that they were wrong. They are thus forced into making absurd statements. A case in point is the Rochester Post Express which argued that it would be the height of folly to confer the vote on women and idiocy to crowd it on them before they want it, and to support this statement asked the following questions: "Has woman ever contributed anything of value to government or to the science of government; to law-making or to law-enforcement? Does woman know anything that man does not about running nations, cities, states? Why employ two persons to do a job when one of them knows as much as both and can do the work as well? Have we not enough voters already who vote on questions vital to the general welfare ignorantly, acting on the ideas of other people or as they are told by men in politics, for pelf?"

The mere propounding of such medieval queries reveals a deplorable ignorance of history. Has the gentleman forgotten the remarkable reigns of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria, and the influence of other notable women in the European courts? But to come nearer home, the Rochester editor needs to be reminded that the tremendous wave of prohibition that has been sweeping the country, adding ten prohibition states during the past twelve months, is conceded to be in very large part due to the laws in every state of the nation providing for the teaching of scientific temperance in the public schools, and these laws were placed on the statute books of the forty-eight states by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. If the history of the laws relating to child labor, the age of consent, anti-vice and similar provisions could be traced, it would be found that some woman or group of women was back of them in every instance.

And so the New York editor questions whether women have contributed anything toward law-making or law-enforcement. One might quote pages to show that his estimate of the "weaker" sex is not shared by the statesmen of the last twenty-five years. It was a Congressman of Frances Willard's own state who said of her, "She possessed legislative qualities which in a statesman would have made his name historic." She made purer the moral atmosphere of a continent—almost a world. She rendered the life of a nation cleaner, the mind of a people saner."

When Lillian M. N. Stevens went to the other world, a member of Congress declared, "She has contributed more enduring and constructive service to the greatest cause in the world than has any man or woman I have ever known." Of one of our National leaders who has gone from us during the past year, Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, Governor Capper of Kansas spoke thus: "Her name is ineffaceably written in the history of prohibition and law-enforcement in this state and in the nation." To that great "general" of the Tennessee white ribboners who has just gone from us, Silena M. Holman, ex-Governor Hooper paid the tribute, "As a builder of a better state I honor her name; as the once trusted counselor of my official conduct I remember her with gratitude."

As to the question, "Do women know anything that men do not about running nations, cities or states?" one hesitates to answer with a negative or an affirmative. Men may have known how to run cities much better than they have demonstrated, but as a matter of fact there is overwhelming evidence to prove that the women have really done a great deal of admirable work in improving conditions in cities which however great may have been the knowledge of the men citizens, they never attempted or accomplished. To illustrate by reference to one striking personality outside of our organization (which by the way could furnish hundreds): The work of Jane Addams, familiarly known as "the first citizen of Chicago" in inaugurating and carrying forward movements for better sanitation and housing, the exposure of vice, the defeat of corrupt politicians and the securing of laws for ameliorating the conditions of women workers and the protection of girls, has not been equaled by any man. Enterprises of a similar character have been "mothered" in almost every city of the United States by the W. C. T. U.

To the Rochester editor's question, "Have we not enough voters already who vote on questions vital to the general welfare ignorantly, acting on the ideas of other people, or as they are told by men in politics, for pelf?" we can respond with a hearty affirmative although we consider it quite aside from the subject under discussion. If woman suffrage in the states where it has been tested has proved anything at all it is that women as a class are not bribable; that they are inclined to do their own thinking, and that they are basing that thinking on a careful study of the problems presented to them on election day. The large number of organizations for the study of civic problems that have sprung up during the last two years and their increasing popularity is proof that the women will use their ballots to decide the issues presented to them on their merits and will neither act on the ideas of other people nor listen to what men in politics may wish to tell them.

THE FINE ART OF BEING A GOOD CITIZEN

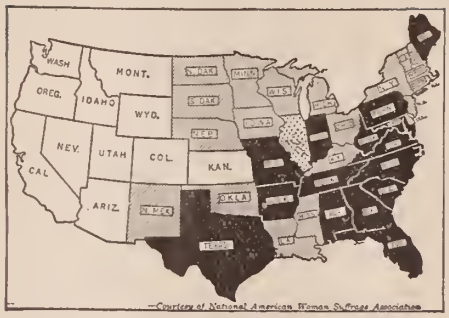
Serious consideration is being given by the National Bureau of Education to the establishing of courses in good citizenship in our public schools. A bulletin of the department explains that while civics are being taught in nearly every school and college, the study only familiarizes the pupil with the manipulation of the social machinery without impressing upon him the social ends for which the machinery should be used. "Consequently," says the bulletin, "the pupil upon leaving school uses his knowledge for ends which are most evident to him namely, his own selfish interests."

The movement is certainly timely, for while we are reminded every commencement season that the professions of law and medicine are overcrowded and that there is no room for the great army of young men and women who are turned out from the schools to practice these professions, we do not recall hearing any complaint that there is an oversupply of good citizens. Good citizenship is a profession—and why should it not be dignified by that name?—that is never overcrowded. At this moment there is room in the United States for a few million more good citizens doing steady work three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, and the compensation is the highest offered for any service—the satisfaction of doing a task that sorely needs to be done and the privilege of serving one's fellows. If the course suggested by the National Bureau of Education shall promote this work of training for good citizenship it will be of far-reaching value.

But many of our young people are barred from the privileges of colleges and cannot take advantage of these courses. An admirable agency to supplement work of this character is the Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Every Branch in a very practical sense should be a good citizenship center for the education and training of the young people of the community in the duties and obligations of citizenship. They should be made to realize

NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine
Kansas
Oklahoma
North Dakota
North Carolina
Georgia
Mississippi
Tennessee
Alabama
West Virginia
Virginia
Washington
Oregon
Colorado
Arizona
Iowa
Arkansas
Idaho
South Carolina



THIRTEEN SUFFRAGE STATES

Wyoming
Colorado
Idaho
Utah
Washington
California
Arizona
Kansas
Oregon
Alaska
Nevada
Montana
Illinois
New Jersey to Vote October 19

that the city of which they are a part stands in need of them and that they owe to it the best possible service. They should be enlisted in a campaign of investigation of the economic, social and moral conditions of their own community. They should discover for themselves the institutions that are harming it and that must be eliminated from the civic life. They should study the city from the standpoint of efficiency, seeking out what is responsible for the waste in human life, health, energy and money. The result of such original investigation cannot fail to be an enthusiastic advocacy of the cause which aims to do away with the greatest handicap of every state or nation, the legalized liquor traffic.

TEMPERANCE DAY AT THE PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION, OCTOBER 20

PARADE AND MEETING ON THE EXPOSITION GROUNDS

The National Temperance Council has arranged for a great Temperance day at the Panama Exposition, October 20. One of the most important features will be a parade and open air meeting on the Exposition grounds. Everybody interested in making this question one of live public interest will, of course, arrange to attend all the meetings, but especially to participate in the demonstration at the Exposition.

The parade will form at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon, October 20, inside the Fillmore gate and, escorted by Exposition officials and bands will proceed to the Court of Abundance. Here a commemoration medal will be presented by an Exposition official. Addresses will be delivered by Daniel A. Poling, president of the National Temperance Council and associate president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and others.

Conferences will be held in the morning at the First Congregational Church, San Francisco, beginning at ten o'clock. Live questions of practical scope will be discussed formally by conference leaders and informally by members of the conference. Some of the topics are "Education and Youth" by Mrs. Stella B. Irvine of California; "The Aims, Preparation and Use of Temperance Literature" by Rev. Irving Bristol of Sacramento; "Education by Exhibits" by Miss Edith M. Wills of Boston, who for three years has been in charge of the temperance exhibit of the Scientific Temperance Federation and this year is director of the exhibit of the Anti-Saloon League at the Panama Exposition.

Co-operation of temperance organizations will be discussed by Rev. D. M. Gandier of the California Anti-Saloon League and Mr. Harley Gill of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association.

In the evening a mass meeting will be held in the First Congregational Church, San Francisco, at eight o'clock. Mr. Daniel Poling will preside. Addresses will be given by Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Hon. George F. Cotterill, former mayor of Seattle, and one of the vice-presidents of the National Temperance Council.

October 20 is the only day on which the temperance question is officially recognized as one of the many great movements which have had a part in the Panama-Pacific Exposition program. It follows quite closely the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention at Seattle so that many delegates to the latter can avail themselves of this great opportunity.

Everybody in California and adjoining states who can possibly be in San Francisco at this time will make it a point not to miss any of the meetings which it is expected will make October 20 a great day.

CHICAGO'S FIRST DRY SUNDAY

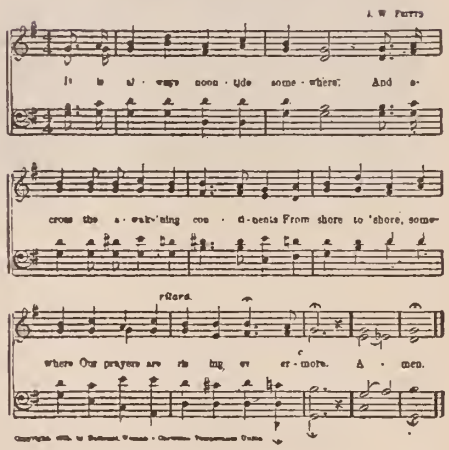
Mayor Thompson's edict ordering the strict enforcement of the Sunday closing law in Chicago brought to the city a new variety of Sunday, one highly gratifying to the law-abiding element of the population. On October 10, the date of the first try-out, 7,146 saloons were shut tight, only six failing to comply with the mayor's mandate.

"The closing order was wonderfully enforced," declared Chief of Police Healey, and police captains all over the city reported the quietest day in years, with almost no drunkenness and disorder. Only sixteen persons were arrested for drunkenness on Sunday, and on Saturday, the day of the big "Chicago Dry" parade, there were only forty-seven arrests for the same cause, making a total of sixty-three as compared with 243; the former average for these two days of the week. Throughout Sunday a note of triumph was sounded in the churches of the city and by those organizations which have long been working to secure the enforcement of this law which for nearly half a century has been on the statute books of the state of Illinois.

Premier Norris is said to have officially announced that the vote on prohibition in Manitoba will be taken next March, and if the referendum carries there will be no liquor licenses issued in the province after May 31, 1916.

Local merchants at Moorhead, Minnesota, estimate that since July 1, when the town outlawed the saloons, collections from families of laboring men have increased fifty per cent.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



MEDITATION CORNER

As we have . . . opportunity, let us do good unto all. Gal. 6:10.

Opportunities are swarming around us all the time, thicker than gnats at sundown. We walk through a cloud of them.
—Henry van Dyke.

Let the high praises of God be . . . a two edged sword in their hand. Ps. 149: 6.—How shall the praise of the Lord be a sword in my hand? It shall drive out, as an armed warrior, my doubts and gloom, and the doubts and gloom of those that hear me. It shall smite fear to the earth, and all worries. It shall slay despair. It shall cleave a way through the foes that most persistently oppose my progress,—the spiritual wickedness in high places!—Amos R. Wells.

One of the greatest of chemical discoverers, M. Berthelot, pressed on the attention of scientists the question of the possibility of tapping the central heat of the earth and making use of it as a perennial source of energy. If this should ever come to pass there will be power enough for all possible purposes. . . . But revelation shows a far grander thing; it shows how the central blue has been tapped, and how the fullness of the heavenly power has become available for the moral uses of man. . . . Let me not then faint. With the power of Christ perfected in my weakness, I am equal to every temptation, competent for every duty, equipped for every struggle, the master of every fear.—W. L. Watkinson.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY MEETS IN EVANSTON

Evanston has been the mecca the past week of 1,200 delegates to the annual meeting of the Northwestern Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mrs. Edwin R. Graham of Evanston was unanimously re-elected president.

STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION CALENDAR

Alabama, Birmingham, Oct. 26-28.
Georgia, Covington, Oct. 26-29.
Arkansas, Forrest City, Oct. 27-31.
Louisiana, Alexandria, Oct. 30-Nov. 2.
Massachusetts, Northampton, Nov. 2-4.
Florida, Orlando, Nov. 9-12.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

NOVEMBER 14—World's Temperance Sunday.

ACTING TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND

FRANCES P. PARKS

The following contributions to this fund have been received since last report, in each case $2 unless otherwise specified:

District of Columbia No. 2: $2.
South Idaho: $19.50
Virginia: $18.
Oklahoma: $4.
Utah: $11.20.
Massachusetts: $317.20.
Montana: $10.
East Washington: $6.
Wyoming: $3.
Tennessee: $5.25, Winchester, Jackson, Trezervant. Total $11.25.
District of Columbia: $24.
Colorado: $8.
Illinois: $197.49.
North Dakota: $43.
Tennessee No. 2: $2.

Pennsylvania: Arendtsville, Crafton, Scott, Sharpsburg, Mt. Washington, Coraopolis, Hazel Glenn, Douglas $1, Friendship, Dayton, Aliquippa $1, Ambridge, Beaver, Patterson Heights, West Bridgewater, Rochester, Kutztown, Altoona, Duncansville $1, Athens, Canton, East Athens, Plains L. T. L. $1, Graham Terrace, Plains Butler Co. $4, Chicora, Evans City, Van Ormer, Dale $1, Wetherby, Phoenixville, Oxford, Miola $1, Clarion, Rimersburg, Strattonville, Dubois Y, Osceola $1, Catawissa, Berwick, Lemoyne, Newville, Steelton, Hummelstown, Hubert, Concord, Trainer $1, Frances Harper $1, Bethel, Rutledge-Mort L. T. L. $1, Bell Vernon, Buena Vista, Connellsville, Fairchance Y. P. B., Laurel Hill, Mill Run, Perryopolis, Pt. Marion, St. Connellsville $1, Uniontown, Marienville, Endeavor, Carmichaels, Mt. Morris, Pine Bank, Brave, Brock, Kirby, Centennial, Waynesburg, Orbisonia, Dudley, Mt. Union, Shirleysburg, Saltsburg $.40, Sykesville $4, Brookville, Cottage Union, Coolspring, Chestnut Grove, Big Run, Westville, Summerville, Punxsutawney, Port Royal, Carbondale, Scranton (West Side), East Earl, New Providence, Plain Grove, Macungie $1, Plains, Wilkes Barre (Anna Gordon), Jersey Shore (No. 1), Crosby, Custer City $1, Port Allegany, Bradford (Willard), Yeagerstown, Vira, Reedsville, Fredonia $1, Milroy, Ellen Chapel $.50, Belleville, Delaware Water Gap, Poplar Valley $.50, Middle Smithfield, East Stroudsburg, Worcester, Conshohocken, East Bangor $1, Dewart, Mt. Carmel, Elliottsburg, Mills $.50, Gordon $1.50, Selinsgrove $1, Sorrentown, Auburn Four Corners, Lebanon, Mansfield, Wellsboro $2.50, Liberty $1, Lawrenceville $.80, Elkland $.95, Tioga, Covington, Fallston, Smith's Ferry & Midland, New Brighton, Beaver Falls, Waynesburg (F. E. W.), Mifflinburg, East Branch $1, Glade Run $1, South Canaan, Branch $1, Jeanette, New Alexandria, Lemon, Allegheny, Oil City, Oil City S. S., Rocky Grove, Rouseville, Rockland, Reno, Siverly, Willard, Oil City Y. P. B. $.50, Willow Grove, Mary Schick (Adams County), York Springs, Gettysburg, Bendersville, Homewood, Swift, Queenstown, Leechburg, Kaylor, Manorville, Kittaning, Olivet, West Glade Run $.25, Bedford Union, Schellsburg, New Paris Union, Mohnton Union, Willard Memorial (Berks County), Lillian Stevens (Berks County), Stauffer, Mohrsville, North East, Towanda Y. P. B. $2.08, Newtown Y. P. B. $1, Connoquessing, Brouchton, Center Hall Y. P. B., Russelville, Cochranville, Oklahoma, Flemington, Lock Haven, Avis, Renovo, Millville W., Bloomsburg, Orangeville, Millville Y. P. B. $1, Enola, Harrisburg, E. Harrisburg, Penbrook, Highspire, Meede Y., Clifton, Middletown, Linwood, Lansdowne, Rutledge, Morton, Wayne, Chester, Swartzmore $3.50, Upper Darby, Broad St., Media $2.05, Darby $5, Union City, Jessie Ackerman (Erie County), Corry $1, Juneau, Clark Summit, Fleetville, Lancaster County Y. P. B. $9.53, Columbia, Ephrata, Landisville and Salunga, Ellwood City $3.50, Croton, South New Castle, Scotland, Willard Memorial (Lawrence County), Mahoningtown, Harlansburg, New Castle, Volant, Slippery Rock, Nassua, Allentown, Emaus, Somerset, Trinity, F. E. Willard (Lehigh County), West Pittston, Freeland, Pittston $2.50, Springfield, West Middlesex, Collegeville, Bryn Mawr $5, Lansdale, Norristown, Bridgeport $1, Port Providence, White Marsh, Willard (Montgomery County), Milton, Shamokin, McEwensville $1, Watsontown, Sunbury, West Philadelphia, L. M. N. Stevens (Philadelphia), Frankford, German, Franklin, Faithful, North Philadelphia, Berean, Tioga, Harriet S. French $5, Andrews Settlement, Austin, Cloudersport, Ellisburg, Galeton, Genesee, Harrison Valley, Shinglehouse, Ulysses, Pottsville, Mahoney City, Shenandoah, Ashland, Schuylkill Haven, Beavertown $1.20, Middleburg, Salisbury, Confluence, Meyersdale, Franklin Forks, Kingsley, Springville, Canonsburg, Gravity, Pleasant Valley, White Mills, Hamlin, Legonier, Meshoppen Falls, Rockwood, Somerset, Ford City $1.50. Total $576.26.

Wisconsin: Mt. Horeb, Carter, Neenah, Plattsville, Springville, Sun Prairie, Westfield, Sparta $1. Total $15.

New York: Almond, Nile, Cuba, Canaseraga, Richburg $3, Richburg Y. P. B. $1, Scio, Endicott L. T. L. $.50, Vestal Centre, Afton, New Berlin, Earlville $1, Clavetack, Copake, East Chatham, Hudson, Livingston, Philmont, Cortland Y. P. B. $1, Sidney W., Rhinebede W. $1, Akron, Buffalo, Niagara $7, Elizabethtown, Bombay, Fort Connington, Moira, Elba, Linden, Oak Field, Pavilion, Stafford $10, Hensonville, Bwohlyn Y. P. B. $1, Chittenango Y. P. B $1, Nelson $5, West Webster, Ames Y. P. B., Olcott L. T. L. $1, Middleport, Tuscarora, Wilson Y. P. B., Wright's Corners, East Syracuse Y. P. B. $1, Eastwood Y. P. B. $1, Marcellus Y. P. B. $1, Syracuse Central City, West End, Hizpah $1, Canandaigua, Honeoye, Reed Corners, South Bristol, South Farmington $1, Highland Falls Y. P. B. $1, Medina Y. P. B. $3, Sandy Creek Y. P. B. $1.25, Springfield Center Y. P. B., Corona, Hillsville, Lynbrook, Maspeth Y. P. B., Whitestone Y. P. B. $1, Queens-Nassau W. C. T. U. $6, Pottersville $1, West Glens Falls, Bloomfield, Mariners Harbor, New Springfield, Port Richmond, Pleasant Plaines, Prohibition Park, Central, Stapleton, Tottenville, Thacher, West New Brighton, Glenville, Pattersonville, Niskagina, Schenectady, Sailors Snug Harbor, F. E. Willard, Mount Pleasant, Scotia, Alton Y. P. B. $1, Red Creek West, Bridgeport, Fayette, Interlaken, Junius $3, Ovid, Seneca Falls, Tyre, Varick, Corning, Haskinsville, Kanona $5, Savona, Wallace Brookton Y. P. B. $1, Coddington Road Y. P. B. $1, West Groton Y. P. B., Kennedy's Corners, Lake Ridge, Nigers $1, Varna, Gardner, Milton, Marlboro L. T. L. $1, Sharvauguick Y. P. B., Katonah, Fort Plain, Bath (Co. H. S. & S. Home), Mahopac Falls, Medina L. T. L. $.25, Transit L. T. L. $.25, Delta, Verona, Niagara Falls, Willard, Peddleton $3, Culvert Road L. T. L. $.25, Broad Albin $.50, North Ridge, Middleville, West Frankfort $3, Beacon East Side $1, Cincuinaters, Homer $1, Virgil, Malta, Mechanicsville, Round Lake, Saratoga Springs, Dauby, Forest Home L. T. L. $.85, West Groton, Cold Springs L. T. L., Patterson L. T. L., Amsterdam, Canajohasse, Charlestown, Four Corners, Currytown, Rual Grove, Mulngs Corners, Highland $1, Flackville $1, Maine $1, Fillmore, Lockwood, Smithboro $1, Busti, Gerry Y. P. B. $1, Niobe, Sherman, Buffalo (South Side), Carmel L. T. L. $2.50, Plattsburgh, Schuyler Falls, West Chazy $1, East Auburn, East Auburn L. T. L., Montezuma $.25; Port Byron, Pulaski, Pendleton $.50, Canaan, Craryville $1, Martindale, South Danby L. T. L. $1, Argyle $3, Shushan, Decatur, Hartwich, Milford, Worcester, Geneva $5, Mohawk, Keck Center, Lebanon, North Brookfield, North Cohocton and Atlanta, Cornwall, East Leptondale, Highland Falls, Fort Montgomery, Pine Bush, Lamont $1, New Albion $1, Cossayuna $1. Total $347.10.

COLORADO'S "JUBILEE" CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

"Nothing succeeds like success." Never was this epigram more fully justified than at the "Jubilee" convention of Colorado W. C. T. U. held in Denver September 22-24. Never before has it been quite so apparent that the stage of unpopularity is passed and that we are riding now on the flood-tide of popular approval, as having "made good" at last in rum-ridden Colorado—a mining and cow-boy and tourist state with over 50,000 more men voters than women voters.

This popularity is evinced not alone by increasing attendance of outsiders and increasing space given us in the daily papers, but by the fact that mayors and other public men are no longer "suddenly called out of town" on Welcome Night. The "first lady of Colorado," Mrs. Carlson, wife of the governor, referred with pride to her white ribbon as she addressed the convention. The popular president of the big Denver Woman's Club, Mrs. Mabel Costigan, was also glad to display her kinship under the little bow.

But such is the fiber of the women who have brought these things to pass through long years of faith and patient toil that their heads are not turned by prosperity, neither do they rest on their oars.

Mrs. Bradbury of the Eighth district struck the keynote of the prevalent feeling, when in response to a call upon the district presidents for "A Backward Glimpse and a Forward Look," she said: "Our backward glimpse is toward loyalty and stick-to-itiveness and our forward look to keeping it up."

Trinity M. E. church, where the first Denver National Convention was held, housed the Colorado convention this year and those of us who were present then could almost see in retrospect the faces of Frances Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Woodbridge—and the long list of dear, familiar faces that looked down upon us from the platform during those notable days. Who of us then expected to live to see a "dry Colorado" and National and World-wide Prohibition in sight? Truly, as Mrs. Costigan said in her address of welcome, "We have lived to see the impossible become possible and our dreams come true!"

The morning meetings were, as usual, devoted chiefly to reports and routine business, but even these were enlivened by occasional "original stunts"—as our secretary termed them. Notable among them were those used to present our state and National papers, viz; "An Original Playlette," in which Mrs. Cora White represented the mother engrossed with her UNION SIGNAL and Mrs. Hobart Johnston made a charming little daughter who sang the praises of her beloved Young Crusader, and a fair, white-robed angel—no other than Mrs. Stella Clans, president of Canon City union—appeared to anxious seekers after knowledge with copies of the state Messenger folded under her wings.

Wednesday afternoon, besides the "Forward Looks" of district presidents and honor unions, Miss Mabel Eigler of Denver gave the reading "Wanted—Manhood," with which she won the diamond medal, and a number of distinguished guests were introduced, among them ex-Judge Campbell of the Supreme court, ex-Judge Harry Riddle, a prohibition campaigner, Allison Stocker, state treasurer, Lawyer Ritter, who drafted our splendid enforcement law, and Dr. Mead, pastor of the convention church.

They Had White Ribbon Mothers

It is notable that a large majority of our distinguished brothers who welcome us nowadays refer to white ribbon mothers!

The feature of Wednesday evening, following the usual address of welcome, was the appearance of our beloved honorary president, Antoinette Hawley, who laid her cane upon the desk in front of her and stood as erect as in her former years while she gave her address on "The Price of Victory," with the wit, vigor and dramatic power of her youth no whit abated.

Thursday afternoon S. T. I., Anti-Narcotics and L. T. L. had right of way. Awards for prize essays were made in all three departments. The announcement that our next great battle is to be against the cigaret met with great applause, Superintendent Smiley of the Denver public schools having remarked in his address the evening before, "The greatest evil now existing in the world is the cigaret evil."

Rev. Guy Konkel, superintendent of the state Sunday School Association, spoke enthusiastically on "Co-operation" and was followed by Miss Rose Davison on "Our Cause Needs Young People." "The unions that cultivate the young people," she said, "are the unions that take on new life."

A drill on the new prohibition enforcement law was conducted by Mrs. Alice Disbrow, president of Denver Central union, and participated in by representatives from the fifteen largest unions in the state. It was ordered that this drill —in question and answer form—be printed in the convention number of the Messenger so that extra copies for distribution might be available.

"No Hope Any More"

Thursday evening was occupied by a spectacular demonstration of department work in charge of Miss Winona Jewell and the superintendents, ably assisted by Miss Rose Davison. Some quite remarkable talent was brought out in this demonstration, which was given before a large and appreciative audience. One man, evidently connected with the brewery trade, was overheard to whisper to a comrade, when the white ribbon recruits were on the platform, "There's no hope for us any more, Jack. When they begin from the cradle up, we may as well throw up the sponge."

Friday afternoon was "cram full" of good things. The Cottage Home reports elicited, as always, deepest interest and inquiry. Enthusiasm prevailed when the treasurer's report showed a balance in the treasury of over $3,000. But the women were saddened by the news that Mrs. Dinnie McDole Hays, our faithful Cottage Home solicitor, had fallen and broken both wrists. She sent word that she expected soon to be in the field again but was puzzled to know how she should carry those suit-cases!

Mrs. George A. Carlson, the governor's wife, gave a concise and helpful paper on the "Privileges of Motherhood," then came "Training for Pure Living" by Dr. Emma F. A. Drake, whose name is guarantee of the quality of the address. This was followed by "Prohibition and the World's Work," by Mrs. Ella Beecher Gittings.

The resolutions were presented and voted about the "best ever."

With the presentation of awards and banners to local and district unions and the splendid address of Governor Carlson on Friday evening, there came to a close the largest delegated convention Colorado has ever held and with the song of victory echoing in their hearts the women dispersed to their homes to begin immediately another year of hard work for the still greater victories which lure us on.

Convention Notes

The officers were re-elected with the exception of the corresponding secretary who had resigned during the year and whose place was filled by Mrs. Anna E. Keenan of Denver.

The "Thrift" department was greatly encouraged by the announcement that its work had been endorsed by resolution of the National Education Association.

Over $1,200 for state work was pledged in less than a half hour, many life members being created by the funds subscribed. Among those so honored was Mrs. Edna Bennett, sister of Mrs. Hungerford, and her office assistant.

"Colorado Day" was added to the Red Letter Day roster.

The Tenth district reported a town of one hundred inhabitants all of whom except two were members of the W. C. T. U. A gain of 405 in membership was reported for the state.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives said to Mrs. Hungerford, "By honorable lobbying, the W. C. T. U. placed our enforcement law on the statute books."

TEMPERANCE RALLIES IN KINGS COUNTY, NEW YORK

The Flatbush branch of Kings County (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. has a strong ally in the Seventh Day Adventist church which has been holding gospel meetings in a large, commodious tent in the central part of town It not only gave the use of the tent for temperance rallies but paid for the necessary advertising and divided the collections with the union. On the evening of September 21, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., and Dr. W. G. Southerton of Brooklyn, spoke to nearly six hundred people. The following Sunday Professor Longacre of Washington, D. C., gave a stirring temperance address.

A DETERMINED WOMAN

Finally Found a Food that Helped Her.

"When I first read of the remarkable effects of Grape-Nuts food, I determined to secure some," says a Mo. woman.

"At that time there was none kept in this town, but my husband ordered some from a Chicago traveler.

"I had been greatly afflicted with sudden attacks of cramps, nausea, and vomiting. Tried all sorts of remedies and physicians, but obtained only temporary relief. As soon as I began to use Grape-Nuts the cramps disappeared and have never returned.

"My old attacks of sick stomach were a little slower to yield, but by continuing the food, that trouble has disappeared entirely. I am today perfectly well, can eat anything and everything I wish, without paying the penalty that I used to. We would not keep house without Grape-Nuts.

"My husband was so delighted with the benefits I received that he has been recommending Grape-Nuts to his customers and has built up a very large trade on the food. He sells it to many of the leading physicians of the county, who recommend Grape-Nuts very generally. There is some satisfaction in using a really scientifically prepared food." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A HAPPY SOLUTION

GRACE BOTELER SANDERS

The president of the W. C. T. U. and the Girl stood by the door of the little rest-room which had been brought into being by the combined efforts of the temperance women, and looked out into the sweltering heat of the village street. None but the faithful souls who had labored long to make possible this place of rest in the very heart of the city knew of the sacrifices involved to found it; the long hours spent in seeking funds and findings and furnishings for it, in shopping expeditions to make a dollar go as far as it would. They had seen the sore need for a place of the kind they had established. The country mother, weary from buying yards of muslin and other household supplies, had no place to rest while she waited for the "gude man;" there was none for the high school miss or for the father or son. For the laggard or the drinker there were only the streets or the saloons. The founders of the rest-room had been a little discouraged at first because they found it was patronized only by a few old men and women. The men and boys still thronged the saloons and "held down" the street corners, very carefully avoiding the room which had been furnished for their benefit. There was nothing to do, the women decided, but to drive out the saloons. When the matter was once settled, there was no stopping the fair sex. When women will, they will! They waged a most successful campaign. A little later every saloon had been driven from Hilton. What next?

The two women looked helplessly out at the Saturday crowd which had come to town to enjoy the diversion of mingling with other revelers.

"If they only knew how we wanted them, they'd surely come in, it's so cool and comfy here," said the Girl as she transferred her gaze from the hot brick pavements of the street to the rest-room with its cool green carpets and hangings. "I don't see how they can stay away."

"Everybody to their notion!" The rasping voice at her elbow made the Girl whirl quickly only to see old Clint Everhart. She could not remember that she had ever seen him wholly sober. She did recall, however, quite clearly the story of a handsome, gifted young musician who had begun drinking in jest and continued to imbibe until he had tumbled so deeply into the gutter that his family had left him to grovel his life away. Although a wreck, he still had a bit of intelligence. "Everybody to their notion," he repeated. "You temperance women needn't think you can turn the whole world into a pack of sissies and old ladies. You're as bad as some of the preachers. You knock a man's props out and let him fall into the mud with nothing to take their place."

The Girl stared. The old man's usually faltering tongue ran on nimbly: "You thought you did something smart, didn't you, when you shut the saloons and brought in their place black despair. Do you think a lot of men are coming into this doll's nest to drink tea when they've been used to music and noise and a schooner of beer in cheerful company? Not much! They want something lively to make them forget the awful gnawing that's cutting out their vitals." The old man's face was contorted into a thousand grimaces expressive of suffering. "You give them a spoonful of tea and a sermon when they want whisky. Shame on such a substitution!"

The Girl's face showed her amazement. "The saloon is a refuge, a lunch counter, a bank—a friend who knows all your faults but loves you just the same," continued Clint Everhart. "You hypocrites take all these things from the poor laboring man and turn him into the streets!"

The old man's gesticulating arms fell. He would have walked out had not the Girl stepped forward and placed a detaining hand upon his arm.

"You criticise us but you don't tell us what to do," she said. "We want to help you. Put yourself in our place and tell us what you would do. If you will, we'll count no sacrifice too great to accomplish what you suggest."

Old Everhart's eyes suddenly filled with tears and his bloated face lost its ferocious look. "I believe you would," he said slowly, "but how can lambs such as you women know what wolves would enjoy. First I'd furnish something to drink." The Girl looked startled. "I don't mean the beer and whisky drinkers like myself are so crazy for," the old man continued, "but a substitute—ice-cold lemonade, for instance. I'd have it by the tubful and served by a man who would joke the way the bartenders do. It would cost something, but folks ought to be willing to spend money to save the souls of the men of this community. I'd try to get a lease on that old church," pointing to a tall building whose spires pierced the sky. "I used to go there before whisky ruined me. Even if I am a wreck it almost broke my heart when they closed the church doors because the neighborhood had changed and didn't seem to require it. They say they will never re-open it so you folks could fit it up for a club-room when these quarters get too small. God bless you women for giving us men a chance to keep straight." Suddenly tears rolled down his whisky-burned cheeks. "On afternoons and evenings I'd have music by the men themselves and the women could join in, and I'd have an employment agency and a medical dispensary, all free of charge, of course. Oh, I'd have all sorts of helpful things. You think all this is an impossibility? There are rich people in this village who could give the money for it and never miss it. But I guess I've said about enough."

The Girl watched the old man sorrowfully as he tottered away. Then she seated herself in a chair and gave herself up to her thoughts. Her pocket-book lay on a table near at hand and she opened it casually. Inside there were just five dollars. She thought of the wealth of a certain young man she knew and mentally compared his funds with her own. The money her purse contained she had saved to pay her carfare into the country where she had hoped to rest for a few weeks before her strenuous work as a teacher began again. If she used this money elsewhere she would have no rest—and yet—what else could she do? She must begin to put into practice some of Everhart's preachment.

The Girl suddenly rose. "If you want to go home, please do," she suggested to the president. "I don't mind staying alone."

"I'll be glad to, as I have many things at home which need my attention," responded the lady addressed, dropping a kiss on her assistant's brow. "It really doesn't seem much use for us both to stay, but I hate to leave you alone."

"You needn't mind that," the Girl laughed. "Please run right along."

As soon as her companion was gone, the Girl stepped to the phone, called up a grocery store and ordered two tubs, lemons and sugar. When the things were delivered she hired the grocer's boy to take the couch down into the basement of the building and bring up a counter and some shelving belonging to the union which had been stored away for a while. She sliced the lemons, squeezed the juice out of them, added sugar and water and tasted and stirred again and again, and when the drink was just to her taste she added ice from the water cooler. Suddenly old Everhart came back. "It's so hot," he said half apologetically, "and I remembered this nice cool room." Then his eyes opened wide with astonishment. "Why, you have the lemonade all ready for us. You must have been doing some hustling." The Girl smiled with pleasure as she handed him a glass of the delicious beverage. "That tastes good!" he exclaimed, as he greedily poured the contents down his burning throat. "Liquor only makes you hotter and sicker, I guess," he commented. "If the other boys only had some of this and a glimpse of you it would help to pull them out of purgatory."

"Call them in," smiled the Girl. "There are two tubs filled full of lemonade. You shall be the one to give it away. Call your friends in and tomorrow we'll have something else for them." He seized her hand and shook it hard. "Thank you," he muttered and made for the door.

And then they came in led by their friend and fellow sufferer from the ravages of drink. The lemonade at once proved popular. The tubs were emptied filled and emptied again and then the men, at the Girl's invitation, gathered around her and sang songs to her accompaniment.

Finally the Girl rose from the piano and as she did so—came face to face with the certain young man of her afternoon dreams. She was greatly excited but managed to give him a smile of greeting. "Why, Ned," she exclaimed "is it really you?" She could not hide the expression of pleasure in her face and the young man's eyes showed his joy in meeting her again. "You must have fallen heir to a fortune to be entertaining like this," he laughed. The Girl was too weary to note the admiration in his face and voice. "Don't!" she begged. "I spent my vacation money and will have to begin teaching again without my usual rest. I'm an impulsive sort of creature, you know. But oh, if only had plenty of money, what wonderful things I could do in the world for its sufferers."

"Why teach any longer, Alice?" said the young man tenderly. "I have money enough for us both. Be my wife and together we can spend our funds wisely Alice, you've known for some time that you're the only one for me. Why keep me waiting longer, dear?"

The girl turned her glowing face to her lover's. Her voice trembled as she said "I do love you well, Ned, and now actually love your money because of the good we can do with it."

"Time to close up, isn't it?" called Clint Everhart suddenly. The lovers who had forgotten the very existence of anyone but themselves, laughed softly and happily as they came back again to the practical affairs of earth.

NEW HAMPSHIRE'S JOYFUL TEMPERANCE FEAST

Special Correspondence

The city of Somersworth, beautiful for situation, was the mecca for New Hampshire white ribboners as they gathered for their forty-second annual meeting, September 15-17. The Congregational church, where the convention was held, was appropriately and artistically decorated. The vestry of the Methodist church, near by, was cozily and comfortably fitted up as a rest room and was greatly appreciated. The delegates and visitors received the warmest kind of a welcome, which lasted all through the convention. The installation of several electric fans, through the courtesy of the banks, was a welcome interruption to the program on Thursday afternoon, and a boon to the convention.

At the opening service Wednesday evening representative men and women extended greetings. Mayor F. H. Brown extended a most cordial welcome to the city. He declared that through National Prohibition and through that channel only will the evil of intemperance be stamped out and predicted a victory for the campaign within fifteen years, and he believes this outcome will be largely due to the practical, persistent, untiring and unwavering labors of women.

Rev. F. G. Woodworth, pastor of the hostess church, spoke of the early history of the organization, and the devotion and heroism of the pioneer workers. Mrs. Edith M. Russell greeted the visitors in behalf of the Woman's Club, and Mrs. Adelaide B. Webber spoke for the local union.

The address of the president, Mrs. Ellen R. Richardson, was greeted with applause. It dealt comprehensively with various phases of temperance work and recorded the victories enjoyed along many lines. Mrs. Richardson declared that the issue before the state and nation today is not conservation of forests and rivers and of animals but rather the conservation of children and of men and women. That so many women and children are driven into the industrial ranks she maintained is due chiefly to the liquor traffic and further declared that "alcohol stands in the highway of child progress." She laid stress upon the fact that prohibition of the liquor traffic and equal suffrage are marching side by side in the world's progress. The annual reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer were full of interest and encouragement. The finances are in much better condition than last year, several new unions have been organized and there has been a net gain of 212 members. Dover union received the banner for the largest gain (125), and Strafford county received the county banner. Among the interesting numbers on Thursday's program was the "March of the County Presidents," "The Department Quiz," arranged and conducted by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. M. Abbott, and the "Suffrage Symposium" with addresses by Miss Kimball, president of the New Hampshire Equal Suffrage Association, and Mrs. Tandberg, president of the Equal Suffrage Club, Dover.

Our beloved National W. C. T. U. president, Miss Anna Adams Gordon, received a royal welcome when she arrived from Maine Thursday evening. On coming to the platform she was presented with a beautiful bouquet of carnations and ferns by a representative from the Portsmouth union. Portsmouth, white ribboners were happy to recall, was the birthplace of Miss Gordon's father. The children also welcomed her with banners and song as they marched up the center aisle, formed in front of the platform, listened intently as Miss Gordon addressed them briefly and then marched away singing "Saloons Must Go."

THE "CRACKED" PLEDGE

MRS. NELLIE H. BRADLEY

"Minnie, I think it is a very mean thing for a temperance girl to eat wine-jelly and brandy-sauce and strong mince-pie. I couldn't be paid to do it!" Merton Clark looked as though he meant just what he said.

"And I think you are not very polite to say I am doing a 'mean thing.' The pledge makes us promise not to drink any intoxicating beverage; it does not forbid us to eat a little in sauce and pies and things," said Minnie.

"P'ison things—that's a good name for food that is flavored with alcohol in any shape," replied Merton. "And if you keep on cracking your pledge so often by eating strong drink, you may break it sometime; so you'd better be careful, Minnie." With a wise look he ran off, while the girl gave her head an angry toss and went into the house.

The next morning, under the front door, she found a folded paper, which read:

"Touch not, taste not, handle not,
For the Bible says it stings,
I wouldn't give much for a pledge that's cracked
With wine-jelly, brandy-sauce, and all such p'isen things.

"My Advise."

"Merty wrote it, of course," she said, half angrily and half laughing. "I know he thinks that is very smart indeed, but he'd better keep his advice to himself till he learns how to spell it."

Her mother laughed heartily. "Merton is a fine boy, but he is a little crank on the temperance question. He learns it from his mother."

When Minnie and Merton next met it was at a young people's party, and, as they formed in line to march around the parlors, keeping step to gay music and the beating of their own happy hearts, Merton found that Minnie had been assigned as his partner. He offered his arm gallantly with a roguish look, half expecting a scolding, but she only gave him a little pinch, saying, "You old crank!" They marched into the dining-room and were seated at a table filled with the good things of the season, and beautifully decorated with lovely flowers. Beside each plate was a tiny glass of wine. It was soon noticed that Minnie and Merton left theirs untouched, and on being asked why, replied that they belonged to the Loyal Temperance Legion.

"I don't see why that should trouble Minnie," said one of the girls. "I have eaten pudding-sauce at her house so strong it made my head feel funny, and she dipped it up with a spoon and ate it, or, I should say, drank it; for it amounted to that." This caused a laugh, in which Minnie joined, though she felt uncomfortable enough.

"If you can do that, I don't see the harm in drinking a little glass of wine," said one.

"It looks odd to see only two out of twenty refuse wine," said another.

Minnie had never drank any wine, but she had been accustomed to eat something almost daily that was flavored with it, and had learned to love the taste, so the bright, ruby liquid in that little glass was a temptation; she really wanted to drink it, and she did not like to appear odd, so she raised it to her lips and set it down empty, then blushed with shame as Merton exclaimed:

"O Minnie! How could you?"

"Now Merton," said one of the boys, "you surely do not wish to make us think you are setting yourself up as being better than all the rest of the company. Prove to us you are not by drinking that mere thimbleful of wine."

All eyes were turned on him, and a lovely girl next to him, lifted the glass playfully to his lips. His face flushed and he trembled, but he gently pushed away the tempting hand, and arose, saying firmly: "I am not setting myself up to be better than any one else, but I have solemnly promised, God helping me, to drink no intoxicating liquors, and I would not break that pledge, even if I were the only one in the whole world."

There was a deep silence for a moment and then every pair of hands but one was applauding Merton's firmness and courage, and that pair hid Minnie's burning cheeks—she was overwhelmed with shame.

"If I have done anything worth applauding, why don't you show it by taking the same stand I have on this question? It is a shame for young girls and boys like those in this company to be drinking wine. Who knows how many of you may become drunkards if you don't stop now! Who will sign the same pledge I have signed?" Taking from his pocket half a dozen of the beautiful cards issued by the National W. C. T. U., he gave them a light toss and they went fluttering over the table like bright-winged birds. The young hostess caught one ere it fell. "I shall never taste wine again, nor set it before my friends," she exclaimed. "Who will follow me?"

Eight responded, five girls and three boys, and five more promised to think seriously about the matter; and before they parted that night, fifteen were pledged to total abstinence, among them Minnie, who, before a month had passed, persuaded her mother to banish everything in the way of alcoholic flavoring. Many people, young and old, forget how easily cracked things are broken!

Large Audience Gathers to Hear National President

The large and appreciative audience gave rapt attention as Miss Gordon delivered an able and intensely interesting address dealing with prohibition and its wonderful progress in the land and in the world. Among other things she commented upon the vision which has come to several foreign countries during the present great war leading them to put the ban on liquor through realization that alcoholic beverages lead to waste and inefficiency.

It was a great privilege to have Miss Gordon with us all day Friday. She endeared herself to all by her gracious words and kindly deeds. A touching incident occurred at the close of the thank-offering service at noon when Miss Gordon asked if she might have a part in it, saying that she had a little verse she would like to say and a little offering she would like to give. She quoted Exodus 20-12 and then made Miss Bates, daughter of our recording secretary, a life member of the state union. It was a pleasure to Miss Gordon to meet at the convention the mother of Bishop Walter T. Sumner a long-time white ribboner.

The officers, with the exception of the recording secretary, were unanimously re-elected. Mrs. Leonora H. Bates, who has served most acceptably and efficiently for thirteen years, declined to hold office longer, and Mrs. Ida E. Davis of Rochester was elected in her place. While it was with reluctance and deep regret that Mrs. Bates' resignation was accepted, the state is to be congratulated on securing Mrs. Davis, an efficient member of the advisory committee for several years, to fill the responsible position. Mrs. Bates was given a life membership in the National W. C. T. U., Miss Gordon presenting the gift for the state.

Wisconsin's Glorious Harvest Home

Special Correspondence

Never were the sheaves at Wisconsin's annual ingathering so rich, so abundant! In the brief eleven months to which the time for the race was limited, the splendid corps of white ribboners put forth all its energies, permitted nothing to distract its attention, looked not backward, neither to the right hand nor the left, but with eyes fixed steadfastly on the "mark for the prize," patiently looked toward the goal of its hopes, and behold instead of the one thousand new members it had sought to enroll, it came to its home-coming feast with a toll of eleven hundred and seventy-six. The resultant enthusiasm pervaded the entire convention. The officers, the organizers, the leaders of the work in the Badger state have heard the Voice that spoke to Moses in Horeb, "Certainly I will be with thee! I have surely seen the affliction of my people!" This splendid membership gain is not all that has been accomplished. The state has to its credit thirty-four new unions, two dozen or more life and memorial memberships, and splendid department work along all lines, especially that of Scientific Temperance Instruction, a large increase in the number of contests held and essays written being reported. The state press has become a valuable factor in the work of the organization, papers which formerly were unwilling to admit temperance material now welcoming it, and the "temperance column" and other material from W. C. T. U. sources thus finding their way into many homes and other places from which they had hitherto been excluded. At least forty-two Wisconsin papers, headed by the splendid State Journal of Madison, refuse liquor advertising. Much literature has been distributed during the year, more copies of the state annual Report taken (and studied. owing to the ingenious "Quiz" conducted by the recording secretary); and there has been a large increase in SIGNAL and Crusader subscriptions. In the coming year this will be augmented, no doubt, because of the wise plan recently adopted of giving these subscriptions as prizes for membership gains. The ardent and strenuous labor on the part of officers, superintendents, organizers and others contributed to make this great advancement.

Eau Claire, the beautiful city at the "meeting of the waters," amid the most picturesque scenery in a state famous for varied and beautiful scenery, for the fifth time extended hospitable hands to Wisconsin's representatives who came in greatly increased numbers, for the voting membership was 195, with a number of visitors. This time prominent city officials appeared on the platform to express welcome, among them the mayor, who optimistically assured the great throng of listeners that the time is coming soon when the nation will be "dry." Another, speaking for the City Civic and Commerce Association, prophesied the speedy coming of suffrage for woman, as well as prohibition. This cheering hope was echoed with emphasis by the press representative, the speaker for the patriotic societies, and others. Very pleasing is the recognition by the schools that they have no better friend than the W. C. T. U. whose co-operation through the S. T. I. department they greatly appreciate.

Among other noteworthy features of this notable gathering was the banquet on Friday night, when the state president, Mrs. W. A. Lawson, in her own gracious manner and with many a bon mot introduced the speakers, who responded variously to the toast: "A Saloonless Nation. Why? How? When? By Whom?"

The president's annual address was widely commented upon as her finest effort. It was strong, chaste, eloquent—a wide survey of the wonderful work of the year in Wisconsin, in the nation, in the world, and an optimistic vision of what may—what must be done if we would "go forward."

The discussion of "The Problem of the Young People," by Mrs. B. C. Howell, and of "The Status of Woman Suffrage," by Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, are merely high lights of a fine program to which many contributed. The matron's gold medal contest was a demonstration of the value of that department of work. Even more soul stirring was the cantata given by the young people and children of the city, and which must have had a deep influence on every auditor.

Sunday was a most memorable occasion with Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard as the "bright particular star." Only those who have heard her can form any idea of the feast she spread before her audiences as with inimitable combination of humor and pathos, of pointed satire and gentle reproof, of tender pleading and stern demand, she depicted "The Shadow Life" and "The Passing of the Bottle." Only eternity can reveal all that the blessed waves of influence going out from the convention meant to Eau Claire and to the entire state of Wisconsin.

The officers were re-elected.

MAKE CHRIST KING, COMBINED
(Orchestrated)
Just Published
Edited by
Prof. E. O. Excell, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Dr. H. W. Stough, Dr. M. H. Lyon and 70 other leading evangelists.

BIEDERWOLF

EXCELL

The Latest, Best and Most Popular Hymn Book
Combines the best songs in "Make Christ King" and the "New Make Christ King," with the latest and best copyrighted hymns.
Bigger sales of expensive the best song book ever published. Send 15c for sample copy.

STOUGH

LYON

THE GLAD TIDINGS PUB. CO.
Lakeside Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

Pennants

in good quality of felt, red, white or blue, with slogan

The Liquor Traffic Must Go

Eighteen inches long

Price, ten cents each; twenty-five, $2.00, one hundred, $7.00.

A facsimile of this pennant in blue, with white letters, has been made as a seal, to be used upon letters and packages.

Price, per hundred, 20 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
Evanston, Ill.

POST THE POSTER

"Posters Make News of Temperance Facts." Give These Facts Wide Publicity by

POSTING THE POSTERS

1. Which Will You Protect?
2. Do You Know These Facts?
3. Alcohol.
4. Beer.
5. Exclusion of Objectionable Post Cards from United States Mail.
6. Drink Robs the Working Man.
7. The License Voter Gets What?
8. Attention, Voters!
9. Figures Tell.
10. Saloons Increase Taxes.
11. The Trouble Manufacturing Company.
12. Successful Men.
13. In Prohibition Kansas.
14. Compare These Figures.
15. Boys and Girls.
16. Not By My Vote.
17. State Prohibition and Local Option.
18. Temperance Truths (two).
19. Flag Poster (in colors).
20. Testimony from Governors of Prohibition States.

Size 19x25. Printed in black and red.
Price, 5 cents each; per 50, $2.00; per 100, $3.50.

SPECIAL CAMPAIGN POSTERS

The Liquor Traffic Must Go. Cloth, 28x42. Price, each, 15 cents; two for 25 cents; per hundred, $10.50.
Cloth, 12x18. Price, each, 5 cents; per hundred, $3.00.
Paper, 28x42. Price, each, 5 cents; per hundred, $3.50.

A Business Proposition. Cloth, 28x42. Price, each, 15 cents; two for 25 cents; per hundred, $10.50.
Paper, 28x42. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50.

The Man Who Drinks. Paper, 28x42. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $3.50.

BILL BOARD POSTERS.

Printed in two colors, 7x10 feet, put up in eight sections. Price, 50 cents each.

The Man Who Drinks.
The Treating Evil.
Abraham Lincoln.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

You Will Want the CONVENTION NUMBERS of the UNION SIGNAL FOR YOURSELF and FRIENDS

Full account of the great National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Seattle will be given in the issues of November 4, 11, 18. These three issues mailed to one address, 10 cents.

Please order early.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Evanston, Illinois

North Dakota's Record-Breaking Convention

Special Correspondence

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North Dakota has just closed the best year in its history. Notwithstanding the failure of last year's suffrage campaign and the selling out of suffrage interests by unprincipled politicians at the last legislature, we are rejoicing in a gain of 748 new members. All financial obligations are met, with a good balance in the treasury. It was therefore with happy hearts, and gratitude to our divine Leader, that, on September 23-27, we met for our twenty-sixth annual convention in the hospitable, enterprising city of Carrington. The enrollment of delegates was the largest in years.

Local arrangements for the entertainment of delegates were very complete, and greatly appreciated. On the opening evening an elaborate banquet was served. State President Elizabeth Preston Anderson acted as toast-mistress. Welcomes were cordially extended by leading citizens, and fitting responses were made by Mrs. Kate S. Wilder, Mrs. Callie E. Coates and Mrs. Lillie B. Bowers. A consecration service, in charge of Miss Marie Danielson, opened the convention proper. The memorial service for promoted comrades was conducted by Mrs. Anna M. Warren.

The splendid address of the state president was enthusiastically received, and the recommendations and comprehensive plans outlined for next year were readily adopted by the convention. Rev. F. L. Watkins of the State Enforcement League gave a strong address on "National Prohibition An Asset of Prohibition North Dakota." The Hobson resolution was unanimously adopted by the audience. "A Saloonless Nation in 1920" was most heartily sung. Interesting demonstrations were in charge of the state vice-president, Mrs. Abbie W. H. Best.

The convention was most fortunate in its guests of honor, Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, National Y. P. B. secretary. Their addresses were excellent, inspiring their hearers to fresh zeal and consecration.

A grand gold suffrage contest, the first of its kind in the United States, was arranged by the Medal Contest superintendent, Miss Emma Lockwood. The medal was presented to Miss Grace Moarkrud. Miss Mary M. Carey delighted the audience with an illuminating address on "The Progress of Prohibition in the United States." "The Need of a Y. P. B." was ably discussed by Miss Ethel E. Halcrow, state Y. P. B. secretary. The report of Miss Gladys M. Powell, state L. T. L. secretary, showed marked increase of interest in this important Branch. The state superintendent of Franchise, Mrs. Ella M. Shippy, spoke on "The Next Step in the Suffrage Campaign," and was followed by Rev. Nelle M. Osmun, who gave "Views of a Voter in Montana." Mrs. Callie E. Coates spoke on "Peace," and Mrs. Lillie B. Bowers on "The Call to Women."

Supervisors of Y. P. B. work at state schools were appointed, Mrs. Alice V. Hull being supervisor at the State University, Grand Forks, and Mrs. Anna Wanner Sweetman at the Agricultural College, Fargo.

Reports of the field-workers, Mrs. Wilder and Mrs. Bowers, were most interesting. Mrs. Anderson and Mrs. Best had also visited several districts, creating much interest. During the past year, fifteen unions have made a gain of 100 per cent in active membership, and thirteen unions a gain of 50 per cent. The prize banner, presented to the state by Mrs. J. M. Johnson, was awarded to Edgeley for the greatest number of new members, the pennant for greatest gain per cent being won by the Ray union. The largest union in the state is the Fargo Scandinavian, with 225 paid members. Thirteenth district made the greatest gain in active membership, and was therefore entitled to the fifty dollars offered as a prize. Four women won their railroad fare to the state convention, each gaining twenty or more new members.

Amenia has the largest list of subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Crusader. The largest L. T. L. is at Cooperstown, with 100 paid members. Grand Forks distributed most literature, 108,000 pages.

Mr. Edgar H. Gustafson of the State University won the prize for the best temperance essay by university men. The prize for best high school essay went to Miss Winnifred I. Noyes, and for best essay from grades to Miss Alpha Noben. Miss Clara Knudson won the prize for best essay on "Anti-Narcotics." The medal contest banner was won by Kintyre.

Sunday services were especially helpful. In the morning a white ribbon love feast was conducted by Mrs. Best, and the convention sermon was preached by Mrs. Vayhinger. A young people's rally in the afternoon was addressed by Mrs. Schachner, and in the evening strong addresses were made by her and by Mrs. Vayhinger.

The state officers were re-elected.

NEW PROGRAM

FOR

World's Temperance Sunday

Prepared by Stella B. Irvine for the National W. C. T. U.

A complete program for the Sunday school hour, containing responsive service, prayer in unison, addresses, the Triumph song, by Anna A. Gordon, and Prohibition Victory, by Stella B. Irvine.

Price, 30 cents per hundred

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

Evanston, Illinois

PROHIBITION RALLY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

A prohibition rally, held September 22 at St. Johns, Newfoundland, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., was a distinct success. The speaker of the evening was Mrs. Emma H. Howland of Massachusetts, a National W. C. T. U. organizer. The St. Johns Daily News has this to say of her: "Mrs. Howland is a pleasing speaker with a clear, well modulated voice, a good command of language and a wealth of ideas. Her address, throughout, was sympathetic and helpful, with a total absence of anything like dictation. She brought a message from co-workers in the United States, and delivered it with a tact and delicacy that was thoroughly appreciated and enjoyed by the large and interested audience."

You can look younger

"Six to ten minutes a day of pleasant exercise for the face—in your own room—bring a quick and marvelously youthful expression."—Susanna Cocroft is as effective as Miss Cocroft's exercises for the body have proven to be in more than 75,000 cases. The course includes care of the hair, eyes, hands and feet, breathing, correct poise, etc., and relieves such age-adding blemishes as pouches under eyes, wrinkles; flabby, thin neck; double chin, crow's feet, tired eyes, sagging facial muscles, pimples, thin, dry or oily hair; tender, inflamed feet; rough, red hands; and other beauty-destroyers.

Physical Culture for the Face

Write for free booklet today

Women are learning that they do not need to look old at fifty.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course,
624 S. Michigan Ave., Dept. 16 CHICAGO

IOWA CONVENTION SCENE OF ENTHUSIASM — PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE POPULAR TOPICS

Special Correspondence

The forty-second annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Iowa, held at Iowa City, September 28-October 1, was most successful. The great university of the state and the Commercial Club of Iowa City united in honoring this earnest body of women. President McBride and his wife gave a reeeption to the convention and everything possible was done for the comfort of the city's guests. The keynote of the convention was consecration and earnest effort for equal suffrage. This is a crucial year in Iowa both for suffrage and the constitutional prohibitory amendment. Great enthusiasm prevailed whenever these two subjects were mentioned. Among the many guests of the convention was Mrs. Nelle Burger, state president of Missouri, who was the convention speaker, giving two excellent addresses and helping in various ways. Mrs. Heald, Nebraska's former president, was a visitor for two days. Miss Flora Dunlap, president of Iowa Equal Suffrage Association, gave an excellent address on "The Responsibility of Iowa Women." Iowa's Attorney-General, George W. Cosson, was present. Miss Mary F. Anderson of Massachusetts, whom Iowa women have learned to love for her work's sake, won all hearts as in her sweet Scotch she pleaded with the women to do more work for the Young People's Branch. On the closing day two fine addresses were given by Professor Joy along the line of "The Philosophy of Life." Our own Mrs. Patterson and Miss Berthe Bowers, who have been so helpful in other states, were always ready to do and serve, rising to the occasion whenever needed. Every day the presence of the Spirit was felt in our midst and each delegate returned to her home resolved in her own heart to give more of herself to this, the Master's own work.

The gain in membership was 1,899 and Iowa W. C. T. U. now numbers 10,002. The officers were all re-elected.

Precious Promise Bible

Something Entirely New Just Off the Press

ALL THE PROMISES IN RED

Most Comforting Bible Published

The famous, international clear type, self-pronouncing edition, with all the teachers' helps. Beautifully illustrated in colors. Leather, only $3.75. Descriptive Circular Free.

SEND FOR OUR FREE CATALOGS

of Song Books, Bibles, Bible Mottoes, Christian Workers' Helps, Missionary Books, Temperance Books, Purity Books, Christian Evidence and Anti-Infidel Books, Peace Literature, etc. Agents Wanted.

We Have the Most Complete Catalogs Published

GLAD TIDINGS PUBLISHING CO. Lakeside Building CHICAGO, ILL.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

The Union Signal	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	25c a year
The Young Crusader	25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each	Per 100, $1.75
Subscriptions to Foreign Countries
The Union Signal	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	37c a year
The Young Crusader	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

PERCENTAGE OF UNION SIGNAL SUBSCRIPTIONS TO STATE MEMBERSHIP

Alaska	24
Arizona	23
Nevada	23
Wyoming	20
Florida	17
Idaho (N.)	16
South Dakota	16
Texas	15
Utah	14
Colorado	13
Oklahoma	13
Washington (E.)	13
California (N.)	13
District of Columbia	13
Connecticut	12
Rhode Island	12
Arkansas	12
Louisiana	13
New Mexico	11
Washington (W.)	11
Wisconsin	11
Maine	11
Minnesota	11
Mississippi	11
North Dakota	10
Oregon	10
Vermont	10
California (S.)	10
Idaho (S.)	10
New Hampshire	10
Missouri	10
Alabama	9
Kansas	9
Iowa	9
Montana	9
Georgia	9
Massachusetts	8
Indiana	8
Kentucky	8
Nebraska	8
New Jersey	8
North Carolina	7
Illinois	7
Maryland	7
New York	7
West Virginia	7
South Carolina	6
Michigan	6
Tennessee	6
Delaware	5
Pennsylvania	5
Virginia	5
Ohio	3

In the competition among states having over 1,000 members, Florida (17 per per cent) secures the banner. Alaska (24 per cent) wins the banner for the largest per cent of subscriptions in states having less than 1,000 members. These banners are awarded to states which have gained both in subscriptions and membership.

In computing percentages four subscriptions to the monthly edition are counted as equal to one regular subscription.

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature. $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY to each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

THE UNION SIGNAL HONOR ROLL FOR 1915

Names of persons sending twenty-five or more subscriptions to the Union Signal from October 29, 1914, to September 25, 1915:

Mrs. Helen J. Andruss, New York....545
Mrs. Viola H. Moore, Missouri.....420
Mrs. Lizzie J. Fesmire, Indiana.....376
Mrs. Augusta R. Brigham, Massachusetts 367
Mrs. Nellie J. Doig, Florida.....351
Mrs. M. E. Patterson, Iowa.....347
Miss Margaret L. Sargent, Maine.....347
Miss Addie A. Austin, Illinois.....308
Mrs. Mabel Ruseling, Wisconsin.....259
Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, Colorado..251
Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, Washington (W.) 235
Mrs. Katherine D. Hauck, Pennsylvania 231
Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Virginia.....223
Mrs. Emma L. Starrett, Nebraska....214
Mrs. Alice G. Young, Kansas.....200
Mrs. Daisy Hughes Phipps, Texas....177
Mrs. Nellie L. Berry, California (N.)..172
Mrs. Dora E. W. Spratt, Connecticut..162
Miss E. M. Francis, Rhode Island....155
Mrs. Fannie A. Drummond, Ohio.....153
Mrs. M. J. Rust, Minnesota.....150
Mrs. Mary H. Erskine, South Dakota.131
Miss L. Evelyn Busick, Maryland.....130
Mrs. Clara S. Morrill, New Hampshire.128
Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Oregon.....118
Mrs. Wm. B. Gibb, District of Columbia 105
Miss Rebecca W. Griest, Pennsylvania.101
Miss Mae Halcrow, North Dakota.....100
Mrs. Julia R. Gunn, Kentucky..... 98
Miss Margaret J. Bilz, Michigan..... 73
Mrs. W. S. Hite, Tennessee..... 64
Mrs. H. B. Blair, Montana..... 63
Mrs. A. V. Carter, New York..... 63
Mrs. V. E. Mohler, W. Va..... 61
Mrs. S. R. Arrowsmith, Pennsylvania. 55
Mrs. Fannie Van Gelder, New York.. 53
Mrs. Minnie Burton, Arkansas..... 48
Mrs. M. E. Bodwell, Michigan..... 47
Mrs. E. L. Calkins, Michigan..... 42
Mrs. Emma M. Davidson, Delaware.. 41
Mrs. Geo. P. Greene, Georgia..... 41
Mrs. Sam P. Jones, Georgia..... 40
Mrs. Laura B. Hale, Iowa..... 39
Mrs. E. C. Momand, Georgia..... 37
Mrs. Mary C. Sampson, California (S.) 36
Mrs. A. E. Potter, New York..... 32
Anna S. Hawkins, Wyoming..... 31
Mrs. Jennie Carr Pittman, Arkansas.. 30
Mrs. Ella F. Hendrix, Minnesota..... 26
Miss Jennie Staples, California (S.).. 25
Mrs. F. G. Byles, Colorado..... 25
Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, New Jersey 25
Mrs. Ethel Serviss Ackermann, New Jersey 25
Fanny Bailey, New York..... 25
Mrs. S. Edith Halstead, Pennsylvania 25

The $25.00 checks for 250 subscriptions on which no other premiums are taken are awarded as follows: Mrs. Helen J. Andruss, New York, 474 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Viola H. Moore, Missouri, 380 subscriptions, 1 check. Miss Margaret L. Sargent, Maine, 325 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Lizzie J. Fesmire, Indiana, 331 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Augusta R. Brigham, Massachusetts, 311 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Nellie J. Doig, Florida, 261 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Henry Ruseling, Wisconsin, 258 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. M. E. Patterson, Iowa, 257 subscriptions, 1 check. Miss Addie A. Austin, Illinois, 251 subscriptions, 1 check. Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, Colorado, 250 subscriptions, 1 check.

THE UNION SIGNAL "UPPER TEN" FOR 1915

1. New York.....3745
2. Pennsylvania 2949
3. Ohio 1906
4. Missouri. 1893
5. Iowa 1543
6. Illinois 1311
7. Michigan 1291
8. Massachusetts 1210
9. New Jersey 1091
10. Indiana 1050

FOOT COMFORT GUARANTEED
In Simon's EZ WEAR Shoes
For MEN, WOMEN and CHILDREN
Soft, Stylish, Flexible model. Unlined, new live rubber heels. Need no breaking in. Feel like an old shoe the minute you put them on.
$3.00 POSTPAID
It's Free Catalogue of over 500 comfortable Ezwear styles and self measurement blank Write today.
The F. SIMON SHOE 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

What Frances E. Willard Said
(Price 75 cents)
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said
(Price 50 cents)
Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

These books should be in every White Ribboner's library. Why not order them at once.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

NINETEEN Prohibition States

MAINE	WEST VIRGINIA
KANSAS	VIRGINIA
OKLAHOMA	WASHINGTON
NORTH DAKOTA	OREGON
NO. CAROLINA	COLORADO
GEORGIA	ARIZONA
MISSISSIPPI	IOWA
TENNESSEE	ARKANSAS
ALABAMA	IDAHO

SOUTH CAROLINA

Prohibition State Pennants

A strong paper pennant. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 19 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

German Temperance Literature

The following German pamphlets are issued to help enlist as many as possible of the German-Americans in the fight against the drink habit and the liquor traffic. They appeal to them in their native tongue and on lines which will most easily influence them. Speed the cause of national prohibition by distributing these pamphlets widely.

1. "THE BIBLE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE." 32 pages, 2d edition, ten thousand now issued. Price 5c each, 25c a doz., $1.59 a hundred, postpaid.
2. "THE GERMANS AND THE DRINK QUESTION." 8 pages, forty thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a dozen, 50c a hundred, postpaid, $4.00 a thousand by express.
3. "CHRISTIANITY AND PROHIBITION." 8 pages, twenty thousand now issued. Same price as No. 2.
4. "THE AIMS AND RESULTS OF PROHIBITION." 12 pages, 3d edition, thirty-five thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a doz., 65c a hundred, postpaid, $5.00 a thousand by express.

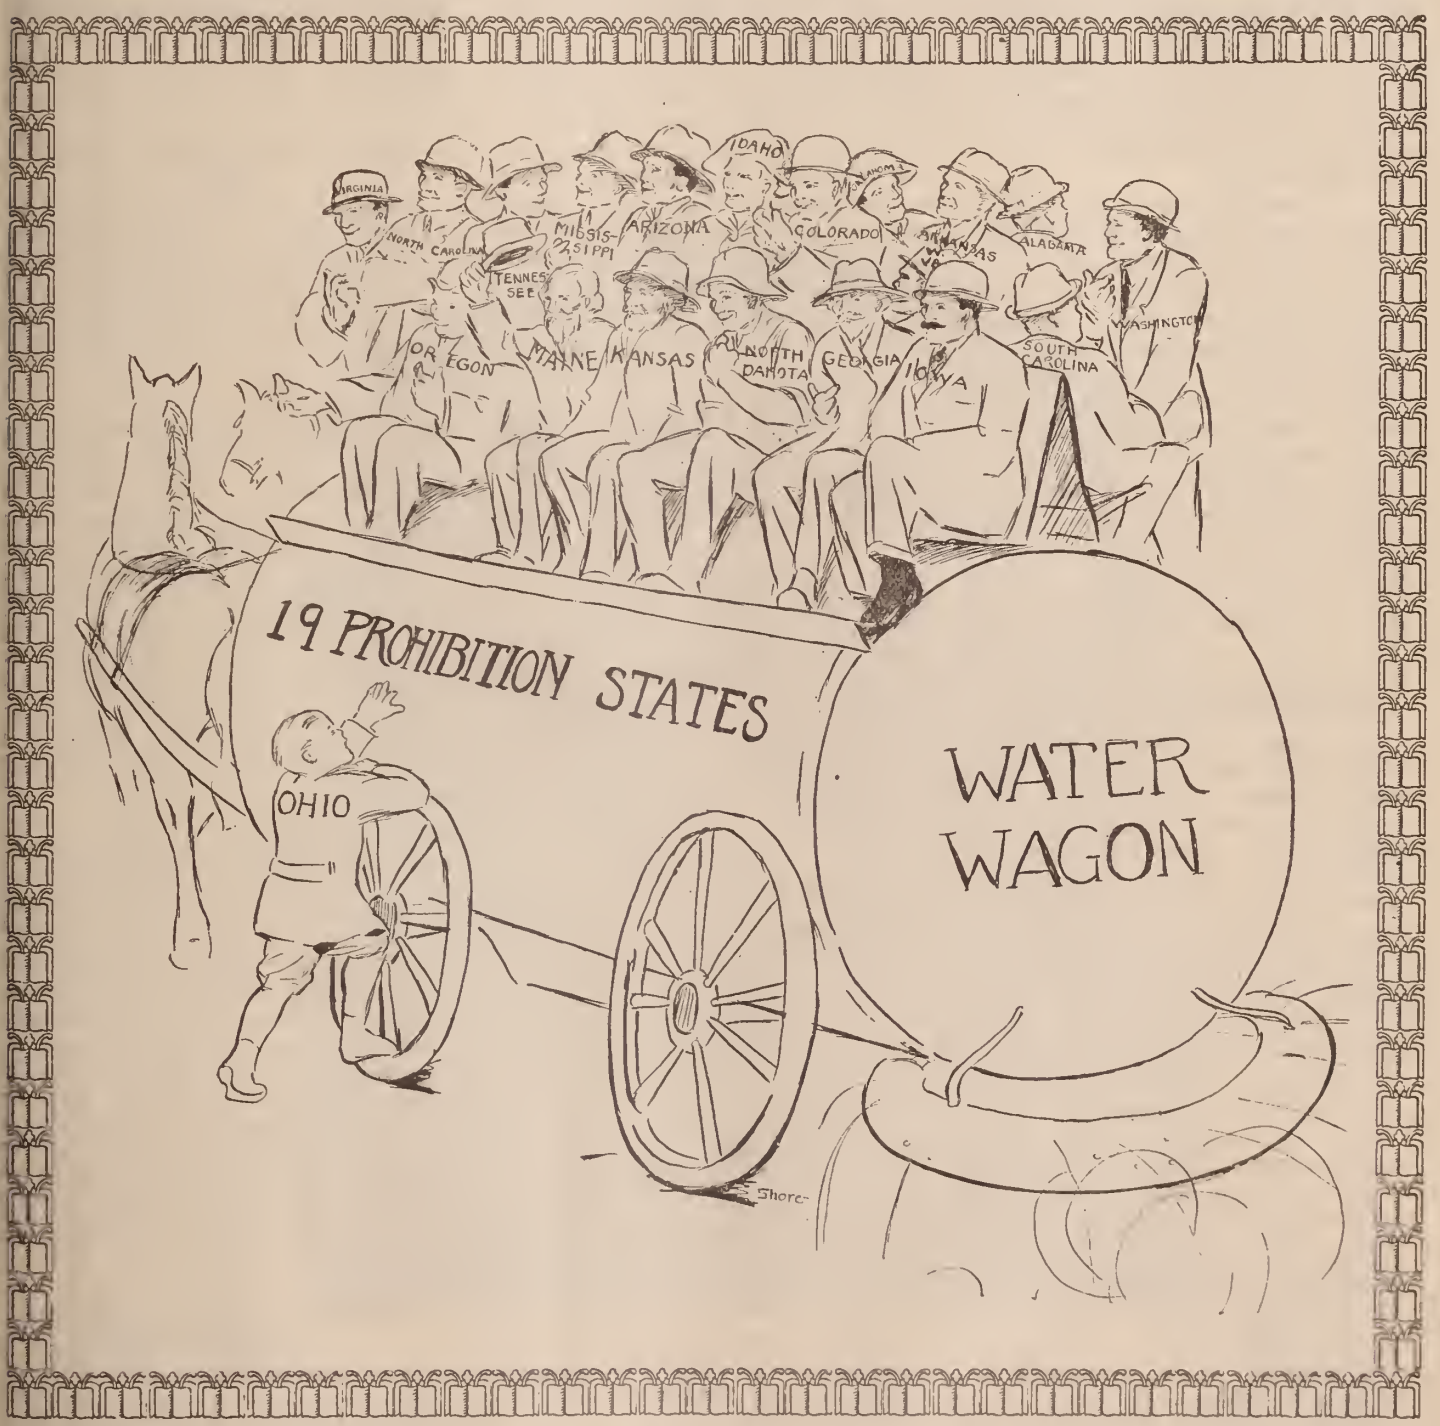
Of this last a new revised edition has just left the press. It also embodies the latest statistics and statements concerning prohibition in Kansas by the Governors, Stubbs, Hodges and Capper and by the legislature of the state. Send orders to

J. G. EVERT, BOX B, HILLSBORO, KANS.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., OCTOBER 21-28, 1915 | No. 43



CAMPAIGN EDITION

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Campaigners Crossing the Continent—Prohibition Eminently Satisfactory to Des Moines—Prohibition Progress in Trans-Atlantic Lands—Medical Men Denounce Alcohol—Chicago on Parade for Dry City—State Conventions.

ANOTHER MINNESOTA TOWN DRY

New Canada, Minn., has outlawed its two saloons by a vote of 72 to 37 against a proposition to evade the roadhouse law by incorporating part of the community into a village.

ILLINOIS LIQUOR MEN FAIL TO KNOCK OUT SUFFRAGE

Another victory for woman suffrage has been scored in Illinois. The supreme court of the state denied to attorneys of the liquor interests in the Macomb case the right to file a brief attacking the suffrage act. This, it is believed, settles for all time the constitutionality of the Illinois suffrage act.

PIKE COUNTY (KY.) STAYS DRY

Pike county, Kentucky, which on May 15 of this year voted 4,686 to 553 against the licensing of saloons is dry. The court of appeals in an opinion by Judge Hurt, affirmed the Pike circuit court in holding the local option election valid. One of the criticisms of the election made in the suit of the liquor men was that there was not an equal division of precinct election officers between wets and drys. The court held that "the fact that they were all chosen from those favoring prohibition would not be a valid reason for setting aside the election."

WILL HELP IN NEBRASKA'S STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN

At a recent Billy Sunday meeting in Omaha, 9,000 men, standing, gave their silent pledge to vote against the liquor traffic in Nebraska. Among the men who pledged their support to prohibition, state-wide and nation-wide, was Congressman C. O. Lobeck, who has hitherto been listed as opposed to the submission of a national prohibitory constitutional amendment and classed as opposed to state prohibition. The tabernacle rocked with the volley of applause which greeted the appeal to the men of Omaha to vote right. More than a thousand dollars was raised at the meeting toward the prohibition campaign in Douglas county.

"SUBMARINE ATTACK ON BOOZE"

The Ben Franklin Mutual Casualty Insurance Company in sending out advertising matter from its offices in Chicago includes a copy of Safety Bulletin No. 5 of the Illinois Steel Company, which, under the above caption, reads as follows:

"For the married man who cannot get along without drinks, the following is suggested as a means of freedom from bondage to saloons:

"Start a saloon in your own home. Be the only customer (you'll have no license to pay). Go to your wife and give her two dollars to buy a gallon of whisky, and remember there are sixty-nine drinks in a gallon. Buy your drinks from no one but your wife, and by the time that the first gallon is gone she will have eight dollars to put into the bank and two dollars to start business again.

"Should you live ten years and continue to buy booze from her, and then die with snakes in your boots, she will have enough money to bury you decently, educate your children, buy a house and lot, and marry a decent man, and quit thinking about you entirely.

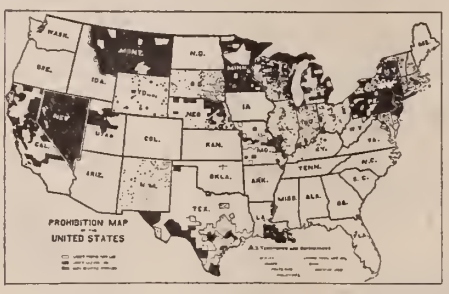
"Note—Most compensation laws specifically provide that no compensation shall be paid to any employe who is injured while under the influence of intoxicants."

ILLINOIS CAPITAL CLOSES VICE DISTRICT

The segregated district of Springfield, Ill., was closed by order of the sheriff, Dr. J. A. Wheeler, who took this action in the interest of public health. The order covers all of Sangamon county as well as the capital city.

MONTANA COUNTY OUTLAWS SALOONS

An overwhelming victory for the foes of John Barleycorn was won recently in Richland county, Montana, which gave a vote of two to one against the liquor traffic in this, the first county option election in the state. The liquor men put up a hard fight with five orators working overtime to hold the territory. Montana, one of the blackest states on the prohibition map, is waking up, and the days of the liquor traffic in the state are numbered.



NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho
South Carolina

MOORHEAD (MINN.) SALOON MEN FIND OTHER EMPLOYMENT

Moorhead, Minn., has satisfactorily solved the question of unemployment due to the closing of its saloons. State Senator F. H. Peterson recently explained the situation in these words:

"The election put out of the liquor trade at Moorhead probably three hundred men, including the employers.

"Those who were wedded to the business, of course, had to seek employment elsewhere, but many of them have elected to stay—and go into other lines of work. And for such there has been abundance of work at a good wage. There has been no man in Moorhead able and willing to work who could not get employment.

Banks Prosperous

"The banks have not suffered. The savings accounts have increased in number and amount and one of the banks is increasing its capital from $25,000 to $60,000."

Senator Peterson quoted from police records to show the enormous decrease in drunkenness in Moorhead after the saloons were closed. For July, August and September, 1915, there were 88 arrests for this cause as compared with 2,165 for the same three months of 1914, or approximately twenty-five times as many arrests for drunkenness with the saloons open.

COUNTY DRY BY ONE VOTE

Calhoun county, Texas, voted dry by one vote, the count being 277 to 276. A recount is believed probable.

INDIANS SIGN TOTAL ABSTINENCE PLEDGE

The federal authorities on the Indian reservation at Cheyenne River, Wyoming, have circulated among the thousands of Indians in that vicinity a pledge to abstain from intoxicating liquors, and it is reported that practically every Indian has signed it.

FORMER BREWERY WILL MAKE YEAST

Negotiations are under way, it is understood, between the Magnus Brewery of Cedar Rapids and the National Yeast Company to convert the brewery into a yeast plant when the new state-wide prohibition law goes into effect the first of the year.

WET LABOR LEADER WORKING FOR A DRY OHIO

Howard Keating of Akron, a member of the American Federation of Labor and a speaker for the liquor interests in Ohio's campaign last fall, has notified the wet committee of Summit county that he will espouse the cause of state-wide prohibition this year. The labor leader says that he has devoted considerable time to the study of the liquor question and is convinced that he has been a champion on the wrong side, and he now proposes to face about.

INDIAN BUREAU CLOSES SALOONS IN MINNESOTA TOWNS

Saloons in five more Minnesota towns have been closed by action of the United States Indian Bureau, thus making Crow Wing county entirely dry. The towns are Ironton, Cuyuna, Riverton, Manganese and Deerwood, each of which had one saloon with the exception of the last named which had two. There are a few more towns covered by the Indian treaty of 1855 in which liquor is still sold, but the demand for the closing of the saloons in all this territory is so general that it will probably be but a short time until the liquor interests must relinquish their hold entirely.

REALTY MEN WILL BANQUET WITHOUT LIQUOR

The cocktail, "harbinger for generations of the quail on toast, the advance guard of the oysters, the pioneer of the soup, the bugler of the roast beef rare, the introduction to the anchovies, and the clarion call to coffee," will have no place on the banquet table of the Cook County real estate board on Nov. 16. In commenting on the decision to omit intoxicating beverages from the banquet menu R. W. Wolfe, president of the real estate board, said:

"We decided, in connection with our banquet that modern spirit opposes alcohol. Business men of depth and soundness in their dealings cannot afford to set an example of frivolity and 'high life.' It is not consistent with good judgment.

"The saloons have been closed on Sunday and this is only another evidence that liquor and business cannot mingle satisfactorily. We voted against the cocktail because we are consistent business men."

CAMPAIGNERS CROSSING THE CONTINENT

White Ribbon Special En Route to National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle

Editorial Correspondence

"John Barleycorn, you have been the curse of man;
You stole his very soul, you fiend, deny it if you can.
Now all the nations on the earth have raised the battle cry:
'John Barleycorn, good-by.'"

This stirring challenge rang out from a group of women standing on the rear platform of the observation car of the White Ribbon Special as it pulled out of the Chicago & North Western station, on Tuesday evening, October 5, promptly at 7:15. To the crowd of onlookers it interpreted the electric sign which blazed from the rear of the train: "White Ribbon Special, W. C. T. U., Seattle."

That it was a very special "Special" even those not members of the organization realized and acknowledged after mingling for a few minutes with the two hundred delegates from the east, the south, the middle west, who had come to Chicago to join the official party and travel to the Pacific Coast for the great annual meeting. The company was composed of especially choice women leaders in social, religious and legislative affairs in the states from which they came; women of recognized ability and consecration. Among them were Miss Anna Adams Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary; Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary; the presidents of many states, National superintendents and National organizers, lecturers and evangelists, the National musical director and the National press correspondent. It was as well a body of women bent on a special mission—the King's business. The very atmosphere was that of a crusade for righteousness. From the hour of starting to the arrival in Seattle, the conversation was largely of campaign enterprises. The travelers talked of them by day and dreamed of them by night. They were indeed the popular topic at every meal. For breakfast the menu was largely campaign experiences; for luncheon, campaign stories and jokes; and for dinner, campaign plans and arguments. Even the pains of these travelers on the Special, if they ever confessed to any, were said to be cam-paigns.

However, notwithstanding the campaign atmosphere, the individuals who made up the party were not all of a militant type. On the contrary, they were most thoroughly feminine. The discussions of battles against the forces of evil were interspersed with truly womanly references to home affairs. In the same breath with a new remedy for children's colds was the suggestion of a tried and tested panacea for curing a serious affliction of the body politic. With up-to date advice on a good recipe for pumpkin pies or mince meat was a formula for conducting a prohibition campaign. A reference to the change of fashions in clothes was likely to call forth sage comment on the rapidly changing fashions in the character of the officials of city and state in the communities where women have been given the vote.

Leaving Chicago, Tuesday, October 5, 1915

All along the route, at virtually every stop, newspaper reporters were waiting to interview the General Officers and delegates. Especially were they interested in getting their opinions on the action of Mayor Thompson in issuing an edict closing the saloons of Chicago in accordance with the state law. A telegram of congratulation was sent from the official train by the National president, Miss Gordon, to Mayor Thompson, the text of which was given in last week's UNION SIGNAL.

The route of the Special was through campaign states and every stop was an opportunity for an impromptu meeting with speeches and songs. Upon arrival at Omaha, Wednesday morning, there was in waiting a company of white ribboners with beautiful flowers, the gift of Mr. Hummell of the city council of Omaha, and president of its park board. Each delegate was also presented with an ornamental pin in the shape of a key with the significant lettering, "Omaha, the key to the situation." These were the gift of Mr. John L. McCague, president of the chamber of commerce. The Nebraska white ribboners are jubilantly enthusiastic over the outlook for a victorious state-wide campaign. They have received assurance from ex-secretary of state William J. Bryan, that he will help them, and they have as the leader of the Dry Federation, Mr. Charles Bryan, the brother of William J. Bryan. At the present time "Billy" Sunday is in Omaha holding a series of meetings and helping to create and crystallize sentiment against the liquor traffic. A popular song heard at the railway station was an adaptation of one used by the popular evangelist, and ran thus:

"Drive out the rum shops where you are,
Drive out the rum shops where you are,
Fathers save your daughters,
Mothers, save your sons.
Drive out the rum shops where you are."

At Omaha the train was divided into two sections. It was with regret that the passengers on the Special learned that neither Mrs. Mamie M. Claflin, president of Nebraska W. C. T. U., nor Mrs. Frances B. Heald, former state president, were to accompany the party to the convention city.

The next stop was at Cheyenne, Wyoming, and notwithstanding the fact that the train was unavoidably delayed over an hour and instead of arriving at 8 o'clock in the evening, as expected, pulled in at 9:15, a company of Wyoming white ribboners with Dr. Ellen J. Wetlaufer, former state president, and Mrs. Anna Allison, the newly elected state president, at their head were waiting with automobiles for the General Officers and speakers on the evening's program. However, these leaders democratically requested the privilege of marching with the other delegates to the place of meeting, and led by one of the city's excellent bands, these two hundred and fifty "soldiers of the cross" marched two by two to the spacious high school gymnasium. Before them, as they advanced up the street to the strains of spirited music, was the brilliantly lighted state capitol, bringing forcibly to mind the recent declaration of the state's chief executive, Governor Kendrick, that he deemed it high time for Wyoming to inaugurate and

(Continued on Page Eight)

PROHIBITION EMINENTLY SATISFACTORY TO DES MOINES

Des Moines, Iowa, in company with other cities or towns which have outlawed the liquor traffic, has been grossly misrepresented by the liquor interests. While the closing of the saloons has resulted in benefit both moral and financial to the entire city, the liquorites picture it as a "has-been" town, which signed its death warrant when it severed its connection with alcohol, a town overgrown with moss, suffering from loss of trade and with a deficit of revenue that can never be overcome. As a matter of fact Des Moines finds itself materially benefited by the absence of saloons, although prohibition has prevailed for less than a year. There are loyal citizens in plenty who are willing to tell of improved conditions.

B. F. Williams, president of the Des Moines chamber of commerce, has expressed his satisfaction with conditions in Des Moines in the following words:

"Des Moines is happy and satisfied without saloons. If the question were resubmitted, I believe it would carry by a much larger vote than it did last winter. Conditions have shown marked improvement, and will be still better when state prohibition takes effect in January, shutting off the bootleggers' supplies from nearby cities.

"By voting out saloons, we cut off a revenue of $103,000. But the tax levy was increased this year only 1.4 mills, which nets less than $33,000. This levy included provision for some extensive improvements, showing that our finances are not cramped.

"The fact is, we find the saving we can effect in our police department, through the decreased need for police supervision, and the saving in our bill for charity and the care of the poverty-stricken, the lessened expense in our courts and other things, will fully make up for the decrease of revenue through the loss of saloon licenses.

"We haven't lost a convention that I know of by being a dry town. This year we entertained 2,500 members of the Missouri Valley Medical association for the first time.

"In the matter of business and collections business is better than it was before. Restaurants are doing a better business and there is a larger attendance at the moving picture houses. The city railway has contracted to spend $1,500,000 for improvements. We expect state-wide prohibition very shortly and I favor the spread of the movement for economic and business reasons.

"The abolition of the saloon didn't cause so much as a flurry in Des Moines. And it is not exactly complimentary or fair to that city to hold it up as a horrible example of the failure of prohibition. Des Moines is perfectly satisfied."

"I do not believe saloons will ever be operated in Des Moines again," said George B. Peak, president of the Central Life Assurance society of the United States, in summing up what he conceives to be the attitude of the people of the Iowa capital as a result of their experience as citizens of a dry municipality. "The people of this city realize that the condition is far better without the saloons than with them. Of course, the saloonkeepers have protested against the closing up of their business, but when their business is the injuring of others, it certainly should be closed.

"The eighty-six places of business were all vacated in one day. A large majority of these places have been filled with other lines of business, some of them groceries, some furniture stores, some automobile supply houses.

"We believe the closing of the saloon improved every other line of business. Many of the families that every winter were subjects of charity are now self-supporting and depositing their savings in the savings banks."

Figures in the county auditor's office show that less than half as many applications for commitment to the state home for inebriates have been filed this year as last.

Mayor Hanna, by co-operating with the police, has obtained figures showing the amount of liquor brought into Des Moines by railroads. Each day the chief of police has a deputy examine the express company records. This information is used in searching for blindpiggers and bootleggers.

"Last year Des Moines spent $2,000,000 for liquor," said the mayor. "The records of shipment this year show that less than one-sixteenth as much liquor has been brought in this year. This year $2,000,000 is going into legitimate channels of trade and Des Moines is feeling the effect. Business is better. Collections are better. Men, women and children are better."

DRY COUNTY HAS LARGE BALANCE

The treasurer of Kalamazoo county, Mich., the county in which is situated the city of the same name, reports a balance of $25,728 for the year ending Sept. 30, 1915. This balance is significant when it is remembered that the county went dry on May 1 of this year and thereby forfeited $20,000 in liquor license revenue. For the year ending Sept. 30, 1914, the balance amounted to only $6,878.30, practically $19,000 less than 1915, although the county treasurer received for 1914 the liquor license revenue which was forfeited the following year.

LOW TAX RATE IN DRY BUTLER

The jail in a dry town is very sure to be almost if not quite an empty building. Butler, Mo., is seriously considering doing away with this institution. Butler has prospered amazingly without the liquor license revenue—a fact exploited in a recent number of the Kansas City Star in the following terms:

"Butler today is a better, richer and more prosperous town than ever. The merchants carry better stocks, the business houses are neater, cleaner and better; the people live in better and more attractive homes and enjoy life in more rational and healthful ways. There are fewer idle people and merchants have fewer bad debts.

"When the saloons were voted out Butler had a bonded debt of something like $20,000 on its electric light plant, and notwithstanding the 'revenue' from its four saloons, it was a hard matter to meet interest payments, and the liquidation of the principal seemed a long way off. Since the closing of the saloons the debt has been paid and many needed public improvements have been made, and all without increasing the tax rate one penny. In fact the tax rate is now lower than ever before."

MISSOURI AND KANSAS NOT TO BE COMPARED

"Missouri is a grand old state, but you shouldn't compare it with prohibition Kansas," said Dr. Louis Albert Banks, the Maryland lecturer and author, in an address in St. Joseph on "John Barleycorn's Fight Against the Stars."

"Why, thirty-three years ago Missouri could have bought the whole state of Kansas on the auction block," continued Doctor Banks. "Missouri now has $20 in the savings banks for each individual within its confines. Pretty good! But the last child born in Kansas has $114 stored away in a Kansas savings bank.

"In all of Kansas there are only 654 people so poor that they must be cared for at public expense. You have whole towns with that many. There are fifty counties in Kansas that have not had a grand jury for from five to ten years. In Missouri it takes from fifty to one hundred farmers to buy an automobile, while, bless you, in prohibition Kansas one farmer in every four owns a car."

Men and Women, Awake!

HON. WEBSTER DAVIS

MEMBER OF PRESIDENT McKINLEY'S CABINET

Men and women, awake! The hour has come when this great land is to take on a newer and higher form of nationality. We are going to have a sober nation. We are going to have a saloonless republic. We are going to have a stainless flag. We hail the future with joy and hope!

Prohibition Progress in Trans-Atlantic Lands

More and more is it becoming apparent in Europe that in times of stress and national danger intoxicants of whatever kind are a hindrance and a menace. From Russia, which, by order of the Czar, for fifteen months has been free from the manufacture and sale of vodka, come jubilant words concerning the good effects of prohibition. Instead of suffering from the great burden of war, Russia is prosperous and contented. Its savings are increasing amazingly, its peasants are steady and industrious, and its men are kind fathers and husbands now that vodka no more holds sway over them. Concerning the well-being and prosperity of Russia, a writer in the Toledo Blade has this to say:

"I must confess that I went to Russia consumed with curiosity to see how the Russians were playing the game. Were they enduring this restriction on their self-indulgence merely as a necessary evil growing out of the war? Did they protest openly or in secret? Were the wage-earning classes sulky, and was there much exercise of ingenuity in order to evade the rigor of the law?

"For the severity with which the enactment is carried out, and its impartial application to all classes, I was hardly prepared. I had expected that the traktirs and spirit shops would be closed, or turned into temperance bars, but it certainly came as a splendid surprise to find that those who frequent the most luxurious restaurants in the capitals were also required to share in the self-sacrifice of the masses. One of the first restaurants I went into was the famous Cafe de Paris, in Petrograd. It was thronged with men of all ages; prosperous business men, government officials, officers in military and naval uniforms, taking their midday meal. How indignant they would all have been a year ago if they had been told that their appetite would be as good and their digestive functions work as well without a glass or two of vodka with the zakouska and a bottle of wine with the more substantial courses! Yet how 'fit' and cheerful they all looked—clearer in complexion, trimmer in figure, brighter-eyed than formerly! And the hum of conversation was as convivial as of old.

"As with many modern miracles, the full significance of this one was brought home through the simple things of life. First I noted the general air of well-being and physical firmness among the people; then I marked the transformation in the various classes with which I came in contact. Take, for example, the cab drivers, the izvostichiks, a hard-drinking set of men in old days.

"Many a time in Moscow I have watched them draw up in a quiet cul-de-sac and make a midday meal of two salted cucumbers washed down by great gulps of vodka. The way in which they put the bottle to their lips, tilted back their heads, and let the stuff slide down their throats, proved a long induration to the 'firewater' habit. They were an untidy set of fellows. Yet recently I have sat in cabs behind well-washed necks and well-brushed clothes, and the hands that took my money, and occasionally deigned to give me change, were at least as clean as those of the average taxicabbies in London.

"But while the great towns show wonderful signs of regeneration, it is in rural Russia that we witness the miracle in its most beneficent activity. The emancipation of the serfs in 1861 was not a greater boon for Russia than the emancipation of her peasants from the tyranny of vodka in 1914. A year's abstinence has transformed life in the villages. The Russian peasants are new men and—most hopeful sign of all—they are conscious of the fact."

The Traitor

Adapted from Brooklyn Daily Eagle

Great Britain's Drastic Regulations

While Russia is the only country which has enacted entire prohibition, the sale and manufacture of liquor in Great Britain has been materially restricted. At present public houses are open for the sale of intoxicants for five and one-half hours daily, two and one-half hours at midday and three hours in the evening: Twelve to two-thirty and six-thirty to nine-thirty. No credit is allowed, and no treating.

The "off-trade" ceases at eight-thirty, except as to spirits, which in the first five days of the week may only be sold for outside consumption between twelve noon and two-thirty; and in the "off" and spirit trade, there is total prohibition on Saturdays and Sundays.

On October 11 a law forbidding treating in public houses, hotels and clubs in London went into effect. The measure provides for a heavy fine and imprisonment for violation of the law.

In the populous industrial and munitions district of Liverpool, Glasgow, Newcastle and Barrow, hours for the sale of liquor are practically the same as in London. If these places stand the restrictions in war time, we may assume that there will be no difficulty in retaining them in times of peace.

France has taken drastic measures to restrict the use of intoxicants. Absinthe has been entirely prohibited, and the new regulations governing the sale of alcohol throughout France prohibit wine shops from selling any form of alcohol before noon. Sales to women and children at any hour are forbidden.

Germany is finding out that alcohol must give way in the interest of efficiency, and everywhere total abstinence is being urged. In the district of Berlin and the province of Brandenburg spirits may not be sold to soldiers, and the sale everywhere has been greatly curtailed. Concerning the rules against intoxicants in the Zeppelin service Commander Mathy has said, "Zippelins have neither bar nor kitchen. We have got to have clear heads up there, and cool, steady nerves, nerves that spirits do not furnish. A Zeppelin is the strictest Sunday School institution there is—no drink nor smoke."

In Sweden, since the beginning of the war, and indeed for some time before, there has been a steady and systematic curtailment of the sale of liquor, and it seems but a step to the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic in Sweden. According to a late report the Stockholm system of allowing each citizen only a fixed quantity of spirituous drink, which was inaugurated just after the war started, has now been extended to thirty-one of the one hundred districts in Sweden, and according to a government order will, after January 1, 1916, apply to the whole of Sweden.

Legislation in Other Lands

In Austria-Hungary liquor may be sold only between nine and five in the daytime and none can be sold on Sunday or holidays.

Milan, Italy, has withdrawn 1,800 licenses and this drastic beginning is thought to be merely a first step in the campaign.

Switzerland has suspended the sale of drink under government auspices, and no licenses are now granted to distillers.

MEDICAL MEN DENOUNCE ALCOHOL

Alcohol which for hundreds of years has enjoyed a top-notch position on the drug shelf of the world has been unceremoniously removed, the process being accompanied by many unflattering comments from scientists who have analyzed and scrutinized and metaphorically dissected in their laboratories it and its victims. Not only has alcohol been excluded from the United States Pharmacopoeia, but physicians in increasing numbers in every section of the country and from every school are denying that it has any medicinal virtue and declaring it is always a poison, and that one of the duties of the up-to-date physician is to educate the public concerning its true nature and effects and to work for prohibition legislation.

At a meeting of the Minnesota Medical association held recently in St. Paul, Dr. J. T. Rogers, president, advocated a campaign against alcohol by the physicians of his state. He said in part:

"It becomes of paramount importance to the medical profession to use its influance in a vigorous campaign of enlightenment of the public from a scientifie standpoint. If further argument were needed to convince you of the necessity for immediate and vigorous action, one has only to point to our insane asylums, poorhouses, hospitals, institutions for defectives and our slums."

This meeting also passed strong resolutions in favor of temperance and prohibition.

At the American Institute of Homeopathy which met recently in Chicago, Dr. E. Arthur Carr declared that Homeopathic physicians are ready to espouse the cause of national prohibition. Dr. G. D. Cameron of Chagrin Falls, O., in a plea that the dangers of alcohol be taught more thoroughly in our public schools had this to say:

"The utter desolation alcohol creates in the home makes it like war. Like war, it digs the untimely grave. It pauperizes. Through heredity it creates the neurotic. It damns and degenerates wherever it comes in contact with the human tissue. It paves the way for tuberculosis and is first assistant in disseminating the diseases of vice. Let the forces of enlightenment array themselves where the enemies of society are making their strongest attack. The schools should teach that good health is life's greatest asset."

Twenty-five of twenty-eight Minneapolis physicians whose names were taken at random from the telephone directory by a reporter for the Minneapolis Journal expressed themselves as strongly opposed to alcohol in every form. Below are the statements of some of the physicians:

Habit-Forming Drug

Richard Olding Beard, M. D., assistant dean of the medical school and associate professor of physiology, University of Minnesota:

"Scientists differ as to the fractional value of alcohol as a food. Physicians differ upon the minor value of alcohol as a medicine. Scientific and medical men agree that alcohol is a drug and that it belongs to the group of habit-forming drugs which beget pleasurable but destructive effects. All of them agree that alcohol predisposes the user to disease and is a common cause of insanity. All of them agree that the habitual and even moderate use of alcohol induces tissue changes which lead to chronic disorders and to early death.

"Alcohol undermines the judgment and perverts the moral sense. It is the advance agent of violence, vice and crime. It promotes poverty and fills prisons and penitentiaries. The offspring of the alcoholic bears an hereditary taint and is handicapped by a nervous system prone to insanity, epilepsy and other major faults."

Dr. S. B. Maxeiner: "The so-called moderate user of liquor, though he never indulges to excess, is apt to be the man whose system shows the most degenerate changes. Under the present increased standard demanded by employers, the employed can ill afford to be classed even as a moderate user of alcoholics."

Seriously Affects Posterity

Dr. H. H. Thompson: "An increasingly large percentage of inmates of our asylums, we are finding, were alcoholics or show a history of clearly defined alcoholic parentage. This is of tremendous importance, since it is well understood how close is the relationship of insanity and crime.

"Heredity depends upon the ductless glands of parents. It is a fact that the descendants of alcoholics enter life heavily handicapped if not permanently impaired and only too often become charges of the state. Myxodema and nervous diseases such as idiocy and epilepsy are of constant occurrence among these. The frequency of premature old age among alcoholics is explained by the effect of alcohol on the ductless glands. Among alcoholics tuberculosis is frequent and in pneumonia and acute fevers the mortality rate is very high because of the diminution of the powers of resistance to infection."

The Foe of Efficiency

Dr. D. Edmund Smith: "Efficiency is the watchword today in the economic world. The greatest foe to mental and physical efficiency is the moderate use of alcohol. The power of the body to resist disease depends upon the quantity of a chemical substance in the cells of the tissues called antibodies. The antibodies, producing immunity, are easily destroyed by the presence of alcohol in the system, hence it is that even moderate drinkers do not withstand infectious diseases nor severe physical strain as well as non-users."

Dr. G. D. Head expressed his opinion as follows: "The moderate, steady drinker causes more serious damage to his organs than the man who takes his drinking bouts in sprees. The man who drinks to excess periodically harms not so much himself as those about him. It is the steady, moderate user of spirituous liquor that develops the organic diseases of the liver, the heart and the brain. In these persons the effect of disease creeps on so slowly and insidiously that the steady drinker who takes his few glasses of beer, wine or whisky from day to day is scarcely aware of the serious condition which is slowly developing within the organs of his body."

Dr. Henry Williams, of New York, an eminent specialist in nervous and mental diseases, has summed up his investigations concerning alcohol in these words:

"I am bound to believe, on the evidence, that if you take alcohol habitually in any quantity whatever, it is to some extent a menace to you. If you do this, I am bound to believe in the light of what science has revealed:

Five Reasons Worth Learning

"1. That you are tangibly threatening the physical structures of your stomach, your liver and kidneys, your heart, your blood vessels, your nerves, and brain;

"2. That you are unequivocally decreasing your capacity for working in any field, be it physical, intellectual, or artistic.

"3. That you are in some measure lowering the grade of your mind, dulling your higher esthetic sense, and taking the finer edge off your morals.

"4. That you are distinctly lessening your chances for maintaining health and attaining long life; and,

"5. That you are entailing upon your descendants yet unborn a bond of incalculable misery."

No Such Thing as a "Medicinal" Whisky

Alcohol puts to sleep the sentinels that guard your body from disease. Policy holders are warned against advertisements extolling the virtue of whisky in disease. The callous cruelty of such advertisements lies in the fact that they appeal to the very people who are most injured by the use of alcohol—sufferers from rheumatism, chronic kidney disease, nervous subjects, etc. THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS A "MEDICINAL" WHISKY.

—From Bulletin No. 5, issued by the Postal Life Insurance Co., New York

Courtesy of the Chicago Daily News

Seen in the Chicago Parade

CHICAGO ON PARADE FOR DRY CITY

Courtesy of the Chicago Evening Post

Lady Bountiful Float

A powerful demonstration of the strength of the anti-liquor forces in the second largest city in the United States was the parade of the Chicago Dry Federation on the afternoon of Saturday, October 9, "Chicago Day," a fitting occasion for a demonstration indicative of the best thought and purpose of the citizens of the Illinois metropolis. Despite a nipping October wind which blew directly off the lake the sun shone with vigor, and Chicagoans in large numbers turned out to march and sing and ride for temperance. For three hours the opponents of Old King Alcohol made the loop district echo with the tramp of feet as they exultantly marched between throngs of people which everywhere lined the sidewalks and looked down from balconies of adjoining buildings. Traffic was stopped in a considerable part of the city, and Chicago gave itself up to a consideration of the demonstration of that element of the city's population which is aiming to make Chicago dry at the spring election.

In addition to the 6,000 marchers there were 105 floats carrying 2,500 people, ten bands and 270 automobiles with their burden of temperance enthusiasts. Horsemen and horsewomen led each of the twelve divisions of the procession, and bands were interspersed at regular intervals.

Thirty-five of the Chicago police headed the procession as it started. Closely following came the Salvation Army band and the grand marshal, Rev. A. R. Clark, with Bishop Samuel Fallows, Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones and Rev. A. C. Miller.

Ministers of Rock River Conference Among Marchers

A cohort of 400 Methodist ministers of the Rock River conference with Bishop W. F. McDowell, Bishop Theodore S. Henderson and Dr. Charles M. Stuart, president of Garrett Biblical Institute, in the lead was next in line. Hon. W. W. Bennett, Rockford's prohibition mayor and a possible candidate for governor of Illinois, rode in one of the first automobiles.

The cross streets for many blocks were crowded to overflowing with marchers, floats and automobiles, representing the Anti-Saloon League, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Young People's Civic League, the Chicago Law and Order League, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., Moody Bible Institute, Baptist Missionary Training School, McCormick Seminary, the Salvation Army, Catholic temperance societies, the churches and Sunday schools and many other organizations, each battalion eagerly awaiting its turn to fall in line.

PARADE PLACARDS

"A beef joint beats a booze joint."

"The path of misery leads from the saloon door."

"You can't buy dry goods with money spent for wet goods."

"The cause of drunkenness is license; the cure is total abstinence."

"One home in four must furnish a boy for the saloon. What about your boy?"

"Chicago knows enough to come in out of the wet."

"We'll make the water wagon our jitney bus."

"A dry Chicago means a clean Chicago."

"Who gets your next pay envelope?"

"The saloon is the poor man's club that kicks him out after he has paid his dues."

"Nineteen dry states. Come on in, Illinois! The water's fine."

"The last to be hired, the first to be fired—the boozer."

"Nothing to drink Sunday; clear head Monday."

"When you down booze, that is personal liberty; when booze downs you, that is slavery."

Variation in Floats

The liquor demon with its brood of black-shrouded satellites—drunkenness, poverty, gambling, insanity, robbery, murder, disease and death—presented with shuddering reality the evil traffic in intoxicants. Drunkards' families were portrayed—the man intoxicated, the woman at the wash tub, the children untidy and poorly dressed. A number of floats named the nineteen prohibition states by placard and otherwise. At intervals through the parade were water wagons bearing the words, "Safe Place." The Y. W. C. A. and the Eleanor Club for Girls were represented by beautiful floats while that of Lady Bountiful, pictured on this page, was decorated with money obtained through the sale of jewels belonging to a woman whose life had been saddened by liquor's dread touch.

Saloon Victims in Line

Real patrons of the saloons, hired for the occasion, demonstrated what the saloon does to those who patronize it. Children of drinking parents, poorly dressed and forlorn, marched under the banner, "Booze never did us any good." Boy Scouts in uniform, men representing the missions of Chicago and other righteous enterprises carried appropriate banners and announced, as they marched, that "Chicago's Going Dry."

Campaign Songs Popular

The rousing songs and rally cries of the marchers aroused answering enthusiasm as waving pennants joyfully predicted the downfall of alcohol in Chicago. Until throats were hoarse and nearly incapable of speech the songs rang out. For example:

"Chicago's going dry, Chicago's going dry,
Pass along the watchword, Chicago's going dry,
Chicago's going dry, Chicago's going dry,
Pass along the watchword, Chicago's going dry.

"Rally, rally, all Chicago,
Rally, rally, all Chicago,
Rally, rally, all Chicago,
The whisky shops must go!"

Two men on the sidewalk carrying a case of beer found themselves singing a battle-cry of the drys, and they left behind them a wake of smiles. Words which predicted the victory of prohibition in Chicago were also sung to the tunes of college and stein songs, and everywhere along the sidewalk the watchers joined in the familiar strains.

Courtesy o jthe Chicago Evening Post

Liquor and Its Brood

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1 00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter

463

Evanston, Illinois, October 21-28, 1915

TO SUBSCRIBERS

We wish to assure subscribers who may notice that this week's issue is a combination number, October 21-28, that every subscriber will receive the full fifty-two issues for the year. The November 4 issue will contain the first installment of the report of the National W. C. T. U. Convention—the address of the president and the reports of the National corresponding secretary and the acting treasurer, with other valuable and interesting matter relating to the great meeting at Seattle. The three Convention report numbers will be sent for 10 cents. We urge the placing of advance orders.

DRYS WELCOME MAYOR THOMPSON

A host of citizens, eager to show their appreciation of Mayor William Hale Thompson's action in ordering the enforcement in Chicago of the state law closing saloons on Sunday, was at the station to welcome the city executive on his return from a trip to the Pacific Coa Later he spoke at two great mass meetings where his declarations that he meant to stand firm for the enforcement of the law were greeted with ringing cheers. Sunday closing has resulted in a weekly estimated saving to saloon patrons of $400,000, the usual Sunday drink bill of Chicago. Arrests for drunkenness and crime have been greatly reduced.

NEW YORK SUFFRAGE PARADE

An enthusiastic suffrage parade took place in New York on the afternoon of Saturday, October 23. About 32,000 people were in line, 10,000 of them men. The larger part of the population of Manhattan viewed the pageant. Armies of suffrage supporters came from all five boroughs, from New Jersey and from many upstate counties to show the voters their duty. Mayor Mitchel and other prominent city officials watched the parade until the close of the spectacle, which ended by moonlight. New Jersey suffragists walked under a banner inscribed: "Delayed but not defeated." New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts vote on suffrage November 2 carry through to victory a state-wide prohibition campaign. The key-note of the meeting that evening was "Wyoming is going dry" and every speaker voiced words of encouragement and prophecy along that line. After a message of greeting by a prominent attorney of the city, Miss Gordon, as the presiding officer, introduced Mrs. Boole, Mrs. Parks, Mrs. Beauchamp, Mrs. Hoge, Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Livingston, who gave short, pointed, trenchant speeches. Nineteen of the young women of the official party, each representing a prohibition state, rendered with telling effect the chorus of "John Barleycorn, Goodby," and "It's a Short, Short Way to Prohibition."

Campaigners Crossing the Continent

(Continued from Page Three)

A good rest on Wednesday night in the luxurious sleepers of the Union Pacific prepared the travelers for the continuous moving picture presented for their enjoyment all day Thursday. This wonderful panorama, the constantly varying and always beautiful scenery of the great American desert with frequent oases of cultivated farmland, the lonely habitations and the thriving villages and towns, the distant snow-clad mountains, the mountain streams, the extensive sheep and cattle ranches—all these kept interest at the high water mark all day.

At three o'clock in the afternoon the train reached Pocatello, Idaho. The Idaho white ribbon sisters, with characteristic thoughtfulness and generosity, came down to "cheer the weary travelers on their way" and brought with them a wagon-load of luscious Idaho fruit—apples, pears, peaches, plums, grapes. These they distributed in generous measure, and everybody went on their way with hands full of fruit and hearts full of gratitude. The time of the stay at Pocatello being limited, a meeting was held on the station platform, an improvised rostrum being provided for the speakers. Mrs. Barrett, of the Pocatello W. C. T. U., introduced Mr. D. C. Gray, a member of the state legislature, who presented Miss Gordon. He referred to the inspiration he had received many years ago from meeting and listening to Frances Willard. Minute women of the W. C. T. U., who can give in a two or three minute speech an immense amount of c centrated logic, wisdom and eloquence, then were introduced by Miss Gordon and spoke most delightfully. The presence in the audience of a company of fresh-faced high school boys and girls gave the speakers an opportunity to address the future citizens of the state. A genius at leading in the yell was the young man who headed the high school students, and so well did he do his work that Miss Gordon and Mrs. Frances Graham called him to the platform to stand with the as he helped to voice the white ribbon cheer Before the meeting was over the speakers added to the young folks' yells two significant ones: "Beer is bad. Whisky's worse. I drink water, Safety first." And "There's one saloon that I can close. It lies between my chin and nose." These were given with great enthusiasm by the young folks. During almost the entire meeting, there sat at the feet of Miss Gordon a dear little lad, to whom she gave the beautiful silk flag that she carried, and as the speakers referred to our future citizens and the purpose of the W. C. T. U. to make a clean state and nation for the boys and girls, the presence of the little child in the midst served to emphasize and make more impressive their remarks.

James Whitcomb Riley Meeting

Thursday, October 7, being the birthday of the Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, it was planned to celebrate it on the Special. As many as could be accommodated gathered in one of the centrally located cars. Selections from the poet were given by talented young women, and Mrs. Frances W. Graham, our versatile National musical director, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, Miss Rose Davison and others entertained the company with impersonations, readings, and stories.

Early in the trip the inmates of each car were organized, and there was observed the noon-tide hour of prayer and, as the evening hour approached, a brief vesper service.

The travelers on the Special constantly realized, and always with gratitude, that they were being "personally conducted" —in a very generous interpretation of the words. From Chicago to Cheyenne, they were accompanied by Mr. H. A. Gross, general passenger agent of the Chicago & North Western Railroad, who extended every courtesy possible. He gave to each member of the party a dainty little notebook bearing upon its cover the emblem of the organization, the white ribbon, and the names of the General Officers. Beautiful fragrant blossoms adorned the observation car all through the trip. From Cheyenne we were under the personal conduct of Mr. J. O. Goodsell, city passenger agent of the Union Pacific, who spared no pains to make every one comfortable and happy. The white ribboners were especially interested in the cards to be found not only in the dining car but in prominent places elsewhere, giving a most attractive list of non-alcoholic beverages as follows:

Apollinaris water; White Rock water; Shasta water; Idan-ha water; Poland spring water; Celestins French vichy; Hathorn water; Buffalo Lithia water (still); Manitou water; Manitou ginger champagne; Ginger ale, imported; Club soda, imported; Sheboygan ginger ale; Sarsaparilla, imported; Red and White Calwa, a pure, health-giving non-alcoholic beverage, made from California wine grapes; Grape juice; Oregon loganberry juice; Oregon loganberry juice high ball; sparkling apple j ; lemonade, mineral water; lemonade, plain. In regard to this list, Mr. Goodsell explained that the railroads all over the country were finding it most inconvenient and undesirable to serve alcoholic beverages in dining cars. With the spread of dry territory, he stated, it was impossible to do this for any considerable distance without breaking the law, and that they were gradually abandoning the serving of these drinks in favor of the non-alcoholic beverages. In order to serve notice to this effect on passengers and patrons and to bring these new and appetizing drinks to their attention, they are giving prominence to these lists.

On Oregon Ground

Oregon's sunshine, Oregon's invigorating mountain air, Oregon's matchless scenery greeted the travelers as they opened their eyes the next morning. At Pendleton, famous for its "round-ups" and cowboys, was the first stop, and here the passengers were again "showered" with fruit, luscious apples being thrust into willing hands. Dr. Tape, head of the Hot Lake Sanitarium, and Mrs. Tape joined the Special at Pendleton, as did also Mr. Atkinson of the O. W. R. & N. R. R., and added much to the pleasure of the travelers by pointing out locations of special interest along the way. Dr. Tape's sanitarium will be remembered as the place where our loved National treasurer, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, was so tenderly cared for during the last months of her earthly life.

The National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle, Washington, which has just closed, was one of the most successful and inspiring in the history of the organization. A net increase in membership of 29,711 was shown. Delegations from all parts of the United States were present and gains and advancement in every department of work were reported. Plymouth Congregational church was filled at each meeting with enthusiastic audiences. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Miss Anna A. Gordon; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Ella A. Boole; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances P. Parks; recording secretary, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge; treasurer, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns.

Oregon President Joins Party at The Dalles

Not content to greet us at Portland and offer there the abundant hospitality for which Oregon is noted, Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., came on to The Dalles to meet the Special. Mrs. Kemp was for so many years a member of the National W. C. T. U. Headquarters family that the arrival partook of an ovation for her. The citizens of The Dalles had provided a sumptuous luncheon for the entire party. They were escorted to the armory and seated at long tables decorated with beautiful Oregon fruit and blossoms. At the head of one table sat the mayor of The Dalles, Dr. J. E. Anderson, a member of the state legislature and the "father of Oregon's prohibition bill." After the delegates had partaken of a most delicious luncheon, Dr. Anderson and Dr. Evans, the minister of one of the local churches, spoke words of welcome, to which Miss Gordon and Mrs. Boole responded. As the guests rose to leave, they were invited to carry with them the abundant and luscious fruit which adorned the tables, and the procession that marched through the streets of the hospitable and progressive city resembled a harvest home festival, for each person bore in her hands a cluster of purple grapes, or a sun-kissed apple or pear.

Portland Greets the Travelers

With happiest memories of the great convention held three years ago in the city of Portland, the travelers on the Special approached the City of Roses. Most of the delegates went straight through to Portland and were met at the station by automobiles which, through the courtesy of citizens and automobile manufacturers, were provided for the purpose of giving the visitors a ride over the beautiful metropolis of Oregon. We understand that Mrs. Helen Ayer Davenport of the Portland W. C. T. U. was the moving spirit in this happy scheme for the pleasure of the delegates. By special arrangement the General Officers and a few others of the party were taken in automobiles from Multnomah Falls to Portland, over the Columbia Highway, through thirty miles of indescribably beautiful scenery. This highway is one of the most magnificent roadways of the world, constructed of bitulithic pavement which makes a perfectly smooth and lasting roadbed. The road follows the course of the beautiful Columbia river and is expected to extend to the eastern boundary of Oregon. This section of the party was taken directly to the Portland Surgical Hospital, from which dear Elizabeth Hutchinson only a few months ago said her good-by to this world. In the party were some of her most intimate friends and associates from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Kansas and other states. It was a rare privilege to them to meet Dr. Erickson, the superintendent of the hospital, and the nurses who ministered so tenderly and lovingly to the dear one. To Mrs. Jennie Kemp, one of Mrs. Hutchinson's long time and intimate friends, came the happy thought not long ago to install in this hospital a memorial library to Mrs. Hutchinson, its volumes to be circulated among the patients in the hospital. Already there have been given and are now in the library over fifty volumes and any one who desires to help in this memorial and thereby have a part in relieving the tedium and loneliness of the sick and the convalescent, may send the money to Mrs. Kemp, who will expend it in the purchase of some suitable volume.

Portland Banquets White Ribboners

Oregon has a royal way of doing things. The Chamber of Commerce and the Multnomah W. C. T. U. arranged for the visiting white ribboners a most delightful reception and banquet. The beautiful rooms of the Chamber of Commerce were decorated with blossoms and vines. At the banquet which followed the reception, the table decorations were especially unique and artistic, the dahlia in all its multitude of varieties being used for this purpose. The tables intended for the different delegations were indicated by place-cards having the different state flowers painted upon them. The dahlias, of which there was a great abundance, were presented by the owner of an immense dahlia farm, who not only gave the flowers but sent a man to arrange them.

Great credit for the perfect arrangements for the banquet is due Mrs. G. L. Buland, Scientific Temperance Instruction superintendent for the Oregon W. C. T. U. After a delicious five-course menu, Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the state W. C. T. U., who presided, introduced Mayor Albee as the mayor whom the women had elected and who was never called out of town when the W. C. T. U. wanted him to speak. The burst of applause that greeted him testified to the fame of Portland's mayor all over the United States. Many recalled, no doubt, Mayor Albee's participation in the great Christian Citizenship parade a few years ago when, with his Bible class of young men, each of whom carried a Bible, he marched at the head of a great company through the streets of the city.

"My first recollections were of the white ribbon," said the mayor. "As a child I was in close contact with it. Both of my grandmothers wore it and I remember it from earliest days. It is something to have an ancestry of that kind even if one cannot do much on one's own account. I can claim something through my grandmothers even though I did not select them." "It is always pleasant to be in a gathering of this size," he remarked further, "where I do not have to turn down my glass. I welcome you most heartily to Portland and to Oregon—to Oregon which will be dry in a few weeks."

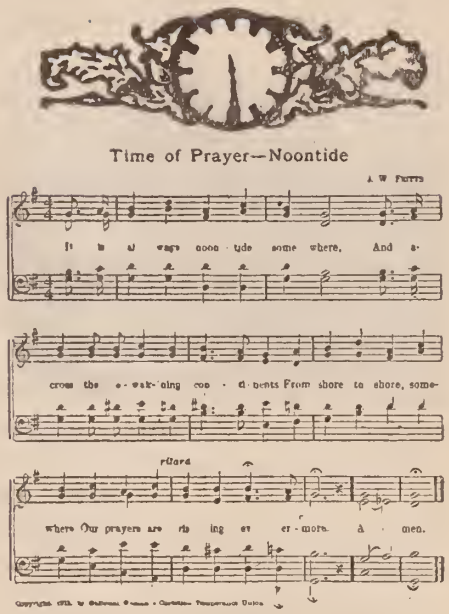
Mr. C. M. Clark, vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce, congratulated the organization on its success, and Mr. Phil S. Bates, president of the federated state societies, traced the history of the temperance movement in Oregon down to its present happy state and prophesied that the time would be short until John Barleycorn would be an outlaw everywhere.

Mrs. Robert Tate spoke for the Pacific Coast Child Welfare Commission, paying a beautiful tribute to the white ribbon organization and to its leaders, Frances E. Willard and Miss Gordon.

Mrs. Mattie Sleeth, president of Multnomah county W. C. T. U., in a most original and witty speech told of the two milleniums that Oregon had experienced since they had last entertained the National Convention, the milleniums of suffrage and prohibition.

Greatly to the regret of the guests, Governor Withycombe, who had expected to be present, was out of the city on that evening, but as Mrs. Kemp stated, his heart was with us, as was evidenced by the fact that only two days before he had delivered at the state W. C. T. U. convention a ringing speech for

(Continued on Page Fourteen)



GET SOMEBODY ELSE

The Lord had a job for me,
But I had so much to do
I said, "You get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through."
I don't know how the Lord came out,
But He seemed to get along;
But I felt a kind o' sneakin'-like—
Knowed I'd done God wrong.

One day I needed the Lord,
Needed Him right away,
But He never answered me at all,
And I could hear Him say
Down in my accusing heart,
"Nigger, I'se got too much to do;
You get somebody else,
Or wait till I get through."

Now, when the Lord He have a job for me,
I never tries to shirk;
I drops what I have on hand,
And does the good Lord's work.
And my affairs can run along,
Or wait till I get through;
Nobody else can do the work
That God marked out for you.

—PAUL LAWRENCE DUNBAR.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, EVANSTON, ILL.

*Promoted.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

NOVEMBER 14—World's Temperance Sunday.

ACTING TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND

LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

FRANCES P. PARKS

The following contributions to these funds have been received since last report, in each case $2 unless otherwise specified:

Alabama: Hartselle, Huntsville, Union Springs, Fort Payne $3.40, S. S. Decatur, East Lake, Blaine (West End). Total $15.40.

Oregon: Woodburn, Belleone, Drain, Walloma, Highland, Philomath, Grants Pass. Total $14.

Minnesota: Willmar, Ida Y. P. B., Central, St. Paul, Redwood Falls, Truman, Vernon Center, Glenwood, Austin, Cherry Grove, Nashville, Orono, Fergus Falls, Worthington, Mabel, Arlington Hills—St. Paul, Hoffman, Hanley Falls, Crookston, Frazee, Huickley, Monticello, Myrtle Watson—Minneapolis, Granada, Brainerd, Backus, Clinton, Roosevelt, Eureka, Eighth Ward L. T. L. $.50. Total $57.

Maine: Wayne, Milltown, Belfast, Searsmont $1, Smyrna Mills, Mechanic Falls, Friendship $1, South Orrington, Thomaston, Union, Lincoln, Monroe, Cumberland Mills L. T. L. $1. Total $23.

West Washington: Olympia (West), Oak Harbor, Fir Grove, Rolling Bay, Seattle (South Park), Camas $2.50, Laurel $1, Seattle Central $3, North Anacortis, Concrete, Sedro Woolley, Chehalis, South Anacortis, Fairhaven, Everett, Willard, Burlington, North Bend, Woodland Park, Des Moines. Total $38.50

Georgia: Augusta, Brunswick, Claxton, Union Pacart, Sandersville $3, Columbus Rose Hill, Ashburn, Barnesville L. T. L. $1.20, Bainbridge, Dublin, Dowson, Douglasville, Quitman, Thomaston, Chauncey, Atlanta, Savannah, Macon $1, Buena Vista, Zebulon, Calquitt, Norcross, Griffin, Patterson, Thomasville, Eastmon $2.75, Oxford $2.05, Statesboro, Tennelle, Davisboro, Ellonville (Susie S. Smith) $1.50, Rome, Blaenshor. Total $63.50.

Kentucky: Mount Sterling, Louisville (East End, Central), Eminence, Winchester No. 2. Total $8.50.

South Dakota: $43, Wagner. Total $45.

Rhode Island: $5, Portsmouth, Willard Y. P. B. Total $9.

Florida: Redland, Madison, Rappon Springs, Stark, Inverness. Total $10.

North Carolina: $5, Bethal, Stoneville, Washington, Ashville, Weldon, $.50, Spencer $2.50, Rockford $1. Total $17.

New Hampshire: Franklin $6, Concord $5, Keene $3, Dover $3, Portsmouth $3, West Unity $1, Acworth $1, Candia $1, Stratham $2.60, Claremont, Whitefield, Antrim, Boscowen, Sunapee, Newfield, Hampton Falls, Marlboro, Hollis, Warner, Epping, Lakeport, Meredith, Pittsfield, Laconia, Gonic, Peterboro, Greenville, Littleton, Lebanon, E. Manchester, Errol, Manchester, Rochester, Danville, Plymouth, Exeter, Newmarket, Nashua, West Rindge, Fitzwilliam $1.50, Kenne Y. P. B. and Hinsdale $1, Center Sandwich, East Colebrook, Hampton, Epson. Total $97.10.

New Jersey: Florence, Bradley Beach, Plainfield, Silver Lake, Greenwich, Shiloh, Paterson, Passaic, Oak Ridge, Freehold $1, Deerfield $1, Paulsboro $1, Jersey City (Eliz. G. Freeman L. T. L.) $1, Bergen Point (Vivirs Y. P. B) $1, Newark No. 1, Roseville Y. P. B. $2.50, Orange (Harriett Williams) L. T. L. $.25, Stanhope, Vailsburg, Summit, Newark No. 2, Rutherford, Peapack & Gladstone Y. P. B. Bedminster & Far Hills L. T. L. $1, Roselle & Roselle Park, Butler & Bloomingdale, Columbus, Riverside, Bridgeboro $1, Jacobstown, Florence Y. P. B., Mauricetown $1, Bridgeton No. 1, Port Norris, West Hoboken (Palisades), Jersey City (Goodwin Y. P. B.) $3, Union Chapel, Mendham, Madison, Atlantic City No. 1, Tucherton, Washington, Blairstown, West Collingswood, Englishtown, Keyport. Total $83.75.

Ohio: Nevada, Wakeman, La Fayette $1, Miss Rose Davison, Plain City $1, Gomer $1.45, Branch City, Burbank, Ashville, Tiro, Cuyahoga Falls, Cora Daniels Union, Slater Y. P. B. $3, Uhrichsville, Collins $1, Richwood $1.36, Leesburg, Valley Grove, Collins Y. P. B. $1, Cambridge $2.50, Dresdon, Wafakoneta, Bluffton $6.52, Johnston, Wauseon, Martel Y. P. B., New Richmond, Cook. Total $56.83.

Connecticut: Old Mystic, S. Wellington, Hartford, Woodbury, Winsted, New Britain $4, Plymouth $.50, Sterling $1, Willimantic L. T. L. $.75. Total $16.25.

Mississippi: W. $38.65, Y. P. B. $7.25, L. T. L. $1. Total $46.90.

Utah: $11.20.

Arkansas: Siloam Springs, Mansfield. Total $4.

Indiana: Darlington $1, Vanderburg county $8.71, Oak Chapel, Grant, Moores Hill, Cold Spring $1.50, Richmond McCall, South Bend (Chapin Park), Everton (Fayette county) $1.10, Aarron Worth (Grant county) $1.50, Millersburg (Elkhart county) $1, Union City (Frances Willard) $1, Logansport, Fairview (Clay county), Roanoke (Huntington county) $1.25, Hartford City, Center (Wayne county), Francesville, Lillian M. N. Stevens (Henry county), Indianapolis (Thurman). Total $39.06.

Kansas: Ashland, Augusta $1.30, Burr Oak, Burdette, Caldwell, Chikaskia, Council Grove, Conway Springs, Downs, Eskridge $5, Fairview, Ft. Scott (South Side), Greensburg, Goodland, Gridley, Garland, Horton $1, Haviland, Highland, Iola, Kansas City (Argentine, Grandview), Lyons, Lakin, Manhattan (Willard), Minneola, Mound City, Nickerson $.50, North Branch, Oakland, Pratt, Phillipsburg, Pretty Prairie, Rosedale, Ransom, Ransom L. T. L. $1, Severy, Topeka (West Side, North), Wichita (Central, Gordon, Stevens, Y. P. B.), Yates Center $1, Harveyville, Alta Vista, Nortonville. Total $91.80.

Louisiana: $25.30.
North California: $12.
Iowa: $65.
South Carolina: $4.15.
Vermont: $5.
South-Carolina No. 2: $8.50.
Maryland: $22.50.
West Virginia: $11.
Arizona: $12.50.
North Idaho: $10.
Nevada: $4.
Missouri: Bronough $1.40.
Delaware: $4.

Campaign Fund

Mrs. Ella H. Thacher: $100.
Ruth J. Frank: $1.
Kansas City Pledges: $50.12.
New York: $70.66.
Maine: $75.90.
North Dakota: $25.45.
Minnesota: $30.57.
Oklahoma: $17.85.
Wisconsin: $7.40.
Ohio: $7.
Iowa (1/2): $38.
Louisiana:. $3.65.
Illinois: $16.49.
Kentucky: $4.35.
Rhode Island: $11.50.
South Carolina: $7.54.
South Carolina No. 2: $1.
Vermont: $1.
West Virginia: $5.50.
Georgia: $6.30.
North Idaho: $2.50.
Virginia: $22.35, Christine Tinling $50. Total $72.35.
Connecticut: Willimantic (W., L. T. L $1), Scotland, Plymouth $.50, Norwic' $5. Total $10.50.
South Idaho: $5.
Missouri: $68.81.
Connecticut: $10.50.
Texas: $6.25.
Kansas: $36.75.
Maryland: $2.
New Jersey: $22.55.
Massachusetts: $113.61.
Alabama: $7.40 (½).
Colorado: $2.20.
Illinois: $13.72.

Pennsylvania: Sharpsburg & Etna Kittanning $1, Smith's Ferry and Mid land $1, New Brighton $1, Aliquippa $5 Ambridge, Fallston $3, Patterson Height and Riverview $3, North East, Altoon $1, Duncansville $.50, Canton $1, Ulste

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

PENNSYLVANIA RECORD REVEALS REMARKABLE PROGRESS

Special Correspondence

Would not any state be proud to receive the following telegram from our National president and well-beloved friend, Miss Anna Adams Gordon? "Heartiest congratulations on being again our banner state in membership. To have duplicated your magnificent gain of last year and once more carry off the laurels is a great tribute to leaders as well as to rank and file. Warm welcome and whole-souled appreciation await you at the National Convention in Seattle." The gain in membership was 6,172, making a total of 43,511.

The forty-first annual convention of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. was a record-breaker in attendance, prompt dispatch of business (that the delegates might be enabled to reach the National Convention in due time), earnestness, splendid array of good speakers, and full delegations.

Among the speakers, besides our own Mrs. George, Madam Layyah Barakat, Mrs. A. B. Parsels, and Miss Amanda Landes, were Honorable Richmond P. Hobson, Honorable M. Clyde Kelly, Mr. Daniel Poling, Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Mrs. Mecca Marie Varney and Mrs. Oliver W. Stewart. It is needless to say that the three brothers named arose to the occasion and did not forget fully to endorse woman suffrage.

Sixteen white ribboners spoke in the various churches on Sunday. Madam Barakat preached the convention sermon and gave two interesting and helpful Bible readings.

The address of the president was able and eloquent, portraying the wonderful advance made by temperance forces all over the world and the triumphs scored by the women voters in driving out saloons. Mrs. George called for still more earnest effort to secure the adoption of the amendment on November 2.

Mrs. E. P. Griest, superintendent of Franchise, in conducting the exercises of the hour, said: "The program calls this a 'franchise demonstration,' but the real franchise demonstration will be on November 2, when the men of the state will demonstrate their chivalry by voting 'yes' on the suffrage amendment."

Mrs. Leah Cobb Marion, the efficient treasurer, reported gratifying results.

After many years of faithful work Mrs. Elma M. Preston has stepped aside with the title of honorary secretary of the Young People's Branch and by her wise counsel is helping the new secretary, Miss Edna M. Smiley, who conducted the conference of this branch and proved that the girls were well able to "speak out in meeting."

Saturday afternoon saw the most enthusiastic event of the convention when over one hundred L. T. L.'s gave their songs, rally cries and recitations. The chorus of the final number, "Glory, Glory Hallelujah! The Nation's Going Dry," had to be repeated and repeated indefinitely.

The superintendents' conference was presided over by Mrs. Ella B. Black, National and state superintendent of Work Among Foreign Speaking People. An interesting object at the convention was the large map arranged by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. B. Norrish, showing the sixty-seven counties divided into five classes.

The one definite task enjoined upon the women is to work for the suffrage amendment up to election day, November 2.

The officers were re-elected.

WYOMING CONVENTION A SENTIMENT MAKER

Special Correspondence

The crowning event of the thirty-second convention of the Wyoming W. C. T. U. at Laramie was the reception given at its close by the faculty of the state university in the Women's Hall. The spacious rooms were tastefully decorated and delicious refreshments were served by the young ladies of the Domestic Science department.

The convention was attended by a much larger delegation than ever before in the history of the state. Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, Dr. Emma Drake and Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford were the speakers, and special music was arranged by Mrs. Sawyer and Mrs. Hettie Lewis Van Tyne. Enthusiastic mass meetings were held in the various churches, the mayor, the pastors, the Woman's Club, the superintendent of public schools and the university all co-operating with the W. C. T. U. to make it a complete success. The meetings were well reported in the local press by Mrs. Van Tyne, and much valuable information was thus disseminated which will greatly assist in the campaign for state-wide prohibition. Dr. Ellen J. Wetlaufer, who for nine years has been the efficient president, was made honorary president by acclamation, and Mrs. Anna Allison of Cheyenne was elected president for the ensuing year.

Wyoming has gained one hundred per cent in new members during the year. The convention created prohibition sentiment to a marked degree.

UTAH WHITE RIBBONERS CELEBRATE SILVER JUBILEE

Special Correspondence

The twenty-fifth annual convention of the Utah W. C. T. U. was held in the beautiful little city of Mt. Pleasant. It was the best and most enthusiastic meeting yet held. The local union had made complete arrangements for the comfort of the delegates and the weather was glorious.

The Mt. Pleasant L. T. L., under the leadership of Miss Winnifred Jensen and Miss Sargent, gave a most commendable and highly appreciated entertainment. "Columbia's Washday" made a hit with the crowd that packed the North Ward meeting house to overflowing. Mrs. H. W. Pratt, who planned it, acted the part of Columbia, and Mrs. C. A. Root was at the wash-tub. As state after state was hung upon the line, cheer after cheer broke from the audience, and when poor old Utah was shown with smut and smudge all over it, Columbia suggested to the audience that it would be a good thing to put Utah in a new governor compound!

Mrs. Shepard delivered one of her famous addresses, "The Traffic Doomed," which called out time and again the most vociferous applause. She also spoke at the Presbyterian Academy and to the high school students.

Mrs. G. W. Martin, a former state president, gave a most interesting "Look Backward" over the early history of the W. C. T. U. in Utah, and this was followed by a "Look Forward" by the state officers.

Mrs. Ormsby of Portland, Oregon, gave an inspiring and helpful address on "Temperance Teaching in the Sabbath School." A number of Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist mission teachers contributed to the success of the different meetings.

The officers elected are as follows: President, Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard; vice-president, Mrs. C. A. Walker; corresponding secretary, Miss Leota S. Kennedy; recording secretary, Mrs. H. W. Pratt; treasurer, Mrs. Q. R. Craft.

RHODE ISLAND W. C. T. U. IN SESSION

Special Correspondence

Rhode Island held its forty-first annual convention in the M. E. church of Westerly. Delightful weather, artistic decorations, unlimited hospitality and a large delegation of representatives from local unions made the convention one of the best in the history of the state. The usual reports of department superintendents were dispensed with and the work illustrated by a mammoth poster parade around the church and across the platform.

The National and state papers were represented by demonstrations, that of THE UNION SIGNAL being quite spectacular. It was in the form of a charade, the first word being illustrated by a class of young ladies, who sang a chorus in which the word "Union" was prominent. The next word, "Signal," was given by a squad of Boy Scouts, who signaled with flags. The completed word, UNION SIGNAL, was represented by a lady dressed in a costume made of covers of the paper itself.

The treasurer's report showed the state membership to be 1,848, the largest for many years.

The speaker for the first evening was Mrs. Anna C. M. Tillinghast of Massachusetts, who gave a stirring and masterly address on "The So-called Advantages of the Liquor Traffic." The second evening a treat was provided for the audience in the form of a reading from "The Man Who Forgot," by Miss Adelaide Patterson, teacher of elocution at the state normal school.

The decorations were very attractive. Nineteen white streamers bearing the names of the prohibition states extended from the center of the ceiling to the sides of the church and attracted much attention.

HARD ON CHILDREN

When Teacher Has Coffee Habit

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher down in Miss. says: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously.

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to directions; found it excellent of flavor, and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

NEW YORK CONVENTION A RECORD BREAKER

Special Correspondence

The forty-second annual convention of the New York W. C. T. U., held in Ithaca, the home of Cornell University, was a wonderful success. The president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, as always, proved a most remarkable presiding officer. She kept everything moving right along with plenty of snap. No time was lost and a remarkable amount of work was accomplished. The Ithaca women left no stone unturned to entertain the convention well. The decorations of the church were unique. Above the center of the platform hung a large electrically illuminated white ribbon. Banners and flags were everywhere and a profusion of palms and flowers. Suspended in mid-air from the church to the opposite side of the street was a large convention sign, which attracted the notice of people approaching from every direction. During an intermission every afternoon tea was served to all delegates and friends by the missionary societies of Ithaca.

The convention was the largest in the history of the state. The delegates numbered five hundred and thirty-five, and at almost every session there were about one thousand people in the audience.

At an "Efficiency Congress," presided over by Mrs. Harriet S. Pritchard, chairman of the board of superintendents, each superintendent had an opportunity to present her department, in addition to the usual time accorded her during the convention proper.

The annual address of Mrs. Ella A. Boole was masterful. Some one said of it: "There was never a more complete or comprehensive president's address." She touched on all phases of the year's work in the prohibition field and many of the recommendations adopted by the convention were proposed by her. "There is not one phase of progress indicated in the happenings of the past year which is not covered by some of our departments of work," said Mrs. Boole. "The Do-Everything policy of the W. C. T. U. is vindicated and the need of today is continued emphasis on department work. Let us do all we can to win the ballot, and then let us study how to use it in such a way that we shall contribute to the moral advancement of state and nation."

Mrs. Boole's financial plan was joyfully received and adopted. New York state is to raise a mile of dimes, $8,800, for temperance work in the state. Cards which will hold ten dimes each are to be furnished. Every union before January 1, 1916, is to fill as many cards as will represent one-fifth of its membership.

The corresponding secretary reported the total number of local unions as 1,068; the total number of paid members, 40,460; honorary members, 1,052; total amount of money raised for all purposes, $53,327.36.

Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, the state treasurer, reported the largest membership in the history of the organization—40,460, a gain of 3,733 during the year. The total receipts for the year were $37,562.

Ithaca has been the gracious hostess of the state convention three different years, and the steady growth in membership is amazing. It now has the largest membership of any local union in the United States—773.

On Welcome Night there were cordial greetings from many influential people, among them Dr. Schurman, president of Cornell University, Mayor Thomas Tree, Prof. Frank D. Boynton, superintendent of schools, and Rev. A. R. Lambert, D. D., pastor of the convention church. They all declared themselves for prohibition. Mayor Tree's address was decidedly spiritual. On invitation delegates and friends visited the university where President Schurman met with them in Sage Chapel and later they were entertained in Bailey Hall, where Professor Quarrels played for them the wonderful organ.

Of the year's work some items deserve special mention. On Poster Day, with Mrs. Frances W. Graham in charge, 5,000 posters were scattered broadcast over the state. In three large exhibitions in New York City, the W. C. T. U. had booths. At the "Made in U. S. A." display, the exhibit won a bronze medal. Later at the Woman's Industrial Exhibition the same exhibit was used and is now a permanent one. Temperance Day was well observed at the last exposition and Mrs. Boole gave an address and presided at one of the sessions. The permanent exhibit was used at the state fair and also adorned one of the large rooms of the convention church.

Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, Y. P. B. general secretary, reported a great gain in membership. Thirteen counties made one hundred per cent, or over, in general efficiency work and eight counties had seventy-five per cent or over. Of the 3,656 Y. P. B. members, 1,788 are young men, 600 of whom are triple pledged. Five Branches met the requirements for National standard excellence.

Miss Helen I. Root, L. T. L. general secretary, reported a phenomenal gain in membership of forty per cent. There are now 10,378 members of the L. T. L., 7,492 of them triple pledged. There are eighty new L. T. L.'s. Fourteen counties received L. T. L. pennants for general efficiency. There were more than 5,000 new children enrolled in the L. T. L. this year.

Much was made of woman suffrage all through the convention. The suffrage button was in evidence everywhere. Miss Helen Eacker and Dr. Lavinia R. Davis were the speakers during the suffrage hour.

One of the leading speakers of the convention was Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. On Sunday afternoon Daniel Poling spoke to a crowded house, his subject being, "The Mothers of Men." He stirred his audience to the depths. Miss Esther Elizabeth Winchester gave an impressive talk on "Prohibition in Maine." Mrs. Helen L. Bullock talked on "Dollar Dues."

Sunday noon a mass meeting of the children was held with Miss Root as speaker, and Miss Mildred Moody, Y. P. B. vice-president, spoke to the young people at night.

At the convention roll-call Tioga county figured conspicuously, as it has recently done away with the sale of liquor. The delegates waving American flags and singing "Tioga Has Gone Dry," entered the auditorium led by their president.

The state pledged five hundred dollars to erect a memorial fountain to Frances E. Willard in the place of her birth, Churchville, N. Y.

It was decided to urge the passage of a new bill prepared by the temperance forces to be introduced in the legislature this winter, which provides that the question to be voted upon on petition of twenty-five per cent of the voters shall be, "Shall this town, village, city, county or state become prohibition territory?" Strong resolutions on total abstinence, prohibition, franchise, peace, young people's work, press and other subjects were passed.

Resolutions of appreciation of the work of Mrs. Emma Graves Dietrick, for twenty-two years state superintendent of Anti-Narcotics, who is leaving the state to make her home in Montana, and of the services of Mrs. Mary B. Wood, who is giving up the presidency of Tompkins county, were adopted by the convention. During Mrs. Wood's eight years as county president the membership increased from 400 to 2,222.

The officers were re-elected.

Massachusetts' Great Suffrage Parade

DR. LOUISE C. PURINGTON

It was called a "Victory" parade, a victory by faith; a prophecy of victory on election day.

The writer does not know how many cities and towns there are in Massachusetts, but it is easy to believe every one was represented in the miles of men and women who took part; miles of waving yellow banners and flowers and floats and the purple for "Victory." Hundreds of thousands of interested observers formed walls at the sides along Boston's narrow streets. Not only every town, but about every profession, every organization, was represented: everything almost, in one way or another except the saloon.

There was a great moral purpose about it that must have impressed those who think; it was not simply a passing "show" but in most respects a consecration to a sublime purpose.

Alice Stone Blackwell, president of the Suffrage association, was there and reviewed the procession as did also the governor and mayor. Lucy Stone's carriage was in the line. How many miles it has traveled for suffrage! Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe, Mary A. Livermore are claimed in their initiative by Massachusetts and what a remarkable trio they are! There are still not a few of us who attend with reverent steps their annual pilgrimage to the State House and their annual plea for a right, the wonder to them being that they had to ask for it.

The same daily papers that were teeming with an account of this demonstration announced: "The Fifth Cargo of Rum for Africa Is on Its Way"—a total of 100 000 000 gallons in the five cargoes, the shipments beginning in May. The reason given that large shipments of rum have begun again to Africa is that "the stoppage by the war of English and German trade with merchants on the West Coast prompted Boston merchants to begin again; more will be forwarded."

There are other victims of war besides those who die on the battlefields or in the trenches. Which is worse, to be killed outright or slowly and surely by physical, mental, and moral deterioration?

The red rose woman, as does the saloonkeeper, believes woman should not have the vote; the white ribbon woman believes she should. If unity in conviction and effort makes friends, it is easy to discover why the white ribbon army is not in this alliance. The W. C. T. U. is the avowed enemy of alcoholics.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME?" 90,000 SOLD
Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

"ON WITH THE WORK," OKLAHOMA CONVENTION CRY

Special Correspondence

Every section of the state was well represented at the Oklahoma W. C. T. U. convention held in Oklahoma City and it was large in point of numbers. The program was rich, rare and racy and the enthusiasm of the delegates reached high-water mark.

The state corresponding secretary's report showed that the local unions had accomplished many things worth while. "Efficiency" was the slogan suggested for the coming year. The state treasurer's report indicated a balance on the right side and a gain of two hundred members.

The fine address of the state president, Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, gave to the convention a high but harmonious note.

Many pleasant surprises were perpetrated. Fourteen loyal souls were "surprised" to be made life members of the state organization. Welcome night, with splendid addresses, soul stirring music and the demonstration, "Get in Out of the Wet"; Medal Contest night, with an excellent program and splendid financial results; the "Temperance Clinic," where all sorts of W. C. T. U. ailments were diagnosed and the remedy applied and the demonstrations interspersed throughout the convention furnished an interesting and varied program.

All local arrangements were complete and satisfactory. The convention was held in the beautiful new Christian church which is provided with every accommodation. Many business houses, by placards and in other ways, welcomed the convention and the citizens treated the delegates to an auto ride. The music was under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Maude L. Wilcox, our new musical director. "Victory" was sung by Miss Frances Alborn and "A Saloonless Nation by 1920" by a male quartet from the Apollo Club.

NEW JERSEY COMRADES JUBILANT

Special Correspondence

It is not often at a three days' convention that everything turns out just as planned, but that is what happened at the New Jersey convention held at Montclair, September 28-October 1. The state membership now numbers 11,876, a gain of 756 over and above all losses.

The convention was welcomed to the town of Montclair by the mayor. Rev. Charles S Mills spoke for the churches, and Superintendent Don C. Bliss for the board of education. The evening speakers were Daniel A. Poling, who gave his famous address on "Mothers of Men," Rev. Dr Charles Scanlon, who spoke on "The Battle of the Ages," and Mrs. Katherine Lent Stevenson, whose subject was, "Who Are These Arrayed in White?" A delightful reception was given Mrs. Stevenson at the home of Mrs. W. G. Frost.

Good music, in charge of Mrs. Lee Cooke Smith, was furnished throughout the convention The crowning feature of the state gathering was the parade. The two hundred and thirty delegates, with scores of visitors, marched through the principal streets of the town, accompanied by an escort of police, the Boy Scouts prominent men, decorated autos, several very beautiful floats, a band from the Salvation Army of New York, a fife and drum corps and a company of Scotch lipers in costume. Montclair is in the midst of a no-license campaign, and the floats and autos bore banners and posters appropriate to the work. Six young women dressed in the costume of the figure on the Dutch cleanser advertisement, bore banners inscribed with the words: "We'll make Montclair spick and span."

Delegates who were to attend the great National W C T U Convention at Seattle were regarded with envious eyes by those who would like to go, but could not, but who at the same time consoled themselves with the thought that they would be able to do the next best thing, which is to read all about it in our great paper, THE UNION SIGNAL. The officers were reelected.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM MARKS MONTANA GATHERING

Special Correspondence

The thirty-second annual convention of the Montana W. C. T. U., which met in Livingston, was one of rejoicing and enthusiasm because the paid membership had increased 500, making over 2,200 paid members. Forty-five new unions have been organized during the year.

The speakers of the convention were Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, Rev. J. E. Parker of Helena, and Miss Gladys Hannon of Oregon. Miss Sue Bragstad directed the music, instructing and conducting several choruses.

Among those present were all of the officers, including Rev. Alice Barnes Hoag and Mrs. Alma C. Gilpatrick, charter members, the latter being one of the first state officers.

Mrs. M. W. Alderson, President Montana W. C. T. U.

The Livingston people were very hospitable and the press exceedingly courteous, giving complete and accurate accounts of all sessions. The program was exceptionally fine and the attendance excellent. The local union gave the visiting ladies a luncheon and also a banquet. The business men arranged an automobile ride through the valley.

On the opening night there was an entertainment by the Loyal Temperance Legion of seventy-two members—the banner legion of the state. Mrs. James Killorn was the winner at the diamond medal contest the last evening.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. M. W. Alderson; vice-president, Mrs. Ira D. Snell; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Cora M. Marsh; recording secretary, Mrs. W. H. L. Marshall; treasurer, Mrs. W. C. Dawes.

CONNECTICUT COMRADES IN ANNUAL MEETING

Special Correspondence

The efforts and achievements of the Connecticut W. C. T. U for the year have passed into history. More than 250 000 pages of literature have been distributed; many more prize essays have been written than last year; a large number of medal contests have carried their lessons to homes and audiences; six National lecturers have delivered their messages to appreciative audiences throughout the state; petitions for the Hobson resolution have been freely circulated and kindly received; very nearly five hundred columns of W. C. T. U. matter have been printed by the newspapers of the state; several thousand anti-cigaret and cold water blotters have been given to the children; a thousand posters placed where tens of thousands could read them, and nearly two thousand children have been organized and taught that alcohol is a poison. These items are indicative of the encouragement the Connecticut white ribboner received at the fortieth annual convention of the Connecticut W. C. T. U., held in New Haven. Mrs. Emily Clark Scott, daughter of a former president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., was the genial and efficient general chairman of the local committees.

A most cordial welcome was given the convention by the mayor of the city, by several of the clergymen, and by Mrs. Scott. A gracious response was voiced by Mrs. M. G. Purinton, president of the Hartford union. The treasurer reported the total receipts for the year as $3,159.23, with disbursements $2,875.27. Thirty-one unions had gained twenty per cent or more in membership—net gain in the state, 269.

Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, state president, in her comprehensive annual address referred briefly to the different phases of the work of the W. C. T. U. departments, the lights and shadows of the struggle for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic by law; also the defeat of the bill to give women the vote on the license question.

Among the speakers were Mr. E. L. G. Hohenthal, state chairman of the Prohibition party, and W. H. Anderson, president of the New York Anti-Saloon League. A taking L. T. L. demonstration was conducted by Mrs. Nettleton. The music was under the direction of Mrs. Nellie Rule Arnold of Meriden. Windham county received the banner for the greatest increase in membership and Willimantic L. T. L., with an increase in membership of 133⅓ per cent, received the legion banner. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, of East Hampton, was elected president for the twelfth time.

FEED CHILDREN

On Properly Selected Food. It Pays Big Dividends

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh, stewed, or canned some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to fully describe the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

CAMPAIGNERS CROSSING THE CONTINENT

(Continued from Page Nine)

prohibition. It was a source of disappointment, also, that Mr. Piper of the Portland Oregonian, who was to have been one of the speakers, was unable to be present. A letter from him expressing his profound regret at his absence and his deep appreciation of the work of the W. C. T. U. was read. His mother was a W. C. T. U. woman and he stated that he was deeply interested in the work, and the workers, whom he bade God-speed. Responses to the delightful greetings were made by Miss Gordon, Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, Mrs. Frances P. Parks, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp and Mrs. Nelle G. Burger. Tender were the words of Mrs. Ella A. Boole in her presentation of the Elizabeth P. Hutchinson Library, and touching was the speech of acceptance by Mrs. Nellie Erickson. Exquisite music was furnished by Portland musicians and Mrs. W. A. Lawson, president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. Altogether the only way to describe the evening, so filled was it with wit and wisdom of the highest order, is to say that it was precisely what one might expect of our Oregon friends, who always excel in anything they undertake, and embroider their achievements with such uniqueness and charm that one is never quite content until she returns to taste again the joy of their hospitality.

That the delectable dainties served by the Portland chef agreed with the travelers was evidenced by the rested faces of the white ribboners as they arose Saturday morning to find themselves in the Convention city, Seattle, "the seaport of success," where they were met by Mrs. Platt, Mrs. Munns, Mrs. Hatcher and other hostesses. Boy Scouts were at hand, eager to serve, and beautiful lassies placed fragrant posies in the hands of the women as they passed through the station, on their way to the Lincoln Hotel, National Convention Headquarters.

The second installment of the fascinating convention story, telling of the great meetings in Plymouth Congregational Church, will appear in next week's paper.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. M. J. WELLS, Albion, Pa., a pioneer temperance worker. Although she had passed her eighty-seventh year she was still actively interested in the work of the union.

MRS. C. H. OBER, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, for many years a faithful member of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. TIMOTHY DONSEREAUX, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, one of the early crusaders. Although eighty-three years of age at the time of her home-going she enthusiastically retained her former interest in the temperance cause.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL FAVORS PROHIBITION

United States Marshal for Minnesota, Wm. H. Grimshaw, in explaining why he favors prohibition, says: "As United States marshal I have taken hundreds of fellows to prison in my time, and I have talked with them about their troubles. In ninety per cent of the cases, or to be absolutely conservative I will say seventy-five per cent, they have told me that the beginning of their downfall was booze. As an officer of the law I am voting and working against crime."

NEW SONG PEACE, PROHIBITION AND EQUALITY

By J. G. DAILEY, Author and Composer of "A SALOONLESS NATION IN 1920"
Octavo, words and music — One Dime each (no stamps), $1.00 per dozen, post-paid

J. G. DAILEY MUSIC CO., 4734 Kingsessing Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

INDIANA'S HARVEST HOME A JUBILEE

Special Correspondence

Indiana's state W. C. T. U. convention held at Muncie was large in attendance and optimistic in spirit. Its voting strength was 659, and it attracted hundreds of visitors. Our Muncie comrades made our stay a delight. The very air was filled with the spirit of welcome to the largest dry city in the state. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, and bannerettes bearing the words, "National Prohibition," and yellow pennants proclaiming "Votes for Women," were conspicuous everywhere.

The corresponding secretary's report showed fifty-two new local and four new county unions organized during the year. The treasurer announced a membership of 10,473, a gain of 884.

The address of the president, Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, was a masterly review of the events of the past year, especially the titanic struggle that is shaking the very foundations of European civilization, and its effect upon the prohibition movement. She exploited the year's victories for suffrage and prohibition and made some splendid recommendations for the prosecution of further work.

Friday night after a band concert by the boys' band of Muncie, the convention was formally welcomed by Harry Kitselman, president of the Commercial Club, on behalf of the city, and by Mrs. Katie Waller on behalf of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley made a most happy response. Dr. Ira Landrith gave the principal address of the evening. He said: "Seventy-five per cent of the territory of the United States is now dry and I am tired of seeing a wet tail wag a dry dog."

Friday morning each of the department superintendents gave a five-minute talk on "What You Can Do in Your Community in My Department." Some excellent suggestions were made.

Friday night Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, National superintendent of Franchise, delivered a most excellent address on "Modern Reform." She reviewed the slow but steady process by which women have won their way in the educational and industrial world, swept away the flimsy arguments used against ballots for women, and showed that woman, having "made good" in whatever she has undertaken, will be able to purify politics when given the instrument by which to make her influence effective. The audience was deeply impressed by Mrs. Livingston's address.

Caught 51 Rats One Week

Trap resets itself. 22 inches high. Will last for years. Can't get out of order. Weighs 7 pounds. 12 rats caught one day. Cheese is used, doing away with poisons. This trap does its work, never fails and is always ready for the next rat. When rats and mice pass device they die. Rats are disease carriers, also cause fires. These catchers should be in every school building. Rat catcher sent prepaid on request of $3. Mouse catcher 10 inches high, $1. Money back if not satisfied.

H. D. SWARTS, Inventor and Manufacturer
Universal Rat and Mouse Traps, Box 566, Scranton, Pa.

VIRGINIA CONVENTION AN INSPIRING OCCASION

The convention of the Virginia W. C. T. U., which took place in Lynchburg, was the largest and most enthusiastic ever held in the state. The consecrated efforts put forth to increase the membership resulted in a goodly gain. A local paper commented on the convention as follows:

"The proceedings of the convention of the Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which has been sitting in Lynchburg, have served to forcibly remind of the vital measure in which the mothers, the wives, the daughters of men contributed to the cause of moral uplift and social advance.

"The work of this organization has borne splendid fruit in the past—it is destined to prove an invaluable force for good in the future. It has proceeded with superb patience; with unquailing courage—consecrating heart, energy and effort to its splendid mission. Naturally, therefore, the W. C. T. U. has waxed mighty; its radius of influence has been steadily expanding; its activities have aided invaluably in promoting the cause of temperance reform in Virginia and in insuring the triumph of prohibition in the election of last September, as well as the very happy prospects of efficient prohibition legislation by the next general assembly. Thus do its leaders and members merit, and we believe are ungrudgingly rendered, tribute of high honor by Virginians generally, as a powerful, positive, active and achieving force for civic righteousness.

"Lynchburg has been greatly honored in having the representatives of so noble a federation assembled in its midst—and it is essentially gratified in the assurance that their proceedings have been attended with agreeable incident and propitious consequence."

The officers were re-elected, the state president, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, entering upon her seventeenth year of service.

READY

TOPICAL PROGRAM

FOR

1916

Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for filling in name of hostess and place of meeting.

Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00

A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for

50 CENTS

Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

KANSAS CONVENTION HOSTS GATHER

Jubilant Note Sounded

Special Correspondence

Never did the Kansas Woman's Christian Temperance Union hold a more enthusiastic convention than this year at Newton. To outsiders who listened to the department reports the work done was little short of marvelous in its scope and in its sum total.

Arrangements had been made to have the state officers attend the schools for the first observance of "Frances Willard Day," Miss Willard's birthday, set apart by the last legislature for the study in all schools, of the history and benefits of prohibition in Kansas. Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, state president, gave a most enthusiastic talk at the high school, and Mrs. Emma W. Grover, state vice-president, spoke at the Mennonite college to a large body of earnest students. The other officers were assigned to various schools. The addresses given were thoroughly enjoyed by both teachers and pupils. Kansas W. C. T. U. is grateful for this splendid opportunity of bringing before the young people of the state the real facts concerning the prohibitory law.

The "Welcome" program consisted of brief but to-the-point talks by men and women representing the organizations of Newton, a splendid address by Governor Arthur Capper and most enjoyable musical numbers by Newton talent. The response for the convention was made by Mrs. Emma W. Grover, state vice-president, who reviewed briefly the plans and purposes of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She made a powerful plea for united effort leading to emancipation for this nation and for the whole world from the yoke of "King Alcohol." Governor Capper told of the numerous benefits Kansas has received as the result of prohibition, and predicted national prohibition within ten years. He gave the W. C. T. U. much of the credit for bringing about a saloonless state and paid glowing tribute to the zeal and faithfulness of white ribboners in making Kansas truly great through the moral uplift of the people. At the close of this wonderful meeting, nearly a thousand people remained to shake hands with the governor and the W. C. T. U. state officers.

One of the most important matters before the convention was the consideration of an amendment to the constitution, eliminating the districts. It was adopted.

On children's night two hundred and fifty of the school children participated in the exercises, which consisted of songs, marches and drills, all of which were exceedingly pleasing to the audience of more than fifteen hundred people.

A beautiful memorial service was conducted by Miss Mary E. Dobbs, state corresponding secretary, in honor of the comrades who have been promoted during the past year. Short, tender addresses, telling of the life and labor of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, who for so many years was prominent in W. C. T. U. work in Kansas and later served as National treasurer, were made by those who had been associated with her.

The program the last evening was exceptionally fine. A prelude was given by Mr. Harold Butler, dean of the School of Fine Arts of the University of Kansas; a brief address by Professor Nevins on "Community Music," and selections by Mrs. Butler, who is a charming reader. The speaker of the evening, ex-Governor Hoch, was introduced by Mrs. Mitchner as a life member of the W. C. T. U. of Kansas. He showed his loyalty to the white ribboners in glowing words of tribute, and stated that some of the best laws on the statute books of Kansas were put there through their influence. His address dealt largely with the European war, its causes and what he believes will be some of the results.

One of the delightful features of the convention was the singing of "It's a Short Way to Prohibition" by Mr. Bert Mitchner, son of the beloved state president, and her little grandson.

There was much rejoicing when the state treasurer announced that the gain in membership had reached five hundred.

The officers were re-elected and the work is full of promise for the future. Mrs. Mitchner enters upon the seventh year of her work as state president with the loyal, loving support of the other officers and the unions throughout the state. Strong resolutions were adopted and far-reaching plans made for the coming months.

LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

(Continued from Page Ten)

$2.60, Solebury $.40, Plains $1.60, Jacksville $2.50, Van Ormer $1, Avondale $1.35, East Brady $5, Osceola $1, Flemington, Lemoyne $1, Ridley Park $2.50, Trainer $1, Bethel $1, Mount Pleasant $1, Brownsville $9, Mill Run $1, Perryopolis $1.07, Point Marion $1, Mount Morris $1.50, Pine Bank $4, Waynesburg, Pine Flats, Sykesville, Carbondale $1, Lancaster $5, New Holland, Bessemer $1, Mahoningtown $1, New Castle (Central) $1, West Pittston, Dallas $1, Reedsville $1.25, Delaware Water Gap $1, Poplar Valley $.25, East Bangor $1, Mansfield $1, Lewisburg, $4.50, Allenwood $.60, Garland $1.85, Warren (Central) $10, Jeanette $5, New Florence $1.50, Willow Grove $4.50, Queenstown, Leechburg $1.20, Manorville $.95, Dayton $8.35, Russelville, Fr. Cr. Valley $1, Spring City, Cochranville $3, Toughkenamon $1.40, Birwyn, Clifton, Lansdowne $5, Wayne $5, Chester, E. Lansdowne $1, Johnsonburg, Lancaster County Y. P. B. $18, Landisville and Salunga $1, Willard Memorial (Lawrence County) $1.50, Wilmington, Collegeville $1.20, Bryn Mawr, Port Providence, West Philadelphia, Lillian M. N. Stevens (Philadelphia) $4.50, Tioga, Potter County $4, Little Meadows $1, Clifford, F. E. Willard (York County) $1. Total $201.57.

New Hampshire: $73.73, Mrs. Mary Stanley $1, Mrs. C. J. Ayer $1, Mrs. J. F. Draper $1, Rev. H. G. Ives $1, Mrs. E. P. Carter $1, Clara N. Buron $1, Newport $.60. Total $80.33.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can, I know you can, because I have reduced 32,000 women and have built up that many more—scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms.

You Can Be So Well!

—if you only knew how well! I build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as

Nervousness, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Indigestion, Etc.

One pupil writes: "I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength."

Another says: "Last May I weighed 100 pounds, this May I weigh 126 and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Won't you sit down and write now for my interesting booklet? You are welcome to it. It is FREE. Don't wait, you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37, 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound. Price $2.00.

HERE AND THERE

The W. C. T. U. of Dexter, Mo., recently dedicated two public drinking fountains, the gift of the union to the city. The exercises which began at one fountain and were concluded at the other, were participated in by the pastors of the city and the officers of the local union. Short speeches were made by Mrs. Carrie Lee Carter Stokes, National organizer and lecturer, and a charter member of the Dexter W. C. T. U. She contrasted the saloonless city of today with Dexter as it was formerly when it had five flourishing dramshops. Later in the week the union tendered to Mrs. Stokes a large reception.

Mrs. Mary McArthur Tuttle, daughter of "Mother" Thompson, has issued an attractive leaflet telling of the early days of the Ohio Crusade and her personal interest in it as a young girl. The leaflet is for sale by Mrs. Tuttle at Hillsboro, O.

The above picture represents an artistic booth conducted by the New York W. C. T. U. in the Manufacturers and Liberal Arts Building at the New York State Fair held in Syracuse in September. Several of the attractive framed posters adorning the walls were made by Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings. Thousands of pages of literature were distributed; also blotters and picture post-cards on which were printed facts regarding the liquor traffic. About 125,000 people viewed the exhibit. Mrs. Fannie L. Cochran, state superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, who was in charge of the booth, is seen seated at the right of the picture and at the left is Mrs. Ella A. Boole, New York state president and National vice-president-at-large, who delivered a most inspiring address during the fair.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

The Union Signal	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	25c a year
The Young Crusader	25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries

The Union Signal	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	37c a year
The Young Crusader	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

CRUSADER CIRCULATORS

List of those who have sent or have had credited to them by friends 100 or more subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

Miss Helen Isabel Root, New York...713
Mrs. Ida M. Mix, Indiana.....606
Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Washington (W.) 397
Mrs. Augusta R. Brigham, Massachusetts 324
Miss Margaret L. Sargent, Maine....259
Mrs. Hattie Wilson, Oregon.....239
Mrs. Nellie M. Reek, Colorado.....219
Mrs. W. Ruth Van Clarke, Iowa.....206
Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, California (S.) 187
Miss Addie A. Austin, Illinois.....176
Mrs. Dora E. W. Spratt, Connecticut.175
Mrs. Louisa J. Cobb, California (N.)..172
Mrs. J. C. Kelley, Virginia.....172
Mrs. Mollie B. Blount, Missouri.....153
Mrs. C. V. Ray, Maryland.....138
Mrs. May Wills Freeman, Florida....123
Mrs. William B. Gibb, District of Columbia 118
Mrs. Geo. P. Greene, Georgia.....114
Sadie F. Holmes, Illinois.....114
Mrs. Edna M. Conkling, Kansas.....114
Miss Margaret J. Bilz, Michigan.....103
Miss Bessie Eckman, Pennsylvania...100

PREMIUM AWARDS

The gold watches offered for subscriptions to The Young Crusader are awarded as follows:

Indiana—Mrs. Ida M. Mix, 536 subscriptions, one hunting case watch.

New York—Miss Helen I. Root, 448 subscriptions, one hunting case watch.

West Washington—Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, 382 subscriptions, one open face watch.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER "UPPER TEN"

1. New York 2196
2. Pennsylvania 1110
3. Ohio 806
4. Indiana 759
5. Illinois 738
6. Massachusetts 722
7. Iowa 649
8. Michigan 624
9. Kansas 499
10. Minnesota 491

RATS

H. D. Swarts of Scranton, Pa., has invented a rat catcher that caught over 100 rats in one month in one establishment. See his advertisement in this issue.

You Will Want the CONVENTION NUMBERS of the UNION SIGNAL FOR YOURSELF and FRIENDS

Full account of the great National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Seattle will be given in the issues of November 4, 11, 18. These three issues mailed to one address, 10 cents.

Please order early.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Evanston, Illinois

CALIFORNIA (NORTHERN) HOLDS ENTHUSIASTIC CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

Our successful state W. C. T. U. convention was larger in its voting capacity than any held before, the advance not being by a spasmodic or sudden gain, but by a steady, healthy growth as the years go by. The officers were re-elected with the exception of the treasurer, whose death occurred during the year. Mrs. Ina A. Orvis was elected to the office. The recent death of Mrs. Emily Hoppin, editor of the state paper, also called on "the reserves," and Mrs. S. A. Huston, the publisher of the paper, was elected editor.

The dominant note of the convention was "Prohibition for State and Nation." Arrangements were perfected for the campaign of 1916, under the "Campaign Federation" of all the temperance forces. Mrs. Addie G. Estes of our organization is to be the superintendent of the women's department. The volunteers of the last campaign are veterans now. New volunteers are pouring in, and it is safe to say that neither side has ever before presented so solid a front. Preparation is in the air.

Reports of all work were highly satisfactory, the whole convention seemed ready for action, and it was heart cheering to see so many alert, enthusiastic young people among the delegates.

While prohibition was the chief subject emphasized there were departments of such immediate interest as to require a hearing, Peace and Arbitration, among others. Mr. Robert C. Root, a director of the American Peace Society, gave an address, and His Excellency, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, spoke most effectively on "International Brotherhood."

The enforcement of the Red Light law is a matter of great importance, many of the counties in the state reporting successful efforts in that line. The great cities still demand endeavor and constant outlay to maintain the necessary and continuous fight in and out of courts. Mr. Bascom Johnson, executive secretary of the Law Enforcement League, presented the work of his organization.

Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett gave an address on "Twenty-five Years' Experience in Rescue Work." It contained many suggestive and helpful facts. The whole convention was full of good things.

NEW PROGRAM FOR World's Temperance Sunday

Prepared by Stella B. Irvine for the National W. C. T. U.

A complete program for the Sunday school hour, containing responsive service, prayer in unison, addresses, the Triumph song, by Anna A. Gordon, and Prohibition Victory, by Stella B. Irvine.

Price, 30 cents per hundred

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

A Food FOR Children — A Tonic FOR Grown-ups

For three generations Scott's Emulsion has been recognized as the sensible treatment for any cold because its rich, blood-making nourishment, strengthens both throat and lungs while it fortifies the body against the rigors of winter.

Scott's Emulsion after meals means fewer colds, richer blood, stronger lungs, better health.

IT IS FREE FROM ALCOHOL

14-94 SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

AWAY WITH ALCOHOL!

Speaking of the effect of intoxicants upon those who drink Prof. Max Gruber of the Royal Institute of Munich, has declared:

"It is scientifically established that even small amounts of alcohol weaken and paralyze our powers of observation, memory and judgment, the command of our intellect, our wills, and our reason, our impulses, our brains, our body; cut down the gains from exercise, the endurance of hardships, the ability to resist external injuries. . . . Away with alcoholic drinks as a means of nourishment or enjoyment. All physicians who do not incessantly warn and admonish in this direction and who do not precede their orders with good example fail to do their duty."

NINETEEN Prohibition States

MAINE, KANSAS, OKLAHOMA, NORTH DAKOTA, NO. CAROLINA, GEORGIA, MISSISSIPPI, TENNESSEE, ALABAMA, WEST VIRGINIA, VIRGINIA, WASHINGTON, OREGON, COLORADO, ARIZONA, IOWA, ARKANSAS, IDAHO, SOUTH CAROLINA

Prohibition State Pennants

A strong paper pennant. Size 5½x17 inches, with name of state and date of passage of prohibitory law. Printed in flag blue. Set of 19 pennants, 25 cents.

(No orders filled for less than one set.)

Estimates cheerfully furnished to states desiring 2,000 of one kind.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature. $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept. 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 76 East Harrison, CHICAGO

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI EVANSTON, ILL., NOVEMBER 4, 1915 No. 44

Forty-Second Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Seattle, Washington, October 9-14, 1915

CONVENTION GROUP SHOWING GENERAL OFFICERS IN SECOND ROW

REPORT OF SEATTLE CONVENTION

PART I

A "Mountain Top" Convention—Welcome Night—President's Annual Address—Report of National Corresponding Secretary—Treasurer's Report—Resolutions—Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition.

A MOUNTAIN-TOP CONVENTION

PRAISE AND THANKSGIVING THE DOMINANT NOTE OF THE GREAT GATHERING AT SEATTLE

"The doxology is always in order in this Convention. We are never too busy to sing, 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow,'" remarked the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union on one occasion during the great meeting at Seattle when a delegate arose and asked for this expression from the audience. The spirit of the white ribboners was pre-eminently the spirit of praise. The theme of prayer, song, reports and addresses was, "Praise the Lord Who Helps Us; the Nation's Going Dry." The wonderful meeting might well be characterized as "a mountain-top" convention, both literally and in the spiritual significance of the words, for frequently and fervently was sounded as its dominant note thanksgiving for the unprecedented victories of the past year—very definite answers to prayers and fulfillment of prophecies. Constantly were the delegates reminded that not only had the number of prohibition states increased to nineteen during the past year, but also that notwithstanding the general financial depression in various sections of the country, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union held its membership gain of last year of over 30,000 and added to it this year 29,711 more members. The W. C. T. U. year closed also with a very satisfactory financial condition of organization affairs, reports showing large contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, and a creditable net profit for the official papers and the Publishing department.

The forty-second annual convention was unique in many respects. It had long been realized that the selection of Seattle as a meeting place would insure success. Not only is the city a place of unusual scenic attractions, but the state of Washington, having achieved the two things for which all the states are striving—state-wide prohibition and woman suffrage—its largest city (which has proven in every respect a "seaport of success") is especially interesting to white ribboners.

"Seattle is a fitting place for such a gathering," declared the Post-Intelligencer in an editorial on "Our W. C. T. U. Visitors." "Here in this new state and this coast metropolis, woman is a recognized factor in affairs, denied none of those rights for which she is appealing in vain in other states and cities. Here those rights are not only granted—freely granted, not begrudged—but the beneficent exercise of them is just as freely and fully recognized and appreciated."

The time set for the convention was especially propitious, for the weather, with the exception of one day, when it rained for a few hours, was clear, cool and sunshiny, and the atmosphere was so invigorating that, as one delegate remarked, "The somewhat strenuous five days' work of the convention was accomplished with a minimum of weariness and a maximum of ease."

Attendance Large

Notwithstanding the fact that prohibition and suffrage campaigns prevented many members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union from coming to Seattle, the attendance was most gratifying. Four hundred and thirty-five delegates were present, each representing a constituency of five hundred dues-paying members. However, nearly every state in the Union and the territory of Alaska, as well as Canada and foreign countries, were represented by delegates or visitors. The seating capacity of Plymouth Congregational Church was taxed to the utmost, men and women standing at many of the meetings.

In order to accommodate the large audiences, on Sunday evening two simultaneous mass meetings were held, one at the Plymouth Congregational Church and the other at the First Methodist Episcopal Church; and on the evening of the grand diamond medal contest, when a small admission fee was charged, many were turned away. Even the business meetings for the discussion of purely organization matters were largely attended by Seattle friends and, judging by the comments of the local newspapers, were greatly appreciated. "Many national conventions might learn something by watching the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union elect its officers," said the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. "Numerous dreaded details, among them the inevitable nomination speech, were eliminated, and the matter was handled with extraordinary celerity. When the question of choosing leaders for the coming year came up there was no myriad of pleas for recognition from the floor. The delegates knew so well for whom they wanted to vote that when the nominating ballots were counted in each instance a member had received a majority so overwhelming that a motion to cast the final ballot for this person carried unanimously."

Practical Problems Dealt With

The convention will long be remembered as one that dealt in a peculiarly practical fashion with department and campaign problems. The institutes held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday forenoons gave opportunity for questions and answers, and the discussions as to ways and means were most helpful and inspiring. Note-books and pencils were much in evidence and an enthusiastic student voiced the sentiments of many when she said, "After hearing that discussion I can hardly wait to get home to put the plans into effect. I want to plunge right into a prohibition or suffrage campaign."

Eloquence From the Platform

The convention was notable for its strong platform utterances. Oratory of an unusually high and uplifting character was that of Mr. Daniel A. Poling, acting president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and Dr. William T. Foster, president of Reed College, Portland, Oregon, on Sunday evening. (Reports of these speeches will be given later). No address, however, called forth more enthusiasm and applause than did that of the National president. It was characterized by white ribboners and visitors as a masterly, statesmanlike document, valuable both as a review of the history of the past year and as a literary production.

Possibly not as many speakers outside of the organization are on the programs of our conventions as on those of other great bodies. The W. C. T. U. has so many forceful speakers and the delegates so enjoy listening to them that there seems little need of much other talent. This was demonstrated in the Sunday afternoon meeting by the reception accorded the able and eloquent addresses of Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, Mrs. Nannie Webb Curtis and Mrs. Ella M. George. That the public generally was of the same opinion was evidenced by a remark overheard at the press table during the discussion of certain proposed amendments to the constitution. "I have attended countless conventions," said the reporter, "but I have never heard such intelligent speeches from the floor of any convention."

Surprises are one of the most enjoyable features of a National W. C. T. U. Convention. Among the unexpected and greatly appreciated numbers on the Seattle program were spirited addresses by Congressman Bryan of the state of Washington, and Hon. George Cotterill, international councilor of the Good Templars, the man who served Seattle as "reform mayor."

World's W. C. T. U. Night

Never has there been a more charming and picturesque presentation of our World's W. C. T. U. work than that given by the more than twenty little people garbed in the costume of as many different countries, who brought messages concerning the L. T. L. work. Two noted speakers from China were unavoidably absent by reason of injuries sustained in an automobile accident, but these vacancies were filled in a most interesting manner by Miss Ellen Stone, Miss Griffin of Australia, and comrades from the Dominion of Canada.

The Hope of the Future

Older members of the organization noted with keen joy and satisfaction the large number of young people at the Convention, many mothers being accompanied by their daughters. The Young People's Branch and the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch gave a unique demonstration of living pictures in connection with the reports of the general secretaries, and conducted every morning a helpful conference.

Impressions of Press and Public.

The large additions to the membership of Seattle unions is the best indication of the impression made by the convention on that city. The wonder-working influence of the organization was explained by the press as due to its enthusiasm. "White ribboners are long on enthusiasm," declared a prominent Seattle daily. "Although members of the W. C. T. U. are generally credited with being staid and set in their ways, there is something of collegiate enthusiasm about them. This phase of their energy is given outlet every day in the white ribbon cheer, which is given with all the vim and vocal power of students to show their approval of some member or action of their organization." That the press recognized the power back of this exuberance at its true worth one doubts not for it referred cordially and with discrimination to "the devoted Christian women who make up the strong-hearted Woman's Christian Temperance Union whose names are household words and whose influence for good is widely felt."

Welcome Night

Seattle did not wait until Saturday evening, described on the official program as Welcome Night, to extend cordial greetings to those it was pleased to term "its distinguished guests." Some of the city's worthiest and most winsome representatives were at the railway station in the early morning hours to meet and greet the White Ribbon Special. With the W. C. T. U. hostesses were the Boy Scouts to escort the delegates and carry their baggage, and bright-faced lassies presented beautiful blossoms. Comfortable conveyances carried the delegates to their various places of entertainment and promptly after breakfast they gathered in the Evangelistic conference at the Convention church. During the forenoon the Official Board was in session and in the afternoon the Executive Committee met for its deliberations. At four o'clock automobiles were at the church to take the delegates on a tour of the city. The visitors noted with appreciation the decorations of some of the large stores in their honor, especially those of the Bon Marche.

WELCOME NIGHT

GREETINGS FROM THE MAYOR, THE CHURCHES, EDUCATIONAL INTERESTS AND W. C. T. U.

On Saturday evening a magnificent audience filled the beautiful auditorium of Plymouth Congregational Church, which was decorated with palms and flowers. The service opened with an organ solo, "Chorus of Angels," by Dwight Heaton Seymour, who is a master of the instrument. The keynote of the convention was sounded in the singing of "The Triumph Song," written by the National W. C. T. U. president, "Lord God of Hosts, to Thee We Give the Glory." The reading of a message from the Scriptures and prayer by Dr. Hugh G. Ross, pastor of the Convention Church, was followed by inspiring music from the First Methodist Episcopal Church choir under the leadership of Dr. Ferdinand Dunkley, director.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, presided with her accustomed ease and grace. To the disappointment of all, His Excellency, Governor Ernest Lister, was unable to be present to extend greetings for the state of Washington. A letter of regret from him was read by Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary.

Mayor Hiram C. Gill, who has recently declared his intention of doing his utmost to enforce the prohibition law, welcomed the Convention to the city.

Mayor Gill In Part

No opportunity to give a welcome in my official life has ever afforded me the gratification that this does. There are a lot of us people that sometimes have been regarded as more or less men of sand because we could not believe in the methods of the consummation of an end, but who do believe as sincerely as any of you in the desirability of that end, and it is getting kind of popular among statesmen these days to have been "dry" from time immemorial. I am frank to say I cannot claim that distinction. There never has been a time when I would not gladly have been "dry" had I thought it was possible to make the whole United States nationally dry, as it undoubtedly should be made.

I have stated (and I have been properly roasted for it from many sources, as being a "political would be," and all sorts of things that I am not), that in two months the liquor law of this state would be enforced, and it will be. It will be because the public sentiment of this city will make possible that enforcement. It will be for another reason that in 1909 certain gentlemen of the state of Washington, at the state legislature, certain prosecuting attorneys, were delegated to draw up a criminal code, and they wanted to take a crack at some official somewhere, and they passed an act—I don't think there are very many people that know about it, but it is there. It provides that when any mayor, prosecuting attorney, sheriff or other officer having in charge the enforcement of any criminal statute is notified of a violation thereof and fails to do the best he can to enforce it he is guilty of gross misdemeanor and should serve one year in the jail and forfeit his job. Giving me credit for the worst intentions in the world, you can see why I am going to enforce that act. Also, I am confident that there are enough people who are interested in its enforcement to see to it that we all know about where anything is going wrong.

No act will ever be enforced by any official in its entirety, however good his intention is, unless he has a wholesome public sentiment back of him and keeps awake. A person who talks about a reversion back, in this state, to the saloon is crazy.

You all know from the vote of the state last November that you are welcome, but in Governor Lister's absence, and speaking in his behalf, I am glad to say that he thinks the same way on this subject that I do—that anybody who is afraid to face the existing condition, or looks upon it in any other way but with a hope of the benefit which we know will come, is a moral coward. Just come back in another year, or give us two years at the most, and then hold your annual convention here, and we will show you a state and every municipality in it which has met all the requirements of the law which has been passed through your efforts, aided and abetted by the one great thing, the younger generation who voted with you.

The greetings of the churches was ably voiced by Rev. Adna Wright Leonard, D. D., pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church.

CHAIRMEN OF SEATTLE CONVENTION COMMITTEES

First Row—Left to Right—Mrs. S. L. W. Clark, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, Mrs. Florence Smith, Mrs. Lilly C. Dana.

Second Row—Mrs. Mary M. Wade, Mrs. Lillie Manney, Mrs. Mary. L. Stilwell, Mrs. W. D. T. McCullough, Mrs. Lola J. Flagg, Mrs. Della Somers.

Third Row—Mrs. E. S. Wood, Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, Mrs. Sue N. Wright, Mrs. E. P. Mayfield, Mrs. Emma Morrison, Mrs. Minnie E. Woodward, Mrs. Sadie Ellis, Mrs. G. W. Crane.

Dr. Leonard In Part

I am a prohibitionist by birth and by conviction. I regard myself as highly honored in that I am asked to represent the Ministerial Federation of this city in extending to you our welcome. I regard it as significant, first because of the men whom I am privileged to represent, men who have common interests in the tasks of life with you, men who are defenders of the home, also the champions of the best things in the community; and I regard it as a signal honor to extend this welcome because you and we have fought together against the efforts of evil in this city, in this state, and in this nation.

I do not forget the time not far back, —it seems to me it was in the days of 1884 and 1885—in Springfield, Ohio, when my father was a candidate for governor and polled what was, up to that time, the largest vote for governor on a prohibition ticket; and though a mere child, I recall that after the returns had come in, the party that was in power, or seeking to gain it, disappointed and angry at the stand my father had taken, surrounded the parsonage at night and threw lighted barrels and boxes soaked in kerosene on the veranda and set fire to the barn, so that the fire department had to be called to extinguish the flames. I remember the little family prayer service when the mob was calling for father to come out that they might wreak their hatred upon him in violence. There, with my sainted mother and we children about him, he offered a prayer which I do not remember but the spirit of which will abide with me so long as time lasts. I vowed to God then that if He would give me life and strength and years of manhood I would never let an opportunity go by to strike the infernal saloon business the mightiest blow that I could wield. I have carried out that vow and any one who knows me knows well that so far as the saloon is concerned there is no compromise and there never can be a compromise.

So I was cradled in the arms of the W. C. T. U., my mother, and I learned my first lessons in prohibition at the feet of a sire who never knew defeat or retreat. Years passed and I went back to be the pastor of that very church in connection with which the exciting incident I have related took place. At the close of my first sermon a little woman waited for me outside the building. I remembered her at once as in days gone by she had held me upon her lap. She was a little bit of a mite, with white hair, and her form was bent. Calling me by name, she pulled me close down where she might speak to me and said, "Adna, Adna, preach Jesus, preach Jesus and fight the saloon like the devil." That woman was Mother Stewart of Clark county, Springfield, Ohio, and the message of the dear old lady lingers with me yet. In the fires of political reform that passion has burned deep within me. The same spirit and the same passion are characteristic of the men of the Ministerial Federation. You know, sisters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that we have fought together.

I welcome you because of what you have done in connection with the liquor traffic and the passing of the present prohibition legislation. I am frank to say to you that had it not been for the work the women of this state did in taking about the petitions and influencing votes we could not have carried prohibition for this state. By your influence, by your efforts, by your sacrifices, and by your performances, the state of Washington today owes more to the W. C. T. U. than to any other organization within its borders.

We have long been struggling to rid this state of the iniquitous liquor traffic, and this one thing remains true: The saloon was never voted out until woman was given the franchise. The state of Washington approves of giving women the ballot so definitely that she will never return to the old order. And woman will be educated by your organization which appreciates all the privileges that are hers.

By what you have done for the city of Seattle, and for the state of Washington, and the United States of America, and especially by your introduction of scientific teaching of the effects of alcohol on the human system, and many other very definite and powerful lines of propaganda, you have made one of the greatest steps toward nation-wide prohibition of any organization in the United States of America.

Mrs. Preston

The state of Washington has as its state superintendent of public instruction a woman, Mrs. Josephine Preston, who is in sympathy with W. C. T. U. work. Mrs. Preston referred to the large percentage of defective and delinquent children who must be dealt with by the public schools, the first cause of whose trouble can be traced to the liquor evil. She expressed her appreciation of the work the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is doing to abolish this foe of child life and said, "One of the most important organizations that has stood out in the final test, when women are working together to help in community life and in moulding public sentiment, is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States. I am very glad to be here tonight, and I know that the citizens of the state of Washington are glad to have you with us. On behalf of the educators, I extend to you a hearty welcome to the state of Washington and to Seattle. I am sure if a vote were taken of the people who represent the educational interests of the state on the question of prohibition that you would find a very large percentage of both men and women standing for the boys and the girls and for character building and all those things—standing shoulder to shoulder, hoping and praying that in the state of Washington we are from January 1 to get along without liquor."

A burst of applause and the white ribbon cheer greeted Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, president of West Washington W. C. T. U., when she advanced to give a greeting. The knowledge of the months of arduous labor on the part of herself and her co-workers made her words of welcome doubly eloquent.

Mrs. Platt
In Part

The world over we love our own the best; east and west and north and south, all the wide world over, the woman who wears the white ribbon is loved and welcomed as our very own. And so, as the representative of West Washington W. C. T. U., I bring to you tonight, and it is quite a privilege, the love and the welcome which we give our very own, for you are ours.

Since last you came to be with us in annual convention, many notable things have taken place in the progress of reform. You have heard of them tonight. This great state of ours has written equality into her constitution since last you were here, having finally placed the ballot in the hands of her women citizens—an act of justice too long delayed. Since last you were here, the people have decreed that vice shall no longer be permitted to flaunt her shame upon our people, and the moral standard as a whole has been elevated to higher and higher levels, because this ballot was put in the hands of the womanhood of the state.

Then, we had another battle—the great fight for prohibition, which began back there thirty years ago or more. It was in truth a thirty years war—and how these splendid women rallied to the standard, and as the older workers fell out and passed away, the reserves came in and filled up the ranks, again, again, and again; and we who have worked together all these years to elevate this standard are now rejoicing together—rejoicing that tonight we may meet in a state and in a city that has written prohibition into its laws and that on the first of January every saloon shall close its doors and the liquor traffic shall go. And there shall not be any blind pigs in our alleys, because the governor has said so, and the mayor has said so, and the prosecuting attorneys of the state have said so, and the sheriff has said so, and we all have said so and so it shall be.

We of the west believe in conservation. We believe in the conservation of our sweetest, our most priceless, our loveliest possessions—our boys and girls. We believe in the conservation of the family, which is the richest wealth and the greatest pride of the state, and so for this reason we have striven together these years to make this a state that is fit to bring up the children in, standing forever and always struggling for the home and the child, and that is what made the organization what it is, and has given it its power throughout the country and the world.

On behalf of the W. C. T. U. of this state, after these years of toil and endeavor, of service and labor, marching shoulder to shoulder, and keeping step through four decades of history, writing equal suffrage, equal standard of morals, and prohibition of the liquor traffic into the laws of our state, this Western Washington W. C. T. U. comes to you tonight with love and with thanksgiving and with hope and with welcome. We are glad to have you here.

Responses

The cordial words from Seattle friends were responded to by Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of Ohio, the Crusade state, and Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, general secretary of the Young People's Branch.

Mrs. Richard
In Part

I am sure I ought to speak well tonight, if never before, for it is a great event to be welcomed in a prohibition state where women vote. I wonder if the women who knelt so many years ago before the saloons in the Crusade state and prayed and sang that they might be forever closed, realized that those songs and prayers would cross the continent and echo and re-echo until nineteen states should have voted out the liquor traffic? But God heard those prayers and God answered those women, a few of whom are living yet, and those who have gone on surely, we believe, know tonight that we are gaining ground. We are so glad to be welcomed by a mayor. So many of them are away from home when a Woman's Christian Temperance Union desires their presence at a meeting, but in a woman suffrage state, of course, the mayor comes out and does not stay at home, even though he may sometimes wish the women would. I am glad, too, that we are welcomed tonight by the ministers, and that the time is almost past when, as some one has said, "The saloons paint their windows so that the public cannot see in and the churches paint theirs so they cannot see out." I have been wondering why it was that the state of Ohio was asked to respond to the welcomes, but I think perhaps it may be because Ohio needed the inspiration of these welcomes to make the state dry November 2, 1915. Ohio is a most difficult proposition in which to secure statewide prohibition. The temperance people are now spelling Cincinnati with a big "S" instead of a "C" and pronouncing the last of it with the broad "a" (naughty). Dr. Kramer, one of the most eminent surgeons of the United States, a student of Sir Victor Horsley, in a recent speech explained why Cincinnati did not get a Federal reserve bank. The report of the government was to this effect: "We find that over forty per cent of the wealth of Cincinnati is tied up in too uncertain an enterprise," or, in other words, the liquid assets of Cincinnati are too great for the government to risk a Federal reserve bank in its hands. Don't you think we are gaining ground when the government considers liquor an uncertain enterprise? Uncertain it certainly is because we are surely marching on to National Constitutional Prohibition.

Mrs. Schachner
In Part

It is well that we chose to meet with you this glorious year of 1915, for nothing but the boundless, limitless West could have contained our joy over the ten sovereign states added to the dry line within a year. And fitting indeed that we should come to celebrate in the section that gave us four dry states. Some of us were a bit afraid that in your intensity of enthusiasm you would succeed in drying up even the Pacific before we had the opportunity to view it. Now that we shall soon gaze upon its waters we say, "Go ahead and do your worst. Beyond lie more worlds to conquer."

I herewith extend to you who so abundantly welcomed us a most cordial invitation to come over and help the rest of us celebrate when we hang up on the dry line. We don't know just when it will be, but it's liable to happen most any day.

Our slogan for many a day has been "On to Washington." What if for the time being we substitute the Washington of the West for the Washington of the East so long as it means the fulfillment of a dream—and so long as we remain, it's "Washington, our Washington."

Annual Address of National President, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Reviewing Prohibition Victories of Past Year

In the forward march of our world-wide temperance reform, the year 1915 will shine out as one of unparalleled advancement—a year whose progress presages the speedy downfall of the legalized liquor traffic.

Looking backward over the past twenty months and forward to the year 1916 one might epitomize the temperance movement in retrospect and prospect as "a movement of victorious yesterdays and confident tomorrows." These months chronicle an unprecedented number of prohibition victories. The temperance transformation of Russia; the anti-liquor measures in effect in German, French and English military circles; the complete abolition of alcohol in the United States Navy and in the Panama Canal Zone; the outlawing of the liquor traffic in Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Alabama and South Carolina; the majority vote for state-wide prohibition in both branches of Utah's legislature; the triumph of the enemies of the saloon in a large number of counties and cities; the upholding by the United States Supreme Court of the constitutionality of the prohibition provision of the Indian treaties—making one-fifth of Minnesota dry; the victorious prohibition elections in forty-five of Minnesota's counties; the battle royal for prohibition in the District of Columbia; the total abstinence rules enforced by many industrial and railroad corporations; the decrease at the rate of $1,250,000 a month of the internal revenue collections on distilled spirits despite the fact that wines are paying a high tax as a result of the emergency war tax law enacted by the last Congress; the enactment in prohibition states of stricter enforcement laws; the discussion of total abstinence and prohibition by press and popular magazines, and the marked decrease of their liquor advertising; the growth of anti-alcohol sentiment in the medical world—these, with the endorsement of National Constitutional Prohibition by hundreds of influential organizations and the outspoken declarations of men prominent in the official and political life of the United States and other nations in favor of prohibition and total abstinence, have given a marvelous impetus to the movement for the banishment of John Barleycorn from the business, the social, and the political life of the civilized world. The majority vote on the Sheppard-Hobson bill in the United States House of Representatives on December 22, 1914, even though it fell short of a decisive victory, was a triumph for nation-wide prohibition.

No wonder the distiller dreams disconcerting dreams; no wonder the brewer beholds visions that terrify! Lined up against the financial and political power of the liquor traffic are the combined temperance forces of the church, the home and the school. In behalf of health, morality, efficiency, and economy, these great influential temperance forces are proclaiming with a publicity that constantly accelerates its pace, "The Liquor Traffic Must Go!"

* * * * * * * * *

Sixteen years ago the Silver Anniversary Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in the First Presbyterian Church of this great and gracious metropolis of the Northwest. It was the first national convention of any kind to meet in the Evergreen State, and right royal was our welcome. Our beloved Lillian M. N. Stevens here presided for the first time as the elected president of the National W. C. T. U. Her ringing message to the convention closed with these significant words: "We hope when the full record of Seattle's glory is published, it will appear that the W. C. T. U. convention of 1899 proved a help and a blessing to the community, and may this declaration

Miss Anna A. Gordon, President National W. C. T. U.

when it is made be writ large and refer to a city that has outlawed the liquor traffic."

* * * * * * * * *

What an inspiring sight it would be could we assemble on some sunlit slope of this wide western country all the W. C. T. U. members in the United States, including beloved comrades from our new possessions, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Panama and the Canal Zone—the splendid rank and file of true-hearted women whose consecrated purpose is expressed in the tiny knot of white ribbon each wears above her faithful heart. See them—five hundred thousand strong—pass in review, and estimate if you can the power and the patriotism that the vast concourse represents! First are the women who have borne the burden and the heat of the day of small things, the veterans who held aloft our banner when friends were few and faith was sorely tested. With reverent gratitude we hail them! With cheer upon cheer we salute them—these women who dared! Here come the campaigners recruited in later years, the splendid fighters of today; campaigners in the fertile fields of science, the medical world, religious, philanthropic and social circles; campaigners in the halls of legislation; mothers, sisters, daughters, all animated with one divine purpose to protect the home, to purify the springs of national life, to safeguard the boys and girls, to rear a nation of abstainers from alcoholic drinks, to free a nation from the legalized liquor traffic.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Vice-President-at-Large National W. C. T. U.

Look again as the gleaming multitude is reinforced by the militant host of the Young People's Branch, quick of step, joyous in heart, devoted in action, glad to be on the firing line in the tremendous battle for a sober nation and a redeemed republic.

Hark! Another division singing as they come—our Loyal Temperance Legion boys and girls. Our souls are stirred to their depths as this happy-faced throng takes its place in this vast assemblage of the W. C. T. U. forces of our glorious country. The veterans turn to them with hope and satisfaction, saying: "When we make our final prayer, little people, we will pass along to you all the work we tried to do, little people!"

This is not altogether a fanciful picture. These beloved comrades, these young recruits, and these little soldiers newly mustered in, are very truly with us in spirit as we gather in our annual meeting. We greet 35,000 new members, who, during the past year, have heard the inspiring call to the colors and have trooped into our peaceful army. Gratefully we bid them welcome. Exceedingly we prize the influence and activity they bring to our growing organization.

It is a sacred privilege to count one in the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—to become an inheritor of its radiant past, a participant in its luminous present and a builder in its brightening future. No matter how numerous or how varied the great interests that may claim a Christian woman's time and sympathy, she should have abundant room in her heart for the temperance reform and give to it some of her best activities.

We are proud today to call the honor roll of nineteen commonwealths, each wearing in the crown of her statehood the bright jewel of prohibition. The grand old state of Maine, the first to catch the morning light of each returning day, set the goodly fashion—in 1851. Stout-hearted Kansas followed—in 1880. Prosperous North Dakota—in 1889. Georgia led her sisters of the sunny south, and Oklahoma was born free from the liquor traffic—in 1907. Fair Mississippi and the stannch "Old North State" joined the enviable sisterhood—in 1908. Brave Tennessee took her place—in 1909. West Virginia, the sturdy "Mountain State," overwhelmed her foe—in 1913. A year ago, in our Atlanta convention, with joyous acclaim we welcomed five states that during the year 1914 voted out the legalized liquor traffic—Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Arizona. Today we greet with cheers of gratitude and words of heartiest congratulation five additional prohibition states — Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Alabama, South Carolina! Hard fought were their battles, well earned their glorious triumphs! Hail, sister states beloved! (At this point the guard of honor, representing the nineteen prohibition states, in silence filed upon the platform and stood during the reading of the remainder of the address. See picture, pages 6 and 7.) God be praised for nineteen states that have, and that hold, the beneficent law of prohibition; one state more than half the number necessary to ratify a National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment!

Convention Guard of Honor, the Nineteen Prohibition States

Our hearts beat high with hope for redoubtable Ohio and fervently we pray for success in her battle of the ballots on November 2. May victory on March 7, 1916, crown the prohibition campaign now being waged by plucky Vermont, and may we also welcome to the charmed circle of prohibition commonwealths the great states of Montana and South Dakota which, in 1916, vote on this momentous question. California, Florida, Kentucky, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Texas, Wyoming and other near-prohibition states are fast approaching the mountain-top of state-wide prohibition. What an inestimable privilege it is to live and to lend a hand in these wonderful days!

* * * * * * * * *

Victorious Progress Toward National Constitutional Prohibition

Today the allied temperance forces, including practically all church denominations, are in the final stage of the great struggle for nation-wide prohibition through an amendment to the constitution of the United States.

White ribboners ever will recall with grateful pride the history of this marvelous nation-wide movement, which from the first they have actively aided. On December 27, 1876, the first bill for National Constitutional Prohibition was introduced into the United States Congress by Hon. Henry W. Blair, Senator from New Hampshire, and it was introduced by him at each succeeding Congress as long as he remained a member.

In 1911 our revered National president, Lillian M. N. Stevens, made her famous proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition. In December of the same year, Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson of Alabama introduced into the Sixty-third Congress a resolution providing for a referendum to the states on the question of a prohibition amendment to the United States Constitution. He has introduced a similar resolution each year in the House of Representatives, and in the Senate the measure has been ably championed by Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas.

The Congress and the whole nation have been tremendously stirred by memorable congressional hearings, and mammoth mass meetings held by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other temperance organizations in Washington, D. C. The cry of the women and the men of the allied forces of the liquor traffic has been "On to Washington." December 22, 1914, was a red letter day for the conquering temperance hosts. Upon that day occurred the first discussion by Congress of the fateful question of nation-wide prohibition.

* * * * * * * * *

Fifteen state delegations, including the noble men from our hostess state, voted solidly for the Hobson bill; ten more gave two-thirds or more votes for it, and only seven of the forty-eight voted solidly against it. One hundred and ninety-seven members of the House of Representatives favored submitting the question of National Constitutional Prohibition to the state legislatures. A poll of the press on the action of the House is gratifying, for a majority of the metropolitan dailies believe that the test of strength on December 22, 1914, portends National Constitutional Prohibition. We honor Richmond Pearson Hobson and the one hundred and ninety-six National Representatives who with him voted "aye" on the referendum bill.

* * * * * * * * *

Why was the question of national prohibition discussed for the first time in our republic's history in the United States Congress last December? Because back of the majority in the House are the temperance constituents of these congressmen. Sixty million people, or sixty-five per cent of the population living in territory that has outlawed the liquor traffic, demand the submission of the amendment to the states. Eighty per cent of the area of the United States has outlawed the traffic in intoxicants. The predominating sentiment of this country is against the saloon and the liquor traffic. The fact that a two-thirds majority vote was not obtained at this, the first trial of National Constitutional Prohibition in the United States Congress, does not daunt us. The united temperance forces of this nation will patiently continue their righteous clamor until the United States Congress hears and heeds and hands over to the sovereign people of the states of this Republic this mighty question, which will not be settled until it is settled right.

* * * * * * * * *

Because the alcohol disease is the deepest-seated, most chronic organic disease known to the body politic and body social, the permanent cure must be not only organic state legislation, but organic national legislation. The object of a national prohibition amendment is to destroy the agency that debauches the youth of the land. The W. C. T. U. agrees with Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson when he asserts: "The liquor trust is wise enough to know that it cannot perpetuate its sway by depending on debauching grown people, so it uses an organic method of teaching the young to drink. We apply exactly the same method to destroy the traffic. We do not try to make old drinkers stop drinking, but we do aim effectively to put a stop to the systematic, organized debauching of our youth through thousands and tens of thousands of agencies throughout the land."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union agrees with Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas that first of all we are Americans, and secondly, that we are citizens of states. The liquor men delightedly agree with those who oppose on the ground of states' rights our national constitutional amendment. Senator Sheppard truly says: "We believe that we are entitled to have this tremendous question submitted to the American people acting through the American states. All that we ask is the American privilege and the American right of presenting our cause in the proper form of American constitutional opinion."

Nineteen hundred sixteen is to be a year of paramount importance for the cause which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized to promote. It behooves the temperance forces everywhere to be alert in seeing that temperance men are nominated in the primaries and elected to the state legislatures and to Congress. We are many women of many minds, but we are all of one mind in our effort and enthusiasm for National Constitutional Prohibition. While as a national organization we are non-sectarian in religion and non-partisan in politics, as individual members of the W. C. T. U. we represent all religious denominations and all political parties. We thank all voters who at the ballot box register their convictions in favor of prohibitory laws, local, county, state and national. We glory in the challenge of the Christian Endeavorers to the Goliath of the liquor traffic—"A Saloonless Nation in 1920" and "A Saloonless World in 1930." The smooth stone of the ballot from the sling of this young David, who goes forth in the name of the Lord of Hosts, will be sure of aim and will smite the giant, Alcohol, that defies the armies of the Lord. With a David on the battlefield and a "Daniel" at the polling booth the Christian Endeavorers are bound to be victorious.

In this mighty onward march of prohibition the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, since its organization in 1874, has been a leading factor. This is due to our society's perfect machinery, wonderful unity, unparalleled devotion, and to its heroic, hard work along educational, scientific, economic, social and spiritual lines. This seed-sowing has resulted in much of the present wonderful harvest. We thank God for the hosts of glad reapers now working side by side in the whitening fields.

"At Attention" During Reading of President's Address

With motherly pride the W. C. T. U. recognizes the kindred organizations of stalwart brothers, sons and husbands, under the banners of the Prohibition Party, the Anti-Saloon League, the International Reform Bureau, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, the Flying Squadron and many others. With these and with all others we gladly co-operate in the National Temperance Council and in a national legislative program.

Across our continent already gleams the white way of prohibition. Good roads are the order of the day. We have a Lincoln highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Let the allied temperance forces complete a transcontinental highway from Washington to Washington; a highway in which the wayfaring man shall not err; a highway safe for the feet of little children; a good road of prohibition named in honor of the father of our country—the Washington prohibition highway.

The World Will Banish John Barleycorn

The extraordinary gain for prohibition in Russia, France, Germany, England, Italy and in all the vast areas involved in the European war, is unprecedented. The ruler of each belligerent nation realizes that his greatest enemy is alcoholic drink and declares that "booze must be hit and it must be hit hard." Leading articles in magazines and newspapers not only discuss the war, but also the revolt against alcohol and bring to the front the amazing assertion, "The world will banish John Barleycorn."

By one official edict, Nicholas II, Czar of Russia, emancipated that nation from the thralldom of vodka. Later, even the use of wine was proscribed. Russia thus lost an annual vodka revenue of many million dollars, but she gained a larger revenue through the morality and the efficiency of her people. She lost cash paid into liquor shops, but she gained deposits paid into savings banks. After seven months of nation-wide prohibition these banks had received 147 per cent more money on deposit than ever before. When announcing this astounding economic fact to the Imperial Council, the comptroller of the treasury, Kharitonoff, affirmed: "Russia without vodka and with the war is better off than Russia with vodka without the war." The returns of Russia's savings banks reported by the finance minister, M. Bark, to the beginning of July, 1915, show $900,000,000 above last year, which sum nearly equals the amount lost through the prohibition of the sale of vodka.

Russia's drunkards, criminals, suicides and paupers are being replaced by sober, efficient workmen and happy homes; by well-clad and well-fed men, women and children whose universal cry is, "Don't re-open the vodka shops." When, a year ago, the Czar announced that the sale of vodka by the government would never be resumed, millions of peasants, both men and women, exclaimed with joyful tears, "Thank God!"

There is reason to believe that the Czar, on the reëstablishment of peace, will continue his prohibition policy. He has declared that he adopted this plan because the success of the vodka monopoly was based on the ruin of the spiritual and economic forces of the people, and that in the future the government must depend for revenue "on the inexhaustible wealth of the country and the productive labor of its inhabitants."

* * * * * * * * *

As Russia interdicts vodka, so France, as a war measure, has prohibited the manufacture and sale of absinthe. General Joffre, convinced that drinking soldiers endangered the safety of the country, has forbidden the sale within the war zone of all alcoholic liquors. There are 500,000 saloons in France and the government derives from the liquor business a yearly revenue of $120,000,000. The French minister of finance would like to see a reform of the legislation on all alcoholic liquors. With foresighted wisdom he realizes that this is not alone a financial question, but also a great moral question—"one," affirms M. Ribot, "which will be forced on all governments consequent on the enormous evils flowing from alcohol," and he asks that the French Chamber "will take such steps as will do honor to itself and the nation." M. Poincare, president of France, writing to a temperance society assured its members that to pledge himself to abstain from all spirituous liquors during the war would be very easy, for he never indulged in alcoholic beverages.

In Switzerland, Holland and Belgium the sale of absinthe has been interdicted. In Germany, army recruits are warned by the government against the use of beer, because it is injurious and causes nearly all army excesses and disturbances. An official pamphlet tells the soldiers, "There is no justification for calling beer 'liquid bread.'" It is pertinent to recall the Kaiser's teetotal speech to cadets, made in November, 1910. He then said, "The next war, the next naval encounter, will require of you sound nerves. These are undermined by alcohol, endangered from youth up, by its use. You will later have opportunity to see the marine targets and the action of modern guns on ships and will be able therefore to infer the conditions in battle; you will see horrible devastation and all kinds of pictures; then the need will be strong nerves and cool heads. If you educate the people to give up alcohol I shall have sound and sensible subjects."

Another nation in the throes of a struggle against alcoholic drink, declared by eminent men and women to be the country's bitterest enemy, is the kingdom of Great Britain. King George the Fifth, Queen Mary, Hon. Lloyd George, minister of munitions, and Lord Kitchener, commander-in-chief of the army, are the leaders in this battle against John Barleycorn, and with them are Britain's white ribboners, led by Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, our Scottish comrades, and hosts of clergymen, physicians, and heads of corporations. At the annual council of the British Women's Temperance Association, Lady Carlisle, the president, in speaking of the King as a teetotaller, said: "The great King of England stepped into the arena where public opinion is visioned. It is the man at the top of the social fabric who is speaking to all in the country not too blind to see. Regardless of what aristocracy would think, he went down to the workers and said, 'I, your King, will show you an excellent way; come on and stand for old England by giving up the drink.'" After reading the King's proclamation of April 6 that no wines, no spirits, no beer will be consumed in any of his Majesty's houses, the following resolution, written by Lady Carlisle, was adopted by a rising vote: "The National British Women's Temperance Association assembled in council hails with uplifted heart and with loyal homage the King's resolve to set an example to his people by giving up the use of all alcoholic drink himself and by banishing it from his royal palaces, and the British temperance women fervently pray that millions of men and women may answer this call from the King, so that he, who deeply loves the country over which he reigns, may realize how great would be the glory of leading the nation all his life through, whether in time of war or in time of peace, far away from the old drink curse which has marred England's greatness, into the safe and blessed paths of national sobriety and righteousness." Ten thousand English churches observed April 18 and 25 as "King's Pledge Sundays."

* * * * * * * * *

Japanese companies have not lagged behind other nations in erecting breweries and are flooding not only Japan but China and Korea with beer. In our western hemisphere we have welcomed the glad tidings from Alberta and Saskatchewan, provinces in Canada that have driven out the liquor traffic, and as loyal Pan-Americans we long to help the drinking millions in South America. Bishop Homer C. Stuntz of the Methodist Church, in masterly addresses, has vividly pictured the great need in South America of Christian education and of temperance teaching and training. In the light of all these wonderful prohibition triumphs who shall say that in the next fifteen years we may not see the nations of both hemispheres redeemed from the curse of drink.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Womao's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only wheo sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your owo risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old aod your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter

463

Evanston, Illinois, November 4, 1915

GENERAL OFFICERS AND SECRETARIES ELECTED AT SEATTLE CONVENTION

President, Miss Anna A. Gordon; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Ella A. Boole; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances P. Parks; recording secretary, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge; treasurer, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns; general secretary Young People's Branch, Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson; general secretary Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, Miss Mary B. Ervin.

Last January Iceland outlawed the drink traffic and "as long as water stays on the sea," the women of Iceland are reported to have said, "liquor will be barred from Iceland." The Roumanian government has cut down the number of saloons in its country nearly fifty per cent. The parliament of Italy has passed an act forbidding the sale, except within very narrow limits and rigid conditions, of all liquors. In Holland the number of saloons has been reduced nearly one-half, and campaigns for nation-wide prohibition are now being urged in Sweden and Norway, Australia and New Zealand. South Africa's white ribboners are rapidly gaining total abstinence ground by their heroic endeavors. The banishing of vodka and later of all alcoholic liquors from Russia, and the exterminating of absinthe from France, were so spectacular that they have attracted the attention of the world, but the fact that other nations have quietly and unostentatiously been climbing on the water wagon may have been lost sight of.

In forty countries of the world the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has its representatives or organizations through which it is creating sentiment which will help mightily to a fulfillment of the prediction, "A Saloonless World in 1930." Our World's W. C. T. U. officers, Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, Miss Agnes E. Slack and Mrs. Mary E. Sanderson, are in our sympathetic thought in these dark days of sorrow and anxiety. We thank God that in letters coming to us from every section of the war zone there runs like a golden thread the tender love of W. C. T. U. comrades for one another, a love so strong that it will survive the awful shock and strain of the deplorable, devastating European war. We must be prepared for a mighty work that will be the privilege of the World's W. C. T. U. when the war is ended. Then we shall realize afresh the strength of the white ribbon bond and bless God anew for this great gift of His bestowing.

To our World's officers and to all W. C. T. U. leaders and comrades the world around, for whom our earnest united prayers are rising evermore, we send loving salutations. The generous gifts of Lady Carlisle and of Mrs. Caroline McDowell, superintendent of the World's Missionary Fund department in the National W. C. T. U., are making it possible for us to extend our educational and organizing enterprises in China, Japan, India, Burma, South Africa and South America. The pioneer "round-the-world" missionaries went out from the United States and are forever enshrined in our grateful hearts. With peculiar affection our hearts go out to our own white ribbon representatives in other lands, Miss Flora E. Strout of Maryland, in Rangoon, Burma, and Miss Hardynia K. Norville of Alabama, in Montevideo, Uruguay. Well may we feel a pride in those from our own home ranks who have been or now are World's W. C. T. U. leaders in distant lands. The consecrated toil of our gifted and faithful standard bearers of the World's W. C. T. U. in China, Japan, India, Burma, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Mexico and South America is bearing rich fruit. Our departments of Co-operation with Missionary Societies, and World's Missionary Fund are making sentiment for this great international advance.

* * * * * * * * *

Total Abstinence Advance

Total abstinence is no longer a ridiculed fanaticism. It sits in regal state on the throne of empires and of kingdoms, and in republics sways, in ever increasing measure, the voting citizenship. It safeguards the soldier, the sailor, the aviator, and the crew of the submarine. It gives a clear brain to the railroad man, the athlete, the autoist, and the commercial, industrial and agricultural worker. It says, "The first man to be taken off and the last man to be taken on is the man who drinks."

Total abstinence framed "Rule G," enforced by every railroad of the country. "Rule G" places a reliable man in charge of a transcontinental express train, or of a safety block-signal worth ten million dollars. At the San Francisco Exposition the railroad section of a twentieth century transportation parade was a temperance object lesson.

Total abstinence has driven whisky and brandy out of the United States Pharmacopœia, thus declaring them to be neither drugs nor medicine. Law-breaking drug stores are taking notice that it requires a saloon license to sell these alcoholic liquors.

Total abstinence has caused many physicians and State Medical Societies to deal John Barleycorn solar plexus blows. It has led the National Society of Neurologists and Alienists to condemn unqualifiedly the use of alcoholic beverages, and to recommend that the various state legislatures take steps to eliminate such use.

Total abstinence has convinced captains of industry that the "water wagon" is the only "universal safety device."

Total abstinence declares that even moderate drinking is an untold risk. It teaches the young that rational self-control means absolutely no drinking of alcoholics. It gives to society an example safe and beneficent for each one to follow. Its scientific and illuminating truths reveal the terrible ills that alcohol brings to body and soul; it impresses these truths on the young minds of millions of school children in every state, territory, and the District of Columbia. It is the popular subject of thousands of essays written by boys and girls whose slogan is, "Where There's Drink There's Danger."

It controls the rulings of many life insurance societies who affirm: "We prefer total abstainers to those who imbibe even moderately." "The mortality is heavier among drinkers than non-drinkers." "We do not insure the lives of persons engaged in the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquor." "Not even the war has been the subject of as much consideration among insurance men as has the liquor question."

Total abstinence organized the National Abstainers' Union, under the Federated Council of Churches of Christ in America, which represents over seventeen and a half million communicant members. It secured on the latest World's Temperance Sunday, 1,000,000 signatures to the temperance pledge. At the W. C. T. U., Young People's Branch, and Loyal Temperance Legion meetings held this year, the number of pledge signers has been encouragingly increased.

To warring nations total abstinence utters the warning cry, "The nation that keeps sober is the nation that will win." The teetotal pledge circulated among British troops at the front reads: "Recognizing that, as army, navy and medical leaders have stated, alcoholic drink is detrimental to health and efficiency, I promise, God helping me, to be teetotal while on service for my country."

Total abstinence enshrined in the hearts of patriotic men and women caused a bottle of water to be used at the christening of the battleship Arizona. Water is the symbol of life. Is it not an absurdity and an anachronism to use at the christening of any ship a bottle of alcoholic liquor, the symbol of disease, destruction and death?

Total abstinence has increased in ten years the sale of milk in New York City fifty per cent, and decreased the sale of beer. It dominated the New York City Health Department and caused it to declare an educational war on alcoholic drink. Commissioner Goldwater, when inaugurating this campaign, said: "The Health Board will fight the rich man's champagne as well as the poor man's beer." By means of posters, illustrated lectures and moving pictures, the ravages of alcohol are being shown, and the wise and fearless commissioner announces that "It is as necessary to battle drink as to fight an epidemic."

Total abstinence caused the state of Kansas to make liquor drinkers or cigaret smokers ineligible to office. This ruling applies to teachers and to the professional class as well as to industrial workers and day laborers. Kansas leads the nation in refusing to employ brains muddled by alcohol.

Total abstinence proudly presides over wineless banqueting boards and famous nuptial feasts.

It holds high place beside "Truth," as an ideal advocated by the members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world.

Total abstinence has received the unqualified endorsement of many leading educators, who have reached the conclusion that alcohol is an unmitigated evil, and who assert "that a man who takes alcohol in even a moderate degree is harming himself physically, mentally, morally and economically."

Total abstinence laid its compelling hand on the youth of our country when the Associated College Newspaper Publishers in their convention a few weeks ago at Columbia University voted to bar liquor advertisements from their publications.

Total abstinence recently so controlled the state convention of Georgia bankers that in the interest of efficiency they resolved to exclude wine from their future banquets. Total abstinence caused the Georgia Weekly Press Association and the Georgia police chiefs to take even stronger action; the Press Association renounced the use at their meetings of intoxicants of any kind including near beer; and the police chiefs, realizing that "the dignity of sobriety is becoming to an officer sworn to enforce the prohibitory law," determined not to allow intoxicating beverages to be served at any of their entertainments.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Total abstinence has reared a generation of voters inimical to the traffic in alcoholic liquors. To the people of this Christian republic it is saying, I, Total Abstinence, will give to you health, wealth, efficiency and prosperity. To the oppressed millions who shall seek America's hospitable shores I will be a lifegiver and a powerful protector.

Suffrage Success

Westward went the descendants of the brave women who first set foot upon Plymouth Rock, and still farther west—far over the Rockies—ventured the sons and daughters of the women who in motherly fashion rocked the old colonial cradle of liberty! California has erected a statue at the Panama Exposition to immortalize the "Pioneer Mother." The inscription at the base of the monument reads: "Over rude paths, with hunger and risk, she pressed on toward the vision of the better country. To an assemblage of men busied with the perishable rewards of the day, she brought the three-fold leaven of enduring society, faith, gentleness and home, with nurture of children."

It is the virile sons of these undaunted pioneers who have given western women the ballot. How grandly these great states between the Rockies and the Pacific have blossomed out for woman suffrage! Since our last national convention Nevada and Montana women have become voting citizens, making with Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Washington, California, Kansas, Oregon, Arizona and Illinois twelve states and the territory of Alaska where women enjoy the privileges of citizenship. Especially fragrant with good deeds are those ideal commonwealths, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Colorado, Arizona and Kansas, in which the pure white lilies of prohibition mingle with the shining yellow chrysanthemums of suffrage!

With great rejoicing the women everywhere have watched this swift-moving suffrage sentiment extending eastward, embracing Illinois on its way to the Atlantic coast. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts are the storm centers of suffrage campaigns, and the eventful day of decision draws near. About five million registered voters, out of a male population of nearly seven millions, will have the opportunity to grant or to deny the right of franchise to the nearly seven million women of voting age living in these four conservative commonwealths. Let us send to these eastern campaigners, to our sisters in Iowa, South Dakota and West Virginia, whose suffrage campaigns will end in 1916, our warmest greeting, and our assured hope that soon we shall hail them as fellow citizens. If Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts and New Jersey vote in favor of suffrage for women they increase three-fold the woman's vote in the United States. In Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas,

Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National Corresponding Secretary

Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, Newly Elected National Treasurer

Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Wyoming, according to the 1910 census, woman's vote numbers 3,676,532. In only six states are there more women than men. These are Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, District of Columbia, North Carolina and South Carolina. For the whole of the United States there are one hundred and six men to every one hundred women.

* * * * * * * * * *

Three women state senators in as many states are demonstrating the ability of the feminine mind to help solve the problems of legislative bodies—Miss Kathryn Clark of Oregon, Miss Helen Robinson of Colorado, and Mrs. Frances Willard Munds of Arizona. Frances E. Willard's namesake recently occupied the speaker's chair during the consideration of a bill to amend the law relating to the fees and salaries of county officers. Within a year equal suffrage has been endorsed by the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Grange, the National Education Association, the American Federation of Labor, the National Woman's Trades Union League, and by a great number of religious bodies of different denominations.

In the last Congress the nation-wide suffrage amendment won a majority vote in the Senate. Although it received only a minority vote in the House, the fact that the bill was introduced and debated scores a marked advance in suffrage legislation. The text of the amendment for which 174 Congressmen voted January 12, and which has been submitted to Congress each year since 1875, is as follows: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied by the United States, or by any state, on account of sex."

* * * * * * * * * *

The Federal Commission on Industrial Relations, appointed by President Wilson to investigate the causes of social and industrial unrest, has recently made its report. Among the recommendations of the Commission is a strong argument urging equal political rights for women as one of the means by which women in industry may obtain living wages.

Today we rejoice in a world wave for woman suffrage. Women have full franchise in Australia, New Zealand, Finland, Norway, Iceland and the Isle of Man. Woman's vote in Australia and New Zealand is said by prominent government officials to have "screwed up the moral tone of the communities." The countries (not including the United States) where women have municipal suffrage are, England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Canada, Sweden, Denmark and the Union of South Africa. Outside the United States, one hundred million people live in countries in which women vote in municipal elections. The preamble to the constitution of the World's W. C. T. U., written in 1883 and adopted by over forty federated countries, includes a declaration in favor of the ballot for women. "No sex in citizenship" was one of the earliest watchwords in our organization.

Woman suffrage is a legitimate part of the program of the National W. C. T. U., but is not obligatory on any state or local union. Woman suffrage meets in the legalized liquor traffic its greatest foe. Well disposed men and women who oppose votes for women little realize that they are in line with the allied liquor interests. The liquor organizations have been spending thousands of dollars to defeat at the polls the suffrage amendments submitted to male voters. In secret circulars sent to their henchmen the distillers and brewers emphatically declare that women, if given the ballot, will vote out the saloons and utterly destroy the liquor business.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Peace

The birth of Jesus Christ was heralded by an angelic chorus whose heavenly song bids us rejoice because the coming of Christ presages to the peoples of a world saddened by sin, suffering and strife, the wonderful benediction of peace. "Peace on earth, good-will to men" is Christianity's fundamental principle. Notwithstanding the hatred between nations engendered by the most terrible war of all history, we believe that millions of our fellow-beings cherish toward one another thoughts of love and good-will. This spirit abounding more and more will bring peace, and eventually will cause the governments of the world to acknowledge Christ as "King of kings" and "Lord of lords." The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the love of God and humanity, has ever strongly advocated peace and the establishment of courts of national and international arbitration which shall banish war from the world.

For our white ribbon comrades in Germany, England, Scotland, France, Belgium, British India, South Africa and Canada, many of whom have soldier husbands or soldier sons on the battle line, we have profound sympathy. Through official correspondence we hear of their ministries to the bereaved and their self-sacrificing generosity to the suffering. One of them expressed the thought of all when she wrote: "I value those silent waves of sympathy that are so needed when all the air breathes strife and unrest. We are indeed in the storm. It is not only the outward storm and tension that so stirs us; it is the shaking of the foundation of much that has seemed unshakable."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was born in prayer and has ever been nurtured in the faith of a firm reliance on God. Throughout the world we are very closely united in our supplications for one another and for world-wide peace. Not alone at the noontide hour should our fervent petitions ascend to God. Let the spirit of prayer pervade all our deeds on the busiest days. Only thus shall our aching hearts be comforted; only thus shall we be constrained to walk in God-directed paths; only thus shall we fully realize the consoling truth that as one great household we are all safely sheltered in the love of God.

* * * * * * * * * *

For the first time in history an International Peace Congress composed wholly of women has been held. This conference met April 28 to 30 at The Hague. It was composed of more than a thousand delegates from sixteen countries, who represented the half of humanity that is the greater sufferer from war. Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, chairman of the American delegation and presiding officer of the conference, was one of a committee that later visited all the warring countries and officially presented to governmental leaders the peace resolutions adopted by the Congress.

A republic is composed of federated states. In the same manner the nations of the world can be federated. Such a federation, having in its councils women as well as men and dominated by Christ's Golden Rule, will maintain a just and lasting international peace. "Nation with nation, land with land, unarmed shall live as comrades free; in every heart and brain shall throb the pulse of one fraternity."

Our Young People Afield

It is a joy to look into the faces of the members of our Young People's Branch. We feel the throb of your sympathetic souls—the grip of your high purpose. Clear in brain, strong in body, stout of heart, with eager, willing hands our young people are vital factors in the mighty contest to free our nation from the drink curse. The moral dynamite, the new patriotism, represented in our consecrated young people, profoundly stirs my soul. These new patriots live for their country, and seek a peace that shall be international. They are welfare workers and with us contend not only for total abstinence and prohibition, but for civic righteousness, national and international, for a single standard of purity for men and women, for an eight-hour day, for a living wage, for equal pay for equal work, for industrial training as an economic necessity, for the abolishment of child labor, for the increase of children's municipal playgrounds and gardens, and for greater educational, ethical and spiritual advantages.

Young Vanderbilt's holy impulse as he faced death on the sinking Lusitania was to lower to the hastily launched lifeboats the many helpless little children on the fated British liner. He and his valet—to whom he addressed the quick command, "Find the kiddies first"—were soon carrying in their strong arms, two by two, and handing down the side of the giant ship, scores of little children, whose gay happiness had lightened the anxiety of the hazardous voyage. A noble deed, an act of the holiest self-sacrifice! A golden deed that deepens our faith in the possible triumph of one's highest ideals in a crisis of supreme moment! This young scion of a family of fabulous wealth, in the closing scene of his life's drama, has set humanity an example of heroism, priceless in its worth—an example that shall live forever. To each of us he has bequeathed an immortal appeal: "Save the kiddies first."

To the members of the Young People's Branch, young Christian soldiers on the firing line of many moral battles of many mighty reforms, comes the clarion call, "Save the children first!" See that they are speedily lifted into the life boat of a pure environment. On life's perilous voyage give them a better chance to reach the haven of "a sound mind in a sound body." Upon you, dear young comrades, rests the responsibility of training and shielding the little people of the present generation. As I catch the responsive glow in your eager faces, I know you will be equal to this opportunity that pulsates with the divine possibility of redeeming from the curses threatening its destruction, our great nation.

* * * * * * * * *

Young Americans

A baby boy's cry in a happy home on the Atlantic coast was plainly heard four thousand miles away by a proud father who was visiting the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The cry, carried so far by the magic telephone, was the voice of a welcome child, cradled in comfort. Unheralded, unheard, except by poor, pathetic mothers, the cries of countless, defrauded, neglected children are making their pitiful appeal. These little ones are the innocent victims of an iniquitous liquor trust that protects the saloon instead of protecting the home. "Safety First" is a stirring slogan, worthy of the brains of the city fathers with whom it originated, but "Safety Always" is a splendid home slogan. It is the appeal to civic authorities of millions of mothers who demand for themselves and for their children sanitary homes and safe streets.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Julia Lathrop, who might be called the federal mother of our nation's boys and girls, is most happily and ably defending their interests. She has practical conferences with civic and national officials. "If mothers and women generally could have a share in the civic housekeeping, would three million babies die every year?" is one of her pertinent questions. There are thirteen million women engaged in the great business of rearing thirty million children. What other national interest is of greater importance? The Children's Bureau, through Miss Lathrop, confirms the sad fact, long realized by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that strong drink is a terrible handicap in the child life of our republic. State and local white ribboners who live in license territory are shocked to find how many children, deprived through strong drink of parental love and care, are supported by charity; and how many, deprived of their birthright, are classed among delinquents, defectives and degenerates.

The sad revelations of Juvenile Courts, now established in twenty-six states, emphasize the vital necessity of everywhere protecting children. Boys and girls, many of them of foreign birth, suffer from home neglect, bad companionship and vicious environment. Loyalty to our country's righteous institutions and strict obedience to her laws are a prime need of the hour. The youth of our country must be rooted and grounded in the principles of intelligent patriotism. In our young people's and children's societies we must emphasize the vital importance of reverence for law and respect for authority, and must vigorously denounce all forms of lawlessness.

The liquor fraternity, it is cheering to know, say they are irritated "by the temperance parades of white-garbed school children that in so many elections have been instrumental in appealing to the judgment of the voters." * * * * Evidently, in the opinion of the agitated and alarmed liquor leaders, the public appeal to the voters made by our boys and girls through petition, parade and public meeting, is well nigh irresistible. Thousands of children in the Sunday schools have petitioned state legislatures and the National Congress in behalf of state and national prohibition, and their enthusiastic activities will continue.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is not difficult for the student of temperance history to account for the deep conviction and the earnest work of many men and women who today are foremost in the great struggle against the drink monopoly. The boy who two score years ago was taught by a W. C. T. U. mother at the twilight hour to offer his child-like prayer for the temperance cause, as her hand rested tenderly upon his little head, is today a temperance warrior battling against home's most relentless foe. Boys and girls who twenty-five and thirty years ago were taught by white ribboners to shout, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up!" and whose heads, hearts, hands and feet received temperance training in public school, Sunday school, and Loyal Temperance Legion, are grown up, and are rapidly dethroning King Alcohol. Thousands of children are actively with us in the mighty campaigns of these victory-crowned days. As Young Campaigners for Prohibition they are making their full share of the righteous sentiment that is driving the saloon and the liquor traffic from localities and from states.

* * * * * * * * * * *

This year by action of the state legislature, September 28, or the school day in each year nearest that date, has been designated in Kansas as Frances E. Willard Day. The pen with which Governor Capper signed the bill is now one of the prized exhibits at Frances E. Willard's old home in Evanston. Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of Kansas W. C. T. U., who witnessed the signing of the bill and was presented with the pen, generously sent it to Rest Cottage. This bill establishing Frances E. Willard Day was the pet measure of the W. C. T. U. in the 1915 legislative session. A suitable program for the observance of the day has been prepared by the W. C. T. U. state officers, and the teachers of public schools will be asked to plan the exercises according to this outline.

Three other states—Alabama, New Mexico and Tennessee—have a similar temperance day in the public schools, and in the last two states it is known as Frances E. Willard Day. Alabama and New Mexico secured the day through their State Boards of Education. Tennessee followed Kansas in establishing such a day through legislative enactment.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The educational posters, designed and posted last year by the members of the Poster Advertising Association on more than three thousand plants of the United States and Canada, have been the admiration and uplift of thousands, both young

National President Calls Attention to the Tremendous Gain in W. C. T. U. Membership for the Year 1915 of 29,711. Spirit of Patriotism Exalted. "Let each Patriotic Heart," urged Miss Gordon, "be Linked to God by Cables of Faith and Prayer."

and old. Our thanks are due the Poster Advertising Association for the educational propaganda of these billboard posters. Their ethical and religious teaching of patriotism, courage and goodwill are poster-sermons which harmonize acceptably with God's handiwork in nature, and surely cannot disfigure a man-made city.

The municipal Christmas tree, a choice gift of many cities to their little ones, is guiding them toward high ideals of life and of service. Watching the long procession of carol singers last Christmas Eve in my prohibition home city of Evanston, Illinois, listening to the strains of "Holy Night" from a trumpet in a near-by belfry, noting the throngs gathering from east, west, north and south attracted by the brilliantly lighted tree and its shining star, I had long thoughts and grateful of the trend of the times in this glowing century. The day is speedily coming when the municipal heart will beat true to the "child in the midst," and when all cities that furnish their boys and girls a Christmas tree crowned with the "Star of Bethlehem" will cease to darken the lives of these little ones by placing in their pathway the degrading, demoralizing, life-destroying saloon. "The Christ child has mates—childhood shall be forever on the earth; and no man who has hurt or lightly priced so much as one sweet hair on one sweet infant's head but shall be cursed."

Temperance teaching and training of the children make deep and lasting sentiment for prohibition and for its enforcement. Mighty is the prohibition edict of the Czar of all the Russias, but mightier far will be the United States prohibition edict. This will come, not through the proclamation of one ruler, but through that of millions of enlightened American citizens, "kings over themselves," who at the ballot box will choose for our beloved republic the inestimable blessing of nation-wide prohibition.

* * * * * * * * * * *

With a message already too long, I realize that many topics of throbbing interest—topics closely related to our organization—have not been touched upon. Two of these—the vast labor question and the encouraging progress in the promotion of purity through education and legislation—will be ably discussed by specialists in our morning institutes. We should be wide-awake to the importance of industrial problems, for wage-earning men and women constitute a large part of our population. The W. C. T. U. has always maintained a helpful attitude toward the people who are not capitalists, but who by their industry have increased the material prosperity of our nation. In our declaration of principles is this statement: "We believe in a living wage; an eight hour day; and in justice as opposed to greed." W. C. T. U. women have many opportunities to circulate literature giving information on the relation of total abstinence to industrial efficiency. The recent report of the Federal Industrial Relations Commission shows the difficulty of agreement on any specific remedies for industrial discontent. Annihilate the liquor traffic and much of the discontent will disappear. The sober workingman and his family will be well housed, well fed, and well clothed.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union believes in one standard of purity for both men and women. The vital importance of training the child in the principles of purity and total abstinence is the fundamental thought of our preventive and educational work—in purity lines. "Self-knowledge, self-reverence, self-control, these three alone lead life to sovereign power," was the strong, poetic utterance of a seer who nobly won the victor's

Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson, National Recording Secretary

crown. Our youth sadly need to be taught this self-reverence, and also reverence for home, church, school, city and nation. Our growing boys and girls are the favored beneficiaries of a great, patriotic past and they must be the enthusiastic leaders of a grand and happy future. Experts who deal with the purity question from the legislative standpoint tell us that we shall never wholly control the social evil until we annihilate the drink traffic. Our activities for social purity along preventive, educational and legislative lines should be sane, steady and systematic.

Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National Assistant Recording Secretary

Prohibition victories bring responsibilities well-nigh overpowering in the weight of their importance to the community, the nation and the world. A prohibition victory places in the hands of law abiding citizens a weapon that only through constant, vigorous use can be kept brightly burnished. We do not expect a trolley car to make much progress unless it runs on a well laid track and is supplied from a central battery with electric power. Neither can we expect a prohibitory law to enforce itself. The law must run on the well laid track of an educated public sentiment, and the power that propels it must come from an electric battery of fearless, law enforcing officials. Alas, that any community should be lulled into apathy and indifference by the fact that open saloons do not legally exist in their midst. Woe to the locality where a prohibitory law administers moral chloroform instead of proving a tonic to civic, moral and spiritual activities.

Today we have a glowing lineup of nineteen prohibition states. These states each and every one must be held by the temperance forces and new territory constantly added. The liquor trade is enraged to the point of desperation and will spare neither money, misrepresentation nor multiplied activities to wrest from its hated invaders the heights of prohibition they have already gained. They will endeavor to prevent any further redemption of the swamps and sewers of liquordom that breed disease and death for our republic—nay, threaten the very existence of our nation.

It means much, beloved comrades, that we have held the tremendous 1914 gain of 30,878 members and can report a net gain of 29,711 members for 1915—a W. C. T. U. year of less than eleven months. The European situation threatened to seriously cripple our finances; our hearts have prompted us to give generously to the sufferers from this accursed, cruel war; and heavy demands have been made upon us for our own poor and unemployed. To secure new members and to diligently push our work in her own locality has called out the consecrated effort of each white ribboner. We express our heartfelt gratitude to the heroic rank and file who have responded so grandly to new opportunities, and have shouldered so bravely difficult responsibilities. White ribboners are not easily dismayed. They have proved themselves equal to sudden and overwhelming crises. Always they have made a record worthy of our high calling in Christ Jesus our Lord.

The spirit of humanity, of brotherhood, of co-operation, is rapidly developing, and its mighty, mutual benefit is becoming better understood. Rejoicingly and reverently we catch President Wilson's vision of the patriots of our republic, fused, melted, welded, into one great pulsating heart, "the heart of America that shall interpret the heart of the world." Let each temperance patriot wear in his heart the flag of our country. Let each patriotic heart be linked to God by cables of faith and prayer. So shall we speedily win our fight for a sober nation, and the purified heart of America shall worthily interpret the heart of the world.

NOTE: The recommendations of the National president will be given in the next issue of the convention report.

Report of National Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Frances P. Parks—A Survey of W. C. T. U. Work in the Various States

It were useless to endeavor to report the amount of work accomplished at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters the past year. The comprehensive plans adopted by the Atlanta Convention for continuing the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition meant work for Headquarters in every department. From the uniform program for January 14, National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day, to the Sunday school program for World's Temperance Sunday, there has been a stream of special campaign supplies pouring out of the Publishing House. With THE UNION SIGNAL growing in favor week by week, and the Publicity Bureau supplying an ever widening circle of newspapers with up-to-date prohibition news, it will not be questioned that the editorial force and the workers in Circulation and Literature departments have been kept busy. Just how Miss Gordon accomplishes all she does, sought as she is day and night by callers of all conditions and pressed by world-wide correspondence, is a mystery to those who are associated with her at National Headquarters; but she shares their responsibilities, too, never seeming to count these a burden. And at any time the great national issue has demanded her presence elsewhere, in Washington for a conference with leaders of the temperance forces or in state W. C. T. U. conventions, our National president has been there to inspire and encourage with her unfailing optimism and her broad outlook. There has been sadness in our hearts because of a vacant chair in the Household of Faith. We think of Mrs. Hutchinson as not far away, but where "infinite joy shall atone for the pain."

The Memorial Fund

The Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund, established to increase the membership and power of the W. C. T. U., has not failed in its mission the past year. Eighteen states received appropriations from this fund. One hundred dollars was appropriated to make it possible for Mrs. Hatcher to visit Alaska and hold a territorial convention. South Carolina, Ohio, Vermont, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, and California have had the benefit of the special campaign literature offer. The attractive National Headquarters, established in the Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., in December, and maintained by an appropriation from the Memorial Fund, is the realization of a long recognized need of the organization. Three great departments, Work Among Foreign Speaking People, Work Among Colored People, and Work Among Indians, are financed from this fund. It should be a matter of pride with every local union in the United States to contribute two dollars annually to the Memorial Fund.

Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund

We trust the plan for raising a National campaign fund, recommended by the Atlanta Convention, will be continued, namely: "That each local union be asked to hold a public meeting not later than March; an offering to be taken for the Campaign Fund, this money to be sent through regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall transmit one-half to the National treasurer, this fund to be known in both state and National as the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

"That the Young People's Branches be urged to have a share in the campaign by adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and by enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers."

Subscription envelopes, prepared by the National W. C. T. U., are furnished to the state W. C. T. U. at cost, to be sent free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion that every local union send a contribution to the fund averaging ten cents per member. It must be admitted by all loyal white ribboners that this is a light tax to put upon the members of an organization pledged to work for the advancement of the cause for which Lillian Stevens "dared hope almost everything." We must have a campaign fund that shall adequately bear its part in placing prohibition in the constitution of the United States. To carry out this simple plan insures a campaign fund for 1916 of more than $30,000 on the membership reported to this Convention. Reckoning as we do that one-third of the membership dues were uncollected for one reason and another, gives a reasonable expectation that the sum raised by this method would be at least $40,000. Our opponents were never so alert and aggressive. They are spending millions in the attempt to defeat the amendment and prevent the question from going to the states. The Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association appropriated $50,000,000 for the campaign, more than $1,000,000 for each state in the Union, and other liquor associations are piling up funds for the same purpose. But not upon the might and power of the dollar, necessary "sinew of war" though it be, does the triumph of righteousness depend. We know, and the liquor people know, that invisible forces are working with and for the temperance hosts, and that victory is sure. Let us remember that we are on the Lord's side and that back of every dollar put into the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund is the spirit and power of the living God. That friends of the cause are only waiting to know you will act as their agents in using their money as they would desire, is proved by a notable gift of $1,200 to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, the donors requesting that the money be transferred to the Arizona Dry Federation to aid in the law enforcement campaign in that state, a request promptly granted.

W. C. T. U. Exhibits

In the preparation of an educational exhibit to be installed at the Panama-Pacific Exposition early in the year, we received valuable assistance from the committee appointed by the convention of 1913. When contract for making much of the material to be included was given to a Providence firm of exhibit specialists, Mrs. Rooke very kindly consented to serve as the local consulting member of the exhibit committee. Mrs. Dorr rendered valuable assistance in securing volunteer demonstrators from Oakland, Berkeley and San Francisco unions who have faithfully aided Miss Mary E. Brown, superintendent of the exhibit by appointment of the National Officers. To the efficiency of these comrades we owe her presence in the convention. Northern California headquarters has been in use as a popular annex to our exhibit booth. Attractive furnishings which have made the booth more comfortable for the workers have been the gift of Northern California W. C. T. U. Visitors to the exhibit have been enthusiastic in their praise of its competent and tactful management by Miss Brown. This great undertaking has proved so successful that the wisdom of the convention in authorizing such an exhibit has been fully established and the generous assistance of the World's W. C. T. U. proved to be a warranted investment of effort and money. The Panama-Pacific International Exposition is, without question, the greatest, most comprehensive and stupendous exposition ever held. To have gained recognition at all would have been an honor worthy of congratulation. The jury of awards, in giving the grand prize to this exhibit, considered four questions: What is the object of the organization? What means have been used in reaching that object? What has been accomplished thus far? What are the prospects for the future? Another recognition was given the W. C. T. U. by including the exhibit in a survey made for a souvenir book presented to the National Education Association and International Congress of Education at the joint meeting held in Oakland in August. Only exhibits valuable from an educational standpoint were included in the book, which is to be used as a textbook in the schools of the United States.

The exhibit method of securing publicity for the W. C. T. U. has been successfully employed by the Southern California union in an attractive headquarters and rest room installed at the San Diego Exposition. The New York W. C. T. U. had a notable exhibit in the Grand Central Palace, New York City, in March, as a feature of the "Made-In-United States" Exposition. The exhibit was installed a month later in the Woman's Industrial Exposition at the same location, and proved a most successful attraction at the state fair in August. The W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Ohio state fair, modeled on the Panama-Pacific exhibit, was visited by thousands of people and made an effective appeal to voters.

Interstate Campaign Conferences

Efficiency is the watchword of the present time and the need of reaching the highest possible degree of efficiency in prohibition campaigns led the General Officers to arrange for two group meetings last spring, at which campaign methods were discussed. The first Interstate Campaign Conference was held at Jacksonville, Florida, in March. All of the southern states were officially represented, with the exception of Texas and Tennessee. The conference, which was presided over by Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary, was a great sentiment maker and set forth practical plans and ideas of immense value to the earnest, wide-awake campaigner.

The Interstate Campaign Conference of the Northwest met in Boise, Idaho, in April, and by its enthusiasm further emphasized the value of the plan for get-together meetings of state W. C. T. U. workers. Colorado furnished the presiding officer, Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford; the other states represented were Oregon, Wyoming, North Idaho, Nevada, Utah and Montana, with South Idaho acting as hostess. The delegations in attendance at the conference represented 10,744 white ribbon voters. In this particular it was probably the most unique gathering of women on record. Liquor people, it is said, consider one white ribboner and her influence equal to seven votes.

Chautauquas

At Chautauqua, New York, the birthplace of Chautauquas and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the usual high standard of excellence was maintained in all programs given under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U. Mrs. Mary B. Wilson was again in charge of our work there and the popular hostess of National W. C. T. U. headquarters in Kellogg Hall.

The student of social forces has discovered the value of the Chautauqua institution as an educator, an enlightener, a promoter, an entertainer and an all-round public good. The W. C. T. U learned that lesson early and pre-empted a place on the Chautauqua platform which becomes broader as the Chautauqua idea grows. In a general way, what was done at the Mother Chautauqua was duplicated by state unions in hundreds of Chautauquas —the popular "Feast of the Tabernacles."

Our Field Workers

Now a word about organizing work. Of the thirty-eight organizers, thirty have been actively in the field and have reported new unions organized and old unions strengthened. They have assisted in campaigns for prohibition and woman suffrage. They are an heroic and devoted set of women, deserving support and commendation. Mrs. Howland, who has won an enviable reputation as a campaigner, accepted a recent urgent call to assist in a prohibition campaign in Newfoundland, though her heart was set on attending this Convention. She has reached St. Johns and the liquorites have commenced their attacks upon her, calling her "interloper," saying she is not welcome, etc. She is the guest of our consul, James Sackett Benedict, and his wife. Mrs. Benedict is president of the W. C. T. U. The liquor men say Consul Benedict should tell the United States government that Mrs. Howland is not wanted in Newfoundland. There is also a veiled threat that Mr. Benedict will be recalled if too active an interest is exhibited in the campaign. Mrs. Armor is campaigning in Ohio, but her heart is here. She made a wonderful speech as a substitute for ex-Secretary of State Bryan at the International Christian Endeavor convention held in Chicago. The great audience of 15,000 rose as one person on her call for the vote on National Constitutional Prohibition. I promised then to tell you that wherever Mary Harris Armor may be today she has on "the whole armor" and is fighting our battle in God's name and for His honor and glory. Mrs. Viola Romans, secretary of the Board of Organizers and Lecturers, announced for an address on "Our National Defenses" in this Convention, has found "Our State Defenses" a more urgent call to duty and will be constantly in service until the polls close in Ohio on November second.

Expansion of the W. C T. U.

The history of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, its marvelous growth in numbers and in power, does not need to be reviewed in this presence, but, if time permitted, we fain would bring to your remembrance the chapters written since the first annual convention held on the Pacific Coast met in the hospitable city of Seattle, to celebrate the silver anniversary of the organization. Twenty-five years of honorable warfare had been crowned by no small measure of success, for the white banner of prohibition had been set up by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in every state and territory of the Union. But today Washington alone counts nearly as many members as in 1899 were enlisted in all the coast states. "A little leaven hath leavened the whole lump," and largely through the efforts of the women, first woman suffrage and then state-wide prohibition became an issue.

* * * * * * * * *

With its system of organization and plan of work duplicated in all the states and territories, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union needed and found adaptations which made possible its expansion in the North, South, East and West, thus vindicating the methods which have been pursued for the past forty years. By its "Do Everything Policy," the gigantic tree of the liquor traffic has been girdled and is doomed.

* * * * * * * * * *

White States

With increasing confidence in their ability to secure recognition from the law makers, the white ribboners of Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Georgia, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Mississippi, North Carolina and West Virginia have pressed their claims for better legislation in all matters pertaining to the home and childhood. Being possessed of full citizenship, the Kansas W. C. T. U. unhesitatingly asked the state legislature for consideration and passage of certain bills, sending out a neat card, bearing the following request:

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union which represents 10,000 earnest, Christian women of Kansas, is very much interested in the public welfare of the state, and would therefore earnestly solicit your support in behalf of the following bills:

1. Mother's Compensation Bill.
2. Minimum Wage for Women and Girls under "Board" already established.
3. Division of Child Hygiene under State Board of Health.
4. Temperance Day in Public Schools.
5. Tax Exemption of two hundred dollars for all householders.
6. Humane Education in Public Schools.
7. Equal Property Rights for Married Men and Married Women.

A splendid educational law and three good anti-liquor bills.

All these bills passed both houses and became laws, and Kansas now has the distinction of being the first state to establish by legislative action a Frances Willard Day in the public schools.

Georgia furnishes an apt illustration of a prohibition state beset by outside and inside influences represented by secret liquor agencies and open lobbies in the legislature seeking to thwart existing laws and to prevent the enactment of more stringent measures. The W. C. T. U. labors unceasingly to strengthen prohibition sentiment. The appeal to Governor Harris to include a prohibition measure in his call for an extra session of the legislature, made by the W. C. T. U., supported by thousands of good people outside of the organization, has been granted.

The white banner of prohibition so long held aloft in Tennessee by the devoted hands of Silena Holman will be carried more steadily by her successor because of the legislation secured in the last legislature by this dauntless leader. A measure providing for the observance of a Frances Willard Day, which passed the legislature, will do much to educate the younger generation of the state to an appreciation of the value of the prohibitory law. Sorrowing, but undismayed, the Tennessee W. C. T. U. will take as their rally cry her parting words: "Let all that is done be for the good of the work!"

New White States

To the roll-call of prohibition states, Virginia, Washington, Oregon, Arizona and Colorado answered for the first time with a heartsome "Here" at the Atlanta Convention. The year 1915 has seen the list of new white states swelled by the addition of Alabama, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa and South Carolina, while Ohio is pressing hard to join the sisterhood. As each of these states swung into line, Old Glory floated triumphantly in front of National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, and our hearts thrilled with admiration for the brave comrades who had helped to place another prohibition star in this historic flag. As in the hostess state of Washington, these comrades with infinite pains and patience had "girdled the tree"; they had builded in the hearts of their fellow citizens a mighty faith in their just cause; they had boldly prophesied that the people would rise in their majesty and kill the liquor traffic; they had used their utmost influence to secure the election of temperance men to official positions, and had continued with unabated zeal their educational campaigns. Local unions had secured the co-operation of churches in the observance of National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day, and on this occasion many votes for state-wide prohibition were won. Picnics, fairs, medal contests and open-air meetings were utilized to present the truth to the masses. The young people and the children helped in public demonstrations and parades. The increasing friendliness of the press made possible the reaching of ever-widening circles with social and economic arguments for outlawing the liquor traffic; carefully selected legislative committees camped at state capitals while liquor bills were under consideration, and in no instance was there a failure to give an expression of appreciation on the part of the women when the desired legislation was secured.

The year has witnessed some unusual scenes in these new white states, as in Iowa, when on the evening of the day the governor affixed his signature to the death warrant of Iowa's saloons, he paid an eloquent tribute to the organized white ribboners and their work in bringing about this long-deferred victory over the liquor trade; as in Oregon, when the speaker of the house of representatives, in recognition of the part the women had taken in the campaign, commissioned the president of the state W. C. T. U. to carry the prohibition bill to the senate and from there to the governor for his signature; as in Arizona, when our white ribbon comrade, Mrs. Frances Willard Munds, state senator, was called to the chair on two occasions when important matters were under consideration by the legislature in committee of the whole.

In Colorado the most strenuous work of the year was legislative and resulted in the enactment of a very inclusive and exclusive enforcement law. White ribboners proved to be efficient lobbyists, and when Denver tried to take advantage of the "home rule" amendment and grant licenses extending into 1916, the question was carried to the supreme court, and at the request of the state officials the W. C. T. U. retained two prominent lawyers to prepare "friendly briefs." This situation illustrates the need of an "emergency fund" for the defense of prohibition.

* * * * * * * * * *

Near-White States

California, South Dakota, Vermont, Montana and Nebraska and the territory of Alaska have already launched campaigns which will culminate in elections in 1916. Nothing daunted by the failure to receive prohibition in 1914, the citizens of the Golden State plan for a long pull, a strong pull and a steady pull, as well as a pull together, in a combination of prohibition forces to be known as the Dry Federation. Mrs. Addie Garwood Estes, vice-president of the Northern California W. C. T. U., has been appointed superintendent of Woman's Work in the Dry Federation.

Montana is doing fine preliminary work this year in preparation for the definite state-wide campaign into which she is to be plunged. She is aiming to standardize the local unions so as to conserve every effort made and to secure that essential to successful endeavor—team work.

The Nebraska W. C. T. U. will have charge of all petition work in the campaign to be conducted by the federated temperance forces of that state.

* * * * * * * * * *

In Vermont the temperance and religious forces have united on a campaign plan which gives to each organization its definite work. The W. C. T. U. makes the county union the unit in its financial plan, and there is already a friendly rivalry to bring "our" county up to requirements without drawing upon the state campaign fund.

The new territorial union is well represented in this convention and without doubt our Alaska comrades will glean from the discussion of campaign methods much that can be adapted and applied to the Northland, and the indications are that with the help of voting women Alaska will eliminate the liquor traffic at the next general election.

Whitening States

State-wide prohibition bills have been introduced in Utah, New York, Delaware, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Texas, Wyoming, Michigan and Indiana. The Utah legislature voted for state-wide prohibition, but the bill was vetoed by Governor Spry, after the close of the session, otherwise it would undoubtedly have been passed over his veto. It is safe to say that the voice of Utah will be heard again on this question. In anticipation of the hearing on the New York bill, set for March 10, the Allied Forces for Civic and Moral Betterment voted to designate February 22 and October 12 as "poster days." All temperance, philanthropic and religious organizations were asked on these dates to put up temperance posters. The W. C. T. U., in addition to its own work, was requested to present the matter to the churches, urging them to secure special posters from their own temperance committee. Five thousand sets of six posters each, issued by the National W. C. T. U., were ordered for February 22, and at the rate orders are being booked in the Publishing House, twice as many posters will be displayed on October 12 in New York. This plan is commended for securing concerted action and great publicity at little expense.

The Minnesota W. C. T. U. has taken an active part in the county option campaigns which have put the saloons out of business in forty-five counties. Their aim has been to increase the number of efficient workers by enlarging the membership, and to keep the work before the public through the press, posters, medal contests, open-air meetings, street parades and other demonstrations. On September 28, "All-over the State Campaign Day" was observed.

The recent emphatic declaration of Governor Kendrick of Wyoming in favor of state-wide prohibition and asserting that he believed it time his state entered into such a campaign, has given a new impetus to the movement. The president of Wyoming W. C. T. U., profiting by a lesson in campaign methods received at the Western Interstate Campaign Conference last spring, made a tour of her state with the western Y. P. B. field secretary, Mrs. Linnie Carl, and conducted in each county seat a conference in which she urged the co-operation of leading men and women.

Florida secured from the last legislature some drastic anti-liquor legislation, depriving the saloons of almost all the features which would make them attractive as social drinking centers. It also strengthened its S. T. I. law. Prohibition sentiment in the state is growing.

Michigan concentrated its efforts on legislative work and an increase of membership, making a large gain. During the session of the legislature, the speaker of the house by regular appointment arranged for the W. C. T. U. reporter to enjoy all the privileges accorded the representatives of the leading papers of the state. The state-wide prohibition bill introduced in March did not pass, but the discussion over this and other bills was worth the effort expended by the temperance forces. Every one of the twelve districts made a net gain in membership and sixty counties were organized. Michigan has set its goal for 20,000 members by next June.

Illinois continues to demonstrate the power of the woman voter to secure cleaner municipal conditions and a larger area of law enforcement. It is estimated that there are 1,000,000 qualified women voters in the state and of this number at least seventy-five per cent have rendered a good account of themselves, voting against the saloon, vicious candidates and graft propositions. Chicago women have not as yet voted upon the licensing of saloons but will next spring cast votes against the continuance of over 7,000 saloons. Outside of Chicago, 1,396 saloons have been voted out, leaving 3,500 down state yet to be cared for. Special agitation is directed toward a constitutional convention.

Every local union in the District of Columbia reported a gain in membership. Prohibition sentiment was fostered by working with and through other organizations and the posting of prohibition maps in all school buildings, which are to be kept up-to-date by a committee appointed for that purpose. The loyal co-operation of the No. 2 District union is encouraged and appreciated.

Suffrage Campaign States

The W. C. T. U. is carrying on a definite part of the work in the suffrage campaigns of Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and Massachusetts, where the vote is soon to be taken, and it will be prominent in the suffrage campaigns of 1916.

Massachusetts' equal suffrage campaign is not led by the W. C. T. U., but in some sections the white ribboners of the Old Bay State have co-operated with the suffrage societies. In others they have worked independently. Each local union held a suffrage meeting, W. C. T. U. enrollment blanks were circulated and our popular suffrage campaign leaflets have been widely distributed. The W. C. T. U. has had a fine opportunity to show the attitude of the liquor forces to the ballot in the hands of the women and has made good use of it. A communication from a paid agent of "the trade," bearing the heading, "Woman Suffrage Most Bitterly Opposed in Every Way to the Liquor Traffic and all Forms of Liquor License" fell into their hands. It was photographed and sent broadcast over the state.

The long-drawn-out battle with the liquor forces supported by brewery money has convinced the Missouri W. C. T. U. that the next step must be an effort to obtain the ballot for women. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Equal Suffrage Association have joined in a compact to call another election upon woman suffrage by means of the initiative, in 1916.

Strength in Numbers

When you remember that great battles have been won by a reinforcement of two or three hundred, and that Thermopylae was held by one man, you will realize the significance of a great membership gain, and that in a year of marked financial depression. Even before the National W. C. T. U. set its goal at 50,000 new members, many state unions had determined to enter upon membership crusades.

The concrete result is a gain of 35,771 members reported by forty-two states. The Jubilee program, closing the convention Thursday evening, will be provided by the presidents of the following successful states in the National membership contest: Gain of over one hundred, District of Columbia, Idaho South, Connecticut, Kentucky, Maine, New Hampshire, Delaware, Oklahoma; over two hundred, Rhode Island, Wyoming and Arkansas No. 2; over three hundred, South Carolina; over four hundred, Colorado; over five hundred, Maryland, Kansas and Montana; over six hundred, Virginia; over seven hundred, New Jersey, Minnesota and North Dakota; over eight hundred, Indiana, Nebraska; over eleven hundred, Tennessee and Wisconsin; over fourteen hundred, Massachusetts; over two thousand, Missouri and Michigan and Iowa; over three thousand, New York; over five thousand, Ohio; Pennsylvania again leading with a net gain of 6,172.

The following states made gains under one hundred: Florida, District of Columbia No. 2, Nevada, West Virginia, New Mexico, Georgia, Idaho North, Louisiana No. 2 and Utah.

A new colored state union has been organized in Maryland with the approval and help of the white state union and dues have been paid for 220 members. Since the Atlanta Convention the colored state union in North Carolina paid dues for two years, giving it a membership of 270 on our record. These members count on the right side of the ledger, but cannot justly be included in the same class with states making a net gain over last year's membership.

With the average gain made in forty-two states maintained in all the states, the National membership goal of 50,000 would have been passed with nearly a thousand for good measure. Unfortunately, there were sections of the country, notably the Pacific coast states, where the obstacles proved insurmountable and eighteen states report an aggregate loss in membership which reduces the National net gain to 29,711. Your superintendent of Organization respectfully and with due appreciation of the labor and devotion involved, recommends setting the membership goal for 1916 at 75,000 net gain. Let us undertake great things, ask great things and expect great things of God and the people!

MOTHER'S "NOTIONS"
Good for Young People to Follow

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are.

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy and Postum has been the principal factor.

"I was induced to give him the Postum because of my own experience with it.

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years. Have tried all sorts of medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came.

"I used to read the Postum advertisements in our paper. At first I gave but little attention to them, but finally something in one of the advertisements made me conclude to try Postum.

"I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and used good, rich cream. It was very nice indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better. One of them laughed and said: 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet.

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off coffee and taking Postum, and now after three years' use I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health, and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES P. PARKS, Acting Treasurer

GENERAL NATIONAL RECEIPTS

Cash on hand, Oct. 29, 1914	$14,368.78
Time Deposits, Interest Bearing	28,232.00
		$ 42,600.78
W. Dues	$31,899.82
Y. P. B. Dues	1,013.62
L. T. L. Dues	920.46
Life and Memorial Membership Fees	650.00
World's W. C. T. U. Membership Fees	900.00
Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund	9,387.72
Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund	4,903.27
Anna A. Gordon Missionary Fund	140.57
World's W. C. T. U. Missionary Fund	58.50
World's Y. P. B. Missionary Fund	141.18
Japanese Headquarters Bldg. Fund	132.00
Atlanta Collections	317.70
Bequests	4,000.00
Miscellaneous	271.08
Exchange	6.45
Interest	1,208.96
From World's Treas. for Panama-Pacific Exhibit	1,059.23
Total	$ 57,010.56

LITERATURE RECEIPTS

Publications	$15,357.35
Miscellaneous	8,619.34
Superintendents' Stock	3,496.17
Exchange	26.15
Total	$27,499.01

UNION SIGNAL RECEIPTS

Union Signal Subscriptions	$22,092.87
Young Crusader Subscriptions	4,133.04
Philanthropy Fund	9.00
Advertising	1,241.06
Exchange	41.24
Miscellaneous	224.62
Total	$27,741.83
Total receipts		112,251.40
Grand Total		$154,852.18

GENERAL NATIONAL DISBURSEMENTS

World's W. C. T. U. Dues	$ 3,291.34
Contributions to World's W. C. T. U.:
World's Life Membership Fees	900.00
World's W. C. T. U. Missionary Fund	58.50
World's Y. Missionary Fund	141.18
Anna A. Gordon Missionary Fund	140.57
Japanese Building Fund	132.00
Convention Expenses, Atlanta	871.14
F. E. W. Memorial Fund	5,651.12
Appropriations	13,880.00
Printing	580.57
Telephone, Telegraph, Express	227.93
Salaries	5,341.60
Headquarters Fund	2,652.87
Campaign Fund	2,181.02
Panama-Pacific Exposition	3,341.82
Property Expenses	616.47
Postage	414.69
Y. P. B.	342.47
L. T. L.	190.33
Press and Publicity	1,556.63
Miscellaneous	2,333.41
Furniture and Fixtures	107.47
War Tax	.29
Total	$44,953.42

LITERATURE DISBURSEMENTS

Printing	$ 6,481.13
Postage	2,436.55
Telephone, Telegraph, Express	2,497.35
Salaries	5,434.50
Miscellaneous	1,090.14
Exchange	65.35
Superintendents' Literature	1,534.16
Miscellaneous Literature	4,265.91
Convention Expenses	137.23
Furniture and Fixtures	82.57
War Tax	73.28
Property Expenses	89.70
Total	$24,187.87

UNION SIGNAL DISBURSEMENTS

Printing Union Signal and Young Crusader	$14,606.00
Miscellaneous Printing	93.13
Postage	1,951.88
Articles and Illustrations for Papers	1,038.52
Premiums and Prizes	371.15
Convention Expenses	60.38
Salaries	6,037.13
Telephone, Telegraph, Express	153.71
Exchange	47.00
Furniture and Fixtures	148.55
Miscellaneous	951.72
Total	$25,459.17
Total Disbursements		$94,600.46
Time Deposits (Interest bearing)	$42,356.81
Cash on hand	17,894.91	60,251.72
Grand Total		$154,852.18

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY CONVENTION

PREAMBLE

Reverently acknowledging the guidance and help of our Heavenly Father in the work of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union during the past year, we come to this Forty-second Annual Convention with joy because of the daily verification of the truth of the promise "the way of the wicked He turneth upside down."

We rejoice because of the advance made in every line of our work; for the action of the American Insurance Union in classing saloon-keepers and bartenders as equally hazardous risks with soldiers and railroad men and their refusal to loan money on property in any way connected with liquor interests; for the recognition given by many colleges to the importance of the study of alcohol in its scientific and social aspects; for the action excluding brandy and whisky from the list of drugs in the National Pharmacopoeia; for the increasing friendliness of the press toward the prohibition movement; for the victory of state-wide prohibition in Alabama, Iowa, Idaho, Arkansas, and South Carolina; for the increased interest in Congress on the question of National Constitutional Prohibition culminating in the majority vote in the House of Representatives.

WORLD VIEW

The result of the edict of the Czar has proven the truth of our contention that prohibition is of greatest value in improving moral and material conditions.

We rejoice in the advancement of all nations toward the desired goal of prohibition.

PEACE

We heartily commend an appeal to reason in the settlement of human difficulties and we are in accord with the efforts being made to establish a World's Peace Commission to offer programs of peace that will be acceptable to all nations.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

We believe that total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation constitute the only rational solution of the liquor problem.

We believe in equal political rights for men and women and that the ballot in the hands of women is a weapon for the destruction of the liquor traffic.

We believe that society in conformity with God's law should maintain a single standard of morals for men and women.

We believe in a living wage and in equal pay for equal service; in justice as opposed to greed of gain.

We therefore declare our purpose to work during the coming year with increased zeal and deeper devotion for the promotion of the foregoing principles and the accomplishment of our ultimate aim—constitutional prohibition for the state and nation, and for the establishment of a righteous nation.

THANKS

Our thanks are due to our efficient transportation committee, to the officials and trainmen of the various roads over which we traveled; for the arrangements made for our comfort and pleasure, and to the friends in various places who brightened the way with social courtesies; for the interest of the press of Seattle; to our hostesses, the West Washington and Seattle Unions, and to all citizens of this city who have in any way contributed to the pleasure and success of this Convention.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can, I know you can, because I have reduced 32,000 women and have built up that many more—scientifically, naturally, without drugs, in the privacy of their own rooms.

You Can Be So Well!

—if you only knew how well! I build up your vitality—at the same time I strengthen your heart action; teach you how to breathe, to stand, walk and relieve such ailments as

Nervousness, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Indigestion, Etc.

One pupil writes: "I weigh 83 pounds less, and I have gained wonderfully in strength."

Another says: "Last May I weighed 200 pounds, this May I weigh 126 and oh! I feel SO WELL."

Won't you sit down and write now for my interesting booklet? You are welcome to it. It is FREE. Don't wait, you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 27, 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound. Price $2.00.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME?" 90,000 SOLD
Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
n each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" — 248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Fourteenth Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
513 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

TREASURER'S REPORT
(Continued from Page Fifteen)

GENERAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, AS OF SEPTEMBER 25, 1915

Resources—
The Willard.....	$ 6,000.00
Literature Building	13,600.05
Literature Stock.	15,321.29
Furniture and Fixtures	5,991.23
U. S. and Y. C. Subscription List	5,000.00
Time Deposits, Interest Bearing.	42,356.81
Cash on hand....	17,894.91
		$106,164.29
Liabilities—
Bequest Fund....	$32,232.00
National Account	17,650.94
Surplus	56,281.35
		$106,164.29

	Receipts	Disbursements
National	$57,010.56	$44,953.42
U. S. and Y. C.....	27,741.83	25,459.17
Literature	27,499.01	24,187.87
Balance to Nat'l Acct		17,650.94
	$112,251.40	$112,251.40

I hereby certify that I have carefully examined the books and vouchers of the Treasurer of the National W. C. T. U. and find them correct, and that the above statements correctly show the financial condition of the organization as of September 25, 1915.

E. F. PIERCE, Auditor

Evanston, Ill., Oct. 4, 1915.

You Will Want the CONVENTION NUMBERS of the UNION SIGNAL
FOR YOURSELF and FRIENDS

Full account of the great National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Seattle will be given in the issues of November 4, 11, 18. These three issues mailed to one address, 10 cents.

Please order early.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Evanston, Illinois

Caught 51 Rats One Week

Trap resets itself. 22 inches high. Will last for years. Can't get out of order. Weighs 7 pounds. 12 rats caught one day. Cheese is used, doing away with poisons. This trap does its work, never fails and is always ready for the next rat. When rats and mice pass device they die. Rats are disease carriers, also cause fires. These catchers should be in every school building. Rat catcher sent prepaid on request of $3. Mouse catcher 10 inches high, $1. Money back if not satisfied.

H. D. SWARTS, Inventor and Manufacturer
Universal Rat and Mouse Traps, Box 566, Scranton, Pa.

CAMPAIGN PLANS
for
National Constitutional Prohibition

Adopted by National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention, Seattle, 1915

1. That Thursday, December 2, be observed by the local unions as a day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition, a program for the service to be prepared by the National W. C. T. U.

2. That we request the ministers of the country to offer special prayer in their churches on Sunday, December 5, for the Sixty-fourth Congress, which will convene on the day following, that its members may be Divinely guided in their action upon the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition.

3. That the National W. C. T. U. hold a mass meeting in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition, in Washington, D. C., on Sunday, December 12, 1915.

4. That State Officers call upon their local unions to hold mass meetings on the same day, December 12, 1915, and the widest publicity be given these meetings through the press. That a resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition be adopted at these meetings and telegrams sent from the meetings to Senators and Representatives in Congress, urging their support of the resolution.

That offerings be taken at these meetings for the Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund, and the money sent through the regular channels to the State W. C. T. U. Treasurer, who shall forward one-half of the amount to the National Treasurer.

5. That the December issue of State W. C. T. U. papers be made a campaign edition for National Constitutional Prohibition.

6. That the Y. P. B.'s be urged to increased activity in all lines of campaign work embodied in the National Plan; and that local unions invite the active co-operation of the Young People's Societies of the churches in every line of work for National Constitutional Prohibition.

7. That the Loyal Temperance Legions have part in public meetings, demonstrations and parades; and that greater effort be made to enlist Young Campaigners for National Constitutional Prohibition.

8. That the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union be requested to recommend some definite work each month for the local unions, announcement to be made in the campaign issue of The Union Signal of the preceding month and advance copy of same to be sent to State papers.

9. That Campaign Institutes be held in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition at the state capitals; also County Institutes at county seats, for the education and inspiration of our workers and the general public; that we invite the co-operation of other temperance societies in these Institutes.

10. That special campaign material be furnished in the press paragraphs of the Publicity Bureau, and be sent out free of charge—State Presidents to furnish the lists of such papers as will use the material.

11. That parades, street meetings, park meetings, medal contests, rallies and other public demonstrations be held frequently, securing the co-operation of Sunday Schools, particularly adult classes; and we urge the circulation of the Sunday School petition for National Constitutional Prohibition.

12. That we emphasize in all suffrage campaigns the relation of woman's ballot to the destruction of the liquor traffic.

13. That we emphasize the use of posters and the value of poster parades, and recommend July 4 and October 12 as National Poster Days.

14. That National Superintendents recommend department plans adopted for campaign use.

15. That speakers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union present in public addresses the status of and reasons for National Constitutional Prohibition; that they secure the endorsement of the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition and send the same to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI EVANSTON, ILL., NOVEMBER 11, 1915 No. 45

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL ON THE GROUNDS OF THE PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION BEFORE THE PARADE AND MEETING AT THE COURT OF ABUNDANCE, OCTOBER 20, 1915

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION

Seattle, Washington, October 9-14, 1915.

PART II

Reviewing the Year's Work—A Day of Inspiring Platform Addresses—Election Day at the Convention—An Evening with the World's W. C. T. U.—Jubilee Night—Recommendations by National President.

Meetings of National Temperance Council—Launching State-wide Prohibition Campaign in California in Meetings at San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego.

Ohio's Deferred Victory

Another "victory" for the Ohio personal liberty forces like the one of November 2 will prove the destruction of the liquor business in the Crusade state. The defeat of the so-called stability amendment, forbidding the submission of a constitutional amendment which has been defeated twice at the polls until six years after its second defeat, and the greatly reduced majority against the state-wide prohibition amendment, are indications that are prophetic of victory when the issue again comes before the people. In reply to a request for an explanation of the result of the election, Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., wired:

"The defeated brewers' Stability League amendment cut in two wet majority of a year ago. 84,000 wet majority last year; 40,000 this year. Seventy-four of the eighty-eight counties voted for prohibition. Cincinnati alone keeps state in wet column. City vote was very heavy, rural vote light. There is nothing discouraging in the result."

A former president of Ohio W. C. T. U., Mrs. Frances Ensign Fuller, writes, "We feel that the result of the November 2 election is only a delayed victory and will press on undaunted until Ohio is a prohibition state."

The explanation of Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, who has been doing valuable campaign work in the state, sizes up the situation, "If Ohio goes wet and stays wet, there is only one reason for it—there are too many suits of clothes walking the streets without men in them!"

Mayor Terms "Personal Liberty" Parade Anarchistic

Mayor Thompson emphatically declined to review the "personal liberty and home rule" parade, which took place Sunday, November 7, in Chicago. Referring to it in an address delivered at the Church of the Redeemer that evening, he said, "They had a great parade today—great, possibly, in numbers—that is the only way I would call it great. If it was a protest against law enforcement, it was anarchistic! This agitation concerning the parade," added the mayor, "has embittered a large number of people against the liquor interests."

John Sullivan as Temperance Reformer

John Sullivan has signed a contract for a five-year lecture tour, his theme to be total abstinence from the viewpoint of a pugilist. As quoted in a recent number of The Outlook, he says, "I am leaving the farm to say to the young men of the United States: 'Leave liquor alone. Liquor leads to bad companions. Bad companions lead to evil places. Evil places lead to disease and disease destroys the home and the nation.'"

"Safety First" and the Drinking Chauffeur

At the National Safety Council, meeting in Philadelphia recently, J. C. Rose, chief claim agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, insisted that no man who takes one drink of liquor should be licensed to drive a motor car.

Yale Soon in Dry Column

The legal advisers of Yale University have advised the corporation that the liquor law, which goes into effect November 1, will prevent the clubs and societies at Yale from serving alcoholic liquors to their members; in other words, Yale will be put in the "dry" column.

Why Women of Eastern States Were Denied the Ballot

The result of the election October 19 in New Jersey and November 2 in Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, was not altogether unexpected. Three of these states, because of their large foreign population, were particularly difficult to educate on the "votes for women" question. These voters not being broadly intelligent on this subject can be manipulated by the corrupt politicians who are, it is admitted, responsible for the delayed victory for suffrage. The New York Tribune's explanation of the result of the New Jersey election undoubtedly explains conditions in the other three states as well. "The story of the amendment's defeat is the story of scattered efforts against well-oiled political machines. Most of the hostile politicians frankly admitted the reason why they opposed the granting of the franchise was not because women were incompetent to vote, but because they believed they could not control them as easily as the men."

The Chicago Tribune, in listing certain reasons for "what happened to the suffrage cause in the east," says, "It is a certainty that liquor had something to do with it. The demon rum always pays the woman the compliment of being afraid of her."

As a matter of fact, the losers in this election were not the suffragists, but their opponents. "We have lost nothing and our opponents have won nothing," remarked Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National Suffrage Association, on the morning after the election, "for they lost all the votes we have won. We are the only victors. We shall recommence our battle for equal rights the first thing tomorrow." This is the spirit of every advocate of the woman movement, and the question will never be settled in the east, the west, the north or the south until it is settled right.

What Mayor Thompson's Friends Tell Him as to Benefits of Sunday Closing

At a luncheon at the Union League Club the other day, Mayor Thompson of Chicago confided to some of his friends that he had been receiving some gratifying information concerning the results of his Sunday closing order.

"Since I ordered the Sunday closing law enforced," said the mayor, "I've been interested in information that has come to me through various channels. For instance, a superintendent of the Pullman company wrote me, saying that the Monday after the lid went on was the first Monday in many years that an accident had not happened in the Pullman shops. He seemed to think it was because the men came to work in better shape—the hangovers were absent.

"Charles McCulloch spoke of the remarkable difference in the Monday work of 1,500 employes under his charge. Other employers have written me similarly.

"I've seen statements that $350,000 would be lost in business; that is, it would have been spent on liquor if there were no lid. Yet the shop keepers and the State street stores showed a remarkable record on the first Monday after closing. The business broke all records for any Monday sale in any October in all times past."

Saloon Licenses in Chicago For Reduced Prices

Since the enforcement of the Sunday closing law in Chicago by Mayor William Hale Thompson, it is reported that the price of saloon licenses has noticeably decreased. Many license assignments, which have hitherto sold for from $2,000 to $2,500, have been offered for as low as $500.

"Current History" Numbers on Seattle Convention Program

Never has a National W. C. T. U. Convention been enlivened by so many interesting "current history" numbers on the program. Telegrams received by leaders of the delegations and through the courtesy of the Associated Press representatives told of victories for prohibition and law enforcement and upon being read from the platform by the presiding officer called forth enthusiastic applause.

One day the chair announced word had just been received that the National Association of Railway Commissioners, then in session in San Francisco, had recommended that the states enact laws prohibiting the drinking of liquor on railway trains. The convention immediately ordered the sending of a telegram of congratulation to the association.

On another occasion there was read a telegram sent by the Chicago Herald in reply to an inquiry made by Miss Helen L. Hood, president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., which told of the beneficial results of the enforcement of the Sunday-closing order by Mayor Thompson. The message was as follows:

"Only six saloons open in Chicago yesterday. The 7,146 others locked and barred, their curtains raised, screens removed and interiors in plain view. Twenty thousand saloon employes had day with families. Forty-seven arrested for drunkenness Saturday and sixteen Sunday; usual number of arrests for drunkenness for same two days, 243; no suicides, usual number two to three. Movie theaters filled to capacity. Church attendance considerably increased. Cafes practically deserted. Reported saloons on outskirts of city did increasing business. Hotels and clubs not centers of law violations. Hotel owners said exceedingly small number of guests stored liquors in rooms. Private lockers in clubs suffered little invasion. No arrests ordered during the day for keeping open. Violators' names taken and evidence secured to be presented to mayor. Police captains all over city reported quietest day in years. Almost no disorder. Sunday closing looks like big success. Large employers reported Monday that working forces displayed highly increased efficiency as compared with other Mondays. Chief of Police Healey predicts that there will be little or no difficulty in enforcing the law and that Sunday closing in Chicago has come to stay."

Another piece of live news came in the form of a telegram from Springfield, Ill., dated October 13, to the effect that the second attempt to have the Illinois woman suffrage law declared unconstitutional met with defeat when the state supreme court refused permission to Chicago attorneys to file a brief relating to the suffrage law in connection with another suit.

Upon learning from Mrs. Mary W. Alderson, president of the Montana W. C. T. U., that on that day Richland county, Montana, was to vote on the question of outlawing the saloons, the convention suspended business to engage in prayer for a victory for the prohibition vote. Great was the rejoicing the next day when a telegram was received announcing that by a vote of two to one the liquor interests had been defeated, Richland being the first county in Montana to take such action—and the women voters had a large part in it.

CONVENTION SERMON SPIRITUALLY UPLIFTING

DR. HUGH ROSS' IMPRESSIVE PRESENTATION OF CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITY

An inspirational message of profound significance was the Convention sermon delivered Sunday morning, October 10, by Rev. Hugh G. Ross, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, taking as his text, First Corinthians 6:20, "Ye are not your own for ye are bought with a price. Therefore, glorify God in your body." Dr. Ross said in part:

"There is perhaps no greater difference between the unchristian world and that made possible by the coming of Christ, than the different conception of the body in pagan lands and in Christian lands. In our religion the body is regarded as an essential part of the personality of the individual. The sublime interpretation of the body has a bearing of the utmost importance upon our thought today as we are dealing with a special aspect of Christian morality—the doctrine of temperance. First, we have no right to abuse our bodies. My body, in short, is not my own, for I have been bought with a price. It is truer to say that my body belongs to Christ than that it belongs to me. This body has been bought at a great price in order to be the conscious, worthy instrument of his high purpose. It is too late in the day for me to have to argue that intemperance and indulgence in alcoholic beverages are indeed injurious to life.

"Sometimes a medical man, anxious for a little cheap and transient notoriety, appears on the platform or in the public press to argue against this position, but I need not say to you that the great body of the medical profession is on the other side; that practially every reputable doctor in Europe and in America today believes that intemperance is one of the gravest of national scourges, largely because of its effect upon the body. We do not need to go to the medical men at all; we do not need the opinions of these experts on the body; we have only to spend a few hours wandering through the slums of our great cities or the hospitals and homes for incurables, or going through our asylums for the insane, to have proved to us beyond the possibility of a doubt that a vast portion of these wrecks and crippled human specimens are there because of intemperance, which, as we all know, has an absolutely disastrous effect upon the human body.

"When I lived in South Africa I had among my friends a man who for years had been the chief engineer on a small steamer which went on expeditions into the Arctic seas. One day he told me that upon a certain occasion it was found there was something wrong with the propeller of the steamer, and accordingly one of the men was lowered down over the stern to ascertain the trouble, but he had hardly gone when he asked to be brought up. Another man was sent down, but long before he had completed his task he had to be brought up. Thus one man after another was lowered and lifted up until at last this very man who was telling me the story decided that he would have to undertake the work himself, and down he went and remained until the task was finished, and he was hauled up to the deck of the little steamer none the worse for the experience. As he finished his tale my friend turned to me and with a twinkle in his eye said, 'Do you think it strange that the only man in that ship who could stand the exposure in the sea that day was the only man of the crew who was a total abstainer?' If total abstinence does not promote the vigor of the body, how could such a story be true?

"Secondly, if I have no right to abuse my body, neither have I the right to make my body the instrument of temptation to others. This applies to those who distinguish between those who totally abstain and those who say they are temperate. 'Why should I desist because it may possibly injure another?' asks some one. There is one place where you will find it impossible to use that argument, and that is at the cross of Jesus Christ. There is nothing we learn there more clearly than this, that by his death Jesus has set the consideration of others at the very central place of our Christian life. You cannot be a Christian without placing consideration for the interests of others where Jesus placed it, and that is at the center of all you do and are.

"Once there was a lad who went from England to South Africa to seek his fortune and in his pocket he carried a letter of introduction from his father, a splendid Christian man of Great Britain, to an old school companion in Cape Town. He landed lonely and homesick and immediately made inquiries for his father's friend. He found him and was invited to join the family for the noon-day meal. The old friend of the boy's father asked the lad if he would have a little wine, and the boy accepted, and for the first time in his life tasted liquor. Today that young man is nothing but a piece of useless driftwood floating on the sea of time. His father's radiant home across the waters has been forgotten and dishonored through that one act—the act of a man who had not yet learned to consider other people.

"No, I have no right to abuse my own body and to make it a channel of temptation to others. Neither have I any right to make my body an agency for needless and disastrous limitation to other lives. If alcoholic liquors are deleterious to my body, it likewise follows that it must be deleterious to the descendants of my body, and there are thousands of men and women in the world today who from the very moment of their birth and long before the moment of their birth were deprived of a full, rich, ripe moral opportunity because of a brain and nervous system weakened not by anything which they have done, but by the foolish, inconsiderate, fatal indulgence of their parents in the generations that had gone before. Your children and your children's children are dependent, to a very large extent, for their moral opportunity later on upon the sort of life you prospective parents are living today.

"We are surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses, not merely those who have gone before, but the eager, anxious witnesses who are to come after us when we ourselves are dead and gone. Use your imagination and think of those thousands and tens of thousands of human souls pressing down through the great eternal spaces to the shores of time, looking eagerly towards you and me, inspecting with an awful anxiety our daily, nightly conduct, knowing that if we are foolish they must be forever handicapped, that if we do not consider them they may be destroyed before they are born. And after all our arguments have been used, I know of no argument that is so unspeakably awful and solemn as this, that Jesus Christ has indeed entrusted to you and to me in a tremendously real sense, not only the welfare of the children who are in our homes today, but the welfare of all the generations that are to follow.

"I have said these things in order to remind you of how tremendously significant a task is set before us. There is not a man or a woman who shall come after us who shall not be affected for good or for evil by the attitude we take, and if this thing is so extremely important, then let there not be one among us who shall stand aside from this great crusade. Let us give our wealth; let us give our strength, let us give all we can give for this great cause."

In closing, Dr. Ross said, in addressing the delegates, "In the name of this church, I bid you a very hearty welcome to this building and we pray that in all your deliberations at this time you may be conscious of the rich guidance of Him whose kingdom of righteousness and peace and joy you are so eagerly striving to extend and that in whatever further enterprise you may be led to undertake, you may have His abundant and abiding blessing."

PROGRAM FOR DAY OF PRAYER FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

NOTE.—The Sixty-fourth Congress meets on December 6 with many new members in the House and some in the Senate. Work for the submission of a prohibition amendment must be undertaken anew as all bills which failed to pass the Sixty-third Congress died and all petitions lapsed March 4. 1915.

At the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Seattle, campaign plans were adopted and December 2 was designated as a day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition. Accordingly every local W. C. T. U. in the United States is called upon to assemble its members for prayer Thursday, December 2, morning or afternoon. Invite others like-minded to join in the service.

PROGRAM

Singing—(Tune, "Manoah")

Lord, while for all mankind we pray,
Of every clime and coast,
O hear us for our native land,
The land we love the most.

O guard our shores from every foe;
With peace our borders bless,
Our cities with prosperity,
Our fields with plenteousness.

Scripture Lesson—Matthew 17:14-21; 18:19; and 28:18.

Prayer—For guidance for our leaders in planning the campaign.

Prayer—For the Spirit of God to rest upon all the people that they may feel personal responsibility in making the appeal to Congress for National Constitutional Prohibition through letters, telegrams, petitions and resolutions.

Prayer—For members of Congress individually and collectively, that inspired by patriotism and true citizenship they may work and vote for the submission of the Prohibition Amendment.

Prayer—For God's blessing on the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and kindred organizations as agencies in laying foundations for the destruction of the liquor traffic and in building public sentiment for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Read in unison, all standing, Psalms 93:1-4; 25:1-5; 27:1-6 and 12-14.

The Aaronic Benediction.

This program is issued by the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. Copies may be purchased from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. Price per hundred, 25 cents; per thousand, $2.00.

Campaign plans adopted by the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle include the holding of mass meetings by local unions on Sunday, December 12, in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition. The prayer topics here given may be appropriately used as subjects for addresses on that occasion. Further suggestions with regard to the December 12 meetings will be found in THE UNION SIGNAL of November 18.

SUNDAY A DAY OF INSPIRING PLATFORM ADDRESSES

DANIEL A. POLING, DR. WILLIAM T. FOSTER, MRS. NANNIE W. CURTIS, MRS. ELLA M. GEORGE AND MRS. CULLA J. VAYHINGER GIVE ELOQUENT MESSAGES

Sufficient information, education, inspiration and exultation were packed into the addresses delivered on Sunday from the pulpit of the convention church to launch and carry through to success a dozen state-wide campaigns. Morning, afternoon and evening the floor and galleries of Plymouth church were filled not only with the delegates, but interested visitors from Seattle and vicinity.

At the afternoon meeting Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, presided and introduced as the speakers, Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, who spoke on "The Conquering Christianity," Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis, who took as her theme, "Conservation of Human Life," and Mrs. Ella M. George, whose message was "Woman's Part in World Evangelization."

Two Successful Simultaneous Mass Meetings

"War Against Women" and "The Five Great Discoveries" were the themes, respectively, of Dr. William Trufant Foster and Mr. Daniel A. Poling, on Sunday evening at the two mass meetings, at which both spoke, one being held in the Plymouth Congregational church and the other in the First Methodist Episcopal church.

"It must be increasingly true as these dominant social reforms go forward, that women are to play more important parts," said Dr. Foster, in announcing his text as "He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth." "It is therefore a great satisfaction to me to have this opportunity to speak on the subject assigned to me at a convention of women, for it is no mere accident that the movement which is in rapid acceleration the world over for international arbitration and the end of warfare, and the movement which is in still more rapid progress for the extermination of the liquor traffic are going hand in hand with the almost startlingly rapid development of the place of woman in political life."

Mr. Poling, acting president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, is deservedly popular with W. C. T. U. audiences and when introduced by the National president, Miss Gordon, as a product of a white ribbon home, he responded, "No honor has come to me that I prize quite as highly as that distinction. I am a Christian Endeavorer, but before I was Christian Endeavorer I was a member of this organization, for I was born into it. My mother wears over her heart the white ribbon and it was at her knee that I learned to hate John Barleycorn."

The limitations of space prevent quoting at length from the addresses of Dr. Foster and Mr. Poling. These will be given in the next issue.

REVIEWING THE YEAR'S WORK

MONDAY DEVOTED TO PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AND REPORTS

There were welcomes galore Saturday evening and inspirational addresses not a few on Sunday, but the Convention did not actually "get a-going" until Monday morning, when promptly at 9:30 it was called to order by Miss Anna A. Gordon, the National president.

The realization of the ties of Christian sisterhood that bind together the women of our great organization is never more keen than in the sacred hours at the opening of the Convention. The singing of the Crusade hymn, "Give to the wind thy fears. Hope and be undismayed;" the reading in unison of the Crusade psalm, "The Lord relieveth the fatherless and the widow, but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down;" the presence on the platform of some of the "saints courageous" who participated in the Crusade movement—all these impressive preliminaries to the roll-call by the recording secretary, make the response to one's name seem indeed what we believe it should be—a re-consecration to a cause, the history of which is so radiant with the self-sacrifice and heroism of unselfish souls.

"Ready for service" was the interpretation an onlooker would have put upon the clear, earnest "Present" or "Here" from this or that delegate as her name was called, and the interpretation would have been correct.

Then came the reading of the Annual Address of the National president, Miss Anna A. Gordon, the larger part of which was given in last week's UNION SIGNAL.

If the measure of appreciation and interest of the delegates could be judged by their eager following of Miss Gordon's clear and comprehensive review of the triumphs of righteousness during the past year, it was all that any speaker could desire. Frequent and spontaneous bursts of applause were additional evidence of the enjoyment of the masterly address. A unique spectacular feature at the point where she referred to the nineteen victorious prohibition states, was the appearance on the platform, in dignified single file, of nineteen young girls in simple Grecian robes, their hair bound with a fillet of white, each bearing across her breast the name of a prohibition state. This "guard of honor" stood "at attention" just back of Miss Gordon while she read the remainder of her address.

As the prolonged applause of an audience which completely filled the auditorium (many standing throughout the reading) died away, Mrs. Florence Richard, president of Ohio W. C. T. U., moved that "this splendid, statesmanlike address, so complete in its entirety," be accepted with a rising vote of thanks.

And then there were the flowers—there were always flowers at the Seattle Convention—fragrant blossoms more eloquent than words, of love and appreciation. This time they came from California and were presented by Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, with the gracious message, "to one the fragrance of whose life has come into other lives."

Memorial Service

The memorial service that followed was a sacred time. Among the many loved women who have been called home during the past year were Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, Silena M. Holman, Lucy S. Blanchard, Anna M. Palmer and Cora E. Seberry. Tender were the words uttered, followed by the singing of the hymn, "For all the saints who from their labors rest, who thee by faith before the world confessed."

It was Miss Gordon's beautiful thought to close the morning with the "noontide hour of prayer" song, sweetly rendered with reverence and understanding by four winsome little Seattle lassies.

Mrs. Parks' Report

The interest at the Monday afternoon session centered in the report of the National corresponding secretary and that of the acting treasurer. The comprehensive survey of the campaign activities in the different states, given by Mrs. Frances P. Parks, brought to the audience a new realization of the wonderful work being done by our state organizations in "making the map all white." A remarkable record of gains in membership, establishment of new unions, contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, and general satisfactory conditions of the finances of every department of the work was shown by the reports of the corresponding secretary and the treasurer, given at length in last week's SIGNAL. Enthusiastic applause was accorded Mrs. Parks upon their presentation and they were adopted with a rising vote of thanks.

Convention Group in Front of Plymouth Congregational Church, Seattle, Wash.

AN EVENING WITH THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

MESSAGES FROM MANY NATIONS

Notwithstanding the dangers and difficulties of travel on the high seas in these troublous days, nearly every nation was represented on the platform on World's W. C. T. U. Night and every one of the twenty-five representatives brought from her "ain countree" what purported to be a written communication that showed no marks of having been officially censored. However, it was not of war these little foreigners wrote, but of peace—a peace that comes as the result of clean and righteous living and the training of the little people of other lands to lives of abstinence and self control. No more picturesque scene can be imagined than the twenty-five wee lads and lassies dressed in the costumes of as many nations who were introduced from the platform by Miss Anna A. Gordon, who is not only the president of the National W. C. T. U. but also secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion of the World's W. C. T. U.

As each tiny tot handed the presiding officer a letter she read aloud the message telling of the progress of the work in that particular country. "The Maple Leaf Forever" was sung with spirit and patriotic fervor by the little representative from Canada. Just before the children filed from the platform the little voices rang out with fine effect in the following verse:

"Little white ribboners
Dear are we.
Round the wide world we live,
Don't you see?
We are as happy
As happy can be
Greeting our friends in
The land of the free."

Responding with an encore to enthusiastic applause, they sang:

"There is but one sky above us.
We are all one household true,
Loyal Temperance Legion children,
W. C. T. U.

Two noted leaders in W. C. T. U. work in China, Dr. Mary Stone, president of the W. C. T. U. of China, and Miss Jennie V. Hughes, were prevented by injuries sustained in an automobile accident from being present, much to the regret of the audience. The resources of the organization, however, are equal to such a disarrangement of its program and Miss Ellen Stone, formerly of Bulgaria, known the nation over for her tragic experience at the hands of bandits, was listened to with interest. She said in part:

"From Bulgaria and Macedonia has for years come a most enthusiastic response to the prohibition movement with reference to intoxicating drinks. It has been all the more wonderful that in a grape-growing and consequently wine-producing country, awakened peasants should have resorted to the drastic measure of driving out the saloon-keeper, who from time immemorial had been a fixture in every community, whether village, town, or city. More than one has said to me, 'When we found that we could not withstand his temptations to us to drink, and that, becoming increasingly helpless from the use of his wines, we were by degrees mortgaging our farm-utensils, our cattle, and even our farms, we arose and drove out the saloon-keeper!' They know now what their great neighbor, Russia, has done, and approve the better way—to cast out all alcoholic beverages by imperial decree. Years since, Bulgarian women, quick to follow the example of their Western sisters, petitioned their national assembly for the prohibition of the traffic in alcohol. They have for many years had their National Temperance Society, with its own publication, beside a frequent column in the Zornitsa, the mission paper, which is the only religious weekly for six million Bulgarians. At the same time, Bulgaria has been an auxiliary of the World's W. C. T. U. The ministry of education has taken a real interest in forwarding temperance literature to all teachers, physicians, and other professional men and women in the country,—an invaluable aid. An occasional grant of money from the treasury of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has enabled our veteran missionary, Dr. James F. Clarke of Sofia, to devote the ripeness of his upwards of four-score years to the preparation and circulation of more temperance literature, posters as well as tracts, whose appearance is eagerly awaited. Her Majesty, Queen Eleanora, a Lutheran in her Christian faith, has manifested a tender regard for our veteran of service among the Bulgarians for fifty-three years,—not only sending to him and to his devoted daughter, our American kindergartner, gifts of flowers and fruits, but also coming in person to call upon them. Bulgaria has for long years had its military academy at Sofia under prohibitory regulations, ensuring the graduation of young officers to command its army, who are of the finest type, mentally and physically; of military officers who are honored and beloved by the soldiers committed to their charge. By arrangement with the tiny kingdom of Montenegro, which maintains no military academy, its cadets are also received into the Bulgarian academy; hence this temperance habit characterizes the officers in the army of that kingdom as well as in Bulgaria."

Other speakers were Mrs. Spofford and Mrs. T. B. Andrews, who brought greetings from Canada, and Miss Griffin, who told of the progress of the movement in New Zealand.

The closing number of the program was a solo in Japanese by Mr. S. Sasaki, which evoked such applause that he responded to an encore and with fine effect gave the national anthem of Japan.

Miss Gordon paid a tribute during the evening to the Countess of Carlisle, president of the World's W. C. T. U., and to Mrs. Caroline E. McDowell, through whose generosity every gift of $100 to the missionary work is doubled.

BUSINESS TRANSACTED

It takes a long, long time to amend the constitution of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, thought some of the delegates on Tuesday afternoon, when changes in that historic document were under discussion. At the Atlanta convention Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson gave notice that next year she or some one in her place would move to amend article VI of the constitution to read as follows: "The annual or biennial meeting shall be held at such place as may be agreed upon at the previous annual or biennial meeting or by the Executive Committee. Said meeting shall be held in May or June, unless for good reasons the General Officers shall decide upon some other time, in which case said decision must be ratified or endorsed by a two-thirds vote of the Official Board."

Upon Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., making this motion in Mrs. Hutchinson's place, there was precipitated a spirited, although thoroughly amicable discussion as to the desirability of such a change. Those favoring the amendment advanced the argument of its being in the interest of economy, as special railroad rates could be secured; in the interest of efficiency, as nearly every one goes on a summer vacation and W. C. T. U. conventions are now held so early that many of the white ribboners are not back from vacations; and third, in the interest of "Safety First," because of the many fall campaigns every year and the need of the women being at home.

The opponents of the amendment, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the New York W. C. T. U., and others, argued that such a radical change in the machinery of the organization would be disastrous.

The final vote on the question resulted in a decision to leave undisturbed the article of the constitution providing for the time of meeting.

Thereupon Mrs. Kemp gave notice that next year she or someone in her place would move again to amend Article VI of the constitution to read as given above.

The motion made by Mrs. Beauchamp that the preamble of the National Constitution be amended by striking out the clause, "For its extinction and for the entire prohibition," inserting in lieu thereof, "To secure the legal prohibition and complete banishment," was carried by a majority vote.

The motion made by Mrs. Nelle Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., to amend Article V of the constitution by striking out the words "five hundred" as the membership represented by one delegate to the National Convention, and inserting in its place "eight hundred," when put to a vote, was lost.

The motion made by Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson to amend Article IV of the constitution to provide for the insertion after the word "superintendents" of the words "director of the Bureau of Publicity," making the director a member of the Executive Committee, was carried.

Because of the lateness of the hour it was impossible on that afternoon to consider the report of the committee on Resolutions, presented by its chairman, Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., but this report was read and on the following day was adopted as published in last week's SIGNAL.

The plans for National Constitutional Prohibition, already given, were adopted by a unanimous vote.

ELECTION DAY AT THE CONVENTION

The reporters for the local papers are usually more than a trifle disappointed over the elections at a National W. C. T. U. Convention. They come with pencils and wits well sharpened anticipating and hoping for some sensational incident or exploitation of feminine politics that will make a good story. It must be acknowledged, however, that usually they frankly admit and are quick to acknowledge that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union knows how to transact its business and elect its officers "decently and in order" and that the proceedings have a dignity often lacking in meetings of similar nature. Perhaps the reason of this is the prayer that always precedes the election, a prayer not alone uttered by some one from the platform but a spirit of prayer that broods over the convention. This year the faith and confidence in Divine guidance was voiced by Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis in the words, "We are thy children. This is thy work. We want to do it as thou shalt direct."

The result of the election was the retention in office for another year of the five General Officers, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Mrs. Frances P. Parks, Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Anderson and Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, evincing appreciation of their devoted and efficient service to the organization. Mrs. Margaret C. Munns was elected National treasurer.

In accepting the presidency for another year Miss Gordon said:

"Dear comrades, I love the blessed and strenuous work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and am upheld and comforted by the strong loving comradeship of our white ribboners. It touches me very deeply that you have asked me to go with you into the thick of our great fight another year. I realize my unworthiness. I pray for God's guidance. I could not accept this election if it were not for my firm faith in God and in you. When in 1883 Miss Willard and I first came to the far western states, a saintly woman advanced in years, gave Miss Willard her name as a member of the W. C. T. U. with the remark: 'I really don't know what you want me to do; but I reckon it will be something like my going to prayer meeting alone on a dark night. I carry my lantern and when I have taken one step I am there, and my lantern is there, and I have light to see the next step!' From the depths of my heart I pray that our entire white ribbon army marching shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, toward the goal of our hopes and prayers, may take no step which is not illumined by light from heaven."

The Convention requested the corresponding secretary to send to Miss Elizabeth P. Gordon and to Mr. Frederick Gordon telegrams announcing the re-election of their sister. A procession of friends, led by Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, president of the hostess state, came upon the platform bearing floral love tokens—among them the presidents of the Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire W. C. T. U.'s. Flowers from the Gordon family were presented by Miss Lella M. Sewall. Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher placed around her shoulders the folds of a silken flag, to replace the colors Miss Gordon had given the day before to the Alaska delegation to crown their victorious prohibition totem pole. In acknowledging these gifts, Miss Gordon graciously quoted the words of Lucy Larcom, "The best that any mortal has is that which other mortals share."

In accepting the office of National vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Ella A. Boole said, "I thank you very much for the confidence you have shown in electing me again to the office of vice-president of the National W. C. T. U. I would not be fair to the work or to myself did I not say that it has been a great pleasure to serve you this past year, to serve with our National president. Her desire for co-operation has made it delightful and I have counted it one of the pleasures of my life to stand in this relation to the organization. Being the president of one of the largest states has made the carrying of a National and state position somewhat difficult but I have tried to enter every open door and with God's help I shall try to give you better service this coming year."

At the close of Mrs. Boole's remarks beautiful roses were placed in her hands by Mrs. Frances W. Graham with the assurance that the magnificent gain in membership in New York was evidence that the National vice-president-at-large had not neglected her duties as state president. The hostess state also showered her with chrysanthemums.

Mrs. Parks in acknowledging her re-election as National corresponding secretary reminded the convention, "This is the seventh time you have honored me by this expression of your confidence and at six of these conventions there was by my side a loved friend and comrade to whom you paid the same tribute. I cannot tell you what it has meant to me to go through this convention without her. I thank you for asking me to serve you another year. I will do what I can and that something is typified by this gift just received which I hold in my hand, a fountain pen—I will write to you."

Flowers from the ones she fondly calls "her girls," the National organizers and lecturers, and from the hostess state of Washington were piled high upon Mrs. Parks' table.

Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Anderson in responding to her re-election as National recording secretary, said she considered it one of the greatest privileges of her life to have served with such women as Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens, Anna A. Gordon and all the rest of the blessed women who make up the W. C. T. U. North Dakota comrades, who characterized Mrs. Anderson as "the foremost citizen of the state, who has done more than any one else to help keep the prohibition law," and Washington white ribboners brought to her fragrant posies.

"Washington comrades present flowers to one of Virginia's sweetest flowers," was the word that went with the exquisite blossoms that came to Mrs. Sara H. Hoge as she gracefully told of her joy in the service of the National W. C. T. U. and her appreciation of her re-election as National assistant recording secretary.

When Mrs. Margaret C. Munns stepped forward to acknowledge her election she was greeted by a chorus of West Washington voices who hailed her in song as "Our beloved Margaret Munns." "I certainly thank you for the honor and responsibility you have given to me," said Mrs. Munns. "Years ago I consecrated my life to the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and I said that wherever the Lord wanted me to go I would go and I would do what he wanted me to do. I shall serve you just as faithfully as I know how and I assure you I shall give the very best that is in me, for every power God has given to me is consecrated to the W. C. T. U."

West Washington comrades, somewhat tearful at giving up their loved leader, showered Mrs. Munns with flowers and Mrs. Margaret B. Platt presented a bouquet "to the National treasurer from her most loving and loyal constituent."

Later Mrs. Munns was the recipient of a beautiful lavaliere set with pearls and a diamond from the white ribboners of West Washington.

A suggestion made from the floor that letters of appreciation be sent to the families of the General Officers, thanking them for so generously giving them to the work of the National W. C. T. U. met with hearty approval. Messages of sympathy were also ordered sent to Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, daughter of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, and to Mrs. Mabel Roberts, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson.

GRAND DIAMOND MEDAL CONTEST

The auditorium of Plymouth church was not large enough to contain the people who wanted to hear the contestants for the grand diamond medal. Although it was the only evening when an admission fee was charged and Plymouth church is one of the largest in the city, with a seating capacity of about 1,500, many were turned away.

The contestants were six in number: Miss Christiana Willby of Colorado, Mrs. Mattie White Colvin of New York, Mrs. J. G. Sloan of California, Mrs. Homan Simonson of Seattle, Mrs. Mattie Allison of Washington, and Mrs. Mabel Smith Oulman of Minnesota.

Never, we feel sure, did judges have more difficulty in deciding to whom should be awarded the medal. The selections were uniformly interesting and the interpretation exceptionally fine. Mrs. Adelia E. Carman, National superintendent of the Medal Contest department, who presided, was frequently obliged to check the spontaneous applause that was called forth by the masterly presentation of the themes chosen.

The medal was presented by Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of Ohio W. C. T. U., who proved to be a genius in carrying out the instructions of a great novelist to writers of stories—"Make them laugh, make them cry, make them wait." She kept the audience in suspense for over a quarter of an hour before she announced the name of the successful contestant, Mrs. Mattie White Colvin of New York. Mrs. Colvin is the wife of one of the leaders of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, and both she and her husband have long been active in temperance work.

While waiting for the decision of the judges, Mrs. Carman asked all who had taken part in medal contests to rise and the number of people who immediately sprang to their feet was significant. She then asked all who had in any way taken part in contests, not only as contestants but as judges to stand, and practically the whole audience seemed to arise in response to her query. Over $300 was realized from the sale of tickets for the contest.

THE HOPE OF THE FUTURE

WORK OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH AND LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION BRANCH

Nothing in the outlook for the future is so hopeful as the steady, rapid growth of the departments of work among our young people. Most significant were the reports of the general secretaries of the Young People's and Loyal Temperance Legion Branches, which we give below in part:

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, General Secretary

With greater truth than ever before I can say of our young men and young women: "They are coming to the rescue, they are coming in their might. And the homes they build tomorrow shall be guarded by the right." I am most proud to report to you that in this day of many things, with all manner of demands upon their time and talents, there are, notwithstanding, a great body of young people who dare—and willingly dare—to step out and say, "As for us we will not only pledge ourselves to individual abstinence, but to do all in our power to discourage the use of intoxicating liquors and the traffic in them, that young people at home and abroad may be redeemed and conserved."

Today in our young people's ranks there are 10,136 young women paid members and 11,627 young men—a total of 21,763 total abstaining young Americans who love their country enough to engage in the peaceful warfare for its upbuilding.

(At this point Mrs. Schachner presented to the Convention her associates, Miss Anderson and Mrs. Carl.)

May I introduce those who have helped so largely in spreading our work this year: Mary Frances Willard Anderson is our eastern Y. P. B. field secretary. Wherever she has been they want her back. Mrs. Linnie Carl, our western field secretary, has left a trail of successes behind her. These two young women have covered eleven states and more than 30,000 miles, have presented Branch work before fifteen conventions and institutes, eighteen young people's societies, fifteen colleges and many more schools. They have delivered 224 public addresses, through which they have reached more than 50,000 people, of whom 22,000 were young people; have organized thirty unions and thirty-two Y. P. B.'s, have increased the W. C. T. U. membership by 420 and the Y. P. B. membership by 475 young women and 250 young men. I wish Mrs. Fanny R. Danser of Skaneateles, N. Y.,—the promoter of the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund—were here that you might see the one who has worked so valiantly that there was contributed this year to the fund $141.18—more than twice as much as last year. The young people are now answering the call of Miss Norville of South America to furnish literature for the young people of that land.

There are 486 Y. P. B. members who are regular subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL and are, therefore, becoming more and more intelligent.

At the six state Y. P. B. meetings held there was a total voting delegation of 775. Can you conceive of the potential force of those young men and women—your allies?

April was a great month in the annals of Y. P. B-dom. One hundred and twenty-nine Branches throughout the states observed it with special work in behalf of membership and prohibition, and 299 members were gained during these thirty days. Two hundred and one Branches have been organized this year; 3,220 business meetings have been held, 1,424 social meetings and 560 public meetings, and 220 Branches are taking the study course. Eighty Branches are conducting L. T. L.'s—and so the good work goes on. These wide-awake young people raised $4,597.34. A Y. P. B. is a paying investment in more than one sense of the word.

Mary Frances Willard Anderson, Newly Elected General Secretary Young People's Branch

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION BRANCH

MISS MARY B. ERVIN, General Secretary

It is a genuine joy to report the year's yielding of our magnificent Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, a mighty conquering host for righteousness throughout the length and breadth of our land. Never were our leaders more consecrated and progressive, never were our legioners more active and enthusiastic, never was the appreciation of the value and need of the work among the boys and girls more apparent than today.

Mary B. Ervin, General Secretary Loyal Temperance Legion Branch

Our Young Campaigners for Prohibition have done valiant service in the various state and local campaigns for the abolition of the liquor traffic and they are universally recognized as among the most potent factors at work in creating prohibition sentiment, which is today sounding the death-knell of John Barleycorn.

Our new study course, which was adopted at the opening of the year, has been heartily received and has greatly added to the interest and attractiveness of our work. Miss Christine Tinling, the author of these manuals, generously prepared a list of review questions upon each lesson, furnishing a valuable contribution and meeting a real need of local leaders. Our 1915 Hand Book, containing programs especially adapted to the new course of study, proved so popular that the supply was exhausted some weeks ago.

The early dates of the National Convention have peculiarly affected reports—local, county, state and national—but have in no wise lessened the worth of the real work accomplished. More than 500 new legions have been organized this year, reaching thousands of boys and girls. Over 50,000 bouquets have been distributed and more than half a million pages of temperance literature have been sown by the children's hands. Dues, amounting to $920.46 paid into the national treasury show the L. T. L. membership to be 18,409. The Branch contributed to the Anna A. Gordon Missionary Fund $140.57—an increase of $40.33 over the preceding year.

My first year as general secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch has been a blessed year of joyous service in the Master's name, and I desire to express my personal appreciation of the loyal support and hearty co-operation extended to me by our splendid L. T. L. leaders and white ribboners everywhere. Their practical suggestions, their personal efforts and their absolute devotion to our cause have been the real factors at work in making our L. T. L. year so successful a one. My prayer is that the new year may bring greater and better things for the training and safeguarding of the youth of our land and that workers in the ranks of our local unions and our Young People's Branches may feel a peculiar call to lead out in this most blessed work.

That the day of National Constitutional Prohibition may be hastened and our aspirations more surely realized, a mighty campaign should be inaugurated in every city and hamlet for the enlistment of youthful soldiers as Young Campaigners for Prohibition, who with the training afforded by our Loyal Temperance Legion will develop into citizens who will help make and keep our nation dry. We are confidently expecting every local union to supply its share of these recruits. To this end I would leave with you the message recently sounded by our beloved National W. C. T. U. chieftain, Miss Anna Gordon: "Let our infinite tenderness and sympathy for Christ's little ones lead us to keep close to them and to set for them in all things an example safe to follow. Let us win them as workers for our cause today, and as well equipped leaders of the temperance reform in the glorious tomorrow of National Constitutional Prohibition!"

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, November 11, 1915

Resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition

Since more than 6,000,000 petitioners have duly exercised their constitutional right of petition and formally requested Congress, in the simple exercise of its constitutional duty in such a case, to submit to the states for ratification or rejection an amendment to the federal constitution, known in the Sixty-third Congress as the Sheppard-Hobson Amendment, which would prohibit citizens from entering into the transaction of selling or preparing for sale intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, an amendment which would prohibit private individuals and corporations from conducting a public business for private profit at the expense of the highest public welfare;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by this meeting of ..... that the duty of Congress to submit an amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition to the states for ratification or rejection is now the paramount public duty and will remain the paramount duty until performed, and we appeal to all United States Senators and Members of Congress and we hereby pledge this meeting and the citizens it represents, and we invoke the co-operation of all patriotic citizens who love their country and their fellow-men to use every legitimate and honorable means to inspire the performance of this duty on the part of Congress at the earliest practicable date.

After action has been taken notification of same should be sent to the corresponding secretary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Evanston, Ill., to Members of Congress from the state, to the speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the president of the Senate of the United States.

Changes In Official Board and Executive Committee

National Treasurer

Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Illinois.

State Presidents

Idaho (North)—Mrs. Ella M. Farmin, Sandpoint.
Tennessee—Mrs. Mary P. Bang, 710 Russell St., Nashville.
Wyoming—Mrs. Anna Allison, Cheyenne.

General Y. P. B. Secretary

Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, 79 Trowbridge St., Cambridge, Mass.

Y. P. B. Field Secretaries

Mrs. Linnie Carl, 1218 Kirby St., Portland, Ore.
Miss Zoe Atchison, Iola, Kan.
Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, East Syracuse, N. Y.

Associate L. T. L. Secretary

Mrs. Carrie V. Ray, 516 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

National Superintendents

Press—Mrs. Susan McWhirter Ostrom, 2338 Ashland Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.
Temperance and Labor—Mrs. Lucia H. F. Additon, 415 Yamhill St., Portland, Ore.
Unfermented Wine (merged with Evangelistic)—Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, 92 E. 11th Ave., Columbus, O.
Moral Education and Race Betterment (new department) — including Purity, Curfew and Policewomen, Miss Mary E. Brown, 3187 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

National Organizers and Lecturers

Mrs. Anna C. M. Tillinghast, Beverly, Mass.
Mrs. Ella A. Gleason, 541 Massachusetts Ave., Boston, Mass.
Mrs. Linnie Carl, 1218 Kirby St., Portland, Ore.
Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, 79 Trowbridge St., Cambridge, Mass.
Mrs. Effie Lambert Lawrence, North Lubec, Maine.

Lecturer

Dr. Emma F. A. Drake, 321 N. 17th St., Kansas City, Kan.

NOTE: Other changes will be given in next week's paper.

PERSONAL MENTION

On Saturday, November 6, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, the newly elected treasurer of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, arrived in Evanston, her future home. Miss Anna A. Gordon and Mrs. Frances P. Parks returned last week from the Pacific Coast, and Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson is in Evanston attending to the preparation of the Annual Report. The General Officers are busily occupied carrying out the plans made at the recent National Convention in Seattle.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, in order to keep previously-made engagements at state conventions in the east and south, was obliged to leave the official party at San Francisco, much to the regret of her friends in Southern California, who had hoped to have her as a speaker at the Los Angeles meetings.

We learn with deep regret that Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., found it necessary to stop in Des Moines, Iowa, on her way home from the Pacific coast, to submit to surgical treatment. Reports received indicate that she is steadily improving.

The invitation for the next National Convention to meet in Indianapolis was accepted at the post-executive meeting at Seattle. The Convention will probably not be held until after the November elections.

You will want the Convention Numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL for yourself and friends. The issues of November 4, 11 and 18 will be mailed to one address for 10 cents. Please order early.

OUR NEW TREASURER

Mrs. Margaret Cairns Munns, newly elected treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., may well be called a white ribboner by inheritance as well as by "confession of faith." The daughter of Rev. James A. and Sarah S. Cairns, she inherited with her sturdy Scotch-English temperament, a devotion to the Church and its ideals that early brought her into the ranks of the chief reform organization of the times.

The formative years of her childhood were spent in Kansas. The example of a white ribbon mother led the young girl into definite work in the local union of Snohomish, Wash., where, in 1894, she was elected to the presidency. In 1895 Margaret Cairns became the wife of George A. Munns, a prominent attorney of Snohomish, and their home was transferred to California. Only two years of happiness were granted to the young couple, when the husband went to the "Far Country," leaving an infant son who tarried but a few months to solace the grieving wife. Utterly bereft in the loss of both husband and son, Margaret Munns returned to her father's home in Washington to take up the burden of a life now wholly consecrated to the service of humanity.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union claimed her first allegiance, and she became the recording secretary of King county in 1899. That same year she was elected assistant recording secretary of the state union, and in 1900 she was called to the larger work of the state corresponding secretary and editor of The White Ribbon Bulletin. For fifteen consecutive years she has filled these offices with marvelous ability and devotion, and her enthusiasm for every department of our many-sided work has been a potent factor in the development of the organization in West Washington. During these years her activities and responsibilities have widened into national scope. She has served the National W. C. T. U. Editorial Association both as president and secretary and for the past five years she has been the efficient superintendent of the department of Institutes for the National W. C. T. U., and during the past year she has been the chairman of the Board of Superintendents.

Thirty-one years of Margaret Munns' purposeful life have been spent on the Pacific Coast—years filled to overflowing with manifold activities. A college-bred woman of broad vision and sympathetic comprehension of all questions pertaining to the welfare of women, she has filled a large place in organizations with aims kindred to our own. As parliamentarian for the State Federation of Women's Clubs, she is widely and favorably known in club circles. However sympathetic and cordial her relations to all other good causes have been, the W. C. T. U. has claimed her deepest consecration, and she is ably fitted for the larger sphere of usefulness in our organization to which she is now called.

Recommendations by National President in Her Annual Address

Encouraged by the majority vote for National Constitutional Prohibition passed by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-third Congress, I recommend that we persistently work to secure in the Sixty-fourth Congress the victorious passage of the "Hobson Resolution." This resolution should be presented to churches, Sunday schools, public meetings of all kinds, and a careful record made of the number voting in favor of the resolution. In addition to sending to our National corresponding secretary a record of the number in each public assembly adopting the resolution, notification should be sent to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate in case of all state conventions or assemblies adopting the resolution. In all our plans to influence the approaching session of the Sixty-fourth Congress harmonious action with the allied temperance forces is necessary to success. While the National W. C. T. U. is independent in plans and in finance, I recommend that we heartily co-operate with other temperance organizations.

That we make December 12 a campaign rally day for National Constitutional Prohibition; that we request ministers of all denominations to preach on that date on behalf of National Constitutional Prohibition—notice of such sermons to be given on December 5; that we request Sunday schools, especially adult classes, and all church young people's societies to arrange for speeches, demonstrations or stereopticon lectures on this vital subject; that we ask churches, societies and influential voters to send to their respective Congressmen and Senators resolutions, letters and telegrams urging them to vote for National Constitutional Prohibition; that we request friendly newspapers and periodicals to bring this question before their readers and to co-operate with the allied temperance forces, especially during the weeks of December 5 to 21.

That the National W. C. T. U. hold annually a great meeting in Washington, D. C., on the second Sunday in December and in connection with it arrange for addresses by leading speakers in the churches at Washington.

That we continue to oppose all efforts for the restoration of the sale of alcoholic liquors in the United States Army and Navy, or in any place from which they have been banished.

That we petition for legislation to prevent the use of the United States mails in advertising alcoholic beverages.

That the National W. C. T. U. heartily commend the steamship and railway companies which do not permit the sale or serving of alcoholic beverages and that we petition all others to fall into line for dry water, as well as dry land.

That we continue our efforts to secure an amendment to the Federal constitution forever prohibiting polygamy.

I earnestly recommend campaign conferences, local, county, state and interstate, for comparison of views and the careful study of campaign plans. Such meetings should create added enthusiasm for all lines of W. C. T. U. work, while primarily promoting campaign methods and law enforcement plans. An opportune time for a state campaign conference might be the occasion of a gathering of W. C. T. U. leaders at the state capital for the inauguration of a legislative program.

That we adopt the campaign educational idea of the Sunday School Association. Just prior to election day give to each member of the Sunday school a sample ballot with printed directions as to its use. Give each boy and girl a campaign leaflet asking each to promise that during the week preceding election he or she will read it to ten adults.

That at all large public meetings the speaker should be accompanied to the platform by a guard of honor consisting of young women bearing the banners of the prohibition states.

That, following the example of white ribboners in some of our campaign states, we occupy front seats at meetings held to oppose state and national prohibition, and that we wear conspicuous white ribbon bows.

That in all campaigns, local, county, state and national, we make all possible use of our Young People's Branch and the Young Campaigners for Prohibition. Let us give them a prominent part in public meetings, parades, etc.

That prohibition states and localities celebrate their prohibition birthdays. There could be many appropriate birthday gifts. The children could participate by marching with suitable mottoes, floats, rally cries, and songs.

That each state union endeavor to secure a state law requiring the observance in the public schools of an annual temperance day. The text of the bill obtained this year in Kansas is an excellent model for other states to follow.

That our leading speakers endeavor to obtain a few minutes to present the total abstinence and prohibition cause at places where large crowds gather or where many persons are employed.

Following the example of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, I recommend the presentation to public schools of the prohibition map of the United States.

That we urge a wider observance of Flag Day in 1916, linking with a suggested patriotic program the consideration of total abstinence and prohibition.

That each county or state appoint a Poster Day, the success of which is guaranteed by diligent publicity and careful preparation in co-operation with all good forces.

That we make general pledge-signing a feature of our public meetings and continue to make prominent our educational work with the young in the public schools, the Sunday schools and the Loyal Temperance Legion.

That local unions study and agitate the question of substitutes for the saloon. Attractive social centers, both in license and in prohibition localities, are greatly needed.

That we give publicity to the new Federal anti-drug law which went into effect March 1, 1915, and is known officially as the Harrison Narcotic Law. It is believed by physicians to be the most far-reaching law relative to drugs ever enacted in this or any other country. The substance of the bill is as follows: "On and after March 1, 1915, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes or gives away opium or coca leaves or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on. Also on or before July 1, annually thereafter, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs shall pay to the said collector a special tax at the rate of $1 per annum."

That we make widely known the encouraging fact that the United States government recently began a crusade against alcoholic medical preparations, which, while masquerading as medicines, are in reality used as beverages in dry territory where wines and liquors are not to be had. According to the Washington (D. C.) Times, a list of 246 preparations which have been examined in the Internal Revenue office and found "to be insufficiently medicated to render them unfit for use as a beverage," or which, in other words, can be taken by the wine or whisky glassful as well as by the teaspoon, was given to each Internal Revenue collector. All collectors were advised that a special tax will be required for the sale of any of the preparations named in the list, even though such sales should be for medicinal and not bibulous use. Moreover, collectors are instructed to aid the bureau in its crusade by securing and forwarding the bureau officers in Washington samples of preparations which they have reason to believe are or may be used as beverages.

That we diligently meet the unscientific and untrue statements of the brewery monopoly concerning beer. Circulate our leaflets containing the refutations of leading scientists and physicians. "It is my aim to win the American people over to our side, to make them all lovers of beer and teach them to have respect for the brewing industry and for the brewer," wrote a prominent brewer of the United States to a member of "the trade" not long since, in urging an educational campaign in the interests of the drink. "This work has got to be done systematically," he continued, "and the best interests of our country will have to lend their assistance. It may cost us a million of dollars and even more, but what of it if thereby we elevate our position!"

That as a large increase in immigration may be expected at the cessation of hostilities in Europe, we plan with renewed vigilance to protect from evil influences our new Americans and to aid them to wisely use the advantages of our many good institutions; that we give them our literature in their own languages, send temperance items to their newspapers, invite them to become members of the W. C. T. U., and show these strangers in a strange land the neighborly kindness for which their hearts are hungry. Many of these friends are men and women of high culture and education and would decidedly grace and strengthen our organization. I hope many local unions will plan to act upon the suggestion of the commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island and make the Fourth of

(Continued on Page Ten)

JUBILEE NIGHT

SPECIAL RECOGNITION OF STATES MAKING LARGE MEMBERSHIP GAINS

If you want to learn the secret of renewing your youth, attend a Jubilee Night performance at a National W. C. T. U. Convention. Although the almond tree flourishes on the heads of many of the leaders and the rank and file of our great organization, they still possess the exuberance and enthusiasm of youth. They have solved the age-old problem of keeping perpetually young by working with and for the children and young people and giving themselves so completely to the service for others, that they forget to grow old.

In accordance with a time-honored custom the program of the last night of the Convention—termed Jubilee night—is provided and presented by presidents of states having made a net gain of one hundred or over in membership. The following states were this year entitled to claim this honor: District of Columbia, Idaho South, Connecticut, Kentucky, Maine, New Hampshire, Delaware, Oklahoma; over two hundred, Rhode Island, Wyoming and Arkansas No. 2; over three hundred, South Carolina; over four hundred, Colorado; over five hundred, Maryland, Kansas and Montana; over six hundred, Virginia; over seven hundred, New Jersey, Minnesota and North Dakota; over eight hundred, Indiana, Nebraska; over eleven hundred, Tennessee and Wisconsin; over fourteen hundred, Massachusetts; over two thousand, Missouri and Michigan and Iowa; over three thousand, New York; over five thousand, Ohio; Pennsylvania again leading with a net gain of 6,172.

Special recognition was given also to the states having made smaller gains: Florida, District of Columbia No. 2, Nevada, West Virginia, New Mexico, Georgia, Idaho North, Louisiana No. 2 and Utah.

The program opened with a procession, led by the guard of honor, representing the nineteen prohibition states, who marched down the aisle and upon the platform, to the music of "John Barleycorn, goodby."

Every state whether her gain had been great or small had an optimistic message. Alaska was there with her fine delegation of territorial officers. South Carolina, adorned in cotton bolls, was radiant with happiness over her recent victory, which she assured the audience was acknowledged to be largely the result of the faithful work of white ribboners. Montana's very black map, suddenly transformed to whiteness, and displayed by the Montana delegation, was prophetic of what is almost certain to happen next year. Kansas, now facetiously termed by some "the state of perfection," modestly reminded the audience that while the other states were still climbing, she was on the pinnacle, and was indeed the only commonwealth in which every political party had put in its platform a plank endorsing not only state-wide prohibition and suffrage but also national prohibition and national woman suffrage.

Virginia rejoiced that while represented at the Convention by only one delegate, the assistant National recording secretary, she could report a gain of nearly seven hundred, a prohibition law on her statute books, and a legislature whose personnel gave every reason to hope it would enact strong enforcement laws.

Colorado vociferously replied in answer to the question, "Will Colorado enforce her prohibition law?" "Colorado will enforce her prohibition law and the supreme court of the state will decide that public sentiment does not make it possible to sell liquor in a dry state."

To the inspiring tune of "Dixie," the New Jersey delegation informed the audience that suffrage and prohibition are bound to win in the "Jersey blue" state. "New Jersey Shall Be Redeemed," was their slogan.

Nebraska's theme was "Nebraska Shall Go Dry" and her confidence that she will conquer was shown in the motto she bore lifted high above her head, "Be strong and of good courage for the battle is not yours but God's."

Undaunted by the inability to outlaw the saloons from her big metropolis of Minneapolis last month, Minnesota expressed the determination to clean up her big city by the enactment of a state-wide prohibitory law.

North Dakota, having delved deep into mathematical problems, announced as the result of her computation that North Dakota had made the largest gain of any state in proportion to her population and was therefore, as a matter of actual fact, the banner state.

Indiana's representative, the state president, took the opportunity to invite the next convention to meet in her capital city, Indianapolis, and in tuneful measures announced her policy for the future.

"It's a long lane that has no turning
Hoosier dram-shops must go.
We'll vote them out on election morning;
It's the quickest way we know.
Good-by, dilly dally,
Face the question square.
We'll win the battle with our prohi votes
When the women get there."

After these the states making a gain of from 1,000 to 6,000 came upon the platform as follows:

Tennessee, coming up with 1,114 new members gave credit for this gain to their honored promoted leader, Mrs. Silena M. Holman, "the first citizen of their state."

In obedience to the request of her fellow delegates from the state of Wisconsin, Mrs. Lawson, state president, sang the ever popular song for the children, "Out from the hearthstone the children go."

The leader of the Massachusetts delegation, Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, remarked, "We are reminded of what Daniel Webster said years ago, 'Massachusetts, there she stands,' and the only fault which we of Massachusetts have is that she continues to stand, when we want her to move, but I am glad to say that there are some indications that she is moving in the right direction." Massachusetts boasted of having among her daughters the National president, Miss Gordon, the National Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Mary F. W. Anderson, National Press correspondent, Miss Eva K. Foster, National superintendent, Miss Lella M. Sewall and National lecturer, Miss Ellen Stone.

Each of Missouri's delegation recounted some triumph achieved during the past year, laying special emphasis on the fact that through the efforts of the women a state law had been passed providing for policewomen in every city of over 5,000 inhabitants.

Michigan created much amusement by telling in its recital of triumphs past and prospective of a representative in its legislature whose name is Straight, who lives on Church Street, in the city of Coldwater.

Iowa reviewed in a most interesting fashion the history of her wonderful legislative successes, which on January 1 will make the state saloonless.

New York's delegation came on the platform equipped with umbrellas. The state has the fine record of having been able to report a gain in membership every year for more than sixteen years. Its present membership is 40,460, with a gain this year of 3,733. With accompaniment of song the delegates encircled their popular leader, Mrs. Boole, with bands of white ribbon in maypole fashion.

The Ohio delegates equipped for

(Continued on Page Eleven)

RECOMMENDATIONS BY NATIONAL PRESIDENT

(Continued from Page Nine)

July a special occasion for welcoming newly naturalized citizens, the day to be known as "Americanization Day." A reception with patriotic music, the reciting of the pledge of allegiance, the presentation of small American flags and other exercises would make an enjoyable program.

That special publicity be given to the prohibition pronouncements of prominent labor leaders. Material to offset the misleading, untrue statements of the liquor men concerning economic loss under prohibition can be obtained from the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill.

That we appoint a delegate to represent the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the Conference on Christian Work in Latin America to meet in Panama in 1916.

That local unions co-operate with women's missionary societies and acquaint these devoted co-workers with the wonderful opportunities for World's W. C. T. U. work. That we co-operate with women's clubs, especially in their constructive and corrective civic work.

That our valuable National official organs, THE UNION SIGNAL and The Young Crusader, be given due prominence in local meetings, institutes and conventions, and that the campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL be freely used in campaigns; that The Temperance Educational Quarterly, our ably conducted scientific journal, be placed in colleges and with The Young Crusader be brought to the attention of teachers in normal and public schools.

That each state W. C. T. U. consider the advisability of adopting a by-law providing that no white ribboner who is not a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL, either by her own payment or that of another, shall be eligible to the offices of state superintendent, district, county, or local president, nor shall she be elected a delegate to a National Convention.

That we make wide use of W. C. T. U. stereopticon slides, charts, placards and posters for exhibits and public meetings and that we freely use the literature to be obtained of our own National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

To a most encouraging degree the women all over our states are coming into close touch one with another. Our viewpoint in work for constitutional prohibition is national as well as state. Let us be eager to study and to apply one another's methods and let us send to campaign states cheering, helpful messages.

In 1924 will come the jubilee year of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I recommend the appointment of a committee to lay foundation plans for a fitting observance of the fiftieth year of our organization—plans that shall include the raising of a thank-offering Jubilee Fund.

Group of White Ribboners at Panama-Pacific Exposition on National Temperance Council Day

JUBILEE NIGHT

(Continued from Page Ten)

work, with brushes and brooms, stated they had opened a dry cleaning establishment and intended to continue the enterprise until the whole state was clean and every saloon was wiped from her fair face. It reported a gain of 5,260.

Pennsylvania holding a banner displaying its gain of 6,172 in big figures, and its total membership, 43,511, called the world to notice how it was growing. It presented this fine increase to Mother National with the hope that the gain might help in carrying on the work of the organization even more successfully than in the past.

There is one number on a Jubilee Night program that is always looked forward to with anticipations of delight and remembered long afterwards with joy—the singing of "Victory" by Mrs. Frances W. Graham. Never did it ring out with more triumphant prophecy than this year.

Miss Gordon called attention to the goal of membership which had been set by the National W. C. T. U. at the beginning of the year, and gave the names of those which had reached the goal set by Mother National, as follows:

North Dakota, Alaska, North Idaho, Missouri, Iowa, Montana, Wisconsin and South Carolina.

Invitations to entertain the National W. C. T. U. convention were received from Washington, D. C., and Pittsburgh, Pa. Indianapolis, Ind., had previously given such an invitation.

Regretfully the delegates realized that the closing moments of the forty-second convention had come. Every hour had been filled with inspiration and all were loath to leave the beautiful city, with its hospitable friends. The motion for adjournment was made by Miss Esther Elfreth, president of the New Jersey W. C. T. U. With a sincere wish that the happiness of the past five days might be prolonged, hand clasped hand as the company of white ribboners stood in an unbroken circle and sang together, "God be with you, till we meet again," and in unison repeated the Aaronic benediction.

SPECTACULAR SERMONS

"Because we remember ninety-five per cent of what we see and forget seventy-five per cent of what we hear, the Branch secretaries are determined that you shall not only hear what our Branches are doing, but through living pictures see what they are accomplishing," remarked Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner in presenting the unique and impressive spectacular sermons on Monday afternoon. Credit for these well planned and cleverly executed tableaux is due not only to Mrs. Schachner and Miss Mary Ervin, but also to Mrs. Elizabeth Thayer, L. T. L. secretary for the West Washington W. C. T. U.

Most amusing were the performances of costumed youngsters made up to represent Dutch Cleanser and Bon Ami, who with patriotic fervor, as they diligently scrubbed, declared their purpose to make the map all white. The following living pictures, with the accompanying songs, were given with fine effect. The first, "Give the Ballot to the Mothers," showed a group of mothers and babies with the explanation in song,

"The mothers rock the cradle, and the mothers rule the world,
'Gainst the enemies of childhood let the mothers' vote be hurled,—
They are marching forth to battle, and their banner is unfurled,
The mothers of our land."

Young Campaigners, brave in red and blue caps and pennants, sang with vigor an L. T. L. Marching Song,

"We're the youth of this great land,
Working at the Lord's command,
With our Loyal Temperance Legion brave and strong;
All our life is in His care,
We have strength to do and dare,
As we march against the hosts of sin and wrong."

Not to forget the day of early beginnings and to link the past with the future, Mother Thompson was shown, her daughter handing her a Bible open at the Crusade Psalm, the marching orders of the white ribbon hosts, which are victoriously waging the peaceful warfare for God and home and native land, while the words of Miss Gordon's beautiful song, "The Children's Happy Day," proclaimed the joyful prophecy:

"In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the Children's happy day,
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty,
There'll be prohibition plenty,
When Columbia drives the drink away."

The missionary activities of the young people were represented by costumed delegates from other lands and the ringing challenge in song:

"Don't you hear it nearing, friends, That Prohibition Chime?
The Y. P. B. is ringing, In every land and clime.
Don't you hear it nearing, friends, That Prohibition Chime?
The Y. P. B. is ringing, In every land and clime."

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE CONQUERING CHRISTIANITY

ADDRESS DELIVERED AT SEATTLE CONVENTION

MRS. CULLA J. VAYHINGER, President Indiana W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger

To all men in all ages the rhythmic, stately tread of the conqueror has been attractive. Even the child looks with admiration upon the man who has met an opposing force and mastered it, no matter whether it be a rival ball team, some known law of science or a nation. Men have braved dangers of air, sea and land in order to wear the laurel wreath of the conqueror.

God puts his seal upon the spirit of mastery in the promise, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out forever," and he puts into the mouth of John, the Revelator, the words, "I saw a white horse and he that sat on him had a bow and a crown was given unto him, and he went forth conquering and to conquer." Hamilcar took his little son, Hannibal, to the altar of Baal, nad him place his chubby fist upon that altar and there swear eternal hatred of Rome. Hannibal grew to manhood with that hatred in his heart and when at twenty-six years of age he was made commander-in-chief of the Carthaginian army he decided to cross the Alps and forever humble his enemy. He set out, 218 B. C., through hostile tribes, over the swift Rhone to the foot of the Alps. Mountaineers hurled huge stones upon his marching men. Snow blocked his way. Men and horses slipped on the ice and were hurled to death over the awful abyss. They came to places where a loud tone of voice or the sharp crack of a whip might start the impending avalanche. Roads must be cut through solid rock by hands benumbed by cold and weakened by hunger. When he reached the plains of Italy there marched with him only 26,000 of the 102,000 with whom he had started five months before. In the eighteen months that followed one-fifth of all Roman citizens able to bear arms had perished in battle—all that Hannibal might return to Carthage a conqueror.

Years later Napoleon sent engineers to explore the pass of St. Bernard to see if it were possible to carry across that pass 60,000 men, ponderous artillery, tons of cannon balls and baggage with all the bulky munitions of war. They said, "Perhaps it is within the realm of the possible." Old generals of England and Austria laughed and said, "Wheels never have rolled over St. Bernard and wheels never can," but Napoleon thought otherwise. He inspected with rigid care, and every worn shoe, old coat and damaged musket was cast aside and the columns swept forward. High on the craggy steeps, bands of armed men appear like phantoms. The eagle that had soared above them now screams and wheels beneath them. The mountain goat hurries from his craggy home at sight of that strange spectacle. Hard places were reached and men with less courage and ambition would have turned back, but Napoleon ordered every band to play and they passed these seemingly insurmountable obstacles to the sound of music, and twenty miles of men marched into Italy led by the dauntless Napoleon.

I care not what you think of the character of these leaders, or of the motives which prompted them to these heroic deeds, there is no man, woman or child who reads history who does not feel his pulse quicken as he touches the lives of these conquering spirits. We admire the conqueror in the intellectual realm. The man who by the light of the pine knot in the log cabin has conquered poverty and ignorance and gone forth to herald a new truth to the world, receives our generous applause. The statesman who has met a knotty problem, applied his brain and conscience to it and succeeded in setting us right as a nation, is the hero of the people.

The conqueror in any field, who is not turned back because of difficulties, but goes on to the accomplishment of his work, is the one to whom we build our monuments. We are proud of being Americans. We look about us and find that our broad fields produce enough to feed us and the thousands who come to our shore every year. Our mountains carry in their bosoms coal enough to warm us, to drive our wheels of industry, and to carry us and our products to the remotest nations of the globe. We have the greatest inland waterway and the greatest network of railroads in the world. Our school system is the pride of every American. No community goes unchurched. Every state cares for its unfortunates, dependents and delinquents. Many of the greatest questions pertaining to the human family have been settled on American soil. Some of the greatest inventors, educators and statesmen the world has ever seen have been cradled in our log cabins.

Every flag on the high seas dips to Old Glory, but listen! We may conquer every element in nature, we may master the learning of every land, we may open our storehouses and bid the nations come and enjoy with us these riches and yet fail to meet the world's sorest need and the purpose for which God has called us as a nation. The world today is crying out for a conquering religion. Not Mohammedanism, which must be propagated by the sword; not Brahmanism, which depends upon the credulity of the people for its propagation; not Buddhism, which appeals to the innate selfishness of man; not Confucianism, which is purely ethical and political in its teaching, but a religion which combines belief in the true God with the application of the great principles taught by His Son to every phase of human life.

The world is tired of war. For ages we have piled our bloody slain in the trenches dug by war. Employer and employe have learned that the strike is not the satisfactory method of settling disputes between capital and labor. The world is disgusted with the political trickster and salable politician and with compromise methods used in dealing with evil, and it is asking for an effective remedy for these difficulties. Constantine saw in the sky at midday a flaming cross on which were inscribed the words, "By this sign we conquer." The cross of Calvary, the emblem of Christianity, must be the emblem under which the army marches which is to drive back the hordes of darkness and sin.

But you say, "You cannot apply the principles of Christianity to business. It will destroy business." If you are engaged in a business which cannot be adapted to these great principles you would better change your business. But you say, "Politics can never be squared by these principles. You can't mix politics and religion." I have seen a brand of politics that would not mix with religion, but if you have that brand you would better change your politics. The world has no use for a religion that must be laid aside when a man goes into the store, shop, factory or polling booth, and it will never make the mistake of thinking the man who has that kind is a true Christian.

A few years ago the country was startled by the report of the vice commissions appointed to investigate the white slave traffic, its causes and methods. Churches held indignation meetings and sent appeals to Congress and state legislatures for laws to destroy this evil. We were given a partial remedy and yet in our cities today laws are trampled under foot. Procurers pursue girls to their very doors. The liquor traffic herds men and young women and drives them to hell in droves through the door of the wine rooms and "ladies' entrance." Working girls are paid starvation wages and sell their virtue as the price of bread and butter. Saloons and brothels dictate the policy of cities. Respected men live on the income from these dives. Leaders in churches vote for men who connive at law breaking. The police, employed as protectors of the innocent, protect these

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

TURN OVER TIME
When Nature Hints About the Food.

When there's no relish to food and all that one eats doesn't seem to do any good then is the time to make a turn-over in the diet, for that's Nature's way of dropping a hint that the food isn't the kind required.

"For a number of years I followed railroad work, much of it being office work of a trying nature. Meal times were our busiest; and eating too much and too quickly of food such as is commonly served in hotels and restaurants, together with the sedentary habits, were not long in giving me dyspepsia and stomach trouble which reduced my weight from 205 to 160 pounds.

"There was little relish in any food and none of it seemed to do me any good. It seemed the more I ate the poorer I got and was always hungry before another meal, no matter how much I had eaten.

"Then I commenced a trial of Grape-Nuts food, and was surprised how a small saucer of it would carry me along strong and with satisfied appetite, until the next meal, with no sensations of hunger, weakness or distress as before.

"I have been following this diet now for several months and my improvement has been so great all the others in my family have taken up the use of Grape-Nuts with complete satisfaction and much improvement in health.

"Americans eat hurriedly, have lots of worry, thus hindering digestion and therefore need a food that is predigested and concentrated in nourishment."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

ALASKA W. C. T. U. DELEGATION
First row: Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president; Mrs. Clara Michener, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Frances Pedersen, treasurer.
Second row: Mrs. Lula B. Thompson, vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Alma J. Blackwell, delegate-at-large; Mrs. Lucy Spaeth, corresponding secretary.

THE CONQUERING CHRISTIANITY

(Continued from Page Twelve)

human devils. Girls rot in rooms within reach of the ears of these bluecoats.

The preacher preaches on some new archaeological discovery; the Christian Scientist says, "All evil exists in your mind," and the devil laughs and the awful tragedy proceeds. Yet there are enough church members in every city to turn things right side up. You say it is not the church's business to array itself against these mighty combinations of evil. I want to ask if the church does not do it, who will? I do not expect the brewer's heart to soften nor the distiller to change his viewpoint, nor any great number of saloonkeepers and dive keepers to be converted. We fully expect that there will continue to be men who will reach out the avaricious hand and filch the bloody gold from the till of the liquor traffic to pay their taxes, but I am sure your Lord and mine does not expect to find his followers in that crowd, neither does the world expect to find you there.

Nehemiah was called of God to build the wall about Jerusalem. The enemies of the enterprise laughed him to scorn and said, "Do these feeble Jews expect to accomplish anything?" But they kept at their work and the walls grew. Then the enemies organized and said, "We will attack them and hinder the work." Nehemiah called his workmen together and ordered every man to hold in the right hand the trowel, but to gird by the side the sword. The wall had to be built because God commanded it. It might be necessary to build it on the dead bodies of the enemies of the enterprise. The work was to be constructive but destructive as well. So the conquering Christianity must be dual in its nature,—constructive in building up the Kingdom of our Christ, but destructive in tearing down the battlements of the enemy of the Kingdom. The latter is just as vital to the success of the church as the former, and I want to say, is the only kind of Christianity the devil fears and the world respects.

The church and the liquor traffic are engaged in a death struggle. With Dr. Dickie, I would say, "I am not here with blanched cheek, quivering voice and trembling limb to tell you that one or the other must go down. I am here with my feet on the solid rock, Christ Jesus, my front to the foe and my eyes on the stars to tell you that the Cross of Christ will prevail, civil liberty will live and the liquor traffic will die!"

"When?" you say. Bacon says, "In the theater of man's life, God and the angels only should be lookers-on." When the church awakes, ceases to be a looker-on, stops playing at temperance work and wields the sword of the ballot against this, her greatest foe, then will be heard the death groan of this monster and mingled with it the shout of a nation redeemed from the slavery of drink.

SPECTACULAR SERMONS

(Continued from Page Eleven)

"Real Conservation," showing Uncle Sam with his hand on the head of a child, was accompanied by the song which typifies the real conservation of childhood, "A Saloonless Nation in 1920."

Perhaps the most impressive feature of this combination L. T. L. and Y. P. B. program was the picture embodying the motto of the Young People's Branch, "It is glorious to man a life-boat, but better to build a lighthouse." To the music of "The Temperance Lighthouse" the two methods of endeavor were shown, the children receiving from motherly wisdom instruction to prevent a wasted life, and to bring them out into fullest usefulness, and the effort by another woman to reclaim a girl who had started on the downward life.

As a fitting climax of the impressive afternoon the exultant strains of the "World-Wide Jubilee Song" were accompanied by a triumphant display of flags, which brought clearly to the audience the thought of the glad time now so near at hand when the white flag of prohibition shall wave its protecting folds o'er every nation of earth.

EXPERIENCES ON "WHITE RIBBON SPECIAL" EN ROUTE FROM SEATTLE TO SAN FRANCISCO

BY ONE OF THE PARTY

Most of the delegates planned to go from Seattle to San Francisco to visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition and participate in the meetings of the National Temperance Council. The "White Ribbon Special" left Seattle Saturday morning, October 16.

The first stop was at Portland, Oregon, where a committee of white ribboners greeted the travelers and showered upon them beautiful flowers. As each delegate stepped off the train she received a bottle of the "becoming famous" loganberry juice, 280 bottles having been given by the Chamber of Commerce. Songs led by Mrs. Frances Graham and an interchange of felicitations occupied the all too brief period of the stay.

At Salem, Oregon, the second stop, automobiles furnished by the Chamber of Commerce were in waiting. Although it was "between the dark and the daylight" when we reached Salem, we saw the lovely city of homes and garden-bordered avenues. We drove past the state penitentiary and insane hospital, then to the Capitol, where a reception was given by the local W. C. T. U., and more loganberry juice was forthcoming.

Miss Gordon, Mrs. Boole and Mrs. Munns spoke from the speaker's desk in the House of Representatives, and on the desk of Representative Anderson, who "fathered" the state-wide prohibition bill, Miss Gordon placed a rose in appreciation of his part in making Oregon a prohibition state.

In the darkness we made our way into Albany, Oregon, but on our arrival a band played a royal welcome, speeches were made, and again fruit and flowers were showered upon us.

The party on the "Special" rested over the Sabbath at Roseburg, the pulpits of that picturesque town being filled by the visitors, who were entertained delightfully during the day by members of the local unions. A children's mass meeting was held at the Opera House. At the Soldiers' Home a large Christian Union was organized.

The "Special" reached Ashland, Oregon, early Monday morning and was greeted at the station by a delegation of W. C. T. U. sisters, who came with a perfect garden of fruit and flowers from which we picked to our hearts' content. Here we were served with the mineral water for which the place is famous. Speeches were made and Miss Gordon tied the white ribbon around the wrist of a dear baby who was brought to the train to welcome us. Nearly all day we had before our eyes as we traveled southward sublime Mt. Shasta, its snow-capped peak gleaming in the sun. A stay at Shasta Springs was most refreshing, the wonderful mountain cascade, the strenuous climb up the heights, the song as we waited to be called back to our train, were never-to-be-forgotten experiences.

Tuesday morning, October 19, we reached Oakland, crossed San Francisco Bay on the palatial ferry boats, and found waiting us in San Francisco Mrs. Sara Dorr, president of the Northern California W. C. T. U. and her co-workers. Our party was taken to the Court Hotel and after breakfast was escorted by our San Francisco hostesses to the grounds of the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Meeting at San Francisco

Luncheon at Panama-Pacific Exposition

Upon the day of the arrival of the members of the official party at San Francisco Tuesday, October 19, there was tendered to them by the Northern California W. C. T. U. a delightful luncheon and reception on the Panama-Pacific Exposition grounds. This was served in the banquet hall of the California building, Mrs Sara J. Dorr, president of the Northern California W. C. T. U., presiding and acting as toastmistress. The tables were spread with the most luscious food products of California and adorned with its choicest flowers. Greetings were extended by Mrs. Annie K. Bidwell, first honorary vice-president of the Woman's Board of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, in place of Mrs. Helen Sanborn, president of the board, who had delegated Mrs. Bidwell to represent her and to express her regret at being unable to be present, and to extend cordial greetings to the white ribbon visitors. In order to enable the guests to have ample time for carrying out the full program, after the expiration of the hour for which the banquet hall was engaged, the Woman's Board was given the use and privileges of the reception room of the California building, a courtesy never, it is understood, granted before.

Greetings were also given by Mrs. Sturtevant Peet, former president and now the honorary president of Northern California W. C. T. U.; by Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer, National superintendent of Work Among Indians; by Mrs. Addie Garwood Estes, for the state officers, and by Mrs. Frances Gilmore, president of the San Francisco W. C. T. U. Most cordial and loving were these welcome speeches. One theme was uppermost in the thought of all—the hope and expectation of the success of the state-wide campaign in 1916 to make California dry. Brief responses were made by Miss Gordon, Mrs. Boole, Mrs. Parks, Mrs. Hoge and Mrs. Munns. Later, after adjourning to the reception room, state presidents, National superintendents and other members of the Executive Committee were introduced, and Mrs. Frances Graham sang in her inimitable style the white ribbon favorite, "Victory." The informal reception which followed enabled white ribboners from the east, north and south to become acquainted with their sisters in Northern California.

From the California building the delegates found their way to the exhibit of the World's and National W. C. T. U. in the Palace of Education, presided over by Miss Mary E. Brown, assisted by her sister, Miss Hattie Brown. During the stay of the white ribboners this was the favorite meeting place and all expressed unqualified approval of the exhibit. Eager students were to be seen at all hours of the day storing away in plethoric note-books the valuable information given on charts, posters, etc. The thought-arresting value of the exhibit no one who watched the constant throng of visitors stop to study its lessons can doubt. Miss Brown has a most happy faculty of interesting the children and young people in the mechanical devices displayed and tactfully leading them on to observe and study further statements and truths.

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature. $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept. 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

National Temperance Council Meetings, October 20, 1915

The meetings of the National Temperance Council, composed of executive leaders of the temperance organizations of the United States, were held on the morning, afternoon and evening of October 20. The forenoon was devoted to conferences at the First Congregational church of San Francisco. Mr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the National Temperance Council, presided, and methods of education were discussed by Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Sunday School Work, Rev. Irving B. Bristol of Sacramento, and Miss Edith M. Wills, director of the Anti-Saloon League exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

At the Court of Abundance

A parade on the Exposition grounds at two o'clock in the afternoon, from the Fillmore street entrance to the Court of Abundance, led by one of the finest bands on the grounds, was preliminary to the afternoon meeting which was presided over by Rev. H. H. Bell, D. D., who in turn presented Mr. Daniel A. Poling, who had charge during the remainder of the meeting.

After prayer Dr. Bell introduced the Hon. Arthur Arlett, representing the president of the Board of Managers of the Exposition. In a most felicitous speech Mr. Arlett presented to the Council a commemorative bronze medal from officials of the Exposition, and at the close of what he termed his speech in his official capacity, said:

"I want you to know that there is scarcely any cause, it seems to me, claiming the interest and attention of our American electorate which is so thoroughly important as that which you represent. I have had occasion to say before now that unless democracy shall throttle liquor, democracy will die by liquor, and believing that, and being at once a politician and a citizen, I tell you that those high in authority, those in influential places in party and in council, must see to it that adequate opportunity is given the citizenship of this land to express their convictions on this matter and whether or not we shall be with those who are numbered with the majority we should remember that while in democracies majorities rule, minorities lead. I am glad today, as I speak here officially, to take the opportunity of pledging to you my own personal appreciation and fealty to the cause that you are representing, and if that is unwisdom from the standpoint of politics, make the most of it, for I believe with you that a man would better be wrong sometimes and frequently for expediency's sake and right for principle's sake than to possess all the land. In offering this medal I do it officially and if that is in any sense perfunctory, let it pass, but I offer it with a personal touch, believing that you represent much of the conscience of the land and representing that, you must eventually prevail."

Responding to an introduction by Mr. Poling, Miss Gordon caused a ripple of laughter by commenting on the fitness of the place of meeting—just in front of a striking fountain in whose ceaselessly flowing waters the world was being washed.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union was represented on the afternoon program by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, who was introduced by Mr. Poling. In an address of great power she characterized the meeting of the temperance forces of the country at this time as a council of war against a common enemy, the liquor traffic, to assign to different divisions of the army a part in the great campaign. "We shall not be satisfied," said Mrs. Boole, "until our battle line extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the borders of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, a battle line that touches every home in this nation. Just as the European nations are trying to gain recruits for their armies, so in this country the time is ripe for every man and woman to join the forces for righteousness in a battle against evil. We must swear allegiance to the cause which means protection to the home, to public health, to public morals, and which is at the very foundation of the evangelization of America and so of the evangelization of the world."

An exquisite cornet solo by Miss Anna Cotton, a musician of San Francisco, was followed by a brief address by Mr. Poling, an outline of which we give:

Mr. Poling

The National Temperance Council is the point of contact, the clearing-house of the temperance reform. Its membership is made up of executive leaders from ninety-seven national, general reform, religious and temperance societies. It is more than national, for it includes in its sphere of influence the Dominion of Canada, and leading Canadians are among its members. The National Temperance Council does not supersede any other organization.

Its program is without prejudice to or interference with the fundamental principles or policies of any worthy reform group. It is the fighting platform of common agreement for all.

The temperance reform has failed in the past, where it has failed, and it has everywhere made slower progress than it ought, because temperance people have very often wasted precious time and energy in petty squabbles among them-

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

If Your Children

are delicate or frail, if they catch cold easily or are backward in studies, give them the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion. It is rich, strength-making growing-food.

14-89 FREE FROM ALCOHOL

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Caught 51 Rats One Week

Trap resets itself. 22 inches high. Will last for years. Can't get out of order. Weighs 7 pounds. 12 rats caught one day. Cheese is used, doing away with poisons. This trap does its work, never fails and is always ready for the next rat. When rats and mice pass device they die. Rats are disease carriers, also cause fires. These catchers should be in every school building. Rat catcher sent prepaid on request of $3. Mouse catcher 10 inches high, $1. Money back if not satisfied.

H. D. SWARTS, Inventor and Manufacturer
Universal Rat and Mouse Traps, Box 566, Scranton, Pa.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME!" 90,000 SOLD
Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing
Wm. E. Marks, 1003 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL MEETINGS

(Continued from Page Fourteen)

selves. The fundamental requisite for success in any war is a harmonious and united fighting front.

The National Temperance Council is the fighting front of the temperance reform. It is the demonstration of united action against the beverage alcohol. A host divided against itself can not stand. The temperance host is no longer divided.

It is not necessary that men agree in all particulars in order that they go together the length of their common agreement. No man agrees absolutely with any other man if indeed he agrees absolutely with himself!

The temperance forces of America are today going together the length of their common agreement and in the white light of the new spirit thus created they are discovering that the differences of yesterday which they regarded as major are minor.

Primarily the program of the National Temperance Council is educational. It believes that knowledge is power, and that the truth sets free. It stands for "the truth about alcohol." Its determination is to tell the truth attractively and convincingly in every corner of the nation and in every spoken tongue until the last man shall have heard and until the last child shall have been given the opportunity of knowing.

The educational campaign encouraged and promoted by the National Temperance Council through the various existing temperance organizations is orderly and scientific. It is emotional only as scientific knowledge of a great physical and social menace arouses the emotions.

The appeal of the National Temperance Council is to reason, judgment and will. Its chief supporters today are the bankers, the manufacturers, and the constructive molders of society, as well as those other devoted souls who have given their lives to the anti-alcohol movement simply because of the eternal moral rightousness of it. The "temperance fanatics" today are not preachers and women, but railroad presidents, owners of steel mills, scientists, popular novelists and war lords. Medical authorities are laying charges at the door of "John Barleycorn" that the most rabid temperance orator of five years ago never dreamed of making.

The first great word of the declaration of principles of the National Temperance Council is UNITE, the second is EDUCATE, and the third is EXTERMINATE.

Unless the traffic in beverage alcohol can demonstrate its good intent, can prove that it is a friend of society, it must go the way of slavery and gambling. Until this institution which is everywhere entrenched behind the weakness and cupidity of men stands fully revealed, the campaign of the National Temperance Council will continue to go forward in harmony with science, industry and public morals. The National Temperance Council will continue to strike for the larger physical and spiritual freedom of the race; nor will its activity be confined to one continent, for this is a world-wide war—a war for a "World without a Liquor Nation by 1930."

Mass Meeting at First Congregational Church of San Francisco, October 20

Notwithstanding the attractions of the great Exposition in San Francisco, a creditable audience gathered on the evening of Wednesday, October 20, at the First Congregational Church for a mass meeting of the National Temperance Council.

Mr. Poling, the presiding officer, opened the meeting with a brief statement as to the purpose and program of the National Temperance Council, emphasizing the necessity for the co-operation of all reform organizations if the causes for which they stand are to be triumphant. Following the devotional exercises and a cornet solo and music from the fine pipe organ, Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was introduced as the spokesman for the organization most largely represented on the occasion. In presenting Miss Gordon, Mr. Poling expressed his pleasure at having that privilege because of the movement she represented, because of her own life, and because of her able leadership of the white ribbon forces.

Miss Gordon, in a forceful and eloquent address, emphasized the fact that the meeting of the united temperance forces was being held at a most strategic time and place—a state just entering upon a campaign for state-wide prohibition. She spoke of San Francisco's unenviable record in being, next to Milwaukee, the city which has the most saloons of any in the nation, and expressed her gratification and gratitude that the meeting could be held in a church that has as its pastor, Dr. Aked, a man fearless in his advocacy of the great cause. She gave a most apt and timely interpretation of the letters W. C. T. U. as "We Come To Unite," and admitted that white ribboners had no objection to the other interpretation of the liquor men, "We Come To Upset." She reviewed the wonderful victories for total abstinence and prohibition in this country and Europe which are so certain a prophecy of ultimate nation-wide and world wide abolition of the liquor traffic.

The next speaker was Mr. George F. Cotterill, former mayor of Seattle and international councilor of the International Supreme Lodge of the Order of Good Templars, who was introduced by Mrs. Boole as a leader in the pioneer society in the temperance reform.

"I am glad to follow the president of this great organization of consecrated mother-love that unquestionably has done more to make public sentiment on the great question of temperance than any other during the past fifty years," said ex-Mayor Cotterill. In a very comprehensive setting forth of the world situation, Mr. Cotterill called attention to the fact that at least four of the arguments in favor of the liquor business that were advanced and seriously discussed thirty years ago were now given no consideration by intelligent people, namely high license as a regulative measure; the so-called disinterested management or government control, which had so recently received a death-blow in the election in South Carolina; the compensation to the liquor interests, which died a natural death when the decision was given out by the Supreme court that no man has an inherent right to sell liquor; and the harmlessness of light wines and low percentage beer.

The last speaker of the evening was Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, who represented the Prohibition party. In an eloquent address, delivered in Mrs. Beauchamp's most persuasive manner, she declared it her belief that the one solution of the liquor question is to have back of it a political organization and an administration committed definitely to the passage and enforcement of a National Constitutional Prohibition measure.

The two representatives of the Anti-Saloon League, who were expected to speak, Rev. E. C. Dinwiddie and Mr. Ernest H. Cherrington, were unable, because of other engagements, to be present.

Mr. Poling closed the service with an appeal for co-operation of the temperance forces and loyalty to the movement for which the National Temperance Council stands.

You can look younger

"Six to ten minutes a day of pleasant exercise for the face—in your own room—brings a quick and marvelously youthful expression."—Susanna Cocroft is as effective as Miss Cocroft's exercises for the body have proven to be in more than 75,000 cases. The course includes care of the hair, eyes, hands and feet, breathing, correct poise, etc., and relieves such age-adding blemishes as pouches under eyes, wrinkles; flabby, thin neck; double chin, crow's feet, tired eyes, sagging facial muscles, pimples, thin, dry or oily hair; tender, inflamed feet; rough, red hands; and other beauty-destroyers.

Physical Culture for the Face

Write for free booklet today

Women are learning that they do not need to look old at fifty.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course,
624 S. Michigan Ave., Dept. 16 CHICAGO

Launching a State-wide Campaign in Southern California

Great Mass Meeting Held in Los Angeles Sunday Afternoon, October 24

The leaders of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union counted it a privilege to be present and participate in the launching of the state-wide prohibition campaign in Los Angeles on Sunday afternoon, October 24. The meeting was held in the commodious and beautiful auditorium of the Bible Institute, and the interest in the campaign was evidenced by an audience of over one thousand five hundred which filled floor and balconies to the last seat.

Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of Southern California W. C. T. U., presided with her accustomed grace. Mayor Sebastian welcomed the visiting white ribboners as "fighters against the greatest foe of the human race," and not only by his presence, but by his sympathetic words, showed his interest in the temperance cause.

Following him came Mrs. Estelle Lawton Lindsay, a member of the city council of Los Angeles, who not long ago served for a few days as acting mayor of that big, bustling western city and who says that if she were really the mayor she would blacklist all drunkards, have a school established for mothers, place free milk stations all over town and institute many other reforms.

Especially enlightening on the situation in California was the address of Rev. Matt S. Hughes, pastor of one of the largest churches in the state, and president of the Dry Federation.

"I have a sentimental interest in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," said Dr. Hughes, "for my memory goes back to the days of the Crusade, when as a small boy I stood in a southern city and saw my mother, whose voice was never heard in public, go on the streets with other Christian women in an endeavor to persuade the saloonkeepers and liquor dealers to abandon their business. Later I learned the secret of the impulse which helped her to overcome her timidity," said Dr. Hughes impressively. "It was that at home she had four boys."

Most gracious words of greeting were also spoken by Mrs. Hester Griffith, former president of Southern California W. C. T. U., and Mrs. M. W. Law, president of the federated unions of Los Angeles, numbering twenty-six.

Brief responses were made by the General Officers, Mrs. Nelle Burger, Mrs. D. K. Livingston and Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis. Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, urged that every campaign for prohibition be a campaign not of denunciation of the men who have invested their money in this evil business, but a campaign that points out a better way—a way that leads the people on and up to the high standard that is to be found in the promised land of prohibition.

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

LAUNCHING A STATE-WIDE CAMPAIGN

(Continued from Page Fifteen)

As Miss Gordon closed her address little girls bearing beautiful baskets of flowers mounted the steps of the platform and presented one to each of the General Officers.

Mrs. Frances P. Parks gave helpful suggestions from the very successful campaign in West Virginia, her native state, and especially emphasized the work that had been done by the women to roll up the majority of over 92,000, assuring the California women that they were possessed of one valuable instrument, namely, the ballot, which their West Virginia sisters lacked.

Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, president of Virginia W. C. T. U., and National assistant recording secretary, told how Virginia had won her victory, and gave it as her experience that the self-satisfaction and indifference of people living in dry territory are obstacles that must be overcome.

Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president of Missouri W. C. T. U., congratulated the California sisters and brothers on the opportunity before them, and testified to her enjoyment in being a temperance reformer.

Mrs. Deborah K. Livingston, National superintendent, threw down the challenge to the church of Christ in California to win the battle in 1916. In this campaign, she reminded them, the women will have the advantage over the women of many other states, for they may plus their praying and their paying by their voting.

Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis took her audience with her to the capital of the nation in a delightful review of some of the dramatic temperance triumphs of the last year.

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher and Miss Ellen Stone were introduced and spoke briefly.

Congressman Randall, as the first person in history who has been elected to the office of United States Congressman on an exclusively prohibition platform, expressed his obligation to the W. C. T. U.

Mr. Wheeler, district superintendent of the California Dry Federation, appealed to the audience for their financial support and co-operation, and Mr. Odell, chairman of the executive committee, spoke briefly of the outlook for the campaign.

Especially inspiring was the music of the afternoon by the Mendelssohn Quartet of Long Beach, who sang a selection, "California Going Dry," and "All Round the World the Ribbon White is Twined," and a whistling solo by one of Los Angeles' talented whistlers. A number of mothers brought their little ones to have tied around their wrists the white ribbon, and Mrs. Fitzgerald, an honored Crusader, was introduced and led in the closing prayer.

WHITE RIBBON PARTY ENTERTAINED IN LOS ANGELES AT RECEPTION AND BANQUET

The official party were the guests of the Los Angeles W. C. T. U. all day Monday, October 25, at an informal reception held at the Temperance Temple. At four o'clock, through the courtesy of the county supervisors, the visitors were given an automobile ride through the city and environs.

Banquet at Christopher's Hall

In the evening an elaborate banquet was tendered at Christopher's banquet hall, at which Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of Southern California W. C. T. U., presided and acted as toastmistress. The menu was furnished by the county unions of southern California, Los Angeles county giving the flowers; Orange, the oranges; Ventura and Santa Barbara, the walnuts; San Bernardino, the after-dinner mints; Riverside, the grapes; Kern, the raisins; San Luis Obispo and Inyo, the confectionery, and Imperial, the cotton boll favors.

Campaign toasts were responded to by the guests of the evening, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Frances P. Parks, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Mrs. Nelle Burger, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, U. S. Congressman Charles H. Randall, S. W. Odell and H. A. Wheeler.

"The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has had visions," said Miss Gordon, responding to the toast "Visions," "but the organization certainly can not be called visionary." She brought to mind the two epoch-making visions of the great leaders, Frances E. Willard and Lillian M. N. Stevens, the former as she stood in San Francisco, and witnessed the Chinese girls in slavery in old Chinatown, when there came to her a vision of the need of a great world's organization, and she founded the World's W. C. T. U.; and the revelation that came to Lillian M. N. Stevens on the eve of the great battle in the state of Maine, when she issued her proclamation for nation-wide and world-wide prohibition.

Speaking on "Campaign Messages," Mrs. Frances P. Parks directed attention to the value and necessity for the use of large quantities of carefully selected literature to make sentiment and votes for the cause in the coming state-wide campaign.

Mrs. Sara H. Hoge magnified her office as National assistant recording secretary by giving in her speech on "Making Records," some telling comparative statistics from prohibition and license states, showing the immeasurable superiority of the former from the standpoint of health, wealth and happiness.

Mrs. Nelle G. Burger presented in a breezy fashion some practical "Campaign Pointers": Talk your campaign everywhere, keep it everlastingly before the people; have a large corps of silver-tongued speakers; make it a singing campaign and a campaign in which the children shall have a large part.

Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis speaking on "On to Washington" sounded the call to mightier efforts for nation-wide prohibition in connection with the state-wide campaign.

U. S. Congressman Charles H. Randall, the first member of Congress ever elected on a straight prohibition platform, was given the subject "A Friend at Court." He outlined briefly the legislative program on which he hoped to secure action in the United States Congress. Mr. Randall's facetious definition of a prohibitionist as first cousin to an optimist, and an optimist as one who spends his evenings drinking and enjoying lemonade made out of the lemons that had been handed him during the day, showed that he is well fitted for the trying experiences he may have in getting Congress to carry out his plans.

S. W. Odell, executive chairman of the Southern California Dry Federation, passed out a few "Campaign Bullets" in the form of practical methods of work: Swamping every district with prohibition literature; making personal appeals to individual voters; and paying special attention to men of the working class.

Mr. H. A. Wheeler, district superintendent of the Dry Federation, referred to what he considered the three great guns of the campaign—organization, literature and finance.

Every speech abounded in definite information and practical suggestions for campaign work and even aside from the delightful social features of the gathering, everyone declared the occasion "very much worth while" in the help it gave to workers for prohibition. The musical contributions to the program were of exceptionally high quality, consisting of a vocal solo by Mr. F. E. Geiger, a whistling duet by Misses Ethel and Shirley Irvine, and a vocal solo by Mrs. T. A. Winbigler.

W. C. T. U. PARTY VISIT SAN DIEGO EXPOSITION, ARE ENTERTAINED AT LUNCHEON AND GIVEN COMPLIMENTARY RECITAL

Although engagements in the east prevented some of the official party from going to San Diego, a goodly company journeyed in the "special" that left Los Angeles the morning of October 26 and reached San Diego about noon. An appetizing luncheon was served to the visitors in the W. C. T. U. lunch room at the San Diego Exposition. By the way, the exhibit with the rest and lunch room, under the management of the local unions of San Diego county, is one of which they may justly be proud. We are informed that the place is very popular with the management and employes of the exposition, and deservedly so, for the well-cooked and daintily served viands dispensed there would tempt any patron to return again and again. From the luncheon the visitors were taken to the beautiful and artistically furnished parlors of the Woman's Board in the Southern California Building, where a complimentary recital was given to them, and tea and cake were served. The program, prepared by Mrs. Anna Rose Russell, county superintendent of Music, was most delightful. It was as follows: Piano solo, Miss Genevieve Reilly; select reading, Mrs. Eva Wheeler; vocal solo, Miss Eleanor Wheeler; violin solo, Miss Lillian Speer; vocal solo, Mrs. Phebe Birdsall, violin obligato by Miss Speer; vocal solo, Mr. Frederick E. Chapin, violin obligato by Miss Speer; violin solo, Miss Levina Lien. The accompanists were Miss Genevieve Reilly and Mrs. Anna Rose Russell.

After a visit to the plaza to be photographed with the pigeons, one of the most unique and spectacular features of the exposition, the guests had the joy of hearing a master musician perform upon the great Claus Spreckles organ. At the close of the organ recital, a meeting was held on the platform of the organ. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of the Southern California W. C. T. U., presided, and introduced Mrs. Florence McCoy, president of the county W. C. T. U., who in turn introduced Mrs. Helen Stoddard, former president of the Texas W. C. T. U., but now an honored member of San Diego W. C. T. U.

A song written for this occasion, a tribute to the white ribbon cause, was sung by Mr. Walker. Brief addresses were made by Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Frances P. Parks, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Mrs. Nannie Webb Curtis, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Mrs. M. L. Pearson, Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, Mrs. Emma Sanford Shelton and Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis. Other state presidents and National superintendents responded to introductions.

"As I listened to the organized melodies of your wonderful organ," said Miss Gordon, "I thought white ribboners are organized to bring harmony out of one of the greatest discords ever known, the discord of the liquor traffic, and next year I believe the men and the women of California will help tune this beautiful state up to concert pitch of state-wide prohibition."

The members of the official party rejoiced in this opportunity of meeting and having a few hours of social intercourse with the San Diego sisters, and only regretted that the time of their stay was necessarily so short that it prevented seeing more of the wonderful exposition and the beautiful city of the "silver gate."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., NOVEMBER 18, 1915 | No. 46

REPRESENTATIVES OF MANY NATIONS WHO PARTICIPATED IN PROGRAM ON WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NIGHT AT NATIONAL CONVENTION

Little white ribboners dear are we,
Round the wide world we live, don't you see?
We are as happy, as happy can be
Greeting our friends in the land of the free.

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Georgia Legislature Passes Law-Enforcement Measure—Great Discoveries of the Race—War on Women—Conservation of Human Life—Woman's Part in the World's Evangelization—Program for National Constitutional Prohibition Day, December 12—Department Institutes Discuss Practical Problems—Some Reasons Why We Shall Win—The Onward March of Prohibition.

GEORGIA LEGISLATURE PASSES LAW TO MAKE PROHIBITION ABSOLUTE IN STATE

Both houses of the Georgia legislature, meeting in extraordinary session, on the call of Governor Harris, have passed a measure providing for the elimination of all breweries, locker clubs and "near-beer saloons." The bill specifically prohibits the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in the state and defines liquor as any drink having more than one-half of one per cent alcohol. Present laws permit the manufacture and sale of drinks containing not more than four per cent alcohol.

This is one of the measures that Governor Harris urged at this special session of the legislature, saying, "I believe it is the sentiment of the great majority of the people of Georgia that some measure should be enacted which will facilitate the enforcement of our prohibition laws. The liquor question is fast becoming an economic question with all the governments of the world. The effect on the race is becoming so general in its evil results that the safety of the people has become involved, and statesmen, ethical and philosophical writers—thinking men everywhere do not hesitate to urge upon states and legislatures the necessity of attempting to curb the results of intemperance by enacting such measures as shall be suited to the situation."

The Georgia senate on November 9 passed a bill prohibiting liquor advertisements in any form in Georgia and making such advertisement a misdemeanor.

U. S. Congressman Bryan and Hon. George Cotterill Address the National Convention

The presence at National Conventions of distinguished visitors and the inspiring messages given by them are one of their many delightful features. Of this character were the speeches of Hon. J. W. Bryan, member of Congress from the state of Washington, and Hon. George Cotterill, International Councilor of the Good Templars and former "reform" mayor of Seattle, both of whom were introduced on Monday.

Congressman Bryan said in part:

"It is one of the greatest pleasures and privileges of my life to be presented to the Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I feel that I am looking into the faces of real warriors in the fight that is going on all over this country, all over this world of ours. They say that prohibition is not a national issue; they say that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is an issue that must be segregated and divided among the several states. They tell us that at Washington forces that are strong today and that are to be strong for all time to come in this country assert that we cannot take up this question of prohibition of the liquor traffic in a national way and thus wipe it out throughout the length and breadth of the land. They tell us that issues relating to ordinary affairs are national issues; they tell us that things that involve great expenditure of money are national; they say it is a national issue to try to wipe out the hog cholera, but that drunkenness in human beings is not a national issue. They say it is a national issue to eradicate ticks from cattle, but that it is not a national issue whether the women in their homes shall be protected from drunken husbands. They expend millions of dollars for lighthouses as a protection to navigation, and is that any more a national issue than the question of eliminating and putting out of business an institution that is responsible for human wrecks all over this country?

"I am going to suggest a practical proposition; to tell you how to put over that national amendment. The first essential thing to do is to create a public opinion over the country that will impress any administration, without regard to politics, that the head of the nation must stand for national prohibition. We all love and cherish the name of our President, Woodrow Wilson. It was my privilege to support almost all his legislation in Congress, but he has not yet gotten the idea into his head that prohibition is a national issue. Impress upon him that fact and you can put the amendment through the next Congress. When the matter was up we did not have the support of the administration—the support of Woodrow Wilson. He is the man you should go after with your womanly, your motherly ways, and cause him to become a friend of national prohibition and to tell the members of his party and other parties that he stands for the elimination of the liquor traffic from this country. I am glad to be able to say that in my official career I have never lost an opportunity to "biff" the liquor demon whenever it raised its head.

It is right to meet and to compile statistics; it is right to come together for discussion, but we must not fail to do the other thing, to let the heads of the political parties—Progressive, Democratic and Republican—understand that the man who heads his party must be right on the question."

Ex-Mayor Cotterill said in part:

"I must first deliver to you the greetings of that other great temperance organization which I have the honor to represent. I am extending a welcome to you not only for the local organization, but for the state and national Good Templars, and for the great international lodge with its 600,000 members the world over. I am reminded of the great meeting held in Christiania, Norway, over a year ago where there were assembled representatives of all the nations on the earth. Almost immediately afterward came the declaration of war and all our plans were shattered. Yet out of all this sad condition of affairs we have faith to believe that there may come a greater brotherhood, a greater humanity, and above all else it seems that alcohol has received its world-wide doom in the midst of this terrible crisis. I remind you of this as a definite hope for the ensuing year. There are some here who recall how less than two years ago it was my privilege as spokesman for the American delegation at the International Anti-Alcohol Congress at Milan, Italy, to extend an invitation which was accepted, to hold the next great meeting in the United States, and all the plans were made for that gathering, but the war intervened. However, the opportunity still remains, the appropriation made by Congress, signed by President Wilson, still holds over, and, please God, when this cruel war is over, there will meet in the United States of America under the Star Spangled Banner the fifteenth International Congress against Alcoholism, and at that time I believe there will be a definite declaration of international war against alcohol.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

The 1916 "California Dry" campaign was officially ushered in on Sunday, October 31, with eloquent exhortations from about 1,200 pulpits of the state. At the same time more than 20,000 initiative petitions seeking to place two prohibition measures on the ballot of the November, 1916, election were circulated among the various congregations.

Reports from the election of members of the Virginia general assembly indicate that there will be a heavy majority in the house and senate pledged to the enactment of prohibition legislation to forbid the shipment of intoxicants into the state when the law goes into effect January 1, 1916.

Members of the Chicago Traffic Association recently waited upon Gov. Dunne with the request that he incorporate in his call for a special session of the Illinois legislature a recommendation that the motor vehicle law be amended so that the driver of an automobile who tries to mix alcohol with gasoline may be given a jail sentence. In urging this action Judge Joseph Sabath, who headed the delegation, explained that at the present time the penalty for this offense is $200, and that he is forced several times a week to levy this amount without abating the evil in the least.

"There's nothing in the saloon business in Chicago," explained Tommy O'Connor, for thirty-five years a saloonkeeper in that city, as he filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District court in which he listed liabilities as $34,893.15 and assets as $000,000. Mr. O'Connor who now owns two saloons has in time past had as many as four at one time, but the last two or three years it has been a hard struggle to pay the rent and other bills. For thirty-five years, he insists, he has been working for the brewery and the landlord, and now he is done.

"Every time the rent was due or the brewery bill I worried myself sick," said Mr. O'Connor. "Now let the landlord and the brewery do the worrying and see how they'll like it."

The Idaho supreme court has granted an application for a writ of error to the Supreme court of the United States, which will be asked to pass upon the constitutionality of Idaho's drastic liquor law. This law makes the possession of liquor a felony on second conviction. It was upheld by the state court.

Albert R. Rogers, a member of the National Safety Council, declares that the men in the big plants who a few years ago would have considered the elimination of alcoholic liquors an infringement on personal liberty are, in thousands of cases, now urging it on their fellow-men. In many of the big industrial plants total abstinence plus merit is a fundamental requisite of promotion.

PROHIBITION VOTE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

It seems quite probable because only fifty per cent of the electorate of Newfoundland voted in the prohibition election, November 4, that the measure was defeated. The law provides that in order to make prohibition effective, at least forty per cent of the total vote must be cast in its favor. Mrs. Emma H. Howland, National W. C. T. U. organizer, who has been helping in the campaign, spending five weeks in the province, has returned to the United States. She reports a vigorous and enthusiastic campaign and the organization of many new unions.

GREAT DISCOVERIES OF THE RACE

DANIEL A. POLING, President's Associate of the United Society of Christian Endeavor

(Part I of Address Delivered at National Convention)

The life of the race is a voyage of exploration. The earth is a ship of discovery. Out of the present ocean of chaos rise the highlands of a new social order, where brotherhood is king and his scepter peace.

The war in Europe, with all of its losses, with its horrors and unspeakable excesses, prosecuted with a barbarism and fiendish inventive genius that throw the torture devices of the American Indian and the racks of the Inquisition into the discard as playthings of children, is a new starting point of the race.

The path of civilization rises and dips, but it remains permanently at no lower level. The key-word of mankind is progress and not decline. Old things pass away in blood and terror, but the death convulsions of the old are the travail pains of the new. Tomorrow will be better than today.

Let us take stock of ourselves. Let us know our losses and our gains. Let us enumerate our discoveries and find wisdom and power, that we may be ready for the forward march of the ages that will sound again when Mars is satisfied.

While I am sensitive to the facts of opposition, while I realize that masses of men and women still lightly regard or look with eyes of prejudice and tradition upon the heroic upward climb of woman in quest of herself, on our journey of discovery I take high ground and affirm,

The World Has Found Woman

Here again enters the war with its compensations. When the German drive started against Paris, the whole feminist movement, while unquestionably making progress, was in a turmoil of doubts and differences. The steady local and even national triumphs could not hide the fact that, coupled with the positive opposition of ignorance, selfishness and indifference, the excesses of militancy and ultra-society,—the excesses of the latter being mistakenly charged to the "new woman,"—were "slowing down" the feminine crusade and were creating conditions that would indefinitely delay the final political triumph of the feminist program.

But of more serious import than the delay in the granting of the ballot, these extremes of the violent few were turning away in disgust thoughtful seekers after truth, and the great underlying basic truths that make imperative the complete industrial, social and political emancipation of the female half of the race, were in danger of being shut back from the light for another hundred years.

The final triumph of principle is inevitable, but its immediate future is often at the mercy of its foolish friends.

Europe and America, and especially Great Britain, were beginning to regard "suffragette" and "suffragist" as synonymous terms, and some very intelligent leaders of public opinion had arrived at the distressing conclusion that the whole philosophy of the feminist program was fully stated by the campaign slogan, "Votes for Women."

But the war has brought an overwhelming reaction. When the first German rocket flared out over the boundary of Belgium, the female window-smashers of London dropped their missiles. To the last hamlet of the British Isles and throughout Europe, the pioneers of freedom for womanhood went out with their men to save the nations.

As in the brave days of old, the woman of the north, free of spirit as she was free of limb, carried the extra weapons of her mate into the heart of the conflict, and inspired him to superhuman deeds, bearing equal share with him in the front of battle, while she bore his son in her womb, so the woman of today, for the first time in long generations given equal freedom with man to do the world's work, has sprung to the side of her mate. In the factories of Germany, in the fields of Hungary, in the mills and mines of England, on the taxis of France, on the actual firing line of Serbia, and under the red cross behind every bloody trench of the war-mad world, she is giving herself, body, mind and soul, for the preservation of the institutions of her people.

And in excess of all this, as when Spartan mothers sent their sons away, and with the same spirit, she is giving her flesh and blood to be food for carrion-birds of countries she has never seen, while still beneath her heart she carries the developing life that is the hope of the future.

I have seen somewhere the picture of the suffrage war parade in London—one hundred thousand women marched in that vast demonstration, mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts; little daughters dressed in white, and gray-haired battle widows of the Crimea. The pictured faces of the marchers were inspiring, but my eyes did not rest upon them. I looked longest at the black masses of men and boys, crowding close against the lines that kept the street open for the parade —men and boys, thousands of them, in the small square of the photograph. To the eternal credit of manhood, let it be said that the faces of the men were generally the faces of old men and that the faces of the boys were the faces of children.

Daniel A. Poling,

But I saw more than a mere crowd of men. On those faces I saw the light of discovery, and I seemed to hear a voice,—a voice that speaks down through the years from a Roman cross, "Son, behold thy mother." The clamor of the unparalleled conflict has been the quiet in which for the first time woman's cry for justice has been really heard and fully understood.

What then have we found the new woman to be? First of all, we have discovered that she is not new, that she is the woman of old, the woman of yesterday, today and forever. The creatures of Broadway, the pitiable spectacles painted of face, and garbed, or rather ungarbed, in the latest creations of Dame Fashion, (who, by the way, is a man, for the dictators of woman's dress today are males) are not the suffragists of the nation. These distressing "new women" are the prophecy of what the future will be unless we listen to the voice of the prophetess in the land. These female parasites of society, who are almost invariably violently opposed to the enfranchisement of their sex, are the first-fruits of evil times, against which we must promptly move to save the race.

No, the female agitators of modern civilization are not the "new women,"—they are the lineal descendants of the primal equality of the sexes, in which human society was conceived and born. These women are not new, but their times are new. They have not changed; their world has changed. And with intelligent heroism they are fighting against fearful odds, to adjust the machinery of society to meet modern needs.

One has declared that already three-fourths of woman's former sphere has slipped away from her. Back at the beginnings of the race she was in all things partner of the man. She not only bore children and reared them; she was armor-bearer as well, tent-maker, house-builder and planter, tender and reaper of the harvests.

But gradually changes came. Men no longer spent all of the time in fighting or preparing to fight. They began to relieve women in the fields, and to assume more and more the heavier portion of all building operations. Women found more time for the nursery and kitchen, loom and spinning wheel.

As civilization progressed, still fewer men went away to battle, and wars became less frequent. Minds with leisure became inventive and machinery simplified the household labors of woman. The nursery was invaded, for the cry was no longer, "Give us sons, many sons," but "Give us fit sons," and the honor of mere numbers in child-bearing gave way to the distinction of quality.

Then, too, the home itself reached out beyond the pioneer clearing which formerly held all of its activities, until its interests became identified with all the problems of a society no longer bounded by family, village, tribal or even racial lines, but whose four posts were the four corners of the earth.

It is as unreasonable to insist that women in their social and political relations today remain as they were before the advent of the public bakery, the tailor shop, the candy kitchen, the public school, and the legalized saloon, as it would be to insist that they go back to the spinning wheel or assume again as a normal occupation the hod-bearing of the builder.

Civilization faces a female ultimatum today. Ah, more than that,—it is a racial ultimatum, for, just as surely as effete women produce their kind, final racial standards are fixed in the womb.

This is the ultimatum: Parasite or Partner!

Woman must be admitted on equal terms to participation in all the activities of modern society, or she must occupy an ever narrowing sphere that will crowd her at last to the soft couch of voluptuous idleness, where Grecian greatness died, and Roman splendor waned.

Do you say that woman's sphere is the home? Then what will you do with the seven million women of industry who have no homes, and who must toil under man-made discriminating laws, and for man-fixed discriminating wages? And I insist that masculine opposition to entrance of the female into public affairs is not the protest of chivalry,—men are not suggesting that the scrub-woman be eliminated, it is the woman doctor, the woman lawyer, the possible woman office-

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

WAR ON WOMEN

DR. WILLIAM T. FOSTER, President Reed College, Portland, Oregon

Excerpts from Address Delivered at the National Convention

We often hear of the declaration of war between nation and nation. We speak of the war of China against Japan. We speak of the war of democracy against militarism, but in the long run every war is fundamentally and inevitably a war against women. It is women who suffer first and suffer longest from every war. It is comparatively easy for men to go forward to the front with their comrades, under the blare of trumpets and with the impelling feeling of patriotism, and to be shot quickly and have it over with, but there remain for the women the long nights and days that lengthen into months and years of distress. Women agonize in an endeavor to take care of their little ones when those who should be by their side have been wrenched away by war. It is the women who suffer longest. They remain behind to stand the strain and the stress of the years to come when those whom they loved have been sacrificed for they know not what.

Why do we see the depreciation of the stock of the Puritans in the oldest center of civilization, in Boston, that city which was once proud to call herself the center of intellectual life? Where are those who should be there? If you want to know, look at the long line of tablets in the memorial hall of Harvard University which give you an account of one thousand men of the best blood of the United States sacrificed in the Civil War. If you want to read the story of the depreciation of the stock of the children of England, you can go to Chester and Durham and you will find the best blood of the country has been exchanged for memorial tablets. If you want to understand what war means to your daughters of the coming generations, you can go through the streets and alleys of London, Paris and Berlin and note in their asylums the riff-raff of society cast aside as unfit for the purposes of war, the moral and mental and physical cripples, all of whom have been left there by war to become the fathers of the next generation.

That is the biological law of diminishing returns from which there is no escape, and that is why women should have more to say about declarations of war. I have come to look with increasing satisfaction upon the sweep of woman suffrage because I believe that the voice of woman is needed where the interests of women are paramount. I believe that it would be impossible for this nation, or any other nation, to see clearly the meaning of child labor without the keener vision of the women. I believe it is the women in the home who have seen and still see most clearly the degradation wrought by the liquor traffic, and that therefore the liquor interests know what they are doing when they pile up their gold to defeat the efforts for woman suffrage.

It is certainly true that the men who represent "big business" do not know what the people think on all subjects. A year ago, when we were fighting for prohibition in Oregon, the Chamber of Commerce in the city of Portland, representing "big business" and supposedly the intellectual insight that goes with it, voted four to one against prohibition. That afternoon a friend of mine in the Chamber of Commerce said to me, "Well, you see now how things are going, don't you?"—for he knew that Reed College had been in the forefront of the prohibition fight and he thought he would dampen my enthusiasm a little. I replied to him, "No, I see just one thing, namely, that the members of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Portland have no conception of how people feel on this subject and they will not have until after the election." The next day after the election these same men began to have a vision and it was very difficult to find a member of the Chamber of Commerce who would admit that he had voted against prohibition.

It seems to me that in our greater and necessarily longer war against war (for I believe that prohibition will come much more quickly the country over than a sensible attitude on war and arbitration) the women of this country must accept the responsibilities of suffrage and play an increasingly important part in the matter, for I look to the women to help bring about a calmer consideration of the facts, to quietly see through those innumerable, insidious fallacies being put forth to carry on the movement for excessive appropriations for new wars. At the present time we have much frenzied talk on this subject and there seems to be an endeavor to silence any one who speaks against bigger navies and bigger armies. Any one who advocates peace is ridiculed as wanting peace at any price, and all those who are standing stanchly for the substitution of brotherly love for brute force are called unpatriotic. There are scarcely any of us who want peace at any price, there are scarcely any of us who would not fight if we found it necessary to fight for anything larger than the petty things that have caused wars in the past, but what we do ask when they ridicule us as "peace-at-any-price patriots," is what they consider the price to be and that the price be weighed calmly before we rush into war. They tell us that it is necessary for the economic development of the country that we should have larger and larger armies and navies. Through our public schools a generation has been taught the idea that trade follows the flag. It does not. Trade follows the laws of trade. What we need most is not more men of war, but more men of peace, fewer battleships and more merchant vessels. No nation can ever profit by any war. That may be laid down as a fundamental, economic principle. Economically no nation ever wins in battle. The only question is a question of relative loss. A pessimist has been defined as one who, being presented with two evils, chooses both. On this question there is no choice. It is evil on both sides. Both sides inevitably lose. A nation at war is killing its customers and jeopardizing its industries. It was only a little while ago that Europe was laughing at the United States for its policy toward Mexico. Is Europe laughing now? If Europe had pursued for two months the policy of watchful waiting there would be no war in Europe now.

Another fallacy that we are constantly hearing presented is the idea that we can settle disputes by war. The only question at issue with respect to war is whether we will arbitrate before we fight or afterwards. We must arbitrate. There is no such thing as a victory in war. You might as well ask who won in the Galveston flood, or who won in the San Francisco earthquake, or in the Titanic disaster.

There is another fallacy which I hope the keener discrimination of women and I believe their finer sense of right and wrong, will dispel, and that is the fallacy involved in the assumption that any nation can supply munitions of war for other nations and be guiltless of the results. We have heard a good deal about timid neutrality on the part of those of us who do not wish to take the side of one nation against another, but this is what I think of those men who keep their mouths closed and proceed to fill their pockets with money obtained from the manufacture and sale of ammunition with which to kill their fellow-men across the waters. Those who are profiting today by supplying the materials of warfare can be no less guilty than the men who manufacture and distribute the liquor which results in the degradation and death of their fellow-men. I cannot with all my attempts at logic see any line of demarcation between the men who kill their fellow-men by making liquor and pocketing the money for it and those who kill their fellow-men by making ammunition and pocketing the money for it.

I will tell you what seems to me to be an illustration of courageous neutrality. It is represented in a man I met down in southern California, the president of the Commonwealth Steel Company, who had the courage to refuse an order sent him for two million and a half shrapnel. If our nation were as guiltless as he, we should be in a position to demand in the name of civilization and in justice to the neutral people of the world, and particularly in justice to its women, that the present war should stop.

There is another way the women can help. We will never make much progress toward peace until a nation is willing to pay something for peace as it does for war. We have always been willing to pay money for war and for appropriations for war. We have a Secretary of the Navy and a Secretary of the Army, but we have no Secretary of Education and no Secretary of Peace. Suppose we were to take the price of one dreadnought and use it to establish a national university to which we should invite one hundred of the ablest men of the nation to study the questions of international arbitration and the futility of war. If we were to expend the money used for sending a fleet of battleships around the world to show the other nations how strong we are, in sending the greatest leaders of humanity we have, to tell of the virtues of peace, to preach arbitration and goodwill to all other nations, we would be paying something for peace. I heard one of the greatest men in Europe say that he believed that if the present war could have been postponed for ten or twenty years it would have been impossible because of the tremendous revolt against war going on in the schools and universities of the world. Let us spend more money for peace and less for war. Let our Federal government come to the position where it is willing to spend as much deliberately and constructively in the interests of peace as it now spends in the interests of the health of hogs.

Have you ever noticed that the nations which were the least prepared for war were the ones that have escaped, and the nations with the largest armies, the largest navies, the largest forts, the largest war tax, the largest war debts, were the first ones to fight? Where there are no guns, no forts, no armies, there is no war. The thousand miles between France and Germany and between Germany and Russia are the most elaborately fortified of any on the face of the earth. And there are the four thousand miles between the United States and Canada in which there is not a single fort, a single army, a single warship, and, as a consequence, there has been a century of peace between the two countries. These four thousand miles are a refutation of the theory that preparation for war brings peace. There can be no such thing as an armed peace which will last. Of this we have abundant proof in history. The states, by joint agreement, by the force of law, agree to protect each other so

(Continued on Page Seven)

CONSERVATION OF HUMAN LIFE

MRS. NANNIE WEBB CURTIS, President Texas W. C. T. U.

Address Delivered at the National Convention

We are living in an age of investigation. More and more the public mind is inclined to think out problems and demand their solution along lines of progress. Not only are moral reforms under consideration but political and social reforms also. Perhaps no line of world-wide thought—now that we are in the midst of wholesale slaughter—has become so potent, so accentuated and so necessary as the conservation of human life. Everywhere we see the sign, "Safety First." Life, human life, at last has become the asset of nations. Material wealth, natural resources, such as waterways, highways, forests and mines are no longer the nation's asset, the nation's greatest need. We at last have learned that the divine purpose concerning man in the world is to live a life and grow a soul. It is the prime function of government to give to him this opportunity. The crime of the centuries is the blighting of human life—and nations shall be called into judgment for this one sin. A nation may lose every dollar it has; its waterways may become choked and its forests devastated, but with manhood, intellectual, moral and physical, left to it its coffers will be filled, its waterways made clear, its forests reinstated.

In order that man may live and grow a soul it is necessary that he develop the "divine art, character, and the fine art of living together," for ninety-nine per cent of our joys and ninety-four per cent of our sorrows come from contact with others. Hence, whatever conserves God's purposes in a human life helps society, and whatever thwarts God's purposes hurts society.

We measure civilization by its degree of waste—its waste physically, mentally and morally, not financially. We have two and a half million children born in this country every year. One half million die before they are a year old, one and a quarter million die before their twenty-third year. One-half the people are unable to contribute their share to the country's progress because of disease; and large numbers are too poor to aid. In England one-third of the population has for years clogged the wheels of progress because of poverty. Some children in our own country were once attending a social service. They were given pictures with instructions to take them home and hang them upon the wall. The next day one little fellow came trudging back bearing his gifts. When asked by the social worker if he did not like the pictures, he replied, "Oh, yes, we did, but you see there are four other families where we live, one in each corner, and we have to live in the middle so we had no walls to hang our pictures on." No child can develop physically, mentally or morally under such conditions.

When the church awoke to its duty and put on the Christly robes of social service a new vision came to the world. In the poverty stricken homes where the lives of little children were being snuffed out; where mental and moral development was impossible, they began an investigation as to the cause of this wholesale slaughter of the innocents. Then there loomed up the mighty black specter, the fiend incarnate of world murderers —the liquor traffic— with its gruesome clutch upon these children because of drunken parents. Poverty, blindness and disease point at the demon rum as their source. One-half million dead babies in a year! Friends, the time is coming when a dead baby will be a disgrace. The time is coming when the world will know that the sins of its parents or the community in which it died are responsible. The time is coming when people will know the words of Jesus in the eighteenth chapter of St. Matthew, "For it is not the will of the Father which art in heaven that one of these little ones shall perish."

When mothers started the better babies contests it aroused the people and they asked, "Why are children born defective?" When you get people to ask definitely for an answer you get results. Why are children born defective, why are they born blind, etc., etc.? If stock and cattle raisers were continually forced to take care of blind pigs, blind calves and colts our law-making bodies would appoint a livestock commission with a large appropriation to find out the cause and remove it. Let no one believe that they would build pens and tax the people to take care of them. The unerring voice of science declares that there are only two causes for defective children—alcohol and impurity. Visit the almshouses, the insane asylums, and the homes for the feeble-minded and see the unfortunates placed there because of alcohol. The most conservative estimate indicates that sixty-five to seventy-five per cent of these are the victims of drink. Go to the jails, penitentiaries, road-gangs and convict camps and you will find seventy-five to ninety per cent of the men and women under armed guards, slaves of the state, because of alcohol. This useless, dangerous drug is licensed and protected by the state that in turn penalizes its citizens because in this boasted republic they have exercised their democratic rights of personal liberty to worship and patronize the state's pet god.

Mrs. Nannie Webb Curtis

> The soulless argument against prohibition on account of loss of revenue should not be considered for a moment by any self-respecting citizen. None but a coward would sacrifice priceless manhood and womanhood to insatiate greed and self-aggrandizement.
>
> —U. S. Congressman George J. Kindel of Colorado

Poverty in its worst form is not always the lack of bread, but the lack of opportunity. Only about one per cent of our children receive a college education. Ninety-nine per cent of them are denied this special equipment for life—many because of disease or of poverty largely caused by alcohol. What a tremendous loss of intellectual equipment to our nation—God's loss, society's loss. Society is so intricate, so firmly bound by the ties of life that no man or set of men can engage in any evil without bringing harm to others. Yet there are people so morally perverted, so intellectually senile as to claim that the red-light district is a necessary evil. There is no necessary evil. What is necessary to life is not evil and what is evil is not necessary. Yet the fact remains that this evil has laid terrible tribute upon the unborn and we are forced to make a public fight for the private right of every child —that of being well born—for every physician knows that no child can be assured of a sound heritage of mind or body whose parents, or either parent, have paralyzed their higher faculties or narcotized their systems by a drug so destructive to the protoplasm of life, the development of brain and nerve cells, as alcohol. Too long has man forced woman to weep in silence over her blind babies. Too long has she peopled the insane asylums and homes for the feeble-minded with the pangs of her body and soul while she prayed God to send the angel of death to bear away the fruit of her murdered love. Too long has her heart broken when manacles clasped the limbs of her erring child, and turned with streaming eyes from prison doors and gates of infamy as they closed forever upon her lost hopes. Too long has she gazed in abject despair upon her children clad in the rags of poverty and pinched with hunger only because man demands his personal liberty and that the red-light district shall be protected. I say to you, if any man should persist in perpetuating and protecting a breeding place for smallpox and yellow fever because of the revenue it would bring the medical profession, that man would be mobbed. If any political party protected any such place it would be hissed into oblivion by an enraged and outraged public. But I say to you, and can prove it by records, that such a place is safe and sane compared with your politically protected red-light districts and the blood-stained barrooms of our country, for they leave their scars in the blind eyes of our babies and their blighting, withering fevers in the feeble-minded and insane of our homes. We have 310,000 insane and 165,000 feeble-minded, according to some statistics. We are told that about 30,000 of these are in asylums and homes, leaving something like 280,000 of them free to multiply their kind. Add to this the hundreds of thousands of paupers, tramps, criminals and sexual perverts caused by alcohol and we face a tremendous loss of character, ability and life. Who shall say that God is a liar, and that He did not mean what He said when He declared that "not a sparrow should fall to the ground without His knowledge." How much more important is human life. God also said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." Woe to that nation that for gold and selfish lust crushes out the life, the opportunities, the moral vision of its people. We shall reap what we sow, we must pay what we owe.

Alcohol might trample on the gar-

(Continued on Page Twelve)

WOMAN'S PART IN THE WORLD'S EVANGELIZATION

MRS. ELLA M. GEORGE, President Pennsylvania W. C. T. U.

Address Delivered at the National Convention

There is no doubt in the minds of Christians as to the evangelization of the world, because we have the sure word of prophecy that "all ends of the earth shall turn to the Lord; all nations shall do Him homage." The question before us is what agencies shall be employed in bringing about this glorious day for which we labor, wait and pray. For an answer we go back to the day when our Saviour called His followers to that noted mountain of Galilee to give to them His parting command and benediction. Before leaving His disciples to join the heavenly throng, He gave to them the plan by which the world might hear the glad news of salvation and be brought into saving relationship with Jesus Christ. Through the Great Commission, he commanded those who had gathered around Him at this solemn hour to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." To whom was this command given? Was it to Peter and James and John with the rest of the twelve only, or to all that company that gathered with Him on that memorable day? We rejoice that woman was represented in that select company, and to her, as well as to the others, was given the command.

As Frances E. Willard gazed into the future, her keen eye caught the clear vision of a world redeemed from sin and sorrow, when "Jesus Christ should be recognized as King of kings and Lord of lords; when every knee should bow to Him and every tongue should confess that He is Lord to the glory of God the Father."

At the Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held at Nashville, Tennessee, in the year 1887, when this organization was in its "teens," Miss Willard declared in her annual address that the organization over which she presided had one vital organic thought, one absorbing purpose, one undying enthusiasm. "It is that Christ shall be this world's King—King of its courts, its camps, its commerce; King of its colleges and cloisters; King of its customs and constitutions; . . . Christ and his law, the true basis of government and the supreme authority in national as well as individual life."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has not left its moorings for we still cling to these eternal principles and believe that woman has an important part in bringing the world to their acceptance.

We have heard a great deal of late about woman's inability to bear arms, but God has given her the distinguished honor of bearing the army that will follow the Lord as He goes forth conquering and to conquer, and on her shoulders rests the responsibility, largely, of training the soldiers of the cross for service. She is doing this in her efforts to build up the church at home. You have never seen the work of a congregation carried on successfully without the help of woman. She is greatly in evidence in the Sabbath school and in the Missionary society. Through her plans, her contributions, and in answer to her prayers, doors have been opened and the glorious light of salvation has shined upon those who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death. Yet it is in the home that her influence is most telling. Here God has given into her hands the training of her own children. She looks after the physical needs of the household—food, clothing and the hygienic conditions. She also keeps in touch with their mental development, but she is most deeply interested in the development of the character of those committed to her care. She is fitting the future citizens who will take their places in society to stand for righteousness and truth against all odds. When the Hobson bill was before the House I wrote to a young man—a member of Congress—commending him for his stand in manfully defending the measure. In reply he said, "I owe it all to my mother. She taught me these principles." It is Mother who trains the Christian citizen, and it is Mother who inspires the young men and women who bid farewell to home and native land, old associates and all that is dear to them, to put foot on the gallant ship and cross one ocean and perhaps another to carry the glad news of salvation to those who are walking in darkness. She is constantly moulding and moulding the character of her little ones, sloughing off an excrescence here and building up a depression there with her eye fixed on the perfect model, Jesus Christ. Her desire is to fashion her little ones into His likeness.

She joins the psalmist in the request "That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." This is an impressive picture. Plants and corner-stones are both symbols of usefulness and beauty. Her desire is not so much for beauty of face and form as beauty of character.

Mrs. Ella M. George

When Jesus was on earth He made it plain that His work was not only to seek and to save the lost but to destroy the works of the devil. Woman must follow in His footsteps. Before Christ's kingdom can be established, Satan's kingdom with all its props and pillars must be destroyed. Removing the evils that stand in the way of the advancement of Christ's kingdom is a potent factor in the great work of world-evangelization. What are some of these evils? One mighty barrier to be removed is Sabbath desecration. Through greed of gain, strong corporations compel men and women to surrender their God-given day of rest and worship to worldly employments. The Sunday press, the Sunday train, the Sunday mail, and we might add, the Sunday automobile, are building great obstructions in the way of Christ's kingdom.

Another formidable enemy to be destroyed is impurity, whether it presents itself in the unholy divorce system that is spreading so rapidly throughout our land, whereby God's law of marriage is set aside and man's law set up, or polygamy, that poisonous cancer that has its headquarters in the western part of our country, but is extending its roots to every part of the land, or the vile debauchery that is in many places carried on under the sanction of law in the red light districts.

And last, but not least, we speak of the liquor traffic—the giant evil that is destroying souls, wrecking homes, and producing misery and crime wherever it exists. The liquor business hinders the work in mission fields at home and abroad. The United States sends out 13,000 barrels of whisky or rum with every missionary. Bishop Newman has written that shipboards of rum are the despair of the missionary. Rev. Walter Day of Africa, a missionary for twenty-five years, offered to come home and fight rum to the death; then to go back to black Africa to carry on his missionary work. John G. Paton came home to plead with the government at Washington to stop the rum traffic. He said, "While the church is spending precious lives and money for the evangelization of the heathen it is sad to see the enemies of the Cross following in the wake of the missionary destroying his influence, so-called Christian nations making ten drunkards to one convert." It is a sad fact that the United States spends for liquor in twenty-seven days and for tobacco in fifty-four days as much as has been spent for the spread of the gospel in eighty years. The cost of liquor in one month and twenty-seven days is three times the sum spent in the nineteenth century for mission work.

Woman has girded on the armor and gone forth in the battle against these dangerous evils. Our own organization has specialists employed who through their departments are dealing sledge-hammer blows at these evils. Every stroke counts in the evangelization of the world. We know that our efforts will be crowned with success because we are going forth under the banner of our King, who never lost a battle.

"He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat;
O be swift, my soul, to answer Him; be jubilant, my feet;
Our God is marching on."

SOCIAL EVENTS AT CONVENTION

Greatly to the regret of our generous hostesses, there was little time for the social functions which they desired to give in our honor. A most enjoyable reception took place in the parlors of the Lincoln Hotel, official convention headquarters. Frappé was served, and Miss Elizabeth Hartle on the violin and Miss Anna Stevens on the piano discoursed sweet music. In the receiving line were our hostesses and the General Officers.

Every afternoon at about four o'clock automobiles were at the door to take the visitors on sightseeing tours through the city.

MUSIC OF THE CONVENTION

A report of the National Convention would be incomplete without mention of the musical numbers on the program which were furnished by some of the finest musicians of Seattle. Of these kind friends special note should be made of Prof. Dwight Heaton Seymour, Dr. Ferdinand Dunkley, Prof. Judson W. Mather, Prof. George Haegstrom, director of the Children's Orchestra; Mme. Mary Louise Clary, Montgomery Lynch, Mrs. Ling of the Schubert Club, and Mrs. Grace R. Calhoun Seabott. Of special interest was the solo in Japanese by Mr. S. Sasaki and the selections on the harp by Mrs. Ruth Osborn Morgan and one of her little pupils.

Sunrise Reception at Riverside

General Officers Speak at Riverside, Alhambra, Pasadena and Albuquerque

On Tuesday, October 26, the day following the public meeting on the platform of the Spreckels organ at San Diego, Miss Anna A. Gordon, Mrs. Frances P. Parks, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, and Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson were the guests of Mrs. Stella B. Irvine at Riverside. Immediately after breakfast, the morning of the twenty-seventh, there was held what Miss Gordon termed a "sunrise" reception, some of the white ribboners coming twenty-five and thirty miles. All but two local unions in the county were represented in this reception. Brief talks on the coming statewide prohibition campaign were given. After this reception, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Hoge were taken by Mr. Irvine in his automobile sixty miles to a noon luncheon and reception at the home of Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry in Alhambra. The meeting in Mrs. Fry's home was an enthusiastic one. Many questions were asked and answered and a lively interest in the campaign manifested.

From Alhambra the party was taken to Pasadena, fifteen miles distant, where a big audience had assembled in the Methodist church. A program of welcome included greetings from the Young People's Branch and a message from the L. T. L. and Young Campaigners, who took an active part in the prohibition fight of a year ago. Miss Gabrella Stickney, National organizer, presided. Gracious words of appreciation were exchanged between the southern California hostesses and the General Officers, this being the last public meeting on California soil.

A party of twenty-six of the delegates to the Convention took the homeward journey in a special Pullman, with San Diego as the starting point, Miss Gordon joining the train at Los Angeles. Mrs. Julia D. Phelps, former National superintendent, was at the train to bid them Godspeed and the California friends again showered them with fruit and flowers. The party had a day of glorious sunshine at the Grand Canyon and reached Albuquerque, New Mexico, early in the afternoon of Saturday, October 30. Miss Harriet Henderson, state president, and the members of the local W. C. T. U. surprised them with a reception and banquet on Saturday afternoon, all the organizations of women being represented in this charming social affair. On Sunday the white ribbon party attended the Presbyterian church, where the pastor gave a ringing message in honor of the W. C. T. U. guests. A union mass meeting in the same church in the afternoon was well attended and a number of new members were secured for the W. C. T. U.

WAR ON WOMEN

(Continued from Page Four)

that they need not maintain separate armies for that purpose. We do not carry revolvers. We do not brandish daggers. That is an achievement of civilized nations. That is the substitution of law for what was previously the lawless rule of brute force among individuals, and what has been done from Maine to California can be done for other territory.

The United States alone is prepared for this leadership. The United States is prepared to declare to the world that we should substitute for that old slogan, "In times of peace prepare for war," the new slogan, "In times of war prepare for peace." If the great God is going to bring the hour when all nations shall lay down their arms and shall beat their swords into plowshares, He can do it only through human beings inspired by His spirit. He can do it best through the one nation which now has no quarrel with any other nation, the one nation which leads in democracy and is essentially opposed to militarism. He can do it through the individuals of this nation, but I tell you the day will come when the people who bear the burdens of war and go to the front to be shot, and send their sons and husbands to the front to be shot, will be permitted to say whether war shall be declared, and when that time comes, the vote on that question shall be cast by all the people in this country, including the women. And the plan of election shall be such that it will require the sober reflection of the people in order to declare war. But we have already developed in this country tremendous pressure of public opinion against war, and above all else we have to be thankful for the fact that we have as the president of the United States a veritable "prince of peace" who will not be disturbed. We should burn these great peace truths into the hearts and minds of the people. We should emphasize them in the public schools to the end that this nation, glorious in liberty and law-abiding, with love for humanity and with malice toward no people, shall lead in a federation of the united states of the world, which shall declare with the force of combined armament behind it, that we shall no longer crucify mankind on a cross of war.

The Onward March of Prohibition

LORA S. LaMANCE, National Organizer

It has been a long road to prohibition. One hundred and thirty years ago no one dreamed of prohibition or total abstinence. Elders frequently owned taverns where liquor was sold. Clergymen preached against the sin of over-indulgence, but themselves partook of a glass of wine. When a man married he treated all of his neighbors to rum. Whisky was provided for every house-raising, every corn shucking and every harvest field.

Appalled by the drunkenness on every hand, a band of substantial Connecticut citizens in 1787 organized the first modern temperance society. These men saw that some limit must be placed on the use of liquor, but did not wish to be considered fanatics, so they pledged themselves only against rum, brandy and whisky. They were allowed to drink wine, beer and hard cider.

For forty long years men struggled with this delusion of moderation, and the feasibility of a moderate use of wine and beer. Then came clearer vision. Total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, weak or strong, was declared. We had reached the first milestone of progress.

It was half a generation more before we saw that the saloon was making drunkards faster than we were saving them. We reached our second milestone when the temperance societies decreed that local saloons must be driven out of our local towns. Neal Dow led the next advance when he drove the saloons, and all of the saloons, out of Maine; out of the townships and counties, and out of the cities, the villages and the hamlets. Like a beacon-light Maine flashed upon the vision of the world a new conception —state-wide prohibition.

In 1874 the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized. It caught the vision of an entire nation forever free from the liquor traffic. For forty-one years the W. C. T. U. has said, "No whisky, brandy, rum, wine or beer; no winery, brewery, or distillery; no wholesale liquor house, no gallon house; no saloon; no license high or low; no beer canteen; no Gothenberg law, no dispensary, no mulct law beneath our flag, any place or anywhere. To teach men this, we have sent out prohibition speakers by the score and prohibition literature by the ton; we have bombarded legislatures and Congress; we have worked ceaselessly.

Our first efforts in early days seemed pitifully weak. Our enemies called us fools, cranks, fanatics, meddlesome and one-idead. A few men stood with us, but the majority said, "The women's hearts are all right, but they are visionary and impractical. The obstacles in the way of absolutely wiping out the liquor traffic are insurmountable. We will try an easier way. We will tie up the liquor traffic; we will put a silk cord about its neck, tether it to a stout stake and muzzle it."

So good temperance men spent a precious half century, or near it, trying to find an easy way of getting rid of the liquor traffic. They took down screens; they put music out of saloons; they passed laws to keep boys under twenty-one out of the dram-shops, and laws closing saloons on election day. That was the silk cord around the beast's neck. Local option was the stake and tether. They said to the saloon, "Hold on, you are roped off. This town does not want you. It said so. This county will not have you. Keep out." But the saloons broke all of their regulating laws. Moreover, wet towns and counties elbowed dry ones. Liquor men bootlegged all along a dry border. These halfway measures always resulted in an ever-on-hand liquor fight. Temperance forces spent time, labor and money on local option, and found the road slow, difficult and round-about. Mean-

(Continued on Page Twelve)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, November 18, 1915

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, Hartford, Wis., rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

ADDITIONAL CHANGES IN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

National Superintendents

Institutes—Mrs. Lettie Hill May, 5640 Maple Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Sabbath Observance—Mrs. F. W. Heidel, Valley City, North Dakota

The appearance of the picture of the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the cover page of the Western Christian Advocate with the leaders of the Anti-Saloon League and under the heading, "The Anti-Saloon League of America," has misled some of its readers into thinking that the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has united with the brother organization. We are sure our good friend, the editor of the Advocate, had no such thought in mind, but through an unintentional oversight failed to make the headlines sufficiently inclusive to cover both the women's as well as the men's organization.

PERSONAL MENTION

Among the recent visitors at National Headquarters were Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, who spent Sunday, November 14, in Evanston; Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp and Mrs. Julia R. Gunn of Kentucky who stopped on their way from the Pacific coast; Mrs. S. Anna Bush and her daughter, Miss Florence I. Bush, representatives of the W. C. T. U. in the Holy Land and more recently in Egypt.

FOUND AT THE NATIONAL CONVENTION

A pair of gold-rimmed bow glasses, in a case bearing the name of a Milwaukee (Wis.) oculist, were found in the Convention church. The spectacles were brought to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and upon identification will be returned to the owner.

National Constitutional Prohibition Meetings for December

Note on your calendar for December six important dates:

December 2—To be observed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in every city and town as a day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition.

December 3—Meeting in Washington of the committee of nineteen, leaders of the allied temperance forces, who will confer concerning phraseology of the amendment which is to be presented to Congress.

December 5—The ministers of the country have been asked to offer special prayer in their churches for the Sixty-fourth Congress, which will convene on the day following, that its members may be divinely guided in their action upon the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition.

December 6—Convening of Sixty-fourth Congress.

December 12—Mass meetings to be held in the city of Washington, and in every city of the United States.

The National Temperance Council also meets in Washington in December, but the date has not yet been decided upon. It will be given later.

Program for National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day, December 12

At the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Seattle plans were adopted providing for the holding of mass meetings in every city and town in the United States on Sunday, December 12. It was also provided that at these meetings a resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition be adopted, and telegrams be sent from these gatherings to Senators and Representatives in Congress, urging their support of the resolution. It was suggested that offerings be taken at that time for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, and the money be sent through the regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall forward one-half of the amount to the National treasurer. The following program is suggested for use at the December 12 meetings which can be held either in the afternoon or evening, and should, if possible, be a union meeting of all the churches.

PROGRAM

Opening Hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers"

Scripture Reading, Psalm 94; 2 Kings, 6:8-18

Invocation

Special Music, Y. P. B. Chorus

Reading of Lillian M. N. Stevens' Proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition by a member of the Young People's Branch

"In the name of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we hereby make this proclamation for a Great Crusade to carry the vital truth to the people themselves in all lands, and through them to place prohibition in the organic law of all nations and ultimately in the organic law of the world; and to this high end we invoke the guidance and blessing of Almighty God and the co-operation of the men and women of all lands who love their fellowmen, and

"To America, the birthplace of the local, state, National and World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we hereby proclaim that within a decade prohibition shall be placed in the Constitution of the United States; and to this end we call to active co-operation all temperance, prohibition, religious, and philanthropic bodies; all patriotic, fraternal and civic associations, and all Americans who love their country."

Singing, "The Fight is On," by young women representing the nineteen prohibition states, each wearing the pennant of her state. They should march into the church to music

Address, "Triumphant Progress Toward National Constitutional Prohibition"

Prayer, For the spirit of God to rest upon all the people that they may feel a personal responsibility in making the appeal to Congress for National Constitutional Prohibition through letters, telegrams, petitions and resolutions, and for members of Congress individually and collectively, that inspired by patriotism and true citizenship they may work and vote for the submission of the Prohibition Amendment

Special Music

Short Addresses (five minutes each)—Campaign Essentials:
(a) Dependence upon God
(b) Consecration
(c) Unity of Effort
(d) Enthusiasm

Offering for Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund

Address, "Personal Responsibility for Final Victory"

Adoption of Resolution:

"Be it resolved by this meeting that it is now the paramount public duty of Congress to submit an amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition to the states for ratification or rejection and to do this at the earliest practicable date.

Adopted by.....representing

.....people.....191

.....
(Signature of president or chairman)

County..... City..... State.....

(To be sent, when signed, to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill.)

Demonstration by Young Campaigners for Prohibition

A company of twenty or more children in Y. C. P. regalia march down the aisles singing "Saloons Must Go" or "The Children's Happy Day."

Brief Talk to the Children, "God's Call to the Boys and Girls of Today"

Singing, "America"

Note:—The regalia for the Young Campaigners for Prohibition, pennants for the young women who are to represent the nineteen prohibition states and literature for use in preparing the program can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill.

Y. C. P. regalia, button, cap and pennant, twenty cents for a set of one each; for a set of twenty-five pennants, caps and buttons, the price is $4, and for 100 sets, $15. Paper pennants to be worn by the nineteen prohibition states, twenty-five cents per set. Copy of Proclamation and leaflet on Lillian Stevens' Campaign Fund and other helpful literature sent on application, which should be accompanied by a two-cent stamp. Copies of this number of THE UNION SIGNAL can be obtained at the special price of $1.50 per hundred; two cents each.

ONVENTION SIDELIGHTS

Sixty-eight of the pulpits of Seattle ere filled by white ribbon speakers on nday, October 10. At these services 9 regular new members were secured d eleven honorary members. The colctions amounted to over $85.

Most significant of the interest in probition in the Northland, was the large legation from Alaska, which included l but one of the officers of the territorial . C. T. U.

The evangelistic services held the foreon and afternoon of the Saturday preding the National Convention were ell attended and very helpful. They ere in charge of Mrs. Ella L. Kroft of diana, in the absence of Mrs. Mary E. uhl, National Evangelistic superintendnt, who was unable, on account of illess, to be present.

Wide-spread interest in the National onvention was manifested by greetings eceived from hosts of friends in the nited States and abroad and from sisr organizations.

The convention was enthusiastic in its ppreciation of the faithful and satisactory service rendered by Miss Kathrine K. Adams in the office of the Naonal treasurer since Mrs. Hutchinson's ome-going.

The membership awards to the state, ounty and local union making the largest ain in membership, were as follows: Wyoming, for 111 per cent gain, 25 Union Signal subscriptions; Washington county, Virginia, 509 per cent gain, 5 subscriptions; Ray, North Dakota, 509 er cent gain, 10 subscriptions.

The Y. P. B. prizes for pro rata gain n membership were as follows: New York, 25 subscriptions; Ohio, 15 subscripions; Missouri, 10 subscriptions.

The roof garden of the Lincoln Hotel—Convention Headquarters—was a delight o all who could find a moment to enjoy ts beautiful flowering plants and shrubs nd to look out upon Puget Sound and the near-by mountain ranges from this point of vantage. Indeed, in every respect Lincoln Hotel, managed by Mrs. Frank Brown, proved a most restful and delightful hostelry for attendants at a National Convention.

The new stereopticon slides of the National W. C. T. U. were shown in four illustrated lectures given on three occasions, immediately preceding the evening meetings, the subjects and speakers being: "Modern View of an Old Problem," Mrs. L. O. Middleton; "John Barleycorn Must Go," Mrs. Lora S. La Mance; "Our Panama-Pacific Exhibit," Miss Mary E. Brown, director; "An Educational Appeal," Mrs. Ella B. Black, superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People.

Mrs. Sarah Spence Cairns

Old age and infancy were most beautifully linked together with the bonds of consecration at one of the meetings of the convention, when Mrs. Sarah Spence Cairns, the mother of Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, and her descendants even unto the third generation, stood together on the platform while the two infant great-grandchildren of Mrs. Cairns were made white ribbon recruits. The occasion was the ninety-second anniversary of Mrs. Cairns, and by her side stood her son, Rev. George Robert Cairns, pastor of the Temple Baptist church of Seattle, his daughter and a niece, and their two infant children. Mrs. Cairns has been an enthusiastic temperance worker for three score years and ten, and her face was radiant with joy at this consecration of the youngest members of her family to the cause she loves.

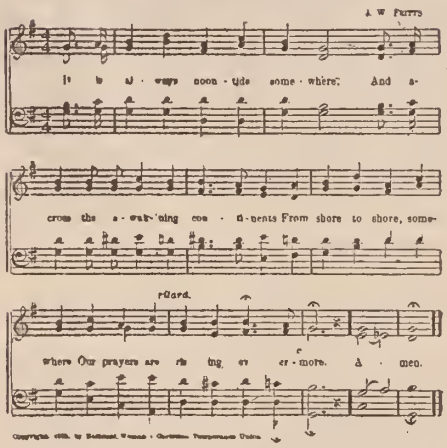
YOUNG CRUSADER DEMONSTRATION

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, editor-in-chief of The Young Crusader, in the absence of Miss Windsor Grow, managing editor, gave a report of the year's work, awarded the premiums and made an eloquent appeal for increased subscriptions. A generous response in subscriptions and pledges was received. The "Young Crusader Bonnet" song was most delightfully sung by four charming young girls in Crusader bonnets.

WHITE RIBBON RECRUITS TO THE TEMPERANCE ARMY

There seemed to be an almost continuous procession of mothers with little ones whom they desired to dedicate to the cause as white ribbon recruits. There was not a day of the Convention that some of these children did not appear on the platform and they furnished some of the most interesting and amusing incidents of the great meeting. On the day when the platform was piled high with Washington fruit, Miss Gordon presented to each child a rosy-cheeked apple. One sturdy little tot, so small that in order to be seen he had to stand on the presiding officer's table, caused a ripple of laughter by facing the audience and looking it squarely in the eye while he munched at an immense apple nearly half as large as his own little head. Among the recruits was a child born in Alaska, by name, Lillian Alaska Michener, daughter of one of the state officers of the Alaska W. C. T. U.; also a baby of Indian parents.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Eva Munson Smith, Springfield, Ill., a pioneer white ribboner. Mrs. Smith had a remarkable record as a medal contest worker, having conducted hundreds of successful contests. She was a woman of literary and musical talent, her best known work being "Women in Sacred Song," a volume of poems and music by women.

Mrs. Frances Neal, Minneapolis, Minn. Mrs. Neal, who was in her eighty-eighth year, was a member of the first W. C. T. U. organized in Minneapolis, in 1877, and attended the organization of the state union. Until about a year ago she was the president of the Lucy Hayes W. C. T. U., and always a faithful and tireless worker for the cause.

Mrs. S. A. Downing and Mrs. A. V. Lester, charter members of Central union of Portland, Oregon, and true-hearted women who willingly did the everyday duties which have made the organization a power. Mrs. Lester was a Crusader in Beatrice, Nebr.

Mrs. Harriet Morrison, mother of Mrs. Emma J. Holman, president Tolland county (Conn.) W. C. T. U. and a faithful member of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Martha Kyle Kennedy, College Springs, Iowa, a charter and life member of the local union and a faithful and devoted white ribboner.

OUR FIELD WORKERS

An Evening with Organizers and Lecturers

Invaluable foundation work is being done week in and week out in the most difficult fields by our National lecturers, organizers, and evangelists who are so busy making history that they neglect to publish abroad what they are doing.

Tuesday evening was devoted to the experiences and messages of these heroic sentiment-makers. Mrs. Frances P. Parks, superintendent of Organization, presided, and after most inspiring music introduced the organizers. The following gave in epigrammatic sentences some of the results of their varied experiences: Mrs. Ellen Dayton Blair, Miss Rose Davison, Mrs. Emma Graves Dietrick, Mrs. Maudo Greene, Mrs. Helen Harford, Mrs. Matilda Patterson, Mrs. Jackson Silbaugh, Mrs. Marcia A. B. Smith, Rev. Etta Shaw and Miss Ellen Stone.

Short addresses followed by Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, Miss Roena Shaner and Mrs. LaMance.

DEPARTMENT INSTITUTES DISCUSS PRACTICAL PROBLEMS

KEYNOTE: WHAT NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION WILL DO FOR OUR DEPARTMENT

Discussion as to the best methods of work along department lines and in suffrage and prohibition campaigns took place in the institutes held on the forenoons of October 12, 13 and 14, in the Convention church. Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, chairman of the Board of Superintendents, presided at these meetings.

On Tuesday morning, the following superintendents, taking as their common theme, formative foundations, spoke: Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, Mr. W. A. Loyne, for Mrs. Loyne, Mrs. Sara L. Oberholtzer, Mrs. Adelia E. Carman and Mrs. Edith Smith Davis.

Advance Steps

Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National Superintendent Sunday School Work

The temperance educational work of the Sunday School department has been a great factor in the onward march towards National Constitutional Prohibition. The aim of this department is to teach God's truth in such a way that young people will make for themselves a prohibitory law and be ready to stand, as a righteous duty, for the embodiment of prohibition in the laws of state and nation. The children in the day schools hear the voice of science. In the Sunday schools, they hear the voice of God as he warns them in his Word concerning the use of anything which defiles and destroys the body or mars the beauty of the image of God in us. His warning and the penalty are given in no uncertain words. Step by step, the advance has been made until we can truthfully affirm that no department of the church is doing more for temperance and prohibition than the Sunday school, in both educational and practical ways. We might quote from Marion Lawrence, who affirms that the Sunday school is a mighty institution for the promotion of the temperance reform. The record of the year just closed is one of advancement and achievement. The Sunday School department records a total pledged membership of 1,845,944—an advance of 224,123 members of the Sunday schools which have this year signed the pledge; a total of 16,271 entire families pledged to total abstinence through the home and temperance departments, which is an advance of 7,214; 5,226,561 pages of temperance literature have been circulated in the Sunday schools, which is an advance of 470,789. There have been given in the Sunday schools 17,142 temperance addresses, an advance of 6,459. There has been an unprecedented demand for programs and material for the observance of World's Temperance Sunday, November 14.

The Sky Pilot

Rev. W. A. Loyne, in Place of Mrs. W. A. Loyne, National Superintendent Work Among Lumbermen and Miners

No department of work connected with the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union so nearly measures up to the name of Sky Pilot as the work among woodsmen, miners and quarrymen, numbering more than four million in the woods, mines and quarries of our great country. We reach every nook and corner, and we are seeking the last man and the man farthest down to bring him back to the fold of purity, light and heaven. In many parts of our country the industry represented by our department constitutes the leading business of the city and state, and this is especially true of the cities and towns in the northwest. We stand for the highest sentiment and life and seek to carry the truth to camp and mine in the fairest and most Christlike manner. It is very true, as one of our leading workers well said, "Our men drink wet, but they vote dry." It is true in the states that have recently entered the dry list that the work done by our noble men and women in reaching the men in camp and mine has had much to do with the results. The men do not want the saloon, they do not want the house of shame, they do not want the den of gambling and its kindred evils. These things are forced upon them, and when the saloon goes out the other foul spots of death go with it. Our work is to kill the saloon. The foe of our men is the saloon, and this department works first and last and all the time for its utter and everlasting destruction.

The Status of Thrift

Mrs. Sara Louisa Oberholtzer, National Superintendent School Savings and Thrift

The standard of thrift has greatly advanced and is now widely recognized. The superintendents of schools are in active sympathy with the work. The American Bankers' Association has co-operated in exchanging literature and forwarding inquiries. It has used our literature in formulating its plans and is most courteous personally. The New York City board of education passed a resolution approving of the general introduction of school savings banks in its public schools in 1913. Several state libraries have bound files of Thrift Tidings on their shelves and express much appreciation for it. This department tends to direct the pennies of the children into better channels, away from the moving picture craze, cheap candy, soda water and the early extravagancies which lead to waste. The total amount saved since the work was taken up in 1891, is over $15,000,000.

Questions Answered

Mrs. Adelia E. Carman, National superintendent Medal Contest department, reported as her contribution to the institute program that 500 more medal contests than in any previous year had been held, the states engaged in prohibition campaigns holding the largest number of contests. A demonstration of the value of the Medal Contest department was given in the grand diamond medal contest, held Wednesday evening of the Convention.

After National Constitutional Prohibition—What?

Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, National Superintendent Scientific Temperance Instruction

One of the old writers used to say, 'Truth lies in a well," and to carry out the metaphor we may justly say that "logic does supply us with steps whereby we may go down to reach the water." The truth concerning temperance has been in a deep well for generations and there have been many logical steps that we have been forced to take in order to reach the water of truth. The first step is the scientific investigation which has shown the poisonous nature of alcohol. The second step demonstrates the effect of the poison upon various organs of the body. The third step makes clear the fact that alcohol has special affinity for the brain and therefore affects the moral character of man. The fourth step has proven that a drug that affects the organs of the body and injures moral character must render less efficient the user of it, and, therefore, its use becomes an economic problem. The fifth step places this experimental truth with all its resultant conclusions in a form whereby the largest number of people may be instructed, that is, in text books containing scientific facts concerning alcohol. The sixth step is the placing of the facts in the school curriculum and making the text books and the scientific charts a part of public temperance education. The public school is the most democratic institution in the world and is more than that; it is, as Dr. Newell D. Hillis says, "the machine which takes in all kinds of material and grinds it out made over into good American citizens." In this fact we see the possibility of our reaching the final step to our goal.

At the Wednesday session of the institute, Miss Mary E. Brown presided, and talks were given with the general theme, social service, by Mrs. M. B. Horning, Mrs. L. B. Smith, Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, Mrs. Emma L. Starrett, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher and Mrs. Ella Kroft.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, National Superintendent of Prison Reform

The cost of crime is most appalling. Statistics show that the annual expense for maintaining police and criminal courts, for prisons, jails and like institutions is two hundred million dollars. The estimated amount that is annually abstracted or stolen by thieves, burglars and embezzlers is four hundred million, making an aggregate of six hundred million. This of course cannot cover the loss of life, the ruined character, homes devastated and souls destroyed by crime. One of the live questions of the day is how can crime be lessened or prevented? We must emphasize not education, not manual training, not alone moral teaching that is needed, but the cleaning up of these dirty, filthy barbaric relics of the dark ages that crowd our fair land from shore to shore. Is your county blameless? If you do not know, will you investigate and find out?

Quiz on Methods

Mrs. L. B. Smith, National superintendent of Rescue Work, put her address in the form of questions and answers, which brought out many facts concerning the work and methods of doing it.

The reply to the question, "Is there any common ground between right and wrong?" was "Yes, battleground," always a conflict between virtue and vice. Other questions brought out these facts: Twenty-seven states have the "Health Marriage Certificate" law. Twenty-one states have the Red Light Injunction and Abatement laws. Nearly all the states have a more or less drastic law against the white slave traffic. Mrs. Smith said the requisites of reform workers must be faith in God, in humanity and in themselves. They must know the needs of the community, then have a willingness to do the right thing to meet those needs.

Over $1,000,000 has been raised this year to maintain rescue homes and other phases of the work.

How To Win

Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, National Superintendent Social Meetings and Red Letter Days

In the department of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days we have unlimited opportunities to promote sociability among our workers, to promulgate the gospel of total abstinence, to arouse public sentiment in favor of prohibition, to spread the cause of purity, and to win active and honorary members to assist us in all of the endeavors of our organization. No success can be attained without earnestness, consecration, labor and interest on the part of the individual worker. Agitation and education are essential for "Information begets enthusiasm; enthusiasm begets inspiration, and inspiration begets action."

Only One Vote

Mrs. Emma L. Starrett, National Superintendent of Christian Citizenship

Whether the citizen is the boy of twenty-one, the older man, the naturalized foreigner or the enfranchised woman, the ballot is a great responsibility. The incentives driving the voter to an intelligent use of the ballot are twofold: that of service to the state and that of service to himself. Both patriotism and self-interest demand of him an earnest consideration of the problem of government, and the expression of his opinion at the polls. Both men and women know far too little about the affairs of government. Let us refuse to be ignorant of the things that concern the country. Let us study the problems which affect the health and the happiness of even the least of us. The citizen who would become a valuable elector must realize his responsibility. Citizenship is both a right and a duty. To divide the one from the other is impossible. In the measure we perform our duty as citizens, we shall enjoy our rights as citizens.

"The Man Behind the Gun"

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, was introduced as a friend of the man behind the gun. She told of the mighty, far-reaching work of the department and urged the "mothering" of the young soldiers and sailors in our army and navy. She presented the newly organized Christian Temperance Union at the Soldiers' Home for the state of Washington.

"Safety First"

Mrs. Ella L. Kroft, National Superintendent Work Among Railway Men

The "Safety First" idea has taken such a hold upon business corporations, railway companies, etc., that we find in factories, experts employed at large salaries to plan safety devices for the employes. Railroads have Safety commissions composed of their most intelligent and up-to-date men, to provide for safety of both property and life. The cost in money value alone, to say nothing of precious lives, has become too great for corporations to pass unnoticed, hence the "Safety First" movement all over our land. Our faith reaches to the glad day when the Stars and Stripes shall float over a land free from the taint of liquor, when prohibition shall wave a white flag of "Safety Always."

Thursday forenoon, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns presiding, the following National superintendents spoke on their respective departments: Mrs. Ella B. Black, Miss Mary E. Brown, Mrs. D. K. Livingston, Mrs. Harriet Pritchard, Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay and Miss Lella M. Sewall.

Through a Policewoman's Eyes

Miss Mary E. Brown, National Superintendent Curfew and Policewomen

To the casual observer the policewoman's eyes are not different from eyes of other women, but they have a trick of seeing many things which are entirely invisible to others. As of old wrongdoers love darkness rather than light, but the eyes of the policewoman penetrate the darkness, see the dangers lurking for unwary feet, and protection is provided by well enforced curfew laws. Officers of the law so continually come in contact with violators of the statutes that the tendency is to become coarse and indifferent. The eyes of the policewoman penetrate the outer appearances and see the possible redemption of the dissolute and vile, while her presence among the members of the department tends to elevate the moral standards of men. Her eyes peer into the future and discern a good, glad day when every community shall be cared for by both men and women officers, who are brothers and sisters to the weak, the sinning, and the unfortunate.

"We Are No More Strangers"

Mrs. Ella B. Black, National Superintendent of Work Among Foreign Speaking People

According to figures made public by the Department of Commerce at Washington, D. C., July 2, immigration to this country during the last fiscal year was reduced to the lowest mark for sixteen years. This was due to the European war. The total number of immigrants arriving during the year was but 456,887 compared to 1,435,310 for the previous year. More than 2,700 were refused admittance, thus reducing the total admission of aliens to less than 430,000. The number of men seeking citizenship papers, however, is many times that of any previous year—235,000 were granted in Pennsylvania alone. The work of the W. C. T. U. is not only to enlighten our young Americans along temperance lines, but to help the men become good citizens, the women to become better mothers, and to make the pathway safer for the children. That the better class of our nation realize the importance of helping these people become useful citizens was demonstrated by the interest shown in "Americanization Day."

The Woman Voter

Mrs. Deborah K. Livingston, National Superintendent Franchise

The liquor traffic realizes that when women are enfranchised it has met its Waterloo, because Christian women will say, "John Barleycorn Must Go." There are three things always to be considered in a campaign: Prayer, publicity and program. Three things you must always do: Hold meetings, distribute literature and secure men to stand in favor of the measure. To distribute literature, go where people are,—conventions, fairs, etc. Ask of influential organizations opportunity to speak at their meetings. It is never wise to have prohibition and suffrage campaigns in the same year, if it can be avoided. When you have won the ballot for women you are more fully equipped for a campaign for prohibition. When a woman begins to think, there is hope. The biggest, brainiest, finest women in the United States are out for woman suffrage. The best kind of outdoor meetings are called together in public squares where people congregate.

A Poster Campaign

Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, National Superintendent Fairs and Open Air Meetings

Americans, more than any other people, are given to demonstrations. They voice their approval by a show of some kind, they stimulate trade by an exhibit, they invite competition by a display of wares, assembling the best of all products and judging of their merits. Our "business" is to save humanity from the curse of alcohol, to correct the evils of this generation caused by alcohol, so that the next generation will have keener intellects, cleaner bodies and purer minds. What have we to advertise? A clean body, a pure heart, a white life for two, and the equality of the sexes, with a guarantee of happiness in this life and a home in heaven assured. The poster is our "voiceless speech." It is brief and to the point. Thousands of them have been speaking for us from billboards, trees, shops and windows. Give them a place in the open to advertise your business—your business of saving boys and girls, of redeeming the race, of making the way easier for little feet, of preparing a better place for the unborn. The wholesome influence created by the department at fairs and open air meetings, and the trite sayings of the poster are helping very materially to bring about National Prohibition.

Safeguarding Our Pleasures

Mrs. Harriet S. Pritchard, National Superintendent Work for the Promotion of Purity in Literature and Art

Every state union should have its state law against obscene literature and art printed and copies placed in the hands of every woman in every union who will visit the officials, present them with copies, and request that the law be enforced. Every paper and magazine coming into the home should be requested to remove liquor advertisements from its columns. Let us substitute good for evil. In our public schools the board can have excellent educational, temperance and prohibition films and slides exhibited at small cost. The board of education of Montclair, N. J., has already used moving pictures and has decided to have such an exhibition twice a month for five months as a regular feature in certain of its schools. It will cost about $450 the first five months and $270 afterwards.

Friends in Need

Lella M. Sewall, National Superintendent Flower Mission and Relief Work

Who are these "friends in need?" Where do we look for them? They are the neighbors across the street, the children in the street, the neighbor across the continent, invalids in their homes and hospitals, people in high places and low places, in prisons, jails and all public institutions. So many of these "friends in need" do we discover in the dark places of our large communities, up winding, rickety stairs, in the back garret room where, perhaps, God's bright sunshine never penetrates and cheer is an almost unknown quantity. Here is where the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work finds its place in God's great plan for the uplift of humanity, seeking these "friends in need" and ministering to their varied wants.

Northern and Southern California W. C. T. U. observed Flower Mission day, June 9, by distributing at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition and at the Panama-California Exposition hundreds of bouquets to the general public and to the employes of the expositions. At San Diego 350 bouquets were sent to the United States Marines encamped on the Exposition grounds. The department of Flower Mission and Relief Work has contributed to the relief of the suffering Belgians both money and clothing.

MAKE CHRIST KING, COMBINED

(Orchestrated)

Just Published

Edited by

Prof. E. O. Excell, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Dr. H. W. Stough, Dr. M. H. Lyon and 70 other leading evangelists.

BIEDERWOLF

EXCELL

The Latest, Best and Most Popular Hymn Book

Combines the best songs in "Make Christ King" and the "New Make Christ King," with the latest and best copyright hymns.

Regardless of expense, the best song book ever published. Send 15c for sample copy.

THE GLAD TIDINGS PUB. CO. Lakeside Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

STOUGH

LYON

Some Reasons Why We Shall Win

ROENA E. SHANER, National Organizer

Our sainted Lillian M. N. Stevens, just before her soul was ready to wing its flight into the beautiful beyond, looked out with prophetic vision and said, "I know we are to win."

Some of the reasons why we shall win are these: The educational world and its workers are with us. For years, through our Scientific Temperance Instruction department young people in our schools and colleges have been taught the real nature and effects of alcohol. A thorough understanding of the fact that alcohol is a poison and nothing but a poison means a short step not merely to total abstinence but to votes for prohibition.

We have the press with us to a greater extent than ever before. We've traveled a long way since the time when a little squib about one-thirty-second of an inch long in an obscure corner of the paper was the only mention made of our work to this good day when temperance news is gladly sought and published. Many of our leading papers and practically all of the leading magazines now refuse to take liquor advertisements and in many cases editorial space is devoted to discussions favorable to our cause.

The medical world is with us. Scientific investigation by individuals and organizations in the realm of medicine regarding the nature and effects of alcohol and the heredity evils resulting therefrom has materially aided us. In fact, the recent decision that whisky and brandy are neither a medicine nor a drug is going to be of great value in our campaign against liquor.

Big business is realizing that it has found a great foe in alcohol. Heads of great corporations everywhere realize that indulgence in liquor unfits employes for efficient service. Many of these men are not only demanding total abstinence of their employes but have caught the vision that in order to be consistent they must help to abolish temptations to drink and thus give their employes a fair chance to meet the demands made of them. Again, business men are realizing that no one can spend money for booze and at the same time have it to purchase the necessities of life; also that the increased taxation resulting from the evils of the liquor traffic greatly overbalances the amount of revenue received from the traffic.

Wage-earners and all who stand for the best interests of the laboring class are learning that the saloon is not the best friend of the workingman but is his worst enemy. Many leaders of the great union labor movement in our country are outspoken in their condemnation of John Barleycorn.

We have enlisted the children and young people in Loyal Temperance Legions, as Young Campaigners and in Young People's Branches of the W. C. T. U.

Women are obtaining the ballot. Everywhere the majority of mothers and mother-hearted women are using the franchise to overthrow the accursed liquor trade. Of women in practically every equal suffrage state it may well be said,

"Mary had a little vote
Which roamed the state about,
And everywhere that vote got in,
John Barleycorn got out."

The church is measuring up more splendidly than ever before in the history of this great reform. Not only have hundreds of church organizations passed ringing resolutions for National Constitutional Prohibition, but backed them up by active service.

Last, but by no means least, we are sure to win because of the splendid spirit of co-operation manifested all along the line. Not merely the various temperance organizations and practically all of the churches, but very largely all organizations working for the uplift of humanity are united in this determined warfare to win National Constitutional Prohibition. Is there one here who has not enlisted? If so, don't you want a part in this glorious fight? I don't know how you feel about it, but I can tell you in a few words how I feel. I tell you the light on the face of Jesus Christ is going to shine more brightly because over on the other shore some one is going to come to us, take us by the hand and say, "You did what you could to overthrow the liquor traffic and the traffic in women. You gave me a fair chance to become a sober man or a respectable woman and I'm in heaven tonight because of what you did." God help us all to line up or to re-consecrate ourselves to this blessed cause and help to bring the day "when every home shall be protected and sweet; when everybody's loved ones shall be safe upon the street."

ONWARD MARCH OF PROHIBITION

(Continued from Page Seven)

while the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and our men friends, like-minded, attacked the obstacles in the pathway of straight-out prohibition. They blazed a way through. They tunneled the rock. They bridged the gaps. They marched by the compass. By and by they tunneled through! Some bad road is still ahead, but the worst has been overcome. The goal of National Constitutional Prohibition is in sight.

The liquor traffic is doomed. Its day of judgment is at hand. It has no escape. It is doomed by the immutable law of retribution—"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The saloon has sown to the wind and it will reap of the whirlwind. It is doomed by the judgment of God.

CONSERVATION OF HUMAN LIFE

(Continued from Page Five)

ments of morality and social relations till doomsday and it would not worry industrial leaders or war lords, but when alcohol begins to distress and harass the great pet mascot, efficiency, drastic measures must be taken, and this has come to pass. Yes, when wealth and power began to have their wings clipped and the old bird of prosperity and pride began to lower her flight, then nations could see. It took the fierce competition in business and a titanic struggle of arms to sober the world, to show man what science and humanity had long declared, "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." The great revolution in public sentiment these recent days is but a culmination of patient seed-sowing and God's answer to prayer.

The handwriting is on the wall. Today we have nineteen states that either by vote or statutory enactment have declared against the liquor traffic. Since last we met the National Congress has given a majority for national prohibition. In fact, in almost every law-making body in the world the liquor traffic has been soundly condemned. We are taught that there shall be a new earth. I believe that when the cannon in this European struggle is silent that declaration will have come to pass. New boundaries will be made, new conditions will have arisen, new problems will seek solution and new international complications adjustment. The world in all its phases will be changed. I believe it will mean the death of militarism in Europe—the disarmament of nations. For centuries Europe in her greed for gain and love of power has taxed her resources and debauched her citizens till God called her to settle her account and the angel of death thrust in his sickle and the black war horse trampled down his millions. This titanic struggle called for the strength of the nations physical and financial. The flashing lightning of truth and judgment reveal the dark specter of drink like a hideous menace grinning at their national destruction. The call was for men with clear brains, steady nerves and strong muscles in a deadly encounter. Instead there stood forward millions of weak alcoholics. It was enough to stagger the war lords. It was enough to make them sweep the accursed thing from their country, and it was God's judgment when they declared against it. What effect will this have on America? This nation is now eighty per cent dry as to geographical area. More than sixty-five per cent of the people have abolished the saloon by law. Shall we press forward at this opportune time or shall we bow to the golden calf and forget our duty to God? This is a vital question. There are one million scarlet women, driven out by the scourge of war in Europe, waiting for transports to come to America. Then there are the drunkards, the thugs, the bums and the gamblers. The unfit of that distressed part of the world turn their hungry gaze toward America. Shall we meet them with the Bible or the bottle? When I think of the thousands of unfit and malicious people being dumped upon us I am forced to say our only safety is National Constitutional Prohibition or we too shall be called to judgment. God help us to get the vision and turn to our duty and to our God. God help us to put aside petty strife and vain ambitions and be willing to serve just anywhere so we serve acceptably till our nation shall at last have entered the Eden of woman's dreams where no serpent crawls, where we may raise our young in safety, where mother-love shall welcome the children of the future to an heritage of blood and brawn and brain; where the angel of peace and safety shall guard forever America's portals—redeemed forever from rum's dominion.

CHANGE

Quit Coffee and Got Well

A woman's coffee experience is interesting. "For two weeks at a time I have taken no food but skim milk, for solid food would ferment and cause such distress that I could hardly breathe at times, also excruciating pain and heart palpitation and all the time I was so nervous and restless.

"From childhood up I had been a coffee and tea drinker and for the past 20 years I had been trying different physicians but could get only temporary relief. Then I read an article telling how some one had been helped by leaving off coffee and drinking Postum and it seemed so pleasant just to read about good health I decided to try Postum.

"I made the change from coffee to Postum and there is such a difference in me that I don't feel like the same person. We all found Postum delicious and like it better than coffee. My health now is wonderfully good.

"As soon as I made the shift to Postum I got better and now my troubles are gone. I am fleshy, my food assimilates, the pressure in the chest and palpitation are all gone, my bowels are regular, have no more stomach trouble and my headaches are gone. Remember I did not use medicines at all—just left off coffee and used Postum steadily." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

Snap-shot of Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp and Mrs. Nettie Helenbeck, taken at Seattle Convention, following their introduction as representatives of the Prohibition party

KENTUCKY HOLDS JUBILANT CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The thirty-fifth annual convention of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., which met in Bowling Green, was a noteworthy occasion. The welcome to the city was gracious. Hearts, homes, churches and schools were opened to the visiting white ribboners and nothing that could contribute to their comfort was left undone. Four general officers, two Branch secretaries, twenty-two district presidents, ten state superintendents and many interested, alert, consecrated women were present, making a total of 138 voting delegates. Reports showed progress along all lines of work, and the new year was begun with every encouragement for the early advent of state-wide prohibition.

A veritable jubilee over the progress of the W. C. T. U. was welcome night with its cordial, inspiring addresses and happy, gracious responses. The annual address of the state president, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, was full of knowledge and power. The speakers, Mrs. Beauchamp, Dr. Carolyn Geisel, Col. George W. Bain and Rev. L. L. Pickett, delighted and inspired their audiences. The mayor of Bowling Green declared, after hearing Mrs. Beauchamp's address Sunday morning, that her sermon was worth one thousand dollars to the church in which she spoke.

Colonel Bain twice addressed magnificent audiences in the White Temple, the new Baptist church of Bowling Green. He made a remarkable impression on his hearers, especially the young men who were fortunate enough to hear him.

Dr. Carolyn Geisel spoke on "The Business of Motherhood," and delegates and visitors were loud in their praises of her. Rev. L. L. Pickett, candidate for governor of Kentucky on the prohibition party ticket, on two occasions spoke to appreciative audiences.

With the exception of the recording secretary, to which office Mrs. Ludie Day Pickett was elected as successor to Mrs. Lizzie K. Myall, the officers were all re-elected, as follows: President, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp; vice-president, Mrs. Julia R. Gunn; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Anna B. Wheeler; treasurer, Mrs. Norah B. Taylor.

ECHOES OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

All things worked together to make the annual convention of the North Carolina W. C. T. U. successful. Most cordial welcomes were extended by Governor Locke Craig, Mayor James, the physicians, the Anti-Saloon League and the local union. The consecration service conducted the first morning by Mrs. Mary E. Cartland, former state president, was indeed impressive. Much time was given to the discussion of special department work and there was a medal contest, at which Miss Gladys Young carried off the honors.

Rev. R. L. Davis, president of the state Anti-Saloon League, addressed the convention on National Constitutional Prohibition.

The annual address of the state president, Mrs. Adelaide Goodno, was most inspiring, striking the key-note of the convention—the extermination of the liquor traffic and other evils, and the protection of young womanhood and manhood in our state. She recommended that a petition for an appropriation to establish a home for fallen and helpless women be presented to our next legislature; and urged the enforcement of the Scientific Temperance Instruction law, requesting white ribboners to visit the schools to see that temperance is taught. Mrs. Goodno suggested further that our women study the vital question of suffrage that they may be ready to act intelligently on the issue.

Judge Walter Clarke, one of North Carolina's able jurists, made a strong address before an appreciative audience on "Equal Rights For All." "The great opposers of suffrage," he said, "are the political machines because they are not certain that they can control the women; and the whisky powers, because the women have fought and are fighting the liquor traffic and represent the force that is putting liquor out of business. Archimedes said if he had a fulcrum long enough he could move the world, but you women have your fulcrum, for no party dares name a candidate in the next National convention without recognition of the women's strength, for the four million women voters have the balance of power in their hands."

Dr. Lemuel Freeman of Meredith College, Raleigh, preached the annual sermon. The general truth he demonstrated was that alcohol has been the greatest despot of all times. "It is a breeder of crimes, a destroyer, an enemy of good; it robs of virtue, retards human progress, butchers children and womanhood, inspires crooked politics, and is the bulwark of the unscrupulous politician. This great burden to human society must and is going to be removed."

The convention address was delivered by Miss Lillian Phelps, who spoke of the two great forces struggling in the death grapple in this country—the liquor interests and the Christian forces.

The Woman's Club gave a reception in honor of the W. C. T. U. The state officers were re-elected with the exception of the vice-president. Mrs. Clay Foreman was chosen to fill that office.

WEST VIRGINIA REJOICES IN PROHIBITION—SOUNDS PRAISES OF LAW IN ANNUAL CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

For the fourth time since the organization of the West Virginia W. C. T. U. thirty-three years ago, the annual convention met in Fairmont, where the white ribboners were cordially welcomed to the city by Mayor Anthony A. Bowen, Rev. H. G. Stoetzer, Prof. George H. Colebank, Hon. A. L. Lehman, Dr. C. O. Henry, Mrs. George DeBolt for the Woman's Clubs and Mrs. N. R. C. Morrow for the W. C. T. U.

Miss Anna Adams Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., was the speaker at one of the evening meetings, following which a reception was tendered her by the West Virginia white ribboners. Miss Gordon's message was a glance backward to early beginnings and a forward look to the near-approaching day of National Constitutional Prohibition and was an address of great power and eloquence.

Mrs. Yost in her annual address reviewed the history of prohibition as written during the past twelve months. Among other things she quoted Governor Hatfield's testimony to the value of prohibition to the state, as follows:

"The more we see of prohibition and its wonderful results the more we like it. The results have been marvelous to everybody, and we find that even among the element that was opposed to the state being voted 'dry' there is a gracious disposition manifested to give prohibition a fair trial. We have experienced no serious obstacles to the strict enforcement of the law, and I believe this in a large measure is due to the very excellent campaign of education waged among the people of the state during the interim that marked the ratification of the prohibition amendment in November, 1912, and the passage of the legislative enactment in February, 1913, to the first day of July, 1914, when the law became effective.

"West Virginia's prohibition law is the strictest found on any of the statute books, and for this reason I believe it to be the best. No effort was spared to inform the people that its provisions were strict and that the law was backed up by severe penalties.

"We have an excellent organization of officers to see that the law is strictly enforced, and under the direction of Mr. Fred O. Blue, state tax commissioner, who is ex-officio commissioner of prohibition, we are accomplishing surprisingly satisfactory results. In the enforcement of the law we have had the hearty co-operation of the municipal and county officers. Our anticipations have been more than realized and West Virginia expects to make the state the ideal prohibition state in the Union."

IDAHO'S YEAR OF ACHIEVEMENTS GOVERNOR ALEXANDER A SPEAKER AT STATE CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

At the annual state convention of Idaho (North) W. C. T. U. delegates were present from the extreme east, west and intermediate points. Interest was awakened when the city was invaded by two wagon loads of L. T. L.'s under the care of Mrs. Lillian Wilson, superintendent of the L. T. L. at Fruitland. Reinforced by legioners from Payette the boys and girls marched into the convention, and for an hour held the interest with music and drills, closing with a song and demonstration with brooms. A gold medal contest by the Y. P. B.'s followed, Marie Gauer winning the medal. A silk flag which is the state L. T. L. banner, was presented by our state president, Mrs. Nettie R. Chipp, to the L. T. L. of Nampa for the largest gain. Mrs. Bingham, local president of the Ontario (Ore.) W. C. T. U., gave a short review of the prohibition campaign in her state.

An "Efficiency Conference" was conducted by Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, president of Colorado W. C. T. U., who told of the battle to gain prohibition for her state and urged that every voter in Idaho be educated to vote dry. She said that Colorado's governor has absolute power to enforce the law with five thousand dollars to accomplish it.

The convention church was taxed to its uttermost seating capacity by a large audience, including many men and youths eager to hear Idaho's chief executive, Governor Alexander. No higher tribute to the white ribboners could be paid than that given by our Jewish governor. He plead with the people to work for constitutional prohibition. January 1, by statutory enactment, Idaho goes dry, and he promised that the law would be enforced. He declared that the law is the best enacted by any state. He pictured the efforts of the antis to make people tire of prohibition and urged strict law enforcement. The governor is spoken of by the organized liquor traffic as "the Moses to lead his people out of bondage."

The superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League gave a talk on co-operation. Mrs. Vance, superintendent of Legislation, told of the work done by W. C. T. U. workers at the legislature last winter. She and her white ribbon comrades were given a unanimous vote of thanks and appreciation.

The annual address of the state president showed the progress made along temperance lines and the report of the corresponding secretary was full of encouragement and interest.

A banquet with a hundred or more guests had for after dinner toasts, "The Trial of John Barleycorn." These proved an eye-opener as to the deeds of J. B. and his boon companions in crime.

The resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition was ratified by the convention.

Congressman Addison T. Smith in an address, "A Quarter of a Century's Progress," reviewed the work of the W. C. T. U. for that period of time.

GREAT DISCOVERIES OF THE RACE

(Continued from Page Three)

holder who arouse the protests. It is the reward and not the work; the honors, and not the hours, of which the ultra-conservative men, whether they confess it or even realize it, or not, are jealous.

But I grant that woman's sphere is the home, and that she is supremely responsible for the family. And because I so believe, I am intensely concerned that she shall find no barred doors anywhere that open to knowledge and power which will make her more competent in her paramount task of motherhood. For the sake of the future, we must not consent to send woman short of fully armed into the social arena. She must have every last weapon of home defense. She must be accorded an unhampered opportunity to realize the very highest development of her body, mind and soul. No arbitrary standards dare be fixed by which a possible industrial Joan of Arc may be lost at the switchboard of a telephone station, or in the upper loft of a shirt-waist factory. The highest good of civilization commands that we give every woman unshackled limbs to climb the hill of social progress, for in the last analysis the race loses power unless every soul, male and female alike, is made final arbiter of his or her destiny.

Do you say that this complete industrial and political as well as social enfranchisement of woman will endanger the sex and maternal relations that are fundamental to life itself? Then you have forgotten that the female was not made by law, but by God. Just as there will always be tares growing with the wheat, so there will always be unnatural women, but maternity is divine, and its spirit is omnipotent.

Woman is today following the unerring sex instinct that warns her to keep always by the side of her mate. Her cry for political freedom is a plea for more intimate sex partnership, a movement toward a fuller understanding, a more blessed helpfulness between male and female. Those who grow not together, grow apart.

I have seen towering trees fall before the joined cuttings of two ax-men, who, working together, with blow following blow, hewed to the heart of the monarch of the forest. I have seen a giant workman laying the bricks of a city pavement, with his left and right hands toiling in perfect unison and with almost incredible rapidity. In the crash of a great line drive on the gridiron I have felt the swaying of the human mass in deadlock, and then the impact of the reserve from the back field, that has destroyed the balance and forced the ball over the line.

Just as the tree falls slowly before the attack of a singe ax-man, just as the paving waits on a "one-handed" layer of bricks, just as the gridiron struggle remains undecided until it has felt the drive of the reserve back, so society waits today on the fullness of the strength of womanhood.

* * * * * * * * *

The hostility of the liquor forces and their allied evils to the enfranchisement of women, a hostility growing in intensity and more definitely expressed every year, very clearly indicates what civilization may expect from the ballots of the female. Mothers who know, as men never can, the cost of life, whose "works of art" are sons and daughters, will hear first the call of humanity and the cry of gold will be drowned by the wail of the tiniest babe. Institutions that capitalize childhood, that prey upon infancy, that succeed at the expense of "these little ones," are always more quickly discovered and more violently antagonized by women than men. It was a woman's crusade, not a man's. It is a W. C. T. U., not an M. C. T. U. Wars that murder the men women produce at infinite cost will be hurled as a black-damp upon humanity with greater difficulty when the voice of the stateswoman has equal audience with the voice of the statesman. The liquor traffic will not long survive the day that dawns upon the political equality of the sexes.

For the times that are to come, with the closing of the war, we must now prepare; for the reforms that will be possible then, for that mighty new dispensation of social justice, we must doubly arm ourselves. No resource of power available for the world program of peace, sobriety and the economic freedom of the masses, dare be overlooked. Hear the female ultimatum to the race, "A lift or a drag, a plaything or a mate, a parasite or a partner."

The feminist movement is an evolution of human progress, a legitimate child of advancing civilization, a logical outcome of democracy.

Precious Promise Bible
Something Entirely New—Just Off the Press
ALL THE PROMISES IN RED
Most Comforting Bible Published
The famous, international clear type, self-pronouncing edition, with all the teachers' helps. Beautifully illustrated in colors. Leather, only $3.75. Descriptive Circular Free.
SEND FOR OUR FREE CATALOGS
of Song Books, Bibles, Bible Motoes, Christian Workers' Helps, Missionary Books, Temperance Books, Purity Books, Christian Evidence and Anti-Infidel Books, Peace Literature, etc. Agents Wanted.
We Have the Most Complete Catalogs Published
GLAD TIDINGS PUBLISHING CO. Lakeside Building CHICAGO, ILL.

Caught 51 Rats One Week
Trap resets itself. 22 inches high. Will last for years. Can't get out of order. Weighs 7 pounds. 12 rats caught one day. Cheese is used, doing away with poisons. This trap does its work, never fails and is always ready for the next rat. When rats and mice pass device they die. Rats are disease carriers, also cause fires. These catchers should be in every school building. Rat catcher sent prepaid on request of $3. Mouse catcher 10 inches high, $1. Money back if not satisfied.
H. D. SWARTS, Inventor and Manufacturer
Universal Rat and Mouse Traps, Box 566, Scranton, Pa.

"MOTHERS OF MEN," a book recently written and "dedicated to the mothers of all nations" by Mrs. Frances E. Hallowes of India, and published by Headly Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C. (price, one shilling), is a book that should be read by all mothers and their sons. It shows up militarism in its true light. It also shows in a convincing manner the way to world-peace and how, honorably, to prevent the awful ravages of war. H. J. BAILEY

Seattle Convention Group in Front of Plymouth Congregational Church

MISSISSIPPI COMRADES IN ANNUAL GATHERING

Special Correspondence

The Mississippi W. C. T. U. met in annual convention in the delta city of Belzoni, October 1-4. Great preparations had been made and a splendid welcome was accorded the delegates. A large gospel tent meeting was in progress and as the city is not large enough to support two meetings the two forces co-operated in perfect harmony. Indeed, one seemed to deepen the interest in the other. The opening evening was devoted to addresses of welcome, a happy response and an enthusiastic but brief address from Mrs. S. T. Stanley, president of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. The following day the corresponding secretary reported among other things a total of fourteen new unions for the year, most of them organized by Miss May Russell, National organizer and lecturer, and eleven new unions among colored people, organized by Mrs. L. E. Peterson. Some 2,000 pledges have been signed. Mississippi has a total of 2,177 members, 582 of them new, although all were not reported by the treasurer as paid. Letters had been written to Mississippi candidates for governor asking where they stand on prohibition and the enforcement of prohibition laws. The governor-elect and the other candidates with one exception declared for law enforcement. The unions have done much to secure law enforcement, and the majority reported active work for National Constitutional Prohibition.

The Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Estelle Crane, who has organized a number of new Branches, gave a fine report of her work, as did also the L. T. L. secretary, Miss Buchanan. The treasurer's report showed a balance in the treasury. Scientific Temperance Instruction, essay contests and medal contests were much stressed. Saturday evening's program, devoted to the young people, was a splendid success. After songs by the L. T. L. and Y. P. B., and a drill by the latter representing the prohibition states, Miss Crane gave an inspiring address, urging the young people to devote their lives to things worth while, and not solely to pleasure. The winners in the state essay contest were named, and one, Miss Lucile Miller of West Point, winner of the high school medal, gave as an oration her essay, "The Value of Total Abstinence to a Life." The medal contest with eight girls and eight boys participating was very interesting.

Sunday was looked forward to as the crowning day for the public work of the convention. Sunday schools were visited and addressed. Mrs. B. M. Howorth of West Point, made a very impressive talk to the children and young people along the lines of scientific temperance, connecting it with Bible injunctions. Practically all the children stood when the request for signatures to the pledge was made.

Mrs. Florence E. Atkins, National organizer and lecturer, with sparkling wit and radiant enthusiasm, captured the convention and the assembled congregations with her splendid addresses both morning and afternoon.

On Monday evening banners were presented and a strong talk on National Constitutional Prohibition was made by Mrs. Walter Scales. A report of this convention would be incomplete without a mention of "Mother" Ervin of Columbus who was a continual inspiration in all the meetings with her many quaint sayings and thankful spirit, referring as she often did to the contrast between now and "then"—when she was young—and to the great and wonderful strides prohibition has made. The convention closed with the feeling that much good had been done and great enthusiasm imparted for another year's work.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME?" 90,000 SOLD
Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it.
Wm. E. Marks, 1708 West St., Wilmington, Delaware

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
In each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 76 East Harrison, CHICAGO

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

Among the workers who did valiant service in the Ohio state-wide prohibition campaign was Mrs. Lulu T. Gleason, National W. C. T. U. organizer and lecturer. Mrs. Gleason, who spent some time in the capital city, spoke every day at street meetings and was the means of winning many dry votes.

Mrs. Rhena Mosher Holyoke, a former National general secretary of the Young People's Branch, was one of the editors of the suffrage edition of the Holyoke (Mass.) Daily Transcript issued in the interest of the suffrage campaign in the Bay state. Mrs. Holyoke enthusiastically worked for the passage of the amendment.

Otsego county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. met in convention at Hartwick on October 20, and two days of inspirational and uplifting meetings were enjoyed by sixty-five delegates and hundreds of visitors. The three resident ministers were in attendance most of the time and three or four others part of the time. Rev. A. D. Finch of Worcester and Miss Helen Eacker of Kansas gave inspiring addresses one evening. A poster parade included both white ribboners and school children. Mrs. Georgia Weaton, county president, presented a life membership certificate to Mrs. Alice Smith, president Oneonta union, for the greatest gain in the county. A matrons' gold medal contest was held the last evening with Mrs. Alice Smith as winner. Mrs. Weaton was reelected president by a unanimous vote. The county now numbers about 1,000 members and is working unceasingly for National Constitutional Prohibition.

The thirty-ninth annual convention of the Fourth District (Mich.) W. C. T. U., which met in Kalamazoo November 4-5, was the largest and most enthusiastic in its history. For the twentieth time Mrs. E. L. Caikins, president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., was elected president of the district. Plans of work to make Michigan dry in 1916 were outlined by the president and enthusiasticaliy adopted by the convention. Senator Henry E. Straight, father of the anti-white-slave law, the red light injunction law and champion of state-wide prohibition, gave an interesting and instructive talk on the work of the legislature and displayed charts which explain why Michigan should guarantee to every child a clean bill of health. Other features were brief talks on Franchise, a grand gold medal contest, and a demonstration, "A Dry Fourth," by five white ribboners, one from each of the five counties of the district.

The decorated auto of the Geneseo (Ill.) W. C. T. U. was one of the attractive features in a recent civic parade. Covered with white bunting and with white flowers, green leaves and ferns, it bore on either side in large letters the words, "National Constitutionai Prohibition," whiie on a large banner was the W. C. T. U. motto, "For God and Home and Every Land."

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous—full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 75,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

Everyone notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began, and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you, I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

SUSANNA COCROFT,
Dept. 37 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co. have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound. Price $2.00.

The W. C. T. U. of Orleans, Nebraska, on a recent Sunday, in the absence of the pastor, took charge of the services in the Presbyterian church. Although there was little time for preparation, a choir of girls was secured, the church was decorated and a notice of the meeting sent broadcast. Mrs. Mary Morgan, from the neighboring town of Alma, preached. Although this unusual demand upon the union occasioned considerable uneasiness, owing to the haste with which the meeting had to be planned, the members felt well repaid for their efforts. One result at least was the impression given the community that the W. C. T. U. can be depended upon.

Detective and Mrs. Owen O. Wiard of Winona Lake, Ind., have presented ten life memberships in the W. C. T. U. of Wisconsin to friends of the cause in that state. They go back to Wisconsin next spring for the seventh year to work in the no-license campaign.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . .	25c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each . . . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . .	37c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

UNION SIGNAL HOUR AT THE CONVENTION

The official paper was the recipient, on Tuesday afternoon of the Convention, of a combination shower of appreciation, pledges, and subscriptions that abundantly proved its popularity.

After the report of the managing editor and the singing of "The Steady Subscriber" to the music of "The Old Oaken Bucket," the state presidents told briefly, as they presented their pledges to the editor-in-chief, what their states thought of the paper. We give below a few of the many valuable suggestions offered:

Wisconsin offers fifteen copies of the regular SIGNAL or sixty of the campaign edition for a gain of fifty members in a county; and for the largest increase in membership, ten subscriptions; and for the greatest per cent increase, five subscriptions. The state president said she believed that the best educator they can put into the homes and business offices, to reach the people, is the SIGNAL.

Maine sends the paper to the wife of her governor, and when recently a prominent educator in the state desired material from which to prepare a course of lectures, he found what he needed in the year's file of SIGNALS sent to him.

Alaska, the baby union, adopted a constitution providing that every member shall receive the campaign edition of the SIGNAL as a part of her dues.

Michigan gives a UNION SIGNAL subscription as a prize to every union making twenty-five per cent gain. The paper is also sent to every college in the state.

In its fight for a dry Chicago in 1916 and in the work of the Dry Federation Illinois expects to use THE UNION SIGNAL.

Delaware sends the campaign edition to every member of the legislature and to the governor.

North Dakota has discovered that the one thing to make the unions live, grow and prosper is THE UNION SIGNAL. No one can be officially connected with the organization who is not a subscriber.

Indiana sends the official paper to the members of the state legislature and to the governor.

Virginia cannot understand how anyone can be an efficient worker and not read THE UNION SIGNAL. The paper is used for W. C. T. U. premiums in the state.

Iowa has amended its by-laws making it impossible for any one to be a member of its executive committee who does not subscribe for the official paper.

Kansas told of two convention delegates who joined in giving the SIGNAL to their convention hostess.

Texas sends complimentary subscriptions to the Y. M. C. A.'s, Y. W. C. A.'s, the governor's wife, every member of the state legislature, every college, every public library and to editors of large dailies.

Ohio stated the campaign edition was used extensively and with good results in the Ohio Dry campaign.

In Missouri no woman can be local president, superintendent, county president or delegate to a National Convention unless she is a subscriber to the SIGNAL.

The best helper in making Colorado dry was THE UNION SIGNAL, according to Colorado's state president.

Montana is in a dry campaign and pledged 1,000 new subscriptions to the SIGNAL, believing that the paper will help make the state dry.

South Dakota is also in campaigns for prohibition and suffrage and feels the need of THE UNION SIGNAL.

TENNESSEE PRESSING RESOLUTELY FORWARD

Special Correspondence

The white ribboners of Tennessee, two hundred and sixty strong, gathered at Martin for their annual meeting sharing a common sorrow—the recent sudden home-going of their beloved leader, Silena Moore Holman. Sorely did they miss the inspiration of her visible presence, but the memory of her whom they loved seemed to bind them close to each other. The splendid gain of 1,252 new members, the result of the membership contest, as inaugurated by Mrs. Holman, and the faithful work of the organizers, made the white ribboners rejoice and take courage to go forward.

The meetings attracted large audiences. On Sunday morning Mrs. Gilreath, Mrs. Stratton, Mrs. Robins and Mrs. Dean, occupying the various pulpits, preached the pure gospel of prohibition, peace and purity. On Sunday afternoon there was a mass meeting for the L. T. L. under the direction of Mrs. Rose Nipher, state secretary. At its close, Mrs. Jarnagin, state superintendent of Penal and Reformatory work, spoke interestingly. The convention speaker was Miss Lillian Phelps who delivered a magnificent address, one result of which was a gift of fifty dollars from Mr. Tom Farmer of Martin for the purpose of placing on the banks of the Mississippi near Memphis, an immense billboard which can easily be read from trains passing on the opposite side. The idea is to offset a flaming advertisement of a certain kind of beer.

When the annual address of Tennessee's promoted leader was read it was as if a voice from heaven bade her fellow workers push steadfastly and loyally forward in the name of Christ whom she followed so faithfully. The address was worthy of the great statesman she was. "Some one has declared," she said, "that John Barleycorn has been having his summer vacation this past year. It has been a year of wonderful triumph for the temperance forces. Victory has piled on victory day after day and still they come. Surely no one is so pessimistic as to doubt what the end will be, the destruction of the legalized liquor traffic, not only in our own nation, but throughout the civilized world. In the final day when prohibition has become a fact of world government, pages will be devoted to chronicling the mighty achievements of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this stupendous conflict."

The report of Mrs. Ethel M. Scoggins, superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, caused rejoicing. She has succeeded in getting the state superintendent of public instruction to have programs printed for Frances Willard Day in the public schools and to send them to every county superintendent at the state's expense. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Mary P. Bang; vice-president, Mrs. Minnie A. Welch; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Estelle M. Knox; recording secretary, Mrs. Minnie K. Gilbert; treasurer, Mrs. E. D. Collins.

"Sunshine Powders"

A dainty Xmas gift for an invalid or one in sorrow. Jewels of thought, lovely for birthdays, hospitals, sunshine work. They were prepared by a "shut-in," wife of a home-missionary, once a pupil of Frances Willard, an earnest worker in the W. C. T. U. "Bright, cheery, comforting!" "Worth their weight in gold!" Try a box! 25 cts. Rev. H. M. Goodell, Pasadena, Calif.

ILLINOIS HOLDS ROUSING CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

From beginning to end the forty-second annual convention of the Illinois W. C. T. U. held at Waukegan was a pronounced success. Business was transacted with dispatch and facts and principles and resolutions of grave importance held the attention of the delegates.

The ante-convention meetings, the all-day evangelistic service conducted by Rev. Mary Moreland and the Y. P. B. conferences led by the state secretaries, Miss Kathryn Sawyer and Mrs. Lucile L. Evans, were well attended. Mrs. Mary Powers, state Y. P. B. secretary of Ohio, and the National L. T. L. secretary, Miss Mary Ervin, gave addresses at the conferences and rendered valuable help in the convention. The attendance at the superintendents' conferences and at the county presidents' meetings gave evidence of the great interest of the working force of women in the effort for a saloonless state and nation.

Illinois delegates look for a feast of good things when the time arrives for the annual address of the state president, Miss Helen L. Hood. This year it surpassed all others in depth of thought and inspiring information.

The strong resolutions adopted included support of the national constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes; advocated peace and arbitration for all nations, the discontinuance of Sunday picture shows, municipal, state and national censorship of movies, as well as the abolishment of wines and cigarets from all films.

Miss Grace Fuller, matron of the woman's state prison, explained in a short address the necessity of paroling the women and urged that homes be opened to paroled and discharged prisoners.

A parade and demonstration by the superintendents and county presidents was both interesting and instructive. The presidents' banners showed the amount of territory in the state to be cleared of the saloon. One banner, white with yellow letters, indicated that the women voted the county dry.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, was one of the convention speakers. Her fine address, predicting a saloonless nation in 1920 and a saloonless world in 1930, will long be remembered. "For forty years," she said, "we have been toiling, toiling, in an effort to educate the boys and the girls; we have been tormenting the newspaper men until they are devoting columns to our cause; now we have all the parties behind us, the anti liquor societies, the churches, the women's clubs, all organizations, and we are bound to succeed. We have not had a voice in our government but we are winning. We presented a bill to Congress last year which represented six million people. It would be a greater thing to be the hero of this bill than to be the hero of the Merrimac." Rev. Elmer Williams of Chicago also gave a fine address.

The delegates enjoyed a visit by automobile to the United States Naval Training School at Lake Bluff. A fitting close to the fine convention was the visit of over two hundred of the delegates to Rest Cottage and National W. C. T. U. Headquarters at Evanston. Later a luncheon was served to them by the Evanston and North Shore unions, the women going afterward to Rosehill, where beside Miss Willard's grave they pledged themselves anew to state and nation prohibition.

The officers were re-elected.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., NOVEMBER 25, 1915 | No. 47

Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving—a reverent paean of praise—fills the heart of the temperance reformer in these wonderful fruition days! Our Harvest Home of a nation redeemed from the legalized liquor traffic is near at hand. America's fields of golden grain will then be garnered only for food; her luscious fruits will furnish only health-giving nectar.

We thank God for those who led forth the millions of patient seed-sowers of the radiant past. We praise Him for the high privilege of being among the glad reapers of today. "Thanks be unto God who always causeth us to triumph through Jesus Christ."

Anna A. Gordon

CAMPAIGN EDITION

SPECIAL ARTICLES IN THIS ISSUE

Commercial Transformations—Interviewing "Dad"—Great Discoveries of the Race—The Liquor Dealers Heard from Him—Statistics that Startled South Carolina—Measures to be Considered by the Sixty-Fourth Congress—State-wide Prohibition Campaign Launched in Michigan—Georgia Legislature Passes Four Drastic Prohibition Measures.

State-wide Prohibition Campaign Launched in Michigan

Special Correspondence

A monster meeting of the allied dry forces of the southern peninsula of Michigan was held at Lansing, the capital, November 2. The object of this gathering was the launching of the campaign for constitutional state-wide prohibition. About 15,000 persons registered as attending and enthusiasm ran high. Some of the topics considered were "The Amendment," "The Army" and "The Battle." Committees on organization and resolutions were appointed and other business matters were cared for.

In the afternoon Mrs. Florence Richard, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., gave an address, citing incidents of the fight in Ohio and urging the Michigan workers to great activity and fearlessness in their efforts to make the state dry. Hon. Frederick Landis of Indiana, the next speaker, said, in part: "I have unfurled a declaration of independence from John Barleycorn that shall wave until I die. I am against him, not only in Michigan but on every inch of ground in God's universe. Heretofore officials have dodged, worn rubber heels and false whiskers on this question. Water-wagons used to be scarce, but now there is one on every corner and they have a universal transfer system." He spoke of a number of industries, such as the manufacture of ropes, handcuffs, brass knuckles and padlocks, that would surely suffer if prohibition carried.

A banquet at which about six hundred were seated was an enjoyable event. In the evening Hon. Richmond P. Hobson gave the address. He treated his subject from the standpoint of science, showing how the liquor evil is undermining the life of the nation.

During the day Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president of the W. C. T. U., Lieutenant-Governor Dickinson, Dr. Samuel Dickie, president of Albion College, Hon. H. E. Straight and a number of others spoke.

A large committee was appointed whose duty it is to get the whole state in line. Something like $3,500 was pledged as a campaign starter. A second large meeting was held at Escanaba, November 4, and it, too, was marked by great interest and enthusiasm.

Georgia Legislature Passes Four Drastic Prohibition Measures

Governor Harris and Law Makers Banqueted

Leaders of the prohibition forces in Georgia are jubilant over the work of the special session of the legislature. The four bills passed by both houses and signed by Governor Harris insure the enforcement of the prohibition law. These measures, all of which go into effect May 1, 1916, provide for the closing of all breweries, near-beer saloons and locker clubs, and prohibit sale of newspapers or periodicals publishing liquor advertisements or the soliciting by means of newspapers, circulars or letters. Provision is also made for a heavy penalty on failure of officials to carry out these laws. A large company of the friends of prohibition witnessed the signing of these bills by Governor Harris, and this triumph of law enforcement was celebrated by a banquet at the Ansley Hotel in honor of the governor and the members of the legislature, given by the Prohibition Business Men's Committee of Atlanta.

President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan Receives Honors

At the recent coronation of the Emperor of Japan many residents of the Sunrise kingdom were decorated by His Imperial Majesty. Among those who were recipients of honors was Madam Kaji Yajima, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Japan. Others receiving similar token of appreciation were the editor of The Christian World and the headmaster of St. Paul's College at Tokio, both of whom were educated in the United States and are worthy exponents of the Christian religion. In this connection one recalls the generosity of Madam Yajima upon her recent retirement as principal of a school with which she had been for many years associated, in promptly transferring to the treasury of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union the $1,000 that was given to her personally as a tribute of love for her years of service.

Dr. Mary Stone, President of the China W. C. T. U., Visits Rest Cottage and National W. C. T. U. Headquarters

On the recent visit in Evanston of Dr. Mary Stone, head physician of the Danforth Memorial Hospital at Kiu Kiang, China, and president of the China W. C. T. U., and Miss Jennie V. Hughes, of the Kiu Kiang Knowles Bible School, they were the guests for a short time of Miss Anna A. Gordon. Dr. Stone and Miss Hughes spoke in the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Evanston under the auspices of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Northwest. In the course of an impassioned address on missionary work, Dr. Stone referred with deep feeling to the banishment of opium from her native country, following it with a plea that now that America is freeing herself from the alcohol evil she be not unmindful of her oriental sisters and endeavor to prevent the sending to China of alcoholic liquors. She told of the diabolical attempts that are being made by dealers in cigarets and tobacco to promote in the Chinese boys and girls the cigaret habit, by offering special inducements to them to purchase the deadly "coffin nails."

She naively explained her digression from the subject of medical missions, upon which she was expected to speak, by saying, "Of course, since I wear the little white ribbon, I cannot refrain from touching on the subject of temperance."

Dr. Stone, who is the only woman physician and surgeon for a district having a population of 5,000,000, is in America for the purpose of taking a post-graduate course in the Medical college of the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. She is to be one of the speakers at the mass meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to be held in Washington, D. C., on December 12, National Constitutional Prohibition Day.

MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BY THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

In her report at the National Convention at Seattle, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, National Legislative superintendent, called attention to certain measures that will be presented to the Sixty-fourth Congress, which assembles Monday, December 6, as follows:

"The bill heretofore known as the 'Sheppard-Hobson Amendment' bill died automatically with the Sixty-third Congress, as no measure may be carried over from one Congress to another, but a bill of the same nature will be introduced early in the coming session and we are confident the friends of the measure will again rally to the support of this advanced step in temperance reform."

Referring to the arraignment of the excise board of the District of Columbia for flagrant violation of the Jones-Works Excise law, Mrs. Ellis said:

"Senator Works of California has framed a bill, which he will introduce, containing a provision which makes every liquor dealer an accessory before the fact to any crime committed by any person while under the influence of liquor purchased from him. This will apply to liquor dealers over the entire country as well as the District of Columbia."

"The temperance bills introduced by Senator Gronna of North Dakota, viz: to prohibit the manufacture, importation or sale of intoxicating liquor in Hawaii or the Philippine Islands, will be pushed in the next Congress. Hawaii has a cosmopolitan population of 191,000 of which only about 10,000 are Americans. This group of islands in the center of the Pacific ocean is probably the most desirable strategic point in the world, and the United States Government Maritime and Army Garrison and hundreds of young American soldiers are stationed there.

"A life-long resident of Hawaii tells us that unless something is soon done to prohibit the importation and sale of intoxicating liquor on the islands, the Hawaiian people as a race will become extinct. The effect of intoxicants on these people, who are a lovable folk, but easily led, is similar to the effect on our Indian tribes, and the liquor taken there by people from the United States since we came into possession of the islands has been disastrous, changing conditions among the natives to such an extent that they will be swept from the face of the earth unless we shield and protect them from liquors carried there by our own people. We shall bend every effort to have this bill become a law.

"The bill intended for the Philippines, introduced by Senator Gronna, is as follows: 'That no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage.' As the United States Congress is seriously considering the future political status of the people of the Philippines, and the providing of a more autonomous government for those islands, it is only right and proper for the United States Government to remove the evils it permitted to be introduced there when the government took possession, and which would hinder and prevent the Filipino from becoming a desirable citizen."

In closing Mrs. Ellis said: "There will be one hundred and twenty-eight new men in the House of Representatives when at noon, on the first Monday in December 1915, the Sixty-fourth Congress convenes. Eight new Senators will take the places of Senators who have spent, some of them, almost a lifetime in the chamber in the service of their country, and will be greatly missed.

"The coming contest in Congress for National Constitutional Prohibition will mean renewed effort on the part of all indeed, it means that every man and woman looking, hoping, praying for the overthrow of King Alcohol will need to redouble their efforts, for in this the last stand of the enemy, every plan or device of Satan will be used to circumvent the onward march of prohibition."

FATHER TIME: "Your turn next, John Barleycorn!"

THE LIQUOR DEALERS HEARD FROM HIM

A very special offer in "private stock whisky" at bargain prices was recently sent by an Ohio distillery to a resident of Greensboro, N. C., by name Dr. A. S. Abernethy. Dr. Abernethy, by the way, according to the Christian Advocate, "is a man with a history, the son of a minister, born in a college president's home, a scholar with high degrees, a college professor himself, an editor of learned periodicals and the author of half a dozen volumes. His name and work used to fill two inches of space in 'Who's Who.'"

All these facts the Ohio liquor dealer was ignorant of and when the doctor did not accept the remarkable offer in "wet goods" he followed it up with a communication in which he expressed surprise that he had failed to take advantage of this "rare opportunity"—"the greatest offer we ever presented to the men of America. Thousands of men jumped at the opportunity to try this superb whisky, and we cannot understand why we did not hear from you. Now, we ask you—as man to man—can't you use a quart of rich, pure whisky in your home? Stop and consider what we are offering. Don't put this off as you did before. Slip your remittance in the order herewith, and we'll see that the goods go forward by the first express."

Doctor Abernethy did pay attention to this second letter. He answered it at some length, and his reply, as recently printed in a Greensboro newspaper, was as follows:

"You say that you cannot understand why you did not hear from me. Yes, and I, too, am surprised that you have not heard from me. I have used your rye whisky in the past, and I have used the red rye whisky of other distillers of your kind, and I am surprised that they have not all heard from me.

"You should have heard from me when I drew a fortune of $30,000 out of the banks and wasted it in riotous living, reveling with other unfortunate men under the demoniac alchemy and spell of your vile decoction. You should have heard from me when I threw away a reputation equal to that of any young man in America for the privilege of making an outcast and wreck of myself drinking your vile whisky.

"I will admit. I have been remiss in not letting you hear from me long before this time. I should have written you with a pen made from the plumage plucked from the bird of paradise that I drove from my contented and happy home; I should have penned you in my heart's blood on the occasion of the burial of my gray-haired mother, whose heart I broke by my conduct while under the awful influence of your poisonous stuff. I should have kept you informed. I should have 'reported progress.' When I woke to the sad realization that from a man carrying degrees and titles of honor from the greatest universities and started well up the ladder of recognition as the author of more than nineteen historical works, I had fallen into mental, moral, physical and financial bankruptcy, I should have called on you. I should have wended my way into your richly decorated private office in Dayton, the walls of which are crimsoned with the blood of thousands of human wrecks, and there demanded of you that you give me the reward of my faithful vassalage to your destructive, demoralizing, disease-making, mind-wrecking business.

"But if I have been remiss in letting you hear from me, remember that you will hear from me in the future. I am now a preacher of the gospel, and I am making it my business to let not only you, but every other manufacturer of the liquid damnation, know that I am being heard from. You make your appeal to me as man to man; and it is because you are not a man and because your infernal business unmans men that I am fighting it to the bitter end with all the reconsecrated powers left in the former man that your demoralizing dope could not destroy.

"You speak of talking as man to man. Why, you would not dare stand before a man and insult his manliness with the proposition to unsteady his nerves, disorder his digestion, disturb his heart action, muddle his mind, demoralize his demeanor, abuse his activity and cloud his conscience with the use of your material. You urge me to stop and consider; and it is because I have stopped and considered that I am eternally and everlastingly the sworn enemy of your nefarious business so long as I shall hereafter be permitted to live."

ANOTHER WORD ABOUT KANSAS

"A generation ago Kansas adopted prohibition for the saving of her soul. Now she enforces it for the fattening of her body."

The man who doubts that prohibition is popular in the state of Kansas is certainly hard to convince. The papers and magazines are full of testimony from people holding prominent official positions in that state to the fact that the law is well enforced and is valuable to the community. In a recent number of The Outlook there appears an article on "A Study of Prohibition in Kansas," by Florence Finch Kelly. In the course of a very interesting review of the history of prohibition in the "Sunflower" state, she says:

"I asked a great many people if they knew of any young fellow entering manhood during the last ten years, since prohibition became generally effective, who had gone to the bad through drink. In each case the person questioned would stop to ransack his memory and then say, 'No, I can't think of a single one.' Those who knew Kansas in former times were likely to add, 'But in the old days there were plenty of them.' Chancellor Frank Strong, of the State University, which has nearly three thousand students, told me that there is so little drinking among them that one could hardly make a comparison with other universities, 'because the sense of relativity drops out.' He said that since prohibition had been enforced throughout the state there has been a steady advance in the character values, the mental and moral standards, of the young men and women students. He was emphatic in his conviction that 'the exceptional cleanliness of our student body and its high standards are due very largely to prohibition and the effective enforcement of the prohibitory law. I have lived,' he added, 'in New England, New York, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, and Kansas, and I consider the Kansan to be more efficient, man for man, to have more wealth-producing capacity, than the citizen of any other state with which I am familiar, and I believe this superior efficiency to be due to the practical elimination from the state of the drinking habit.'

"I saw and heard more evidence than it is possible to adduce here that prohibition has, as Chancellor Strong said, practically eliminated the habit of drinking from the entire state. It has, for instance, been years since liquor of any sort was served at a public dinner in Kansas. A man of prominence, both locally and in the nation, told me of traveling a little while before through the state in a special train with several railway officials and a number of men of consequence in various ways. 'A dozen years ago,' he said, 'there would have been various liquors, and most of the men would have drunk cocktails, highballs, and such other concoctions as they favored. But during the whole afternoon neither whisky, wine, beer, nor anything of the sort was in evidence. There was plenty of ice-water for the thirsty, but apparently nobody wanted or even thought of anything stronger.'"

From the data gathered by Miss Kelly she draws the conclusion that one of the most interesting results of ten years of prohibition in Kansas is "the fact that it has created a wonderful solidarity of sincere sentiment in its favor, that it has educated an entire community out of all desire for or interest in intoxicating drinks. My investigation convinced me," she says, "that it would be as easy to topple Gibraltar into the sea as to overthrow prohibition in Kansas."

ANTI-ALCOHOL POSTERS USED BY THE BOSTON ASSOCIATED CHARITIES

COMMERCIAL TRANSFORMATIONS

BREWERIES, DISTILLERIES AND SALOONS CHANGED INTO PLACES FOR REPUTABLE BUSINESS

When the brewery whistle is forever stilled and the bell that summons the distillery's employes to work shall be silent, what will take the place of these institutions? The haunting fear that the buildings which housed these ignoble enterprises may remain empty and the men employed in them be left idle seems to vex the souls of some good but short-sighted people. As if a few vacant buildings and even a few idle men were a calamity to be compared with the thousands of homes that for these many years, because of the liquor traffic, have been emptied of joy and happiness and of health and prosperity.

However, as a matter of fact, the history of prohibition shows that every one of the buildings vacated by the outlawing of the liquor traffic is needed for some good and legitimate purpose, and every one of the men who had been wasting his time, strength and talents in manufacturing and selling that which injures him and his customers is needed in law-abiding lines of commercial life. You don't believe it? Listen to what a resident of Parkersburg, West Virginia, has to say on the subject:

"After the saloons closed their doors, never again to be opened, on the night of June 30, 1914, the rooms they occupied in nearly every case in this city were overhauled and thoroughly renovated, and put in shape for some respectable line of business. These places were all soon used by various lines of trade, all of which appear to be doing a thriving business. One corner, for example, is now occupied by one of the most beautiful jewelry stores in the city, but the rotten floors in the building were replaced with beautiful mosaic floors, and the building put in fine shape. Two or three doors further down the street is a magnificent ladies' furnishing establishment, formerly occupied by a saloon. And so in various parts of the city there are profitable and flourishing establishments now occupying the sites of former saloons."

Already in anticipation of the going into effect on January 1, 1916, of the prohibition laws in Washington, Colorado and Oregon, breweries have been transformed into malted milk concerns, cold storage and ice manufactories, and meat packing industries.

An Oregon newspaper reporter the other day interviewed some of the liquor dealers of Portland as to their future plans and found they ranged all the way from operating a soft-drink establishment to leaving the business and going on to a farm.

One keeper of a popular saloon, says the Portland Oregonian, informed the reporter, "I am going to enlarge the restaurant and make a specialty of 'Dutch lunches,' and I'll put in soft drinks and ice cream. I guess the bar can be kept pretty busy just where it is. I am not worrying about prohibition. This has been a mighty slim year for saloons anyway, and a lot of us would be going out of business, prohibition or no prohibition."

One man plans to convert his liquor establishment into a big soft-drink clubhouse for men, with baths and moving picture shows and bowling alleys.

Another dealer in wet goods, when asked what he intended to do after January 1, handed out a card with his name and the words, "General Mail Order House. Send for catalogue," whereupon the reporter smiled and winked understandingly. "You're wrong," promptly corrected the saloonkeeper. "This has nothing to do with liquor. We won't handle a drop of it. Ours will be strictly a merchandise business and a big one. I'll be out of the saloon business for good after January 1."

Still another resident of the soon-to-be-dry state, who has run a combination saloon and grocery, explained, "I plan to extend my grocery business and take in the quarters heretofore occupied by the liquor store."

The story of the transformation of a Providence, Rhode Island, brewery into a motion picture studio has been recently told in the SIGNAL, and only the other day the writer heard of an Albuquerque, New Mexico, brewer who owned several valuable corner lots, upon one of which he has already established a thriving moving picture show, and on the second he is proposing to erect a fine hotel, all in anticipation of the time when breweries shall be quite out of fashion in New Mexico.

But by far the most unique and astonishing transformation which has come to our attention is the remodeling of a brewery into a church. The Flint (Mich.) Journal tells the story. Flint county, Michigan, having outlawed the saloons, its big brewery was empty, and its possibilities from an architectural point of view appealed to the trustees of the Elm Park M. E. church, who have purchased the property and intend to remodel it into an up-to-date church building, to be known as the Lakeview Methodist Episcopal Church.

"While there is a big contrast in the use of the building," remarked a lay member of the church, "there is no question that the change is for the better. Hereafter instead of being one of the agents of the underworld and the direct cause of much of the vice of the city, it will be used in the service of God and for the uplift of the community." The incident makes one feel like singing the Doxology, and working more energetically for the coming of the day when in place of the poison-shops which now line the business sections of too many of our cities shall be church buildings, missions, social settlements, libraries, municipal centers, and places for the manufacture and sale of commodities which build up the health and wealth of the community.

TO SHOW THE GROWTH OF PROHIBITION SENTIMENT

GREAT DISCOVERIES OF THE RACE

DANIEL A. POLING, President's Associate of the United Society of Christian Endeavor

(Part II of Address Delivered at National Convention)

We have discovered alcohol. Alcohol has been for thirty thousand years, or since the beginning of the agricultural period, the great deceiver of the race: as a problem it is a race-old heritage. In the beginnings of recorded history, drunkenness was a common vice. The nations of earliest times had their national drinks, and drinking customs were fixed thousands of years ago, in both society and religion.

Weaker nations very soon went down before the alcohol demon worshipped by them as a God, but the more hardy races were saved by their physical activity and by their out-of-door life.

While at a very early time teachers arose who recognized the curse of intoxicating liquor, notably Confucius, and while total abstinence was preached unknown centuries ago, the first serious movements directed against society's drinking habits are little more than one hundred years old.

The alcohol problem has now become appallingly complicated. First, drinking habits were confined to the individual, then they became fixed in society, but were still personal and there was no organization for profit.

As the next step, we find liquor sold, but only as other commodities were sold, and with an exceedingly small margin of gain. The alcohol evolution from the discovery of alcohol itself to the time of its sale, before it became organized into a business and political institution, as a result of national necessities that laid a tax on it, was very slow.

But when governments, borne down by war debts and cursed by the gaunt wolf of "preparation," turned to the universal drinking habits of their people and cashed them into revenue, the demon became a king. Then cupidity and appetite joined forces to usher in a world debauch.

Then, too, the appalling situation arose, whereby a state partnered in a business that succeeded by destroying the citizens of the state. Very soon the degradation and crime resulting from the alcohol traffic took back from the treasury more than the revenue money, so-called, the government had received, and the state was left poorer in money, poorer in life, and infinitely poorer in morals. The modern liquor traffic as a spectacle of national self-destruction has never been equaled.

Future generations, looking back upon the bare record and removed from the spirit of our times, having no access to living facts, will fail utterly to comprehend why governments tolerated so long this most insidious of internal foes.

But we who have lived with the problem, following its ramifications in government, are in full possession of the facts. The liquor traffic with the weapon granted it by the state, captured the only power by which it could be destroyed—the government itself. The anti-alcohol fight of the last fifty years, in Europe often, in America always, has been to capture the government; to take the government away from the liquor traffic, thus destroying the sanction, protection and criminal partnership under which the traffic has prospered and grown strong.

And at this vital point the present war has rendered signal service against alcohol, a service so signal that in future times it will be named as a major compensation for the frightful conflict itself.

But before going further here let us briefly emphasize the fact that the very governmental alliances that broadened the financial and political field of the alcohol traffic, also raised up against the traffic new and more powerful enemies. As the evil grew, the convictions of sober citizens became intensified, until some of them sacrificed their all to become students of the problem and fighters of the institution, while many of them gave influence and money to build the structure of the reform.

Temperance societies have been in the field in this country since the first very unpretentious, and, to us, quite amusing society—its pledge provided that liquors might be used in sickness, at public dinners and on "special occasions"—was formed by Dr. Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. But the determined effort to solve the alcohol problem dates from the Civil War.

Previous to the Civil War, many states of the Union had declared for prohibition, but in no state was the law understood or enforced, and before 1863 the traffic in intoxicating liquors had no place of influence in the government.

It would be a waste of time to discuss in this presence alcohol and the alcohol traffic from the economic, moral, political and religious standpoint. Among the many worthy organizations that have arisen in the world to combat the rum curse—and future generations will honor them all—the one organization that by every claim of efficiency and courage must be ranked as first, is the organization under whose banner we are gathered—the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. You have taught me—it is not necessary that I should instruct you.

We here are fully aware that science, business, religion and the practical affairs of every-day life, unite to conclusively prove that alcohol is a fence in the road of progress, and that traffic in it must be destroyed.

We have found knowledge of our foe. On a thousand fields we have measured his strength. His castle of lies is broken down. The white light of truth has shone upon him, and he stands naked in the eyes of civilization, a narcotic, water-absorbing, anaesthetic, poison drug, the big brother to the brothel, the seducer of girlhood, the spoiler of raw material, and the enemy of labor, a maniac-maker, a genius-destroyer, a breaker of law, and a polluter of politics.

No, it is not necessary or expedient that I discuss in this presence the fundamentals of our faith. Only in passing let me reaffirm the necessity for pressing the educational campaign against alcohol and the liquor traffic, until the last man shall have heard the truth, until the last child shall have been informed. Let us sow the world with our literature. Let us tell the story attractively, convincingly, to the last corner of the earth, for "ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The whole world has discovered alcohol. Individual members of society, millions of them, still sit in darkness, but the governing forces of society are no longer ignorant. And here enters the war. Again we say, the signal service the present conflict has rendered against alcohol will be named in future years as a major compensation for its awful carnage.

The war has not taught us that alcohol is a curse, and that traffic in it is a treason. This knowledge the world already possessed, although it had only begun to take action. The war has taught us how to deal with alcohol, how to solve the alcohol problem, how to arrive at the final prohibition that is our goal.

(Continued on Page Six)

GREAT DISCOVERIES OF THE RACE

(Continued from Page Five)

It has remained for Russia, and in a less degree for France and Germany, to point out to the United States the way to actual prohibition. Russia has not only decreed national prohibition, but the unanimous verdict of all who are familiar with present conditions in Russia is this: prohibition is effective, and it is a positive and almost miraculous blessing.

Samuel G. Blythe, writing recently in The Saturday Evening Post, relates that when vodka was sold in Russia the average savings banks deposits were between sixteen and twenty million dollars annually. In the thirty-one days of January, 1915, only five months after the sale of vodka was prohibited, and in spite of the war, the former vodka-drinkers put thirty million dollars into the savings banks of the empire. They saved nearly twice as much in one month as they had formerly saved in a whole year; and the records for drunkenness and crime are equally inspiring.

What then is the war message of today to us—the message that speaks out of the triumph of Russia and France? It is the message of administration. The Czar of Russia, who is the government, published the ukase against vodka and then enforced it. Russia went dry in an hour. Had the Czar simply announced the law, Russia would be as drunken today as ever. Prohibition captured the Russian government. Prohibition must capture the government of the United States. The prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States that history will name you the mothers of, will forever express the attitude of this government toward the liquor traffic, and will announce to the whole world the dissolution of our partnership with alcohol.

And I record my sober judgment that the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition has done more to fuse the temperance forces of the United States than all the previous direct efforts made to harmonize the various divisions of the prohibition army. National Constitutional Prohibition is correct in theory, sound in principle, and the campaign for it has been and is the strategic triumph of the reform.

We make no false claims for National Constitutional Prohibition unsupported by the full machinery of government. But we do claim for it, its full distinction as the final and fixed expression of a free people against the most insidious foe that ever menaced free institutions with utter destruction.

With us the fight for administration of the law, the capturing of the government, goes hand in hand with the fight for the law itself. Law and administration—this constitutes government. Government is not by law alone, for government by law alone is anarchy. Government is not by administration alone, for government by administration alone is tyranny. Worthy government is by law and administration.

But how are we to capture the government? The government of Russia was captured when the prohibition idea captured the mind of the Czar. His mind directed what his pen wrote, and set in motion the officers under him to the most remote corners of the empire, then vodka's shackles fell from the souls of more than one hundred and sixty million human beings.

The United States has no one czar. We are fifteen million czars, and it generally takes a majority of us to dictate the actions of the government, though pluralities sometimes suffice. The principle, however, is exactly the same. In the United States as in Russia, the government must be captured.

Whenever a majority of American czars—and, thank God, women are yearly increasing among us—go to the polls and vote for the political candidates pledged by political party platforms as well as by personal declarations, to the destruction of the liquor traffic, John Barleycorn will be as eternally dead as the petrified forests of New Mexico.

I am standing on an eminence tonight, a spiritual high place, raised by the faith that shines from your eyes, and my eyes behold a new political dispensation, fast dawning upon us, when those who are of one moral faith in this reform will be partisans for principle rather than partisans for party; when they will form a political union and covenant together at the polls, when with the ballots of millions instead of the decree of one, they will capture the government, and strike off the shackles of its liquor bondage.

This cause, which you have carried on your hearts since the days of its despised infancy, is now coming into its own. It has caught the imagination of the country. It is increasingly difficult to find politicians who have not always championed it, and many of them confess to being the originators of the idea! Political expediency begins to dictate that prohibition shall be heard in all party councils.

This year Massachusetts witnessed a primary campaign with at least one candidate of each political party outspokenly making his canvass under the flag of state and National Prohibition. In the Massachusetts campaign of this fall, prohibition has been given more consideration, more newspaper publicity than all other issues combined.

Republican governors of certain states are already announcing that they will present prohibition planks for the platform of 1916, and a Democratic United States Senator and at least two Democratic Congressmen have stated that they will present similar programs to the Democratic party. The national chairman of the Progressive party and scores of state leaders have already declared for National Prohibition, while the Prohibition party, battle-worn but heroic and virile, is more efficiently officered, has a more comprehensive and practical program, than at any time in its history.

Nothing but a providential interference or our own indifference can keep National Prohibition from being the paramount issue before the American people in the general election of 1916. "A Saloonless Nation by 1920" may happen four years ahead of time.

Then will the battlements of selfish and unpatriotic partisanship crumble. Out of the national conventions denying their cause or trifling with it, will come the pledged minute-men of another 1776. They will raise a new political standard in the land, or perhaps they will gather under the old flag of Neal Dow, Frances Willard, Wendell Phillips, John B. Finch; under the flag of a thousand losses, that has never lost faith, the flag that has never wavered to win, and whose colors are set in the blood of the most transcendent and unique political heroism that ever bore arms for the race.

The age-old struggle against beverage alcohol draws on toward its culmination. I fail utterly to read aright the signs of the times, if the rum beast is not now in his death throes. And as one to whom the message of America has become very dear—dearer than life itself, I have a deep concern that this republic, first of the nations to find a fixed place in the upper levels of democracy, shall not lag behind; that in the last issues of the triumph over drink, she shall be in the front of the world.

But if America is to lead the van of civilization into the promised land of prohibition, she must make haste. Autocratic Russia has shouldered her out of the front rank, and it is high time for the voice of the people to speak—to speak overwhelmingly, and to speak where the voice of the people is heard. The only adequate slogan for the present crisis is "Capture the Government." The only time for us is now.

I stand tonight on holy ground, the ground of my nativity, for I was born in the far-cast shadows of these mountains of the Oregon country. It was here that my father hewed through the wilderness a way for his church. It was here that my mother, his fit mate, bent her knees to make the altar of my childhood.

There is a story filling my heart, that is to me "the song of songs," but there is no time to tell it. The end of that story has to do with the time when fresh from college, conscious of the fact that I carried the whole world on my shoulders, and not even wearied by the load, I attended my first prohibition convention. It was held in Portland, Oregon. There were only fifty delegates present, and two of the delegates were young men. I was disappointed and disgusted, and quite sure that I had cast my pearls in an unprofitable place, I resolved that this first prohibition convention should be my last.

I wonder now why I returned to the auditorium for the afternoon session, but I did return, and there were still fifty delegates present. I do not remember a single occurrence of the afternoon—until the collection was announced. I never forget collections, and the sound of that one does not even grow dim through the years. The appeal for money was made without hope, and the response was hopeless. There came a moment just before the collectors started dejectedly out with their battered hats, when prohibition on the Pacific coast struck bottom, and I had no hope that it would ever rise again.

But for that hour, as for all hours of crisis, God had a man. Ah, you picture him, young and pulsating life, with the form of an Apollo, a Jovian head, and a voice of liquid fire, a leader to rally the despondent hosts with the very contagion of his own masterful personality. But this is not the picture. The man God made for that hour was old and stooped, and he had a voice that sounded like a file. I had not seen him before I heard his voice. Turning in my seat, I raised my eyes to his pathetic figure as he stood at the railing of the gallery in the far rear of the room.

Trembling with fright and weakness, he leaned out toward the platform, and in a voice scarcely audible at the beginning, made the speech that became the first spark of the conflagration that last November dried up the last rum spring in Oregon and Washington. This was the speech:

"Brethren and sisters, I came down from Union county yesterday and visited my wife in the Good Samaritan Hospital. She had an operation. After paying the bills there I had one dollar left. I had a return ticket. Last night I stayed in the Union Station so that I could give this money to the cause today."

He hesitated for just a moment, and then reached out his hand and from it a one dollar bill fluttered to the floor of the hall. That was all—no tears, or other heroics. But standing here tonight I give it to you as my conviction that measured by the scale of results it was one of the most profoundly eloquent speeches ever delivered in the Northwest. That convention was born again. Men and women wept like children, and renewed their youth in faith and courage. They raised what seemed to me a marvelous sum, and some of them gave amounts that held mortgages an extra year on their farms. The convention became a

(Continued on Page Seven)

INTERVIEWING "DAD"

THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT VIEWED OVER JOHNNIE'S HEAD

HATTIE C. VAUGHAN, Issaquah, Wash.

"Say, pa, teacher says I have to write a paper on 'state sovereignty,' so I got to find out all I can about it. Do you think, pa, that a state has a right to do as it pleases, or can the United States make it do as it says?"

Mr. Barton lifted his eyes from the page and fixed them on his son's face. "Pretty deep subject for a thirteen-year-old," he commented. "Yes," he continued, "I do believe in 'state rights' and I know why that fanatic teacher of yours started the subject. She thinks that Hobson Amendment should be foisted on us all. I tell you it isn't fair and it'll never carry."

"Why, pa, it isn't right to sell booze, is it?"

"I don't say it is right, but I do say the United States has no business to dictate to the states what to do in the matter. Each state should settle that for itself."

Tom's eyes widened with interest. Usually the result of his efforts to obtain information from his father was disappointing. Now, however, he was fortunate, and seemed certainly to have struck a subject of interest, for Mr. Barton laid down his paper and faced about, the better to impress his views. This was not an opportunity to miss and Tom was quick to grasp it.

"But, dad, teacher says the government is like a parent and the states are like the children, and that while the states can do some things to please themselves, just as children can, yet the government can just step in and make 'em do, or make 'em stop, just as you can do with us. She says it wouldn't be a 'union' if each state could do just as it pleased."

"Well, son, that teacher of yours does not know it all, smart as she thinks she is! I tell you, each state has its own government and makes its own laws."

"How would it be then, pa, if England or Germany should start in to whip one of our states? If the other states didn't want to help, what's to hinder them licking us, one at a time?"

"I'd like to see them do it! The states don't have to say they'll do that. Uncle Sam will see to that matter. If a foreign foe touches one of the states, he touches all of them, or if one person is molested, the whole United States is ready to defend him."

"Well, dad, teacher says that booze kills more men than war. I should think if Uncle Sam takes such good care of his own folks, he'd knock these booze-sellers off the earth."

"He hasn't the right, I tell you. He could withhold a federal license if he wished, but each state has a right to make its own laws regarding the stuff. Of course, if this Hobson Amendment carries, then if three-fourths of the states go dry, the other fourth will have to do as they say, and it isn't fair."

"Looks to me like it ought to be the other way about," said Tom, "and have it take three-fourths to make it wet, in place of three-fourths to make it dry, but say, father, did three-fourths of the states vote against slavery when Lincoln freed the slaves?"

"Certainly not. That was different. Slavery was degrading. It placed no value on human life, and for a money value it caused untold suffering. It was a menace to the welfare of the country, and as such, of course the President had the right to declare it should cease, which he did."

"Well, father," exclaimed Tom, his eyes shining with the thought of a new possibility, "I should think the President would do that way now. All the things you told over about slavery are just the same with alcohol—the suffering, and the children made into slaves, slaves to drink, and the folks made into awful wicked people, thieves and murderers, and gamblers. Teacher says that more men die every few days from drink than were drowned on the 'Titanic.' Why, this is lots worse than that slavery. I should really think that if the President could do that for them, that he could do the same now for us. Couldn't we get him to, father?"

"No use. You see all the states claim the right to raise money for improvements, running the government, etc., as they think best, and they fear they cannot get along without the revenue from the saloons."

"Does everybody—all the grown-ups, I mean—help to raise the revenue?"

"All who have property have to pay taxes, and the money thus raised goes for that purpose, but all do not help to raise the saloon revenue—that is, not directly."

"Do we help raise the saloon revenue?"

"Certainly not! We don't patronize the saloon. Of course, if they were to 'go in the hole' we should have to make it up by paying bigger taxes."

"I should think it would be the poor boozers that would go in the hole, but, dad, if it's right to get the revenue that way, seems like we ought to go and buy booze, so as to help out and do our part."

"Now, my boy, don't worry about that. There'll be plenty to buy it. We don't use it; let the ones who drink it pay the bill. They don't have to be boozers if they don't want to."

"Teacher says though, pa, that one boy in every five has to become a boozer, to keep the thing going, and, dad," continued Tom, his misty eyes and unsteady voice showing how much in earnest he was, "I'd lots rather be a boozer than to have Johnnie be one. I just couldn't bear to see Johnnie a boozer."

Mr. Barton shifted uneasily in his chair as he thought of his four-year-old baby boy, the idol of their hearts. He was silent so long that Tom feared his mind had gone to other things and he did want to learn all he could about "state sovereignty." Finally his father began speaking, slowly, meditatively:

"It is very strange how different that Hobson Amendment seems as I look at it over Johnnie's head, or from a financial stand. I really think, son," with an approving nod, "that for his sake—and for the sake of someone else I know—the amendment would be a good thing. It is possible—smiling whimsically—that there are other people who have 'Johnnies' whom it would benefit."

"Oh, there are, pa! Not, of course, all named 'Johnnie,'" explained Tom, with strict adherence to the truth, "but I know what you mean."

"Well, for their sake, make your paper pretty strong."

"I'll try, father, and teacher says the one that has the best essay shall have it put in the paper, for the editor promised her, and maybe mine will be the best and lots of people will read it and maybe it'll help some. Do you know of anything we could do, dad, to help make the amendment pass?"

"Sometimes it helps to send letters—lots of letters—to the Congressmen, telling them what we want. If they think that most of the people want it to pass, they'll pass it all right. You could put that recommendation in your paper."

"That'll be fine. I will, and I tell you, pa, I'll have the teacher write, telling them what we want, and all of us kids will sign it," volunteered Tom, as he started upstairs to bed. He paused, however, with his hand on the door knob to say,

"Don't you think that might help some for Johnnie?"

Mr. Barton studied the bright, animated face before him, and then replied:

"It will certainly be worth trying—for Johnnie's sake."

GREAT DISCOVERIES OF THE RACE

(Continued from Page Six)

political Pentecost, whose fires did not falter, even though poison damps of defeat often rolled against them—until the liquor traffic of these two sovereign states was utterly consumed. Today those fires are part of the on-sweeping wall of patriotic flame that will purge the nation by 1920.

As for me, my purposes, formed as a lad a few years before, were sanctified. The political perspective that I was beginning to think a mistake was finally fixed. From that hour to this, when I have been tempted to turn back, because of dissatisfaction with that which has seemed to me to be criminally slow progress and inexcusable pettiness, but which I am now fully convinced has been also part of the divine plan, the old man of the gallery has blocked my way. His faded eyes have pierced me, his knotted hands have grasped me, and his weakness has hurled me back to the fighting front, where you and my brothers stand.

Years ago I heard an old-fashioned sermon on heaven, on the surprises of heaven. There will be surprises in heaven, but I will not be surprised if in the last day in the front ranks of those who stand about the great white throne, with the Goughs and Willards of this reform and clothed in a robe of distinction like unto theirs, stands the humble man who turned the scale when prohibition hung in the balance in the Oregon country.

And the picture of the old man in the gallery is the picture of this reform; conceived in the mind of God, drawing nourishment out of adversity because it is divine, making the weakness of men to confound the mighty, dying down in the intensity of its immediate activity, but never dying, turning aside and halting between two opinions as to method, but never turning back, finding heroic figures to fill the breaches that every human judgment said were beyond repair—a reform moving forward in a current at times so sluggish as to give the appearance of stagnation, at other times having the proportions of a Niagara flood, sweeping states and nations to the bedrock of sobriety in a day, but a reform always moving forward, and as irresistible as the tides of the sea.

Even as the conflict itself was born in the mind of God, and has been through all the vicissitudes of its varying fortunes, under His governing hand, so the final goal is fixed by Omnipotence. Tonight, not in the banquet room of a drunken Belshazzar, but in the council chamber of the organized, virtuous womanhood of America, the hand of God writes on the walls of civilization the Tekel of alcohol, a saloonless nation, a stainless flag, a sober world.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, November 25, 1915

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, Hartford, Wis., rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

THREE IMPORTANT DATES IN DECEMBER

The outlook is promising for a general and enthusiastic observance of the three special National Constitutional Prohibition days in December. It is hoped that no local union will fail to plan definitely for a service on the Day of Prayer for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Thursday, December 2. On the Sunday following, December 5, every pastor is to be requested to remember in prayer at the regular church service the cause of National Constitutional Prohibition, and on Sunday, December 12, mass meetings are to be held in the churches all over the United States. Insure the success of these meetings by arranging for them early.

Miss Mary B. Ervin, general secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion Branch, and Miss Mary F. W. Anderson, general secretary of the Young People's Branch of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have been spending a few days in Evanston in conference with the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. concerning plans for the year, and in the preparation of their respective year books.

We wish to call special attention to the program for Day of Prayer, December 2, which will be furnished in quantities, at 25 cents per hundred, by the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.

Mass Meeting To Be Held In Washington On December 12, Under Auspices of National W. C. T. U.

A mass meeting under the auspices of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, will be held in Washington, D. C., at Poli's Theater, on the afternoon of Sunday, December 12. Mrs. Mary Harris Armor and Dr. Mary Stone, president of the China W. C. T. U., will be the chief speakers. Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, will preside, and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, and Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary, will participate in the meeting. Others who have signified their intention of being present are Mrs. Ella M. George, president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., Mrs. Jennie L. W. Rooke, president of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., Mrs. D. K. Livingston, National superintendent, Mrs. M. M. Allen, National superintendent, and Miss Mary F. W. Anderson, National Y. P. B. secretary. Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, National Legislative superintendent, and her associates, Mrs. Emma S. Shelton and Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, will, of course, be among those in attendance. It is also hoped to have at the meeting a number of members of Congress, especially those from the prohibition states, and many pastors, and in all probability a number of men's Bible classes will march in a body to the theater. The nineteen prohibition states will be represented by young girls, who will contribute one of the musical numbers of the program.

The National W. C. T. U. president has called an informal conference of the members of the Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U. and the general officers of the District W. C. T. U., to be held at the Driscoll Hotel, National W. C. T. U. headquarters, on Saturday, December 11, at ten o'clock a. m.

THANKS-GIVING AND THANKS-LIVING

The newspapers are full of Thanksgiving poems, preachments and proclamations, and it is well that it is so. We cannot have too many and too fervent expressions of our gratitude for the marvelous victories of the past year in reform lines and for our preservation as a nation from the ravages of war. But after all, thanks-saying, be it ever so eloquent, is not, in the truest sense of the word, thanks-giving. In what tangible, permanent, far-reaching fashion are we to give thanks so that the effect of our acts shall bless the world for a full twelve months or more? Let us give it in the form of definite service for the cause for which we stand, in the doing of the duty that in our own particular community seems most insistent: The circulation of petitions, the raising of funds, the distribution of literature and the gaining of new members for our local unions. Thanks-giving which becomes thanks-living insures a glorious continuation of victories for the kingdom of righteousness.

NOT ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY!!

"Except for the decreased majority against prohibition the election in Ohio would be entirely satisfactory," remarks Mida's Criterion, the leading liquor journal of the Northwest. This exception, however, with the defeat of the constitutional stability measure, seems to take much of the joy out of what the liquorites are trying hard to make themselves believe is a victory. At least the warning issued by the Criterion would seem to indicate a fearful looking-forward to the next election rather than serene satisfaction over the safety of the trade in Ohio. "If Ohio is to remain a free state," says the paper above mentioned, "some radical changes in men and methods must be made previous to the beginning of the next campaign. In the long ago, 3,000 years more or less before prohibition was invented, a Greek general on being congratulated on a victory, answered, 'Another such victory and we are undone.' Verb. sap."

Over 100,000 churches affiliated with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America observed World's Temperance Sunday, by delivering from their pulpits special sermons on the liquor evil.

OBSERVANCE OF WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY WIDESPREAD

The temperance cause cannot fail to receive an impetus from the wide-spread observance of World's Temperance Sunday, on November 14. The demand for literature and supplies of every kind used in the preparation of the programs for this day has been unprecedented. This material was sent out literally by the ton from the Publishing House of the National W. C. T. U. and Miss Addie A. Austin and the workers in that department at National Headquarters were happy to devote not only their days but evenings for a week or ten days preceding the 14th to forwarding to eager teachers, Sunday school superintendents and local unions the helps needed. Of no trifling significance is the tremendous interest taken in this day. If the superintendents, teachers and pupils of our Sunday schools can be interested and enthused on the subject of total abstinence and prohibition there will be set in motion forces which can revolutionize every community in the land. A long step in this direction, we believe, has been taken and it remains for the Christian people everywhere to sustain and promote this interest and crystallize it into definite activities for the cause of National Constitutional Prohibition. The meetings to be held in the month of December, beginning with the day of prayer, December 2, will afford an excellent opportunity for utilizing the enthusiasm generated by World's Temperance Sunday.

BEFORE AND AFTER ELECTION

Before election in the states where woman suffrage was an issue, the personal liberty advocates endeavored to impress the public with the idea that it was quite immaterial to them which way the question was decided at the polls inasmuch as the woman's vote would not in any way affect their business. However, after election, they made no effort to conceal their relief at the outcome. Speaking of the delayed victory for the "Votes for Women" cause, Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular exults, "All uncertainty over the election is now removed. The defeat of prohibition in Ohio and of woman suffrage in New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania will remove all doubt that existed. A business revival will quickly follow." And Mida's Criterion, in recording the same event admits, "There was fear on the part of the advocates of personal liberty that woman suffrage would be used for the curtailment of personal liberty and therefore we thought it the safer plan to vote against conceding the privilege of franchise to women."

SUNDAY "BLUE LAW" DISPELS "BLUE MONDAY"

"Blue Monday" in the business world of Chicago is destined to go out of fashion if the chief executive and police force of that city continue to enforce the Sunday closing law which the personal liberty advocates have long characterized as of a "deadly blue" hue. Heads of the big industrial concerns of the Lake Michigan metropolis see a very direct relation between the enforcement of the Sunday-closing law and the physical and mental condition of their employes on Mondays, and naturally they are not inclined to agree with the liquorites' caustic criticism of the puritanical, undemocratic law and its enforcement.

For many years "Blue Monday" has cut down the profits of many a big concern, and were the loss due to Sunday dissipation of the men who do the work of the big city to be estimated in dollars and cents it would, we believe, startle the citizens into voting out the saloon. The men who manage the great industries tell us that Sunday drinking has meant lessened efficiency, decreased mental and moral stamina, depreciated physical vigor and the wasting of money and consequent worry over financial conditions. "Our workmen now come to the plants on Monday morning with clear heads and rested bodies," said a foreman of Armour & Co., the big packing house. "It was the complaint of all packers before the saloons were closed that many of the men either did not show up at all on Monday or reported with 'hangovers' that reduced their efficiency fifty per cent during the day and affected it for several days thereafter. Now the men are on hand Monday morning with steady muscles, rested bodies and minds, fit for their tasks."

Similar was the testimony of the management of the Illinois Steel Company. "Our workmen were all on hand last Monday for the first time in years," said one of the foremen, the week after the Sunday closing law was enforced. "When we asked them what caused the change they said they had nothing to do Sunday but rest for Monday. Besides most of them had enough of their wages left not to need to ask for advances before the next week ended."

"The closing of the saloons is a boon to industry," said one of the department managers of the International Harvester works. "When the employes have had time to note its effect, they will give it their heartiest support."

"The direct effect on the building trades is that about twenty-five per cent more workmen were on hand last Monday than at any time during the period I have been handling large numbers of workmen," said a member of the Contractors' Association of Painters and Decorators.

If such beneficial results can follow the elimination of the sale of alcoholic liquors for one day of the week, what might not be the effect if it were entirely stopped? One would imagine that the citizens of any community would welcome a law, even though it were as blue as indigo, if it so largely added to the efficiency, the happiness and the health of the people.

CARRANZA INAUGURATES ANTI-LIQUOR REFORMS IN MEXICO CITY

Not even in Mexico is John Barleycorn allowed "personal liberty" to carry on his nefarious work. A special cable dispatch from Mexico City to the New York Sun says that on orders from First Chief Carranza the capital authorities have begun a series of reforms affecting the saloons, banks and merchants. The governor is said to have ordered all saloons removed from the two principal thoroughfares of the city. Many of these are large and richly furnished and were the meeting places of high officials. All saloons within a hundred meters of Mexico's numerous churches were ordered to remove elsewhere. Saloonkeepers generally were ordered not to sell more than a half liter of strong drink to a single person. The governor's order says that any saloon remaining closed for five days as a sign of protest against new regulations will be permanently closed by the authorities.

IMPORTANT COURT DECISION

The United States Supreme Court has very recently handed down a decision holding that a man shipping liquor, without labelling it as such, from one state to another, may be prosecuted in either state. This decision is founded on the principle that the crime follows the shipment and that persons who are found making illegal shipments may be prosecuted in the state of the destination as well as in the state of the origin of the shipment. It will make possible the prosecution of the offender in the dry state to which the shipment is sent and naturally gives greater assurance of conviction.

Three prohibition voters are said to have been added to the House of Representatives by the elections of November 2 in New York state.

THE "HUMAN OUTPUT" TEST

Is the "human output" rather than the "dollars and cents" standard coming to govern in municipal affairs? If the women have their way, says Mary McDowell, the well-known social worker of Chicago, such will be the case. In an address recently delivered in her home city, she declared, "The modern city is tested by its human output. What the women of Chicago want is a human output which will guarantee the future of American democracy."

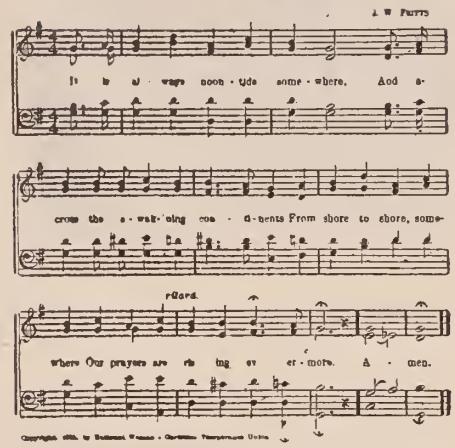
That this comes very nearly being a creed for a large section of America, for the portion of the population who still cleave to the traditions of Lincoln, is the opinion of the Chicago Herald. This newspaper agrees that "the 'human output' is the test of the city, and that the city is great only in so far as it contributes to the greatest happiness of the greatest number. A truism, perhaps, but likewise a yardstick by which many of the most baffling of municipal problems may be measured."

It goes without saying that the "human output" test would speedily dispose of that institution permitted in license cities, the product of which fills the hospitals, infirmaries, poor-houses, jails and penitentiaries.

Governor-elect Bilbo of Mississippi, in a recent state convention of the Baptist denomination, asked the co-operation and support of all the churches in securing more perfect enforcement of the prohibition laws of the state.

That the saloons of Iowa must not only be closed but that they must have all superfluous goods out of the state by December 31, 1915, is the gist of the opinion recently announced by the attorney general of the state.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



THE REFORMER'S WATCHWORD

When from the throne of God, that throne where the weary have refuge,
Where in the midst of distress, there is calm, that mandate is uttered,—
Mandate not uttered alone that day for the thousands of Judah,
But to all ages addressed, and to all generations,—"go forward."
Forward, when all seems lost, and the cause looks utterly hopeless;
Forward, when brave hearts fail, and to yield is the rede of the coward;
Forward, when friends fall off, and enemies gather around thee;
Thou, though alone with thy God, alone in thy courage, go forward,
Help, though deferred, shall arrive; ere morn the night is at darkest.

—Neale's "Egypt."

GREAT EDUCATOR AND LEADER PROMOTED

In the promotion of Dr. Booker T. Washington, president of the Tuskegee Institute, writer, educator, public speaker, and leader of the negro race, America has lost a great citizen. North and South unite in their appreciation of his wonderful leadership of the struggling colored race into paths of sanity and usefulness. Born a slave, handicapped by poverty, race and home environments, he heroically surmounted all these obstacles and became a recognized power for good in the nation. The governor of the state of Alabama, which he loved to call his home, and to which he begged to be taken for his last days, says of him, "The colored race has lost a great leader in the death of Booker T. Washington. Born a slave, living a life of earnest endeavor and at his death the chief executive of an institution of nation-wide reputation created by his own brain and energy, he has demonstrated to the world the unbounded possibilities open to those whose purpose it is to accomplish something, and this marks him as one of the able men of his time." Dr. Washington was always and ever a courageous, outspoken advocate of total abstinence and prohibition, and was fearless in his denunciation of the liquor evil as the most dangerous enemy of both the black and white race.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Minnie Starrett, Clarks, Neb., promoted November 10, president of the local union, a woman of high ideals, who had stood for years for better civic life.

Rev. Sylvanus Stall, D. D., Atlantic City, N. J., founder and president of the Vir Publishing Company, and author of many books on Purity.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

DECEMBER 23—Crusade Day.

SUPERINTENDENTS

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP

MRS. EMMA L. STARRETT

We would like to have all state papers copy the offer of prizes for posters and cartoons, and give it all other publicity possible. We desire also that local and state prizes may be offered as suggested, or for amounts that may be decided upon.

We feel this contest will be of great educational value, and urge that a public display be made of the posters and cartoons entered in the contest, both in colleges and public schools, and other public places. Printed leaflets of the above offer that can be distributed in colleges and public schools will be sent for postage.

The Plan of Work for the Christian Citizenship department will be along the same general lines as in previous years with special emphasis on law enforcement, the urging of courses on good citizenship, morals and vocational guidance in the public schools; study classes in civics, civil government, temperance and reform laws (the latter for better enforcement of laws); co-operation for the opening of school-houses for use as social centers and for public discussion of community interests and voting places; for the establishment of public comfort stations; and the establishment of reading rooms and other attractive centers as substitutes for saloons.

The last Sunday in October will be observed as Christian Citizenship Sunday.

I will send gratis as many Plans of Work as there are unions in a state, on request of state superintendent. Department budget of 20 leaflets, 10 cents.

Central City, Nebraska.

$60 IN PRIZES FOR BEST TEMPERANCE POSTERS AND CARTOONS

$35 for Best Posters

The department of Christian Citizenship will give a prize of $25 for the best temperance poster designed by a college or university student; and a prize of $10 for the second best.

The poster must be 28x42 in size, drawn on drawing paper or oilcloth that can be sent rolled, by parcel post. The phase of the liquor traffic to be portrayed is left to the individual student.

If a state prize is offered, all competing should send posters to the state superintendent of Christian Citizenship or judges designated by her, by August 15. The prize posters will be forwarded by her to the National superintendent. Where no state prize is offered, all competing should send posters to the National superintendent.

$25 for Best Cartoon

A prize of $25, to be known as the Frances E. Beauchamp Prize, will be awarded for the best cartoon designed by a student in the seventh or eighth grade or high school.

Size of cartoon to be 9x12 or 10x15 inches. (May vary one or two inches either way.)

A series of prizes should be offered by local, county, district and state unions, with three or more schools competing, the local prize to be about $2.50, county or district $5, state $10.

The drawings should be in the hands of the judges in local contests in May or June; then be sent immediately to state judges, and by them to the National superintendent.

In states where no prizes are offered they should be sent direct to the National superintendent.

All posters and cartoons submitted are to be the property of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. If reproduced, the name of the artist will appear on same. The prizes will be awarded at the National W. C. T. U. Convention. All posters and cartoons submitted should be mailed by September 9 to my address.

MRS. EMMA L. STARRETT,
Central City, Nebraska.

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Abbie G. Locke, Antigo, Wis., who has recently become a life member of the National W. C. T. U., expresses the greatest pleasure at being thus connected with the organization. Although on account of age and ill-health she is unable to do active work, she is undivided in her loyalty and devotion to the cause.

Mrs. Sara Louisa Oberholtzer, National superintendent of School Savings and Thrift, on her way home from the Seattle Convention, spoke, by request of the city superintendent of public schools, at the Colorado State Teachers' Institute in the Denver Auditorium. Mrs. Oberholtzer also called by appointment on Miss Bradford, state superintendent of public schools. Pronounced approval is accorded the school savings banks in Denver and this effort, combined with the excellent essay work being done by the earnest state W. C. T. U. superintendent of this department, Mrs. Ida N. Taylor, will probably result in the introduction of school savings in certain of the Denver schools.

Miss Margaret J. Bilz, National organizer and lecturer, is at present in Maryland for an engagement of four weeks. Her work in the city of Baltimore included an institute, a parliamentary drill and an evening address at the state W. C. T. U. Headquarters, 516 Park Ave., and an address at the North Avenue Baptist church.

The Adrian (Mich.) union, Mrs. Florence M. Harvey, president, on October 8 entertained the five mothers' clubs of the city at a union meeting with Mrs. Maude Glasner, state superintendent of Purity, as the principal speaker. There were 180 present, and a social time with refreshments, followed the program. On October 15 the annual reception to public school teachers held in the Presbyterian manse was largely attended. A short program was given, the main features being the presentation to the teachers of the plans and aims of the S. T. I. department, and the response by the superintendent of schools. Last spring 207 essays were written for the prize essay contest, the high school prize essay being awarded the state prize.

The thirty-second annual convention of the Delaware county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. held in Bovina Center, is one long to be remembered. The cordial welcomes of the churches and the missionary societies and the encouraging and fervent addresses of the ministers inspired the workers to still greater activity for the coming year. Among the good things of the program were the addresses by Mrs. Walker, Mr. W. W. Ayers, Ex-Convict Howard, Miss Helen N. Ecker and many others, with the annual address of the county president, Mrs. F. C. Daniels, as probably the outstanding feature of the meeting. Mrs. Daniels was unanimously re-elected president, an office she has held for the past eight years. Since the close of the convention Delaware county has gone dry, making the third dry county in New York state.

The Milford (Del.) W. C. T. U. won the prize offered for the best float in the civic parade at the Firemen's Carnival and Home-Coming week. The float, the town water wagon, was effectively decorated with prohibition banners, and was artistically draped in white and drawn by white horses wearing blankets marked "W. C. T. U." At the top of the wagon the Goddess of Liberty was seen bearing her torch of truth aloft and beside the float walked nineteen young girls each wearing a badge indicating one of the dry states. Attached to the wagon was a ladder which Uncle Sam was trying to mount. The prize of five dollars was returned by the W. C. T. U. to the firemen to aid their cause.

LIQUOR AND THE SUFFRAGE ELECTIONS

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

The wife of Philadelphia's reform mayor (Mrs. Lucretia Longshore Blankenburg, for many years head of the state suffrage association of Pennsylvania) when asked just before the elections whether we were likely to carry any of the eastern campaign states, shook her head doubtfully and said:

"We might do it, if it weren't for the pesky liquor dealers."

Mrs. Blankenburg knew whereof she spoke, for suffragists everywhere have found the organized rum power to be their greatest adversary. So it proved in October in New Jersey, where corrupt liquor interests defeated the suffrage amendment by a vote of 184,390 to 133,282—a majority of 51,108 against suffrage.

The November elections revealed the same sinister influences at work and suffrage was not endorsed in any of the three remaining campaign states of 1915—Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania. These three states, as everybody knows, are among the deadly dark spots that mar the constantly whitening prohibition map of the United States, and the blackest of these states is Pennsylvania. It was naturally thought the election results would put Pennsylvania in the rear, and even the most optimistic of "Keystone state" suffragists never imagined her state would lead.

This has been the great surprise and the wonderful cheer of the election—a silver lining to the cloud. Thirty-one of the sixty-seven counties of Pennsylvania voted "yes" for woman suffrage! Chief among these was Allegheny county (with the city of Pittsburgh and its population of over half a million)—a county exceeded in population only by California, among the suffrage states, and now facetiously called "the state of Allegheny." Allegheny county enjoys the distinction of being the first county of a million or more population to give a majority for suffrage. Two of the big anthracite counties, Luzerne and Lackawanna, including the cities of Wilkes Barre and Scranton, were carried for suffrage.

The largest majority—4,500—was that of Erie county in the extreme northeast of Pennsylvania and one of the unbroken tier of northern counties (eight in line) which endorsed "Votes for Women" with good majorities. This tier and the solid bank of western counties won for suffrage, and all in white make the map of Pennsylvania look as if it had been "snowed under" by suffrage. What a happy augury of the happy day when Pennsylvania will be all white on both the suffrage and the prohibition map!

Its first suffrage campaign has been a memorable one for the "Keystone state." Many women, aided by chivalrous men, have united in the work. The W. C. T. U., over 43,000 strong, was a powerful leverage throughout the state. The state federation of Women' Clubs gave hearty cooperation. The state suffrage association, the equal franchise society, and the woman suffrage party were among the specially active suffrage groups. Speakers from suffrage states and women of special oratorical gifts gave their aid. Varied methods were used to carry the suffrage truth to the voters—outdoor and indoor meetings, shop talks, posters, street banners, suffrage fetes, and great parades, that in Philadelphia, the "Festival of Light," being a remarkable object lesson for suffrage with "Justice" or "Woman's Liberty Bell" and thousands of working women in line.

The most impressive means of calling the attention of Pennsylvania men to the injustice of disfranchisement was undoubtedly this "Liberty Bell." Traveling as it did five thousand miles zig-zag over the state it stirred suffrage enthusiasm wherever it went and was a potent call for "Votes for Women." Its appearance in Pittsburgh on July 4 made a deep impression on the people and wherever it went in country and town during the summer, it was the center of an inspiring suffrage demonstration.

The "Woman's Liberty Bell" was escorted in a wonderful way through the streets of Philadelphia during the "Festival of Light," decked with flowers on a float, preceded by a body guard of young women representing the civic virtues and surrounded by others representing the suffrage states.

Pennsylvania women did not depend on "guile or wile" to win the vote. They had committees about the polls and in some places furnished vehicles to get out the vote. Elsewhere the women sent letters or cards stating that they did not want to bother the voters but would appreciate the vote. The pinning of yellow ribbons on coats was a feature of the suffrage campaign in some precincts. Everywhere, even in the roughest sections of Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg, the voters treated the women with consideration.

"Why do you want the vote?" asked one voter of a woman helper at the polls opposite a saloon.

"Because I want to vote out that saloon," was the frank response.

It was said that if either New York or Pennsylvania could be won, the entire opposition to woman suffrage in the East would rapidly crumble away. The elections substantiate this statement, and have inspired joy among the earnest workers that so many men could be reached and convinced and such wonderful results be shown at the first campaign in the intensely conservative East.

In Massachusetts, 35.5 per cent of the total vote of over 458,000 was cast for suffrage. In New York the percentage was 42 in a total of over 1,200,000 votes. Forty-two per cent of New Jersey's 317,672 voters endorsed suffrage, and in Pennsylvania, of over 680,000 men who expressed by their vote their desire as to woman suffrage, more than 310,000 or 45.6 per cent were for it!

Thus out of a total of over two and a half million voters in the four states, over one million endorsed votes for women. These are the figures at this writing, and the official revisions will probably not change them greatly.

That Pennsylvania should thus lead the East shows a growing liberalism and independence of action not credited to the state, and augurs future success. The great cities of New York and Philadelphia, however, (and Philadelphia, sad to say, is again in the grip of corrupt politicians) are strongholds of the drink evil against which it will be necessary to bring all the combined forces of good in the new campaigns already launched.

ANNUAL ADDRESS

Of Anna Adams Gordon, President National W. C. T. U., Delivered at Seattle

is a hand book of total abstinence and prohibition progress, a book of reference for every white ribboner and every student interested in the popular subject of the day.

Price, per copy, 5 cents.

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

JOHN BARLEYCORN

Responsible for Mental Disorders

"Any effort to fight alcoholism will help us as much as it will help the criminologist and the charity worker, because it is not merely an individual problem but really one of communities," says Adolf Meyer, M. D., of Johns Hopkins Hospital, in an article in The Survey on "Organizing the Community for the Protection of Its Mental Life."

"What I feel most keenly is the necessity of organizing in our communities societies for total abstinence, to which it would be possible to join individuals who are slowly recovering from the effects of disease. Unless recovering individuals join groups of normally-living persons maintaining standards of total abstinence and providing social compensations for drinking habits, it is not often that they will resist for any length of time the attractions of alcohol and the attractions of destructive social companionships."

Dr. Meyer states in the course of his article that "in the much maligned state of Maine, there is absolutely no doubt that alcoholic insanity is relatively much less frequent than in any other state of which I know."

He finds from personal investigation that "those nationalities that indulge largely in the social habits of alcoholism or in the ordinary use of alcohol, recruit the largest number of cases of alcoholic insanity in our hospitals. * * * There is an average of about twenty to twenty-five per cent of alcoholic insanity among the male admissions in wine and beer-drinking communities."

WISE WORDS

A Physician on Food

A physician out in Oregon has views about food. He says:

"I have always believed that the duty of the physician does not cease with treating the sick, but that we owe it to humanity to teach them how to protect their health especially by hygienic and dietetic laws.

"With such a feeling as to my duty I take great pleasure in saying that, in my own experience and also from personal observation, I have found no food to equal Grape-Nuts and that I find there is almost no limit to the great benefit this food will bring when used in all cases of sickness and convalescence.

"It is my experience that no physical condition forbids the use of Grape-Nuts. To persons in health there is nothing so nourishing and acceptable to the stomach, especially at breakfast, to start the machinery of the human system on the day's work.

"In cases of indigestion I know that a complete breakfast can be made of Grape-Nuts and cream; and I think it is necessary not to overload the stomach at the morning meal. I also know the great value of Grape-Nuts when the stomach is too weak to digest other food.

"This is written after an experience of more than 20 years treating all manner of chronic and acute diseases, and the letter is voluntary on my part without any request for it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

VIOLA'S MEDAL

LOTTA CORRINE SHEPARD

"O mother, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to have a silver medal contest and Mrs. Stone wants me to speak. Do say I may! I know I can win the medal. The children in this town can't recite very well." Viola Hunt was out of breath when she had delivered this speech for she had run all the way home from the Loyal Temperance Legion meeting.

"If it will not interfere with your school work you may take part," replied her mother, "but you must not be so boastful and sure of success. Remember: 'Let him who thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.'"

"Mrs. Stone said I just must be in the contest," Viola continued with shining eyes. "We are to be trained after school hours, but you will train me, won't you, mother. You can do it better than any of them."

The recitations were soon assigned and the children earnestly at work. Viola, who had had the advantages of training in a city school and whose mother had taught her at home to recite well, felt not a little superior to the other contestants with their sing-song style of reciting, which was only partially eliminated by the careful efforts of the L. T. L. leader.

A few days before the contest a county officer arrived to make the final arrangements and, being a friend of Mrs. Hunt, was entertained at the Hunt home. Viola had gone back to school after the noon meal and Mrs. Hunt and her guest sat at the table chatting.

"My dear," said Miss Beach, "how old is Viola?"

"She will be twelve the twentieth of this month," replied Mrs. Hunt.

"That's too bad," rejoined Miss Beach, regretfully. "The rule is," she continued, "that contestants must be of nearly the same age, and the others are all older than that. We must have Viola in the class for she is the redeeming feature but it will be impossible to allow her to compete for the medal. I am afraid it will be a very great disappointment to the poor child."

Mrs. Hunt looked thoughtful in her turn. "Suppose Viola is unwilling to speak when she knows she can not have the medal; still it would hardly be fair to allow the audience to think she was beaten when she was not a contestant—it is a problem."

"Yes, it is a problem, and one Viola will have to solve for us," decided the county officer.

When Viola returned from school a little later her mother met her at the door. "Come in, dear. Mother has something to tell you," she commenced, a little doubtful of her success in winning Viola over to her point of view. "You speak your piece very nicely—"

"Yes, mother," broke in Viola. "When Miss Beach heard us recite today she did not correct me at all, and she did the others a lot."

"Yes, dear, we are all pleased with you and feel sure you will do well, but, Viola, Miss Beach tells me the contestants must be nearly the same age and you know the others are two or three years older than you are." Viola opened her blue eyes in amazement for a moment, then exclaimed, "What difference does that make?"

"Enough difference to bar you out of the contest, for rules are rules and we must obey them," her mother said in the quiet, firm tone that Viola knew usually closed an argument. Her eyes grew wrathful and she started to protest. Then as she realized that she must give up entirely all hope of the shining silver medal Mrs. Stone had shown them, a storm of tears blinded her. Mrs. Hunt, her arm around her little girl and a moisture in her own eyes, proceeded, "I know, Viola, this is a bitter disappointment to you, but listen! Miss Beach says you are the only redeeming feature of the class and she wants you to go on and speak and she will—"

Seeing her importance to the success of the affair and hugging her last hope, with eyes now dry and flashing, Viola cried out determinedly, "I won't speak if I can't have the medal." Mrs. Hunt, recognizing in the child her own tenacious will, went on gently, "And she will announce to the audience that the mistake was only recently discovered and while you are not competing for the prize yet the number was too good to be left off the program. How does that sound?"

"Why didn't Mrs. Stone tell me I was too young and I wouldn't have bothered with the thing," demanded Viola.

"Because, dear, she did not know there were any rules as to age. Now be mother's sensible daughter and go on and speak your piece as nicely as you can and everyone will know who spoke best, no matter who gets the medal. You will gain more in the end than that bit of silver by swallowing your disappointment and not being unladylike and obstinate. Believe mother, for she has learned about these things." Viola stood weighing the matter in her own logical mind, and at length replied, cheerfully, "All right, mother, I'll do it."

"Mother is very proud of you," with a kiss.

The contesting class filed down the aisle, five boys and five girls, five Sunday suits and shiny, squeaky shoes and five dainty gowns. At the end of the line was Viola Hunt, rosy-cheeked and smiling her sweetest, showing no sign of the pride that had been mastered.

When nine children had spoken Miss Beach announced: "The next number is not part of the contest. Viola Hunt was admitted to the class because the age rule was not understood. Contestants must be about the same age, but owing to her complete preparation we insisted on her remaining on the program. 'The Cry of Today'—Viola Hunt."

Vividly Viola depicted the Chicago fire, a destructive flood and a great earthquake. She reminded her audience that all this suffering had been met by generous aid from the entire nation. Taking a step forward, eyes flashing and every nerve and muscle lending force to her words, she exclaimed,

"Men and brothers! men and voters!
there's a fire that burns today;
There's a flood that's sweeping manhood,
truth and honor fast away;
There's a demon fierce and wrathful, shaking as no earthquake could,
The foundations of the state and planting vice where virtue stood;
There's a war-cry being sounded, and America's brave sons
Flocking to her tottering standard, all her noble-hearted ones—"

The little speaker continued picturing effectively the sorrow and despair caused by drink and appealing to the voters to right the wrong, her enthusiasm growing until a stirring climax was reached and a tearful audience applauded as they had not done that evening.

A few minutes later the shining medal in its velvet-lined case was handed to Louise Black, a girl three years older than Viola.

The light was out and a tired little girl was almost in dreamland when she felt something brush her hair and her mother's voice whispered: "I heard something nice tonight. I overheard one of the judges say to another, 'Did you ever see an easier case to decide than we would have had if number ten had been a contestant'?" With only a goodnight kiss she left Viola to decide whether it had paid to "give in."

"Here is something that came in the mail, dear," was her mother's greeting as Viola entered the house.

"O mother, it's a dainty little book with a lovely poem and colored pictures and here on the first page it says 'To Viola from Lula Beach.'"

"The latest edition of your medal came today, Viola." Mr. Hunt seated himself at the supper table opposite Viola's expectant eyes. "When I was at the polls to help keep this town dry I met Mr. Banks. I had no idea he had changed his mind about saloons helping business, but I slapped him on the shoulder and said, 'Banks, give us a dry vote and use your influence as the biggest man in the town should use it—in the right direction.' I nearly staggered when he said, 'I intend to, Hunt, and I don't mind telling you my change of heart dates from the night your Viola spoke at the contest the temperance women had.'"

There was silence while Mrs. Hunt smiled at her little daughter through tears. Then Viola in serious tone but with mischief in her eyes rejoined: "I think I received a better medal than Louise did—it's the kind that keeps coming."

THE W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT AT THE "MADE IN BALTIMORE" EXPOSITION

The W. C. T. U. booth at the "Made in Baltimore" Exposition, attractive in its white paint, gold letters and electric lights, afforded an excellent opportunity to reach the public with temperance truths. Striking National W. C. T. U. posters were displayed on the walls, but the most effective was the one given below, containing local facts:

"Made in Baltimore"

Penitentiary		1012
Jail		780
Almshouse		1704
Insane	Not including those in private Institutions	1605
Orphans		2315

How Many Through Drink?

This poster was emphasized by a display on a table below, of a miniature Baltimore (made of pasteboard) with its broad bay dotted with steamers, the banks, the market-place and shady parks, with the church, the home and the school house to indicate its uplifting influences, while the saloon, the brewery and distillery, the jail and penitentiary, the almshouse and insane asylum, each marked with the number of its inmates brought there through drink, afforded an illuminating text which, amplified by the W. C. T. U. demonstrators, preached our gospel to the thousands who were passing.

Dr. Goddard's story of the little boy in the Vineland, N. J., institute for the feeble-minded, whose brain had been spoiled by the drink habit of parents and grandparents was portrayed in a realistic way and attracted much attention, impressing many attentive spectators.

A sign was posted, "If you are in sympathy with the temperance movement please sign the register." UNION SIGNALS and Young Crusaders were distributed. Adults received sealed envelopes marked, "A Message for You," containing choicest W. C. T. U. leaflets, while to the children were freely given blotters and leaflets bearing temperance sentiments.

Free ice water was served in sanitary drinking cups to the passing crowds and hundreds heretofore unacquainted with the W. C. T. U. will henceforth remember it with thanksgiving.

A NO-LICENSE VICTORY IN CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY, N. Y.

The no-license forces won a big victory in Chautauqua county, November 2, carrying nine of the ten towns in which the liquor question was submitted. Seven towns went totally dry and in two the anti-liquor people won all propositions except the drug store license. Four of these ten townships were without saloons. Fredonia, of historic Crusade fame, is situated in the town of Pomfret, which belonged on the dry list, and one of the reasons why it remained in this list is given by the local W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Hattie Huff: "Our union bought white ribbon about two inches in width and had the words, 'Vote Dry for Me,' printed on four-inch lengths. On Thursday afternoon before election one was pinned on each child, under fourteen years of age, in the three village schools. Four of our women asked permission to put posters in store windows in the business section. Some store-keepers refused; more gave their consent. On election day in the cold wind and storm a dozen white ribboners stood just outside the distance limit from half past eight in the morning until five in the afternoon handing out cards with this wording:

> "'We cannot vote—but will you please vote for these three: 1. Home—Many a home is happier when we have no saloon. 2. Boy—Remember the boy. Every saloon is a temptation. 3. Mother and Wife—Many a mother and many a wife is praying in secret NOW that you will vote dry.'"

There now remains only one wet township in the county. The two largest cities, Jamestown and Dunkirk, under the Raines law, cannot vote on the question. Chautauqua county also distinguished itself by giving a majority vote of 2,801 on woman suffrage, the largest of any county in the state.

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept. 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME" 90,000 SOLD Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Del.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 76 East Harrison, CHICAGO

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said

Compiled by ANNA ADAMS GORDON

A Souvenir Book

of selections from addresses delivered before the National W. C. T. U. annual conventions, 1899-1913, together with portrait, brief biographical sketch, Mrs. Stevens' historic proclamation, the closing paragraph from her last public address and her last message to her country. A book of ninety-six pages, daintily bound in olive green cloth.

PRICE FIFTY CENTS

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House

EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

WEST VIRGINIA'S TRANSFORMATION

As Seen Through the Eyes of Its Governor

Fortunate is that prohibition state which has a governor who is whole-heartedly determined to enforce the law. Such a man is the Honorable Henry D. Hatfield, governor of the state of West Virginia. In an address not long ago in his own state he said:

"I stand ready and willing to give the prohibition commissioner of this state and the local officials every support within my power, and, if they find themselves incapable of controlling any situation, I stand ready to insure the full enforcement of the law even to the extent of furnishing national guardsmen to act in conjunction with the civil authorities. The prohibition law must be enforced at any hazard or cost."

Of the results of prohibition as they can now be seen in his state, Governor Hatfield says:

"The law has been in effect long enough for us to be impressed with the great results thus far obtained. By examination of the court records we find that felonies in counties where local option formerly prevailed have been reduced at least fifty per cent. What does this mean to the people? It has given hope to thousands of wives and mothers in our state who have heretofore been obliged to submit to lives of deprivation and desperation. It has preserved the homes of thousands of our citizens from degradation and want and brought to them happiness and sunshine."

L'ARALDO

The only Evangelical Italian paper publishing W. C. T. U. articles and news monthly.

10 Copies to One Address, 10 cents

L'ARALDO

175 Rockaway Ave. Brooklyn, N. Y.

GOVERNOR WITHYCOMBE AT OREGON STATE CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The thirty-second annual convention of the Oregon Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which met recently in Newberg, was publicly designated "the best ever" by many long time convention-goers. The location was most fortunate. Newberg was founded and is largely populated by Friends and is the home of the Friends' school, Pacific College. From its founding total abstinence and equal privileges and responsibilities for men and women, foundation principles of the Friends' church, have prevailed. The hostess union, under the leadership of its president, Mrs. Etta Moore, and her "right hand helper," Mrs. Lottie Hannon, left nothing undone to emphasize our welcome. Rev. Pennington, president of Pacific College, with Rev. Whitely, of the convention church, Rev. Gould of the Methodist church, Mayor Edwards and others, gave us a new vision of brotherly helpfulness. The large and beautifully decorated church was well filled at all day sessions and packed to overflowing each evening.

In addition to the regular reports and usual convention features one hour was set apart each afternoon, with a program of special music, readings and "lecturettes," to interest the general public. Our work as a factor in social life was discussed by Mrs. M. L. T. Hidden; the "Do Everything" policy of the W. C. T. U. as it opens the door of civic service, by Mrs. Henrietta Brown; under "A Wave of Degeneracy. Why?" Mrs. Mary Mallett told of the need for instruction on the lines of Medical Temperance; the public school as "The Melting Pot," by Mrs. G. L. Buland; the immediate need for "Recreation Centers and Public Comfort Stations," by Mrs. Lucia F. Additon, and a most interesting Mothers' Meeting, led by Mrs. J. O. Richmond. Ray Grounds, winner in the state S. T. I. high school contest, was present to read his essay and publicly receive the cash prize. An interesting and helpful "Quiz" on W. C. T. U. history and accomplishments was led by Mrs. Mary D. Russell. Rev. Edith Minchin won the prize for giving the most correct answers. The convention was divided, with Mrs. E. B. Andrews and Mrs. Hattie Wilson as captains. They conducted so interesting a membership contest that it is being continued during the year. The convention honors were with the "blues," led by Mrs. Andrews.

Four former state presidents were most helpful members of the convention. Mrs. Adah Wallace Unruh most fittingly responded to the cordial welcomes given the first evening; Mrs. Helen D. Harford "went about doing good" all during the convention. Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Additon have already been mentioned.

The annual address of Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, state president, found such favor with the convention that it was ordered published for general distribution throughout the state. The reports of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary D. Russell, and the treasurer, Mrs. Margaret Houston, showed the state work in excellent condition. All officers were reelected. Mrs. M. Frances Swope had charge of the Memorial Hour. More than thirty white ribboners and members of their families who have gone Home this year, were tenderly remembered. The names of seventy-five splendid men and women and one good union were given as "flowers of remembrance" for Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, National treasurer, who laid down her work in Oregon.

We were most fortunate in having with us during nearly the entire convention Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, of Kansas, whom Oregon claims as its very own. Mrs. Mitchner won our hearts during the Oregon Dry campaign of 1914, and we would gladly adopt her if she would remove to this state. Beside a splendid convention address, Mrs. Mitchner gave invaluable help in many ways.

Supple at Sixty

Age and ripe experience mean happiness and usefulness when mental and bodily powers are preserved by keeping rich blood in the veins.

Nature's great strength-sustaining nourishment in Scott's Emulsion creates rich blood while it warms the body and alleviates rheumatic tendencies. Its oil-food imparts strength to both body and brain.

It is Nourishment—not Alcohol.

14b74

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

The convention was most happy to have Dr. J. E. Anderson, introducer of the Anderson prohibition law, with us for a day. He spoke concerning the law at both afternoon and evening sessions and explained its many valuable provisions. Dr. Anderson's work as mayor of The Dalles and in the legislature is very much appreciated by Oregon white ribboners. We are glad to have him as a life member of the state W. C. T. U.

The last evening was made notable by the presence of Governor Withycombe. He spoke of the importance of building up a Christian civilization and pledged himself to do everything in his power to enforce the prohibition law, which he most heartily commended. Attorney General Brown was expected but was detained. He sent a letter to be read in which he said: "The prohibition law can be and must be enforced. Every effort will be made in thought, word, act and deed to carry out the provisions of the prohibition measure."

The address of the evening, "Mothers of Men," was delivered by Daniel A. Poling. Being given in a place where he was raised, among people he had known from boyhood, and where the "mother" of this native son of Oregon is known and honored, the occasion was one of peculiar interest. Mr. Poling was at his best and was given a great ovation. His stirring address was followed by "Victory," beautifully sung by Mrs. Charles Whitely.

The convention music was excellent and varied. Professor Alexander Hull, of Pacific College, had charge of the evening music and Mrs. Mary L. Mallett was musical director for the day sessions. Mrs. S. Alice Hanson, state evangelist, had charge of all the evangelistic numbers on the program.

The Oregon white ribboners enjoyed every moment of the all too brief stay of Mother National, as the White Ribbon Special traversed three sides of our great state. From every place where a stop was made we hear enthusiastic reports of the inspiration given those who met our great National leaders. Come again, come often, come and live in Oregon!

We have enjoyed visits from other notable people recently. Miss Ellen M. Stone was with us for one busy day and gave an impetus to our department of Cooperation with Missionary Societies. Miss Stone's charming personality made her visit a special pleasure. Lord and Lady Aberdeen were in the city for a short stay recently. The W. C. T. U. presented Lady Aberdeen with an armful of wonderfully beautiful dahlias, and some of Oregon's beautiful roses. They return to us later in the month for a joint lecture. The W. C. T. U. is cooperating with the Woman's Club in making the arrangements.

Poster Show Window

POPULAR PUBLICITY METHODS OF OREGON W. C. T. U.

Special Correspondence

Portland Central W. C. T. U. maintains its headquarters in a large room on one of the principal streets of the city. Under the leadership of its energetic president, Mrs. Hattie Wilson, the large window is kept filled with posters, pictures and telling facts. There is an almost constant succession of people, old and young, men and women, who stop to read and often to copy the statements into a book or on paper and carefully carry them away. The influence of this window cannot be measured.

Another union, Milwaukie, near Portland, has a bulletin board on which every passer-by can read the important temperance facts and temperance news bulletined each day.

The Multnomah county W. C. T. U. has for three weeks maintained a booth at the Manufacturers and Land Products Show, carried on under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce. Last year the W. C. T. U. was refused space, even though it would gladly have been paid for. This year it has been welcomed, given free space and accorded the most cordial treatment. The fact that the W. C. T. U. is a manufacturer of public sentiment, a constructive and not a destructive organization, is being emphasized. Thousands of pages of literature have been distributed. Different departments have had special days, presided over by state superintendents, and special cards of greeting have been distributed. We had a day of our own and it was a thrilling sight to see our women in line representing the dry, the campaign and the wet states, led by the official band playing "We'll Make the Map all White." The "Gold Dust Twins" and Uncle Sam at the wash tub were two interesting program numbers. Mrs. W. A. Lawson spoke for Wisconsin and sang the state song. The Ohio representative did not look a bit downcast at the result of the election a few days before, when she told the audience:

"If Ohio stayed wet
Just blame it on Pa!"

Mrs. G. L. Buland, Mrs. Mary Dobson and Mrs. Lura Russell Stater have been the hard working, efficient committee in charge of the program and the booth. They have had many good assistants from the ranks of Multnomah county's splendid white ribboners. The closing feature was a great Peace parade in which all the women's organizations of the city joined. The long procession, each individual carrying a Peace banner, led by the band, was a striking protest against militarism. An inspiring program, listened to by a large audience, closed the successful day.

Last year there were three brewery exhibits and liquor flowed freely at the Land Show. This year all this was eliminated. The "1916 Bar" advertises "water-wagon drinks" and does a good business in the sale of Loganberry and other fruit juices, also milk, tea, coffee, etc. There is also a beverage on sale which looks like beer but has less than the one-half of one per cent of alcohol. It is not nearly so popular as the Loganberry juice.

Throughout the city the saloons carry large "going out of business December 31" signs. Some have already closed; one this week in the Board of Trade, which has been doing a losing business for some time, put up a sign "1916" and quit. A newspaper canvass of the principal saloons of the city gives universal assurance that the prohibition law will be obeyed. May this forecast be realized! We hope, but we are not asleep.

A LITTLE VISION OF TODAY

MRS. MARCIA A. B. SMITH, National W. C. T. U. Organizer

There is a great prohibition wave rolling in towards shore tonight. It has been rising for years until it now stands mountain high. Men look at it with varied emotions. One sees that if the wave is allowed to come in it will put him out of office, another sees in it defeat for his party, yet another views it with fear of complete political revolution. The saloonkeepers, brewers and distillers look at it knowing that its onward sweep means death to their business. All unite in asking, "Shall the wave come in?" The answer, the selfish answer, the answer that comes from an element that dominates the political world is: "No. Pile up the barriers that it come not." I look around to find what barriers they would pile up and I discover one labeled "revenue," another "state control," another "government partnership," another "the indifference of Christian men and women."

And so the wave that would sweep the saloons to destruction is mounting upward. It cannot always stand thus; it must either come or go. If it recedes now it will return in the near future with a power that man's compromise cannot stay. My prayer tonight is that we may unite in removing these barriers so that the great wave of individual sentiment crystallized into law may sweep on and on and on, carrying the whole liquor traffic to destruction but saving the millions of humanity who are now under thralldom.

German Temperance Literature

The following German pamphlets are issued to help enlist as many as possible of the German-Americans in the fight against the drink habit and the liquor traffic. They appeal to them in their native tongue and on lines which will most easily influence them. Speed the cause of national prohibition by distributing these pamphlets widely.

1. "THE BIBLE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE." 32 pages, 2d edition, ten thousand now issued. Price 5c each, 25c a doz., $1.59 a hundred, postpaid.
2. "THE GERMANS AND THE DRINK QUESTION." 8 pages, forty thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a dozen, 50c a hundred, postpaid, $4.00 a thousand by express.
3. "CHRISTIANITY AND PROHIBITION." 8 pages, twenty thousand now issued. Same price as No. 2.
4. "THE AIMS AND RESULTS OF PROHIBITION." 12 pages, 3d edition, thirty-five thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a doz., 65c a hundred, postpaid, $5.00 a thousand by express.

Of this last a new revised edition has just left the press. It also embodies the latest statistics and statements concerning prohibition in Kansas by the Governors, Stubbs, Hodges and Capper and by the legislature of the state. Send orders to

J. G. EVERT, BOX B, HILLSBORO, KANS.

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" — 248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Fourteenth Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
513 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

STATISTICS THAT STARTLED SOUTH CAROLINA

The apparent ease with which South Carolina voted out the liquor traffic last September is still raising the query in many people's minds, "How did she do it?"

Her most convincing arguments for prohibition evidently came from within her own borders. In the publicity campaign, says Allan Nicholson, editor of the Union Progress of South Carolina in an article in the Christian Endeavor World, truly amazing facts were brought out.

"The Union county statistics, taken from the official records and from the minutes of the Baptist and Methodist denominations, afford many astonishing and noteworthy comparisons. In August, 1905, Union county voted out the dispensary by a majority of 258; in 1912 liquor won in an election by a small majority.

"During the prohibition period the tax levy was less than it has been for years, if not the least it has ever been, while since the dispensary re-opened it has increased each year, now being 3½ mills higher than the lowest levy during the prohibition era, though it had been claimed by advocates of liquor that there would be a lower levy because of the so-called 'profits' accruing from the sale of liquor. In line with this prohibition argument it has developed that for every dollar of 'profit' (?) more than $3 has been sent to liquor-manufacturers of other states to enrich them, and that, even with the 'profits' and the increased tax levy, the spirit of wasteful extravagance in public affairs became such that a special bond-issue of $25,000 to take care of floating indebtedness became necessary.

"With reference to arrests for drunkenness and for being drunk and disorderly, in the city of Union alone the records for a six months' period before the old state dispensary system was voted out show arrests for drunkenness, 188, and for being drunk and disorderly, 147. The same six months of the year following the commencement of the prohibition era showed the number had decreased to cases of drunkenness, 90, being drunk and disorderly, 27. After two years of the dispensary régime, following prohibition, the same months of the year showed cases of drunkenness, 236, and being drunk and disorderly, 114.

"In the field of education and religion it was shown that in seven years of prohibition the school enrollment and average attendance had increased virtually 2,000, while in the two years following the re-establishment of the dispensary the enrollment had fallen off 132, and the average attendance 828!

"During the prohibition years the Baptist denominational figures showed that the value of church property in the county had increased from $30,870 to $81,000, while in two years of the dispensary it actually decreased about five per cent. The Methodist figures show that the average yearly increase during prohibition was as much as the increase for two years after the dispensary came back. Both denominations show a greater average yearly increase in church-membership, amounting to more than ten per cent during prohibition."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

The Union Signal	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . .	25c a year
The Young Crusader	25c a year

Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . . . Per 100, $1.75

Subscriptions to Foreign Countries

The Union Signal	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . .	37c a year
The Young Crusader	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

WIN ONE CIRCLE FOR 1916

We had a large circle of new subscribers in 1915 but desire this year to reach the one thousand mark long before the close of 1916. The holiday season is almost here and The Union Signal is a most practical gift for the busy friend, the student, or for the family. It is an all-round paper and meets the needs of all. Place it upon your list of gifts, send in a new name and let us give you a place early in the 1916 Win One Circle, when you will receive the little Scotch pin and the membership card.

1. Mrs. Mary A. Brown, Newark Valley, N. Y.
2. Mrs. Nellie Roosa, Wallkill, N. Y.
3. Mrs. Laura C. Hoover, Marshalltown, Iowa.
4. Laura E. Corbin, Liberty, Mo.
5. Mrs. Eleanor O'Neil, Wellsville, Mo.
6. Mrs. Allen Forkner, Stevensville, Mont.
7. Mrs. Huldah W. Mitchell, Kappa, Ind.
8. Mrs. Eli Crosby, Patterson, N. Y.
9. Mrs. Granville S. Hart, Doylestown, Pa.
10. Mrs. Marion Skinner, Ray, Ind.
11. Mrs. Carrie S. Kemp, Whittier, Calif.
12. Mrs. S. M. Stahl, Hartford City, Ind.
13. Mrs. Bessie Eckman, Allentown, Pa.
14. Mrs. Delos Van Woert, Afton, N. Y.
15. Mrs. E. J. Clark, Syracuse, N. Y.
16. Mrs. M. C. Ewing, Long Beach, Calif.
17. Mrs. W. C. Goff, Waverly, Wash.
18. Luda S. Reynolds, Lathrop, Calif.
19. Mrs. Margaret Terboss, Owego, N. Y.
20. Mrs. Susie Tunnell, Rogersville, Mo.
21. Mrs. N. H. Hyde, Owego, N. Y.
22. Miss M. H. Biesecker, Covina, Calif.
23. Mrs. O. M. Thomas, Marion, Ind.
24. Mrs. C. C. Thomas, Marion, Ind.
25. Mrs. Mary W. Everett, Brewster, N. Y.
26. Mrs. Laura A. Stovall, Madison, Ga.
27. Mrs. Geo. S. Hoff, Danville, Ill.
28. Maggie F. Robbins, Kikoma, Ind.
29. Mrs. Mary McCurdy, Richmond, Ind.
30. Mrs. Clayton Crannell, Glens Falls, N. Y.
31. Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Lincoln, Va.
32. Mrs. C. B. Dyche, Luray, Va.
33. Mrs. Sarah K. Meredith, Canton, O.
34. Mrs. Elizabeth D. Dean, Memphis, Tenn.
35. Mrs. Miranda Thornburg, Farmland, Ind.
36. Mrs. Marvin Williams, Lithonia, Ga.
37. Mrs. M. L. Wilsey, Copake, N. Y.
38. Mrs. Titus Ridgway, Hydetown, Pa.
39. Mrs. Jennie E. Carley, Tower, Mich.
40. Mrs. Fannie Van Gelder, Ithaca, N. Y.
41. Mrs. Lucie C. Wood, Jacksonville, N. Y.
42. Miss Mary H. Edgett, Hughsonville, N. Y.
43. Miss Cora Snyder, Matamoras, Pa.
44. Mary L. Ingram, Hannibal, Mo.
45. Flora Abraham, Mt. Hope, Wis.
46. Mrs. Julia F. Andrews, Crandon, Wis.
47. Mrs. E. L. Gilbert, Grand Island, Neb.
48. Mrs. Carrie Hutchinson, White, S. D.
49. Mrs. Susie Harrold, Marion, Ind.
50. Mrs. T. B. Nichols, Bynumville, Mo.
51. Mrs. Elizabeth M. Clark, Canandaigua, N. Y.
52. Mrs. A. S. Jolly, Farmington, Wash.
53. Mrs. J. L. Davis, Port Stanley, Wash.
54. Mrs. S. A. Meacham, Lyons, Kans.
55. Mrs. Sena Hartzell Wallace, Kansas City, Kans.
56. Florence E. Wiltsee, Marion, Ind.
57. E. M. Lowe, Lucas, Kans.
58. Mrs. Selma Lindseth, Tacoma, Wash.
59. Rubie I. Westinghouse, Oil City, Pa.
60. Mrs. R. J. Strozier, Vienna, Ga.
61. Mrs. J. E. De Shazo, White Plains, Va.
62. Mrs. C. O. Carpenter, Apponaug, R. I.
63. Ada Lane, Auburn, Ind.
64. Mrs. L. L. Vann, Danville, Va.

STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION THE ISSUE IN LOUISIANA'S GUBERNATORIAL CAMPAIGN

Special Correspondence

When the clans began to gather from all parts of the state at the opening of the convention, the entertainment committee was indeed busier than a whole hive of bees for twenty-four hours. The first meeting was devoted to district work and organization. Rapides parish, in which Alexandria, the hostess city, is located, was to vote wet or dry on the 16th, so the time was opportune. A parade by the delegates was an eye opener to the enemy and voted a great success. First came a band of musicians, followed by a carload of little tots with banners announcing them as white ribbon recruits. Next appeared gray-haired women, the "mothers of men," then the state officers, with the state banner. Each church furnished a float, and men, women and children walked in the procession, the children giving the rally cries and singing. Last came a white hearse, bearing the coffin of John Barleycorn "killed by the W. C. T. U." A saloon man was heard to say, "Boys, it is interesting." And so it was.

After several speeches on welcome night Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, gave "Echoes from the National Convention," making us feel that it would have been good to be there. Her Sunday afternoon talk on "Loyalty" was instructive and timely. She held a short open air service near a "damp" street corner, and many of the crowd that listened to the speech said it was one of the best ever heard on temperance.

In spite of all the "dangers, toils and snares," we made a slight gain in membership, though returns came in too late to give us a share in the National gain for this year. Winnfield union with seventeen members last year, reported one hundred paid members this year. Several other unions made creditable gains. Mrs. M. C. M. Jones, a most wonderful "house-to-house" worker, organized twenty-seven new unions, and Miss Hattie Mae Arnold five. Most of the new unions have paid dues, and sent delegates to the convention.

We have three gubernatorial candidates in the field, two wet, and one dry. A straw vote was taken, resulting in forty-five votes for Mr. Barret (prohibitionist), and five for Mr. Pleasant, (local optionist). Some did not vote. Mrs. Jones remarked that after the election Mr. Barret will look Pleasant and Mr. Pleasant will have to Barret (bear it). "Political bosses are beginning to step lively, and Louisiana will be in a state-wide fight very soon. In fact Mr. Barret declares he will do all in his power to bring it about if elected governor and Mr. Pleasant declares he will veto the measure if presented, so the race for governor is virtually a state-wide fight, and the liquor men so regard it. They are resorting to all their old tactics, and pouring out their wealth with their "facts." New Orleans is their stronghold in the Southland, and they will fight hard to hold it.

The Union Signal
and
The Young Crusader
should be placed at the TOP of your CHRISTMAS LIST

THE UNION SIGNAL, issued weekly, price, one dollar per year, is suitable as a gift of remembrance to a family, or as a present to an individual friend. It meets the needs of the family, the busy business man, the professional man, the school teacher, the Sunday School teacher, or the college student.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER, issued weekly, price, twenty-five cents per year delights any boy or girl with its breezy stories and pleasing illustrations. To both the public school teacher and the Sunday school teacher it is of value not only in teaching temperance but in arranging programs.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
EVANSTON, - ILLINOIS

By faith we see the invisible host, and realize that "They that be for us are more than they that be against us." "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit, saith the Lord," is our state motto.

Miss Gordon's playlet, "Nineteen Prohibition States," was given, and when Louisiana brought up the rear in black, a shamed quiet fell on the entire audience. Four young speakers favored us with choice selections. One was a veritable orator, and will speak on the street during the campaign in the parish.

Later: We are glad to be able to report in connection with the Louisiana convention that the election in Rapides parish on November 16 was a victory for the anti-liquor forces.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

The following resolution was recently passed by the Vermont state Sunday School Association: "Resolved, that 'we hope and pray' for a rousing majority for state-wide prohibition at the polls on Tuesday, March 7, 1916, which will mark an end of the legalized liquor traffic in Vermont; and resolved, that we earnestly request the Vermont representatives in Congress to use their influence and vote for the constitutional prohibition amendment to be submitted to the states for ratification."

The Socialists of Texas are reported to have adopted in their convention, at Waco, a platform recommending that the manufacture or sale of liquor in the state be made a felony.

At the election held November 13, Bee county, Texas, outlawed the saloon which numbered fifty-two.

For some time a committee of one hundred has been engaged in the province of Ontario, Canada, in an organized effort to secure absolute prohibition by next Dominion Day and very recently the Ontario Sunday School convention threw down a challenge to the traffic which, says the Toronto Globe, "represents the best thought and highest aspirations of Ontario's leading citizens."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., DECEMBER 2, 1915 | No. 48

Stop the Profit and You Stop the Sale!

We may delude ourselves with state's rights theories, with personal liberty theories, and sophistries of many kinds to satisfy our consciences in regard to the National Prohibition question, but in the last analysis it is the greed of gain, the almighty dollar that controls, and if it were not for that influence the use of intoxicating beverages would have ceased long ago. If it could be fixed in such a manner that no being could derive a profit from the traffic in alcohol, the sale of intoxicating liquor would not be tolerated for a twelve month. We would all then be able to see the evil of it, its banefulness to society, its destruction of manhood, its cruelty to the family. The mothers' tears, the children's cries, the wives' distress would then be immediately heeded.

—HON. WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE of Washington

SPECIAL ARTICLES IN THIS ISSUE

United States Senator Borah Says Liquor Interests Have "Nationalized" Liquor Question—Prohibition Agrees with Des Moines—Campaign for Dry Boston—Appropriating the White Ribbon—The New California Campaign—World's W. C. T. U. Notes—Prohibition Wins by Large Majority in Newfoundland.

U. S. Senator Borah Says Liquor Interests Have "Nationalized" Liquor Question

"I have been forced to the conclusion that the only effective way to deal with the liquor question is by and through the action of the national government," is the declaration of U. S. Senator Borah of Idaho, in reply to an inquiry from the state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League recently. "I say I have been forced to this conclusion because I am on general principles very much opposed to the national government taking over any work which can be done by and through and within the states.

"The liquor interests have nationalized the question and experience shows that there can be no really effective method of treating it except from a national standpoint. The large distilleries and manufactories of intoxicating liquors supply every state in the union from some particular manufacturing plant so that it becomes in every sense a matter of interstate concern and a matter which can be effectually controlled and regulated through the national government which alone can deal with interstate matters.

National Problem in Every Sense

"If I had felt that it could be dealt with by the states alone I would have much preferred to see it dealt with in that way. But I feel sure that it has passed beyond the control of the states and has become a national question in every sense, economically, commercially and politically.

"For these reasons, as a member of the sub-committee of the judiciary, I voted to report favorably the proposed amendment to the national constitution which was pending before Congress during the last session. Having made up my mind to the effect that I have, I shall of course continue to vote that way, as I never change my vote until I change my mind."

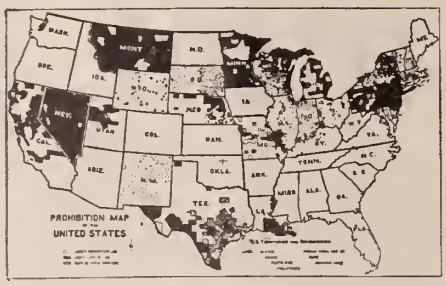
No Liquor To Be Sold on Denver & Rio Grande Railroad

The sale of intoxicating liquor upon all Denver & Rio Grande railroad trains will cease after January 1, 1916, when Colorado becomes dry territory. This is the statement given to the press by N. W. McAbee, superintendent of the dining car service of the railroad. The order will apply also to trains operating in Utah and New Mexico, which are not prohibition states. It is said that other railroads with Colorado connections are contemplating abandoning the sale of all liquor after January 1.

Idaho Brewery To Manufacture Soft Drinks

The manager of the Boise (Idaho) brewery is rapidly adapting its buildings to a change of business, in anticipation of the going into effect on January 1 of the prohibition law. After that time it will manufacture soft drinks and fountain supplies, and will maintain a produce and cold storage department. It is reported by the Boise Statesman that at least eight of the twenty-one saloons now operating in Boise will go into the soft drink business.

Officers of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad are said, by the Des Moines Capital, to employ detectives armed with cameras to take a photograph of every employe who is seen drinking liquor, and a number have been discharged as a result. Whisky as "first aid to the injured" has been forbidden by the chief medical examiner.



NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho
South Carolina

Prohibition Agrees With Des Moines

"Des Moines is not a 'Spotless Town' yet by any means, but it has not regretted ousting saloons," says Frank G. Moorhead of Des Moines, in the December number of the Illustrated World, in an article entitled—"When a City Goes Dry—What Happened in Des Moines."

"The closed saloon has not made Des Moines a model city," continues the writer. "The millennium has not yet dawned. With open saloons but forty miles away, bootlegging flourished for a time, although the police vigilantly arrested interurban passengers with overloaded suitcases.

"Des Moines, Iowa, is one of the largest cities in the United States that is really dry, and the only city to close its saloons by a councilmanic vote. Des Moines went dry because its city commission of five members voted the saloons out of existence—the first time this had ever been done in any large city.

"The commission had a united public sentiment behind it; the saloons did not even wage a court fight, but took the count and were down and out for good. A few weeks later the state legislature passed a statewide prohibition law. As it turned out, the Des Moines saloons were closed only ten and one-half months ahead of time.

Arrests Reduced

"As a result the number of arrests was reduced. Conditions were undeniably better. The number of divorce applications based upon drunkenness was greatly reduced. Tax levies were lowered.

"In Iowa, the deposits in the state and savings banks (where the funds of the drinking man would be deposited, if anywhere) showed an increase, six months after the saloons of Des Moines were closed, of $11,625.96. Whether or not the saloons were directly responsible, through the decrease in crime, it is interesting to note that five months after the saloons closed, fire insurance rates were reduced sixteen and two-thirds per cent on household goods, and from thirty cents to twenty-four cents per hundred dollars per year on dwellings. Arson and accidental fires, due to drunken carelessness, were on the decrease.

Saloons Now Stores

"Nor was the city overflowing with unemployed men. Even the fact that of eighty-six rooms suddenly made vacant by the closing of the saloons more than half were re-occupied as restaurants, delicatessen shops, clothing stores and the like within two months, and three-fourths within five months, gave the wets but little consolation. As prophets they were proved to be utter failures."

Prohibition Wins by Large Majority in Newfoundland---Law Goes Into Effect January 1, 1917

Out of eighteen electoral constituencies into which Newfoundland is divided, eleven are reported to have given more than the required forty per cent of votes for prohibition. The vote for the amendment is more than four times as large as the vote against it. Only 5,348 votes were polled against the measure and 24,965 in favor of it. The election was held on November 4, but because of stormy weather it was impossible to collect the ballot boxes in the St. Barbe district along the Labrador coast until some weeks later and full and definite returns were therefore delayed. The measure provides that the sale, manufacture and importing of alcoholic liquors shall be prohibited from and after January 1, 1917.

Campaign for "Dry Boston" December 14

The citizens of the "Hub of the Universe" are to vote on the liquor question on December 14. Major Dan Morgan Smith, formerly attorney for the Model License League, and now field secretary of the Anti-Saloon League, is leading the spirited campaign being conducted in the classic city and is awakening its conservative citizens to a sense of their responsibility in ridding it of the liquor traffic. The fact that Governor Walsh was defeated at the recent election by the liquor interests because he stated that he would sign the liquor transportation bill is being used as one of the arguments in favor of the city's freeing itself from the political tyranny of the liquor tribe.

To the question, "What will become of the large army of workmen employed by the wet goods business?" Major Smith is answering, "Suppose the thousand or so barkeepers and their wives should be compelled to dig for a living under no-license, does that afford any economic reason why Boston should not vote itself dry? The loss of revenue to Boston would be trivial. Do the license fees amount to a million dollars? For every dollar Boston receives that way, it pays out seven in increased expenses. Every one knows this except Mayor Curley, the liquor traffic and the man who is afraid of his tax rate. Distribute this lost million in taxes, and it would add the terrible added burden of sixty cents to each citizen—sixty cents contrasted with the gains in decency, sobriety and comfort!"

Philadelphia Real Estate Board Decides To Hold "Dry" Banquet

The annual banquet of the Philadelphia Real Estate Board, to be held next January, will be teetotally dry. That is to say, all alcoholic beverages will be tabooed, but grape juice, orangeade and other non-alcoholic drinks will flow freely.

A resolution to that effect was passed by members of the association, says the North American. This is the first time in the history of the board that this step has been taken. The banquet is a gala affair each year, and men of national prominence are always present.

A COVENANT WITH DEATH

Today we have, as we have always had, an anti-whisky Bible; we have, as we have always had, an anti-whisky God. Millions of the American people, both North and South, now want Congress to give them a chance to establish an anti-whisky Constitution. They realize that so long as the Constitution fails to prohibit the existence of the liquor traffic anywhere in this Republic, it is still a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.

—Hon. Morris Sheppard, United States Senator from Texas.

THE NEW CALIFORNIA CAMPAIGN

OUR PROBLEMS AND PLANS

MARY. M. COMAN

Opened with a wonderful enthusiasm, in southern California, when our National officers and so many of the delegates from Seattle were with us, the second great campaign for state-wide constitutional prohibition has been started. All through the state upon the last Sunday of October, thousands of the one hundred thousand desired, signed the petitions asking for the amendments to be placed upon the ballot for the election a year from this November. It is yet too early to know the results of "Enlistment Day," which has been followed by steady, quiet work for further signatures.

The new campaign was started last June, when the standing committee of one hundred called for a conference at Fresno, at which convention two great things were to be decided;—the adoption of a plan of campaign, and the form in which the matter should be placed before the voters of the state. By an overwhelming vote the delegates decided upon not one, but two amendments. First, one to discontinue the saloons in June, 1918, and second, an amendment to discontinue all wholesale and manufacturing interests in January, 1920.

This Fresno convention was composed of representative men and women from all over the state, all political parties, all religious denominations, all shades of temperance and prohibition belief being present. While at times there were sharp differences of opinion, in the end the vote was practically unanimous for such a form of amendment as could be carried.

But in spite of our hope, our faith and our ability for hard work, we realize that, because of many peculiar conditions in our state, it is going to be a difficult task to carry California for constitutional prohibition. The last reports of the internal revenue service tell us that there are more retail liquor licenses issued for this state than in all the eleven last states which have gone dry put together. Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, South Carolina, West Virginia, Virginia, Oregon, Iowa and Washington had only 14,750 licenses, while our total at present is 15,117. As Dr. Matt Hughes, president of the Campaign Federation, said at the great mass meeting on October 24, "Our state has 3,700 more liquor dealers than has the state of Ohio and has twice as many wholesale dealers, with seventy-four more, for good measure, and this with but half the population. Moreover, eighty-five per cent of our population lives in incorporated cities, with at least sixty-five per cent in larger cities, as San Francisco, Los Angeles, Sacramento and San Diego." By way of explanation of this seemingly large city population, it should be said that according to our state laws, we legally have no towns or villages. Such are incorporated as fifth and sixth class cities, with boards of trustees. So what would be a town in the middle West or the East, is a sixth class city here. And it is very true that we have not, partly because of our intensive agricultural interests, large country districts, which are invariably prohibition in vote. The wine grape vineyards and great hop fields constitute our largest agricultural districts and naturally they are on the side of the enemy.

Eastern people seldom realize the size and extent of California geographically. With the extreme length from the northwestern corner to the southeast limit, taking Chicago as a center, the long line would sweep to New Orleans, Charleston or Boston. Often a single county is larger than two or three of the eastern states, so that one tremendous California problem, so far as this campaign is concerned, is its size.

But a thing well planned, is, according to the old New England dictum, half accomplished. All temperance people are ready for united action, as was not possible in the previous fight. We have a splendidly officered federation, with well-trained men to carry out carefully made plans. Women as well as men are named as leaders, and the work among women and children is given to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as its special province. The great executive committee, all tried and true trained workers, numbers a full thousand. Dr. Wishart, an expert, is in charge of the work of financing the campaign, while the brilliant writer, Franklin Hichborn, said to be the best publicity agent in the west, is in charge of all newspaper work. Almost without exception, the press of the smaller cities is solidly for state prohibition, and some of the larger journals are outspoken in their advocacy of a dry California. Although we lost our last fight, there has been a tremendous advance in public sentiment everywhere, as to the industrial, social and moral evil of alcohol, and we feel that we can count much upon this change.

We realize that the fight will be a sharp one, for the liquor interests will not be divided between the entire coast, as before, but will concentrate upon this state all possible pressure and influence. Already, we are told, every voter in the state is listed upon their books, as to his or her standing, and literature to fit each special case is being prepared. But we are optimistic, encouraged and ready for a hard pull, a long pull and a pull all together, to a victorious finish.

Denver's First Big All Women's Parade

A unique demonstration by the women's organizations of the city of Denver was the "All Women's" parade, which took place on the afternoon of November 15. For the greater part of an hour in the afternoon a thousand women in two hundred decorated automobiles paraded the downtown streets to advertise the Prosperity Exposition of the Colorado Federation of Women's Clubs, then in session. One of the most attractive, artistic and spectacular floats in the parade was that of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which is pictured above. On the top of a big tally-ho rode nineteen white-robed girls, members of the Colorado Y. P. B., each wearing a sash on which was inscribed the name of one of the prohibition states. Society women, club women, housewives, mothers with their babies, working women and college girls all participated. Nearly every motor car in line was to some extent decorated. There were omnibuses and sight-seeing cars, and old-fashioned, horse-drawn Concord stage-coaches filled with pioneer women who had crossed the plains and helped found the city of Denver.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS

A VOICE FROM PRISON WALLS

LORA S. La MANCE

(Endorsed by National Medal Contest Superintendent)

One of the saddest things about the liquor traffic is the toll we pay in the disgrace of young men. Seventy-five per cent of the inmates of jails and prisons go there before they are twenty-three. They are mere boys, many of them in their teens. Many heedless young fellows are not really bad at heart. They are the victims of the dram-shops, and of the pernicious teaching that a young man is expected to sow his wild oats. The young man takes but a few drinks, but those few drinks leave him befuddled and his self-control weakened. Some passion is aroused, or some beastly instinct set on fire, and before he realizes it the slip of a boy has committed a crime and must bear the mark of Cain for the rest of his days.

Oh, how bitter are the apples of Sodom! Oh, the agony of shame that swallows him up! He is in disgrace, he has brought dishonor on his name, and shame to his parents. So bitter is this penalty that again and again the prisoner at the bar absolutely conceals his identity. In one of our penitentiaries is a prisoner whose name is entered upon the records as John Nemo—John, "the nameless." In every prison are men serving their sentences under the fictitious name of John Doe, the law's name for an unknown, unidentified criminal. Often a young man when arrested shields his family name. He conceals his past, covers his tracks and serves his long, hard sentence without a line reaching his loved ones at home. He has disappeared.

Death comes even in prison. He who refuses to make his identity known rests with his past forever shrouded in the bosom of mother earth, the headstone at the grave's head marked only with his prison number. He that is immured within prison walls, forgotten by his boon companions, dies, and his dead body is unclaimed. He, too, is buried in that pathetically forlorn prison "city of the dead."

In many states the Woman's Christian Temperance Union holds an annual prison service on Flower Mission Day, giving an address that shows the mother-heart, handing to each man the flowers that speak to him of home and mother. In Fort Madison, at Iowa's state prison, there was a prisoner of most intelligent face, with a courtly bearing that told of good blood and careful training. A motherly white-ribboner said to him, "When do you get out?" He bowed sadly, "When the hearse comes, madam!" He was a life prisoner, and drink had put him there.

A short time after, a paper was handed to the Flower Mission superintendent. No name was signed. Not even the prison number was given. It was the cry of a broken-hearted man. It bore the title, "The Inglorious Dead." This is what the prisoner said of the little plot of ground that he knew would sooner or later hold his ashes:

THE INGLORIOUS DEAD.

Shunned by the living and separated from the resting place of the honored dead, this spot is certainly the saddest, loneliest spot in all this region. Yes, here, if nowhere else, the dead are equal. No proud monuments or saintly epitaphs are seen, but plain white stones with lettering suggestive of the markings of sin on once clean lives. A name, which perhaps the sleeper's father never heard, a number telling all the dishonor, and below, the duration and end of an earthly pilgrimage—nothing more.

Here no cannons boom, no flags wave, no throng of fellow citizens come to pay their annual tribute, but forest trees unfurl the flag of all nations, a solitary bird trilling in the distance and a cricket chirping in the grass relieve the awful quiet; the sun ever rising on the evil and the good pours a flood of glory over the dreary spot. No tolling bell, no eulogy or chant or plumed hearse is needed at these funerals. No mother's tears are dropped into these graves.

In faraway fields and gardens where some who lie here spent a happy childhood, the flowers they loved have bloomed and withered many years, but not a petal has been wafted to this lonely abode. One here is faithful to the last. Dear old Mother Nature receives her sinful children and hides them in her bosom until at the command of her God and theirs she must deliver them up.

In the stillness of the night the yearning heart of many a mother goes abroad in search of her boy, who has forgotten to write home. Through city and forest, over prairie and ocean it roams, but never does that heart pause at the prison burying ground. Here lies a mere child laid low in dishonor, and here one in the very pride of strength and maturity. Here,—can it be possible—lies one but twenty-one, twenty, nineteen, eighteen years of age. Boys, mere boys.

Where were their fathers, mothers, teachers, preachers and the humane societies when the whirlpool caught their careless young feet? Stand aghast! Is this not a phantom record? Here is a youth just beginning to tamper with sin. How will he fight? Will it be a lost battle, this conflict with powers of darkness? Single-handed and alone the boy is fighting, sometimes bravely. There are passions and environments which will hold him with a stronger grip than any handcuffs that may come later.

Those people whose flag waves so proudly over their own dead are in league against him. Do they not deliver him soul and body to the rum fiend which has power to kill and cast him into a drunkard's grave or perhaps is the cause of putting him behind the bars? Here he may gain a silent victory and be placed in a windowless palace to rest. God only knows.

Within here all are laid so that in rising, their opening eyes will fall upon "the Lord appearing in the East." Oh, what a meeting! Will not the pitiful Judge remember their weakness, and let the curse fall upon the society that allows to be sold the stuff that sends behind the bars, directly or indirectly, ninety-five per cent of all the inmates of prisons? We hope for the best. Sin is sin, and God is holy.

Shunned by the living and separated from the honored dead, there they will sleep until awakened by that summons from which there is no escape, to appear at that court from which there is no appeal.

NATIONAL LECTURER SPEAKS AT PACIFIC LOGGING CONGRESS

A fine opportunity to speak in behalf of the cause recently came to Mrs. Effie M. Lawrence of North Lubec, Maine, who was appointed a National lecturer at the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Seattle. Mrs. Lawrence accompanied her husband on an excursion of the Pacific Logging Congress from San Francisco to Eureka, California, to visit the great redwood forests and observe the gigantic logging and milling operations that are necessary in the manufacture of lumber from such mighty trees. At a banquet given the congress in Eureka, Mrs. Lawrence was invited to speak on "Safety First Measures." She told something of our splendid department of Work Among Lumbermen and sought to impress upon her audience the exceedingly great importance of total abstinence on the part of the employe required to operate intricate and powerful machinery. She gave scientific facts as to the injurious nature and effects of alcohol, and in speaking of prohibition as the greatest aid to abstinence, made a strong appeal to the more than two hundred large capitalists and employers of labor present, to use their influence for state and National Prohibition. Although the message was something of an innovation it elicited great applause and personal thanks from many of the men, while the editors of three trade journals asked Mrs. Lambert for feature articles. A Red Cross doctor who had been working in the camps for a number of years and who said he knew the message was needed, but wondered if it were timely, has asked for charts which he will use in his talks to the men of the woods. "It certainly behooves our women to be prepared," writes Mrs. Lambert, "for they know not when or where the opportunity to speak for our great cause may present itself."

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH NORTH DAKOTA?

In rousing fashion the residents of prohibition states are challenging the claims of the liquor forces that prohibition brings in its wake poverty and desolation to states having such laws on their statute books. Eager to vindicate his state, which has been grossly misrepresented in the Minneapolis campaign, Mr. Edgar L. Richter, president of the North Dakota Press Association, says in defense of prohibition:

"I have lived in North Dakota for about eighteen years, at Larimore, twenty-eight miles west of Grand Forks. West Grand Forks was a dry town and East Grand Forks was a wet town. When the wet and dry proposition went up there was a great cry that if North Dakota went dry, Grand Forks would be a cowpath, everybody would move over to the east side. The contrary condition exists today. The great majority of the saloonkeepers in East Grand Forks live in Grand Forks, the dry town, where they are bringing up their boys and girls.

"Grand Forks is a city of about 14,000, while East Grand Forks is a city of about 4,000. East Grand Forks has had all this time between thirty and forty saloons paying a heavy license, but the city has up to the present not had much surplus money, and I am informed that when the bridge burned down connecting the two cities a few years ago, it appealed to the west side for assistance to rebuild the bridge.

"I venture the assertion that in the state of North Dakota it would be impossible to locate twenty-five blind pigs today."

Will Not National Prohibition Aid in "Providing for the Common Defense?"

Will not National Prohibition aid wonderfully "in providing for the common defense" by making us, or at least helping to make us, a virile, strong, and sober nation. Will it not be a potent factor in the establishment of "domestic tranquillity"? What is there that disturbs "domestic tranquillity" more than the drinking of twenty-five gallons per capita of alcoholic beverages every year, as do the people of this country?

—U. S. Congressman Caleb Powers of Kentucky.

APPROPRIATING THE WHITE RIBBON

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD, Macon, Ga.

The proverbial "straw showing which way the wind blows," is not more conclusive than are the two words showing how the influence of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has permeated all walks of life. Thirty-eight years ago a knot of white ribbon was adopted as the badge of the organization. Today the term, "white ribbon," is used to describe everything and everybody connected with temperance and the prohibition of the liquor traffic, regardless of "sex, color or previous condition."

In a certain state recently, three bills were introduced in the legislature looking toward the strengthening of the prohibition law. They were prepared by prohibition men, and while the W. C. T. U. to a large extent had created the temperance sentiment which called for such legislation, and approved the bills, it was not directly responsible for them. Nevertheless, the phrase "white ribbon measures," as they were termed, must have been kept set up, so frequently did it appear in the editorial columns of the state's dailies.

Non-Alcoholic Punch Good Form

Through the open door of an elegant home on a prominent avenue, glimpses could be caught of floral decorations and strains of music floated out. Down the broad granite steps to the walk tripped a bevy of daintily attired debutantes, gaily chatting a moment before entering the several waiting limousines. A passer-by caught the following snatches of conversation: "Beryl's party was a grand success!" "Never saw such an elaborate display of orchids!" "Did you ever see anything more exquisite than the setting of the punch bowl, with that trellis of grape-vine for a background? Bushels of grapes must have been used."

"Lovely, and the punch was surely the nectar of the gods." "Best ever!" "Delicious!"

"Yes, and it was strictly white ribbon punch, too."

"Mother was saying only yesterday that that's the only kind that is good form these days. It was different when she was a girl."

"White ribbon punch," if you please, only meant that it was free from intoxicating beverages.

Teetotal Doctor

Clang, clang, down the street glided the ambulance.

"Wish we had a little brandy to give him, poor fellow!"

"Doesn't need any," said the physician, hearing the expressed wish as he hurried up and took in the situation at a glance, wrecked auto, injured man and all. "I have something here which is better. Stand aside," he ordered; "lend a hand there and we will have him at the hospital in a jiffy." The crowd, which had collected to learn of the accident, parted and turned to go.

"Doctor Bolling has remarkable success with his patients and he is a teetotal white ribbon doctor," remarked a bystander, meaning that the physician was scientifically correct in leaving out alcoholic medication in his practice.

Barbecue Without Beer

"Big crowd at the good roads meet; four counties well represented. This part of the route for the new highway satisfactorily settled upon," said progressive Mr. Snow to the men on the corner.

"Have a good feed for all that bunch in Plains?" some one asked.

"Did we? Tastiest barbecue I ever ate, and all of you know I have sampled a few. That was an all-right spread, good and plenty, take it from me," replied Mr. Snow, smacking his lips.

"Heard that it was a white ribbon barbecue," remarked another with a laugh.

"That's just what it was—not a drop of beer. Precious few seemed to notice it, or comment on it. Jolliest crowd I ever saw," continued Mr. Snow.

No Alcohol for Baby

"The little darling is just one week old," beamed grandmother. "He's a fine little fellow, but not quite well today," drawing her chair nearer the fire, as she related the nature of the new baby's trouble to her life-long friend, who had called with congratulations.

"Why, a few drops of gin would correct all that," said the friend.

"Oh, no. We hope that baby will never in his whole life taste one drop of alcohol," hastily answered his grandmother. "The white ribbon nurse will soon bring him around all right."

White Ribbon Journalism

"Splendid editorial that, on National Prohibition in the paper you sent me last week," said the merchant to the farmer. "Other good things in the paper, too."

"Oh yes, it is some paper, if it is a weekly," answered the farmer. "We have an A No. 1 white ribbon editor out my way; he gets out a clean sheet and it's readable, too."

New-Fashioned Baking Day

Sugar, spice, raisins, dates, figs, citron, almonds, butter, eggs, flour—such an array Mrs. Brown was setting on her clean kitchen table. While she bustled about, she smiled as she pictured the happy reunion soon to be held at her Thanksgiving dinner.

"Good morning, Mrs. Brown." A tall figure stood in the kitchen door. "Jest dropped in to see you a bit. 'Pear to be busy. Looks like somebody is going to have fruit cake on Thanksgiving."

"Come right in, Miss Sallie. I'm liable to set you to work helping with the mixing, though."

"Got everything ready," taking in the contents of the table at a glance. "Where is the whisky or brandy? Going to put it in, or pour it over after you bake?"

"Never a drop of that stuff has been in my house, Miss Sallie, since poor Tom's trouble. I happened to be passing just as he fell—both of them were drinking. 'I learned to love liquor at my mother's table,' he said as he lay there dying in his own spilt blood. You know how free his mother was with the use of wine in all her sweets, and her brandy peaches. No, Miss Sallie, this is to be a white ribbon fruit cake. Will you flour the raisins, please?"

And so it goes. The white ribbon teacher and the white ribbon preacher, the white ribbon town and the white ribbon mayor, the white ribbon hospital and the white ribbon hotel—institutions and persons standing four square for total abstinence and prohibition of the use of intoxicating beverages, have come to be described by the words "white ribbon," whether or not controlled by, or affiliated with, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Thus is the world unconsciously paying tribute to the influence of this organization whose badge was chosen as symbolic not only of purity and peace, but of all the correlated reforms that center in the protection of the home.

RESULTS OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN CALIFORNIA

In the recent suffrage campaigns many false statements concerning the situation in suffrage states were circulated. Especially vicious in their effect were the misrepresentations of a certain Mr. John P. Irish concerning the benefits of woman suffrage in California. Inasmuch as the states in which suffrage elections were held this year have announced that they are to continue uninterruptedly their campaigns, a refutation of these statements of Colonel Irish by Mrs. Dorcas Spencer, a National W. C. T. U. superintendent, will, we are sure, be interesting to our readers. She writes as follows:

"As to the results of woman suffrage in California, only the evil-disposed appear to question their advantage and value," says Mrs. Spencer. "Among its first fruits was a legislature of higher character than any preceding it, and that legislature enacted eleven reform laws, for some of which efforts had been made session after session, to get a hearing, and no member would risk his personal influence or chance of re-election by the introduction of the bills, but with women voting, better men were eagerly offering to present and push the bills. Up to that time the race track gamblers and their associated villainies had constituted a solid barrier against all moral issues. It was realized by all political parties that women would bolt the ticket unless the best men were nominated, hence the improvement. At the close of the session the historian of the legislature, the Hon. Franklin Hichborn, declared that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had the largest solid block of votes in the state.

The influence of the woman's vote was strongly felt in the passage of the following measures: red light injunction and abatement law, raising the age of consent to eighteen years, joint guardianship of children, bastardy bill requiring father to support child born out of wedlock, bill for a training school for delinquent girls, pensions to public school teachers, pensions to widows left with children, bill granting aid to destitute children kept in homes of widowed mothers, protection of children and girls, improved juvenile court law, extension of eight-hour law, including industries employing women, state law closing saloons from two a. m. to six a. m., and the amended local option law under which many localities have become dry. The women were also responsible for the defeat of many pernicious bills.

As to the slanderous tales of Mr. Irish of the wickedness of San Francisco, they are not worthy of discussion. The deplorable political conditions from which the city has suffered are well known, but the heroic battle for righteousness continually waged by the good people of that city is not heard of in the east, nor is it known there that two-thirds of the best business men in San Francisco live in the trans-bay cities, and neither they nor the women of their households can vote in San Francisco, thus the baser elements have often an easy victory.

Bishop Hughes of the Methodist church predicted that equal suffrage would create dissensions in homes; when he saw the directly opposite results, he went boldly into print with his wider vision and testified to the unifying effect in families, because of the greater community of interest. It is noteworthy that in the good residence districts of cities, the votes of women exceed the men's, while in the sections where ignorance, poverty and vice prevail, the votes of men far out-number the women. All important cities in California have policewomen especially for the necessities of girls and women.

California is not demoralized by woman's vote. The following resolution passed by both houses of the legislature shows what our lawmakers think of it. So say we all.

Chapter 50, Statutes of California, 1915
Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 22, Correction of Erroneous Reports Regarding Woman Suffrage in California.

Whereas, The issue of woman suffrage is pending in many states of this union; and

Whereas, The operation and effect of the enfranchisement of women in California is being constantly misrepresented in such states and used there as arguments in opposition to the granting of suffrage to women; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Senate of the Forty-first Session of the Legislature of the State of California, the Assembly concurring, That the experience of this state amply justifies the adoption of woman suffrage by the people in October, 1911; and be it further

Resolved, That so successful has been the operation and effect of granting political rights to women equal to those held by men, that it is generally conceded that were the question to be again voted on by the people of this state, it would be re-endorsed by an overwhelming majority; and be it further

Resolved, That the adoption of woman suffrage by California is one of the important factors contributing to the marked political, social and industrial advancement made by our people in recent years, and that any disparagement of the cause of woman suffrage attempted elsewhere on the ground that woman suffrage is not satisfactory to this state, has no basis in fact, and is signally disproved by the acknowledged intelligence and discrimination shown by women voters in the settling of our great political and industrial problem at the polls.

MEDICAL TEMPERANCE TRIUMPHS

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent

The great event of the year in medical temperance was the cutting out of whisky and brandy from the recognized list of medicines in the U. S. Pharmacopœia. The large work done by this department in seeking such action is at last rewarded with success. It is a momentous victory in the fight for the overthrow of alcohol. No longer can the liquor traffic shelter itself under the cloak of respectability too long thrown over it by the medical profession. We have reason to rejoice and be thankful.

To be in line with this advance step of the medical profession those belated state and local unions which still retain the proviso, "as a beverage" in their pledge must also do some cutting.

The second great event is the inauguration of an educational campaign against alcohol by the department of health of New York City. Dr. Goldwater, the fearless health commissioner, is fighting the patent medicine also. No patent medicine can now be on sale in New York City unless its ingredients are made known to the department of health, and false advertising claims in newspapers or elsewhere for these preparations are forbidden by a health department ordinance. Some of the better class manufacturers are agreeing to this city ordinance but others of a different ilk declare that they will no longer sell their precious nostrums in New York!

Massachusetts is carrying on a fine campaign against alcohol in which prominent physicians are active. Indiana health officers resolved at a state meeting to do work of a similar character.

At the last meeting of the Ohio State Medical Society some leading men in that body organized a society for the study of alcohol.

Strong resolutions against alcohol were introduced in the annual meetings of the state medical societies of Florida and of Pennsylvania, but were not passed by those bodies. That such resolutions were considered is a decided step in advance.

The New Hampshire legislature passed a law regulating the prescriptions of alcoholic liquors by physicians, making it imperative that such prescriptions must be as carefully adapted to the disease as that of "any other poisonous drug."

Effort was made in Tennessee to have a law passed stipulating the percentage of alcohol permitted in patent medicines.

Every state in the Union with six exceptions now has a law equivalent to the National Pure Food and Drugs law. The exceptions are Arizona, Delaware, Georgia, Minnesota, Mississippi, and New Mexico. Arizona has a pure food law but it does not cover medicines. Laws against false advertising, including medical advertising, have been passed in Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and South Dakota. Chicago and New York have similar city ordinances.

Some states and a considerable number of cities now forbid the distribution of drug samples.

Nine hundred physicians of Philadelphia and the members of three county medical societies signed petitions to the Pennsylvania legislature in behalf of a state local option law.

Maine W. C. T. U. scored a victory in the legislature last winter. A bill to permit druggists to sell liquor as medicine was in committee. The state president gave the members of the committee some of the best leaflets of this department and no further arguments were needed to kill the bill.

The W. C. T. U. of Lexington held a medical temperance banquet to which all the physicians of the county were invited. The chief speaker was Dr. C. L. Reid of Cincinnati, one of the foremost physicians of America. Dr. Reid said in his address that less than one-hundredth as much alcohol is prescribed in the hospitals in Cincinnati with which he is connected as was prescribed twenty-five years ago.

The W. C. T. U. of Minneapolis arranged with the city superintendent of schools for the distribution among boys of grammar and high schools of four thousand copies each of the two leaflets, "Alcohol, the Young Man's Greatest Enemy," and "Alcohol Hinders Business Success." Similar work was done in Buffalo and Rochester by arrangement of the state W. C. T. U. superintendent of New York. The Rochester superintendent of schools spoke highly of the leaflets.

In Washington a visitor to the city showed a Y. M. C. A. secretary these leaflets and he ordered five hundred copies for distribution in his work. Seven hundred leaflets were distributed at a Y. M. C. A. meeting in Cincinnati by the Ohio state superintendent of this department.

UNTAXED WHISKY

J. R. PARK, Treasurer Presbyterian Board of Temperance

It is a well known fact that the liquor traffic is the enemy of missions, but few people realize that this twice-cursed product of the distilleries and the breweries is not required to pay the usual government tax imposed upon liquor produced and consumed within the limits of our own country. The United States Statistical Abstract (p. 436) states that the export of spirits, wines and malt liquors from 1903 to 1913 was valued as follows:

1903	$3,484,007
1904	2,982,279
1905	3,365,032
1906	2,993,551
1907	3,314,578
1908	3,062,449
1909	3,096,172
1910	3,154,100
1911	3,479,586
1912	3,801,909
1913	4,008,290

The above figures represent the price at which the liquor is billed to the foreign customers, and American liquors, especially whisky and rum, are furnished to other countries at a price very much lower than is paid in America. We make our own people pay duty on things they need from other countries, why should the people in those same countries have it made easy to get from us things which they would be better off without?

If our government penalizes the distiller and brewer for destroying grain and other food products to make liquor for home consumption, why not fine the same people for turning millions of bushels into poison to be consumed abroad?

The Curse of Missions

In China the government is careful to label all poisons and it is stated that the liquor shipped from this country is labeled "The Jesus Poison."

The English government, through its agents in some places in India and elsewhere, has been known to forbid the organization of temperance societies which aim to protect the natives from the drink habit, as these societies interfere with the liquor traffic.

In Japan drunkenness was practically unknown until after the revolution of 1868, and now when a drunken man is seen on the street the natives say, "Here comes a Christian."

The primitive races of Africa, owing to their lack of self control, have been sadly debauched wherever they have been exposed to this touch of "civilization." By an agreement among the leading nations of the world, known as the "Brussels Act," which went into effect in 1901, the shipment of liquor into Africa was prohibited between the twentieth degree north latitude and the twenty-second degree south latitude. Unfortunately the colonial governments have been unable, as yet, to enforce this act very strictly.

As an instance of the enormous trade carried on in Africa, it is stated that in the district of Sierra Leone, during one-fourth of a year, 250 tons of liquor were unloaded at a "dry town" to be transported to towns in the interior.

An increase in the price of liquor has a tendency to reduce consumption, and if the liquor dealers were required to pay the regular United States tax on the shipments from America it would reduce, if not entirely stop the export trade; and the grain and other foodstuffs now worse than wasted in the manufacture of liquor for export, would be consumed in other and more beneficial channels.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

The autumn conference of the National British Women's Temperance Association, following for the first time somewhat the American Chautauqua plan, met in Stanwick, Derbyshire, for six delightful days of consideration of W. C. T. U. plans and methods. The comprehensive program included every line of work, special emphasis being placed on the efforts to reach children and young people and protect the soldiers from the evils of intemperance.

A monster petition for six o'clock closing has been presented to the parliament of New South Wales.

Several new unions have been organized in Straits Settlement, one at Tamil, with twenty-five members, by Mrs. Hancock, and others in Malacca, Kuala, Lumpur and in Sitiawan, Perah. The W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Shellabear, has been largely responsible for this satisfactory result.

The Scottish "Y's" have done much for the comfort of the soldiers. The W. C. T. U. of Aberdeen, Scotland, joined the Y. M. C. A. and the Woman's Patriotic Society in the celebration of Flower Day. On this day from six o'clock in the morning till dark a brisk trade in buttonhole bouquets and bunches of flowers was carried on. Roses, sweet peas and white heather were in great demand. Over 1,300 collectors and a large number of indoor assistants gave their services. The proceeds amounted to nearly 450 pounds.

Signora Severini has been elected vice-president of the W. C. T. U. of Italy. She has organized unions in Ancona, Chiaravalla, Pesaro, Capocelle, Piau di Meleto, Senegaglia, Macerata, Fansula and other points. She is now in communication with ladies in Turin, Bologna and Venice. Much literature has been distributed and many articles published in the newspapers. Signora Severini is at present giving scientific temperance lectures in the elementary schools.

The W. C. T. U of Sweden, which now has a membership of 7,062, is the only temperance society in Sweden which has increased its membership during the past year. Twenty-four new unions have been organized. Miss Cecilia Francke has been most successful as an organizer. A home of rest for working girls has been opened by a union on the east coast, and white ribboners of Malmo are building a ten room house in the north of their county as a rest home for tired women.

QUEENSLAND COMRADES IN ANNUAL MEETING

One of the noticeable features of the Queensland 1915 convention which met in the city of Bundaberg was a spirit of consecration and willingness to work, which speaks well for the success of the new year. Throughout the meetings there was ready response to all calls for workers, and no single piece of work was put aside because a woman could not be found to perform it. There is very definite progress, especially in the north, where an honorary organizer full of enthusiasm and spirituality has organized many new unions. Everywhere people are ready to respond, and a dozen organizers could be used to good purpose if the W. C. T. U. could send out that number. Among the many helpful features of the program were the sermons by Rev. Greenwood, a patriotic afternoon with helpful addresses, the Young People's evening and the annual address of the president, which dealt with the forward movement of temperance throughout the world. Reports showed thirty-four unions in good standing with a membership of 1,530 women. The financial condition is good. A fund for a Queensland W. C. T. U. motor ambulance reached 300 pounds before the close of the session. Mrs. T. Williams, state president, was re-elected, as was also the treasurer, Mrs. J. Tait. Mrs. Bode and Miss M. Borkendale are the new corresponding and recording secretaries.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA W. C. T. U.

The twenty-seventh convention of the South Australian W. C. T. U. was a time of thanksgiving over the victory for six o'clock closing in the securing of which the W. C. T. U. had a large share. In a letter of appreciation sent the minister of defence the wisdom of removing drink from troop ships was urged. That this has since been done is another cause of rejoicing. Among the activities reported at the convention was the vigorous campaign for six o'clock closing, house-to-house visitation, distribution of literature and the holding of many public and drawing room meetings. Posters have been most helpful in the work. Mrs. Harrison Lee Cowie of New Zealand and Mrs. Barton of Scotland have rendered valuable aid and their eloquent addresses have resulted in the addition of nearly 1,000 new members. The annual address of the president, Mrs. E. W. Nicholls, was an able and inspiring presentation of the status of prohibition and was received with marked appreciation. She made special mention of the fact that woman suffrage has been in force for twenty years in Australia, and that in this respect Australia leads the world. South Australia has four women justices of the peace, two of them members of the W. C. T. U., one the widow of the late Hon. Thomas Price and the other the national W. C. T. U. president. An effort is now being made to secure policewomen. Addresses of great power were those of Rev. I. C. Hughes and Pastor Huntsman, both stalwarts in the temperance cause. Two interesting evening meetings were devoted to the young people.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, December 2, 1915

GOAL FOR 1916—SIXTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, Hartford, Wis., rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, left Evanston Wednesday, December 1, for Washington, to attend the conference of the committee of nineteen, leaders of the allied temperance forces, who will confer on December 3 concerning the phraseology of the prohibition amendment which is to be presented to Congress. Miss Gordon will participate in the Day of Prayer meetings held by the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. and will remain for the other important conferences in Washington during the month of December.

The large number of orders received at National Headquarters for Day of Prayer programs indicates that there will be a widespread observance of the day—December 2.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION DAY DECEMBER 12

It is hoped that every local union in the land is making preparations for an enthusiastic observance of December 12, National Constitutional Prohibition Day, program for which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL of November 18. The action of Congress on this important question will depend largely upon the pressure brought to bear upon its members by their constituents. It is the purpose of these meetings to awaken such interest and enthusiasm in every church and community as will prompt the sending to Congressmen and Senators of resolutions in favor of the amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition. Do not fail to arrange immediately for a mass meeting which will attract men and women of every class, faith and political affiliation.

As heretofore stated, a mass meeting will be held in Washington, D. C., on December 12, at Poli's Theater, with Mrs. Mary Harris Armor and Dr. Mary Stone, president of the China W. C. T. U., as the chief speakers. Miss Gordon will preside, and Mrs. Boole and Mrs. Hoge, National General Officers, will participate, as will many state presidents and National superintendents. In addition to the list given last week, Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, president of West Virginia W. C. T. U.; Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president of Michigan W. C. T. U.; Miss Margaret J. Bilz, National organizer and lecturer, and resident members of the Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U., have signified their intention of being present.

"BETTER LAW ENFORCEMENT" CAMPAIGNS

A well-enforced prohibition law is conceded to be the superlative master argument in a no-license campaign. The liquor interests concentrate their attention and efforts largely on the state of Kansas. They employ high-priced statistical prevaricators to confuse and mislead the people in the hope of making a slight dent in the impregnable Kansas argument. Why do they do this? Because the very existence of such a well-enforced, beneficent, popular law imperils their iniquitous traffic.

It is well known that the Kansas argument alone has not only made millions of voters for the cause and has helped mightily in the conversion to prohibition of thousands in Canada and other nations, but that it was no small factor in leading the Czar and his advisers to decide to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in Russia. The same is true in a greater or less degree of every prohibition state or community. It is therefore a matter of profound significance that the emphasis in these days is being placed on the better enforcement of the anti-liquor laws which are at present on the statute books.

The older prohibition states have recently shown a healthy interest in this matter. Last year the legislature of Tennessee passed measures that will enable the officers of the law in every community to get more satisfactory results in the way of enforcement. The Georgia legislature, under the courageous leadership of Governor Harris, at its special session paved the way for an ideal enforcement of its law. Governor-elect Bilbo of Mississippi has very recently called upon the Christian people of his state to support and co-operate with him in clearing the state of boot-leggers and blind pigs. Governor Hatfield of West Virginia has announced that he will stand by his law-enforcing officers even to the extent of calling out the state militia.

The states in which prohibition laws are soon to go into effect have been studying to good purpose the experience of the older prohibition states and are prepared to guard at every point against violation of the law.

But officials, no matter how sincere their efforts or fervent their desires, cannot alone and unaided succeed. The responsibility rests as well upon every citizen. The recent triumph of law enforcement in Chicago through the action of Mayor Thompson in putting into effect a law which his predecessors had insisted was a dead letter, illustrates what a well-intentioned official can do if he is supported by public sentiment. In urging his people to help him in the enforcement of the prohibition law in Colorado after January 1, 1916, Governor Carlson recently said, "Every one of you must promise yourself to get on the firing line. If this new law is to be a success, you must back it up. We must show the property holder that he must stand by the law, for if he does not support the government in the liquor matter, he must realize that when he calls upon the government to protect his property, he will be calling upon a weakened instrument."

Two things every citizen of a prohibition community can and ought to do in this matter: First, let the state officials know that they have his approval and support in every way; and second, make sentiment for the enforcement of the law at every time, in every place, and in every way possible. History has shown that it takes the combination of a conscientious, morally courageous executive, and an audible, not to say clamorous public sentiment sustaining him, to secure satisfactory enforcement of a prohibition law, and nothing will do more to accelerate the prohibition movement than the whole-hearted co-operation of every citizen to this end.

DISEASE PREVENTION WEEK

The observance of Disease Prevention Week, December 6-12, will afford an opportunity to call the attention of the public, through the press and in other ways, to the relation of alcohol to disease, and especially to the recognition that has been given during the past year by boards of health to the liquor evil as one of the basic causes of ill health in every community. Mrs. Frances Waite Leiter, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of the department of Health, suggests that meetings be held by the W. C. T. U. during the week, placing special emphasis on the liquor evil in its relation to the great white plague, tuberculosis. The mayors of the various cities have designated December 10 of this Health week as "Child's Health Day" and have urged that all the schools devote some period of the day to appropriate exercises. Co-operation with the teachers in these exercises and the distribution among the children and their parents of literature showing the destructive and debilitating effects of alcohol may be arranged by the local unions. As all pastors are asked to preach Sunday, December 12, on the subject of tuberculosis and other diseases which ravage the country, it might not be out of place to mail to your pastor a leaflet giving the opinions of scientists on the undermining effect of alcoholic drinks, which render drinkers easy victims of tuberculosis.

NO MONEY IN SALOON BUSINESS

"I don't care if the state does go dry next year," a Columbus (Ohio) saloonkeeper is reported by a Columbus paper to have said when he heard the results of the election. "I wouldn't have cared if it had gone dry this year. If the prohibitionists take up the fight next year the wets will fight without any of my money. I pay $1,105 to go into business before I open my doors, and I have my rent on top of that. I have to hire well-paid men. If I hire cheap men, when I'm not looking they will get more than a high priced. There's no money in the saloon business in Ohio."

It is suspected that these sentiments are shared by more than one saloonkeeper in Ohio and other states, and the solution of the liquor question may be materially helped through the disaffection of this section of the liquor element.

POPULAR GOODS IN A "WET" STATE

A number of good natured, rough and tumble arguments took place during the recent Ohio campaign. The Columbus (O.) Dispatch tells the following story of one of them, that occurred in the city just before the elections:

"The speaker said that West Virginia had profited by voting dry, and a man in the crowd disputed this statement. He said that he was a salesman, that he visited every county seat in the state and that his business had fallen off considerably since that state went dry. Another man spoke up and said that he was a salesman and 'made' West Virginia regularly and that his business had increased since the state became dry. He asked the fellow who reported a falling off of business what his line was and the latter reluctantly admitted that he sold undertakers' supplies, at which the crowd yelled. The other man who declared that prohibition had helped his business explained he sold furniture. The wets laughingly acknowledged that they were worsted in the argument."

LET US "STAY THROUGH"

At one of the recent National Temperance Council meetings at San Francisco Mr. Daniel A. Poling told the following incident concerning his little son whom he was compelled not long ago to take to a surgeon for a painful operation. As the wee lad realized that he must submit to the ordeal and the anesthetic was about to be administered by the attendant, he put his arms around his father's neck, and pleaded, "Daddy, you'll stay through, won't you?" The father promised, but as the surgeon began the performance of his task, the father found it almost more than he could endure to watch by the bedside of the little sufferer, but mindful of his promise, he remained. When a little later the child opened his eyes and looked up into the father's face, his first words were, "Daddy, did you stay through?" "And woe be it to me," said Mr. Poling, "had I failed to keep faith with the lad. To stay through in the great work in which we are engaged, to stay through until this land is without a saloon or a brewery or a distillery, until the people of America and of the world are sober, this is our high privilege, our stupendous opportunity."

OKLAHOMA W.C.T.U. PARTICIPATES IN LAYING CORNER STONE OF NEW STATE CAPITOL

Statehood day, November 16, marked a new era in Oklahoma's history. The ceremonies incident to the laying of the corner stone of the new state capitol brought to Oklahoma City an immense crowd. It was a gala day with colors flying and flags and banners everywhere. The autos in the great parade in celebration of Oklahoma's eight years of statehood were gay with color. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has ever been identified with the growth and development of the state, hence it was fitting that the records of the organization, together with a copy of the state paper and the National president's annual address, be deposited in the vault under the huge cornerstone of the new building. Mrs. Cora D. Hammett, state corresponding secretary, made the necessary arrangements, also secured space in the parade for the W. C. T. U. autos, and reserved seats on the platform. Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, state W. C. T. U. president, was in attendance, and many local members were also present.

BEER MONEY NOW GOES FOR GROCERIES

An interesting bit of testimony comes from the section of Minnesota which has recently become dry through what might be called an automatic application of prohibition to a region where no election was held to settle the question, namely, the enforcement of an old Indian treaty. Because of this action there is not now an open saloon in Itasca county, and as a result there has taken place a marvelous reformation of a commercial nature. It is reported that at the Great Northern railroad station at this point one year ago seventy-nine tons of beer were shipped in. This year for the same period there was no receipt of beer, but the books showed that seventy-nine tons more of groceries were consigned to this point than during the corresponding month of a year ago. The Minneapolis (Minn.) Journal, in reporting this delightful state of affairs, says that the records of the mining companies, which employ the large population of foreigners, show fewer layoffs among the men than ever before and the stores report larger and more profitable business from these employes.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

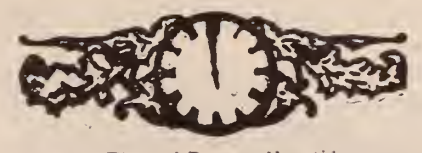
The new and stringent excise decree in Mexico places in the hands of the municipal government complete control of the retail liquor business of Mexico City. Hereafter no saloons or other public drinking resorts will be permitted to do business on the more prominent streets and avenues, or fronting on the public parks or plazas. Hereafter no saloon can be maintained within one hundred yards of a school or church edifice. Liquor may not be sold to minors, intoxicated persons or women of evil life.

It is reported that United States Senator John H. Bankhead of Alabama, who is chairman of the Senate committee on postoffices and postroads, has informed the Alabama commission that he intends to introduce and support the bill to exclude liquor circulars and advertising from the mails when addressed to dry territory. Inasmuch as Senator Bankhead was one of those who voted against the Webb-Kenyon bill this statement indicates that he now looks at the question from the point of view which should be taken by a man representing a prohibition state.

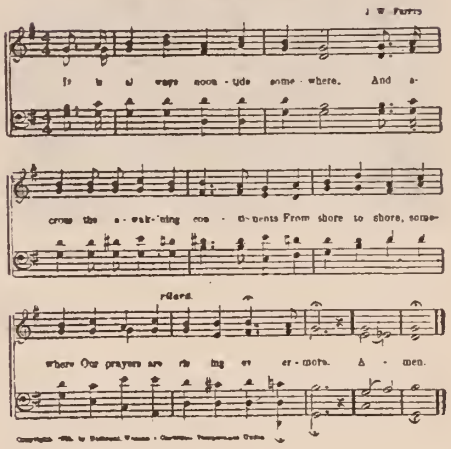
The Laymen's Missionary Conference meeting in Boston, Mass., recently, adopted resolutions urging President Wilson and Congress to stop the traffic in rum from Boston to the western coast of Africa. Since the European trade with Africa has been interrupted by the war, it is reported that many cargoes of rum have been sent from Boston to the Dark Continent.

The threatened order restricting the sale of liquor in Greater London has gone into effect. The hours of sale on week days are from noon to 2:30 p. m. and from 6 to 9 p. m. On Sundays they are from 1 p. m. to 3 p. m. and from 6 to 9 p. m. It is forbidden to lend or advance money for payment for liquor.

The Beta Phi fraternity, at a recent meeting in Chicago, passed resolutions forbidding liquor in its chapter houses. The resolution is said to affect chapters of twelve colleges and universities in the middle west.



Time of Prayer—Noontide



We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. M. B. WHITE, mother of Mrs. Hattie E. Buck, treasurer of the Arizona W. C. T. U. Mrs. White was an ardent temperance worker and in the early days was territorial president of the Arizona W. C. T. U.

MR. C. B. WOOD, husband of the recording secretary of the Arizona W. C. T. U. Mr. Wood was a prominent citizen and at the time of his death postmaster of Phoenix. He perished in the flames of a burning building on his ranch near Phoenix.

MRS. J. R. DAY, Rushsylvania, O., president of the Logan county W. C. T. U. for many years; one of the Crusaders of the '70's, and a tireless worker for the temperance cause.

From Council Bluffs comes the story of a former saloon-keeper, gambler, boozer, etc., who was converted by Billy Sunday's "booze" sermon and straightway after "hitting the trail" he went to the chief of police of Council Bluffs, a Christian man, under a reform administration, and offered his services in ferreting out the dens of vice and helping to maintain the city's standing when it goes dry under the new Iowa law, January 1, 1916.

In one of her speeches at the National W. C. T. U. Convention Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger told the story of a young minister who was offered forty dollars to help pay a church debt. The money was needed very, very badly, but the minister replied: "Before I accept that contribution I must let you know my attitude toward your business. As long as I am a minister in this town I want to tell you I shall fight your business as hard as I know how. I shall tell the young men and boys just what you will do to them, and if I get a chance when election time comes I shall vote to put you out of business." The saloon-keeper thrust the money toward the minister, as he said, "Take it. I wouldn't have any respect for you if you didn't do those very things."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

DECEMBER 23—Crusade Day.

SUPERINTENDENTS

CO-OPERATION TEMPERANCE AND MISSIONS

DR. L. C. PURINGTON

How Gain National and State Prohibition?

The Colorado W. C. T. U. president gives the following answer to the above question: "The church and missionary societies must be won in order to gain National Constitutional Prohibition." These were some of the achievements last year along this line: 1,227 churches and auxiliaries won, 690 superintendents, 861 temperance secretaries, 1,391 meetings held, 1,958 addresses delivered, 500,000 pages of literature distributed, 170,000 pages for missionary purposes, 565 new members gained; one most extensive and intensive exhibit prepared by Illinois superintendent; twenty charts; a panoramic of articles in THE UNION SIGNAL; missions and mission stations; of original devices, banners, pennants, posters, post cards, many. (See National Annual Report). Summer schools of missions and Chautauquas have welcomed our co-operation. "The Unity of the Kingdom" has been the prevailing theme; city missions and work among foreigners have received our help.

The department has had special presentation at the Panama Exposition and Congress of Missions; demonstrations and exhibits at state conventions, (the charts, "Relation of Temperance to Missions" and the "L. T. L. in Mission Lands" afford ample material for varied and interesting demonstration); generous space and articles by temperance experts in prominent missionary magazines.

How Can We Keep Step for the Kingdom?

I.

We might well feel helpless facing the great open doors alluring us to enter were it not that Christ is at the helm. Let us begin anew with prayer and song and the Word of God. "The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks."

"We kneel how weak, we rise how strong." To sing more is to march faster! Let us sing more.

"The songs of Zion in strange lands." I have discovered a honanza of song, the music and words by an old friend who knows the children and young crusaders by heart. Leaflet songs, temperance and missionary (50 cents per dozen) by Margaret Coote Brown of Buffalo, N. Y. The titles tell the story: "The World Children for Jesus," "A Ship Goes Sailing O'er the Sea," "Twentieth Century Knights," "Welcome, Travelers, Welcome," "The Gospel Trumpets," "The Little Crusaders," "Our Bonny Flag," etc. Among these, "The World Children for Jesus" and "Welcome, Travelers, Welcome," are inspiring and delightful to use in connection with "The Loyal Temperance Legion in Mission Lands" exercise, by Ella Gilbert Ives.

Such lines as these give the drift:

"The little Jap babies, with shining, dark eyes."

"Knights are we with waving plumes, Gaily now advancing;"

The efficient worker, having well considered and acted upon hints like these (very familiar, we admit) is prepared to bring home the simple lesson of crusading and co-operation, and it is not all child's play either!

Emphasis on the meeting, on the program (program not too long), illustration, as by charts, banners, flags, pennants, blackboards, costuming when called for—all vivid auxiliaries in the hands of vivid leaders.

Too much, or too obvious machinery, is deadening, but have we not thus far enumerated the first things to be done so that almost all we need is the spiritual application—the love of Christ in the heart, so that we allure others to work. Frances E. Willard, "Saint Frances," always called for our best.

II.

Secure a more intensive co-operation with missionary boards (home and foreign), temperance bureaus, committees, secretaries, and supplies of literature at headquarters, missionary and temperance, and at public meetings; also a hearing in missionary and temperance magazines and periodicals. (See August, 1915, issue of Life and Light, a Congregational publication).

Secure fellowship and get temperance included in the weekly offering and annual report; secure temperance secretaries in the auxiliary, and insure publicity of current gospel reform.

Gospel temperance work is growing easier. There are few comparatively in this generation who dare to ignore the great sin of the liquor traffic and not to do something for its overthrow.

III.

"You cannot have reaping unless there has been seed-sowing and weeding and watering and nurturing; unless the sun has been shining with light and warmth from Christlike lives."—John R. Mott.

I shall not reiterate the contents of the manual—"How to Do the Work"—a text booklet as to organization, first principles in working, temperance secretaries, temperance and missionary literature, ways of working, the great need abroad and at home, programs and helpful suggestions. The manual and "Definite Easy Things to Do" make a plain path. The department has literature for readings, study, discussion.

"Up to Date!"

I do not say that W. C. T. U. superintendents are like the Athenians, clamoring for something "new," but I do say that year by year the World's superintendent (first) and the National superintendent (second) have tried unceasingly to keep up with the trend of the Kingdom abroad and at home. The Kingdom is old as the Bible and it changeth not. Dates grow old, but the Kingdom never! We reiterate old truths and chronicle progress and power. You and I in this department are particularly concerned with its missionary and temperance aspects, and this includes the divine refrain, "Christ for the world we sing!"

The Uses of Literature

This is a whole great subject in itself. Much that is in this article is embodied in a leaflet of plans and suggestions for the New Year, just out. In this you will find the uses of literature amplified, also the kind to send to missionary workers to insure interest and help in our propaganda; also questions for report, a telling poem; and a notice of our department Ella Gilbert Ives Red Letter Day, February 12. (See autobiography, "The Evolution of a Teacher," "Ella Gilbert Ives Booklet," also department literature).

Address,

DR. L. C. PURINGTON,

23 Allston St., Dorchester, Mass.

After Thoughts

Join with the summer schools of missions, securing recognition in the program. "All our women work together in auxiliaries and unions," says the Oklahoma superintendent. Discuss "The Unity of the Kingdom," "New America," "Asiatic Influences," "The Liquor Traffic Versus Missions." Unite in a day of praise and prayer; prayer for women in the Orient facing new opportunities of freedom; prayer for those who have made the work possible in Africa, India, the islands of the sea, Japan, Turkey, among the Indians, mountain whites and negroes; prayer for the foreigners among us, Italians, Armenians, Syrians, Greeks, Chinese; for immigrant forces, the immigrant sister; for Mexico and its needs.

Study the round-the-world-mission of the W. C. T. U., foreign and home, the work and workers.

BUREAU OF PUBLICITY

CLARA C. CHAPIN, Director

The Press Paragraphs

Section 10 of the Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition, adopted by the Seattle Convention, reads as follows:

"That special campaign material be furnished in the Press Paragraphs of the Publicity Bureau, and be sent out free of charge—state presidents to furnish the lists of such papers as will use the material."

It was found last year that because of this requirement to secure an agreement from newspapers to use the paragraphs few official lists were sent in. The reason is easily seen. It made necessary the circularization of editors, and this not many of the state presidents were willing to undertake. They maintained—and the point is well taken—that results would not justify the time and money expended. Busy editors do not often reply to circular letters—and it must be remembered that other temperance organizations are supplying newspapers with reading matter without stopping to inquire if they will use it.

Up to the middle of July we were printing and sending out 5,000 copies of the clip sheet. Believing that, in view of the sum appropriated, at least twice that number should be going into the states, the director of the Bureau, at a conference of the General Officers in August, recommended that the Press Paragraphs be furnished to newspapers in every state on the basis of fifty per cent, names to be selected by the state president, or, failing that, by the Bureau director from the American Newspaper Annual and Directory. The officers approved, and this approval was re-affirmed at a meeting Nov. 22, at National Head quarters. Our work now is to secure the lists and as rapidly as it can be done, send the sheet to fifty per cent of the newspapers in every state.

The clip sheet goes into every state in the Union. The territory of Alaska is making wide use of it. Hawaii takes 500 copies each month, the temperance allies—the W. C. T. U. and the Anti-Saloon League—having secured permission of the National W. C. T. U. to print on the reverse side of the sheet items of local interest. It was a factor in the dry victory of Alberta, Canada, the W. C. T. U. of the province having, through its Press superintendent, purchased copies for use in this campaign.

A large proportion of the college periodicals of the country are receiving the sheet. We consider this a most important field and the liquor interests are like-minded, as is shown by their efforts to get their reading matter into the college papers.

Our Syndicate Service

"Our" because we, the National W. C. T. U. Bureau of Publicity, furnish the copy, and because this ready-print and plate matter goes out with the name of our National organization at the head of every column. For three years and a half the Western Newspaper Union has, as you know, been printing, without the cost of a penny to us, the temperance material we send them and supplying the same to its newspaper patrons. Indeed, that syndicate has contributed not a little of its own time and money to promote the work. The first of the year a circular letter signed by the director of the Bureau was sent to the president of every local union in the country so far as names could be secured. Every bit of the expense of printing and mailing these letters was borne by the Western Newspaper Union.

The question is sometimes asked, Why is not more of our temperance plate matter used by the newspapers which promise the local unions they will publish it? Mr. Patterson, editor-in-chief of the Western Newspaper Union newspaper service, writes as follows on this point:

"When the ladies get some newspaper to write us to supply this column in their ready-print service, the order for it of course stands and the paper receives it week after week but when they arrange with the publisher to handle this matter in plate form they fail to impress upon the publisher the idea of placing a standing order for it to be shipped to him each six weeks. The majority of orders that come to us are for one page only. When that page is used we do not in the majority of cases get an order for another page to follow. If the ladies could impress on the publisher the idea of placing a standing order to be shipped each six weeks, he would then receive the plates at regular intervals and would undoubtedly continue to use them."

Hereafter let every local union see to it that a promise from a local editor to use our column in plate form means a STANDING ORDER for the same.

The column in ready-print form, unlike the plate matter, may be used by the paper already carrying a Western Newspaper Union "patent inside" without additional cost to the editor. Therefore, if the local union lives up to its publicity privileges there is no reason why nearly every newspaper getting a ready-print section from the Western Newspaper Union should not be giving to its readers the National W. C. T. U. column. Few of these newspapers would today refuse to include this material in their ready-print service. With this thought in mind the Bureau, early in the year, sent to each state Press superintendent a list of the newspapers in her state using the Western Newspaper Union ready-prints, asking her to secure, through her county and local superintendents, the publication of our column. Newspapers which have ready-print sections are largely those which are published in the small cities and country towns. It is the readers of these papers, not the readers of the metropolitan dailies, who give us prohibition majorities. So look after your country papers—the small daily and the weekly.

I asked Mr. Patterson to give me any item concerning our column which might be of interest to embody in my annual report. In reply he says:

"A bit of information in connection with this service that will possibly be of interest to you is that I told our editors not to be so careful about the elimination of prohibition matter from copy as we have been in the past. This subject is becoming more prominent all the time and I think we can afford to run in the temperance service something along this line, though of course we would like to keep the greater part of it pure temperance as it was before, with a little prohibition argument. If these should get too strong it would probably cause some of the papers carrying it to discontinue the service, which would affect you as well as us."

This change of attitude means that prohibition has become a nation-wide and a world-wide issue. It means that the newspapers are giving it conspicuous place in their news columns. The liquor interests are finding it increasingly difficult these days to send out their free plate matter for the reason that, as one prohibition journal puts it, "more and more the newspapers of the country refuse to be barkers for booze."

Much general miscellaneous publicity work is done by the Bureau—news items sent to the Associated Press and special matter supplied to various publications—as, for example, the labor papers. Calls constantly come to Headquarters for help and information, and continually the field widens. Only the other day we received a request from the Social Service Review, a journal published in New York, for 500 words monthly, reporting the work of our organization and the progress of the temperance reform generally.

To get the ear of the people—this is what the W. C. T. U. is endeavoring to do through its Bureau of Publicity. We enter every open door—so far as circumstances will permit. "Bring the truth to the masses" is our motto, and we look to every local union to enable us to live up to it.

"LET YOUR LIGHT SO SHINE"

CAROLINE McDOWELL, National Superintendent World's Missionary Fund

We all believe devoutly that "Giving is a blessed service" and agree with Paul, "That so laboring we ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive'"; to give "not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver."

We believe, too, the divine promises: "Give and it shall be given you, good measure, pressed down, and shaken together and running over, shall men give into your bosom"; "He shall receive a hundredfold (10,000 per cent) now in this time and in the world to come eternal life."

We all also believe that to evangelize the world we must first destroy the drink habit and the liquor traffic, and yet during the past year our World's Missionary Fund—a fund for temperance propaganda in the foreign field—has received only $332. Never was there a time when the appeals for help were more urgent, when the opportunity was greater to publish abroad the necessity of prohibition as a war measure and to advertise prohibition's good effects as evidenced by the tidings of advance in Russia, even while suffering the horrors of war; never was the need more pressing to teach some of the English clergy the value to life and country of total abstinence.

Let me again remind you that the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Brooklyn, N. Y., pledged itself to endeavor to raise for this work during the three following years a fund of $100,000. Two years have passed and from the United States we have received only $4,732.

Because of the European war we must depend largely upon our own country for this fund. This necessitates giving until we feel it. Sisters, we owe a debt to these susceptible, unprotected people because of the degradation our exportation of rum and beer has brought to them. This destruction of these native races is not a thing of the past. Two vessels just recently sailed from Boston to Africa loaded with 210,000 gallons of "liquid death and distilled damnation"-New England rum.

"My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge, saith the Lord." Even humanitarianism and commercialism demand increase of this fund, and we that have spiritual and moral light should let it shine into the dark places.

WHERE LIES THE BLAME?

CORA TOWNSEND McNERNY, Denver, Colo.

The long hours of agony through which Nora Darley had just passed had given way to the joyous realization that she was now a mother. A smile lighted her pale face as she heard the feeble cry of her first-born, and saw the love and wonder illuminating the features of her boyish husband, as he peered anxiously into the cradle where lay their new possession. The great tenderness of his every look or word thrilled her heart with a warm glow, as exhaustion closed her eyes in healing sleep.

Presently, aroused by the low murmur of voices, she heard Harry saying: "I'll take a run over to the factory, Mrs. Mooney, while Nora is asleep, if you're sure everything is all right. I won't be gone long. You're positive I can be spared and that you can stay until I get back? I hate to ask so much of you, but the boss will be looking for me, and you know I must keep my job."

She heard Mrs. Mooney, the motherly neighbor, who had left her own little ones to help the Darleys in their hour of need, answer cheerfully: "Surely I'll stay; you'll not be long, of course, and the children are safe in the yard. Jim won't be home for dinner before six. Mrs. Darley is going to be all right now, so go along and don't worry."

Harry tip-toed across the room to see if she still slept. Laughing up into his brooding, troubled eyes, Nora gave his cheek a soft pat as she said: "I am better now, dear, but must you go to the factory?"

"I think so, sweetheart, if you don't mind. I don't believe I'll have to stay long. They'll let me off when they hear about the boy. I want to bring you something nice when I come back, dear. What would you like?"

Nora laughed again, a low, happy laugh, and put her soft arms lovingly around her husband's neck as he bent over her.

"You must not bring me anything, you silly goose." At his look of disappointment she hastened to add, "I mean I must be careful what I eat, dear. You might bring me a rose, one of those lovely pink ones the little crippled boy always sells. I should love that."

"Then you shall have roses, if it's roses you want; but now you must rest. The doctor said you must not talk, and I have been making you do it all this time. Shall I fix your pillows? There, is that better? Are you quite 'comfy' now? Sure there's nothing more you want before I go?"

"No, nothing, Harry. I think I'll sleep now," Nora answered, as she returned his parting kiss.

The street door had barely closed behind him when the girl-wife heard her husband return to ask Mrs. Mooney anxiously if she remembered the doctor's instructions about the medicine. Only when convinced that the "nurse" knew them thoroughly did he finally leave, saying as he went, "The doctor will be here again tonight, to see if everything is all right. I hope I can get back before he comes."

Nora weakly closed her aching eyes, and happily dreamed of the warm little body, so dear and helpless, that lay in the dainty crib across the room—the crib she had fashioned with her own hands, and that she and Harry had thought so beautiful.

She could hear Mrs. Mooney moving deftly but quietly about the little house, and she knew everything would be as neat and orderly as she herself had always kept it.

She dozed for a little and was still sleeping quietly when the whistles announcing the close of the day's work awoke her. Harry would soon be here. She was glad, as she knew Mrs. Mooney had her dinner to get and the children to care for. That they were growing restless, she could tell from the sound of their voices out in the yard.

She called to Mrs. Mooney, urging her not to wait for Harry, but to go at once. "I am all right, Mrs. Mooney," she said, "and baby is sleeping soundly. Harry will be here so soon the few minutes I am alone will not matter. Please go and get your dinner. The children are tired and hungry, and Mr. Mooney will be hungry, too. I shall feel better if I know you are not neglecting your family for me."

"There, don't worry, Mrs. Darley, the children would be playing just the same if I were there; and Jim won't mind the delay. I told Mr. Darley I'd wait, and I'll feel much easier to know he is here when I go."

Weakness made the young mother unnaturally nervous. What could be keeping Harry? Six o'clock and still he had not come.

She heard Mr. Mooney's cheerful whistle as he came up the walk, and his hearty laugh as his children ran to meet him. It was a shame to let Mrs. Mooney stay longer. After much coaxing she succeeded in getting her to go home and prepare dinner, afterward leaving Mr. Mooney to put the children to bed.

By this time a nameless fear began to possess Nora; a dread of impending danger, of harm to her loved one. It made her tremble violently until Mrs. Mooney reminded her that it was a busy time at the factory, and her husband probably had to work overtime. Comforted by this belief, and calmed by the quieting influence of the doctor, who had just made his promised visit, Mrs. Darley lay passive, listening for her husband's footsteps.

Presently the sound of crying across the way, of childish voices raised in angry protest, roused Nora to say insistently: "Mrs. Mooney, your little ones need you; please run over and get them to bed." Ear-splitting shrieks from Tommy made the mother yield to Mrs. Darley's plea, and Nora gave a sigh of relief as she felt that harmony was being restored in the Mooney home.

An hour or so passed, then Nora heard a strange, stumbling step coming up the walk. Nearer and nearer it sounded, and with her heart beating suffocatingly with fright, she heard the street door open, and some one stumble in.

With all her strength she tried to cry out, to get up, when a well-known but husky voice said: "I'm he-here at-lasht, honey. Thought boysh never would let me get away. Kept inshisting on me setting 'em up, count of our boy—you—know, dearie. Gre-at thing to have boy. But I'm he-here and got some pi-pink roshes, too, pet. Don't you ever think I'd forget my baby."

It was Harry reeling toward her, some faded pink roses outstretched in his hand.

Frozen with horror, she watched him as he came. Then she saw him fall against the table, upsetting the lamp, which went crashing to the floor. For a moment, in fascinated agony she gazed at the oil running over the floor. Racing after it, licking it up with a thousand hungry tongues, darted the flames, straight for the baby's cradle. With a piercing scream she was beside the crib, madly striving to lift the babe in her trembling arms, frantically trying to bear him to safety. But the fire was too swift for her; it was all around and about her. "Where—where should she turn?" "Strength—strength!" she prayed; "only a little more strength."

As if the dreadful scene had cleared his fogged brain, the boy fought desperately to save his wife and child; beating the fire from them with bare hands, and smothering it out with his own body.

Morning brought with it the bright sunshine; but Harry Darley wondered at the day's fairness, wondered that the sun should rise at all. To him it seemed a cruel mockery that outside his window the birds sang; that in the streets wagons rumbled by, and children dared to laugh.

Didn't they know that Nora, his Nora, her lovely face scarred with cruel burns, lay cold and still in the little room where they had been so happy, and beside her was his baby? Never again would Nora's joyous laugh and cheery voice be heard. Didn't they know it was all his fault, and that he had loved her so?

THE SOULS OF THE CHILDREN

"Who bids for the little children—body and soul and brain?
Who bids for the little children—fair and without a stain?
Will no one bid? What, no one, for their souls, so pure and white,
And fit for all good or evil which the world on their page may write?"

"I bid," cries Beggary, "I bid for them, one and all!
I'll teach them a thousand lessons—to lie, to skulk, to crawl!
They shall sleep in my lair, like maggots; they shall rot in the fair sunshine;
And if they serve my purpose, I hope they will answer thine."

"And I'll bid higher and higher," says Crime, with a wolfish grin,
"For I love to lead the children through the pleasant paths of sin.
They shall swarm in the streets to pilfer, they shall plague the broad highways,
Till they grow too old for pity, and ripe for the law to slay.

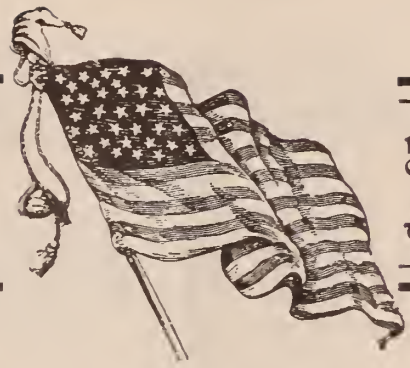
"The prisons and the gallows are plenty in the land;
'Twere folly not to use them, so proudly do they stand.
Give me the little children, I'll take them as they're born,
And feed their evil passions with misery and scorn.

"Give me the little children, ye good, ye rich, ye wise,
And let the busy world spin round, while ye shut your idle eyes,
And your judges shall have work, and your lawyers wag the tongue,
And the jailers and policemen shall be fathers to the young."

O lovers of the Savior, can ye stand idly by?
And leave the little children to suffer and to die?
O turn, for sake of Jesus, from earth's engrossing cares,
And save the little children from sin's alluring snares.

Selected.

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!



Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

TICKETS FOR TEMPERANCE

A. MARIA CRAWFORD

Harry Mims' mother was an enthusiastic worker in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and when plans for raising a campaign fund were being discussed, the small boy immediately volunteered his services.

"Now, what can you do, son?" laughingly asked his father.

"I can haul things in my new wheelbarrow," Harry answered quickly.

"We are hoping to have a bazaar outdoors," explained Mrs. Mims, "so perhaps there will be things that a small boy can haul for us."

"May I, mother? Will you pin a white ribbon bow on me then?" he questioned almost breathlessly, for he had secretly cherished a desire for a temperance badge for a long time.

"I will pin a white bow on you now, son, and you can begin to help in the great work of temperance."

"Isn't he too little to know what you are talking about, dear?" asked Mr. Mims, but his wife shook her head vigorously.

"No, indeed. We cannot begin too early to teach him the sin of drinking. Tell father what the white ribbon bow means, little son."

"If you wear a white bow, you must never, never drink whisky or wine," came the ready response.

"Well, it appears that he knows what he is talking about. I think that he is eligible for membership in the Loyal Temperance Legion."

Harry awoke early on the day set for the big bazaar in the Mims' pretty yard. He hurried about, busily hauling rolls of bright bunting, flags and great bunches of late fall flowers that were to make the booths gay and attractive. Then he began to haul small articles that were for sale. He was so interested and worked so faithfully that after a time some of the workers decided to trust him with boxes of candy that the members of the Loyal Temperance Legion had made for the bazaar. Back and forth trudged small Harry, although the day was warm and he would have liked to sit down and eat some of the tempting candies that filled his wheelbarrow. But he was true to the older people's faith in him. He would not touch the candy.

When he was dressed for the occasion and visitors began to arrive in numbers and move about from booth to booth, Harry felt disappointed that his work was over and that there was apparently nothing more for a small boy to do. He walked around trying to see something that he could do for the cause that his mother loved. He stopped at a big table near the entrance where a pretty girl was selling admission tickets, ten cents apiece. To sell tickets! How that did appeal to the small boy! He approached timidly.

"If you—if you get tired, I can help," he suggested hopefully.

"If you wear a white bow you must never, never drink whisky or wine"

A BOY'S PROMISE

The school was out, and down the street
A noisy crowd came thronging;
The hue of health, a gladness sweet,
To every face belonging.

Among them strode a little lad,
Who whispered to another,
And mildly said, half grave, half sad:
"I can't—I promised mother."

A shout went up, a ringing shout,
Of boisterous derision;
But not one moment left in doubt
That manly brave decision.

"Go where you please, do what you will,"
He calmly told the other:
"But I shall keep my word, boys, still;
I can't—I promised mother."

Ah! who can doubt the future course
Of one who thus had spoken?
Through manhood's struggle, gain and loss,
Could faith like this be broken?

God's blessing on that steadfast will,
Unyielding to another,
That bears all jeers and laughter still,
Because he promised mother!

—George Cooper.

The pretty girl understood at once. Harry longed to sell tickets.

"Run, find a little table, Harry, and I will help you make change. You can sell the tickets."

Harry was off as fast as his fat little legs could carry him in search of his mother, who somehow had a faculty for producing almost anything he ever wanted. A big palm was lifted off of one of the taborets on the spacious porch and Harry was allowed to use it. He made a seat out of his wheelbarrow and many a tired business man and worn woman passing by looked in, and seeing the eager, happy little face of the small ticket agent, went in and contributed to the temperance fund.

"You are a drawing card, young man," laughed the girl whose place he had taken. She sat just back of him at her big table and showed him how to make the right change. After an hour or two Harry's box was so full of nickels, dimes and quarters that the pretty girl suggested that he take the money to the president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and let her see how well they were getting along. So Harry put the box in his little red wheelbarrow and pushed it toward the tent where his mother sat with the dear old lady who had guided the temperance work in that city for many, many years. How their eyes did shine when Harry showed them his collections!

"There will be more, too," he cried joyously, seeing their pleasure over the good returns. "More people are coming in right now." So he picked up his wheelbarrow and hurried back to his little table, hoping to collect more money.

Of course the ladies presented him with a box of candy when the day was over and they had counted all the money that had been turned in. Their collections exceeded anything they had expected and they felt that the smallest member ought to be rewarded for his services. So it was a very proud little boy who opened his big box of candy and after passing it around, obediently shut it up until morning, for mother knew that Harry could not sleep that night if he ate candy. His greatest reward came when he was publicly thanked for his services at a meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The look of happiness and pride in his mother's eyes made him glad that he had been able to have even a small share in the great work of temperance that will some day purge the world of much of its sin and sorrow. When the W. C. T. U. works for a campaign fund in your city, what are you going to do to help?

Holiday Gifts

THE UNION SIGNAL

a paper for the home, a suitable, desirable and helpful gift coming each week in the year. You make no mistake in sending it to father, mother, sister, brother, or the friend in college.

Price, $1.00 per year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER

will be welcomed not only by the boys and girls but by the Sunday school and public school teacher. Issued monthly.

Price, 25 cents per year.

Dainty gift cards will be mailed to all subscribers to whom the paper is ordered as a gift, and the Christmas number will be mailed to each.

Kindly send in subscriptions at once so that the gift subscriptions may reach the subscriber before Christmas.

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Cloth, $1.50. Morocco, $2.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said. Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 75 cents.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Price, 50 cents.

Nineteen Beautiful Years. Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.

A Modern Madonna, Carolyn Stanley. Price, $1.50.

Freckles, Gene Stratton Porter. Price, 60 cents.

John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.

Lois Morton's Investment, Mrs. Eva Murphy. Price, $1.35.

Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.32.

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.40.

BOOKLETS

Who's to Blame, Marietta Holley. Price, each, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Rest Cottage, profusely illustrated. Price, each, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

W. C. T. U. STATIONERY

Fine linen paper with W. C. T. U. monogram, embossed in gold. Twenty-four sheets and envelopes, boxed, 60 cents per box.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage spoons
Crusade Church spoons
Sterling, price, $1.50 each.

W. C. T. U. PINS

White enamel on silver with letters, 40 and 60 cents each
White enamel on silver without letters, 30 cents each
White enamel on gilt without letters, 25 cents each

CHRISTMAS CARDS

A carefully selected assortment of daintily decorated and engraved Christmas cards, with envelopes, at 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen; 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen.

Cards without envelopes, 15c and 25c per dozen.

Packages of Christmas tags and seals, 5 cents per package.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

ALABAMA W. C. T. U. CONVENTION REJOICES OVER RETURN OF PROHIBITION

The thirty-first annual convention of the Alabama W. C. T. U. was an occasion of fervent thanksgiving that Alabama is again flying the flag of state-wide prohibition, the flag that guarantees protected childhood and happy homes, and secures untold blessings to every department of the state's life. When Birmingham entertained the convention last year, a far sadder note was sounded. The banners dear to the W. C. T. U. were trailing in the dust, trampled by unholy feet, but the white ribboners, with resolute hearts and determined minds, picked them up and held them high. This year their undaunted faith was poured forth in rejoicing for the victory of a dry state with impregnable prohibition laws and officers fearless in the discharge of their duties. For the old cry, "prohibition doesn't prohibit," there has been substituted throughout the state another, "The prohibition laws are too drastic."

All the officers were in attendance, with the exception of the recording secretary, Mrs. Chappell Cory, who had not returned from the National Convention. Mrs. Annie K. Weisel, president of the Alabama W. C. T. U., presided throughout the convention.

A special feature of the convention program was an address by Hon. S. D. Weakley, author of Alabama's prohibition laws, who gave in earnest, forceful manner interesting facts and figures. The laws as framed by Judge Weakley, were passed with no change and approved in toto by the supreme court of the state. Judge Weakley paid a beautiful tribute to his mother. A message was read from Miss Julia Tutwiler, for years superintendent of the Peace and Reform department, which she called her last greeting. It brought sadness to the hearts of the white ribboners as they realized all that she has stood for during the long and weary years of the temperance struggle. A committee, who carried to the hospital where she lay, flowers and a message of love and sympathy from the convention, found her, program in hand, absent in body but present in spirit.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, delivered an address at one of the evening meetings, and Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., spoke on another evening. Both gave messages full of inspiration.

The state officers were all re-elected. The organization faces the new year with happy hearts and joyful spirit, but with the realization that the enemy is not destroyed, and there is need for constant vigilance.

Precious Promise Bible
Something Entirely New Just Off the Press
ALL THE PROMISES IN RED
Most Comforting Bible Published
The famous, international clear type, self-pronouncing edition, with all the teachers' helps. Beautifully illustrated in colors. Leather, only $3.75. Descriptive Circular Free.
SEND FOR OUR FREE CATALOGS
of Song Books, Bibles, Bible Mottoes, Christian Workers' Helps, Missionary Books, Temperance Books, Purity Books, Christian Evidence and Anti-Infidel Books, Peace Literature, etc. Agents Wanted.
We Have the Most Complete Catalogs Published
GLAD TIDINGS PUBLISHING CO. Lakeside Building CHICAGO, ILL.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID LADY
in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G East Harrison, CHICAGO

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME?" 90,000 SOLD. Send 10c for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. Wm.E.Marks, 1603 WestSt., Wilmington, Delaware

Though Michigan, as a state, remains in the wet column, it has a dry state fair, the sale of liquor on the grounds having been prohibited for several years. The W. C. T. U. is an important factor in this annual gathering and receives every courtesy from the management. Three large tents are allowed the organization, a rest tent, a large hospital tent equipped with physicians, nurses, medicines and surgical requisites, and a tent fitted out for a nursery where scores of babies are cared for while mothers see the fair. A well organized company of women under the direction of Mrs. Jennie E. Carley, state superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, have charge of the work. This year W. C. T. U. Day brought many thousands of interested people to the fair to enjoy the splendid program given from the band stand. Henry Ford's band furnished inspiring patriotic music. A grand gold medal contest was held and Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., gave a magnificent address.

"BABIES IS A BOTHER"
This latest work by the author of "The Mission of a Little Easter Bud" has been received with great favor. It is a realistic story of home life, teaching a greatly needed lesson and makes a suitable Christmas gift. Its bits of humor make it readable by young or old. A cover decorated with several baby faces makes the booklet especially attractive.
Price, 20 cents, postpaid. Address
MRS. CORA HOWE GARDNER
133 Mott Terrace Schenectady, N. Y

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., was a speaker this year at the meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs of New York state at Syracuse. A most cordial reception was accorded her, and much interest manifested in recent W. C. T. U. advancement and achievements. Mrs. Boole was appointed a delegate from the New York State Federation to the biennial convention, to be held in New York next spring, an entirely unexpected honor, as the W. C. T. U. is not affiliated with the Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, president of the Utah W. C. T. U., who gave valuable help in the Pennsylvania suffrage campaign, has been spending a few days in Dayton, O., in attendance at the meeting of the Social Welfare League. She is also doing some W. C. T. U. work and at the close of an address at Dayton forty-three new members were gained for a union which at that time had only twelve.

Mrs. Mary L. Parsons, a member of the W. C. T. U. of Chanute, Kansas, writes that the Frances Willard tablets, installed last fall in the public schools, have aroused in the children much interest concerning the great leader. Many have come to Mrs. Parsons with inquiries which gave her an opportunity to impress upon their minds the value and beauty of a life like Miss Willard's. She believes the silent sermon of the bronze is doing very effective work.

A correspondent from Cashmere, Chelan county, Washington, writes that within the past year a large and beautiful high school building has been given the name of Frances Willard, and in its main auditorium hangs a framed picture of her.

The establishment of the Elizabeth P. Hutchinson memorial library in the Portland (Oregon) Surgical Hospital has awakened interest in that form of memorial to other white ribboners which will, without doubt, give joy to many invalids and shut-ins in other cities.

Roena E. Shaner, National organizer and lecturer and vice-president-at-large of the Missouri W. C. T. U., has had wonderful success in a two-weeks' tour of Pike county, Mo., where she worked in the interest of prohibition and suffrage under the direction of the county president, Mrs. Emma G. Pitzer. Miss Shaner delivered twenty-eight addresses, including valuable help at an all-day county institute. She secured twenty-two active and seven honorary members and 23 subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL and THE YOUNG CRUSADER. The collections paid all expenses and left nearly $20.00 in the treasury.

Mrs. F. B. Stevens, corresponding secretary of the Arizona W. C. T. U., is slowly recovering from typhoid fever, with which disease she has been afflicted for five weeks.

"MOTHERS OF MEN," a book recently written and "dedicated to the mothers of all nations" by Mrs. Frances E. Hallowes of India, and published by Headly Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C. (price, one shilling), is a book that should be read by all mothers and their sons. It shows up militarism in its true light. It also shows in a convincing manner the way to world-peace and how, honorably, to prevent the awful ravages of war.

H. J. BAILEY.

White Ribbon Fountain

The Adrian (Mich.) W. C. T. U. recently presented to the city a bronze sanitary drinking fountain, the design of which is most unique and significant, being a globe representing the world encircled by the white ribbon. At the time of the presentation, addresses were made by Mayor Billings of the city, Mrs. Florence M. Harvey, president of the local union, and Mrs. Charles Humphrey for the committee having in charge the work of securing the fountain.

The Tonkawa (Okla.) W. C. T. U. observed World's Temperance Sunday by an evening meeting at which a demonstration was given of the nineteen dry states, represented by girls in costume. Unique figures in the presentation were Uncle Sam and Aunt Columbia, garbed in stars and stripes, who marched in under a huge umbrella literally covered with temperance literature. The L. T. L. gave a fine drill with flags, pennants, and L. T. L. songs.

Hillsdale county (Mich.) W. C. T. U. met recently in its fortieth annual convention with a large attendance. Reports of presidents showed a marked increase all along the line. The state blue ribbon was won by an increase of fifty members in the county during the year. The county banner went to Waldron union, which reported a gain of twenty-seven. The question box the first afternoon was in charge of Mrs. Jennie E. Wilcox, state evangelistic worker, who delivered a stirring address. A symposium on Medical Temperance was a distinctive feature.

Miss Minnie Grimes of Newton, Iowa, the newly elected Medal Contest superintendent of Eighth district, has made an enviable record since last May. She held six young men's, two young ladies', one matron's and one men's silver medal contest. These contests were repeated in various localities.

The Mobile (Ala.) W. C. T. U. has met with a sad loss in the death by drowning of Mr. J. Percy Watters, husband of the president of the W. C. T. U., and Mr. H. L. McKean, whose wife is also a white ribboner. Both men were deeply interested in the cause of prohibition. Dr. J. H. Harrison, husband of another Mobile W. C. T. U. worker, who was greatly beloved, has also passed to the homeland.

MAKE CHRIST KING, COMBINED
(Orchestrated)
Just Published
Edited by
Prof. E. O. Excell, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Dr. H. W. Stough, Dr. M. H. Lyon and 70 other leading evangelists.
The Latest, Best and Most Popular Hymn Book
Combines the best songs in "Make Christ King" and the "New Make Christ King," with the latest and best copyright hymns.
Regardless of expense, the best song book ever published. Send 15c for sample copy.
THE GLAD TIDINGS PUB. CO.
Lakeside Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.

BIEDERWOLF

EXCELL

STOUGH

LYON

The W. C. T. U. of Ogemaw and Arenac counties, Michigan, Mrs. Mary F. Scott, president, reports commendable activity among its local unions. That of County Line and Maple Ridge has been placing the new prohibition maps in churches and school houses and has showered two daily papers with post-card protests against liquor advertisements. At a recent meeting, at which Mrs. Etta Shaw was the speaker, the county president had the pleasure of pinning a white ribbon on an ex-saloonkeeper, who seemed proud to wear it. He gave his testimony to the fact that all Mrs. Shaw said was true. Not many weeks ago Mrs. Shaw organized a union at Twining with a membership of nine, Mrs. E. Forshee, president. The membership has since increased to seventeen.

LADIES!
Have you a few hours a day spare time? If so, write us and we will tell you how to join the Blue Cross Association and Make $2.00 To $4.00 a Day
No membership fee. Send three names for reference. Splendid opportunity to serve your sex and make money at the same time. Address
STERIZOL COMPANY
Sterizol Bldg.
Fostoria, Ohio
JOIN THE BLUE CROSS ASSOCIATION

READY
TOPICAL PROGRAM
FOR 1916
Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for writing in name of hostess and place of meeting.
Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00
A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for
50 CENTS
Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.
National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

The supreme court of Kansas has held that the Webb-Kenyon and Mahin acts are constitutional, which being interpreted means that the names of all persons receiving liquor shipments in prohibition Kansas are open to the inspection of the public.

NOW READY

THREE TEMPERANCE LECTURES

ILLUSTRATED BY STEREOPTICON SLIDES

A carefully prepared lecture accompanies each set of slides and these lectures may be given in church, Sunday school, public school, in a parlor, or thrown upon a screen in out-of-door work during campaigns.

LECTURE No. 1

New Light on an Old Problem
(Scientific Temperance)

This lecture is composed of 51 slides, 20 of which are colored. Price, $20.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Frances E. Willard.
2. Mary H. Hunt.
3. Edith Smith Davis
4. The Harm in a Glass of Beer.
5. The Value of Total Abstinence to a Life.
6. Alcohol and the Nervous System.
7. Prize Winner, Dorothy Werner. American.
8. Prize Winner, Sarah Pararano. Italian.
9. Prize Winner, Ida Oranovitch. Russian.
10. Quotation, Ex-Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.
11. Blank Slide for Respective State Scientific Temperance Instruction Law.
12. Girl and Lilies. "We Drink Only Water."
13. Horses Drinking Water.
14. Three Plants (with Water, Cigaret, Alcohol).
15. Blank Slide for Respective State Cigaret Law.
16. Doors Closed to Boys Who Use Tobacco.
17. Boy in Armor.
18. Boy, "No Tobacco or Whisky for Me."
19. The Smoker's Heart Tracings.
20. Athletics. Connie Mack. Quotation.
21. Game of Baseball.
22. A Game of Football.
23. The Crew.
24. Scholarship and Tobacco.
25. Business Positions.
26. Highest Success, Burbank and Quotation.
27. Quotation, Thomas Edison.
28. The Four Dogs. Dr. Hodge.
29. Bum. Fear.
30. Tipsy. Fear.
31. Nig. No Fear.
32. Topsy. No Fear.
33. The Four Dogs After Two Years.
34. Bum.
35. Nig.
36. Progeny of the Dogs. Hodge.
37. Progeny of the Human Race. Demme.
38. Mental Ability and School Children. Holland.
39. The Brain. Horsley.
40. The Brain. Chapple.
41. Beer or Flour—Which?
42. Typesetters and Alcohol.
43. The Muscles.
44. Employers Prefer Abstainers.
45. Accidents, Assaults, Efficiency. Germany.
46. Verdict of Science. Alcohol a Foe.
47. Famous Abstainer. Lincoln.
48. Boys, Be Worthy a Place by the Flag.

LECTURE No. 2

John Barleycorn

This lecture is composed of 33 slides, 21 of which are colored. Price, $15.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Song—"It's a Short Way to Prohibition."
2. Protect Youth—Fan.
3. Save the Boy.
4. Factory.
5. Raw Material—Finished Product.
6. Which Will You Crush?
7. Alcohol and Life; Alcohol and Disease.
8. Prohibition Card—What Every Merchant Knows.
9. Of Interest to Taxpayers.
10. Prohibition Prosperity.
11. Big Business.
12. Total Abstainers.
13. Man Who Drinks.
14. Railroad Poster.
15. Factory Poster.
16. Weighed in the Balance.
17. How Americans Spend Their Money.
18. Ninety-eight Per Cent Grain.
19. Wisconsin and Kansas Barrels.
20. Prosperity Statistics.
21. Turn Off the Faucet!
22. Accusing Fingers.
23. Liquor Traffic Must Go!
24. Prohibition Proclamation.
25. Camels Are Coming.
26. Dry Movement.
27. Prohibition Map.
28. Don't Know Whether To Go on Patching.
29. Song—"John Barleycorn, Good-bye."
30. National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage.

LECTURE No. 3

National W. C. T. U. Panama-Pacific Exhibit

This lecture is composed of 28 slides, 21 of which are colored. Price, $15.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Palace of Education.
2. Mary E. Brown.
3. Exhibit.
4. Exhibit—World's Corner.
5 National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage.
6. For God and Home and Every Land.
7. Frances E. Willard.
8. Countess of Carlisle.
9. Anna A. Gordon.
10. Statue of Miss Willard.
11. Dividends of Liquor Traffic.
12. Alcohol and Financial Efficiency.
13. Alcohol and Mental Efficiency.
14. Polyglot Petition.
15. Magazines Refusing Liquor Advertisements.
16. Food and Drink Cabinet.
17. Remember These Things.
18. Decreased Use of Alcohol in Hospitals.
19. Don't Dope Your Baby.
20. Japanese Bell.
21. Kansas and Wisconsin Barrels.
22. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens.
23. Prohibition Proclamation.
24. Prohibition Map.
25. Grand Prize Award.

These slides are carefully packed and shipped at our risk, carriage prepaid.

To those contemplating the purchase of a stereopticon, we recommend a new and thoroughly tested machine called the Bond-opticon. It is of simple construction, easy of adjustment and may be used with perfect safety. It has but one connection, which is inserted in socket of an electric light.

Price, complete with case, $40.00. Full description furnished upon application.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI EVANSTON, ILL., DECEMBER 9, 1915 No. 49

Viewpoint of the College President

I will not serve on a teaching body with men who use intoxicating liquors in any form whatsoever. My responsibility to young manhood and womanhood for character ideals is too great to permit me to attempt to bear the burden of responsibility which I could not escape for a colleague who leads an immoral life.

—Dr. Guy Potter Benton, President University of Vermont.

The ideal for the college student should be total abstinence. Total abstinence is what we ought to have among our students. No railroad, no industrial concern today will take a student graduate from Cornell University unless it has my assurance that he is a total abstainer.

—Dr. Jacob G. Schurman, President Cornell University.

The basis of intemperance is the effort to secure through drugs the feeling of happiness when happiness does not exist. One and all the result of their habitual use is to render the nervous system incapable of telling the truth.

—Dr. David Starr Jordan, Ex-President Leland Stanford University.

The demand today is for efficiency. This efficiency must be more than technical and professional. It must be an efficiency of character, of purpose and of social service. Alcohol certainly does not contribute to any one of these types of efficiency. Our institutions of higher education must exalt clean living, self-control, high-minded purpose.

—Dr. George E. Vincent, President University of Minnesota.

I have had occasion to examine the conflicting popular ideas concerning alcohol. I began the study quite willing to be convinced that alcoholic beverages have some virtues. I have ended in the conviction that they have none, and I have found that this conclusion is almost universally reached by those who have examined the facts. So far has the anti-liquor movement in the colleges proceeded that a man who frankly opposes its use is more respected than the man who condones it.

—Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University.

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE PLANS FOR THE WINTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Legislation

The legislative plans of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the coming winter will include numerous bills, foremost of which will be the resolution known in the Sixty-third Congress as the Hobson resolution, namely, the submission of a prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution. Great interest was manifested during the last session, and petitions and resolutions were forwarded to members of Congress from every state in the Union, representing over six million people.

The half-million women representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union are a unit as to co-operation for the furtherance of this measure.

Prohibition for the District of Columbia will demand attention, also.

A bill for a Federal Motion Picture Commission will be presented. The bill formerly known as the Smith-Hughes bill was reported favorably by the House Committee on Education in the last Congress, and this will be introduced early in the coming session. Every thoughtful person realizes the need for proper censorship of moving pictures, and this measure will be urged.

The bill known in the Sixty-third Congress as the Palmer-Owen Child Labor bill, which passed the House at the last session, but was killed in the Senate by one vote, that of Senator Overman of North Carolina, will be pushed early in the session.

These and other measures will receive the earnest co-operation of the rank and file of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

COMMITTEE OF NINETEEN APPROVES WORDING OF PROPOSED NATIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT

The Committee of Nineteen, appointed at a "get-together" conference of temperance organizations last July, met in Washington, December 3. After conferring with members of Congress the wording of the amendment as voted upon in the House of Representatives, December 22, 1914, was approved as the form in which National Constitutional Prohibition is to be presented in the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Eight national temperance societies were represented, and there were present also two United States Senators, and two members of the House of Representatives.

Dr. A. J. Barton of Texas, the chairman of the committee, being ill, Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, vice-chairman, presided, with Rev. James Cannon, Jr., of Virginia, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, as vice-chairman.

Miss Gordon, in her introductory remarks as presiding officer, briefly reviewed the history of the National Constitutional Prohibition resolution since its introduction in 1911 by Congressman Hobson, and spoke of the eight million of people who, through resolution and petition, had asked Congress to refer the question to the states. In urging unity of action in the legislative program for National Prohibition, she said, "However radically we may differ in our opinions concerning the mooted question of preparedness—the investment of vast sums of money for national defense—the training of our youth for a possible invasion of America—this committee is teetotally agreed that greater preparedness for the conflict against the legalized liquor traffic is of paramount importance. We are agreed that the mobilization of all the temperance resources of the nation is a prime necessity to the success of our mighty undertaking."

The committee was continued under the name of the National Prohibition Amendment Commission. The members of the commission are as follows:

Rev. A. J. Barton, chairman; Miss Anna A. Gordon, vice-chairman; Prof. Charles Scanlon, secretary; Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, assistant secretary; Senator Morris Sheppard; Hon. E. Y. Webb, Member of Congress; Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Senator Charles Curtis, Mr. Andrew Wilson, Judge Charles A. Pollock, Hon. R. P. Hobson, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, Rev. E. C. Dinwiddie, Rev. James Cannon, Jr., Mr. William H. Anderson, Hon. Horace H. Towner, Member of Congress, Rev. Rufus W. Miller, and Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Whereas, exact scientific research has demonstrated that alcohol is a narcotic poison, destructive and degenerating to the human organism, and that its distribution as a beverage or contained in foods lays a staggering economic burden upon the shoulders of the people, lowers to an appalling degree the average standard of character of our citizenship, thereby undermining the public morals and the foundation of free institutions, produces widespread crime, pauperism, and insanity, inflicts disease and untimely death upon hundreds of thousands of citizens and blights with degeneracy their children unborn, threatening the future integrity and the very life of the Nation; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be and hereby is, proposed to the states, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several states as provided by the Constitution.

Section 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and exportation for sale, are forever prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress, or the states within their respective jurisdictions, shall have power to enforce this article by all needful legislation.

KANSAS, THE "HORRIBLE EXAMPLE"

The fact that Kansas is the storm center of debates and discussions all over the country is making an immense amount of work for Governor Capper, who is literally showered daily with inquiries concerning the success of prohibition in his state. The Kansas City (Mo.) Journal gives an interesting account of an interview with the governor, from which we quote:

"I guess we will have to have a prohibition press agent for the state," remarked Governor Capper the other day as he ran through a big raft of letters and communications regarding Kansas prohibition.

More than a dozen letters are received by the governor daily from different sections of the country asking about prohibition in Kansas. Usually they come from advocates of prohibition, who enclose literature gotten out by the liquor interests, berating Kansas. The governor has each one answered and the glories of prohibition are told in a forceful way. If the deluge keeps up another clerk will have to be added to the office to look after this kind of correspondence solely.

"It is remarkable how little regard for truth some people have," said the governor. "For instance here is a man in Brooklyn, writing to the New York Tribune, solemnly stating that during his residence in Kansas from 1905 to 1913 he saw more boys under sixteen years old drunk in this state than he had seen men drunk in other states in all his life. Just think of such an absurd statement. He also says that the hotels in all the big towns of the state pay monthly fines for handling liquor. As a matter of fact there isn't a single hotel in Kansas paying monthly fines; nor in fact are monthly fines being charged anywhere. The supreme court knocked that system out nine years ago.

"Then there is a Kansas City man lecturing for the liquor interests who actually says that prohibition has increased insanity in Kansas. It is the first time I ever heard that liquor would cure a frenzied brain. In Louisiana the wets claim that Kansas is head over heels in debt and is liable to go into the hands of a receiver most any time—all on account of prohibition. As a matter of fact Kansas has less than $200,000 bonded debts and will pay it off next year. Kansas is one of the few states which is in excellent financial condition.

"A magazine writer recently said that he had bought liquor of numerous bootleggers in Kansas, but when invited to tell their names or give a description of them so they could be arrested and convicted he declined.

"All sorts of arguments are put up by the wets against prohibition, but there are two points they ignore: One is that Kansas is well pleased with prohibition, regardless of what others may think of her; the other is that if a man can't spend his nickel for a glass of beer he has that nickel with which to buy a loaf of bread for his family."

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Minnesota Court Closes Seventy-Two Saloons

Seventy-two saloons of Hibbing and Chisholm, Minnesota, must close immediately as a result of the denial by Judge Page Morris of the district court of a temporary injunction restraining agents of the Federal Indian bureau from enforcing the treaty of 1855 declared effective more than a year ago by the United States Supreme Court.

Illinois Cities Awake on Liquor Question

The circulation of petitions for the "Dry Chicago" election next spring is in progress. The names of 167,000 voters must be secured on these petitions in order to have the question given a place on the ballot. Hall and Summers are giving their famous debate in the churches of Chicago. Mayor Thompson last week revoked the licenses of twenty-five saloons which had violated the Sunday closing law.

The police department of Sterling, Ill., has ordered all liquor or locker clubs to discontinue business and the interurban company was fined for carrying liquor into the city in violation of the city liquor laws.

Prohibition Secure in Tennessee

When Governor Rye of Tennessee was asked as to the truth of the story being circulated by the liquor interests that Tennessee is facing a huge deficit because of its prohibition law, he promptly replied, "There is absolutely no truth in the statement." The state's expenditures or appropriations for schools and confederate pensions have been largely increased in the past few years, and quite a large debt was owing before or at the time the law went into effect. The governor says there has been no financial loss to the state on account of prohibition and that the state is in a more prosperous condition than ever before.

Virginia Baptists Endorse National Prohibition

Resolutions advocating prohibition for the District of Columbia, endorsing the proposed amendment for National Prohibition and urging the enactment of laws in Virginia to prohibit liquor advertising and the shipping of liquor into the state, were adopted by the General Association of Virginia Baptists in session at Clarendon, November 22.

Iowa Getting Ready for the New Year

When January 1, 1916, arrives there will be no saloons in the state of Iowa and the manufacture and wholesale and retail liquor business will have ceased to exist. It is said that owners of buildings in which saloons are now located have been seeking, since the repeal of the mulct law by the legislature, to find other tenants for these buildings. This has proved comparatively simple because in the majority of cases saloons have been occupying fine business locations which were desirable for legitimate lines of business.

NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho
South Carolina

STATES THAT WILL VOTE IN 1916

Vermont	March
South Dakota	November
California	November
Nebraska	November
Montana	November
Michigan	November
Idaho	November
Alaska	November

West Virginia Advertising Law Upheld

The supreme court of West Virginia has declared constitutional that section of the prohibition law which prohibits liquor dealers outside the state from advertising their wares in West Virginia by circular letters and order blanks.

Georgia's New Anti-Liquor Laws

Three laws have been enacted in Georgia aimed to curb the sale of liquor. All go into effect May 1, 1916. One prohibits the manufacture or sale within the state of any beverage containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol. Another forbids the advertisement of intoxicating liquors in newspapers, periodicals, on billboards, or by any other means. The third provides that shipments of liquor into the state for personal use shall be limited to two quarts of whisky, forty-eight pints of beer and one gallon of wine to any person within any thirty-day period.

Brandied Desserts Under Ban in Colorado

The state-wide prohibition law of Colorado, which goes into effect January 1, 1916, according to the opinion of Governor Carlson and Attorney General Farrar, as reported in the Chicago press, forbids the manufacture for sale of mince meat, plum pudding, brandied peaches and Italian macaroons or other dainties in which intoxicating liquors may be an ingredient.

Boston Building Trades Favor Prohibition

The Greater Boston Allied Building Trades Council, representing more than 18,000 men, went on record as endorsing no-license at a meeting November 23. The resolutions condemned the liquor interests and pledged every effort to defeat license. The business agents of thirty-one unions belonging to the organization immediately formed a club to more effectually carry on this work. Boston votes on the liquor question December 14.

State-Wide Prohibition to be an Issue in Kentucky

Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., states that a bill for the submission of the question of state-wide prohibition to the voters will be introduced at the next session of the Kentucky legislature.

Michigan Dry in 1918?

"Michigan Dry in 1918" will be the battle cry of every opponent of the liquor interests from now until the polls close the evening of November 6, 1916. At the present time forty-three of the eighty-three counties of the state are dry.

Idaho Preparing for Emancipation From Saloons

It is said that the party leaders in Idaho are feeling relieved that the days of the saloon in their state are numbered and are looking forward without regret to the going into effect January 1, 1916, of what is said to be the most rigid law ever passed by a legislature and upheld by a supreme court. Since territorial days the saloon has been a disturbing factor in Idaho politics. Party leaders hope that in the future they will not have to face this embarrassing issue, although until the vote is taken on the question of amending the state constitution, prohibiting forever the manufacture of intoxicating beverages, the question will be a live one. There will be rigid enforcement of the law, as evidenced by a letter from Governor Alexander to the attorney general of the state, in which the governor asked as to his powers in regard to law enforcement.

"I would like to know," said Idaho's chief executive, "what power the governor possesses in order to aid the various sheriffs and prosecuting attorneys of the state in the enforcement of this law, and if any of the county officers should be negligent in enforcing such law, let me know if the governor possesses the authority to compel them to enforce said law."

Teachers of South Dakota Declare for Prohibition

South Dakota can count on the assistance of the educators of the state in the campaign for state-wide prohibition in which it is engaged. At the recent annual convention of the South Dakota Educational Association, meeting in Aberdeen, attended by 2,000 public school teachers and college professors, it declared unanimously for state-wide prohibition, characterizing the liquor traffic as "a great detriment to social progress, which is so closely allied to educational effort."

DENMARK'S WOMAN'S VOTE

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

The cause of prohibition takes a big forward step in Denmark through the full enfranchisement of Danish women. The law (signed last summer by King Christian X) gives women full political rights on the same terms as men. And this was done in spite of the fact that there are more women than men in Denmark. At the last census, the women in the population numbered 1,419,176 and the men, 1,337,000.

Unanimous Approval of Woman Suffrage Measure

The chief opposition to "Votes for Women" in Denmark has come from the Conservative party. But the suffrage campaigners overcame the obstacles. The popularity of the measure is attested by the fact that it was passed unanimously.

Danish women have had municipal suffrage since 1908. They have acceptably served not only as voters, but on municipal councils, the women being appointed to responsible service on committees on child welfare, the schools, public charity, hospitals, etc. Several years ago the women succeeded in striking the word "underdanig" (obey) from the marriage ceremony.

Provisions of New Election Law

The new election law goes into force in 1916. By its provisions men and women both must be twenty-nine years old before casting their first vote. Every four years the voting age is to be reduced by one year until 1932, when it will remain stationary at twenty-five years. Neither men nor women under thirty-five can vote for members of the Upper House although both men and women twenty-five years of age are eligible for election to the Upper House.

Beginnings of W. C. T. U. Work in Denmark

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Denmark dates from 1888, twenty years before women received the municipal vote. The union's first leader was the World's W. C. T. U. organizer, Mrs. Elizabeth Selmer of Copenhagen, who, during a decade or more, labored earnestly for Christian temperance in Scandinavia, in Holland, and in Iceland. In her report to the second biennial World's W. C. T. U. convention at Chicago, Mrs. Selmer (sending 6,000 names to the Polyglot Petition) wrote:

"Seeing the crying need of reforming our social drinking customs, we will keep together and try to advance our cause in some happy time when God will bless our work."

No less than 104,000 signatures (Denmark has two and three-fourths million population) were secured to the W. C. T. U. petition for Sunday closing of the drinking places, although Danish women and the Danish Christians are, as a rule, opposed to total abstinence. "Woman's Rights" was one of the first departments adopted along with Purity, Flower Mission, Literature, Scientific Temperance, Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, and evangelistic and organizing work.

Much temperance sentiment has been created through literature and W. C. T. U. temperance journals, such as "Godt Budskab" (Glad Tidings) and "Det Hvide Baand" (The White Ribbon).

Low Percentage of Illiteracy

The Danish people are a reading people. There is only one person in every thousand in Denmark who is unable to read and write as compared with seven out of every thousand in the United States. Of 260,000 Danish school children, only 370 failed to attend school at last report. So eager are the parents that their children shall be well educated, that every sacrifice to that end is made.

It is here that scientific temperance teaching has made fine headway against prejudice. Denmark is but 15,000 square miles in area (a little larger than Maryland and only one-fourth the size of Illinois). But added to it are Iceland and Greenland, making a total area of nearly 100,000 square miles and a total population of nearly three million people to enroll under the prohibition banner. Miss Astrid Blume of Aarhus, who became president in 1900, has given devoted service to the work ever since.

Increased Activity Due to Visit of World's Honorary Secretary

An impetus to W. C. T. U. work in Denmark was given by the visit in 1912 of Miss Agnes Slack, one of the World's W. C. T. U. secretaries. The center of W. C. T. U. activity has been at Copenhagen, where the local union, at its twentieth anniversary, held a public meeting and celebration. Great interest also attached to the W. C. T. U. mass meeting held in Copenhagen during "Women Abstainers" Week. The Danish white ribboner points with pride to the White Ribbon Home for Inebriate Women, which is doing a fine work, and which now occupies, during the summer, a couple of cozy cottages owned by the white ribboners.

Even in the midst of "war's alarms," the causes of prohibition and of woman's political equality have not been forced to the rear but have made their way to final victory in Denmark.

IT'S A WAR AND A WAR TO THE FINISH!

MRS. ADDIE B. PARSELS, National W. C. T. U. Organizer

Address in Part Delivered at National W. C. T. U. Convention

Two great contending armies stand arrayed upon the battlefield. Which will win? The organized, legalized American liquor traffic, which is thoroughly entrenched in appetite, entrenched in law, organized to perfection, and carrying on a campaign of agitation is now charging upon the individual and the church and would eventually undermine the perpetuity of the magnificent American republic. Were we to speak along the line of appetite, that alone would be a Gibraltar to the forces of right, as we have had recorded drunkenness on the part of the human family for over four thousand years. Now, throw on the light of science and we discover that it needs only the feeding of the latent appetite born in any child when, lo, we have the victim of the malady, alcoholism. The nations of the earth have gone down through appetite; it was this that wrecked Babylon, changed the map of mediaeval Europe, and so threatens the nations of the Orient that China, the new republic, has applied legislation regarding the use of and traffic in opium. Well may the American nation take heed. But today we are dealing with the legal side of the question. How is it that great moral issues resolve themselves into governmental ones? The temperance question is many-sided; but just for a moment let us look at the legislative phase of the question. In the decade between 1830 and 1840 the different commonwealths of the nation looked about to see how they might encourage the innkeepers to keep open house so as to accommodate the traveling public and shelter beasts therein. We are not decrying hotels as stopping places, but we are crying out against the sale of strong drink in these places by which to debauch the public. The different state legislatures passed laws making landlords the vendors of drink to encourage them to keep open house, as the states were sparsely settled and the stage-coach the popular mode of travel. But, according to the states' laws, the innkeepers were not compelled to pay license for revenue. In this way began the bar-room which has always been a menace to the American public.

But in 1862, when the war was on, Congress looked about to see how it might defray the heavy war debt, and the license law for revenue was passed as a means to pay the debt incurred. This we believe to be the blackest law ever passed by Congress, because the American government became a partner in the liquor traffic. The liquor problem has become the greatest theme for American legislation. The American legalized liquor traffic is the deadliest menace to the American republic; it has become high-handed in the American political life; it is the all-absorbing theme before legislatures and before the American Congress, and it will not be downed. It must be met! As the American legalized liquor traffic came by Congress, so by Congress it must go. Through legislation we have won nineteen states for state-wide prohibition; and we will never be content until the unit for prohibition shall be the nation. If, as Lincoln said, the American nation cannot be "half slave, and half free," then we say, the American nation cannot exist half wet, half dry. Thus it is a war and a war to the finish. All hail the ballot in the hands of woman as a mighty weapon toward this end. Victory will come and by 1920 the American flag will wave over a saloonless nation. God is upon his throne and this nation that hath honored its God will yet be free from the dark stain. Out of the carcass of war, out of the turmoil now raging in Europe, there will come the honey—death to imperialism! death to militarism! death to alcoholism!

We here prophesy that by 1930 the flag of prohibition will wave over a world free from the curse of drink. Christ, the Galilean, will have conquered!

Wanted, a Nation-wide Public Hygiene Policy

The policy of prohibition has failed to achieve among us in the past an adequate success, because wherever tried it has been only prohibition in spots! But sanitation in spots—vaccination, quarantine, sewerage, pure water supply only here and there—such an arrangement would not give us a satisfactory improvement in public health. Nothing will do but a policy of public hygiene that is nation-wide. Just so with prohibition, a necessity to public health, moral and physical. The liquor power can only be struck at its vital center when hit by a national law. That blow given and then scores of minor evils, caused by drink, that cannot otherwise be reached will disappear.

—The Congregationalist

JOHN SMITH—HIS ANNOUNCEMENT

"Mr. John Smith wishes to announce his position on the water wagon. Your aid is requested in keeping him there."

That's the card sent out by a young man in smart society in California.

I wonder what the people who received it thought of it?

I know what I thought. I envied the girl who made him do it; for it was a girl, of course. No man ever does a thing like that without a girl somewhere in the background of his mind—or the middle of his heart.

Who is she, I wonder, and how did she come to have so much influence over a man of so much character and individuality?

She's good—that we know without asking—and she's courageous, and she's honest, and clear-eyed, and oh—I hope and hope again—that she'll be faithful! For a man who will try as hard as that to break off an insidious habit is worth the love and loyalty of the woman he loves, and worth it to the end of time.

Will any one try to take the man down from the water wagon? Of course, someone will—the world is full of just such someones—full to bursting with empty-headed, empty-hearted, mischief-making folk, who never can bear to see any one really happy.

I've known such people as that to spend hours trying to get some poor chap to take a drink, just because they knew he had promised a woman who loved and trusted him that he wouldn't do it. And when they had done their best, or their worst, to break a good woman's heart and ruin the life of a decent chap—who would amount to something if he had half a chance—they'd brag about it and seem to be quite puffed up with pride. Over what I wonder?

* * * *

So you're on the water wagon, are you, brother, and you've sent out a card about it just to show your old friends and acquaintances that you've come to your senses at last, and that you're proud of it?

Well, we're proud of you, all the rest of us, and proud of the girl, too, and for her sake, and for your own sake, we're all going to pray that you will win out in your fight.

For it is a fight—don't make any mistake about that.

I've seen too many splendid men make that fight—and fail—fail bitterly and shamefully, and in humiliation and distress.

They fought hard, too—and they were men who could fight—but there was always the weak moment — the moment when the will shook a little—and, at that moment, the wrong man always seemed to happen along. The envious creature who couldn't bear to see one naturally his superior stay so—when envy could find him a poisoned cup. The good-natured fool who never can see what harm just one drink will do—the stupid "friend" who sees that something is wrong and flies to the easiest way—a drink—to right it.

I hope they'll keep away from you, oh, sender of the announcement cards—far away—and, if they don't, get out a card about it.

Something plain and simple—that every one can read and understand:

"This is to announce that my friend, Richard Doe, is determined to drag me off the water wagon. I am determined that he shall not do it. Please interest yourself in this contest." That might arouse a little interest on the part of Richard Doe's friends—and your friends, too.

* * * *

What is it you are fighting? Just a love of a little cheap popularity? Just the idea of being called a good fellow? Just a habit difficult to shake off simply because it is a habit? Or do you grapple with an enemy as strong as heredity and as bitter and revengeful as the grave?

Whatever it is we're all with you, John Smith of California, and we want to see you win—you and the girl.

If all the women who have staked their hearts upon the winning of such a fight—and lost, poor souls—poor hopeful souls—and lost—were to come to your wedding you'd have to hire the cathedral for the ceremony and then one-fiftieth of the thronging crowd could not get in.

If all the men who have made that fight—and lost—were to send you a present you would be as rich as Croesus and as weighted down with worldly possessions as Solomon himself.

But, ah, those who have won this same fight—there's a crowd of them, too! A happy, successful prosperous crowd—and every one of them is wishing you good luck today, and down with old John Barleycorn!—Annie Laurie in Examiner.

THE BATTLE IS NOT OVER!

W. M. BICKERS

The liquor interests see the handwriting on the wall. The pillars of their "personal liberty" temple are fast falling around them. There is a despairing hope in some quarters that the revolution will at some time and some hour expend its force and reaction set in, but the hope is too vague to buoy up the stock market of the dying "interests!" The beer and wine people affect to see a hope for the boosting up of a "family light drink" trade and the substitution of "family cafes" (in which "light drinks will be sold to ladies and gentlemen") for the outlawed saloon! At least one of their journals has advocated the "encouragement of beer drinking by the women" and a "liberal advertising for the news press!" "The interests" are disseminating "temperance" (!) literature, forsooth and wish to make the trade "respectable!" Happily an intelligent public knows full well that "the leopard cannot change its spots nor the Ethiopian his skin!" Happily, too, "the women," whom "the interests" would encourage to drink, have been chief sufferers from the drink curse and will not likely take the bait, and the newspapers and magazines—certainly of America—are fast barring intoxicants from their advertising columns and throwing the weight of their mighty influence against the destroyer of the church, the home and the school.

But the enemy is wary and unscrupulous, and it well behooves the temperance forces to be on guard—"eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." The battle is not over. There must be no lethargy, no surfeitings from victories, no taking too much for granted. The campaign of education should go on until the truth is so effectually lodged in the public mind and heart that the principle of prohibition shall become as acceptably axiomatic as any revered fundamental of government and the whole world shall know that alcohol is a subtle, deadly poison and as a beverage it should be shunned in every form and degree.

MODERATE USE OF ALCOHOL THE PERIL

Dr. Ploetz, editor of the Archiv fur Rassen-und Gesellschaftsbiologie, declares that "It is just the average moderate use of alcohol which injures the race more than genuine drunkenness, since there is here relatively no elimination through sterility or infant mortality as is the case with the hard drinker. Many who imagine themselves in the category of the wholly moderate must actually be placed in a lower category. They are, without realizing it, reproducing slightly degenerate children. There is a lowering of reserve forces and a breaking down of the powers of regeneration. From the standpoint of race hygiene, an absolute end of the drinking of alcohol is the most desirable. The greatest need is that the average 'moderate use' should disappear,—that is, drunkenness is secondary."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

A CALL FOR RECRUITS

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

"We're recruiting for the ranks,
For years and years to come,
That our numbers may not fail,
Ere triumph shall be won."

As I enter upon this larger field of work as National general secretary of the Young People's Branch I feel in my heart a deep sense of gratitude to my predecessor in office, Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner. While she served as Y. P. B. National secretary her counsel was always helpful and her loyalty to the young people's work was unfailing. Already she has kindly expressed to me her continued interest and for this I feel most grateful.

After the close of our recent National W. C. T. U. Convention, while on my way East from the big hospitable West I traveled through a part of Canada. A few hours were spent in London, Ontario, and there I saw, on the principal street, stretched from one side to the other, a large white canvas sign on which was printed in bold black letters the following appeal:

"YOUR KING AND YOUR COUNTRY NEED YOU. ENLIST TODAY!"

As I stood there with eyes riveted on that call for the young manhood of Canada to support the mother country in the great conflict raging across the sea, I thought of our own country's need of recruits for the great moral battle being waged against the forces of the legalized liquor traffic.

In the Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union a welcome awaits every young person who is willing to unite himself or herself with those who believe in the promotion of total abstinence, purity and prohibition. While today there are ten thousand young men and women specializing along these lines in the Young People's Branches throughout the land, we call for a HUNDRED THOUSAND—and need them for this great last struggle.

> "God bless you all this Christmas time,
> The words are old, I know,
> And yet no better can I say
> Or kinder wish bestow."

We want not only large numbers, but we want well drilled, well equipped and loyal soldiers. No organization affords a greater opportunity for active and aggressive service than does the Young People's Branch.

The community in which you live needs your influence, your state needs you, your country needs you, and a call from a higher source than from any earthly king comes from our King of kings. As Christian, patriotic young people we must have a part in this great peaceful warfare, "For God and home and native land."

A Word to the Mother Organization

The fulfillment of the above call for 100,000 young people is impossible without the co-operation of the membership of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. In the United States today there are thousands of W. C. T. U.'s without a Young People's Branch, when with the initiative of the W. C. T. U., hundreds of Young People's Branches might be organized. It is possible that a few of these branchless unions have tried to organize and have failed, but the sad part is that the great majority have not even attempted to enlist their young people.

Oh, that I could impress upon you this fact, that when a person is won for a righteous cause at fifty years of age, that person, if he lives the allotted space of three-score years and ten can give at most only twenty years of work, but a person won at twenty years of age can give fifty years of active, vigorous service. This tremendous fact should thrill every part of our being and inspire us to work as never before for the enlistment of the young men and women in the ranks of the Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

If there is one element needed more than any other it is enthusiasm for our work. A story is told of old Dr. Arnot of Edinburgh, who was traveling in the Highlands of Scotland. The train in which he journeyed came to a sudden standstill and was stalled for several hours and the good old doctor asked one of the trainmen why they could not proceed. Had they no water? "Aye," was the reply, "we hae plenty o' water, but it's nae boilin' and what we need is steam."

There is plenty of enthusiasm in our W. C. T. U., but if we are to win the young people we must keep it at the "boilin'" point!

Let us begin NOW to recruit for the ranks of our Young People's Branch!

GOD CALLS YOU!

AMY A. SWANKIE-CAMERON, World's "Y" Secretary

Dear Young People of the American White Ribbon:

I did not get a message off to you in time for the National Convention, so I send now through THE UNION SIGNAL my heartiest and most affectionate greeting. I have not yet had a report of your great gathering in Seattle, but I am very sure it must have been an inspiring occasion. I doubt not each one of you who was privileged to be present, brought away a rich store of memories which will put more and more enthusiasm into your work during the coming year.

May you feel deep in your souls how fine a thing it is to be used of God in the great battle which the temperance forces of your country are so grandly and successfully waging against the liquor traffic. It is thrilling to read of state after state "going dry"—what must it be to be in the fight, to share the victory and to feel that you have helped to bring it?

But while, in the months that are coming, you put your splendid youth and energy into white ribbon work for your own country, do not forget the other countries that are joined to you in this holy war. Give at least one meeting to the World's W. C. T. U. that the members may be blessed by the larger vision and have their sympathies stirred for the white ribbon comrades in lands less privileged than their own. Will you specially work and pray, during the coming year, for the young life in China, in Burma, in India, in South America and in the sadly darkened countries of Europe?

May your hearts' desires for your National Y. P. B. work be fulfilled, may its membership be largely increased, and may every one of you as members of the Young People's Branch realize as never before how God needs you and how He calls you to greater and yet greater effort and achievement in our glorious white ribbon work. May you be richly blessed!

Always your sincere comrade,

AMY A. SWANKIE-CAMERON.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

Heard on the College Campus

Approximately 650 students from eighteen Ohio colleges are reported to have helped by singing, speaking and canvassing in the recent Ohio state-wide campaign.

Liquor is under the official ban at Yale this college year and the serving of alcoholic beverages in fraternities, clubs and other undergraduate organizations is being brought to a finish. A Connecticut state law going into effect in November precipitated the issue of fraternity and club drinking. The law provides that social clubs of all kinds desiring to serve intoxicants shall take out a "Club Certificate," or special form of license at an annual fee of $100. The serving of liquors to members of clubs, or fraternities without such license is punishable by heavy fine or imprisonment. Some fraternities took voluntary action against further use of liquor at their houses, says the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, and others were stimulated to that end by faculty rulings, the faculty not desiring that undergraduate societies should apply for licenses of this sort.

The Minnesota Daily, one of the greatest student publications of the west, came out vigorously in support of prohibition in the recent Minneapolis campaign. The action of the liquor interests in attempting to buy the support of student politicians the Daily characterized "as on a plane with the cause which they represent."

The present voluntary course on hygiene and alcohol given each fall in the University of Upsala, Sweden, will be made compulsory for all students and a similar course will be introduced into the University of Lund if the strong recommendation of the commission appointed by the Swedish government to improve the instruction against alcohol in that country is carried out. The commission further recommends that anti-alcohol instruction be given prominence in connection with the study of social phenomena, biology and human physiology, as well as in special courses.

No more will the old college song, "Drink a Highball," for many years so popular at athletic contests and class reunions, be heard at the University of Pennsylvania. It is understood that the song's repeated reference to highballs is displeasing to Provost Edgar Fahs Smith, and he has refused to sanction its appearance in official lists of Pennsylvania's songs and yells.

An extract from Health Bulletin No. 3, issued by the committee on hygiene of the University of Wisconsin, for the use of the student body, says:

"The following diseases result directly from the use of alcohol in certain individuals:

"Acute and chronic inflammation of the stomach, liver disease, heart disease, kidney disease and various forms of insanity and paralysis. We can not predict beforehand what will be the effect of alcohol on any particular individual.

"A goodly portion of the inmates of insane asylums owe their infirmity to alcohol. A still larger proportion of criminals owe their records directly or indirectly to alcohol.

"Don't use it at all and be on the safe side!"

Living Picture shown at Y. P. B. Hour at National Convention, picturing on the right, the Education of the Children; on the left, Rescue Work.

At National W. C. T. U. Headquarters

There is no mistake—the General Officers and other workers at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters know how to entertain. Had you been privileged to attend the reception the "Stay-at-Homes" gave the "Go-Aways" you would agree right heartily.

Each year it is the custom to have a National Convention Echo meeting at Headquarters, when those who have attended the great annual gathering describe "what impressed me most." This year the Y. P. B. served a dainty collation to the guests. Unfortunately space does not permit a detailed account of that enjoyable evening with its welcome to the new National treasurer, Mrs. Munns, to the Y. P. B. secretary, to the L. T. L. secretary and others, its interesting stereopticon lecture, the singing of the famous "Grasshopper Song" and endless other features. Those who attended came away giving three cheers for the W. C. T. U. Headquarters "family," including the Young People's Branch.

1916 Y. P. B. Year Book

Our 1916 Y. P. B. Year Books are ready! We hope that every Young People's Branch in the United States will study this handbook of information.

State Y. P. B. secretaries should order copies before January 1. Price, 2 cents each. Address

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

A dry course in economics—dryer than the usual economics course—is being prepared for the Iowa State College for next year. "Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem" is the probable title of the course as it will appear in the next college catalogue. Prof. G. H. VonTungeln, who will have charge of the studies, will go to the bottom of the liquor problem. The course is largely the outgrowth of the demand on the part of students of the college. The interest in the question of prohibition has grown during the past two years and members of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association have met voluntarily and without college credit to study this problem.

Y. P. B. Notes

A National Convention Echo

"Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow forever and forever."

Our Convention Sunday Y. P. B. rally was well attended and as never before the young people responded. Many churches sent representatives from their young people's societies and at the close of the meeting a number of the Seattle young people, like Oliver Twist, expressed a desire "for more."

As a result of the rally a meeting was called on the following Thursday and twenty-four young people, representing twenty-two different young people's church organizations came to discuss how best to interest the young people of their city in the temperance movement.

Mrs. Linnie Carl of Oregon and Mary F. W. Anderson of Massachusetts gave practical, definite suggestions for young people's rallies, poster campaigns and other plans of work.

Because of this splendid, responsive company of young people we feel sure Seattle is to hear an endless echo of our National W. C. T. U. Convention.

The W. C. T. U., Y. P. B. and L. T. L. of Royal Oaks, Md., united in a union Sunday school rally November 21. The songs and demonstration of the Young Campaigners were enthusiastically received, also the prohibition address by Rev. W. S. White. The collection taken will be used for a W. C. T. U. room in the new $40,000 Emergency Hospital in Easton.

The annual gathering of Ohio Y. P. B.'s, held at Dayton, some weeks ago, was an inspiring occasion. The main thought of the meeting and the aim toward which the work of the young people is being directed, is the abolition of the liquor traffic from the state of Ohio. Enthusiastic delegates, representing a membership of 2,600, told of the good work which is being done throughout the state. State officers were elected as follows: President, Mr. Rae Vaughn; vice-president, Mr. Ray Halcomb; corresponding secretary, Miss Grace Lehentaler; recording secretary, Miss Ruth Mulbarger; treasurer, Mr. John Osmon.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, December 9, 1915

GOAL FOR 1916—SIXTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Send in promptly to THE UNION SIGNAL a brief report of the mass meeting your local union holds on December 12, National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment day.

Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Legislation, will resume her "Washington Letters" in the next issue of THE SIGNAL.

The Day of Prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition, December 2, was observed at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, by a brief service of prayer and song at the noontide hour.

CONSTRUCTIVE METHODS OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS!

A paragraph which appeared in a recent issue of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular is calculated to arouse the curiosity of temperance workers. It reads as follows: "In time, with proper educational and constructive work, this so-called prohibition territory will be reclaimed."

Such a statement is a challenge to every right-thinking citizen to investigate carefully and thoroughly the "constructive and educational" methods employed by the liquor interests in his own particular community. The other day a white ribboner in a well known prohibition city, in which is located one of the leading universities of the Middle West, had occasion to visit the public library and stopped to look over a rack full of the latest books on social and economic questions, placed where the attention of the public would be called to them. A well-bound, attractive volume entitled "The Prohibition Movement" caught her eye and she naturally opened it with some eagerness. A hasty inspection of the title page, showing the author to be "Percy Andrae," and the titles of the chapters, confirmed her suspicions that it was one of the dangerous publications of the liquor interests, in which fragments of truth are used as a basis for false and malicious statements concerning prohibition. A prominent member of the W. C. T. U. in one of the older prohibition states of the South remarked the other day that there had come to her attention in many of the city public libraries volumes with misleading titles, placed there by the liquor interests. This kind of "educational and constructive" work is being done all over the United States in prohibition as well as license territory, and unless these centers of public instruction and information are guarded, incalculable harm will be done. Truly eternal vigilance is the price of safety in dealing with the liquor interests. Every local union should see to it that a quiet and tactful investigation is made in the public library of its town and if any of these objectionable books are discovered, the library board should be asked to suppress them. The editors would be glad to learn the names of all books of this character which are discovered, that they may pass the information on to others.

As never before high school and college students are consulting the libraries for information in regard to the liquor question, and not only should the false and pernicious publications be removed from the library shelves, but there should be placed there the best scientific authorities, such as Sir Victor Horsley's "Alcohol and the Human Body," Dr. W. A. Chapple's "Evils of Alcohol," Ernest Gordon's "The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe," Mrs. Martha Allen's "Alcohol a Dangerous and Unnecessary Medicine." "Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem," by Harry S. Warner, not forgetting such attractive volumes as "The Life of Frances E. Willard" and the story of the triumph of National Prohibition, "The Man Who Forgot."

If we are to make America a prohibition nation in truth and in fact, hand in hand with legislation against the liquor evil must go education on the subject.

QUESTIONS OF THE ORIENT

One of the most difficult experiences the missionary in the foreign field has to meet is the necessity for explaining and reconciling to the satisfaction of the pagan mind the glaring inconsistencies between the Christian faith and the practice and policy of the so-called Christian nations. The late Dr. Charles Richmond Henderson of the Chicago University, who traveled extensively in the Orient as one of the American lecturers sent out by the Barrows Foundation, tells in a posthumous magazine article of the demand by students of the oriental countries for an explanation of the temperance situation in Christian America. The Barrows lectures, it will be remembered, were delivered by representative university men and attempted to show how the genius of Christianity is demonstrated by the humanitarian service of Christian people in voluntary associations and public legislation. No direct attack or criticism was made upon the habits and customs of the heathen nations but, to use Dr. Henderson's words, "by implication and comparison all the evils of Oriental customs were indirectly challenged and the students summoned to enlist in the service of our Lord." After the lecture the young men in the audience were invited to ask questions, and Dr. Barrows tells of keen inquiries presented as to the way America is dealing with the liquor traffic, the treatment of the Indian, Chinese, etc. "These questions are worthy of our serious consideration," wrote Dr. Henderson, "for they are all perfectly fair and go to the root of our claims to have a superior religion. These students are not fools, and they read the newspapers and tell what they read to their illiterate neighbors. The representatives of Christianity must meet such taunts when they tell of the love of God and the brotherhood of all men. We must of course repudiate all this tolerance of the drink traffic, exploitation of child labor, etc. But confession of national sins will not satisfy the Oriental critics; for words are cheap. These men are asking, 'Have you hitherto done anything to rectify the wrong?' We must bring forth fruits to show our repentance before we can convince them."

Woe be it to us as a chosen nation of God if we fail to measure up to the standard which the pagan nations, hearing our professions, expect of us. God forbid that we should by our neglect in failing to do our plain duty retard the evangelization of the nations of the Far East. It has been truly said, "The great causes of God and humanity are not defeated by the hot assaults of the devil but by the slow, crushing, glacier-like mass of thousands and thousands of indifferent nobodies." The solution of the liquor question lies not in the hands of the liquor interests with their vast wealth, but in the hands of the church of God, which could if it were unitedly, whole-heartedly and determinedly to attempt it, solve the question right speedily.

THE POOR PROHIBITION STATES!

An article is going the rounds of some of the newspapers not too particular about what they publish, calling attention to the sad plight of the Southern states which have adopted prohibition, and who, it is stated, are as a consequence now handicapped by depleted treasuries, large state debts, high taxes, etc. This combination of half truths with false statements is being given publicity with the very evident intention of misleading the public and creating sentiment against prohibition. Among the states especially mentioned are Georgia, Tennessee and West Virginia.

It must strike the reader of the article as somewhat strange if the pitiable picture drawn of Georgia on the verge of bankruptcy as the result of its anti-liquor policy is a true one, that there should very recently have been called a special session of the legislature, not, mind you, for the purpose of repealing the troublesome law, but to enact more drastic and stringent measures for its enforcement, even to the extent of prohibiting liquor advertising in the state.

One cannot take very seriously the statements made about the disastrous prohibition policy that is driving Tennessee to the wall, when one recalls that every political party in the state is committed to prohibition, and the people regularly elect a governor who stands four-square for the enforcement of the law. If prohibition were financially detrimental to the state, would the people not demand a change?

If, as asserted, West Virginia is tottering on the verge of financial ruin because its people, by 92,000 majority, voted to place in its constitution a prohibition clause, the "little mountain state" is wonderfully cheerful and complacent over the sad situation, and while admitting that it still carries an indebtedness, accumulated years before prohibition became a law, congratulates itself that by outlawing the liquor traffic it has already caused a reduction of its expense in the matter of caring for the victims of the liquor traffic.

So far as we can discover the people who are troubled over the financial difficulties of the prohibition states are not its tax-payers or reputable citizens, but the liquor interests at large, who are fearful that the success of prohibition in the states that now have it may encourage other commonwealths to outlaw the traffic in drink.

LONDON SALOONS SELL TEA AND COFFEE

Tea and coffee have taken their place in London saloons along with drinks of a less harmless nature since the new law regulating the hours of sale of intoxicants went into effect the latter part of November. The saloons, which formerly were open for nineteen and a half hours out of the twenty-four, can now sell intoxicants for only five and one-half hours each day, or from noon to two-thirty and from six-thirty to nine-thirty in the evening. To avoid closing the saloons entirely during the prohibited periods, tea and coffee have been added to the list of drinks. To insure the enforcement of the new liquor laws a fine of $500 or imprisonment for six months is provided for violations.

SUFFRAGE NEWS

By a vote of one hundred to five the Florida federation of women's clubs, at its convention at Orlando, passed a resolution endorsing woman suffrage. Other federations of the southern states which have taken this action are Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky and West Virginia.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, has announced that she will not be a candidate for re-election at the convention of the National Association. She states that she is convinced that her highest service to the suffrage movement can best be given if she is relieved of the exacting duties of the presidency and is free to engage in campaign work.

HIS TEACHERS MUST BE TOTAL ABSTAINERS

The superintendent of schools of Ithaca, N. Y., told the following incident at a W. C. T. U. meeting: When a lad eight years old he recited a temperance selection and the teacher induced him to sign the pledge. After many years he went back to his boyhood home intending to tell the teacher what that pledge had meant to him. He found her resting in an unkept country cemetery, but on his knees before his God he told her what had been the saving influence of his life. "I have never hired as a teacher any one who was not a total abstainer, neither will I sign a paper of recommendation for a teacher who is not a total abstainer," declared the superintendent.

SCIENCE AND ROMANCE

Do you want to read a fascinating combination of romance, scientific truth in relation to alcoholism and heredity, every page scintillating with brilliant witticism and rich humor? You will find it in "Dear Enemy," by Jean Webster, the author of the popular "Daddy-Long-Legs." The heroine, adorable Sally McBride, a society girl, finds herself at the head of an orphan asylum and through a sympathetic study of the ancestry of her little charges, comes to have a vigorous hatred of the liquor evil. The occasion of her breaking her engagement with a successful politician, a member of Congress, is her disapproval of his social drinking habits. "Since I came to this orphan asylum," she explains in her letter releasing him from the engagement, "I am extremely touchy on the subject of drink; you would be, too, if you had seen what I have seen. Several of my chicks are the sad result of alcoholic parents and they are never going to have a fair chance all their lives. You can't look about a place like this without 'aye keeping up a terrible thinking.'"

This book, we believe, is calculated to cause in the mind of anyone who reads it "a terrible thinking" on the disastrous effects of alcoholism unto the second and third generation.

SALE OF LIQUORS TO BE CONTROLLED IN NORWAY

While apparently not yet educated up to the point where it is ready for national prohibition, Norway is contemplating the enactment of a measure restricting and regulating the sale of liquor. A bill providing for such a law has been prepared by a government committee, and as it is said to have the support of two-thirds of the members of the newly elected parliament, it will probably become a law.

THREE WORDS SUFFICIENT

It was announced through the press not long ago that the directors of the National Brewers' Association were to offer $5,000 in prizes for the best essays on the most feasible plan for a practical solution of the saloon problem. It would seem a waste of words to write an essay on the subject, when the only really practical solution can be given in three words —National Constitutional Prohibition.

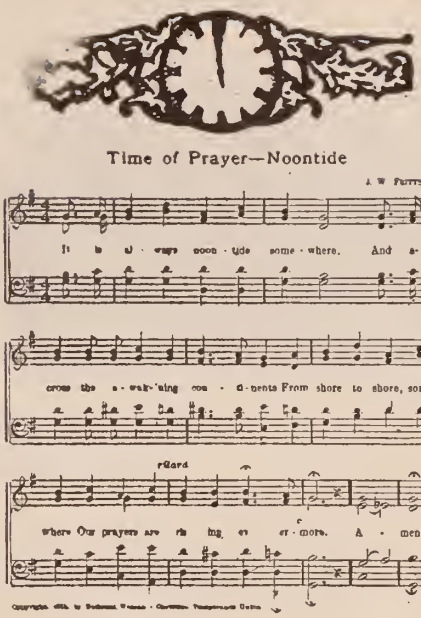
WAY DOWN IN ARIZONA!

A traveling salesman who goes into every nook and corner of Arizona came into the W. C. T. U. booth of the Panama-Pacific Exposition a few days ago and in accents strongly German asked what we knew of the results of prohibition in Arizona. Miss Brown, the director, repeated some of the statements which had come to her from residents and travelers, not at all knowing his attitude in the matter. Then he told her that he had been in all parts of the state, having gone over the territory for fourteen years. He said: "You cannot exaggerate changed conditions. In the mines the accidents have decreased eighty per cent, the efficiency has more than doubled, and the physical appearance of the communities has greatly improved. The faces of men look far fresher, healthier, and happier. Business has improved greatly. Merchants and other business men who formerly opposed prohibition on the ground of injury to business are now its greatest boosters and would not allow a return to old conditions. Prohibition has come to stay in Arizona." The visitor admitted that he had always been accustomed to take his glass of beer and liked a glass of wine with his meals, but declared there is not one argument for the continuance of the liquor traffic. He also volunteered the information that he carries a policy in the Germania Life Insurance Company of New York; that there has been organized in connection with it the Germania Life Extension Company whose duty it is to examine policy holders at certain intervals and warn them of approaching disease. He himself was reported ninety-two per cent in health, but warned to "cut out" all alcohol and tobacco. This is a fine indication of the trend of sentiment in insurance circles.

MEDICAL MEN TO MEET

The American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics will hold its forty-fifth annual meeting in the parlors of the Hotel Raleigh, Washington, D. C., December 15-16.

This was the first society of medical men in the world to take up the scientific study of alcohol and other narcotics. Its papers and transactions have been published in the Journal of Inebriety and comprise the first scientific literature on the subject. Thirty-two papers on different phases of the subject will be read at this meeting by specialists and distinguished medical and scientific men. These studies will be confined exclusively to the facts and conclusions from laboratory and clinical experience. The public is cordially invited to be present. Programs can be had by addressing the secretary, Dr. T. D. Crothers, Hartford, Conn.



THE LOVE OF THE FATHER

It comes to me more and more,
Each day as I pass along,
The love of the Father eternal
Is over us tender and strong.

'Tis not alone in the sunshine
Our lives grow pure and true;
There is growth as well in the shadow,
And pain has a work to do.

A message comes in the heartache,
A whisper of love in the pain;
The pangs we have fought and conquered
Tell the sweet story of gain.

So it comes to me more and more
As I enter upon each new day;
The love of the Father eternal
Is over us all the way.

—Selected

ZILLAH FOSTER STEVENS PROMOTED

As we go to press the news comes of the promotion to heavenly activities of our beloved comrade, Mrs. Zillah Foster Stevens, chairman of the Temperance committee of the International Sunday School Association, and Associate National superintendent of the Anti-Narcotics department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

JOHN DALE, Omaha, Nebraska, a pioneer prohibition leader in his own state, who courageously served the cause in the days of its unpopularity.

WILLIAM S. CLARK, editor Patriot-Phalanx, who gave a life time of service to the prohibition cause through his journalistic work.

MRS. SARAH D. ADAMS, Prospect, Oregon, a Crusader of Cincinnati, Ohio. Although a life-long sufferer Mrs. Adams was an efficient worker for the church and the W. C. T. U. and filled a large place in the community's life.

A typographical error in our issue of November 18 gave to North Idaho the credit for a convention which was held by the South Idaho W. C. T. U.

The University of Chicago is viewing with growing disfavor the college stein, and a desire to suppress its use among the college students manifested itself recently in the organization of a local temperance society.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

DECEMBER 23—Crusade Day.

SUPERINTENDENTS

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE

MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN

I am complying with numerous requests, dear comrades, to tell you what to do in the local unions and otherwhere to "awaken still greater interest" in the Parliamentary Usage department. I am happy to translate "still greater" to mean that there is already more or less interest. Unlike some of the other departments, Parliamentary Usage does not afford continually new phases. Correct parliamentary procedure is the same yesterday, today and tomorrow. I cannot advise you either to ask the ministers individually or collectively to preach a parliamentary sermon, or to hold open-air parliamentary meetings, or to give parliamentary pageants, or to do dozens of things that would be both lawful and expedient in some of the other departments.

I have thought of asking you to circulate a parliamentary pledge against certain "do's" and "don'ts," but my heart fails me, for after all there is just one way to become a proficient and efficient parliamentarian and that is, by actual, sure-enough study and practice; not to study and practice fitfully and spasmodically but steadily and persistently. To this end every meeting should be conducted in strict accord with parliamentary procedure. Every regular meeting should give at least ten minutes to special parliamentary practice. Then there should be a special meeting quarterly when possible, semi-annually at least. Every local union should have a superintendent of Parliamentary Usage and for these "rally" days she should provide a program suited to the occasion, giving it so much thought and time as to insure success. Do not make these special meetings simply open meetings with a general invitation. Send a note to each society. Say that the members will not only be welcome to listen, but also to take part. Such a meeting promotes fraternal feeling and always increases interest, for it brings to the front the best parliamentarians in the several organizations. It is in such a meeting, too, that we secure new members for the W. C. T. U. Do not make such a meeting stilted and too formal. The leader must be enthusiastic and keep things lively, for the stream will not rise higher than the source. Doing things "decently and in order" does not mean overwhelming dignity.

But what about the program? Where can be found the needed "helps"? Where there is but little interest, for a "starter" use the leaflet, "Why Study Parliamentary Law?" Where most who are present are already converted, Drills No. 1 or 2; where those somewhat advanced and the missionary societies are to take part, No. 3. When something out of the common is desired try "Parliamentary Voices," but in such case be guided by the foot-note at the bottom of the last page and adhere to it strictly. Be sure that the music, whether vocal or instrumental, is enlivening rather than severely classical, and this holds true of any of the special meetings. To bring out in regular order the several "motions" No. 3 of the Parliamentary Studies is to be preferred. At the close of any of these meetings there is no law against "breaking bread" together, or leastwise a dainty sandwich, et cetera, but by all means make the social part true to name.

A contest always provokes a fellowship feeling. Choose sides and be sure that each captain has a sense of the fitness of things. Give a simple prize to the winning side; in short, make these special meetings "gala" occasions. In all this there is nothing new. The best new thing in parliamentary knowledge is finding out the thing we didn't know, and so another good "exercise" in a special meeting is, near the close to call for volunteer answers to this (or similar) question: "What do I know now that I did not know at the beginning of this meeting?" When these suggestions are all tried and found wanting we will suggest others.

N. B. THIS means especially the general officers of each state. There has never been a year since the department was instituted when so many states have changed superintendents. Several of the retiring superintendents have written letters giving the reasons, but have strangely neglected to give the name and address of the new superintendent. Ineffectual attempts (not in all cases) have been made to secure this very important information. Evidently there are states in which the secretary does not know that a part of her duty is to acquaint every National superintendent with the change of superintendent in her department. In such case she must be gently set right. If this is not done by the president it is a clear case that one of the other officers must "bring it to pass." Please, my comrades, attend to this at once. To make assurance doubly sure, will every state superintendent who has not heard from me since National Convention write immediately. There is a prize offer on. It will expire January 1.

523 Lyon St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

EVANGELISTIC WORK

MRS. MARY E. KUHL

At the beginning of our new fiscal year, following the wonderful National Convention at Seattle, Washington, it is most needful and the time is opportune for the evangelistic spirit to possess each one of us. Let us begin at once to work for the widening of the scope of our service, for the deeper spiritual foregleam of the hidings of God's power, for soul seeking, soul winning and for the world's salvation. These are cardinal forces, which, if set in motion, will make for National Constitutional Prohibition and for all human good and true manhood.

God stands amid the shadows and works in thick darkness as well as in the light; therefore, we have every cause for rejoicing and continual promptings to go forward, to look upward and march onward in every work that has been entrusted to our keeping.

The earnest appeal for prayer needs to touch every heart, and the special prayer days set apart by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union should be most carefully observed. Prayer should come for the appointed meetings to be held at Washington, and other prohibition conferences to be arranged, till the shafts of heaven sink deeply into the hearts and consciences of leaders and rulers and of all thinking men and women, that they may be assured of the fact that the iniquity of the liquor traffic "has come to its full," and that definite action, with wise legislation, must be taken for its swift destruction. To this end, may we not push our evangelistic efforts, with earnest pleadings, with a soul hunger for the searching of God's work, knowing that in the doing of His commandments, the stars of heaven in their course shall fight for our deliverance.

The Work-Day Plan is now ready and will be sent gratis to every superintendent who will advise me as to the number of copies needed. Only the postage per package needs to be remitted.

The department of Unfermented Wine has been combined with the Evangelistic and Almshouse department under the one name, therefore its literature will be catalogued with the Evangelistic leaflets. The new leaflet, "The Young Man Daniel," is now in print. Report Blanks are also ready. Every white ribboner can do something in the work of this department. It is beautiful to give a testimony in honor of our Christ, who is the master workman, with man the instrument.

92 East Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio

Note—Please do not send letters to Champaign, Ill. This is my second year of residence in Ohio.

TUBERCULOSIS WEEK

FRANCES WAITE LEITER

For five years, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has appointed a date for the observance of Tuberculosis Day. During this time the work has so grown and broadened in its scope, that this year a week is to be observed as Tuberculosis Week, occurring from December 6 to 12. Its object is to secure the presentation of the subject before the largest possible number of people in the United States, through the medium of churches, societies, lodges, clubs, granges and schools.

It is expected that each community will adapt the subject to its particular need. Plans, however, provide for three special days, as follows: Examination Day, Wednesday, December 8; Children's Health Crusade Day, Friday, December 10; Tuberculosis Sabbath, December 11-12.

Medical Examination Day purposes to induce every one, both sick and well, to have an annual physical examination, though all need not be examined on the day named for application. The intention is to popularize a movement which thousands of persons have already found to be one of the best ways to prevent disease.

Children's Health Crusade Day will be devoted to interesting children in schools and elsewhere, in health plays, compositions, essays, and orations on matters of public health, especially tuberculosis; also, in the sale of Red Cross seals, the proceeds of which are used to further the anti-tuberculosis movement.

Tuberculosis Sabbath will be the culmination of the week's campaign. This is intended to be undenominational. Those worshipping on Saturday may set aside December 11 for this purpose.

While desirable, special sermons are not required to be preached. A brief talk in connection with some service, or discussion before Young People's Societies will be helpful; also, the distribution of some pertinent literature.

To sum it up, during the seven days from December 6 to 12, inclusive, it is intended that the subject, tuberculosis, shall have some right of way in religious, philanthropic, civic, and social organizations of the country, that the public may be informed concerning the nature of this disease. Last year over one hundred thousand churches and other organizations participated.

Those desiring literature for preparation of sermons and talks, can secure it without cost from the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This maxim has weight in coping with some of the prevailing diseases of the day. It is especially applicable to tuberculosis, which afflicts so large a portion of humanity in all parts of the world. Through ignorance of the nature of the disease many become victims of this scourge.

Special effort has been made by this Health department to prepare some leaflets that will be of service through the great W. C. T. U. constituency as our part in the struggle against this death reaper. The control of and final relief from this scourge, for future generations, must largely come through education of the masses.

If not convenient to co-operate in the general movement throughout the country in the observance of "Tuberculosis Week," named from December 6 to 12 inclusive, make careful preparation for it immediately following the holidays. At this special meeting distribute at the close the leaflet "Is It All?" Give attention to the music, and secure good readers for the several numbers.

If this meeting is well advertised, it will scarcely fail to enlist some who have not previously been attracted by the opportunities of the W. C. T. U. The following is the program:

THE KEY TO THE SITUATION

Music

Scripture Lesson—Psalm 96. (Praise and service demand physical as well as spiritual strength)

Invocation

Music

1. "Personal Power, or Vital Force"

Music

2. "Enemies and Defenders"
3. "The Great White Plague." (To be followed by discussion)

Invitation for new members

W. C. T. U. Doxology

Program envelope, including two copies of each leaflet, with Plan of Work, 10 cents.

"Is It All?" per 50 copies, 20 cents; per 100, 25 cents.

No. 1 (in program), per dozen, 10 cents; per 50, 25 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

No. 2, per dozen, 10 cents; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 25 cents.

No. 3, per dozen, 20 cents; per 50, 30 cents; per 100, 40 cents.

It is suggested that the leaflets of this program be used for general distribution.

FRANCES WAITE LEITER,
National Superintendent
220 West Park Ave., Mansfield, Ohio

Send orders to the National Superintendent, or to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

Missouri In Campaign For Suffrage

SLUMP IN MANUFACTURE OF BEER—DRY BANQUET FOR MISSOURI EDITORS

Special Correspondence

The Missouri W. C. T. U. cordially greets the newly elected and re-elected National General officers and renews its pledge of loyalty to all National plans and the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition.

The Missouri delegation to the National Convention returned with such splendid reports that we who "stayed by the stuff" had pangs of regret over the good things we had missed, but rejoiced in the great "harvest home" and the progress of our cause. We also gave thanks when we learned that Missouri won the Sunday school, UNION SIGNAL, Anti-Narcotic and Press prizes and received the loving cup for the greatest number of pages of literature distributed. It is fourth in per cent of UNION SIGNALS taken, third in Y. P. B. per cent gain, and made a net gain in state membership of 2,030.

November has been a month of Convention "Echo" meetings. In Kansas City district a reception was held in the spacious home of Mrs. A. C. McClary, with Mrs. Julia H. Little, the new state superintendent of Social Meetings, presiding. A good program of special music and readings by Miss McClary and Professor and Mrs. T. H. Ireland was interspersed with fine convention reports given by Mrs. Margaret Pugh, Mrs. S. H. Hubbell and Mrs. Charles Donoway. Their word pictures were most vivid. Professor Ireland delighted all present with his wonderful whistling solos.

Suffrage Campaign On In Earnest

The Missouri suffrage campaign is on in earnest. All local unions are busy circulating petitions and holding suffrage meetings of various kinds, distributing literature, and raising campaign funds by the foot-of-dimes plan and in various other ways. All known campaign methods will be worked and many new ones originated.

At Campbell, Dunklin county, the W. C. T. U. had a "suffrage auto" in the corn show parade, which won first prize. Yellow and white bunting and flowers were artistically used as decorations.

Among the prominent speakers in the campaign will be Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, Mrs. Lillian Mitchner and other National and state workers.

Dry Press Banquet

The Missouri Press Association climbed on the water-wagon at a banquet during its annual meeting in St. Joseph, as no intoxicants were served. Each one of the newly elected officers is the editor of a "dry" newspaper and is himself an exponent of National Constitutional Prohibition.

Decline in the Manufacture of Beer

There has been a falling off in the manufacture of beer in Missouri during the present year of 344,974 barrels, according to estimates furnished by Thomas Speed Mosby, state beer inspector. This represents 10,694,356 gallons, a loss of $67,544.13 to the state in beer inspection taxes over the collections of a corresponding period last year. Ample evidence that in Missouri dry counties are dry!

Missouri Policewomen

The Independence W. C. T. U. has secured the appointment of the first policewoman in the state under the new law passed by the last general assembly. Mrs.

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

HARD TO DROP
But Many Drop It

A young Calif. wife talks about coffee: "It was hard to drop Mocha and Java and give Postum a trial, but my nerves were so shattered that I was a nervous wreck and of course that means all kinds of ails.

"I did not want to acknowledge coffee caused the trouble for I was very fond of it. At that time a friend came to live with us, and I noticed that after he had been with us a week he would not drink his coffee any more. I asked him the reason. He replied: 'I have not had a headache since I left off drinking coffee, some months ago, till last week, when I began again here at your table. I don't see how anyone can like coffee, anyway, after drinking Postum!'

"I said nothing, but at once ordered a package of Postum. That was five months ago, and we have drank no coffee since, except on two occasions when we had company, and the result each time was that my husband could not sleep, but lay awake and tossed and talked half the night. We were convinced that coffee caused his suffering, so he returned to Postum, convinced that coffee was an enemy, instead of a friend, and he is troubled no more by insomnia.

"I have gained 8 pounds in weight, and my nerves have ceased to quiver. It seems so easy now to quit coffee that caused our aches and ails and take up Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers

THE JUNIOR PARTNER

ADALINE POWELL

"Why, Howard, what brings you home so early?" asked his mother, as her big boy bounded into the room, all excitement.

"We start at eight tomorrow," Howard replied breathlessly, "and I've lots to do to get ready. Word has just come that the contract will be let day after tomorrow."

"Is he— is he—?"

"Yes, he is," Howard replied grimly.

"O Howard! And are you going away with him, to be among men who—"

"Mother, you remember that you taught me when I was a little boy to come into the house with clean feet, no matter how much mud I'd been playing in? I'm a man now,"—his pride in his twenty-one years was manifest—"and I want you to trust me, no matter how much mud I have to go through in this world."

Her loving eyes answered his questioning look in full measure, and, as she patted his big brown hand, she said:

"Yes, dear, I think I needn't worry any more. It hurts me to have you see it all the time, though."

"I could never make you suffer after seeing what Mrs. Springer has to bear," Howard said earnestly. "My desk is in the corner of Mr. Springer's office overlooking the hall, you know. From where I sit I can see the sideboard in the dining-room, and the big black bottle is a familiar sight."

Then his mother ventured a question that had been often on her tongue, but which she had refrained from asking lest it should imply distrust:

"Does he ever—has he ever offered it to you?"

"Yes, several times, mother, when I first went there as his stenographer. It was always when he had been drinking heavily. He seemed to think that it was the proper thing to do. The fuller he is the more polite he gets, strange to say. When he's drunk he has the manners of a Chesterfield." Mrs. Wright laughed in spite of herself.

"But one day, after I had refused a good many times," Howard contined, "he seemed able to grasp the fact that I had done the sensible thing, for he looked at me keenly and said:

"'That's right, Howard, and I wish I'd learned to say no that very first time. But they were all so much older than I, and I felt flattered by their attention and their treating. I'd won a contract away from them, and it hardly seemed courteous to refuse, but many's the time I've wished I had!'"

Sun-up was none too early for Howard to rise in anticipation of the day's events. His mother sent him off with an encouraging pat and a wistful face, murmuring, as he kissed her:

"Let's hope he is—"

"Yes, mother, let's hope he's sober." Howard finished bluntly, as he ran down the steps.

His heart sank a little as he approached the Springer home. The big car stood before the door, and the chauffeur was waiting, but Mr. Springer was not in sight. Howard entered the house and walked into the drawing-room, but it was empty. Then he turned and looked across the hall into the dining-room. Before the sideboard stood his employer, evidently preparing to drink to the morrow's success.

Suddenly there surged over the boy a feeling of rebellion and of infinite superiority to this capable, pampered, ruined man. He strode across the hall, took the bottle firmly from the surprised Mr. Springer, replaced it, and walked Mr. Springer determinedly through the hall and down the steps to the waiting auto.

Then he turned, with his foot on the running-board, and raised his hat in the direction of the drawing-room window, behind the curtain of which he knew stood a heart-broken woman. His gesture was an unconscious imitation of Mr. Springer's most courtly bow, but it was prompted by a deeper feeling of deference and responsibility toward the woman concealed there than was ever shown by Mr. Springer himself.

Howard hoped that he could keep a tight hold on his companion through the succeeding day and night, and take him to the letting in a condition that would lend some dignity to the occasion; but that hope speedily vanished, when Mr. William Carter, a lifelong friend and partner in Mr. Springer's conviviality, appeared at the hotel headquarters.

All day Howard played a dreary game of hide-and-seek with the elusive pair. Every moment spent upon the morrow's business had to be offset by an agonizing search for these two, who, when found, were always taking one more drink to success. Never before had Springer's right-hand man felt so alone in the world.

At nine o'clock the next morning Howard stood in the hotel lobby, defeat staring him in the face. His employer had brought himself to the brink of the collapse that always followed his periods of wild indulgence. His heart had rebelled at last, and it was unsafe to leave him, even for an hour.

The bids were to be opened in thirty minutes. According to specified directions the figures of each firm must be delivered by a member of that firm or by a trusted employe. The desperate impulse had come to Howard to rush to the office, deliver his bid, and return at once. But on the very threshold his brain cleared and he realized the folly of such a proceeding.

Turning slowly, he encountered the friendly, inquiring gaze of a gray-haired man, standing near, who had been watching the very evident conflict in the boyish mind.

"In trouble, my son?"

Howard started at the music of the words.

"My employer is—ill. The bids on a very important contract are to be opened in half an hour, sir, and he is too sick to go."

"Lucky I'm a doctor, isn't it?" laughed the new acquaintance. "Maybe I can help."

"Oh, would you, sir?" Howard gasped.

"Certainly." The stranger smiled as he held out his hand.

Howard thrust a key into the outstretched palm, saying all in a breath: "Room six—third floor—his heart!" Then he fled through the door and down the street.

There was not a doubt in Howard's mind that this way of escape was one which he dared seize. The real interest and concern in the doctor's eyes were unmistakable. And so, as the boy ran, his busy thoughts kept time with his feet. Over and over in his mind he reviewed the figures he was about to submit,—figures all of his own making, for Mr. Springer's contribution to the enterprise had been reminiscent talk of other contracts won in his brilliant, stormy career.

The next few hours always remained in Howard's mind as the most confused, and at the same time the most vivid, of his entire life. At last, through all the babble of voices in the big room where the competitors waited for news; through the confusion of his own thoughts, busied with wonder whether his bid was as close as it might be, and how the friendly doctor was getting on with Mr. Springer's outraged heart;—at last through it all came to Howard noisy congratulations, vigorous handshakes, and hearty good wishes. He had won the contract!

It was not until Howard and his employer were speeding miles away from the scene of the day's victory that any expression returned to Mr. Springer's eyes. The kind doctor had helped Howard get his charge to the train, and at parting the boy had tried to put into his handclasp enough gratitude for two.

For a long time not a word was spoken between Mr. Springer and Howard; but gradually a change, almost too subtle to be discerned, occurred, and the man's personality began to dominate his ill-used body, transforming him once more into the courtly gentleman, the cultured man, the head of the firm of Springer and Company.

A feeling of dismay crept into Howard's heart; for, as the older man's remarkable individuality reasserted itself, his own youth and crudeness and lack of experience recurred to him with unusual force. His victory took on a less significant aspect; his buoyancy was gone: reaction had set in.

As the train drew into the home station, Mr. Springer turned to the boy with a question in his eyes.

"Yes," Howard said a bit wearily, "we took the contract."

Mrs. Springer stood in the wide hall of the stately house awaiting their return. As she searched her husband's face his altered appearance was sufficient answer to her unspoken question. She knew that he had passed through another crisis, and she turned to Howard impulsively with a look of gratitude and appeal.

Mr. Springer's voice forestalled any remarks.

"I should like to have you both come to the drawing-room," he said in his most Chesterfieldian tone. Bewildered, they followed him, and faced him as he closed the door solemnly.

"Our young friend—" he spoke the words with no loss, through emotion, of any of his pompous dignity—"our young friend has rendered me today a two-fold service."

Mrs. Springer's hand went out involuntarily toward Howard. It rested lightly on his arm, and he covered it as he might have done had it belonged to his mother.

"Our company, as you know, has been without a junior partner ever since—" Howard felt the hand on his arm tremble —"ever since our son's death," Mr. Springer finished firmly.

In a flash Howard seemed to divine the share that the son's death had contributed toward Mr. Springer's moral degeneration.

"And now," Mr. Springer went on, as though approaching the peroration of a formal speech, "I feel justified in offering to our young friend here that junior partnership, as a token of my respect and appreciation."

Howard opened his lips to speak, to remind the speaker of his youth and inexperience; but the hand on his arm conveyed a subtle suggestion that this was not a question of a mere business partnership. At that moment there came to him the conviction that the offer held a deep meaning for all of them,—justification of his mother's faith, response to the appeal in the sad face raised to his, moral support for this man before him, now so completely dependent upon his own young manhood.

Howard squared his shoulders and with the movement cast aside all hesitation and doubt. His part in life was to be henceforth that of the strong soul upon whom many lean; and he accepted the mission as he took Mr. Springer's hand in a warm clasp.

"IT IS COMING, UNCLE SAM"

MRS. MABEL REYNOLDS MAKEPEACE

(Air: "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, The Boys Are Marching")

UNCLE SAM:
Howdy-do, my children dear,
I remember you last year,
And your hearty right good cheers for Uncle Sam;
While I rubbed and while I scrubbed,
At the temperance washing tub;
So to-day I'm glad to see you, yes, I am.

CHILDREN (singing chorus of song):
Uncle Sam, we give you greeting;
We are glad that you have come;
We are pleased to have you here,
You have worked so well this year,
Cleaning up the land in our beloved home.

UNCLE SAM:
Yes, the states looked gay and fine,
All those nine upon the line,
(Points to first nine prohibition states cut from paper and fastened on line)
So the people kept me working night and day.
But I now no longer scrub
At the tem'prance washing tub,
See, dry cleaning is by far the better way.
(Uncle Sam shows the following states cut from white paper and fastens them on board marked "DRY CLEANED" explaining: Virginia has joined her sister, West Virginia. Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Idaho. I did a good job for the West. Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona and South Carolina in the South are well done. Iowa in the Middle West will keep Kansas company. Then he sings):
There's still more that must be done,
Though Car'lina has been won,
And Vermont has still to say if she'll be dry.
Other states—there're surely nine—
Planning now to get in line,
And the whisky men are asking, "Tell us why."

RUM POWER (Recited by boy in suitable dress and carrying placards):
Howdy-do, dear Uncle Sam,
Speak the word and here I am;
Prohibition is the cry,
Will you kindly tell us why?
Why can't people have the drink?
If they want it, don't you think
It's quite unfair?
Why should we be driven out
With this prohibition shout?
Don't you see we're losing all
By this noisy temp'rance bawl?
Why don't you care?
See the revenue you get
When the country all is wet!
See the children kept in school
By the splendid license rule

That pays the tax!
Won't you kindly tell us why
Folks have raised this hue and cry?
No one now will take our "ad,"
Everybody calls us bad
And flings the axe.

CHILDREN (singing):
Let us answer, Uncle Sam,
He is such a horrid sham,
And the people now have put on him the ban.
Ah, we children know him well,
We know why and we can tell;
Hear, O liquor-man, and answer if you can.

SOCIAL SERVICE (Recited by girl dressed in nurse's costume and bearing placard):
Social service tells of ills
That are pouring from the stills;
Sickness, poverty and crime
Fast increasing all the time
In our great land.

STUDENT (Boy with books and goggles):
Students say that future years
We shall spend in useless tears
For the children yet unborn
Who of health and strength are shorn
By drink's dread hand.

SCIENCE (Boy, with scientific instruments, bag, etc.):
Science says that alcohol
Is a poison and its toll
In strength and life far too dear;
That the people well may fear—
It is no food.

BUSINESS (Boy, with ledgers; another as workman):
Business says we can't have booze
Else the profit we shall lose;
Danger too lurks in the cup,
We say men must give it up
And so make good.

MOTHER (Girl carrying figure dressed as baby):
Mothers' hearts have long been stirred,
Mothers' voices now are heard;
You have ruined all too long,
Mothers will not stand the wrong,
Now they can vote.

CHILDREN (Represented by several smaller children):
Children study, children think,
And they see the danger brink,
Curse of body and of mind
They will take the pledge to bind
So please take note.
Now you know the reason why
Everywhere the cry is "Dry,"
While for prohibition all the good folks shout;
While they work and while they pray
For the dawning of the day
When from every corner you are driven out.
Shout, shout for prohibition
It is coming, Uncle Sam,
Do not count him as your friend
He has ruled, but that shall end,
And our land once more be free, how glad I am.

RUSSIA (Boy carrying Russian flag):
We join with you in the dry parade.
No more vodka shall ever be made,
For Czar and peasant are happier far
Following fast the temp'rance star.

FRANCE (Girl bearing flag of France):
Absinthe has gone and we've just begun
In the temp'rance vic'try to be won;
When wine goes out, then France goes free
And the men of France love liberty.

ALL (Singing):
"It's coming, it's coming, the morn for which we pray,
We'll take the world for prohibition, some glad day."

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

One afternoon during the Billy Sunday meetings in Syracuse, N. Y., the W. C. T. U. federation of that city (eight local unions), made a special reservation in the tabernacle for its members, those of the county union and also of the adjoining counties. One thousand occupied seats while about nine hundred marched from Centenary church with Old Glory, banners, pennants and white ribbon bows in evidence. A mounted policeman said it was the finest delegation that had yet visited the tabernacle and advised his wife, who stood near, to join the W. C. T. U. When called upon, the delegation arose and sang "All Round the World" and with uplifted hands repeated, "For God and Home and Every Land." It was Mother's Day and automobiles brought the aged and helpless women to the meeting. Thirteen thousand were present. Previous to the demonstration the federation held a mass meeting for prayer and praise and Mrs. William Asher of the "Sunday" party addressed the meeting, with the result that several new members joined, old members renewed their membership, and from outsiders came the exclamation, "I never knew there were so many of them!" God is doing great things for Syracuse and vicinity and it remains for the women of the W. C. T. U. to follow up the awakening sentiment for total abstinence and prohibition.

Governor Rye of Tennessee attended a reception recently tendered Mrs. Mary P. Bang, president of the state W. C. T. U., by the county union. He gave a gracious and kindly greeting and pledged his co-operation in the noble work of the organization. "The open saloon is gone from Tennessee never to return," he declared.

"MOTHERS OF MEN," a book recently written and "dedicated to the mothers of all nations" by Mrs. Frances E. Hallowes of India, and published by Headly Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C. (price, one shilling), is a book that should be read by all mothers and their sons. It shows up militarism in its true light. It also shows in a convincing manner the way to world-peace and how, honorably, to prevent the awful ravages of war.

H. J. BAILEY.

Mrs. Lila Carlin Moore, National organizer and lecturer, has been doing excellent work in Idaho. In one district she organized six unions. She was obliged to cancel some of her engagements on account of illness. Her address at present is Vernon, Texas, care of Mrs. Rena M. Watts.

SCHOOL OF CIVIC EVANGELISM

A School of Civic Evangelism is to be held at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, December 28-31, under the auspices of the International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D. C. The Moody Bible Institute has offered its hospitality to all who come. Pastors and Christian workers generally, as well as evangelists, are welcome, and correspondence with reference to board and lodging should be addressed to the Institute, while information concerning the program may be obtained from the International Reform Bureau. The purpose of the school is that "all reform bodies may in a broad, co-operative way, plan to come in at the climax of revivals while the great host is still united and molten, and shape this moral force into social betterment."

Holiday Gifts

THE UNION SIGNAL

a paper for the home, a suitable, desirable and helpful gift coming each week in the year. You make no mistake in sending it to father, mother, sister, brother, or the friend in college.

Price, $1.00 per year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER

will be welcomed not only by the boys and girls but by the Sunday school and public school teacher. Issued monthly.

Price, 25 cents per year.

Dainty gift cards will be mailed to all subscribers to whom the paper is ordered as a gift, and the Christmas number will be mailed to each.

Kindly send in subscriptions at once so that the gift subscriptions may reach the subscriber before Christmas.

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Cloth, $1.50. Morocco, $2.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said. Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 75 cents.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Price, 50 cents.

Nineteen Beautiful Years. Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.

A Modern Madonna, Carolyn Stanley. Price, $1.50.

Freckles, Gene Stratton Porter. Price, 60 cents.

John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.

Lois Morton's Investment, Mrs. Eva Murphy. Price, $1.35.

Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.32.

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.40.

BOOKLETS

Who's to Blame, Marietta Holley. Price, each, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Rest Cottage, profusely illustrated. Price, each, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

W. C. T. U. STATIONERY

Fine linen paper with W. C. T. U. monogram, embossed in gold. Twenty-four sheets and envelopes, boxed, 60 cents per box.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage spoons
Crusade Church spoons
Sterling, price, $1.50 each.

W. C. T. U. PINS

White enamel on silver with letters, 40 and 60 cents each
White enamel on silver without letters, 30 cents each
White enamel on gilt without letters, 25 cents each

CHRISTMAS CARDS

A carefully selected assortment of daintily decorated and engraved Christmas cards, with envelopes, at 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen; 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen.

Cards without envelopes, 15c and 25c per dozen.

Packages of Christmas tags and seals, 5 cents per package.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

"Florida's Going Dry," the Watchword of the Annual Convention

Special Correspondence

This was convention year for the writer. Not less than five conventions came her way, but the last, the thirty-second annual convention of the Florida W. C. T. U., was the gem of the five. This bright, breezy up-to-date meeting was held at beautiful Orlando, a place hard to find but well worth the search among the lakes, forests and orange groves of Florida. Delegates were received like old friends and treated with large-hearted hospitality. Not content with convention entertainment, at the close of the meeting guests were urged to remain to rest and visit.

Florida is fortunate indeed in having as its president Miss Minnie E. Neal, who presided over the convention with both dignity and grace, handling every situation tactfully and wisely. Wonderful to relate she performed the unusual feat of running convention affairs strictly on schedule time.

Strange, isn't it, how much alike W. C. T. U. women look! North and South there is the same earnestness and alertness, the same conscientiousness in taking notes for the home contingent, the same eagerness for new ideas and better methods of work and the same indomitable determination to completely annihilate the liquor traffic.

This was a particularly happy gathering of the clans, in a pretty church, with such a wealth of roses fresh every day as to make one forget that November isn't everywhere as balmy as May. Plenty of good work was reported done and much more in progress. There was rejoicing over the banner received from Mother National and over the hopeful outlook for future successes.

Much too busy were the earnest delegates to go sight-seeing except when the kindly members of the board of trade gave the visitors a ride through a charming region where are to be seen many small lakes, pine forests draped in soft trailing gray moss, and orange groves laden with ripening fruit.

Two magnificent addresses by Mrs. Mary Harris Armor and a diamond medal contest were evening features which brought out large and appreciative audiences. It was Florida's largest convention, numbering 160 delegates, with many visitors who came from surrounding cities to enjoy a day or an evening meeting. The largest delegation of this nature was a party of thirty from Tavares, in Lake county, thirty-five miles away, among whom was the six-foot-six sheriff of the county, who told of hearty interest in the cause.

The music of the convention was worthy of special mention. There were beautiful choruses by the Baptist and Methodist Episcopal choirs, choice solos by members of the choirs, charming numbers by the Rollins College Girls' Glee Club, excellent instrumental music by the Methodist Sunday school orchestra, a joyful song by nineteen members of the Conway Y. P. B., a fine prohibition chorus by a delegation from the Pine Castle union, several songs by the children and many delightful selections by the Orlando W. C. T. U. quartet.

The number on the program entitled the "Twentieth Century Pageant" was a mystery to all until, led by Mrs. Irene G. Adams, thirteen women in yellow, each wearing the name of a suffrage state, marched to the rostrum and told of valuable legislation enacted since it had acquired woman suffrage. Mrs. Lewis Young of Orange City was heartily applauded as she sang two suffrage songs. Mrs. Adams' earnest and sane presentation of the value of the ballot for women and the need of study by every woman of the progress in that line met with warm response from all.

The Bible readings each noon by Mrs. Mable Q. Stevens of St. Petersburg were full of spiritual uplift and power.

The following officers were elected: President, Miss Minnie E. Neal; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Anna Whitcomb Riggin; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ella M. Johnson; recording secretary, Mrs. Mabel Perkins-Dean; treasurer, Mrs. Nellie J. Dolg.

The whole convention, from the president's welcome to the white ribbon recruits, as she tenderly tied the white ribbon around their tiny wrists, to the grave consideration of most weighty subjects, was a revelation. The Florida W. C. T. U. is steadily growing and the work done by her shows the guiding hand of one who knows her state and who has the wisdom and trained ability to successfully work out her problems.

There are only nine counties left on Florida's black list, and a vigorous educational campaign is being carried on. Soon there will be joy among the angels over one more state set free, for "Florida's going dry!"

MISSOURI IN CAMPAIGN FOR SUFFRAGE

(Continued from Page Eleven)

K. K. Broeck, who has done social service work in Chicago and New York, was appointed by the mayor and began her duties at once. She is under the authority of the chief of police.

Twenty-six White Ribbon Recruits

At Ralls county convention, the state vice-president, Miss Roena Shaner, was the speaker and delighted her audiences. Twenty-six children were dedicated to the temperance cause. At the St. Clair county convention a beautiful silk flag was awarded to Mrs. J. R. Pickrell, milliner, for the most appropriately decorated W. C. T. U. window—all business houses had honored the organization with special decorations. The ministers' conference at which several spoke on "Creating Public Sentiment," "Organizing for Business," "Voting the Town Dry," and "Enforcing the Law," was very instructive.

At the eighth annual convention of Jasper county convened in Carthage, a beautiful suffrage pageant was greatly enjoyed. Mrs. E. G. Emmons, state lecturer, gave the annual sermon and two splendid addresses on "National Prohibition" and "The Evolution of the Feminist Movement." The Oronogo union received the prize of five dollars for having secured the greatest number of members above its apportionment. Mrs. Anna Pugh won the matron's gold medal at the contest given at Gentry county convention. Mrs. Maggie Wallace gave an interesting and helpful address. Lafayette union was designated the banner union of the county because of its fine year's work.

Knob Noster union was hostess to the Johnson county convention. Reports showed an advance in the work, two new unions and a gain in active and honorary membership. A suffrage address was given by Mrs. Wilson Morris.

Mrs. May L. Woods, National organizer, is president of Lawrence county, which held its annual convention in Verona. All reports were encouraging. Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, state lecturer of the Missouri Equal Suffrage Association, added much to the interest of the meeting. Her address on suffrage disarmed prejudice and won converts.

Mrs. Neva Thomas, state treasurer, was the speaker at Barton county convention at Liberal. A children's and matrons' contest were special features. Comfort bags for sailors were on exhibition, also literature and wall pockets. Good reports were given.

At the close of a very interesting all day temperance meeting, with a fine program and old fashioned basket dinner, Dr. E. Viola Peak organized a new local union at Oak Grove school near Springfield with twenty-three charter members.

Rev. Berthe J. Bowers assisted at the Linn county convention at Linneus. In addition to delegates the church was filled with interested visitors. Hoseville, a rural union, is the banner union in the county. Miss Virginia Maxwell won the gold medal in the contest. Worth county gained four new unions and one Y. P. B. Mrs. Laura Harnois gave counsel and instruction at the conventions and her evening address on woman suffrage was well received by a large audience.

Each year interest in prohibition has grown in Holt county. Its annual meeting this year was held at Craig.

Eldorado Springs union has opened a permanent rest and reading room with a free circulating library.

Highest Liquor Tax

The citizens of Maryville plan to hold a local option election February 3, 1916, to get rid of two saloons that pay $5,200 license a year. Maryville is the only wet spot in northwestern Missouri and a large part of southwestern Iowa. For over a decade it has had two saloons paying the highest license of any in the United States. In 1912, at the last local option election, the wets won by less than fifty votes. Since then a tremendous anti-saloon spirit has been worked up among the business men. There is a W. C. T. U. at work co-operating with churches and other organizations. While the two saloons pay into the city treasury the enormous revenue named and each supports a police officer at its own expense who promptly suppresses any rowdyism, thus making the saloons "well regulated," the people do not want them and are planning to vote them out February 3. If the prohibition fight is won the saloons will go out of business June 1. There is every prospect of victory.

READY

TOPICAL PROGRAM

FOR

1916

Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for writing in name of hostess and place of meeting.

Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00

A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for

50 CENTS

Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

Pat's Ticket

An Irishman had not been long in this country and wished to go to New York. Not knowing how to ask for his ticket, he concluded he would wait until he heard somebody else ask for one. A young lady wishing to go to Elizabeth, N. J., stepped up and said, "Elizabeth, single."

Pat said, "That's the way ye do it."

Then, going to the ticket office, he said, "Pat Murphy, married."—Junior Christian Endeavor World.

Needless Torture

General Sherman once stopped at a country home where a tin basin and roller-towel sufficed for the family's ablutions. For two mornings the small boy of the household watched in silence the visitor's toilet. When on the third day the tooth-brush, nail-file, whiskbroom, etc., had been duly used, he asked: "Say, mister, air you always that much trouble to you'se'f?"—Christian Register.

Urgent

The Doctor—"Mrs. Brown has sent for me to go to see her boy, and I must go at once."

His Wife—"What is the matter with the boy?"

The Doctor—"I do not know, but Mrs. Brown has a book on what to do before the doctor comes, and I must hurry up before she does it."—Christian Register.

Winter is Play-Time for Healthy Childhood and is "cold-time" for delicate, puny children.

If mothers everywhere would fully appreciate the strength-building, blood-making nourishment in Scott's Emulsion they would give it to children after their meals.

Its cream-like Cod Liver Oil brings healthy flesh and rosy cheeks while it warms the body by enriching the blood and fortifies the lungs.

No Alcohol in SCOTT'S. Avoid Substitutes.

14-91 SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

NOTES FROM THE ARKANSAS CONVENTION

Special Correspondence

The thirty-seventh annual convention of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. met in Forrest City. Those of us who have been in the service longest felt that we were treading on our native heath, for here it was that the W. C. T. U. baby donned her swaddling clothes. The first convention was held at Searcy but it was called by some of Forrest City's valiant women, and early in the work the Rollwage's, whose doors were again thrown open for entertainment this year, entertained the whole convention. Every home was wide open and the ministers, the clubs and the schools were lavish in their attentions.

Each convention seems the "best ever," for progress leaves its stamp each year, and "it gets better further on." The president, Mrs. Minnie U. Fuller, was at her best. There is no detail that escapes her notice, and everything that can be "linked up" with the temperance reform she has a knack of "linking," so we had at the convention representatives of the rural school work, the state aid for high schools, the work among negroes, made possible by the Jean's fund, domestic science, work for the feeble-minded, and other movements to tell us how we could co-operate with them.

Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston was the speaker, and a superb one she was. The pastor of the church in which the convention was held said he never heard a finer message from any pulpit. The pastor's wife, Mrs. J. R. G. White, was the very efficient director of music. The songs from our own battle-fields had the thrill of service and the surety of conquest in them.

The officers were re-elected.

ANNUAL ADDRESS

Of Anna Adams Gordon, President National W. C. T. U., Delivered at Seattle is a hand book of total abstinence and prohibition progress, a book of reference for every white ribboner and every student interested in the popular subject of the day.

Price, per copy, 5 cents.

NATIONAL
W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature. $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME?" 90,000 SOLD. Send 10c for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it. Wm.E.Marks, 1603 WestSt., Wilmington, Delaware

NOW READY

THREE TEMPERANCE LECTURES

ILLUSTRATED BY STEREOPTICON SLIDES

A carefully prepared lecture accompanies each set of slides and these lectures may be given in church, Sunday school, public school, in a parlor, or thrown upon a screen in out-of-door work during campaigns.

LECTURE No. 1

New Light on an Old Problem
(Scientific Temperance)

This lecture is composed of 51 slides, 20 of which are colored. Price, $20.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Frances E. Willard.
2. Mary H. Hunt.
3. Edith Smith Davis.
4. The Harm in a Glass of Beer.
5. The Value of Total Abstinence to a Life.
6. Alcohol and the Nervous System.
7. Prize Winner, Dorothy Werner. American.
8. Prize Winner, Sarah Pararano. Italian.
9. Prize Winner, Ida Oranovitch. Russian.
10. Quotation, Ex-Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.
11. Blank Slide for Respective State Scientific Temperance Instruction Law.
12. Girl and Lilies. "We Drink Only Water."
13. Horses Drinking Water.
14. Three Plants (with Water, Cigaret, Alcohol).
15. Blank Slide for Respective State Cigaret Law.
16. Doors Closed to Boys Who Use Tobacco.
17. Boy in Armor.
18. Boy, "No Tobacco or Whisky for Me."
19. The Smoker's Heart Tracings.
20. Athletics. Connie Mack. Quotation.
21. Game of Baseball.
22. A Game of Football.
23. The Crew.
24. Scholarship and Tobacco.
25. Business Positions.
26. Highest Success, Burbank and Quotation.
27. Quotation, Thomas Edison.
28. The Four Dogs. Dr. Hodge.
29. Bum. Fear.
30. Tipsy. Fear.
31. Nig. No Fear.
32. Topsy. No Fear.
33. The Four Dogs After Two Years.
34. Bum.
35. Nig.
36. Progeny of the Dogs. Hodge.
37. Progeny of the Human Race. Demme.
38. Mental Ability and School Children. Holland.
39. The Brain. Horsley.
40. The Brain. Chapple.
41. Beer or Flour—Which?
42. Typesetters and Alcohol.
43. The Muscles.
44. Employers Prefer Abstainers.
45. Accidents, Assaults, Efficiency. Germany.
46. Verdict of Science. Alcohol a Foe.
47. Famous Abstainer. Lincoln.
48. Boys, Be Worthy a Place by the Flag.

LECTURE No. 2

John Barleycorn

This lecture is composed of 33 slides, 21 of which are colored. Price, $15.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Song—"It's a Short Way to Prohibition."
2. Protect Youth—Fan.
3. Save the Boy.
4. Factory.
5. Raw Material—Finished Product.
6. Which Will You Crush?
7. Alcohol and Life; Alcohol and Disease.
8. Prohibition Card—What Every Merchant Knows.
9. Of Interest to Taxpayers.
10. Prohibition Prosperity.
11. Big Business.
12. Total Abstainers.
13. Man Who Drinks.
14. Railroad Poster.
15. Factory Poster.
16. Weighed in the Balance.
17. How Americans Spend Their Money.
18. Ninety-eight Per Cent Grain.
19. Wisconsin and Kansas Barrels.
20. Prosperity Statistics.
21. Turn Off the Faucet!
22. Accusing Fingers.
23. Liquor Traffic Must Go!
24. Prohibition Proclamation.
25. Camels Are Coming.
26. Dry Movement.
27. Prohibition Map.
28. Don't Know Whether To Go on Patching.
29. Song—"John Barleycorn, Good-bye."
30. National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage.

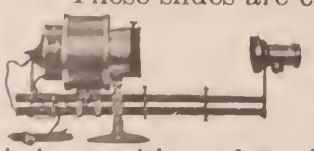
LECTURE No. 3

National W. C. T. U. Panama-Pacific Exhibit

This lecture is composed of 28 slides, 21 of which are colored. Price, $15.00.

a. Title.
b. Announcement.
c. National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.
1. Palace of Education.
2. Mary E. Brown.
3. Exhibit.
4. Exhibit—World's Corner.
5 National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and Rest Cottage.
6. For God and Home and Every Land.
7. Frances E. Willard.
8. Countess of Carlisle.
9. Anna A. Gordon.
10. Statue of Miss Willard.
11. Dividends of Liquor Traffic.
12. Alcohol and Financial Efficiency.
13. Alcohol and Mental Efficiency.
14. Polyglot Petition.
15. Magazines Refusing Liquor Advertisements.
16. Food and Drink Cabinet.
17. Remember These Things.
18. Decreased Use of Alcohol in Hospitals.
19. Don't Dope Your Baby.
20. Japanese Bell.
21. Kansas and Wisconsin Barrels.
22. Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens.
23. Prohibition Proclamation.
24. Prohibition Map.
25. Grand Prize Award.

These slides are carefully packed and shipped at our risk, carriage prepaid.



To those contemplating the purchase of a stereopticon, we recommend a new and thoroughly tested machine called the Bond-opticon. It is of simple construction, easy of adjustment and may be used with perfect safety. It has but one connection, which is inserted in socket of an electric light.

Price, complete with case, $40.00. Full description furnished upon application.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION, Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., DECEMBER 16, 1915 | No. 50

Constant Christmas

Oh, never failing splendor,
    Oh, never silent song,
Still keep the green earth tender,
    Still keep the gray earth strong!
Still keep the brave earth dreaming
    Of deeds that shall be done,
While children's lives come streaming
    Like sunbeams from the sun!
Oh, angels, sweet and splendid,
    Throng in our hearts and sing
The wonders which attended
    The coming of the King!

—Phillips Brooks

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SPEAKER OF HOUSE TAKES OATH OF OFFICE—MEMBERS ENTER WITH ENTHUSIASM UPON WORK OF YEAR—PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE—SUFFRAGE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT INTRODUCED—BILL INTRODUCED FOR PROHIBITION IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—LET THE PEOPLE CLAMOR FOR CLEAN "MOVIES" ONLY—MANY WORKERS AND VISITORS AT WASHINGTON NATIONAL W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Legislation, Washington, D.C.

The past week has been a busy one. By the terms of the Federal Constitution, Congress convenes the first Monday in December. Senators and Representatives, however, began to arrive in the city a week ahead of time, and the two dominant parties were in daily caucus, laying plans for the coming winter's work.

There is always great interest manifested in the assembling of a new Congress, and especially is this true in the House of Representatives, which organizes from the beginning, electing a Speaker, and swearing in members both new and old.

This year was no exception to the rule, the demand for tickets being almost unprecedented for both the opening day of Congress and the day following, when the President of the United States read his annual message to the Senate and House.

Each member received but one ticket, and, if his family were here, of course his ticket was appropriated. It seems somewhat exclusive to reserve the public galleries for members' families. We believe one gallery should be left for the general public which is so deeply interested in the doings of Congress.

Speaker of House Takes Oath of Office

The first roll-call of the House by the clerk showed 427 of the total membership of 435 present. There were eight absent, and one vacancy exists, that caused by the recent death of Mr. Witherspoon of Mississippi. Hon. Champ Clark was reelected Speaker. Mr. Mann of Illinois, the Republican floor leader, was the opposing candidate. Mr. Clark was escorted to the floor of the House by a committee, and received a great ovation when he took his place at the Speaker's desk. Very complimentary expressions were used by Representative Mann in presenting the Speaker, and by the latter in accepting the position. The oath was administered to the Speaker by Representative Talbott of Maryland, the oldest member of the House. The members were then called by states alphabetically to the front of the rostrum, when, with uplifted hands, they subscribed to the following:

> I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God.

Members Begin Work with Enthusiasm

Old timers, most of them Republicans, after an absence of two years or more, came trooping back to places in the House, eager for a part in the absorbing business of the next few months. Ex-Speaker Cannon, who was defeated for the Sixty-third Congress, is back, and sat in the front row and laughed heartily as the House got into a little difference over the rules governing that body, and hot references to "Cannonism" were hurled back and forth across the dividing line.

All records for the introduction of bills at the opening of Congress have been passed. At the end of two days, the aggregate length of the two meetings being not more than six hours, the bill clerks of Senate and House estimated that 6,000 bills and resolutions had been offered. The number represents a thousand for each hour Congress was actually in session. It was said by an expert that it would take two years of steady work on the part of Congress to consider these bills alone.

President's Annual Message

Tuesday there was another rush for admittance to the Capitol, as the President of the United States was to deliver his annual message to Congress. This occupied over one hour, the two bodies, Senate and House, meeting together in the House chamber.

The President paid particular attention to the question of "preparedness" and his reference to "foreigners within our borders who, while small in numbers have brought deep disgrace upon us, and necessitate the use of processes of law by which we may be purged of their corrupt distempers," called forth great applause.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo sent to Congress the annual estimates for the fiscal year, 1916-1917, which are the largest ever sent in time of peace, totaling $1,285,857,808.

Suffrage Constitutional Amendment Introduced

Senator Sutherland of Utah introduced as joint resolution No. 1 the Susan B. Anthony suffrage constitutional amendment. Senator Thomas of Colorado also introduced a suffrage amendment, and, as chairman of the suffrage committee, granted the suffragists now in Washington a hearing before his committee.

A thousand women presented a petition to Congress, containing signatures of 18,000 women, and later walked down Pennsylvania avenue to the White House, where they were received by the President.

Miss Gordon Presides at Meeting of Committee of Nineteen

Friday, December 3, the Committee of Nineteen, appointed by the "get together-conference" held in Washington July 10 last, to confer with leaders in Congress concerning the wording of the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition to be presented to the Sixty-fourth Congress, met in this city. Owing to the serious illness of the chairman, Rev. A. J. Barton, Miss Anna A. Gordon, as vice-chairman, presided at the opening session. Dr. Cannon of Virginia was elected vice-chairman and presided during the afternoon.

After a full and exhaustive discussion which continued during the day, a vote was taken, resulting in nine in favor of the wording of the amendment as voted upon in the House of Representatives December 22, 1914, and three opposed. Four members of Congress were present, the opinion of Representatives Webb of North Carolina, and Towner of Iowa being especially helpful. The bill will be introduced in Congress in a few days.

Prohibition for District of Columbia Sought

Tuesday, December 7, Senator Sheppard of Texas introduced a bill for absolute prohibition for the District of Columbia. The Senator declares he intends to press the measure, and that he expects the bill to become a law during the Sixty-fourth Congress. To secure such a victory, it will be necessary that pressure from home be brought to bear on Senators and Representatives, as upon these men coming from every state in the Union depends the success, or defeat, of all measures pertaining to the District of Columbia. The gaining of prohibition in the District of Columbia would be of incalculable value in helping on our battle for National Constitutional Prohibition. Telegrams, letters, resolutions, etc., should be sent to Senators and Representatives from every state.

The bill known as the Smith-Hughes bill, viz: for "Federal Censorship of Moving Picture Films," will be introduced at once.

Clean "Movies" Only Desired

Dr. Crafts sends to my desk the following letter:

> Permit me to quote from a letter of Carl Lammle, president of the Universal Film Company, printed as an advertisement in the nature of a prospectus of future policy, in Moving Picture Weekly of November 20, 1915, page B:
>
> —
>
> Several weeks ago I published a straight-from-the-shoulder talk entitled, "Which Do You Want?" asking the exhibitors of America to state whether they preferred clean, wholesome pictures, or "smutty" ones.
>
> Instead of finding that 95 per cent favored clean pictures, I discovered that at least half, and perhaps sixty per cent, want the pictures to be "risque," which is a French way of saying "smutty."
>
> Personally I am against them, but, if the demand is so overwhelmingly great, we will bow to the superior wisdom of the majority.
>
> —

Surely all thoughtful people, after reading the above, will see the need of showing Congress they are opposed to the policy above outlined, and demand clean pictures rather than "smutty" ones for their respective cities and towns.

Washington Headquarters Center of Activity

Our Washington Headquarters is like a hive of bees. Miss Gordon has been here for over a week. Mrs. Boole, Mrs. Beauchamp, Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Mr. and Mrs. Hoge, and Mrs. Livingston are here also. More are coming this evening and tomorrow for the great mass meeting to be held at Poli's Theater Sunday afternoon.

Miss Gordon has been busy with interviews, conferences, etc., among which was a very satisfactory half-hour with Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the Children's Bureau, who is intensely interested in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Saturday, December 11, 1915.

Colorado's Supreme Court Upholds Prohibition Law

MRS. ADRIANNA HUNGERFORD, President Colorado W. C. T. U.

December 6 was a history-making day in Colorado and the United States flag floated over a window in the state W. C. T. U. headquarters which bore the legend in bold black type,

"Denver to be Dry. Supreme Court knocks out Home Rule."

This is the happy ending of the contention made by Denver that it and other cities of two thousand or more people, were given absolute control of the liquor traffic by the home rule amendment regardless of the prohibition amendment to the state constitution. The question was taken to the supreme court, briefs were filed and oral arguments heard. The position of the city was sustained by the best lawyer the "wets" could secure. Attorney General Farrar appeared for the state. His able arguments and citations of court decisions were re-enforced by Judge John Campbell, ex-chief justice of the supreme court, and Hon. Halsted Ritter, lawyers employed by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the only ones representing the "drys." This decision gives an added joy to the making of plans for the New Year's festivities, at which time every section of the state will celebrate Colorado's first day of prohibition.

Co-operation is very real among the women's organizations of the state. The W. C. T. U. will assist the General Federation of Women's Clubs to initiate and elect an anti-capital punishment law and the state president is a member of the committee responsible for the petitioning. She is also one of the committee formed from men's and women's organizations, to give prompt and practical aid to officials in the enforcement of the red-light abatement and injunction law enacted last winter. The assistant superintendent of Legislation, Mrs. Jessie V. Bond, is working in connection with other societies for a city ordinance prohibiting mask balls in the municipal auditorium.

The state superintendent of Thrift, Mrs. Ida H. Taylor, is making an unusual record by calling on the banks of Denver in the interest of her department. She incidentally improves the opportunity to speak of this principle in connection with the dry regimé for the state. One day she visited eleven of these institutions and secured a goodly sum toward prizes for essay contests on this subject, which are being promoted in the schools of the state.

Our organization not only had one of the largest sections and the only float in the "All Women's Parade," but represented its principles by an attractive display in a gayly decorated booth where delightful hostesses made every one welcome during the four days of the Exposition of General Industry in the auditorium.

North Carolina's "Quart Limit" Law Upheld

The Supreme court in a decision rendered December 6 fully upholds the North Carolina quart liquor law and the action of Judge Daniels in refusing to issue a mandamus compelling the express companies to receive in Richmond, Va., and deliver in Raleigh, quarts of liquor within less intervals than fifteen days and in gallons or larger quantities when marked "For Personal and Private Use."

NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho

South Carolina

STATES THAT WILL VOTE IN 1916

Vermont	March
South Dakota	November
California	November
Nebraska	November
Montana	November
Michigan	November
Idaho	November
Alaska	November

Lansing (Mich.) Chamber of Commerce Commends Prohibition

By a unanimous vote of twelve directors of the Lansing (Mich.) Chamber of Commerce, that organization has gone on record as opposed to any measure which attempts to legalize the open saloon in Lansing. Eight directors who were absent at the time of the vote will be given an opportunity to declare their wishes before the resolution is finally passed, but it is expected that all eight will agree on the undesirability of licensing saloons. One sentence of the resolution is as follows:

"We believe the open saloon to be a menace to the moral and social welfare and a detriment to the business prosperity of our city."

Michigan Federation of Gleaners Endorses Prohibition

State-wide prohibition and equal suffrage were endorsed by the Michigan Federation of Gleaners at its recent meeting at Port Huron.

Philadelphia City Club Bars Intoxicants

The movement inaugurated by the City Club of Philadelphia some months ago to bar liquor from the clubhouse met with the unanimous approval of the organization at a recent meeting when eighty members voted in favor of an amendment prohibiting the sale or service of intoxicants on the club premises.

State Prohibition Bill for Delaware

A state-wide prohibition bill, it is announced, will be introduced early in the next session of the Delaware general assembly. A majority of all new members in both houses are pledged to support the measure.

Prohibition Law Sustained by Supreme Court of Washington

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

The decision of the supreme court of the state of Washington on the appeal made by the liquor men to test the validity of the dry law, although long delayed, has at last been announced, and, as was to be expected, the court upholds the will of the people, giving a decision in favor of the "drys" by a vote of six to two. One judge, who had been appointed to the bench since the case was argued, did not vote.

The appeal on behalf of the liquor interests was based on technicalities which of themselves seemed trivial, but which involved the validity of the constitutional amendment providing for the initiative, referendum and recall. Had the appeal been sustained immeasurable confusion throughout the state would have ensued, as other statutes are operating under the same law.

Another contention was that sufficient time for publicity before election was not given the matter and the people did not understand the question upon which they were voting.

However, the law is sustained by the highest state tribunal, and Washington will enter the dry column January 1, 1916. The majority given the law at the election, after a vigorous and enthusiastic campaign on the part of the "drys," and the use of all the usual tactics on the part of the liquor people, was almost 19,000. There was in reality no lack of publicity, the people even to the remotest hamlet being well informed on the issue, and the arguments pro and con. Now the governor of the state, Hon. Ernest Lister, the mayors of the principal cities, the sheriffs and prosecuting attorneys have publicly declared that the law will be rigidly enforced, and the city council of Seattle has enacted an ordinance providing in detail special measures for law enforcement in that city. That the liquor dealers themselves had little or no hope for the success of their appeal is evidenced by the fact that all the year they have been preparing for the inevitable, gradually readjusting their affairs to the changed conditions. Many have already entered other lines of activity. The liquor traffic is doomed. The sooner its friends recognize that fact, the better for all the people.

Southern California Teachers Desire Dry State

The twenty-third annual convention of the Teachers' Association of Southern California which met recently in San Diego, passed a resolution advocating state-wide prohibition for California in 1916.

State-Wide Prohibition Approved by Nebraska Farmers

The Nebraska Farmers' Congress went on record in favor of prohibition at a meeting in Omaha, December 8. After a heated debate, a resolution for prohibition was drawn to replace one submitted by the resolutions committee opposing prohibition. The amended resolution was adopted by a vote of 52 to 7.

THE SUFFRAGE SITUATION IN THE EAST

MRS. DEBORAH KNOX LIVINGSTON, National W. C. T. U. Franchise Superintendent

A few days ago one of my "anti" friends said to me, "You must feel keenly the overwhelming defeat of the suffrage cause at the recent election." "Defeat," I answered. "You must mean the overwhelming victory." I believe that I express the feeling of every suffragist in the east regarding the results of the election, when I say it was a great victory.

Can you think of any other question that is before the people of the United States today, unless it be the great question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, that could poll in four states upwards of a million votes in the first great battle? When we remember that the states in question are the strongholds of the liquor power, that they contain tremendous foreign populations, that in each state the mighty political machines were against us, it is not overstating the facts to say that it was a great victory.

No Cause for Discouragement

Another woman, in this instance a friend of the cause, asked, "Do you find the women disheartened?" Disheartened? No, indeed, on the contrary the women are more determined than ever to win, and to this end are dedicating time, strength, money, in a more definite way than ever before. No apparent defeat can stop their efforts, nor mar their enthusiasm, until the women of every state in the Union are enfranchised. "Rome was not built in a day." The campaigns of the past few months have been fraught with educational power. Literally millions of people have begun to think on this great question. Here in the east a new appreciation of democracy has been created. The government has been changed in the speech of people to our government. One of the most significant results of these campaigns has been the unifying of the interests of womanhood. The women of the privileged class have come to understand the needs of the women in the industrial class and these in turn have come to see the common needs of labor and capital.

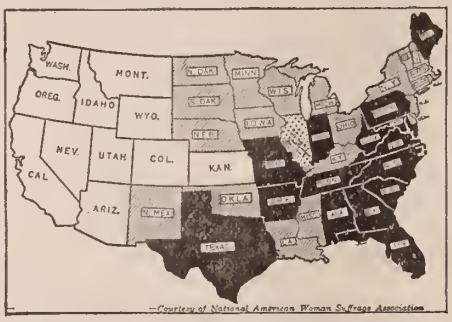
Democracy Spells Sisterhood

True democracy spells sisterhood as well as brotherhood, and the day is not far distant when women shall share with their brothers in the affairs of government as well as in the other relationships of life.

It is not the spirit of defeat, but the spirit of unquenchable desire, that characterizes the women of the east. Their banner is still flung to the breeze, and upon it is inscribed but one word—"Victory."

Already in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts new campaigns have been inaugurated, and the women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will not be found wanting in sharing the opportunities and bearing the responsibilities that such campaigns offer. No body of women is better equipped to battle for the ballot than is our own organization, and none has more to gain in the securing of votes for women.

To one who has studied the character of the opposition encountered in these recent campaigns the power of the organized opposition of the liquor interests is most manifest. In each of the four campaign states the liquorites came out openly and said that they would use all their influence to defeat suffrage. We naturally ask why they are so opposed, and the answer is found in the fact that in every suffrage state the women have used the ballot against the saloon and the brewery. Six of the twelve suffrage states are prohibition states, and in the other suffrage states the dry territory has been greatly increased since the women have been given the ballot.



SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:

ILLINOIS

States Which Vote in 1916:

IOWA (June 5) SOUTH DAKOTA
WEST VIRGINIA

States Which Vote in 1917:

ARKANSAS

Our anti-suffrage friends resent our implicating them with the liquor interests, but the facts are against them. Last spring there was a bill before the Connecticut legislature asking that women be given the right to vote on liquor licensing questions. This bill was supported by the W. C. T. U. and the Connecticut Woman Suffrage Association, and it was opposed by Mr. Anson T. McCook, who appeared as the spokesman of the Connecticut Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage.

Opposition of Liquor Men Makes Votes for Suffrage

In the Philadelphia Ledger for August 20 this editorial appeared: "Advocates of the suffrage amendment could ask for no stronger boost for their cause than that given at Reading this week, when the Pennsylvania Federation of Liquor Dealers definitely aligned itself against votes for women and resolved to give financial aid to the campaign of the anti-suffragists. It is a great gain for the fighters in any cause to have their opponents come out into the open. There are plenty of people who have no sympathy with the extremists on the anti-liquor side, but who bitterly resent the attempt of the liquor trade to dominate political affairs."

Early in the campaigns in New Jersey and Massachusetts, the liquor interests showed their opposition. The New Jersey liquor dealers' convention last spring voted to fight woman suffrage. We know that it was the liquor interests that defeated the amendments in New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Michigan and Ohio.

Suffrage States Grossly Misrepresented

United States Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma has said: "The effect of woman suffrage in the states which have adopted it has been grossly and maliciously misrepresented by the liquor interests. For myself, I would be for woman suffrage, if for no other reason, because of the enemies it has made."

Governor George A. Carlson of Colorado said at the Anti-Saloon League convention: "Take from the politics of our state and nation the insidious influence of the liquor interests and nation-wide equal suffrage would prevail within a year's time."

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the pure food expert, declares: "The greatest enemies of woman suffrage are the organized liquor dealers." If space permitted, much more testimony of the same character could be given to show that the greatest opposition to the granting of suffrage to women is found in the moneyed and political power of the liquor interests.

White ribbon comrades, do these facts have weight with you? Do you feel the challenge? Shall it not be the purpose of every W. C. T. U. member in the state where women do not possess the ballot to inform herself concerning this great movement, a movement upon whose page of history shine the names of Frances E. Willard, Mary A. Livermore and Lillian M. N. Stevens?

Victory is Sure

The right must ultimately win. It may be long in coming; prejudice, ignorance, even hate, may all combine to hinder, but right overcomes every hindrance, and the day will surely dawn in this republic when to every woman as to every man full justice will be given.

In a recent battle a French youth not more than nineteen was taken from the trenches so seriously wounded that only a few hours of life remained to him. The doctor and nurse performed the last ministrations of comfort to the dying boy. Suddenly his eyes opened and looking up into the face of the physician he asked, "Did I help?" The physician answered, "Yes, lad, you helped."

In the great battle for right, when love shall overcome hate, generosity shall supplant greed, and purity dispel lust, women will be found equal conquerors with the brothers. It will be a fine thing, then, in the hour of death we may look up into the face of the Great Physician and ask, "Did I help?" and with the light of His eye piercing our souls, receive this reply: "Yes, woman, you helped."

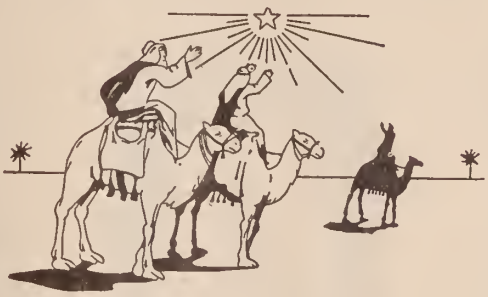
HOLLAND FAVORS WOMAN SUFFRAGE

The government of Holland has introduced a bill for the revision of its constitutional law. This measure proposes to extend the right of voting to all male citizens who have reached the age of twenty-three and are not excluded by certain disabilities, and also to women citizens of the same age.

LOVE IS KING OF THE WORLD

O, listen! Can you not hear it? The World has waited long
Since first from the midnight heavens fell ringing the angels' song;
And ages of sin and sorrow and conflict and doubt have passed,
But the night of darkness is nearly o'er and the morning dawns at last.
For wrath is great and strong is hate,
But the love of God is stronger;
And fierce is wrong and fear bides long,
But the love of God bides longer.
The arms of war shall be laid aside and the flags of war be furled,
For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken the word, and Love is the King of the World.

O, listen! Can you not hear it? The night of the World is gone
And out from the radiant heavens comes stealing God's Christmas dawn;
When brother clasps hands with brother and anger and strife are o'er,



When all mankind shall in justice dwell and learn of war no more.
For wrath is great and strong is hate,
But the love of God is stronger;
And fierce is wrong and fear bides long,
But the love of God bides longer.
The arms of war shall be laid aside and the flags of war be furled,
For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken the word, and Love is the King of the World.

O, listen! Can you not hear it? It falls from the sky afar
Like voices of angels singing 'neath Bethlehem's holy star;
Though ears are deaf with the tumult and eyes are dim with tears,
And hands are numb with doubting and hearts are sick with fears.
Though wrath is great and strong is hate,
Yet the love of God is stronger;
Though fierce is wrong and fear bides long,
Yet the love of God bides longer.
The arms of war shall be laid aside and the battle flags be furled,
For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken the word, and Love is the King of the World.

—Mary W. Vassar in Epworth Herald

HOW NEWFOUNDLAND JOINED THE PROHIBITION RANKS

MRS. EMMA H. HOWLAND, National W. C. T. U. Organizer and Lecturer

We are rejoicing in the recent glorious victory for prohibition in Newfoundland. Only those who understand the difficulties and opposition faced can realize fully what it means to have Newfoundland vote for prohibition. It was a hard won victory, and our brave white ribbon women of St. John's were an important and effective factor in the initiation and development of the work which brought such gratifying results.

As soon as the bill permitting a vote on the question was passed, with faith, courage and determination the W. C. T. U. women went systematically and steadily forward to win. They began with a great parade, the line of march being through the principal streets and up to Government House where Governor and Lady Davidson received the party and short addresses were made. One very striking feature of the parade was a large banner with the appeal, "For Our Sakes." This was borne by boys from the poorer section of the city, and a policeman remarked to one of the ladies, "Every one of those lads is from a drunkard's home. You could not present a better object lesson."

Great Audiences Attend W. C. T. U. Mass Meetings

The first great mass meeting of the campaign was arranged by the W. C. T. U., and its success was the best advertisement the cause could have had, as was evidenced by the fact that in the forty or more meetings held by the white ribboners in the city and outposts, great audiences were present and requests for more meetings were frequent. The people liked the campaign songs which were used at all the gatherings, "Some Glad Day" and the "White Ribbon Rally Song" being great favorites. Thousands of song leaflets were printed and it did our hearts good to see one by one, old and young, those for and those against prohibition fall in line as we sang, carried along on the tide of enthusiasm. We did not neglect the children; great rallies were arranged for them. Prizes were given for essays on prohibition and much pains was taken in training the boys and girls to sing and recite. They were a most effective and interesting feature in the great campaign. Whenever possible, as we visited the outposts the young folks were gathered in some hall or home and trained to help at the meeting to be held in the evening. The impressions made upon them, will, we believe, be of lasting benefit. Our meeting places were many and varied. Sometimes in a fine church or hall, again in a school room, vacant store or empty house, and more than once in a railroad station we sang and spoke to win votes for the cause.

Our mode of travel was by train, boat, auto, carriage and sometimes on foot as we walked up the tremendous hills on some of the rough and difficult roads. A friend remarked to me before I left home, "What are you going to do in Newfoundland for six or eight weeks? I should think you could cover it all in a week." One of the surprises to a newcomer, however, is the extent of the island, three hundred miles from east to west and about the same from north to south, with a large number of settlements, large and small, scattered along the coast and in the interior. With the difficulties of travel and the pioneer work necessary in many sections, Newfoundland presented problems at once startling and far from easy.

The cruel shadow of the war is over all the island. The majority of the young men have enlisted and many are now at the front fighting in the trenches. Mothers are, oh, so heroic, but in sorrow. Many a one is weeping for the son who will never return to the old home and now and again one sees the flag at half-mast in honor of a brave lad who has given his life for his country. The horror and cruelty of war was impressed upon us with greater force as we came very closely in touch with its victims who in agony of soul prayed for blessed peace.

Election Won Despite Absence of Soldiers and Lumbermen

The absence of so many fine men who no doubt would have voted for prohibition was a serious feature in the campaign as was likewise the loss of many votes of men who had gone into the distant lumber camps for the winter. For many years no nation claimed Newfoundland but in 1583 the English flag was raised and possession taken in the name of Queen Elizabeth. Its people now are descendants of English, Scotch and Irish. Its industries are fisheries, lumbering and mining. Large paper mills are in operation, the forests furnishing the trees for the pulp.

When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock there were about three hundred and fifty families living on this island. Now the population is 250,000. Many Newfoundlanders find their way to the States and in every place visited some one would speak of a son or daughter or some other relative or friend in the United States, or tell of having lived in the States. This was always a pleasant experience and brought the loved homeland near.

Victorious Campaign Methods

Literature and posters were used unsparingly. Mrs. J. M. Mitchell, the very efficient corresponding secretary, informed me that she had sent away in numerous packages 40,000 leaflets and hundreds of posters, all obtained from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill. Neal Dow declared that he sowed Maine knee-deep with literature to secure prohibition and it was almost the case in Newfoundland.

One song, "Newfoundland, My Newfoundland," to the tune of "Maryland, My Maryland," never failed to arouse enthusiasm and thrill the hearts of men and women. As we sang the words,

"We'll ne'er give up the fight at hand
Till no saloon is in thy land;
For God and home we firmly stand,
Newfoundland, My Newfoundland!"

a conviction seemed to possess our hearts that victory was sure—and so we were encouraged to press on.

We are happy to be able to report seven unions where a short time ago there was only the fine one at St. John's. We are looking to this army of three hundred or more white ribbon women to extend our work and to build up ideals making possible the enforcement of the splendid law going into effect January 1, 1917. Too much cannot be said in appreciation of our loyal comrades who have worked so well to make possible the good results reported. It will ever be a joy to the writer to have had the privilege of working with the Newfoundland comrades in this memorable campaign. Newfoundland with its rugged beauty, its numerous villages as picturesque and quaint as their names (such as Heart's Desire, Heart's Delight, Heart's Content, Come by Chance, Path's End, Step Aside, and many others as unique), Newfoundland with its warm-hearted, noble sons and daughters, its hospitable homes and kindly welcome, Newfoundland with its prohibitory law and its future full of promise seems not far away to the American white ribbon sisterhood.

THE CHRISTMAS HOPE

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Give us, O God, strength to live through these evil times; teach us to forgive those who hate us; give us such peace as will never be broken. Forgive us, deliver us. Remember, O Father, the peace and good-will which were promised with Thy Son."

Prayers like this, spoken or inarticulate, rise from thousands of petitioners in the churches of war-blasted Europe on Christmas morning. Then is played the wonderful Bach Christmas music, which for two hundred years has inspired the souls of worshipping Christians. The Temple of London, crowded to the doors, echoes with the marvelous melodies. The Thomas-Kirche, Leipsic, where Bach was cantor; the church of his birthplace, Eisenach; and hundreds of other churches in the composer's own country and in other lands, resound with the inspiring strains of his Christmas music, softening the sharp edge of hate and resentment, and lifting into higher moods those sorrowing ones who together worship in the same hope—"the new-born, the eternally re-born Hope of the World."

In all the warring nations, on Christmas morning, the same burden is brought to the church. It is the burden of a common calamity. Laid down in the prayer and in the Christmas music are the sad harmonies of a collective sorrow.

It has been appropriately pointed out that never are the opponents drawn closer together than by the common feeling of Christmas. For "a symbol turns the simple fact they can singly know into the myriad applications they can together feel." And the Christ Child, whose coming (orthodox or unorthodox) they all celebrate, was not born once but is born always, over and over again. "He lies in every cradle—the incarnate, unblemished Hope of every land and every generation. And He is the Redeemer because every new life, like every new day after the winter solstice, like the wheat quickening in the winter furrow, is the redemption of our Present by our Future, the deliverance by our Hope from our Despair."

The inborn unity of a common humanity springs up spontaneously under the sunshine of the world's universal celebration—Christmas. See it in the truces on the battlefields (unofficial and brief, but still truces), when opponents for short periods change into friends and greet each other with Christmas cheer. See it in the kindness exercised towards prisoners of war. The different governments happily do not regard as contraband the great quantities of packages which come from home to prisoners of war. The French government delivers Christmas gifts to the German prisoners and the German government, it is understood, performs a similar courtesy. For the most part, Christmas gifts to prisoners of war are useful things like blankets, underwear, and woolen socks. In England, the German military prisoners and civilians in the concentration camps have not only Christmas trees and gifts from home but also from wealthy Germans in England, and the German Y. M. C. A. and the English friends pay special attention to the prisoners of war.

The observance of Christmas is to the warring nations a reminder to forget—to forget war's cruelties and recriminations; and a reminder to remember only that the Christ child has been born once more.

It is good to recall at this time that enmity is not eternal; it dies and is forgotten. Hatred is accidental, changeable, sterile, contrary to the right trend of life. But peace and goodwill to men on earth are forever born anew, because born of the undying needs of our common humanity.

Nationalism involving enmity towards other nations must die, being opposed to the common good. But internationalism, the true Christ spirit, must prevail, because it unites in the same hope and trust, the kneeling nations acknowledging the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

A FATHER'S CHRISTMAS GIFT

My commuting companion yesterday morning was a rich man—his name good for more thousands than some of us have tens. So, when he asked if I'd care to see what he was going to give his ten-year-old boy for Christmas, and took out his gold-rimmed card-case, naturally my first guess was a check.

"My, but I'd like to be able to start my boy off with a fat savings account," I thought to myself.

So you may imagine my surprise when I read on the slip of paper these words:

> For one year from date, I promise to give my son, ——, one hour of my time every day, with two hours on Sunday. And I promise that this time shall be solely his, without interference for business or pleasure of any other sort, and that I shall regard it as a prior engagement each day.

His name was signed at the bottom.

And I wonder what that boy will think and say on Christmas morning when he reads this paper!

If he is an average boy, probably he will not know just what to make of it. As an average boy with an average father, his first thought may be to question the value of such a gift.

For we American fathers—as a rule—give our boys and girls so little of our time, and then mostly fag-ends, that none could blame them for doubting the worth of an agreement of this sort.

Yet, before many days have passed, this particular boy shall have learned that his father could have given nothing quite so fine.

For this man is the most charming of companions. His range of knowledge is wide. He has the faculty of entering into things enthusiastically—that is one reason for his success in business. And he understands human nature.

His Christmas present is so worth while that I want to pass along what he said about it.

"Would you like to know what made me think of it?" he asked.

"Well, the other day a young fellow came to me for a job. I had known his father years ago, and they were a fine family. Now this son is down and out. He looked as if he'd been drinking. And evidently, he had no funds.

"When I asked how he had come to such a pass, 'and with such a father' I added, he half broke down.

" 'My father must have been a fine man,' he said, 'but, unfortunately for me, I only knew it through others. He always was too busy to pay much attention to me. As a matter of fact, I never knew him as a companion, a friend or anything but a man who paid the bills.'

"As I sat listening to that poor chap, I suddenly realized that he was painting my picture, too. I've been 'too busy' many a time to take an interest in the things brought to me by my boy. I never have been a companion to him. We're not friends now! Think of that!

"Think of a man neglecting the most important business in which he can engage,—the proper raising of a child or children to help strengthen humanity and carry on the world's work! It all came over me like a flash, and I know I must have reddened with shame. And I gave the fellow a job and told him he'd given me the best job I'd ever had. He didn't say anything, but I think he understood.

"So, you see, I'm going to put it as a gift, though it's the highest sort of a duty. And really, I ought to make it more than an hour a day, considering the years I've been neglecting this biggest of opportunities!

"Do you know, I feel like hiring a hall and inviting as many fathers as could crowd in and begging them to join hands with me in this sort of thing. Here I've been all these years, rushing and working and worrying at a work any ordinarily intelligent and industrious man could do—and paying the least possible attention to a work no other man in the world can do but myself—being my boy's father!

"Now, I'm going to try to make up to him—and to myself—what we've lost. Already I've arranged matters at the office so as to get away an hour earlier in the afternoon. It may decrease the profits a little, but even if it should cut them in half, I'd rather leave my boy the remembrance of a father who was his comrade than a whole mint of money.

"Anyway, the more you have to do with money, the more you understand how powerless it is to take the place of things that can't be seen or held or stored away, —except in the mind or the heart!"

Neither of us said anything for a minute or so. Then he asked me if I agreed with his idea.

"Do I agree with it! Why, if every father in this land should give his children the same sort of Christmas gift—and live up to it, this would be the best Christmas that ever came along."

And nearly every father could!

Some do already, thank God!

—Leigh Mitchell Hodges in Philadelphia North American.

Merry will be that Christmas and Happy that New Year which shall mark the passing from this land of the Legalized Liquor Traffic.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, December 16, 1915

GOAL FOR 1916—SIXTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Indianapolis, Indiana, December 8-13.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

THE UNION SIGNAL wishes all its subscribers and readers a very happy Christmas. May they one and all be blest not only in the bounties which they shall receive but in the Christmas cheer, goodwill and happiness which they shall give to others. Although our hearts are burdened as we think of the sufferings of our comrades across the ocean—sufferings which we are powerless to alleviate—we thank God for the manifestation of His wonderful power this past year in using human agencies "to turn upside down the way of the evil doers," and enabling the citizens of five commonwealths to outlaw from their borders the liquor traffic. We praise His holy name for the two recent victories in Colorado and Washington—the decisions of the supreme courts of these states sustaining the prohibition laws for which the people of these respective states voted by large majorities.

THE RIGHT GIFT

Remember
This December,
That love weighs more than gold!
Help us spread the news to young and old;
Friendship bought and sold
Leaves the giver cold.
The right gift
Is the bright gift,
The kind thought and cheer;
Send your loving heart,
That's the greatest part,
So will Christmas crown all the year!
—Josephine Daskam Bacon.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION DAY ENTHUSIASTICALLY OBSERVED AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

National Constitutional Prohibition Day was enthusiastically observed in Washington, D. C., at a mass meeting held Sunday afternoon in Poli's Theater. An audience of 2,500 filled the auditorium and hundreds were turned away unable to secure seats. Fourteen state W. C. T. U. organizations were represented and twenty-four members of the National Executive Committee were present. In the audience were many members of Congress and prominent citizens of Washington. The presiding officer, Miss Anna A. Gordon, was introduced by Hon. Thomas Sterling, United States Senator from South Dakota. Mrs. Mary Harris Armor's address on "The Triumphant Progress Toward Constitutional Prohibition" was received with the enthusiasm which always greets her presentation of the subject. A unique feature of the program was a forceful address by Dr. Mary Stone, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of China, also head physician Danforth Memorial Hospital, Kiukiang, China. Lillian M. N. Stevens' Proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition was read by Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, general secretary of the Young People's Branch of the National W. C. T. U. The children and young people furnished spectacular touches to the program, the Loyal Temperance Legion, under the direction of Mrs. Edna Proctor, District L. T. L. secretary, giving a Young Campaigners for Prohibition demonstration, and the members of the District Y. P. B., under the direction of Mrs. Theresa A. Williams, District Y. P. B. secretary, representing the nineteen prohibition states. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, and Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary, responded to introductions, as did the members of the National W. C. T. U. Executive Committee. Inspiring music was furnished by the Trinity Epworth Choir of sixty voices, and a beautiful message in song was given by Mr. William E. Braithwaite.

This meeting was one of many that were held at the same hour in every state from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the common theme being National Constitutional Prohibition. The sentiment created and the enthusiasm generated at these gatherings cannot fail to give a wonderful impetus to the movement for "a Prohibition Nation in 1920."

COMMUNITY CHRISTMAS MOVEMENT

America lacking in idealism? America a land that cares supremely for the almighty dollar? The impeachment may be denied in a hundred ways, but the remarkable growth of the community Christmas idea is sufficient proof of its falsity. In three short years the community Christmas movement, termed by some one, "the most delightful innovation of the century," has sprung into popularity. Last year hundreds of cities, towns and villages took up the idea and worked it out to suit the needs of their own localities. At a certain Indiana town, a good-natured policeman impersonated Santa Claus, distributing gifts to the children, especially those who had no assurance of receiving presents from their own relatives. In Toledo, Ohio, the municipal Christmas tree was formally deeded to the children and nearly two thousand youngsters knelt in the snow and prayed that the spirit of Christmas might live forever. Marshalltown, Iowa, had three hundred trees ablaze with Christmas candles, and festooned the streets with evergreens and electric lights. In Boston, Milwaukee, Baltimore and Cleveland the Christmas carol custom was revived, and tuneful groups armed with lanterns went around from house to house singing, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth."

The community Christmas custom is in itself a beautiful one, giving pleasure to thousands, but the deeper significance of the movement has in it a promise for the future. The true community Christmas spirit will not cease its ministrations with Christmas week. Having experienced the joy of service for others, if rightly directed, it will seek to find expression in a definite campaign to rid the city, the state and the nation of every community evil that spreads pitfalls in the way of youth, that poisons the civic atmosphere and that flourishes at the expense of the home and the family life.

MINNEAPOLIS INCIDENT AN ARGUMENT FOR STATE AND NATIONAL PROHIBITION

The corrupt and fraudulent methods used by the liquor interests to prevent honest elections are matters of common knowledge. The case of the city of Minneapolis is the latest incident of the kind brought to the attention of the public. The statement very recently issued by the chairman of the executive committee of the Citizens League, which conducted the county option campaign for Hennepin county, shows that an army of men voted from vacant lots, from empty houses, in the names of men who are not living, and under fictitious names and addresses, and that blocks of voters were carried from one voting place to another in auto-loads. Naturally the committee draws the conclusion that if an honest election could have been held Minneapolis would have been placed in the dry column. "It is the old, old story," a former mayor of Minneapolis is reported to have said when the facts were made known to him. "We never did and never will have an honest election and a fair count so long as the liquor traffic is in existence." These same tactics must be met in almost every election where liquor is an issue, and too often lead to a defeat of righteous measures. Because of these things the method of capturing the United States town by town, county by county, and even state by state, is and always will be slow and difficult. Some one has well said that the reason the drink question is found to be at the foundation of all social and political reform is because the saloon has organized and in large part created a purchaseable vote whose proportions have alarmed even American optimism. All of which proves that the very best and perhaps the only way to meet such corrupt methods is to concentrate our efforts on the securing of an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for the total extinction of the legalized, commercialized liquor traffic, and by so doing destroy the corrupt machinery which to so large an extent is able to control and manipulate elections.

MANCHURIA PROHIBITION TERRITORY

Russia's banishment of liquor has driven vodka from the trains and stations of the Trans-Siberian railway and as a consequence a large part of Manchuria becomes prohibition territory. An Associated Press correspondent reports the situation as follows: "Being the chief artery of business, the Russian railway is the center of most activities in Central and Northern Manchuria. In many of the smaller places the railway station cafe and bar are the only social center. Before the war vodka was sold at all stations and in the dining cars. Now the patrons of the railway refreshment stands must confine their drinking to non-alcoholic beverages.

"At present the railway is used primarily as a route for war supplies and troops, and the successful enforcement of the no-liquor regulation is of such vital importance that Russian officials are very alert. Vodka is smuggled occasionally into railway property notwithstanding all precautions, but railway employes, passengers and troops in transit across Manchuria have little opportunity to obtain it. The military is so completely in charge of the railway property that liquor smugglers soon come to grief.

"Absolute sobriety on the part of railway employes is vital in this time when every moment's delay is serious to the Russian army. The despatching of munition and troop trains on a single-tracked line requires the greatest care. Sending these trains from Vladivostok to Moscow is much more difficult than it would be to send them from European Russia to Vladivostok.

"As troops are in training at many points along the Trans-Siberian line and thousands of new recruits are constantly moving westward from Vladivostok, Harbin and other points in the east, the no-liquor provision is very essential to proper morals. Frequently it requires thirty days for a troop train to move the length of the Trans-Siberian line. Trains are delayed for hours at sidings, waiting for the passage of rush shipments of ammunition. Time hangs heavily on the hands of recruits packed into freight cars. Hungry soldiers besiege the refreshment places in the Manchurian stations, and if liquor were available trouble would doubtless follow."

DECISION ON WEBB-KENYON LAW EXPECTED SOON

A decision on the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon law by the United States Supreme Court is expected soon. It is said that a test case will come before this court about February 21, being an appeal of the case of the Clark Distillery Company against the Western Maryland Railroad Company and the Adams Express Company for refusal to accept shipments of whisky to West Virginia.

NO MORE CIGARET ADVERTISEMENTS

Henceforth no cigaret advertisements, with the exception of those for which contracts are already signed, will appear in the columns of the magazines published by the Curtis Publishing Company. This was for many years the policy of these magazines, but through over-persuasion a few such advertisements were accepted. The management is now convinced that this lapse of former high principles was a mistake, and hence cigarets will again be excluded.

BRITISH COLUMBIA WILL VOTE ON PROHIBITION

Premier McBride of British Columbia has recently notified the people's prohibition movement that a plebiscite regarding prohibition will be submitted to the electorate at the next provincial election, and that as well as embracing the direct question for and against total prohibition, it will contain other questions relative to the issue. This vote will not be for a definite measure which will become a law, but is merely an expression of public opinion for the guidance of the government. The premier also said he favored restricting the hours during which liquor might be sold for the period of the war.

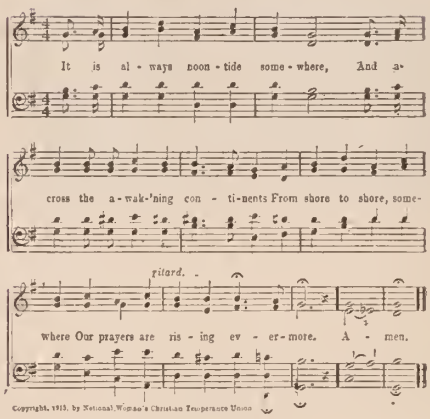
LIQUOR MEN SUBDUED AT CONVENTION OF AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Before the convention of the American Federation of Labor, recently held in San Francisco, there was a demand by the liquor interests or organizations identified with them in some way, that the American Federation of Labor line up with the liquor men in their fight against prohibition. Mr. Charles Stelzle, writing in the last issue of The Continent, says that the atmosphere of the convention was so decidedly unfriendly to such action that the liquor men, to use Mr. Stelzle's words, "were easily persuaded to drop the entire question." "Throughout the convention," continues Mr. Stelzle, "the liquor men were strangely quiet, refraining from taking part in any of the discussions, for fear of arousing the enmity of anybody whose opinions might be controverted. They did try to keep out of the convention the fraternal delegate from the Federal Council of Churches, but the credentials committee would not accede to their request, and they did not dare bring the question to the floor of the convention. A mass meeting for the purpose of discussing the relation of labor to the saloon was held on the first Sunday afternoon of the convention, and was attended by about 1,000 persons. With the use of government statistics and logic which appealed to the workers, facts were presented which battered down the arguments of the liquor men that the abolition of the saloon would create a labor panic. The position of the liquor men in the convention that labor must stand for the things which accompany the liquor traffic was refuted. The statement that the labor men in England had not only organized a labor officials' temperance fellowship with which the best leaders were identified, but that the bartenders, brewery workers and other workers in the liquor industry were not considered worth organizing by the British Trades Congress, had a marked effect on the audience."

WINES OMITTED FROM OREGON STATE BANQUET

A leading liquor journal in commenting on the Oregon state banquet at the Panama-Pacific Exposition spoke of the intoxicating beverages that were included in the menu. When the matter was brought to the attention of Governor Withycombe by the president of the Oregon W. C. T. U. he replied that "there were no wines or other spirituous liquors used on the table the night of the banquet." "This was perhaps the first state banquet given during the Exposition where wine was excluded," added the governor.

Time of Prayer—Noontide



Copyright, 1915, by National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

Are you willing to believe that love is the strongest thing in the world—stronger than hate, stronger than evil, stronger than death—and that the Blessed Life which began in Bethlehem nineteen hundred years ago is the image and likeness of the Eternal Love? Then you can keep Christmas, and if you keep it for a day, why not always? But you can never keep it alone.—Henry van Dyke.

MRS. FRY BEREAVED

Rev. James D. Fry, husband of Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, passed on to the larger life in the world beyond on December 9. For some time Mr. and Mrs. Fry, who was for so many years National corresponding secretary and managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, have made their home in Alhambra, California, and the funeral service was held there. During Mr. Fry's long years of successful pastoral work as a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the states of Ohio, Minnesota and Illinois, and as a college professor, he was a devoted and enthusiastic champion of the temperance cause, and an honorary member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to which his gifted wife has given so much of her life. In this time of her bereavement the tender sympathy of the white ribbon sisterhood goes out to Mrs. Fry.

SEEK FOR SUNLIGHT

It is easy, in our troubled moods, to ask for good cheer as a man asks healing for a painful wound. But that is a poor view of opportunity. We are to seek for sunlight that we ourselves may shine. Christlikeness is not in character, if it be not also in companionship with men. For this is Christlike more than all—to bring to others the knowledge of the Fatherhood of God by the witness of good cheer in common, vexed and tempted human life on earth.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, president of the West Washington W. C. T. U., arrived in Evanston last week. She may be addressed at 1634 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

DECEMBER 23—Crusade Day.

SUPERINTENDENTS

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

MRS. MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

What is the goal set for 1916? 60,000 new members. It will mean effort on your part, dear helpers in the local unions, if this desire of Mother National is realized.

For several years the fact has been recognized that the states most greatly honored on Jubilee Night were those whose unions had increased their membership through the department of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days. Although several reports came too late to be included in the National Report for the year, the department made a splendid record.

That the Social department may have a large share in the ingathering of new workers,—it would be well to start a membership contest at one of your parlor meetings to continue at least three months, and close with a social, when the losing side should entertain the winning side with music, charades or games, taken from the leaflet entitled "Temperance Served in Social Shapes," or "Evening Pastimes."

Refreshments should be a feature of the occasion.

Crusade Day and Peace Day are to be observed in December. January 3, the birthday of "The Great Mother," Madam Willard, will soon be here. Let us remember the day some time during the month. The program that was prepared last year, and which is particularly adapted for use in mother's meetings, might be utilized at any time by the local unions. The life sketch of Madam Willard, which gives many of her views in regard to the training of young children, should be in the home of every white ribboner. Price, only 10 cents. Send for it, read it and loan it to some friend who has not identified herself with our organization. I shall have ready, I trust, by the first of February, the revised life sketch of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, which may be used at the March meetings. Do not forget to gain subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL. Remember March 20, the birthday of our prohibition leader, General Neal Dow. Particularly at this time when we are working for National Constitutional Prohibition, should we observe the day by reading the Proclamation of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens; by prohibition speeches and by scattering knee-deep the prohibition literature to be obtained at the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.

On April 14, Y. P. B. Day, we shall wish to honor the birthday of our first leader of young people's work, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes. Her interest in the young men and women is as great as when she was actively engaged in the work. Send for her life sketch. Price, 10 cents.

May the year 1916, through your wise, tactful endeavors, bring to the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Indianapolis, Indiana, a greater membership of devoted workers. In this way we shall be enabled to enjoy a greater Jubilee Night.

212 E. Seventh Street, Plainfield, N. J.

CO-OPERATION TEMPERANCE AND MISSIONS ACCORDING TO LAW

The notable and noted parliamentarian of the W. C. T. U., in a lesson on "Suspension of the Rules," "Consideration," "Reconsideration," and the "Previous Question," takes up our missionary and temperance work in "Drill No. 3"—a drill to both enliven and instruct. A member rises to say:

Madam President—Miss N. I move that the hour be given to the consideration of missionary work.

President—It is moved and seconded that the hour be given to the consideration of missionary work.

Madam President — Mrs. W. Why should the W. C. T. U. specially consider missionary work? I am totally opposed to the motion. I believe in adhering to our own lines of work. This is not a missionary society; it is a W. C. T. U.—

Madam President, Madam President.

President—One at a time, ladies. The Chair recognizes Miss O.

Miss O.—Just a question, Madam President. Is not missionary work one of our own lines? How can we co-operate with missionary societies if we know nothing of their work; in other words, if we know nothing of missionary plans and purposes and facts and figures?

President—The Chair is sorry that we do not all understand that we have a department specially labeled "Co-operation with Missionary Societies," and another known as "World's Missionary Fund."

Mrs. W.—Well, I must say that all this is news to me, but all the same I now object to the consideration of the question.

President—The member is out of order. She was not recognized, and, besides, it is too late to "object to the consideration of the question." That motion must be made before there is a word of debate.

Madam President—Miss N. If it is in order I should like to give the—

Madam President—I rise to a point of order.

President—State your point of order.

Two ladies addressed the Chair before Miss N. Why was Miss N. the one recognized?

President—Because the motion before us was made by Miss N., and she has not yet spoken to the question. Miss N. has the floor.

Miss N. As I began to say, if I may be allowed, I should like to give one or two statistical facts, just to prove how much is involved in these departments and that we shall not be likely to co-operate unless we understand just how much it means. (She reads from a clipping). The number of adult baptisms (during 1912) in the American and Canadian missions was 46,000 and in the combined societies of the world 115,710. The number of foreign missionaries in the entire Christian world is 24,092 with 135,954 native helpers. Is it not worth while to reach the vast numbers to whom they minister with distinctively temperance teaching? Is it not also worth while to have a "World's Fund" for this purpose?

Madam President—Mrs. W. As a rule white ribboners belong to the missionary societies of their respective churches and so contribute to the general fund. Why then set up a special fund?

Madam President—Mrs. H. I am much interested in these departments and as Miss N. seems to be so well up, can she give us the amount contributed last year? (Miss N. refers to her notes.) By the American and Canadian societies, $18,535,000 and in the whole world $38,563,000, but not any of this for distinctively temperance teaching.

Madam President—I am just as much interested in the departments under discussion as any one present, but this is a parliamentary lesson; I therefore move "the previous question."

President—Shall the main question be now put? All in favor say aye; all opposed no.

Mrs. K.—Madam President, I tried to get the floor before you took the negative; you gave no opportunity for remarks.

President—You cannot remark on the motion for the previous question, and if carried you cannot further remark on the original motion. Will some one tell us the effect of the previous question?

Mrs. H.—It forces an immediate vote.

President—Correct. Once more—all in favor rise; all opposed stand. The ayes have it.

Madam President—Mrs. M. Why did the Chair call for a rising vote?

President—Because it requires a two-thirds vote to carry the motion and the Chair was anxious to save time. All in favor of the original motion which is that the hour be given to the discussion of missionary work—

Madam President—Mrs. Q. May I just say—

President—You cannot say anything. You yourselves have said there should be no more talk. All in favor of the motion say aye; opposed no. The motion is lost.

The rest of the drill is more parliamentary than missionary, but we feel honored and helped by being counted in as one of Mrs. Benjamin's object lessons.

DR. LOUISE C. PURINGTON

REMINISCENCES OF CRUSADE DAYS

It is fitting that in the month made sacred by the heroic "pioneering" of the foremothers of the temperance movement our thoughts should turn back to that fascinating chapter in our history—the Woman's Crusade. Frances E. Willard was wont to refer to Hillsboro, Ohio, as "the cradle of the Crusade" and to Washington Court-house as "the crown of the Crusade." The story of the meeting of the little company of Christian women in Hillsboro December 23, 1873, under the leadership of "Mother Thompson" and their visit to the saloons of the town to pray and plead with the liquor dealers, is familiar to our readers. One recalls how Dr. Dio Lewis of Boston was the instrument in the hands of God in starting the movement, and his story of the origin of it: "There was trouble at our house when I was a small boy," said Dr. Lewis. "My father had forgotten everything but drink. There were five of us small people. Our mother with her own hands provided for us all. She earned and cooked our food, cut and made our clothes; in brief, was father, mother, general provider, cook, housekeeper and nurse. In addition to all this, she was the victim of abuse and violence. Often she would cry out in the presence of her children, and sometimes when she could bear it no longer, she would drag her weary limbs into the garret. We knew what she went there for and listened. Sometimes we could hear her say, 'O God, help me, help me, help me. O Lord, how long, how long.' Then she would keep very still for a while. When she came down to us again her cheeks were wet, but her face shone like an angel's. She taught us to pray. We grew up with a very large estimate of the power of prayer. . . . . There were five drinking places in our little manufacturing town, and numbers of the men who worked in the mills wasted the means of their families' support in tippling. At length a number of the young boys were made drunk one evening at these places, and then the women rose in their despair and cried unto God for help. It entered into the minds of some of them to suggest prayer and personal intercession with the dram-sellers and in their desperation, this method was adopted. A band of ladies, the praying mothers of the place, stood up, and with clasped hands, forming a circle which just reached around the little church, pledged each other before God never to give up their labors and prayers until the last drinking place in the town was closed. They sang, prayed and pleaded with each dram-seller and in a very short time these dealers had yielded and were pledged to sell no more. All this took place in the early thirties."

Because of the sad experience in his own family, Dr. Dio Lewis in his lectures urged upon the women the potency of their prayers in the saloons. Reaching Fredonia, N. Y., in December, 1873, he made his appeal and one hundred of the women responded. After they had given up their saloon-visiting, they turned their attention to relieving the destitution of the drinkers' families. Later Dr. Lewis spoke at Jamestown, N. Y., and the women were moved in a similar manner by his appeal. Especially noteworthy was the result of his lecture in Washington Court-house a few days later. "With the enthusiasm and push entirely characteristic of the people of Washington C. H.," writes Mrs. M. G. Carpenter in her "Origin of the Woman's Temperance Crusade," "the whole community was aroused to make a success of this plan. The ministers were at the helm, guiding and enthusing; the business men were in full accord; the women felt that they had the moral and financial support of the best element and never faltered or wavered; dram-sellers were awed and subdued; constant reports of what was taking place were sent to the Cincinnati dailies, which circulated in three states; delegates were sent out to inaugurate the plan in other towns; the ministers were in demand to instruct other communities. By this means neighboring towns, and soon whole states, were enthused. Christian women were encouraged to follow the example of Dr. Lewis' mother, and this influence over minds that had been providentially prepared, this irresistible breath of the Spirit, which swept like a tornado from town to town—constituted the great Woman's Temperance Crusade."

PROGRAM FOR DECEMBER 23
CRUSADE DAY

Music—Crusade Hymn, "Give to the Winds thy Fears"

Scripture Reading — Crusade Psalm, Psalm 146

Reading—Reminiscences of Crusade Days (UNION SIGNAL, Dec. 16)

Music—"Some Glad Day." (See "Temperance Songster")

Paper—"Crusading in Legislative Halls." Brief review of legislative victories of the past year, showing status of prohibition at the present time. (See "Prohibition's Onward March.")

Reading—Lillian M. N. Stevens' Proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition

Short Address—"Crusading in the United States Congress." Brief history of the resolution proposing an amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition, as introduced by ex-Congressman Hobson and Senator Sheppard, the hearing last winter in the House of Representatives, and the efforts now being made to secure action by Congress

Aaronic Benediction

THE POWER OF THE WHITE RIBBON

MARGARET J. BILZ, National W. C. T. U. Organizer

Oh, the power of the white ribbon. May it ever remain to smooth the path of the organizer and make easier her going. In my own particular case it has proved a friend in very truth in many instances, the following one coming freshly to mind:

I was on my way to Sunday appointments in M—, when the car in which I was traveling to reach my destination, an interurban, became disabled, causing me to reach the junction where I was to take the train for M— an hour and a half late. I found that the only train I could take that day or the next was a fast one which made no stops, although upon inquiry I learned that it was possible permission to stop at M— might be granted if the superintendent were appealed to by wire. Without a moment's hesitation I made a dash for the depot six blocks away to send a message. Down railroad tracks and through alleys I sprinted only to find the train already in. "No time to telegraph," I mentally commented. I searched frantically for the conductor of the train and finally located him in the locomotive, where he was in conversation with the engineer. "Oh," I pleaded, "will you not stop your train at M—? I have a message for the people there Sunday morning. It is a very small place and everybody will come from in and out of town and your train is the only one I can take, and here I am, through no fault of my own, belated."

Seeing no response written on his face, with tenacity of purpose I added, "I represent the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Here is my white ribbon." Quickly the conductor looked at the engineer: "Shall we do it, Frank?" he asked. "She's a W. C. T. U.-er." The engineer nodded his head with a kindly look toward me and I soon found myself speeding away on the fast express.

As the conductor came for my fare he explained: "You see, we never stop, but I have a wife and two daughters,—I had a mother,—and I can sympathize with one who wants to get to a place for such work. That's the way I look at it!"

Thinking the train would barely slow down when M— was reached I made preparations to get off in a hurry, but arrived at my destination, to my surprise the conductor from one car and the brakeman from another, each with lanterns, came to my assistance and the "flyer" stood still while the conductor escorted me in the darkness to the station, roused the sleeping agent, introduced me, and requested that I be well cared for. The next morning I was presented to my audience as the white ribboner who made a train stop when men of note and renown had failed. My host and hostess informed me that only two weeks before, returning from a winter in Florida, they had pleaded in vain for this accommodation.

THE VERY TIME

When Powerful Food Is Most Needed

The need of delicate yet nutritious food is never felt so keenly as when a convalescent gets a set back on account of weak stomach. Then is when Grape-Nuts shows its power, for it is a most scientific and easily digested food.

"About a year ago," writes a Kansas woman, "my little six-year-old niece left the invigorating and buoyant air of Kansas, where all her life she had enjoyed fairly good health, to live in Ohio. She naturally had a change of diet and of course a change of water, and somehow she contracted typhoid fever.

"After a long siege her case seemed hopeless, doctors gave her up, and she was nothing but skin and bones, couldn't eat anything and for weeks did not know even her father or mother. Her parents, in trying to get something delicate and nourishing that she could eat, finally hit upon Grape-Nuts food and it turned out to be just the thing.

"She seemed to relish it, was soon conscious of her surroundings and began to gain strength so rapidly that in a short time she was as well, playful and robust as if she had never been ill.

"We all feel that Grape-Nuts was the predominating factor in saving the sweet little girl's life."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

AN UNSOPHISTICATED MADONNA

MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY, Alhambra, Calif.

In Two Parts—Part I

A Tale of the Christmas Time

"Don't have any back talk with men. Men are all drunkards and liars. Hurry right home." Having given these instructions to her daughter for the hundredth time, Mrs. Stark would stand on her porch and watch until the little girl returned from her errand down the village street.

Gussie Stark was quite unlike her mother. She had a sensitive mouth and eyes full of wonder and was as shy as a partridge. Her yellow hair was always brushed firmly back from her broad forehead and tied with a bit of carpet rag.

Mrs. Stark was the town weaver. She was accused of being strictly honest to the extent of giving plus inches to the yard. But the milk of human kindness seemed to have turned to gall in her bosom, save what she reserved for her daughter. She had had experiences, but no one knew what they were. Perhaps some one had sinned.

When Mrs. Stark had worn herself out banging the loom, she gave up her business, sold her little property and bought a tiny house-boat, into which she moved her belongings. In a few years, broken with the vexations of life, she had passed away, leaving Gussie alone; not, however, without many precepts as to her future conduct, and the use of a small amount of money which she put into her hands at the last moment. The chief injunction, however, was: "Have nothing to do with men. They are all drunkards and liars."

Joe Turley was the only man from whom Mrs. Stark had ever accepted a favor. He often lengthened or shortened the ropes which held the little craft to the shore at bow and stern, as the river rose or fell. When he was not rafting, Joe was a roustabout on the wharf-boat, near which the house-boat was moored. But, often as he had served Mrs. Stark, he had never set foot on her little craft.

After Mrs. Stark's death, Joe went on in much the same way, with an occasional word to Gussie as to how she was getting along. It came about finally that when Gussie seated herself in her splint-bottom chair out on deck to catch the evening breeze floating up the river, Joe would curl up on a chip on the beach, hug his knees and talk at Gussie, for the girl had never learned the art of conversation.

At such times, while the river bank loomed up black behind him and only a few lights twinkled across the river, Joe prophesied dire calamities if Gussie continued to live alone. Then scared and trembling, Gussie would escape into her hot cabin, put up the chain at the door, snap the padlock and leave Joe alone on his chip.

Things went from bad to worse with Gussie. The Ladies' Aid of the village church had buried Mrs. Stark, and a committee came occasionally to see if Gussie were in need, and Mr. Jones, a well-to-do coal dealer, supplied the little cabin with the means of warmth.

"Good morning, Gussie. How's everything?" said the energetic chairman of the Aid's relief committee one morning. "You're still hanging to this old boat, I see."

"It's all I have, Miss Smith, and I get along very well," replied Gussie.

"Well, I tell you, Gussie, this thing can't go on forever. It ain't the thing for a young girl like you to be a-living all alone—especially down on the river. There's men hanging round that wharf-boat all the time and on the rafts that come along, and some time you'll be drug off and sold into the traffic for girls. It ain't any uncommon thing nowadays for a woman to be snatched right up and took from her own dooryard and nobody never hear of her again—'specially if she's young and good looking."

Gussie's eyes grew large, and dropping into a chair, she replied in an awe-stricken voice, "Mother always told me that I mustn't trust them and she said never to let any man come on this boat, and I haven't."

"Well, I hear Joe Turley is hanging round. He may be very well meaning, but nobody knows nothing about him. He is likely a drunken scamp."

"Yes'm."

"Now, I tell you, Gussie, we've been thinking that you'd better go to the poor-house, anyhow. You'd have plenty to eat, and be safe."

The horror in Gussie's face stilled Miss Smith's tongue. "Why, Miss Smith," she said, "mother always said she'd go to her grave before she'd stay out there among idiots and raving maniacs, and she abominated lazy folks who go to the poor-house rather than work and earn a decent living. I couldn't go there."

"Yes, you could," rejoined Miss Smith, with unintentional brutality. "That's all a notion of your'n. Your mother never let you learn anything to earn a living by. She kept you like a doll in a box. What she ever brung you down here for I don't know. Seemed like she hated folks and you don't know no more about 'em than if you'd never been born. I tell you, Gussie, it takes a strong, able-bodied, knowing woman to live alone. Now if you had an arm like Joe Turley's and an iron jaw like your mother's, nobody'd likely come around bothering you."

Gussie was stunned to hear her mother spoken of as if she were severe—and then the poor-house!

"No, Miss Smith, I won't go to the poor-house, I'll work myself to death before I'll go."

"'Work yourself to death!' Humph!" snorted Miss Smith. "You don't know what work is. But we'll say no more about it just now, but you better be getting used to the idee." Then in a somewhat softened tone: "I know you ought to be in a home, Gussie, but land's sake, they've all got daughters and most of 'em sons, and women without money getting into a charitable home—it ain't to be done."

The next evening Joe came early before Gussie had escaped into her hot cabin. "Now, Gussie," he began, "they're talking of taking you to the poor-house. It's a cussed shame. The hearts of them people would rattle in a pea-pod. Take you to the poor-house! Not much while Joe's a-living! You'd look purty in a poor-house—a girl like you, and used to living in a band-box all your own."

"Miss Smith says they will take me there before the winter sets in," sobbed Gussie.

"Now, Gussie, they won't. You're going to marry me."

At that the door slammed suddenly and Gussie was gone. "Yes, you air," Joe continued, for he knew her window was open and she dare not shut it while he was there. "Yes, you air. Bless your heart, I've loved you ever since you was knee-high to a duck, but you'd never let me git near enough to tell you so. Now, Gussie, see here, don't be scart of me. I'm a great big gawk, but I wouldn't hurt a hair on your head,—no I wouldn't. See here now, I'm all alone and so are you. We kin have a little home up on the bank, where there are trees and grass and a yard, and you can have chickens and flowers. I earn plenty of money! You won't be going to the poor-house. Torment them folks, anyhow! You need somebody to love you and I'm that feller. Now just say you like me a little bit. Put your hand out of the winder, if you won't say it, and I'll know. Well, keep a-thinking that I'd be as good to you as your mother. Keep a-thinking that I'm all alone, too, and awful hungry for a leetle live critter to love me and that you're that leetle one; and some day when you kin think that Joe Turley is jist the big-hearted loving feller that you want jist like he wants you, why jist pin your handkerchief outside where I can see it."

Joe said all of this brokenly and with many pauses, as though it were difficult work. Gussie could hear him swallow laboriously, and instead of being afraid, she tucked herself in bed, and closing her eyes in security dreamed—of Joe.

Joe had to do a good deal of talking about the cottage and how he and Gussie could make a home, and how he could teach her many things and especially of what she was to him, before she began to trust him enough to let him set foot on the boat; and then he never entered the cabin until the night of their marriage.

After that Gussie entered upon a life of wonders. Joe could wash and iron, cook and mend.

"Oh," he said, "I had a mother who wasn't very strong and I helped her in the house. I was her boy. She used to talk to me about the kind of a girl I ought to marry and how I should treat her. I know I'm pretty rough. I've been a logman, a raftsman and a roustabout, but I knew you were just the girl for me. Why, it was just like you'd bin shut up and kept for me. But I had awful hard work gitting you, didn't I? I could have kissed the side of this old boat when I saw that little handkerchief fluttering out there. I bet you hung it out and took it in a dozen times before you let me see it, didn't you, you old sweetheart?" And so Joe rattled on.

Suddenly one day in midsummer, Joe appeared accompanied by a stranger. The man offered to give Joe a big sum of money if he would be the boss of a gang of men to handle logs on the Big Kanawa. Men were scarce, Joe was a fine manager, he urged, and it would be good money in Joe's pocket. Joe "hated like sin to go," he said, but when he returned, they could have the cottage right away. The prospect was alluring. Gussie clung to him, but Joe was a masterful man, and soon had all arrangements made for her comfort during his absence. He went away after a passionate parting, Gussie calling after him, "O Joe, how soon is 'soon' when you're coming back?" Then she sank down sobbing, and wondering if he ever would come back, and if her mother were not right after all.

The weeks stretched into months and Joe did not return. One night there was a cry on the house-boat which filled every avenue to the mother's heart. The Ladies' Aid had to come again. Something warm and snuggling lay upon Gussie's bosom and pushed with its soft feet, and Gussie prayed that Joe would come soon for the sake of the baby. Her eyes were dimmed with looking, and her ears throbbed with listening for a step on the sand. One day she drew her mother's little stand to

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

THE ROW OF LITTLE STOCKINGS

A CHRISTMAS STORY

SUSAN M. GRIFFITH, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Christmas Eve, and five dingy little stockings hanging from a much smoked, dingy mantel, each one supported and kept in place by a carpet tack.

There were holes in the stockings—great, cavernous holes in both heel and toe, past mending with needle and thread, so they were tied about with string to prevent the otherwise inevitable escape of the hoped-for gifts from Santa Claus.

Annie May, the owner of the longest and biggest stocking, had hung them there. The other four children were George Washington, two years younger than Annie May, now past eleven, Carrie Bell, Minnie Louise, and Harry, the two-year-old boy baby.

Within a curtained recess of the poor apartment, tucked in one miserable bed, lay the five little owners of the five dingy stockings. Arranged in a methodical row, Annie May the center and guardian of the group, they were too excited to go to sleep, for the elder sister had been feeding their minds upon the memories of her long-ago childhood (oh, how long ago it seemed to the little woman) when home meant a whole house instead of one bare room, and when she hung up her pretty stocking (with not a hole in it) and Santa never forgot to fill it to overflowing. How the children opened their eyes and exclaimed, and, yes, fairly squealed with delight as she told of the beautiful dolls, pretty toys, lovely picture books, and sweets. And when they all demanded that their stockings be hung up, Annie May tremblingly obeyed, though she feared there would be nothing in them on Christmas morning.

"You see," she said to the wide-eyed children, "ma says he doesn't always pay attention to poor folks like us. She says sometimes he's awful good to the poor and then again he don't seem to be. But there ain't no harm in hanging up our stockings as I see. Mebbe he'll have a lot of things left over and will bring us something. But you needn't go to setting your minds on it too big, 'cause if you do, like as not you'll be dreadfully disappointed. And now the stockings are all hung up clost to the chimbley, you kids get off to sleep just as quick as ever you can."

It was very easy for Annie May to talk sleep, but altogether another affair to make those lively little youngsters get drowsy. Why, there was not a wink of sleep in one of them, not even the baby; and first one and then another kept tumbling out of bed to see if, haply, they might catch an enchanting glimpse of the dear old saint of fairy lore coming down the chimney feet first, his pack of presents on his back.

"I should think," said Carrie Bell, the wise, "that he'd get all over black and soot coming down the chimbley; and I should think he might get stuck fast. If he got stuck fast, Annie May, p'raps he'd give us a lot of things for helping him out."

Annie May gave a scornful sniff. "Such a girl as you be, Carrie Bell!" she said. "Santa Claus is an angel-man, and angel-men can go anywhere and through everything, and never in the world get stuck or dirty. Now, Georgie Wash, you just get back into bed and stay there!" This to the small boy who had started upon another exploring expedition. "They say Santa Claus don't never come if you go to peeking and nosing round, and trying to ketch him a-coming down the chimbley. He don't never get around till about midnight, anyway, and it's only about nine now. I heard the town clock strike just a little bit ago. My, it's mighty cold. I reckon mama will be froze stiff when she gets in."

The mother worked at washing dishes in a down-town restaurant, and, during the holidays, got home pretty late, owing to having to put in extra time. As for the father, he seldom employed his energies in any kind of labor except to get drunk on his wife's money. That was why the room was so very bare and cold, and why the five little stockings tacked to the mantel were so ragged, limp, and destined to be empty. The mother tried to hold back a portion of her wages, and to hide them away in the most unheard of places. But the father, eager for drink, always found it, or bullied it out of her, so that she found it desperately hard to get food, and fuel, and the poorest clothing for herself and children.

"'Twas the Night Before Christmas"

The mother was entitled to extra pay during the rush in the holiday trade, and the wretched father of these five helpless little children stumbled up the rickety stairs, gloating over the prospect of a "splendid" Christmas drunk. The children were at last sleeping soundly and dreaming of stockings filled with all sorts of beautiful things. The miserable fire had died down to a few coals, as the father shuffled in and drew up close to the grate to warm his numbed hands and half-frozen feet.

As he leaned forward to get every bit of warmth possible from the dying fire, the five dangling little stockings struck him in the face and twined about his neck. His diseased mind made him think they were snakes, and he cried out in alarm, and struck at them fiercely in abject terror, gazing at them as if he had lost his senses, as they swung to and fro under his touch. What were they, anyway?

Merry Christmas!

The dim light made every object vague and shadowy, and he fell into a fit of trembling as, summoning all his resolution, he put forth his hand and felt them. Stockings! Why were they hanging there, fast to the mantel? Five stockings, five children's stockings, some of them so small, oh, so small! The joyous chime of the Christmas bells glorifying the air burst musically upon his dull, besotted ear. Oh, yes, it was Christmas Eve, and the kids had hung up their stockings hoping that the good Santa Claus would not pass them by. At first, the wretched father laughed, as at a good joke; then, another fit of trembling seizing him, he caught hold of the mantel to steady himself, and again the five little stockings wound themselves about him. They swept over his bloated face, they tickled his hair, they clung to him, and, limp, and empty, and wretched as they were, told to him an eloquent story of innocent, trusting, loving childhood, and oh! what a voice they had.

Partially sobered, the father listened to the bells, the miserable tears racing down his face. He remembered the first time he and his wife — they were so happy then —had filled a Christmas stocking for Annie May, their oldest child. What fun they had had over it, and how happy they had been. How they had rummaged the stores for the prettiest doll which with delight the father had watched the mother daintily dress, and how interested she had been to watch him fashion the little cradle. Soon after, the demon drink had seized him, and the pretty home and happy Christmas became only a dream. Now, home was but a wretched desolate room, and the wife and mother, a faded, worn, and broken woman, labored for the daily bread, and he—he was the cause of it all! As the waves of remorse surged over his awakened soul, he burst into anguished sobs and slunk down the stairs and out into the night.

A group of Salvation Army workers were holding a meeting on the street. They had been trying to save the father for a long time, and, now, as he came stumbling and trembling into their midst, they put their arms about him, and brought him to the Mercy-seat. The story of his shame burst from him in sobs and tears, and when he told of the five little stockings, other tears began to fall. Money to fill the little stockings was pressed upon him, and he went home, not with shuffling, shambling tread this time, but with a quick, hopeful step. He was going to redeem the soul God had saved; he was going to have work, honest work —it had been promised to him; he was going to amount to something.

He found his wife had come home and gone to bed; but in each little stocking there was a tiny gift from the mother hand. He stuffed his gifts in beside them, and then, picking up in his trembling hand the temperance pledge he had just signed, he pinned it to his wife's shabby dress. After a little he kissed the ragged toes of the five little stockings, and crept away to a night of happy rest. The father had once more become a man.

Holiday Gifts

THE UNION SIGNAL

a paper for the home, a suitable, desirable and helpful gift coming each week in the year. You make no mistake in sending it to father, mother, sister, brother, or the friend in college.

Price, $1.00 per year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER

will be welcomed not only by the boys and girls but by the Sunday school and public school teacher. Issued monthly.

Price, 25 cents per year.

Dainty gift cards will be mailed to all subscribers to whom the paper is ordered as a gift, and the Christmas number will be mailed to each.

Kindly send in subscriptions at once so that the gift subscriptions may reach the subscriber before Christmas.

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Cloth, $1.50. Morocco, $2.50.
What Frances E. Willard Said. Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 75 cents.
What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Price, 50 cents.
Nineteen Beautiful Years. Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.
A Modern Madonna, Carolyn Stanley. Price, $1.50.
Freckles, Gene Stratton Porter. Price, 60 cents.
John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.
Lois Morton's Investment, Mrs. Eva Murphy. Price, $1.35.
Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.
The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.32.
Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.40.

BOOKLETS

Who's to Blame, Marietta Holley. Price, each, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
Rest Cottage, profusely illustrated. Price, each, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

W. C. T. U. STATIONERY

Fine linen paper with W. C. T. U. monogram, embossed in gold. Twenty-four sheets and envelopes, boxed, 60 cents per box.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage spoons
Crusade Church spoons
Sterling, price, $1.50 each.

W. C. T. U. PINS

White enamel on silver with letters, 40 and 60 cents each
White enamel on silver without letters, 30 cents each
White enamel on gilt without letters, 25 cents each

CHRISTMAS CARDS

A carefully selected assortment of daintily decorated and engraved Christmas cards, with envelopes, at 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen; 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen.

Cards without envelopes, 15c and 25c per dozen.

Packages of Christmas tags and seals, 5 cents per package.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Miss Annie A. Robbins, National W. C. T. U. organizer and lecturer, sailed from New Orleans on November 20 for Porto Rico, where she will be engaged in W. C. T. U. work for several months. After a somewhat stormy voyage she arrived in San Juan, November 27, and was most fortunate in making the acquaintance at the dock of a white ribboner in whose home she secured a room. After only four days in which to become familiar with her new surroundings and the people with whom she is to work she writes that she has already made an address in one of the churches with the aid of an interpreter; a number of the churches promise her cordial co-operation, and arrangements have been made for several meetings. Miss Robbins is planning definite work with the children through the schools, and will aim first to organize a union composed of American women. She will make her headquarters in Santurce, a twenty-minute ride from San Juan. San Pedro and other towns are not far distant.

Mrs. Fannie A. Drummond, associate Y. P. B. secretary for Ohio and a state organizer and lecturer, recently organized at Barnesville a Y. P. B. with 184 members. The president, Mr. Arthur Mercer, is a capable young man who is studying for the ministry. The general secretary, Mrs. George Erf, is the wife of the high school principal. This promising Branch adopted twelve departments of work and started a membership contest.

Hillsborough county (N. H.) W. C. T. U., Miss Florence E. Cram, president, met recently in annual institute in the Methodist church of East Manchester, the church, by the way, in which Mrs. Ellen R. Richardson, president of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U., who was a speaker at this meeting, was sixteen years ago made the leader of the white ribbon forces of the state. Among the good things reported by the five local unions of the county was the enrollment by the East Manchester union of twenty-seven new members since September and the plan to raise that number to one hundred by June. Dr. Ellen Wallace, the instigator and agitator of the annual Health Day, was present and urged its observance the third Friday in January.

Mrs. Sophia Harvey, for twenty-one years the president of the Old Orchard (Me.) W. C. T. U., on the occasion of her recent withdrawal from office was presented with a loving cup, beautiful in design and engraved, "Sophia Harvey, from the Old Orchard W. C. T. U. in recognition of twenty-one years' faithful service." The Old Orchard union is the banner union of York county, and was organized by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey, who for nine years conducted a flourishing L. T. L. Mrs. Harvey is seventy-eight years of age.

HAVE YOU HEARD THE GREAT PROHIBITION SONG—"COUNT ON ME!" 90,000 SOLD
Send ten cents for 96 PAGE HYMN BOOK containing it.
Wm. E. Marks, 1603 West St., Wilmington, Del.

Miss Christine I. Tinling, National lecturer, in a recent fortnight's tour of Rhode Island, proved a source of inspiration to the state workers. She addressed teachers' meetings, day and Sunday schools, general gatherings and five institutes. Boys and girls were taught in a most fascinating way by her stories and charts; teachers were aroused anew to the importance of scientific temperance instruction and members of the W. C. T. U. were helped to a keener interest in this department. Most fortunate will be any state which can secure the services of this efficient and consecrated worker, is the prediction of Rhode Island in regard to Miss Tinling's valuable services.

Miss Clara Friton, of Dows, Iowa, a teacher of expression, last year held thirteen silver medal contests for children of her expression classes. This year she has held five gold and three silver medal contests which have been [illegible]d in other towns. Miss Friton is no[illegible] medal Contest superintendent for the [illegible]entieth district and has every unio[illegible] pledged to hold at least one gold medal [illegible]test this year.

"Mothers of Men," a book recently written and "dedicated to the mothers of all nations" by Mrs. Frances E. Hallowes of India, and published by Headly Brothers, 140 Bishopsgate, London, E. C. (price, one shilling), is a book that should be read by all mothers and their sons. It shows up militarism in its true light. It also shows in a convincing manner the way to world-peace and how, honorably, to prevent the awful ravages of war.

H. J. Bailey.

MRS. ARMOR IN MONTANA

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, financial secretary of the National W. C. T. U., in recent engagements in Montana has once more proved her power as a winner of prohibition votes. She gave two magnificent addresses at Butte, one at the auditorium where she held the interest of her audience for two hours and won the admiration of many who were opposed to her views on prohibition. At an earlier prohibition rally of which she was the leader, Mrs. Armor told of the success of prohibition in her home state of Georgia. "Do you think I would work for prohibition in Montana today if it had injured Georgia in the eight years that state has been dry?" Mrs. Armor asked her hearers. "Does Georgia talk about increased taxes and decreased property values? We put prohibition into effect and if we had not liked it we would have poured the state back into the jug." The four factors necessary to put the liquor traffic out of Montana she declared, are determination, education, organization and consecration on the part of the temperance forces.

"DRINK AND BE SOBER"

The facts stated in Vance Thompson's "Drink and Be Sober" have probably all been stated before, but his manner of presentation gives to the volume a charm that will insure its being widely read and quoted. The book impresses the reader as being the work of a student who desires—and has succeeded—in looking conscientiously and thoroughly into both sides of the question. The book is overwhelming in the evidence it presents of the evils and dangers of moderate drinking. From many years' observation and study of conditions in the wine-drinking nations of southern Europe, he reaches the conclusion that the only safe course is total abstinence, and the picture he draws of "the crippled and distorted generations, with their beggars and idiots bearing one and all the stigmata of alcoholic penalties" is a convincing answer to the "harmlessness of wine and beer" sophistry. However, with one of the conclusions of the book we cannot agree, namely, that state or government control of the liquor traffic is desirable as one of the stages on the road to total extermination of the traffic, or that such a method of disposing of the traffic in drink offers the fairest hope and the greatest certainty of success.

AS A BREWERY AGENT SAW IT

At one of the meetings on the way to the Seattle Convention Mrs. Deborah K. Livingston caught the attention of the audience by the somewhat startling announcement that the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the American Brewers' Association are agreed on one point and that is that the liquor traffic is doomed by the success of woman suffrage! She related a conversation she had not long ago on a railroad train, with an agent of a large Cincinnati brewery, in which she asked him what he considered the greatest factor in the country for the e[illegible]rmin[illegible] of the liquor traffic, and after he had freely admitted that by 1920 or 1925 at the latest, the doom of the liquor traffic would come—that it was making its last stand—his reply was: "Frankly, I think there are two things that are hurrying National Prohibition: the great new efficiency basis in the industrial world—men of capital and men of the laboring class have come to see that John Barleycorn does not pay in dollars and cents; and secondly, the enfranchisement of the women of the United States. If the big corporations do not put us out of business before long, the woman's ballot will dead sure."

EX-GOVERNOR HUGHES PROMOTED

Ex-Governor L. C. Hughes of Arizona, the pioneer prohibition and equal suffrage advocate of the state, has passed to his reward. Governor Hughes was an important factor in the state-wide prohibition and suffrage campaigns, helping the leaders and workers with wise counsel. He retained his fine mental faculties to the last and has been heard to remark that since he lived to see the fruition of his efforts on behalf of prohibition and woman suffrage he was content now to stand aside. Mrs. Hughes was one of the first presidents of the W. C. T. U. when Arizona was a territory, and Governor Hughes was an honorary member of the Tucson W. C. T. U.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Mary Norwood Ostrander, Dos Palas, Calif., well known as an organizer and lecturer. Mrs. Ostrander was also for eight years the state superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days, and for two years president of Merced county W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Georgiana K. Prince, Buffalo, N. Y., sister of Mrs. L. F. Pease, president of the Cold Springs union of Buffalo. Mrs. Prince will be remembered by attendants at the National Convention at Portland, Oregon.

Mrs. Sara E. Ayers, San Jose, Calif., the able state superintendent of Parliamentary Usage. Mrs. Ayers filled many positions of usefulness, having served six years as president of the bi-county union of Santa Clara and San Mateo, and five years as superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction.

Mrs. Sarah B. Peterson, president of the Woodstown (N. J.) W. C. T. U., for years a devoted worker for humanity's uplift. She was elected to office at an age when less brave spirits would have shrunk from the responsibility which she conscientiously carried as long as strength permitted. Daughters and grand-daughters are faithfully following in the pathway she trod.

Mr. Clark W. Parish, husband of Mrs. Julia R. Parish, former corresponding secretary of the Michigan W. C. T. U.

Mrs. H. J. Barnard, Transit, N. Y., a faithful member of the local union and one who will be greatly missed.

RUSSIA'S PROHIBITION LEADER

Michael Dimitrovish Tschelishev of Russia, prohibition leader of the Imperial Duma, has recently passed to the better land. A man of tremendous moral courage he all his life, from the time of his boyhood as an obscure peasant down through the later years when wealth and honor and position were accorded him, used his voice and influence against what he considered the greatest enemy of his country. To him, perhaps more than to any other man, is due the credit for the Czar's prohibition decrée. He continually urged such a measure, supplying incontrovertible evidence of the truth of his assertions that vodka was undermining the character and integrity of his fellow countrymen. In his going Russia has lost a great statesman and a great reformer.

"SUNSHINE POWDERS." A dainty Xmas gift for an invalid or one in sorrow. Bright jewels of thought, lovely for birthdays, sunshine work, hospitals. They were prepared by a shut-in, wife of a home missionary. "Simply beautiful; cheery, comforting!" "Worth their weight in gold!" Try a box! 25 cents. Rev. H. M. Goodell, Pasadena, Cal.

HAPPENINGS IN GEORGIA

As a bearer of "glad tidings of good things," writes Mrs. Burghard of Georgia, Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., in a three weeks' itinerary has told in twenty Georgia cities and towns the wonderful story of what prohibition has done for Kansas. At the close of every address the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition was unanimously adopted by a rising vote. Besides the formal addresses Mrs. Mitchner gave inspiring talks to about 2,500 college students in the Female College at La Grange, Andrew College at Cuthbert, Emory College at Oxford, Georgia Normal and Industrial College and the Georgia Military Academy in Milledgeville, Wesleyan Female College in Macon and other institutions of learning. Practically every female college in the state and many coeducational institutions have a Y. P. B. or study temperance systematically through a temperance committee, largely the result of the efforts of Georgia's efficient Y. P. B. college secretary, Mrs. Lella A. Dillard.

Mrs. Mitchner was enthusiastically received everywhere. Receptions were tendered her at Albany and Dawson, and a return engagement is desired. The writers of the weekly college letters published in the secular press state that they all fell in love with her and are determined to help in the great prohibition movement. Mrs. Mitchner was much interested in seeing in the library of Wesleyan College the first college diploma ever awarded a woman. This institution was the first college in the world to confer degrees upon women. Indeed ten years before Tennyson wrote "The Princess" this institution was conferring such degrees.

Some of the finest temperance meetings ever held in the state were the church, Sunday school and mass meetings held in conjunction with the W. C. T. U. on World's Temperance Sunday.

At the request of the three local unions and the county W. C. T. U. of Savannah, Ga., the Savannah Federation of Women's Clubs, at its recent annual meeting, voted for the appointment of a standing temperance investigation committee, to investigate and report the connection between the use of alcohol and the various lines of work engaged in by the federation, as for instance the relation between alcohol and tuberculosis, child welfare, civics and public health.

READY

TOPICAL PROGRAM

FOR

1916

Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for writing in name of hostess and place of meeting.

Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00

A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for

50 CENTS

Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

The Union Signal	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	25c a year
The Young Crusader	25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each	Per 100, $1.75
Subscriptions to Foreign Countries
The Union Signal	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	37c a year
The Young Crusader	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

OUR GOAL:
TEN THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN 1916

PREMIUMS FOR 1916, UNION SIGNAL

Cash Premiums

Any person having credit for 250 weekly subscriptions to The Union Signal (on which no other premiums have been taken) between September 25, 1915, and the closing of the books for 1916, will receive a cash premium of $25. If you will unite to credit subscriptions to your state superintendent, you can secure this premium and thus honor your state and advance your own work. Credit must be requested on the subscription letter, and in no case are such credits transferable.

Small Clubs

Five subscriptions to the weekly Union Signal, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to one free subscription to the weekly Union Signal, or two subscriptions to the monthly Campaign Edition, or two subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

Five Campaign Edition subscriptions sent at one time entitle the sender to one subscription to the Campaign Edition.

Literature Offer

Five subscriptions to the weekly Union Signal, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to select literature to the amount of $1.00 from the catalogue of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, the selection to be made in one order, at catalogue prices.

Life of Miss Willard

Ten weekly subscriptions to The Union Signal, either new or renewals, sent at one time will entitle the sender to one copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna A. Gordon.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

YOUNG CRUSADER

Gold Watch

No premium is more popular than the handsome Gold Watch which is given for 350 YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO The Young Crusader. It is to be understood, however, that no other premium will be allowed on these subscriptions. The watch is open face, Elgin movement, in first quality twenty-year gold-filled case. For 400 yearly subscriptions we will send the watch in hunting case. By crediting subscriptions from your state to one person you can easily secure one or several watches. Try it. Credit must be requested in the same letter in which subscriptions are sent. Credits already given to one person cannot be transferred to another. Nor can credits falling short of a leading premium in one fiscal year be completed in the next.

Subscriptions for this premium need not all be sent at one time; provided, however, that every installment sent in is accompanied by the statement that the subscriptions are to apply on the premium.

Five Subscriptions

Entitle you to a free subscription to The Young Crusader to any address designated, or to a copy of the beautifully illustrated book, "The Story of Frances E Willard," by Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, written especially for young people. These subscriptions must all be sent at one time and the premium asked for in the same letter.

Scamp Club

Any boy or girl sending in two new names to The Young Crusader, at one time, will be entitled to a membership in the "Scamp Club" and receive the "Scamp" pin.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION MEETINGS

December 2 was observed by the unions of Lexington, Ky., as a day of prayer for both national and state prohibition. The all day service in the Central Christian church was addressed by Drs. I. J. Spencer, J. M. Spencer and Mark Collins. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., spoke at the afternoon meeting on the prohibition bill which will be presented to the legislature this winter, and conducted the noontide prayer. There was cordial co-operation from other women's organizations and speakers representing the Equal Rights Association and the Woman's Club were on the program.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was the principal speaker at the all day service in Washington, D. C., held at the First Congregational church. Mrs. Emma Sanford Shelton, president of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., presided, and Dr. D. H. Kress, representing the Friends and Adventist churches, was one of the speakers. "We are a great nation," said Dr. Kress, "but we can truly become greater by having national prohibition."

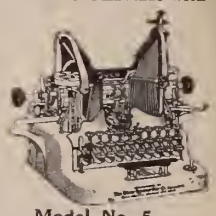
Ft. Meade (Fla.) W. C. T. U. held an all day prayer service for National Constitutional Prohibition on December 5 at a union meeting of the churches which was preceded by a parade of the Loyal Temperance Legion on Saturday afternoon. The meeting Sunday evening, which was very well attended, gave a unanimous vote for National Constitutional Prohibition. Mrs. Jennie J. Morley of Philadelphia who is spending the winter in Florida, gave generously of her time in planning and carrying out this all day service.

The annual W. C. T. U. group conference of the counties of Cayuga, Cortland, Tioga and Tompkins, N. Y., was held in the Methodist church in Freeville, on Friday, December 3. This meeting was characterized by the same spirit of enthusiasm and consecration that has always been shown. Special attention was given to the work of the Y. P. B. and the L. T. L. and earnest and eloquent pleas were made by the leaders in these Branches that the mother organization should take a greater interest in the work for the children and young people. One of the most interesting features of the afternoon session was an address by Rev. Scoville, pastor of the Congregational church of Cortland, on the subject, "The Oriental Woman." As Mr. Scoville was for three years a teacher in Roberts College, Constantinople, his remarks were based on personal observation. The Cortland trio were present during the entire session and by their artistic and inspiring music added greatly to the success of the meeting.

The West Henrietta (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. observed December 2 with a meeting in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition. The union also raised $12, its share in the "Mile of Dimes," which is to be used to secure prohibition. To Mrs. B. S. Winslow, president of the union, is due the credit for the success of the undertaking.

The Typewriter Opportunity

Will you let me send you this Standard Visible Typewriter—the Famous Model No. 5 OLIVER with Inbuilt Tabulator and Back Spacer—on FREE TRIAL? No money in advance—no deposit—no C.O.D. If you find it to be the best typewriter you ever saw and want to keep it, I will make you a price that is lower than wholesale—lower than the lowest agents' prices—and you can let typewriter pay for itself out of what it earns for you. Full Standard Equipment with machine. LIFE GUARANTEE. Because there are no American Typewriters going to Europe just now, I can make you a wonderful price inducement. BE SURE AND SEND TODAY for free Catalog and Full Details of this Greatest of Typewriter Offers. All information absolutely free.



Model No. 5

General Manager,
TYPEWRITERS DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE
1510-60m Wabash Ave., Chicago (343)

Keep Informed

BY SUBSCRIBING FOR THE

LEAFLET BUDGET

which brings to your desk each month a sample of leaflets, posters, pledge cards, etc., published during the current month.

Subscription
One Dollar Per Year

NATIONAL W.C.T.U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

PERFECT SAFETY

Mining-Stock Promoter—"Where can I hide? The police are coming!"

Chief Clerk—"Get into the card-index case. I defy any one to find anything in there."—Judge.

AN UNSOPHISTICATED MADONNA

(Continued from Page Twelve)

the bedside, and taking paper from the drawer, she wrote:

"Dear Joe: The baby has come. She's a girl. She's pink all over, but they say she'll fade. She cries all the time for you. Do come. I would have died if it hadn't been for her. I can't live much longer anyhow if you don't come right away.

"Your loving
"Gussie."

She addressed the envelope to "Mr. Joe Turley, Big Kanawa, Va.," and of course it never was received.

—THE—

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS BOOK MARK

Printed on white satin ribbon with clear picture and Bible text. An appropriate remembrance for a W. C. T. U. friend.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL, DECEMBER 23, 1915 | No. 51

-- Courtesy Philadelphia North American

VICTIMS OF "PERSONAL LIBERTY"

HOMELESS—" 'CAUSE PAPA DRANK BEER"

This was four-year-old Billy Kiele's simple, matter-of-fact explanation of why he and his six-year-old sister Marie are under the care of the city at the Philadelphia General Hospital without any place to call a home. Billy and Marie posed for this picture on the express condition that it be forwarded to Santa Claus. (See page 8.)

CAMPAIGN EDITION

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Our Washington Letter—National Constitutional Prohibition—How the $2,000,000,000 Wasted for Drink Could Be Expended for Christmas Cheer—Is Prohibition a Rude Interference With Personal Liberty?—Russia's Emancipation From Vodka—Goodbye to the Perambulating Saloon—Washington's Thirty Years of War With the Liquor Traffic—In the Heart of California's Wine Land.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

HUNDREDS TURNED AWAY FROM NATIONAL W. C. T. U. MASS MEETING IN WASHINGTON —MRS. MARY HARRIS ARMOR PRINCIPAL SPEAKER—NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL MEETS—AMERICAN SOCIETY OF PHYSICIANS FOR THE STUDY OF ALCOHOL AND OTHER NARCOTICS IN SESSION—REPORT FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY SHOWS DECREASE IN REVENUE FROM LIQUOR AND TOBACCO—PROHIBITION MEASURES INTRODUCED—CONGRESS ADJOURNS FOR HOLIDAYS

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Legislation, Washington, D.C.

Our Washington Headquarters has been a scene of unusual activity during this week. A number of state presidents have been here, namely, Mesdames Ella A. Boole, Sara H. Hoge, Ella M. George, Frances E. Beauchamp, Florence D. Richard, Lenna Lowe Yost, Mary R. Haslup, Emma Sanford Shelton, and Dr. Mary Stone of China, besides Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, just returned from Montana, Mrs. V. E. Mohler of West Virginia, Mrs. Dora S. Chase, who represented the president of New Hampshire, Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, Mrs. Martha M. Allen, Miss Ellen Stone, the two Mary Andersons of Massachusetts, Mrs. Viola D. Romans of Ohio, Mrs. Jean B. Wiley of Pennsylvania, Miss Jennie E. Smith, Mrs. W. F. Crafts, Mrs. Suessa B. Blaine, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, Mrs. Caroline McDowell, Miss Margaret J. Bilz, Mrs. M. W. Newton, Mrs. Lawson, and others. Miss Gordon was of course the center of the circle, and as busy as a railroad president, for those mentioned and many besides were desirous of having a few moments of her time to bring some particular matter to her attention.

National W. C. T. U. Mass Meeting Widely Advertised

As three National General Officers were in the city, officers' meetings were held when possible. Every avenue for publicity was used to advertise the National W. C. T. U. Sunday mass meeting, held in Poli's theater December 12. A personal invitation to be present was sent to every United States Senator and Representative, every clergyman and Sunday school superintendent in the city, and to heads of organizations, besides the distribution of 30,000 programs.

The women of the District of Columbia, Mrs. Shelton leading, worked zealously to carry to a magnificent success the plans formulated by the General Officers. Articles concerning our work and workers appeared from time to time in the leading Washington dailies. The result of this effort for publicity was most gratifying.

The theater where the meeting was held has the largest seating capacity of any in the city, and every one of the 2,400 seats was filled, hundreds besides standing the entire three hours and other hundreds being turned away. Many Senators and Representatives were present. This large attendance was more especially gratifying as there was a suffrage meeting held in a near-by theater at the same hour.

The Scriptures were read most effectively by Mrs. Shelton, and your superintendent of Legislation offered prayer. Miss Gordon presided with her usual dignity and earnestness, and was introduced by Senator Sterling of South Dakota, who, in a stirring address, emphasized his faith in prohibition for state and nation.

There was a demonstration by the L. T. L. of the District under the supervision of Mrs. Edna Proctor, District of Columbia secretary, and by nineteen Y. P. B. girls, representing the prohibition states under the guidance of Mrs. Theresa A. Williams, District of Columbia Y. P. B. secretary.

Previous to the entrance of the L. T. L., two buglers from the Marine Barracks, both total abstainers, stood either side of a large American flag and as the children appeared, sounded reveille, and at the close sounded taps.

Mrs. Armor Principal Speaker

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor was the principal speaker, and in her own forceful and eloquent manner called forth continuous applause as she urged the question of National Constitutional Prohibition. Dr. Mary Stone, president of China W. C. T. U., was irresistible as she gave a brief résumé of what prohibition would do for her country. The appearance of the two Mary Andersons, one from Massachusetts and the other from Russia, who, dressed in her native costume and waving the Russian flag, told of the wonderful results prohibition had wrought in her land, brought forth hearty applause.

A resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition was read by Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher and was immediately adopted by the assembled throng. One-minute speeches by state presidents and temperance leaders followed.

Congressman C. H. Randall, the new member from Los Angeles, who is a pronounced prohibitionist, had a seat with his wife on the platform.

The music was especially fine. Trinity Epworth choir of sixty voices, under the direction of Mr. Levi B. Fouts, gave Handel's "Hallelujah" chorus, and Beethoven's "Praise the Lord," and a solo by Mr. W. E. Braithawaite of Washington was greatly appreciated.

Thus ended one of the best meetings the National W. C. T. U. ever held in Washington.

National Temperance Council Meets

On Saturday, December 11, the National Temperance Council held its annual meeting at the Raleigh Hotel in Washington. The executive committee met at 9:30 a. m., Mr. Daniel Poling in the chair. At 10:30 the regular meeting convened, Mr. E. H. Cherrington presiding. Forty-five members of the council were present. These represented the leading temperance organizations of the country. The spirit of brotherly kindness which prevailed during the discussions was an indication of victory, as all were united in working for National Constitutional Prohibition. The officers were all re-elected.

Monday, December 13, a meeting of the W. C. T. U. General Officers and members of the executive committee, with the officers of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., was held in our Washington Headquarters, thirty being present. Much of interest was discussed.

A number of our women remained over to attend the National Suffrage Association convention which is in session at the present time. Prominent suffragists, led by Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, and the anti-suffragists, led by Mrs. A. M. Dodge, are today appearing before the House Judiciary committee. Tuesday President Wilson received the members of the convention at the White House. It was said that he shook hands with a thousand women.

Physicians Meet and Discuss Temperance

Another temperance meeting representing prominent physicians of the country, known as the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and other Narcotics, is now in session in this city. Valuable and exhaustive papers have been read and discussed, showing the wonderful advance in temperance sentiment on the part of the medical profession during recent years. That the question of temperance is becoming more and more prominent as a theme for study and discussion among professional men and women, as well as among laymen, is more evident every year.

The bill introduced by Senator Sheppard December 7, 1915, viz.: "To prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia," is known as Senate bill 1082, and was referred to the Senate District committee. The bill is drastic and would, by November 1, 1916, close every liquor saloon, prohibit the manufacture, sale, holding in storage, offering for sale, trafficking, exchange for goods or merchandise, to solicit or receive orders, or give away any intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, etc., with severe penalties.

The sub-committee appointed by the National Temperance Commission to prepare a brief on the proposed amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition completed its labors December 15, and the brief is now in circulation and should be in the hands of every thoughtful citizen. Its object is to throw light on the purpose and aim of the proposed amendment.

Decrease in Revenue from Liquor and Tobacco

A report from the United States Treasury shows that revenue from distilled spirits, fermented liquors, and tobacco decreased $25,000,000 in the last year.

Senator Sheppard of Texas and Senator Thompson of Kansas have both introduced bills in the Senate for National Constitutional Prohibition. Senator Jones of Washington and Senator Thompson of Kansas have introduced bills for prohibition in the District of Columbia. So also have Representatives Candler of Mississippi and Smith of Idaho.

Senator Owen of Oklahoma has introduced a bill in the Senate to search and seize all intoxicating liquors in the eastern district of the state of Oklahoma, and making the possession of such liquors prima facie evidence of an unlawful introduction.

Congress adjourns this afternoon December 17, for the holiday season.

December 17, 1915

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Proposed Amendment

SECTION 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale and importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof and exportation thereof are hereby prohibited.

SECTION 2. The Congress or the States shall have power, independently or concurrently, to enforce this article by all needful legislation.

By Whom Endorsed

On July 10, pursuant to a call by the Anti-Saloon League of America, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Temperance Commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and the International Order of Good Templars, representatives of all the leading temperance organizations of the United States met in Washington for conference, and after a full and free discussion, endorsed the above amendment with practical unanimity.

The Conference appointed a commission of nineteen, representing the leading national temperance organizations of the United States, to consult with members of the Sixty-fourth Congress and decide upon the exact phraseology to be used.

On December 3, 1915, said commission met in the City of Washington and after a thorough discussion approved as the best available the above wording of the amendment, in which form it was voted upon in the House of Representatives on December 22, 1914.

The Scope of a Constitutional Amendment

A national constitutional amendment does not properly include details of legislation. It declares a governmental policy. The legislative department of government enacts laws, fixing penalties, defining terms, and settling details. For example, the definition of intoxicating liquor differs now in dry states. To define it is a legislative function. Many similar details needed in solving the liquor problem, and much that can be provided by direct legislation without constitutional amendment should be left for legislative action by Congress or the states, either independently or concurrently.

Purpose and Aim of Proposed Amendment

The main purpose to be accomplished by this amendment is to free the Federal Government from the responsibility for and partnership in the beverage liquor traffic. The prohibition of the sale and manufacture for sale of liquor for beverage purposes accomplishes this end.

The manufacture, distribution, or use of intoxicating liquor for mechanical, pharmaceutical, scientific, medicinal, sacramental or any other purpose except as a beverage is not prohibited by this amendment.

Effectiveness of Proposed Amendment

The proposed amendment will be effective. It establishes prohibition as the policy of the National Government. When this amendment is adopted, no state can license the beverage liquor traffic. No legal objection can be raised to the adoption of the proposed amendment, for the United States Supreme Court has twelve times held, "There is no inherent right to sell intoxicating liquor." With the legalized, commercialized, organized beverage traffic abolished, the INCIDENTS of its distribution will be easily eliminated by legislation. Legislation will be necessary in order to make the amendment effective, no matter how drastic the amendment might be. Consequently, the details of legislation on which there may be division of opinion should be left to a legislative body which can settle them by majority vote instead of a two-thirds vote of Congress required to pass the resolution or a three-fourths vote of the states required to ratify the amendment.

Any state may add to the prohibitions provided in the proposed amendment, but no state can authorize what the Constitution of the United States prohibits.

The states now have plenary power to prohibit all phases of the traffic, and all power which they do not specifically delegate to the National Government is reserved to the states. (Tenth Amendment, U. S. Constitution.)

NINETEEN PROHIBITION STATES

Maine	West Virginia
Kansas	Virginia
Oklahoma	Washington
North Dakota	Oregon
North Carolina	Colorado
Georgia	Arizona
Mississippi	Iowa
Tennessee	Arkansas
Alabama	Idaho
South Carolina

STATES THAT WILL VOTE IN 1916

Vermont	March
South Dakota	November
California	November
Nebraska	November
Montana	November
Michigan	November
Idaho	November
Alaska	November

Enforcement of Proposed Amendment

Power is given to the legislative department of government by constitutional provision and judicial construction to provide for the enforcement of laws or constitutional amendments. When power is given to the Federal Government and the state government concurrently over a subject-matter they have the same authority within their jurisdictions to pass laws to make their statutes enforceable, and to provide for all needful legislation having a reasonable relation to the end to be accomplished.

Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court in rendering the decision of the Purity Extract Company vs. Lynch, 226 U. S., said:

> "It is also well established that when a state exercising its recognized authority undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures, having reasonable relation to that end, as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective."

This principle was laid down in the case of Hoke vs. State, 227 U. S., 309, where the court said:

> "Our dual form of government has its perplexities, state and nation have different spheres of jurisdiction as we have said. But it must be kept in mind that we are one people and the powers reserved to the states and those conferred on the nation are adapted to be exercised, whether independently or concurrently, to promote the general welfare materially or morally."

Such decisions might be multiplied. It follows, therefore, that when prohibition is adopted, either Congress or the states may define what is intoxicating liquor and what is a sale. In those definitions they may prohibit any device for evading the law, e. g., alcoholic drinks such as near beer, fake tonics, etc., and clubs or so-called combinations of individuals to operate a brewery or other manufactory for furnishing intoxicating liquor.

Power of Congress to Aid Enforcement of Proposed Amendment

Congress may prohibit any incidental phase of the traffic by a tax. It destroyed the phosphorus match industry by a prohibitive tax and has exercised this authority in other instances. If, notwithstanding this amendment, any part of the traffic continues it could be destroyed in this way. The United States would then be using its taxing power not to encourage the traffic but to carry out the prohibition policy and law enforcement.

There is no danger of general home distillation unless the laws which now prevent such manufacture of liquor are repealed. There is no basis of fact for assuming that this will be done. Not only would existing laws continue but necessary additional laws would be enacted in response to growing public sentiment.

Judicial Aid in Enforcement of Proposed Amendment

If the prohibition policy is established for the United States, there is also good reason to believe that the United States Supreme Court would take the same position with reference to liquor as they have already taken with reference to lotteries. In the case of Stone vs. Miss., 101 U. S., the court held that

> "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their public servants."

The opponents of prohibition in explaining away this case have always argued that while the Supreme Court could take that stand with reference to lotteries, they could never do so with reference to intoxicating liquors, because so many of the states license it and recognize it as a legal business. It has already been hinted that when the Government shall have taken the same stand against the liquor traffic that they have against lotteries, then the courts would place them on the same footing.

How Proposed Amendment Will Help Wet States

1. The saloon and beverage traffic, which daily tempts the youth, debauches the weak and makes poor those of moderate income, will be eliminated.

2. The states will be more likely to pass law-enforcement legislation and other advanced legislation when the legalized, nationally-recognized, beverage traffic is prohibited. The patriotic appeal to uphold the nation's prohibition policy will be much stronger than the appeal to a state to prohibit the traffic. It does not follow that a state which will not now prohibit the traffic will refuse to enact adequate legislation to enforce the national policy.

3. The wet states will be the greatest beneficiaries, because they cannot now free themselves from the liquor traffic without the aid of the nation. If the proposed amendment is not as far-reach-

(Continued on Page Four)

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Prohibition Saves One Alabama County $19,000

How Alabama is going to be reimbursed for the loss of money from saloon licenses is most satisfactorily answered in the report recently given out by Deputy Sheriff E. B. Knight of Jefferson county, as reported in the Birmingham Ledger. "Five months under prohibition law have now elapsed and the results are beginning to be very apparent. The decrease in crime in Jefferson county is clearly indicated by the jail records, which show a total number of state prisoners now in jail of 160, against 336 December 1, 1914, one year ago today, and this in the face of the fact that no 'straw bonds' are being taken, and that every care is taken to ascertain the absolute sufficiency of every bond approved."

This decrease of 176 prisoners, the Montgomery (Ala.) Journal estimates, will save the state $52.80 each day, as the state pays thirty cents a day for feeding its prisoners in the Jefferson county jail. Multiplying this amount by thirty gives $1,584 as the amount saved each month; and multiplying it again by twelve, the number of months in the year, we find that $19,008 will be saved the county annually.

If a similar situation exists in a few other counties, the total saving will easily offset the license fees lost by prohibition.

Governor-Elect of Massachusetts An Opponent of the Liquor Traffic

Among the new governors who are willing to be classed in the ranks of the opponents of the liquor traffic is Hon. Samuel W. McCall, governor-elect of Massachusetts, who has given the following statement of his views on the subject:

"I devoutly wish I knew a cure for the disease of drunkenness which is as ancient a plague as afflicts mankind. The great factor in securing temperance is the creation of a public sentiment in its favor. No effort should be spared in educating the people to its benefits. Alcohol destroys human energy. Our laws should increase in the direction of restraint to the very limit to which they will be supported by public opinion."

Decrease of 42,000,000 Gallons in Manufacture of Distilled Liquors

Effective answer to the charge made by the liquor interests that "Prohibition does not prohibit," is furnished by the report of Commissioner Osborn of the Internal Revenue Department for the fiscal year ending June 1, 1915. According to this report the manufacture of both distilled and fermented liquors has very materially decreased. The production of distilled liquors, exclusive of fruit brandies, was 42,477,492.8 gallons less than for the preceding year. The figures for 1914 were 174,611,645 gallons, and for 1915, 132,134,152.2. There has been a decrease of 6,358,744 in the number of barrels of beer manufactured, the number of barrels for 1914 being 66,105,445 and for 1915, 59,746,701.

The only liquors showing an increased production are fruit brandies, with 8,521,951 taxable gallons this year, as against 7,307,897.2 gallons in 1914, an increase of 1,214,053.8 gallons.

For the first three months of this fiscal year, for which figures have also been made public, there is also a satisfactory decrease in the output of distilled and fermented liquors as compared with the corresponding three months of the previous year. Of fermented liquors the output for the first three months of the new fiscal year was 17,458,565 barrels, as compared with 19,181,605 for the same months last year. Of distilled liquors there were withdrawn during the first three months of the current fiscal year 27,903,829 gallons, and for last year 38,456,420 gallons.

North Carolina Town Needs No Court

Edenton, N. C., was scheduled for a week of court the early part of December. The day for the opening of court arrived, and with it the solicitor and the judge. There was lacking only a criminal docket, for in this prohibition town there was not a single criminal case to be tried. As there was nothing for the grand jury to do, the jurors were discharged, and the time of the court was given to the consideration of minor civil cases.

Kansas Banks Show Increased Deposits

Prohibition Kansas had more money in its state and national banks in September of this year than ever before, according to a statement under date of December 2 from the state bank commissioner. The report showed aggregate deposits of $224,110,576.20. The year's increase in deposits is given at thirteen per cent, the deposits September 12, 1914, being $25,696,474.67 less than those of this year.

New Kentucky Governor Announces Himself a Total Abstainer

Governor A. O. Stanley of Kentucky, a former Congressman, and the candidate supported by the liquor interests of the state, has made recent announcement that while he is governor not a drop of intoxicating liquor will be admitted to the governor's mansion, nor served at any dinner, and that he himself will be a total abstainer.

Beer Manufacture Prohibited

According to Mexican consular reports, Governor Berlanga of the State of Jalisco, Mexico, has issued a decree forbidding the sale of beer or fermented beverages containing over four per cent of alcohol. The manufacture of alcohol from corn, potatoes, sweet potatoes or agave plants is also said to be prohibited.

Florida Saloons Closed

Ocala and Marion county, Florida, at a December election, voted out the liquor traffic. The remaining wet cities of Florida all border on the ocean and gulf, and the entire interior of the state is dry. The Davis Law, passed at the last session of the legislature, has resulted in closing more than 200 saloons in the state, leaving only about 75 wholesale, mail order and retail liquor houses.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

(Continued from Page Three)

ing as the laws of the most advanced prohibition states, these wet states will more readily reach that standard when the saloon and beverage traffic throughout the nation are destroyed.

How Proposed Amendment will Help Dry States

1. The prohibition states will no longer be handicapped in law enforcement by outside brewers, distillers, and dealers who constantly attempt to nullify the law and sell liquor in dry territory by use of the mails and other agencies of interstate commerce.

2. The states will still have power to go just as far as they desire in prohibiting any phase of the liquor traffic, and will have the aid which comes from a national prohibition policy.

3. A prohibition policy established, the whole government will be lifted to a higher level; courts, legislative bodies, and executive officers will be encouraged to use even their discretionary powers for the public good.

Team Work Under Proposed Amendment

National prohibition will result in team work between the states and the nation in fighting a great evil. It places a double power back of the law when the states and Federal Government are linked together with a similar purpose to carry out a given policy. Our greatest difficulty today is that the National Government has one policy and the prohibition states have another. With a prohibition standard in the nation and the states, both state and Federal officers would furnish what Mr. Justice Johnson called, in his concurring opinion in the Gibbon vs. Ogden case (9 Wheat., 1): "A frank and candid co-operation for the general good."

Proposed Amendment—A Challenge

This amendment is a challenge to every patriot.

It has been endorsed by more than eight million petitioners and by all the leading temperance organizations of the nation.

It is adapted to the needs of the hour.

It is both effective and enforceable.

The wording of the amendment is fought bitterly by the combined liquor interests, because they realize the proposed amendment attacks their business at its most vulnerable point.

It provides that the nation's standard shall not be lower than that of prohibition of the beverage liquor traffic, but does not stand in the way of more stringent legislation which may be adopted by any state.

In the presence of such a responsibility and opportunity let all friends of prohibition devote their best energies for the submission and the ratification of the proposed amendment—the logical next step in the destruction of the nation's greatest enemy.

WAYNE B. WHEELER, ANNA A. GORDON, EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE, ELLA A. BOOLE, MARGARET DYE ELLIS, JAMES CANNON, JR., Sub-committee of National Prohibition Amendment Commission.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE BARTENDERS?

"There are about 100,000 bartenders in the United States. What will become of them when the saloon is abolished? What is it that makes a successful bartender? It is his ability as a salesman, and a man who is a good bartender will make a good clerk or salesman in practically any other kind of business. Furthermore, it requires many more people to sell $200,000,000 worth of bread and clothing, for example, than it does to sell liquor of the same value. And it is more than likely that at least as many salaried employes, such as traveling salesmen, bookkeepers and stenographers, will be employed. —Charles Stelzle.

HOW THE $2,000,000,000 WASTED FOR DRINK COULD BE EXPENDED FOR CHRISTMAS CHEER

If the nickels, dimes, quarters and half dollars which flow in a steady stream into the tills of the saloonkeepers, brewers and distillers could be converted into Christmas comfort and cheer for the friendless and forlorn, how many thousands of human beings would be made happy at the blessed Christmas time and the whole year.

According to an estimate made by ex-Congressman Hobson, each year the liquor dealers of the country receive from the people over $2,000,000,000. This is a direct head tax of about $20 for every man, woman and child, and for each family an average of approximately $100. A rough calculation indicates that the amount of money squandered each year for drink would:

Pay the wages of 100,000 unemployed men at a salary of $1,000 per year, in legitimate and worthy lines of business	$100,000,000
Establish 1,000 lodging houses at a cost of $50,000 each, and 1,000 hospitals at a cost of $100,000 each	150,000,000
Enable 100,000 worthy old people to receive pensions at the rate of $500 a year	50,000,000
Keep in high school for four years 100,000 boys and girls, at an expense of $1,000	100,000,000
Provide a four-year college course for 100,000 students, at an expense of $4,000	400,000,000
Give to needy families certificates for 200,000 tons of coal, at $9.00 a ton	1,800,000
Provide milk certificates to supply 100,000 needy city babies with certified milk for one year, at the rate of $50 per year per child	5,000,000
Pay the tuition in a Y. M. C. A. or other night school for 25,000 newsboys, and establish 100 night schools for other deserving boys and girls, the expense of establishing and maintaining these night schools to be not more than $50,000 each	6,250,000
Provide for the maintenance for one year of 1,000 nurseries and kindergartens for city babies whose mothers are obliged to work during the day, these institutions to cost in the neighborhood of $25,000 each	25,000,000
Make possible the establishment of 500 schools in foreign communities for the teaching of model housekeeping and the proper care of babies to girls and mothers, at an expense of $25,000 each	12,500,000
Make possible, in the 220 large cities of the United States, the establishment and endowment, at approximately $200,000 each, of five convalescent homes, so that patients coming from the city and county hospitals might have a comfortable place in which to recuperate	220,000,000
Pay for the establishment of five homes for incurables in 220 large cities in the United States, at the rate of $200,000	220,000,000
Cover the expense of municipal Christmas trees in 2,500 cities of the United States having a population of over 3,000, with gifts to 12,000,000 children above the age of fourteen in these communities of warm clothing, cap, mittens, skates or a doll for each	150,000,000
Make possible the giving of a Christmas dinner for 25,000 newsboys in the large cities of the United States, a substantial Christmas remembrance to accompany each dinner	625,000
Provide for a royal Christmas celebration for the patients in every county and state hospital in the United States, and for the inmates of every jail and penitentiary	158,825,000

After making these investments, there would be left approximately $400,000,000 to finance the Christlike enterprises carried on the year around by the city and home missionary societies of America.

—Courtesy Chicago Tribune

The Kind of Community Christmas Tree That is Found in Cities Which Have Abolished Saloons

Is Prohibition a Rude Interference With Personal Liberty?

IS IT TRUE THAT THE DESIRE FOR MILD ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IS A NATURAL ONE?

D. H. KRESS, M. D.

The New York Evening Journal some time ago contained an article by Doctor Parkhurst on "Temperance," which has since been referred to for the purpose of justifying the sale of wines and beers, by those who have a commercial interest in the manufacture and sale of these products.

The doctor says: "The appetite for drink somewhat more highly flavored than any which is yielded by the brook, or cistern is a natural one—natural in the sense of not needing to be acquired, but existing as a part of our physical constitution, and like the other bodily tendencies inclining toward some means of satisfaction."

"Once realizing that the craving is legitimate," he claims, "it is a rude interference with personal liberty for the law to tell me what I shall or shall not drink, and how much."

In commenting upon this, the editor says, "Dr. Parkhurst is right. You cannot change men's appetites or do away with them—men will drink if they want to. Therefore," he says, "make it easy for them to drink stimulants that do little harm or none. Make it difficult or impossible for them to get the highly alcoholic poisonous drinks."

But why, we may ask, make it impossible to get the highly alcoholic poisonous drinks? If some men possess an appetite for the highly alcoholic drinks, have they not as much right to satisfy this craving as have others who have an appetite for the milder alcoholic drinks? Would not one be a rude interference with personal liberty as truly as the other? The one who drinks two glasses of beer gets as much alcohol as the one who takes one good-sized glass of whisky. The two glasses of beer would, no doubt, be more injurious than the glass of whisky—why prohibit one and not the other? The editor says, "Drunkenness in the United States diminished immediately with the establishment of breweries and with the sale of beer."

I do not doubt the sincerity of these assertions, but they are misleading. The decrease in actual drunkenness must be ascribed to the efforts put forth by temperance advocates to suppress or prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages, and not to the advent of beer.

In England, where the theory advocated by Dr. Parkhurst has been fully worked out, drunkenness has become so common among women that in the city of London, more women than men are said to be arrested in the streets for being drunk and disorderly. In France, where the use of wine has been encouraged, more alcohol is consumed per capita than in any other country in the world.

The claim is made that beer is liquid bread. This is also erroneous and misleading. Beer is not a nutrient. It is never taken because of its nutrient properties. It is used because it intoxicates. According to Doctor Liebig, eight quarts of beer taken daily for twelve months would give the consumer the amount of nutriment found in a five-pound loaf of bread.

The beer drinker, though apparently healthy, is in reality not so. He is considered a poor risk by all life insurance companies. He is also considered an undesirable case for surgery. In the city of Munich, Germany, where beer drinking is common, degeneracy is equally common. Doctor Bollinger says it is difficult to find an adult resident of that city who has a normal heart or normal kidneys. Not only physical but moral degeneracy is equally marked in all beer drinking countries. The prevalent use of beer has developed a grossness and coarseness of body and mind among the young men of Germany that is becoming proverbial. Professors in the leading universities are painfully conscious of the deplorable effect of beer upon student life, which is shown by the coarse jests, beer jokes, and beer literature.

—By Permission of New York Journal

Beer drinking leads to the use of the stronger alcoholic drinks, instead of leading away from their use. The boy that begins with beer at eighteen or twenty is almost certain to prefer whisky or rum by the time he attains the age of forty or fifty. It is recognized by science that stimulants, no matter what they may be, pave the way for stronger stimulants.

Doctor Parkhurst's claim that the craving for drink "somewhat more highly flavored than any which is yielded by the brook or cistern is a natural one," is not correct. It is significant that no other creature aside from man craves alcohol.

Why does man crave strong drink? The only reason why alcohol in any form is ever taken by man is because of its anæsthetic powers. It produces a state of partial unconsciousness. The poor man forgets his poverty. The man exposed to cold, feels the cold less. Alcohol makes him unconscious of his real condition and danger. The man who is hungry feels as well satisfied by taking a drink as though he had been fed. Alcohol does not make the weak man stronger; it merely renders him unconscious of his weakness. As soon as the effect of the one dose wears off, the unwelcome symptoms return with a deeper shade. This calls for another and still another dose. In order to experience a continuous state of relief from these disagreeable symptoms, a continuous state of mild intoxication is necessary. Many have discovered this, and are therefore in a state of partial unconsciousness all the time from the continuous use of alcohol in some form.

The unpleasant and disagreeable sensations of the stomach resulting from the use of pepper, mustard and other irritants may also be relieved by a dose of alcohol. Alcohol will not remove the irritation; in fact, it intensifies it, being itself an irritant, but for a time it paralyses the nerve terminals in the stomach, saying peace when there is no peace. To the one who is careless in his habits of eating, alcohol may be considered a necessity in order to experience comfort. The relief obtained from the use of the stomach bitters and tonics so highly recommended is due to the presence in them of alcohol. Some of these contain as large a percentage of alcohol as is found in whisky.

The man who has injured a fellow being and experiences remorse of conscience, instead of resorting for relief to drink, should pursue the only wise course that can be pursued, that is to confess his faults to the one injured and make the wrong right. If he has sinned against God and violated his conscience, he will find relief by confessing his sin to God. The gospel does that which wine and beer claim to do. The gospel leaves a man free from condemnation, and, at the same time, clothed and in his right mind; while alcohol removes not the condemnation, but merely the feeling of condemnation by deadening the brain for the time being.

No man can afford to depend on alcohol, no matter what his condition may be, for it makes promises which it never fulfills. A man can never afford to place himself in a state of partial unconsciousness. He needs to be in full possession of all his faculties, and needs the power and acuteness of all his nerves of special sense.

He cannot afford to pull down the danger signal erected by nature when transgressing the laws of his being, and then make himself believe that he shall have peace.

Men cannot afford to take wine or strong drink either in large or medicinal doses, for the effect of it in all doses, large or small, tends to make them conscienceless. It tends to place man on a level with the brute creation, which differ from man in that they possess no conscience. Brutes can injure each other and not suffer from loss of sleep because of remorse of conscience, neither is their digestion interfered with because of worry. They sleep and digest their food just as well after doing an injury to another as before. With man it is

(Continued on Page Seven)

RUSSIA'S EMANCIPATION FROM VODKA

UNION SIGNAL IN RUSSIAN HOUSEHOLD WORKS A TRANSFORMATION

Ernest Gordon, the author of "The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe," has recently visited Russia for the purpose of investigating conditions under the prohibition edict. Writing of his experiences in The Record of Christian Work he says:

"For the past fourteen days I have walked the streets of Petrograd and interviewed doctors, professors, priests, and plain people. It has been a novel experience. For the first time in the modern European world a city of nearly two millions is to be found without drinkshop or drunkard. There has been in the Tsar's prohibition rescript something of the immediateness and finality of the fiats of Genesis I. Let there be abstinence! Let there be order! Let the prisons empty! Let the savings banks fill up! Let the hospitals, once crowded with alcohol-poisoned, now give room to the needy sick! Let street fights cease! Let homes be reconstructed! A whole epic of social creation was wrapped up in the admirable ukase.

"We were sitting in the parish house of the Church of the Regeneration listening to Father Mirtov as he recounted all these wonderful results of Russian prohibition. Down below, hundreds of wives of Russian soldiers were receiving the allowances which the government gave them while their husbands were away in the army. The soldier wives of England are reported in the English press as too often hanging about the gin palaces in slatternly alcoholic idleness, but these women were sober and self-respecting. Father Mirtov, orator and leader of the abstinence movement in the Russian Church, is a man of impressive personality, of high figure, leonine mane, intelligent, winning face,—full of the fire and warmth of the Russian idealist. He has organized 2,000 temperance societies all over Russia. In every section of every ward of Petrograd he has his faithful representatives drilled to watch over the temperance situation in their neighborhood. I asked him if the Russian clergy would protest against the return of drinkshops. In reply he reached for a thick publication of the Holy Synod and read on and on from a statement of Archbishop Vladimir, the metropolitan of Petrograd.

'Not only 'ought vodka never to be allowed re-entrance into Russia, but beer as well, and not only beer but wine.'

Union Signal Works Transformation

"I was invited the other evening to a conference of the leading anti-alcoholists of Petrograd to confer as to what steps could be taken to bring to bear upon the world at large the influence of this astonishing Russian experiment. Next to me sat a lady in Salvation Army costume who had come in late, apparently from some other meeting. Her English was so impeccable in accent and expression that I thought her from England, but learned that she had been there only on brief visits. Knowing the not uncommon state of Salvationist finance I had some little plan in the back of my head of turning translation work in her direction but was later warned by a friend that I might blunder if I made such proposals in Russia. Sure enough! In calling upon her the next day I found, when the bonnet was removed, a face of distinctly gentlewomanly type, belonging to a person with landed property to the south of Moscow. She was greatly interested in Christian and temperance work and this is how it came about. Her brother, an officer in the Russo-Japanese war, had been taken prisoner and interned in Japan. A lady on the staff of the American Board visiting among the Russian prisoners found among the moujiks this gentleman speaking English and arranged to pass his letters via America to his Russian sister. Friendships were developed. The Russian lady received from her American correspondent copies of THE UNION SIGNAL. Wine had hitherto seemed as indispensable a part of the dinner service as plates, but it now disappeared and the Alexander Nevsky Temperance Union, the great temperance organization of the Russian Church received a valuable helper into its ranks. She began organizing branches among the peasants in her neighborhood, doing what one woman could to stay the terrible tide of vodka drunkenness. As all Russians, she is now rejoicing in the recession of the alcoholic deluge, the appearance of dry land again in Holy Russia."

GOODBYE TO THE PERAMBULATING SALOON

The Denver and Rio Grande railroad has announced that it will celebrate the New Year by putting into effect a rule against serving in its dining cars any alcoholic liquors. Its chief reason for this action is the fact that on January 1, Colorado becomes prohibition territory, but the rule will apply to its entire system, including Utah and New Mexico, which are not prohibition states. Several other important railroad lines have also declared their intention of adopting a similar policy in the near future. Among them are the Michigan Central, Missouri Pacific and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul. The reasons given by the men representing some of these roads are:

There is difficulty in keeping track of the wet and dry counties through which trains are running, and conforming to the local laws.

New York Herald

The increase in prohibition sentiment has made the sale of intoxicants an economic loss.

The sale of intoxicating liquors on trains is not consistent with the rules and orders of the road prohibiting employes from indulging.

The Indianapolis News in commenting on this action says, "Liquor was served in the dining cars for the convenicnce of the public and for the profit of the railroads. Now that they find public sentiment changing and becoming generally averse to the liquor business the railroads likewise discover that by dispensing liquor on board trains they are actually weakening discipline. Many of the greatest transportation systems of the country long ago declared in favor of temperance among their workmen, if not, indeed, in favor of absolute prohibition. Promotion and favors are conferred on those who do not drink, and a premium is thus placed on 'efficient abstinence.'"

The National Association of Railway Commissioners which met in San Francisco last October recommended that all the states enact laws prohibiting the drinking of liquors on railway trains.

IS PROHIBITION A RUDE INTERFERENCE WITH PERSONAL LIBERTY?

(Continued from Page Six)

different. Being in possession of a conscience, he cannot do wrong without violating it and suffering as a result. This has a depressing influence upon the entire body and its functions. Alcohol removes the effect and leaves the cause unremoved, while the gospel removes the cause and also the effect; hence the admonition, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess, but be filled with the spirit." One is the devil's substitute for the other.

The craving for drink cannot be said to be either natural or legitimate, and it is not a rude interference with personal liberty to prohibit the sale of drink when it removes the moral restraint from men and women, and places them on a level with the brute.

It is the so-called moderate use of strong drink, and the free use of the milder alcoholic drinks, that is chiefly responsible for the immorality, crime, etc., that exist. The man who drinks until he becomes helpless is an object of pity, but he is harmless. But the man whose nobler instincts and moral sense have been blunted by small doses of alcohol, but who is able to walk our streets and mingle in society as a sober man—he is the one who is to be feared. It is to the use of the milder alcoholic beverages that most of the immoral acts and crimes of impulse are traceable.

The beer drinker is of all drinkers the most undesirable to have in any community. To prohibit the sale of beer is not a rude interference with personal liberty, but a means of protecting the virtue and well-being of our people.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christain Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, December 23, 1915

GOAL FOR 1916—SIXTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Indianapolis, Indiana, December 8-13.

The Report of the National Convention, held in Seattle, also the Annual Leaflet for 1916, are ready thus early in the year, and copies of each have been mailed to members of the Executive Committee.

The price of the Report is 15 cents, and that of the Annual Leaflet, 75 cents per hundred. Every worker needs a copy of each for her desk.

WORTHY OF CAREFUL PERUSAL

The brief on National Constitutional Prohibition on pages 3 and 4 of this issue was prepared by a sub-committee of the National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Commission, who have given in it the results of their study of the question from every point of view. It should have the careful and thoughtful perusal of every citizen. All white ribboners ought to have copies not only for their own information and for use in answering objections, but also to place in the hands of the ministers of their community. Additional copies, for postage only, may be obtained at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters.

VICTIMS OF "PERSONAL LIBERTY"

Because the father of the two winsome children whose picture appears on the cover page of this issue saw fit to exercise his "personal liberty" by spending all his wages for drink, six-year-old Marie and little Billy, aged four, were found by a policeman on the streets of Philadelphia the other night crying with cold and hunger. The little ones were sitting by the side of their father, who lay in a drunken stupor, and were pleading with him to get up. The father was carried to the police station, and the officers gladly contributed money with which to purchase supper for the children.

The story, as told by the Philadelphia North American, discloses a domestic tragedy not unlike thousands which every week are brought to the notice of the police in great cities. The father of the children had been an expert engineer, earning two hundred dollars a month. His appetite for liquor caused him to lose one position after another. Last spring the mother died, and the two little ones were left in his care. Ordinarily a kind and thoughtful father, he could not resist the saloon's allurements, and then came the sad night when he forgot wholly his responsibility as a parent, and the children were left worse than homeless on the city streets.

When they were settled comfortably in the cozy, warm rooms of the almshouse, little Marie said, "We want to stay here. Aren't you going to let us?" "Oh, we were awfully hungry," she explained to the sympathetic nurse, and little Billy cordially nodded assent. He could not talk—not just then, anyway. A fat piece of "jelly bread" was taking his entire attention. But a little later he inquired, "Does Santa Claus come here?" and as he kicked his legs in the air he announced, "Oh, if he comes here I want to stay, too."

The good people of Philadelphia will see that the Christmas saint does not forget Marie and Billy, and no doubt a home will be provided for them. But what about the thousands of "Maries" and "Billies" the nation over who will have no Christmas because the wages of the father have been left at the corner saloon?

CAN YOU CLASSIFY YOUR CONGRESSMEN?

At the hearing last winter in Congress on the resolution proposing a prohibition amendment to the national constitution, a member of the House of Representatives described the different mental attitudes of his colleagues on the question after this fashion:

"The average tory mind has just four mental attitudes toward all public questions. Whenever anything new is proposed, especially if it be in the interest of the people, the tory mind at once adopts toward it its first mental attitude. It says, 'Why, this thing never was done before. Therefore, it is wrong, immoral and unconstitutional. Our fathers never did anything like this, and that is sure proof that it is wrong.' Then after the people have begun to think the thing over a little and have come to the conclusion that it is not quite so wrong after all, the tory mind adopts towards it its second mental attitude, and it says, 'Why, this may be all right as a theory, but it is not practical. It will not work. This is a practical world, and you cannot make this thing work.' And then after the people have thought it over a while longer and concluded that not only is it right, but that it probably will work, the tory mind adopts toward it its third mental attitude, and it says, 'Why, this thing may be all right as a theory, and it may be practical some time, but not now. This is the wrong time to try it. It will unsettle business conditions if you try it now. It is not an issue in this campaign anyway. This is the wrong time to bring it up.' And then after the people have thoroughly made up their minds that it is right and that it is practical, and that they want it, the tory mind adopts its fourth and final mental attitude, and says, 'Why, we were for this thing from the very beginning.'"

If the gentleman's analysis of the state of mind of his fellow members was accurate—and the applause and laughter which his remarks elicited would indicate that it was—it is high time the people began to shower the members of Congress with testimony calculated to accelerate a change of mental attitude.

In answer to the argument that National Prohibition never has been tried, therefore cannot be effective, one word only is necessary—Russia. As to its being impractical, frequent reports from the Russian empire and prohibition territory in the United States furnish abundant proof of the fallacy of that statement.

Replying to the assertion that the psychological time for it to go into effect in this country has not yet arrived, a sufficiently insistent demand from a sufficiently large number of voting citizens will convince the members of Congress to the contrary.

"THEY THAT BE FOR US"

There is nothing in the history of the past month to encourage the anti-prohibitionist to hope for a recession of the prohibition wave.

The supreme courts of two states—Colorado and Washington—have rendered decisions sustaining the prohibition law as voted for by the people at the election in the fall of 1914.

The farmers of the states of Michigan and Nebraska declared in favor of statewide prohibition, notwithstanding the repeated warnings of the liquorites that by so doing they are advocating a movement destructive to their interests.

The educators of South Dakota and Southern California have put themselves on record unreservedly for the elimination of the liquor traffic from their respective commonwealths.

From far-off Newfoundland in the north has come the news of the complete routing of John Barleycorn by the vote of the people, and from troubled Mexico on the south are received reports that prohibitive measures are in many districts being rigidly enforced.

Finally that overworked argument of the liquorites, "Prohibition does not prohibit," has received a blow from the Internal Revenue Department, which reports a great reduction in taxes on both distilled and malted liquors for the year ending June, 1915, and for the first three months of the new fiscal year.

PROSPECTS OF A DRY STATE DO NOT DISCOURAGE REAL ESTATE INVESTORS IN SEATTLE

Since the Washington Supreme court handed down its decision upholding the dry law several large real estate deals, aggregating many thousands of dollars, have taken place in Seattle. Plans are also being perfected for the construction of a natatorium on Second Avenue with a frontage of 180 feet and a depth of 108 feet. The manager of the real estate department of one of the largest firms in Seattle says: "Investors have entirely disregarded the wet and dry issue. It has not influenced them and it has not turned aside buying. This is gratifying."

Just why any one should ever suppose that because the people of any city stop buying booze they will perforce stop buying land, or paying rent or patronizing the meat market, bake shop, grocery or clothing store is hard to understand. Watch their evolution of thought!

KANSAS THE TARGET OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

That the Kansas delegates in the national conventions as well as the Kansas delegates in Congress will be the target of the liquor interests, the Kansas City (Mo.) Journal thinks certain. That paper says that already the liquor dealers are gathering information about Kansas to be used in these conventions and in Congress. "They have employed adepts who can make figures show most anything and the aforesaid adepts now are beginning to grind out literature to prove that prohibition has bankrupted Kansas and wrecked her people morally. One of the amusing declarations is that prohibition has increased insanity. It is the first time the claim has been made that liquor soothes a frenzied brain. Against these arguments the Kansas representatives will point to the huge bank deposits, the scarcity of paupers, empty poor houses, the best schools in the land, 500,000 children who never saw an open saloon and to the prosperous condition of the people as a whole.

"We will simply defy the disciples of despair, want and misery to show us a wet state in the Union where the people are more prosperous, more enlightened and more happy," says U. S. Senator Charles Curtis.

NEW YORK'S BIG GAINS

New York state appears to have made the greatest proportionate gain in the temperance movement during the year of any state in the country. This gain is threefold in character: in no-license territory and increased temperance representation both in the state legislature and in the National Congress. Under the Raines law, which was designed primarily as a revenue measure, the citizens of the state are given small opportunity to vote on the question of prohibition. Only citizens of townships are permitted such a vote, the citizens of municipalities being wholly disfranchised in this regard. Nevertheless there has been during the past year a net gain of 78 totally dry towns. Of state assemblymen there are this year forty-four members pledged to the passage of the optional prohibition referendum bill, while last year only thirty were so pledged. Of the five Congressional vacancies to be filled in the entire country three were in New York, and for all three, men committed to the support of National Constitutional Prohibition were elected, whereas the retiring Congressmen were opposed to such legislation.

MRS. MUNNS BEREAVED

Mrs. Mary Cairns Pattison, wife of John Pattison of Spokane, Wash., daughter of Rev. James and Sarah Spence Cairns of Seattle, and sister of Margaret Cairns Munns, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., passed out of this life December 18 at her home in Spokane. It will be remembered that Mrs. Elizabeth C. Trimble, eldest sister of Mrs. Munns, passed away immediately preceding the Seattle Convention. The hearts of all white ribboners will go out in loving sympathy to these friends doubly bereaved in so short a time. Mrs. Pattison was a member of the Spokane W. C. T. U. and greatly beloved by a large circle of friends.

PROHIBITION RUINING WHEELING?

The havoc that is being wrought by prohibition in West Virginia cities is a matter for serious consideration by every citizen of the republic who is contemplating voting for such a policy in his own community. As an illustration, take the record of the city of Wheeling. According to the Youngstown (O.) Telegram, $750,000 is the value of the buildings under construction at the end of the first year of prohibition, the greatest year in building in the city's history.

The Reymann Brewing Plant was converted into a packing plant, employing 225 men where the brewery employed 75.

White Front Cafe rented for $250 a month. Now as a confectionery it rents for $300.

The Senate saloon was torn down and on its site a bank is being built, made possible by the added prosperity under prohibition.

Within a distance of two blocks buildings, some of them three story structures, formerly occupied by liquor firms, now house a ladies' and men's furnishings firm, a wall paper store, a drug store, a butcher shop, a shoe store, a confectionery, a billiard room and an automobile agency.

There are more restaurants and hotels in the city than ever before.

The business of one shoe merchant increased thirty-five per cent during the year.

Number of meals served in the workhouse the last eleven wet months were 41,832.

Number of meals served in the workhouse the first eleven dry months were 10,018.

Saving to the city at ten cents per meal, $2,382.

Number of workhouse employes last wet year, fifteen.

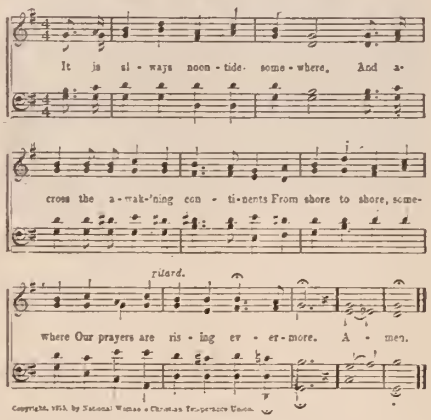
Number of workhouse employes the first dry month, two. This alone cut workhouse expenses $780 a month.

MISPLACED SYMPATHY

Too many people are influenced against taking an outspoken stand on the liquor question by sympathy for the army of men who would be thrown out of work by the enactment of a prohibition law. John F. Cunneen, the well known national labor leader, in a recent address, showed the folly of such reasoning and pleaded that no good citizen should be swerved from his plain duty by the plea of sympathy. He said:

"Democrats and Republicans go to the polls and vote to put men out of business by defeating them for office, and if successful in the election of their favorite ticket they will be elated at putting men out of office, or preventing them from obtaining office. But when it comes to putting a few men out of the saloon business, in order that many more persons may be given work, and in order that jails, penitentiaries, poorhouses and insane asylums may be almost emptied, then the cry 'sympathy' goes up. I want to see the Democrats go to the polls with the same kind of sympathy for the saloon they have for a Republican running for office. I want to see the Republicans go to the polls with the same kind of sympathy for the saloon that they have for a Democrat running for office, and when Democrats and Republicans and other party men go to the polls with that kind of sympathy, or rather, lack of sympathy for the saloon, then the saloon will go and prosperity will come, and homes will be made happy."

Time of Prayer—Noontide



THE TWO DOORS

By S. P. CHARLDAN

O, the doors were high and the doors were wide,
  And they swung on their hinges old,
On the self-same street, and side by side,
  And this is the tale each told:

"Over my threshold old and young,
* Out of the week day road,*
Come in an eager Sunday throng,
* To rest themselves with God."*

"And I am the gate to the underworld,"
  Cried the brother door, as it swung
To pass the form of a broken man,
  And a maudlin curse it flung.

"And through my portal," said the door
* Of the Church, as wide it stood,*
"Flow glory songs forevermore,
* And the strains of brotherhood."*

"I am the door to the Castle of Rum,
  Where a billion drunkards lie
At the foot of the throne of alcohol,
  Where souls of the damned pass by."

"And mine is the door that leads to bliss,
* And the joy of the saints above;*
No other door has swung like this
* To the home of endless love."*

"O, I swing wide for a ghastly tide
  Of mingled blood and shame,
And the toll they pay who pass this way,
  Ah, who shall ever name!"

"And mine is the door that opens in
* To the joys that never fade,*
Where sinful souls no longer sin,
* And no price of shame is paid."*

"O, I have swung since the world was young,
  O, I am an ancient door;
The wise and strong I hasten along,
  And they come back nevermore."

"Come! O, ye groping sons of men!
* Come! Enter in through me!*
For I am the door of now and then,
* The door of Eternity!"*

So the two doors swing on the city street,
  And these are the tales they tell,
And one is the door to Paradise,
  And one is the gate to Hell!

Editor's Note—The above poem was written by Daniel A. Poling and Dr. Charles M. Sheldon one day last winter while on the train during the campaign of the "Flying Squadron." It is well adapted for use as a recitation.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

DECEMBER 23—Crusade Day.

SUPERINTENDENTS

RESCUE WORK

MRS. LURENDA BEVERLY SMITH, Superintendent

To every worker a loving greeting! May the sweet Christmas-tide bring peace and the New Year be full of blessing, spiritual and temporal. By request I repeat the aim of the department. It is as follows:

To enlist the efforts of Christian people in studying the causes of immorality, in rescuing the fallen of both sexes, in arousing and warning parents, guardians and girls against the many traps set for unwary feet which lead to a slavery worse than death; to secure legislation in states that will make traffic in women impossible; and to establish rescue homes where erring women can receive shelter, Christian care, religious instruction and be taught a self-supporting occupation.

The work accomplished in the department really can be classed with missionary endeavor and it is as important today as it was in former years that earnest effort along the lines of "prevention" shall be made. It is just as true today as yesterday that everywhere women need to be aroused to the dangers menacing their children. Today as yesterday we need to stand and demand a single standard of purity. The investigating vice commission in various cities has revealed conditions that have made us blush with shame and regret that as individuals, churches and reform associations we have been so indifferent.

This department includes both work for the betterment of the masses, by means of education, and evangelization of the fallen of both sexes.

Great advance is being made along legislative lines. President Wilson has given encouragement and the weight of his influence to the social constructive legislation enacted by the Federal government, and nearly every state has strengthened its laws to protect girlhood. And thus the good work progresses, slowly, to be sure, but steadily. I hope in my next official communication to be able to give some interesting facts concerning the Japanese work along the Pacific Coast.

Do not forget to circulate literature. It can be secured at the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., or of the National superintendent. Remember that the department has three lecturers, all specialists. They are Rev. Eugenia F. St. John, London Heights, Kansas City, Kan.; Mrs. Lora S. LaMance, 506 N. Byers Ave., Joplin, Mo., and Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 305 E. Church St., Elmira, N. Y. All these workers are women of experience and fine speakers.

Let us make this our most faithful year of service to humanity. In this way may we best serve our Lord.

427 Mulberry St., Ottawa, Kan.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

At the Montana State Teachers' Association, held at Great Falls, November 22-24, the W. C. T. U. was represented on the program by Mrs. L. O. Middleton, National lecturer for the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction and associate superintendent of School Savings and Thrift. Mrs. Middleton's message to the teachers covered both of these educational departments and was cordially received by the teachers. School savings banks have been in operation in Great Falls since September, 1914, and the children have deposited over $10,000. While in Great Falls Mrs. Middleton addressed the 600 high school students, in a body, and was one of the speakers at the union Thanksgiving service. While in Montana she visited the towns of Cascade, Conrad, Valier and Helena, addressing schools and public audiences and interviewing bankers and members of school boards with regard to the thrift teaching and scientific temperance instruction.

The fall institute of Kent county, Delaware, of which Mrs. Ella D. Cordray is president, was held in Smyrna and brought together many white ribboners including officials of the state organization. Mrs. Kate E. Smithers, the beloved honorary state president, who has recovered from a long illness, was in attendance with all her old-time vigor and alertness manifest. She received a great ovation from the white ribboners. In her usual charming manner she made the address of welcome to her home town. Mrs. Mary B. Donnell of Newark, president of New Castle county, and Miss Lillian Cade, president of Sussex county, were both present and filled prominent places on the program. In the afternoon addresses were given by workers in the various departments. One of the features of the afternoon was the children's hour when the public school attended in a body. They were addressed by Rev. Russell Paynter of Princeton University, who was also the speaker of the evening.

A Sunday afternoon mass meeting in Calumet, Mich., in the interests of state and National Prohibition, which was preceded by a Sunday morning address and followed by three other addresses Sunday and Monday, brought prohibition enthusiasm to a white heat, and as a consequence something is likely to happen to the saloons in Houghton county. Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., was the speaker at all five meetings. The afternoon mass meeting, in particular, taxed the capacity of the theater, and many were turned away. Prohibition sentiment in Michigan is gaining momentum and will reach the goal with banners waving.

The mass meeting for National Constitutional Prohibition of the Oskaloosa (Ia.) W. C. T. U., was held in the Christian church on the afternoon of December 12, Mrs. C. E. Barnard, the local president, presiding. Three short addresses, selections by a ladies' quartette from Penn College, a prayer service, demonstration of the nineteen prohibition states, and the almost unanimous vote in favor of the prohibition amendment, made up the program. The Young People's Branch was most helpful in its co-operation.

The local W. C. T. U. of Portersville, Pa., a union which was organized about eighteen months ago and now has a membership of thirty-five, held an enthusiastic mass meeting on December 12 in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition with an approximate vote of three hundred in favor of the resolution.

The Steubenville (O.) union held a rousing mass meeting with a practically unanimous vote in favor of the constitutional prohibition amendment. Through the activities of the liquor forces, Steubenville, a prohibition town, is in a campaign to keep the saloon out of its territory. The vote will be taken on January 4.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. ANNA M. BECHTEL, a royal-hearted, loyal white-ribboner of Delta, Colorado, who, with her minister husband, accomplished a wonderful work among the Russian-Germans, winning many of them for total abstinence and prohibition.

MR. JOHN W. CUMMINGS, treasurer and business manager of the old National Temperance Society, and for many years prominent in Good Templar circles.

MRS. ELLEN HOLETON, Newfield, N. J., for more than twenty-six years the faithful treasurer of the local union.

Washington's Thirty Years' War With The Liquor Traffic

HOW ONE STATE OUTLAWED JOHN BARLEYCORN

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

To those familiar with the facts it seems needless to say, yet by the people at large it is generally unknown or unnoted, that the campaign for prohibition began in Washington over thirty years ago with the educational work of the W. C. T. U. and has been carried on by that organization with the persistency of the tides, and the one relentless purpose, by the help of God, to abolish the liquor traffic, root and branch.

Failing in repeated efforts to secure from the legislature advanced measures leading toward prohibition, the people representing reform elements united in securing the initiative and referendum law, and immediately began the movement for a state campaign. The law was drafted by attorneys representing the united temperance forces of the state, the necessary petitions were prepared and sent out by the Anti-Saloon League and W. C. T. U., and in due course returned, bearing the signatures of over 112,000 voters, and the fight was on in dead earnest.

Under a well-ordered system, intended to reach every voter with the prohibition propaganda, the W. C. T. U. at once put workers in the field under instructions not only to hold meetings and organize unions and raise money, but to visit the people in their homes, to distribute literature from house to house, to converse personally with voters upon every phase of the law and answer every objection, to place posters along the highways, to penetrate into the remotest country districts, hold neighborhood meetings in the school houses, list voters as registered or unregistered, "wet" or "dry," see that dry voters unregistered were properly registered, and by every honorable means win votes for our cause. Seattle, the metropolis of the state, wickedly, and, to the minds of some, irredeemably wet, was recognized as the danger zone, and here both sides centered activity. The Seattle Federation of Unions for weeks employed a force of women to canvass the homes and meet women voters face to face. The value of the work thus done can never be estimated. Of all the varied endeavors, the magnificent work done by women and men who sacrificed time, business, money, comfort, in some cases almost life itself, there is not space here to speak, nor can the story ever be adequately told. The liquor forces did their utmost, and seemed confident of success, but God willed otherwise

The prohibition law as proposed, known as "Initiative Bill No. 3," was adopted by the voters of the state at the election November 3, 1914, by a majority of 18,632. The total vote cast was 360,048. King county, containing the city of Seattle and the largest voting population, depended upon by the wets to overcome the outside dry majority, gave only 15,589 wet majority. The strenuous work done had so reduced the wet lead that the rest of the state pulled Seattle out of the quagmire and saved her from her own foolishness. Years hence, some of those who fought hardest against their own salvation will recognize the good turn done them by the prohibition "fanatics." Of the thirty-nine counties in the state, thirty-three gave a dry majority.

Suit to test the validity of the bill was filed by the liquor dealers twenty-seven days after election and arguments were heard in June. Judge Wright, of the Thurston county superior court, before whom the case was tried, sustained the law and appeal was at once made to the state supreme court, where arguments were heard October 25, 1915. On December 10, the supreme court handed down a decision, 18,000 words in length, one of the longest ever rendered in the state, unanimously upholding the decision of Judge Wright, thus validating the prohibition law in all its details. On January 1, 1916, one of the strongest prohibition laws enacted by any state will go into effect in the state of Washington. The executive officers of the state and most of its cities, are on record that the law can, must and will be enforced! There will be violations and an effort made to break it down by the usual wet tactics. But the law will stand, the people will stand by those who perform their official duty in its enforcement, and the peace, prosperity and happiness of the state will be no whit jeopardized by the removal of saloons and breweries. Prohibition of the liquor traffic has never ruined any state and never will! The Post-Intelligencer of Seattle closes a recent editorial regarding the situation with the following pertinent paragraph: "Meanwhile, cheer up! Washington is not going to the bow-wows, any more than Oregon and other sister states in the same boat, but is going right ahead, prosperously and happily."

Sweeping Victory for Law Enforcement In Georgia

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD, Macon, Ga.

"Let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God, yea, let them exceedingly rejoice." because after "effectual fervent prayers" and labors not a few, the cause of righteousness triumphed gloriously when, at the recent extraordinary legislative session, the Georgia prohibition law was re-enforced by the enactment of laws abolishing locker clubs and near-beer saloons; regulating liquor shipments and prohibiting all forms of liquor advertisements.

Four pens, which were desired as souvenirs of the momentous occasion. were used by Governor Nat E. Harris when he signed the bills in the presence of a group of Atlanta white ribboners and prohibition leaders, at the Capitol in Atlanta, November 17.

Provisions of the New Laws

Locker clubs are debarred by the new laws. All clubs whatsoever, where members may gather and drink, are outlawed. They are declared nuisances and it is a misdemeanor to rent property for such purposes.

The laws close every beer saloon and prohibit either state or county or city granting any license or collecting any tax on any brewed or distilled liquors. They also prohibit the sale or manufacture of any drink containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol. Near beer is specifically prohibited. Sheriffs are required to publish once a month the names of all persons in their counties who have procured internal revenue licenses, and failure to do so shall constitute a misdemeanor. Solicitors general are required to prosecute all persons who have improperly taken out such licenses, and failure to do so subjects the delinquent to a heavy penalty. No property rights shall exist in any prohibited liquor, or vessels for the unlawful use of liquors. thus subjecting all liquors improperly held to confiscation.

Regarding Shipments of Intoxicating Beverages

The laws prevent express companies, railroads or private concerns from delivering liquors at any place of business, restaurants, hotel or clubs, and make it unlawful for any person to order in one month more than either one-half gallon spirituous or (emphasis on the or) one gallon vinous or six gallons malt liquor. This is the minimum limit so far fixed by the Supreme court. Transportation companies which deliver more than this quantity to any one person in a month are also guilty.

The express companies and other deliveries are compelled to take a sworn statement from consignee that it is for his own personal use, that he is not a drunkard and that he has not received an allowance within thirty days. Carriers are prohibited from delivering liquor to a drunkard. An itemized statement must be filed by carriers within three days of delivery in the office of the county ordinary for public inspection, heavy punishment being provided for deception, dodging or subterfuge. It is rumored that express companies may refuse to handle any liquor shipments in the state, they will be so hedged about and liable to prosecution. The keeping of any prohibited beverages in any place not exclusively a dwelling is prima facie evidence of an intention to violate the law.

All Liquor Advertising Excluded

The advertising of prohibited beverages, whether in newspapers, magazines, by circular or on billboards is prohibited. The new law punishes sheriffs, solicitors and other officials for failure to enforce these laws.

Strong Law Enforcement Sentiment

These laws which were passed by an overwhelming majority of both house and senate will become effective May 1, 1916. The prohibition law enforcement sentiment in Georgia, because of the recent agitation, education and legislation, is mostly stronger than it has ever been. Practically the entire press of the state (liquor advertisements are carried now only by a few city dailies) advocates giving the law a faithful try-out with stringent enforcement. Many of the state papers editorially give much credit to the W. C. T. U. for these enactments, which were, in truth, the united, earnest, systematic efforts of all the Georgia prohibition forces, through the grace of God. To Him be the glory.

USE THE

Prohibition Pencil

With its slogan

The Liquor Traffic Must Go

and have your friends use it also.

A Special Price of

$1.50

is made on original packages, containing seventy-two pencils. In less quantities

35 cents per dozen

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUB. HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILL.

AN UNSOPHISTICATED MADONNA

A TALE OF THE CHRISTMAS TIME—In Two Parts—Part II

MRS. SUSANNA M. D. FRY, Alhambra, Calif.

The snow had begun to come in flurries, and occasional cakes of ice ground their way along in the river. One cold morning Miss Smith appeared at the house-boat with the usual contribution of food.

"You're getting around now, Gussie," she remarked in an indifferent tone. "We've made arrangements for a good home for you at the poor-house. Some of the women that haven't no babies ought to be glad to take the child. But law sakes, we might as well try to git them to take both of you. They have more excuses than the man who was invited to the wedding feast."

"Why, Joe'll be back soon now," interposed Gussie. "I've sent him a letter, and—"

"No, Joe isn't coming back. I told you not to have anything to do with him. He's likely got another wife and he's off livin' with her or is on a drunken spree. We won't take you, though, till you're a little stronger, but you see we can't come trapsing down here every few days this winter. You gather up a few trinkets you'd like to take with you and be ready to go at a minute's warning."

That night Gussie's anguish was intolerable. It rent her soul almost to the point of shattering the frail body. "Joe gone never to return. Joe gone with another wife. All men are liars. All men are drunkards." These were the words which repeated themselves again and again in her brain.

A new resolve stilled her heart for a moment. "There was the river!" she thought. She heard it gurgling along the sides of the boat. She loved it. It was soft and slow now and would take her and her baby on its bosom and bear them away to the land of her mother—to her mother who would not scorn her nor her child. She wrapped the infant in its shawl and holding it frantically to her heart, went resolutely out upon the little deck. But the river was black. She heard the moaning of a storm in the distance. A trembling seized her and she cried aloud, "Oh, not tonight."

Christmas Day dawned dull and dreary. Men turned up their coat collars and scanned the sky. Gussie awoke more dead than alive. She did not even know it was Christmas. She dreaded to hear a foot-fall, and when one did come, rushing and stamping, she stared at the door and held her hands tight over her beating heart.

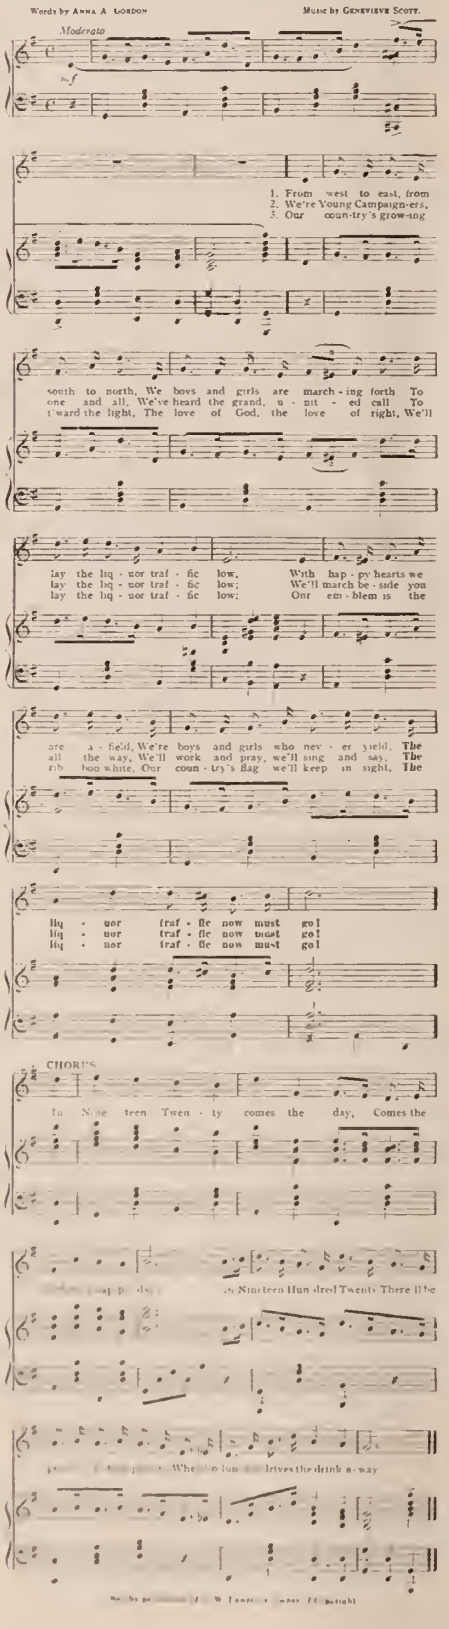
"Hello, Gussie, my little wife!" Joe almost crushed her in his arms and smothered her with kisses. "Did you think I was dead? I was pretty near—glory, what's that on the bed? A baby? You don't say so. If I'd knowed that, they couldn't a-held me. I'd a-come on one leg in spite of 'em." Joe picked up the wee human being gingerly, as though it might drop to pieces at a touch. The little one opened its blue eyes and stared.

"By gum, Gussie, it knows its dad. Did you ever see the beat of that! It's pink, ain't it? I always did like pink. It shall have a pink sunbonnet, so it shall, bless its little heart!"—and he kissed it softly.

Joe explained that a big log jumped the skid and took him in the leg and broke it short off, so he couldn't get away. "But," he said, with some pride, "I bossed the gang all the same from my shanty, and there wa'n't one of 'em that wouldn't do anything in the world for me. But it was awful a-laying there with one leg dead when I knowed I'd ought to be at home. But he paid me big, and here's the chink.' Joe slapped down a bag of money. "But, Gussie dear, why didn't you answer my letters? I nearly went wild when I didn't hear from you. You didn't get any letters? Gee whillikins! I'll wallop that ornery man in the post-office here within an inch of his life. He was too lazy to send them letters to you when he knowed you couldn't come for 'em. But see here, Gussie, I hain't no time to talk any more. I've got some business uptown. You jist git on your glad rags and dress sis up fine and when I git back we'll go out riding like it was our wedding day. That post-master? I won't bother with him today. No, I won't be gone over two hours, and then—oh, glory!"

Joe rushed away as though he were bursting to tell something.

THE CHILDREN'S HAPPY DAY



"Why should we go riding such a day as this?" thought Gussie. "Baby has never had a breath of outdoor air; the snow may kill her." Then a new fear possessed her. Was Joe going to take her to the poor-house, or did he come just to see the baby and would never return?

But promptly at the end of two hours there was a grinding of wheels in the snow and sand, and Joe appeared.

"Now, Gussie, time's short! I'll jist wrap you in this comfort and roll the baby in this one." Suiting the deed to the word, the baby was transformed into what might have been mistaken for a roll of rugs. "We'll leave the kid on the bed till I git you in."

"O Joe," wailed Gussie, "don't take me to the poor-house!"

"The poor-house! You'll be tickled to death when you see what we're going to—" and Joe chuckled. "It's getting dark and I can't tell you everything now," and Joe took Gussie in his arms and started for the wagon which was waiting at the gang-plank.

"O Joe, don't leave the baby," screamed Gussie in an agony of fear.

"She won't miss us till I git back, you bet, and she can't roll off, she's wadded up too tight."

Seated in the wagon, Gussie watched Joe lay the baby down gingerly on the deck, while he snapped the padlock on the door of the house-boat. Then he put the baby into Gussie's arms, climbed in, and drew the comfort well over mother and child and held them both in his strong arms.

"I'll git the rest of them things tomorrow," he said to Gussie; and to the driver, "Go on. Get there as quick as you kin."

"Is it far out in the country, Joe?" wailed a weak voice from the depths of the comfort.

"No, we'll be right there in a minute. I told Mr. Jones to have it blazing hot. He's the man that used to send you coal. This is his horse and wagon. He said Mrs. Jones would go over herself and git some others to help and they'd be ready for us by the time we got there, and they will, you bet!"

A little later Joe stood up in the wagon and fairly shouted at Gussie, "Here she is! Ain't she a dandy? Look at her, Gussie, with her trees, and grass, and fence, and a gate, and all covered with snow, and them lights a-shining through the windows. It's your house, Gussie; it is, for a fact."

Gussie let the comfort fly to the wind and cried, "Is it really true, Joe? O Joe!"

"Here we are," yelled Joe in a foghorn voice. Two women rushed out, each struggling to be the first to seize the baby. Gussie tumbled headlong into Joe's arms.

Mrs. Jones opened the door, and helped to place the mother in a big chair before the roaring fire which lighted the room.

"Now get good and warm, Mrs. Turley," she said, meanwhile taking off the wrappings of mother and child, "and we'll have some supper. It's all ready now in the kitchen." Mrs. Jones' kindly voice reassured Gussie and made her feel somewhat at ease.

Joe stamped the snow off his boots and knelt down and chafed his wife's fragile hands and held her feet to the fire, talking every minute, for Joe possessed the conversational ability of the entire Turley family.

"Why, wifie, you didn't think I was a setting around like a bump on a log all that time before I went away, did you? No, ma'am, I had most of this surprise fixed up for you before I went away and I finished fine this afternoon. This is

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

IN THE HEART OF CALIFORNIA'S WINE LAND

LORA S. LaMANCE, National Organizer

"The hardest territory we have in the state," said a leading officer of the California Dry Campaign Federation, "is Sonoma and Napa counties. There the wine grape is king."

If those two counties are the stronghold of the wine interests, then California's battle is won before it is begun. There is a far stronger sentiment for prohibition than our workers had dared to hope. Over one-third of the vineyards already have prune or nut trees planted through them, that bearing orchards may be developed by the time the state may become dry. A Sonoma county bank that caters to the wine interests prints at the bottom of each of its mortgages: "Plant prune trees among your vines." Again and again the wine grape growers and the winery men have turned out in force to hear the writer. While many of the wine people will fight until the last ditch, others are weighing the matter carefully, and, if convinced that prohibition is inevitable, are going to get out of the business just as quickly as possible, and make no trouble about it.

The proposed amendments on which California will vote have materially helped conservative wine men to take this view. Last year's measures were rather harsh and summary; those of 1916 are conciliatory, considerate, and give the small vineyardist the most liberal terms that a state has ever offered. "You have convinced me," said a wine man at Petaluma, "that prohibition is sure to come. We wine men never before had so liberal an offer made to us. If we lose this we never will have so good a chance again. I have two vineyards, but I shall both work and vote for the prohibition measures."

One amendment gives fourteen months for public drinking places to close. The other amendment gives until January 1, 1920, for the manufacture of liquors to cease. There are about 16,000 wine grape growers in the state, two-thirds of them Italians. Their viewpoint on the wine question is the European one. The state of California has fostered the wine industry in every way, sending out experts to treat wine grape diseases, and advising people how to lay out vineyards, and what varieties to plant. These foreign growers have their little all in vineyards. They have families to support and it takes time for fruit trees to grow and time to learn the ins and outs of the poultry business, that will chiefly take the place of the vineyards. It is really the humane and judicious thing to do, to give these sons of Italy sufficient time to make the transfer, that they may be saved from want.

The speaker was instructed to go into the winery towns and deal with the whole wine business without gloves; also without bitterness. "Show that prohibition is bound to come. Prove that the wine business is on its last legs. Show that the small vineyardist can use his ground for such and such purposes, and utterly discard the wine grape after he has a start in other things. Show that the large vineyard holders and large wineries can make out of their Zinfendel grapes (a much grown wine grape) unfermented grape juice that is the equal of Welch's or other brands of grape juice; that the more insipid flavors, or the extra sweet juices, can either be blended with more sprightly grapes, or made into grape syrup, the foundation of soda fountain drinks. Show that these men, who can afford to put in machinery and to advertise their product, will lose nothing." This was done and the message listened to with approval. Opportunity for any questions one might choose to ask was given and the speaker had with her documents to prove her assertions, and also the blended grape juices themselves.

At Occidental, a dozen wine men and their families attended. One of them became pretty warm and had considerable to say. Nevertheless, he admitted publicly that the speaker told the truth and was fair. The other wine men said: "It looks like we are going to lose. But the drys are certainly meeting us half way."

Sometimes there is bitterness. At Sebastopol a union service was held. One of the pastors said to the speaker: "You have three pastors on the platform. Each fought the same battle in the last campaign. All three had their churches burned within a few weeks of each other." At several points timid churches refused to let us speak for fear of being burned out. At Guerneville the presiding elder told his people: "Take out insurance on your church, and do your duty like men."

Rutherford was afraid to open its church, but did. A mob of young hoodlums howled and whistled outside, and threw things against the church. The speaker serenely talked on as though this were a pleasant accompaniment. She had her reward when an Italian arose and asked for help for his people. "We want to know," he said. "My people cannot read English. We hear only one side. We want to know about this prohibition."

At Oakville the wets outnumbered the drys. All was peaceful until the close of the meeting when a winery man lost his temper and shouted that the speaker was a crank, an old crank "that wouldn't eat and wouldn't drink. Wine makes men strong." Every outburst of that kind helps the prohibition cause. It proves that the other side has no argument. The next day an Italian in this same town came and asked questions. He, too, "wanted to know." The probable outcome is that a gifted Italian, now in San Francisco, will be drafted into service and sent into the vineyards to influence his own countrymen.

At St. Helena there is a yearly four days' festival called the vintage festival. People go to it from far and near, and the public schools plan pageants and drill their pupils to take part in it. Miss Anna Chase, a lecturer appointed by Mrs. Edith Smith Davis to present scientific temperance truths, was in St. Helena in 1914 in the interests of state-wide prohibition. The high school refused to let her speak and she was unable to secure a public hall for the purpose. Accompanied by the county president she attempted to speak from a platform on the street. A mob pelted her with tomatoes, howled and screeched, tooted horns and ran automobiles and motorcycles up and down. Miss Chase was not able to make herself heard but for forty minutes stood on the platform conversing with friends beside her and smiling at the crowd which continued to make a deafening noise. A story went the rounds that a lot of boys had been primed with liquor to annoy the speaker in the ways mentioned. The writer was treated courteously while speaking in St. Helena but was all but ordered out of his office by the high school principal. A courageous union is holding the fort at St. Helena and sentiment in favor of prohibition is growing.

Four splendid meetings were held in the important centers of Petaluma, Sebastopol, Healdsburg and Napa City. In each of these towns the ministers lined up solidly on the dry side, and their congregations were with them. It was a triumph for us. Other good meetings were held in less important towns. There is a united optimistic feeling that gives confidence.

California intends to win!

AN UNSOPHISTICATED MADONNA

(Continued from Page Twelve)

your house sure. I bought it of Mr. Jones and it's most furnished, too."

Gussie leaned her weary head on Joe's shoulder, saying, "O Joe, it's like heaven."

One of the women insisted on jigging the baby up and down the room, while the others ate supper, a meal which rivalled all the wedding feasts of which Gussie had ever heard. Poor child, she was too unutterably happy to eat much, but Joe's appetite was powerful. It had been a long time since he had had turkey "with all the fixings" and he had just had a long fast.

The meal ended, Mrs. Jones opened the door into the bedroom and invited all to come in. A great white bed piled high with feathers stood in one corner, and a curtain was stretched across another corner. Leaning against Gussie's rocking chair, Joe remarked that he'd like to know what was "back of that thing over there." Just then the curtain dropped and the little mother, for the first time in her life, beheld with astonishment a real Christmas tree.

"This is in honor of the baby," remarked Mrs. Jones as she settled the tapers more firmly in their sockets, and adjusted the tinsel and glittering balls. "We knew she would need some toys, so here's a rubber rattle, a doll and a few other things which we could get together quickly." Joe seized the baby and held her up for an unobstructed view of the tree. "She sees it," he shouted. "She sees it! Did you ever see the like of that? She knows two things now, her dad and a Christmas tree, bless her little heart, and she breathes just like folks. Queer, ain't it?" and he turned wondering eyes on the mite in his arms.

"These knitted socks," continued Mrs. Jones, "belonged to Emily, our little girl, who only stayed a few weeks with us, and these little dresses were hers, too. Mr. Jones wanted me to bring them. The other things in the package you can look at in the morning. You will find something for each of you in them." Then handing a large envelope to Joe she said, "Here is the deed to your wife's house Mr. Turley, and Mr. Jones asked me to tell you that he threw off fifty dollars from the price, as a present to the little newcomer, and it is now in the bank to her credit. He said he had gotten that much enjoyment in knowing that you were home and in thinking how happy you and your family would be in the cottage. He believes, too, that Mrs. Turley has seen that it is as disastrous to happiness to teach a girl that all men are unworthy as to teach them that there is no evil in the world; and that the child's sober and industrious father will reveal to her the priceless good there may be in a human heart."

"I don't think I can stand anything more," groaned Joe, as he covered his face and knelt by the side of Gussie.

"We are going home now," continued Mrs. Jones, "but I will be in early in the morning to see what Mrs. Turley needs. I hope the excitement will not be too much for her, though I guess happiness rarely kills. Good-night to you both."

The last words the women heard as they stepped out into the snow were, "O Joe, I'm so happy!"

Holiday Gifts

THE UNION SIGNAL

a paper for the home, a suitable, desirable and helpful gift coming each week in the year. You make no mistake in sending it to father, mother, sister, brother, or the friend in college.

Price, $1.00 per year.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER

will be welcomed not only by the boys and girls but by the Sunday school and public school teacher. Issued monthly.

Price, 25 cents per year.

Dainty gift cards will be mailed to all subscribers to whom the paper is ordered as a gift, and the Christmas number will be mailed to each.

Kindly send in subscriptions at once so that the gift subscriptions may reach the subscriber before Christmas.

BOOKS

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Cloth, $1.50. Morocco, $2.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said. Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 75 cents.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said. Price, 50 cents.

Nineteen Beautiful Years. Frances E. Willard. Price, 60 cents.

A Modern Madonna, Carolyn Stanley. Price, $1.50.

Freckles, Gene Stratton Porter. Price, 60 cents.

John Barleycorn, Jack London. Price, $1.42.

Lois Morton's Investment, Mrs. Eva Murphy. Price, $1.35.

Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray. Price, $1.42.

The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. Price, $1.32.

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster. Price, $1.40.

BOOKLETS

Who's to Blame, Marietta Holley. Price, each, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Rest Cottage, profusely illustrated. Price, each, 10 cents; per dozen, $1.00.

W. C. T. U. STATIONERY

Fine linen paper with W. C. T. U. monogram, embossed in gold. Twenty-four sheets and envelopes, boxed, 60 cents per box.

SOUVENIR SPOONS

Rest Cottage spoons
Crusade Church spoons
Sterling, price, $1.50 each.

W. C. T. U. PINS

White enamel on silver with letters, 40 and 60 cents each
White enamel on silver without letters, 30 cents each
White enamel on gilt without letters, 25 cents each

CHRISTMAS CARDS

A carefully selected assortment of daintily decorated and engraved Christmas cards, with envelopes, at 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen; 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen.

Cards without envelopes, 15c and 25c per dozen.

Packages of Christmas tags and seals, 5 cents per package.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

THE MOTHER OF COMPETENCE

Sleek and well-fed and prosperous was he;
One day I met him in the way
And asked his name, and pleased he seemed to be.
He answered "Competence!"
"Your mother's?" then I asked, "if but I may."
"'Tis Abstinence!"
—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph

WANTED Several honest, industrious people to distribute religious literature $60 a month sure. NICHOLLS CO., Dept 12 A, NAPERVILLE, ILL

German Temperance Literature

The following German pamphlets are issued to help enlist as many as possible of the German-Americans in the fight against the drink habit and the liquor traffic. They appeal to them in their native tongue and on lines which will most easily influence them. Speed the cause of national prohibition by distributing these pamphlets widely.

1. "THE BIBLE AND TOTAL ABSTINENCE." 32 pages, 2d edition, ten thousand now issued. Price 5c each, 25c a doz., $1.50 a hundred, postpaid.

2. "THE GERMANS AND THE DRINK QUESTION." 8 pages, forty thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a dozen, 50c a hundred, postpaid, $4.00 a thousand by express.

3. "CHRISTIANITY AND PROHIBITION." 8 pages, twenty thousand now issued. Same price as No. 2.

4. "THE AIMS AND RESULTS OF PROHIBITION." 12 pages, 3d edition, thirty-five thousand now issued. Price 2c each, 10c a doz., 65c a hundred, postpaid, $5.00 a thousand by express.

Of this last a new revised edition has just left the press. It also embodies the latest statistics and statements concerning prohibition in Kansas by the Governors, Stubbs, Hodges and Capper and by the legislature of the state. Send orders to

J. G. EVERT, BOX B, HILLSBORO, KANS.

BOSTON'S FIGHT FOR NO LICENSE

- Special Correspondence

On Tuesday, December 14, New England was stirred as never before on the liquor license question. There was voting in many of the large cities, churches came to the rescue and many pastors showed an active interest in the issue. Lynn returned to the dry column, a cause for rejoicing. It was one of twelve cities to vote against the saloon. Although Boston's majority for license was large, nevertheless the drys won a notable victory in that the per cent of majority was greatly cut. According to the press the wets cast 45,835 votes and the drys 31,881, a majority for the wets of 13,954. Last year the wets cast 29,855 votes and the drys 19,498, a majority of 10,357.

Boston led in interest because of prominent features in the local situation—the school committee, the license mayor and the political bosses. For over ten years arrests for drunkenness have increased six and one-half times as fast as the population.

A sign of great promise is the action of the Allied Building Trades Council, representing at least 18,000 members, in voting to support no-license. The dryer districts, Dorchester especially, championed by Rev. Jason Noble Pierce, pastor of the Second Congregational church and aided almost universally by churches and people, rendered mighty aid.

The Saturday before election there was a no-license parade of men, women and children. Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, floats, automobiles and bicycles, headed by a large fife and drum corps, contributed to the general enthusiasm and interest.

Women can vote only on the school question, but white ribbon women, in particular, often carry their banners to voting precincts and certainly in the Dorchester district did valiant service.

—THE—
LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS BOOK MARK

Printed on white satin ribbon with clear picture and Bible text. An appropriate remembrance for a W. C. T. U. friend

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

WHAT'S THE USE

"Haven't found your dog yet?" asked Smith of his neighbor, Jones.

"No," answered Jones ruefully.

"Well, have you advertised?" asked Smith.

"What's the use?" said Jones; "the dog can't read."—The Advance.

"MOTHER TO THE RESCUE"

MRS. E. B. GITTINGS, Boulder, Colorado

When the boys filed into Gerald Bennett's room after having almost broken down the door with knocks and deafened his ears with class yells, to each of which was added the usual complimentary clause, "What's the matter with Bennett? He's all right," the astonished boy scarcely knew what to do or say first. He stood looking from one to another in dazed fashion and finally found voice to say, "Why hello, boys! Glad to see you. Catch on to some seats and make yourselves comfortable"; then he flurried about sweeping sweaters, tennis rackets, caps, etc., from chairs, and when chairs and bed and trunk had been appropriated by the unexpected guests, pushing back books and papers to make room on the table. Not until they had fallen upon him with rhythmical blows, counted as they fell, did he realize that his birthday was the occasion of the boisterous surprise. When he had gained his breath after the last "sixteen and one to grow on" he managed to say, "Why boys, I call this white of you to remember a fellow this way. My folks have always made such a lot of my birthdays that I was just a bit down in the mouth because I couldn't go home for it. Gee! what's all this?"

The boys were spilling the contents of boxes, paper bags and pockets over the table, floor, and bed—peanuts, apples, pop-corn, "wienies," candy—a miscellaneous assortment of stuff sufficient to supply nightmares to the crowd.

"And this isn't the whole show either," announced Gus Randal as he burst into the room, scooped books and other paraphernalia from the table and chucked them into the closet to make room for an ice-cream freezer, "Bob'll be here in a minute with the dishes and the beer."

The beer! Gerald turned first red and then white and a shiver went down his spine. A sudden pall of blackness seemed to blot out all the bright light of comradeship that had so unexpectedly flashed upon him. He had been rather lonely the first few months of school. Naturally shy, he had not made friends easily, and some way he had come to feel that he should never be popular with the boys and that dread disease homesickness was beginning its inroads. Then this wonderful surprise! The boys did like him. They had found out and remembered his birthday in this generous fashion—but beer! His thoughts flew back to the little pledge card bearing his boyish signature which his mother kept in her Bible. What should he do? What should he say? How say it? Oh, it was too cruel! The boys would surely be offended if he protested, they would leave him to himself, lonelier than ever. "A self-righteous crank" they would call him—or worse still a weak "goody-goody," "a coward afraid of a harmless glass of beer." Of course he knew that he was right and they were wrong, but it was useless to try to convince that gang of irresponsible boys. All these thoughts flashed with lightning swiftness through his mind in the few minutes that seemed like ages before Bob Marshall kicked open the door and set down a basket of dishes and a big pail in which long-necked bottles nestled in a bed of crushed ice.

They were setting the table now and were so busy that no one noticed the agony of doubt and dismay that held their host silent and inactive. Suddenly his decision was made. It would be nonsense for him to try to convert the whole crowd all at once to his way of thinking and if he refused to have the beer opened in his room they would think him a priggish cad. He would make no fuss but let them go on and then, in an off-hand casual way, quietly turn down his own glass. They might laugh at his abstinence but they would not be hurt or angry. They would still be his friends. In vain did his conscience whisper, "Coward! Coward." In vain did the words of his mother's white ribbon pledge, "or allow my premises to be used—," re-echo in his mind. "Circumstances alter cases" responded the sophist tempter. After all, these boys were the only ones who had remembered his birthday. Not a word had come from home, not even from his mother and he had been all day just a little grieved about it.

Everything was ready; they were calling for him to take his place as host. He flung scruples aside and braced himself for the ordeal.

Another knock at the door, and he opened to an express messenger who set a big box inside, remarking as he handed him the book to sign, "Mistake in delivery somehow. Ought to have been here this morning. Marked 'urgent and perishable' so we thought best to deliver it even if it was past hours."

"From home!" cried Gerald delightedly as he tore off the wrappers from the stout box. "I thought it strange mother had forgotten me." And he lifted into view a big white cake. Wrapped in tissue by its side were the sixteen tall bright candles and a note which read:

"With every candle goes a loving memory of the year for which it stands. May the next year bring as joyous thoughts of my true loyal boy as have those years just passed. If you can ask in some of your friends to share the cake with you—mother will be glad."

"What do you think of that, boys?" cried Gerald reading the last sentence aloud, "You see you were not uninvited after all."

Uprose the ever ready shout: "What's the matter with mother? She's all right! Who's all right? Mother! Mother! She's all right, all right!"

There came a sudden stiffening of Gerald's back-bone. Instantly he knew what to say. As soon as the cheer had died away his voice responded with a ring in it that commanded attention.

"I say fellows, mother wears the white ribbon. I signed the pledge when I was only a kid. She always keeps it in her Bible. Do you think I ought to put beer on the same table with her birthday cake?"

A chorus of voices answered,

"No!" "Sure not!" "No!" "Chuck it boys, chuck it!" "Fool stunt to get it anyway." "Ditch it, I say."

And while Gerald put the candles in place, ready hands seized the obnoxious beer pail and set it in the corridor, closing the door upon it with a bang.

"Mother to the rescue as usual," thought Gerald happily as he plunged the knife into the heart of the luscious cake.

READY

TOPICAL PROGRAM

FOR

1916

Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for writing in name of hostess and place of meeting.

Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00

A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for

50 CENTS

Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

WANTED SOBER MEN

The demand for sober men is claiming a place in the baseball world; and the older generation can remember when professional baseball players were nearly all "rounders" and sports.

Hugh S. Fullerton, the Chicago sporting editor, in a contribution to Farm and Fireside, has shown why the non-drinking player now is desired in preference to even one who drinks very little. His figures, based on eleven years of observation, show that the temperate players are those who lead in pitching, hitting, fielding and base-running. Conspicuous examples are Ty Cobb, Christy Mathewson and Eddie Collins. In the last five years, in the big leagues, the leaders have all been men noted for their sobriety.

Mr. Fullerton kept tab of the records and batting averages of thirty-two moderate drinkers and twenty-four players who did not drink. After eleven years only two of the original thirty-two drinking players are on the diamond while eight of the twenty-four non-drinkers are still playing. Furthermore only five of the drinkers are prosperous as opposed to fourteen of the non-drinkers. Six of the beer contingent are down and out, eight are dead and one is missing—but only three of the non-drinkers are either dead or ruined. The non-drinkers have won more games and pitched more games, stolen more bases and kept up a better batting average, although at the beginning of the eleven years the drinkers surpassed them.

These facts and figures are impressive, and they should be thoughtfully considered by every young man who desires to succeed in his life's chosen field of labor. —The Macon (Ga.) News.

MOTHER GOOSE RED CROSS RHYMES

Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn,
Just think, pretty soon will come Christmas Morn;
You should write to Santa 'stead of going to sleep,
Tell him you're tired of your cows and your sheep;
That you need some new toys, and that you feel
Each one should bear a Red Cross Seal.

Little Bo Peep has lost her sheep,
She really couldn't find them;
She had to sell Red Cross Seals—
After Christmas she'll go and find them.

Sing a song of Sixpence,
Christmas spirit in the air;
Four and twenty letters
All sealed with greatest care,
By some one wise the work was done—
A Red Cross Seal on every one.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	25c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each	Per 100, $1.75
SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES
THE UNION SIGNAL	$1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly)	37c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER	37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

OUR GOAL:
TEN THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN 1916

PREMIUMS FOR 1916, UNION SIGNAL

Cash Premiums

Any person having credit for 250 weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL (on which no other premiums have been taken) between September 25, 1915, and the closing of the books for 1916, will receive a cash premium of $25. If you will unite to credit subscriptions to your state superintendent, you can secure this premium and thus honor your state and advance your own work. Credit must be requested on the subscription letter, and in no case are such credits transferable.

Small Clubs

Five subscriptions to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to one free subscription to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, or two subscriptions to the monthly Campaign Edition, or two subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

Five Campaign Edition subscriptions sent at one time entitle the sender to one subscription to the Campaign Edition.

Literature Offer

Five subscriptions to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to select literature to the amount of $1.00 from the catalogue of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, the selection to be made in one order, at catalogue prices.

Life of Miss Willard

Ten weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time will entitle the sender to one copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna A. Gordon.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

YOUNG CRUSADER

Gold Watch

No premium is more popular than the handsome Gold Watch which is given for 350 YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO The Young Crusader. It is to be understood, however, that no other premium will be allowed on these subscriptions. The watch is open face, Elgin movement, in first quality twenty-year gold-filled case. For 400 yearly subscriptions we will send the watch in hunting case. By crediting subscriptions from your state to one person you can easily secure one or several watches. Try it. Credit must be requested in the same letter in which subscriptions are sent. Credits already given to one person cannot be transferred to another. Nor can credits falling short of a leading premium in one fiscal year be completed in the next.

Subscriptions for this premium need not all be sent at one time; provided, however, that every installment sent in is accompanied by the statement that the subscriptions are to apply on the premium.

Five Subscriptions

Entitle you to a free subscription to The Young Crusader to any address designated, or to a copy of the beautifully illustrated book, "The Story of Frances E Willard," by Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, written especially for young people. These subscriptions must all be sent at one time and the premium asked for in the same letter.

Scamp Club

Any boy or girl sending in two new names to The Young Crusader, at one time, will be entitled to a membership in the "Scamp Club" and receive the "Scamp" pin.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

NEWSPAPERS ON THE WATER WAGON

The Gazette and Bulletin, a Republican daily newspaper of Williamsport, Pa., has announced in its columns that it has rejected a $500 liquor advertisement and that the future policy of the newspaper will be to accept no advertising of this nature.

The Detroit News has recently joined the ranks of the large number of newspapers which decline all liquor advertising.

The Zanesville (Ohio) Times Recorder, the leading morning newspaper of southeastern Ohio, has announced that it will accept no more liquor advertisements and at the expiration of all existing contracts will discontinue all advertising of this character. As the Times-Recorder has for years been a pro-liquor journal its change of attitude is significant.

WHY HE OPPOSES THE SALOON

The following reasons are given by Rev. M. O. Sumstead of Minneapolis for his opposition to the liquor traffic:

"The saloon is a nonproducer and must be supported by those who work.

"Tear down the saloon and in its place will rise a producing industry.

"Where the saloon goes down the home goes up.

"The liquor traffic empties the breadbaskets of the poor. Turn all the grain of our state into booze and you could not feed with it one single child.

"Drink and poverty go hand in hand. The saloon demands the first chance at the pay check.

"As many men lose their jobs every year because of the saloon as would be thrown out of employment once and for all by the closing of the saloon. And those thrown out of employment by the closing of the saloons are only temporarily inconvenienced, while victims of the traffic are permanently incapacitated for work.

"It is easier to take the saloon away from the drinking man than to take the drinking man away from the saloon.

"To license an evil is to go into partnership with the evil for the revenue."

NO PLACE FOR HOME-SEEKERS!

A well known resident of Sacramento, California, the other day met on a train two men and their wives who had come from Kansas seeking farms in California, says the Sacramento Union. He asked them why they did not investigate the country around Sacramento, as it offered many opportunities for the home-seeker. They replied that they had spent three days in this city and had been much impressed with what they saw. "But," said one of them, "Sacramento has entirely too many saloons for us, and the farmers' roads are lined with road-houses, so we decided to go elsewhere to locate."

A Food FOR Children

A Tonic FOR Grown-ups

For three generations Scott's Emulsion has been recognized as the sensible treatment for any cold because its rich, blood-making nourishment, strengthens both throat and lungs while it fortifies the body against the rigors of winter.

Scott's Emulsion after meals means fewer colds, richer blood, stronger lungs, better health.

IT IS FREE FROM ALCOHOL

14-94 SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

PUBLISHERS' TALK

Prohibition Pencils The special price on the Prohibition pencils (72 for $1.50) will make it possible for local unions to interest their friends in the use of this pencil and to introduce it among school children. This price is possible only when ordering in the original package, thus saving extra counting and wrapping; otherwise the price of 35 cents per dozen must prevail.

Would that every student in our country read each day and many times each day, as he uses his pencil, THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC MUST GO, the slogan appearing upon the pencil, until the thought is crystallized into a deed and that deed becomes the expression of his thought at the ballot box.

Posters Have you been using the posters freely, placing them in your Sunday school rooms and public halls, using them for talks in local W. C. T. U., Y. P. B. and L. T. L. meetings, or before your Sunday school class or missionary society? A friend from Sparta, Michigan, who uses the posters freely, has a good plan and writes as follows concerning it:

Poster Parade

"I have fourteen large posters which I bought at National Headquarters which I fixed in frames made from lath, tacking the poster at top and bottom. I made them more durable by pasting paper on the back. Children carry them to the platform and hold them while I read and comment to the audience. I used them at my own Sunday school on Temperance Sunday and at a Sunday school convention the same afternoon, held five miles away. Three automobiles carried the children who greatly enjoyed the outing. Next Sunday night we are to use them again at a union temperance rally.

"They are great helpers, delivering the message through ear and eye. The actual cost is less than one dollar. I hope others may try the same plan."

Keep Informed

BY SUBSCRIBING FOR THE

LEAFLET BUDGET

which brings to your desk each month a sample of leaflets, posters, pledge cards, etc., published during the current month.

Subscription

One Dollar Per Year

NATIONAL W.C.T.U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

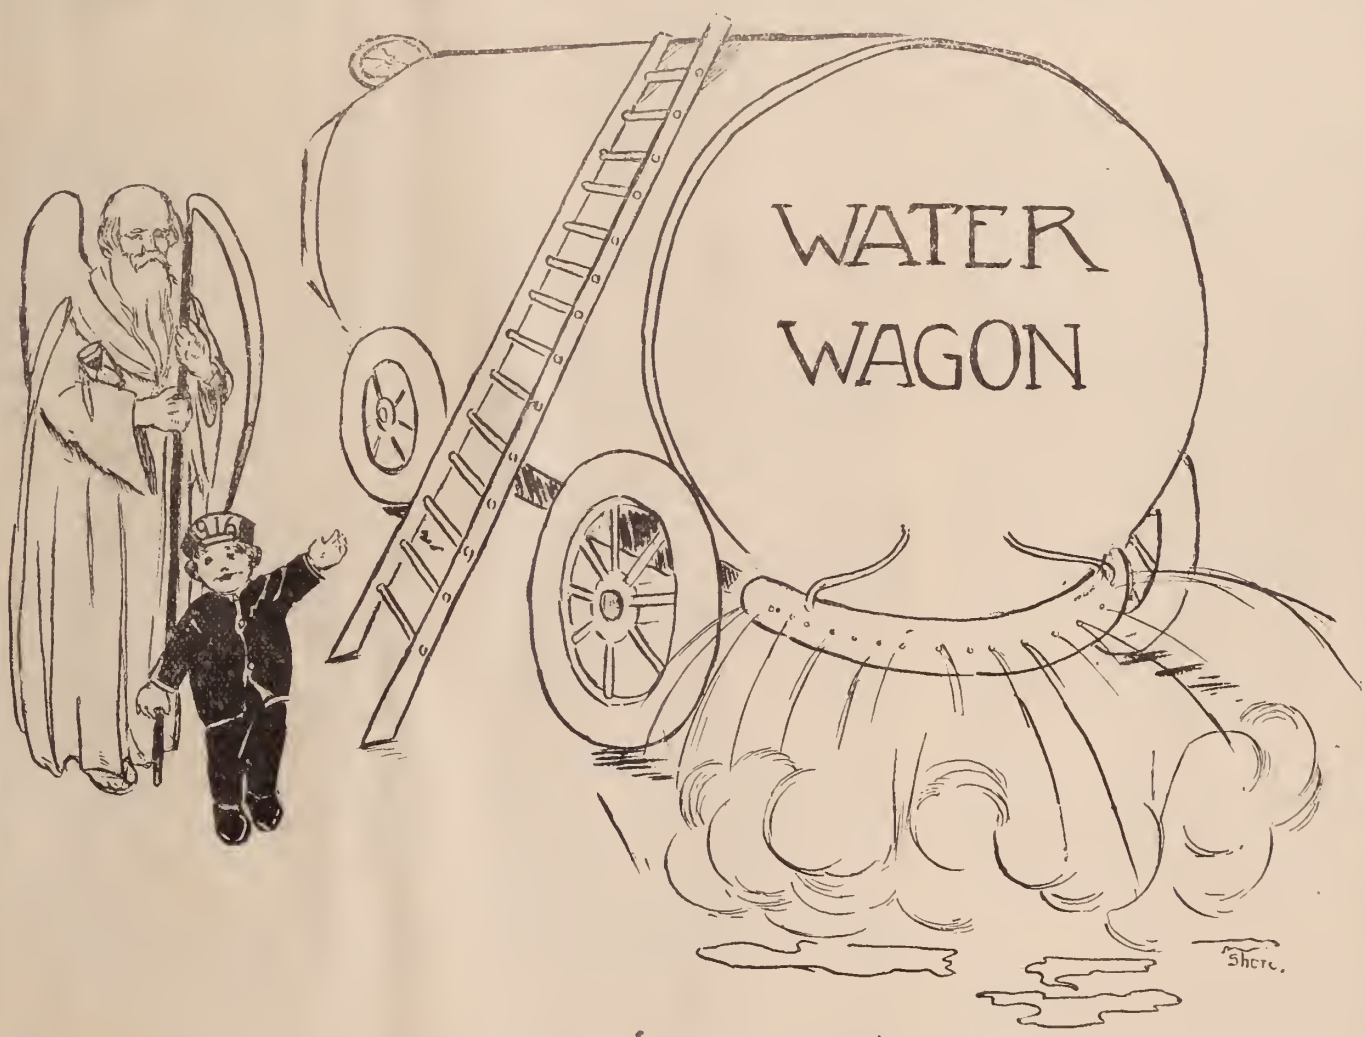
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., DECEMBER 30, 1915 | No. 52

HAPPY NEW YEAR!



COME ON, GOOD FRIENDS, ONE AND ALL, AND LEND YOUR AID TO PUT YOUR STATE AND YOUR NATION ON THE WATER WAGON!

SPECIAL ARTICLES

Colorado Fuel and Iron Company Says John Barleycorn Must Go—Colorado's Prohibition Law to Benefit Indians—Bank Deposits in Arizona Take Big Jump—Our Washington Letter—National Suffrage Convention in Washington—Results Revealed at Annual Meeting of the Society for the Study of Alcohol

A SONG FOR THE NEW YEAR

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON

A song for the year that is dawning,
A song for the brave and the strong;
A song for the hope of the morning,
The triumph of right over wrong.
A song for the true and the fearless,
A song for the free and the bold;
A song that will comfort the cheerless,
A song that can never grow old.

Lo, this is the song of the New Year:—
"God's purpose is ripening fast;
Lift up your sad eyes; be of good cheer;
The night of our gloom's well-nigh past.

The breath of the swift-dawning morrow,
E'en now is abroad in the earth;
Joy, glad joy, will conquer all sorrow;
Love, true love, must come to its birth.

"Men will yet learn to live here as brothers;
They will bury the hate of the past;
Each heart will yet care for all others,
Each think of his own need as last.
The King of our glorious redemption
Shall yet be exalted to reign;
In the lives of a true, righteous nation
Shall the Christ be incarnate again."

Oh, song of the glad day that's dawning.
Help us thy keynote to sound true;
E'en here, in the dim twilight gloaming,
May we sing with the noontide in view.
Each New Year is speeding thy glory;
Each new day is hastening thy birth;
Oh, song of the spheres' wondrous story,
Ring out thy glad strains here on earth!

SEVEN STATES TO CELEBRATE THE OUTLAWING OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC, JANUARY FIRST

COLORADO, WASHINGTON, OREGON, IDAHO, IOWA, ARKANSAS AND SOUTH CAROLINA TO JOIN IN THE CHORUS "JOHN BARLEYCORN, GOODBYE"

Oregon is likely to have a live statewide prohibition celebration on New Year's Eve. Two plans are on foot, one to hold great watch night prayer meetings with the slogan, "Every Christian On His Knees" December 31 when the state goes dry; the other to hold meetings along the line of community betterment, making them a recognition of the great Oregon red letter day in the celebration of which all good citizens will unite. Saloon-keepers who have left the business and gone into other lines of activity will be invited to meet with the prohibitionists. A general program for these meetings, lasting from eight to ten in the evening, has been outlined and will include a prohibition march of the wet and dry states and a demonstration of the prohibition cleansing process by the "Gold Dust Twins" and "Old Dutch Cleanser Girl." Refreshments and a social hour will be enjoyed at eleven-thirty and a service of song and praise and thanksgiving will usher in the midnight hour. At The Dalles there is to be a large banquet with Mayor Anderson in charge. The entire town is invited to attend and make merry over the good times coming. Some towns have arranged to conduct a medal contest as a part of their program. The Oregon W. C. T. U. is talking of keeping "open house" New Year's Day at its headquarters in Portland.

That the law will be enforced in Portland, at least, the thorough preparations being made by Sheriff Hurlburt make evident. According to the press he started several months ago to "gird his loins" and prepare his deputies for the 1916 fray. He himself has made a thorough study of the law and on an evening not long ago called together his deputy sheriffs, announcing that Attorney Walter H. Evans would address them and tell them just what they might expect and what they would have to do, thus preparing the officers for every possible contingency.

The most immediate problem raised by the law taking effect will be the disposal of liquor in the state on January 1. The act prohibits the "hoarding" of liquor in anticipation of the arid condition after January 1; and within ten days after that date, all intoxicants must be shipped out of the state with the exception of twelve quarts of beer or one-half gallon of other alcoholic beverages, which each individual is allowed to retain, and the stocks of pharmacists. Wine cellars which have been stocked with expensive vintages will be no exception to the general rule.

With what elation will Oregon ring out the old, old years of suffering under King Alcohol's rule and welcome the glad, new year of prohibition.

"John Barleycorn, Goodbye," will ring out from mountain and from plain in Colorado on January first. In country communities, small towns and large, the drys will have "open house" and various kinds of jubilations. The celebrating begins in some places on New Year's Eve and the Boy Scouts will herald the dawning of a better day by the ringing of bells.

The state W. C. T. U. will have charge of a great reception in Denver from three to nine in the Woman's Club building. The guests of honor are to be the officials and their wives, of the state, district and municipality, who will be responsible for the enforcement of prohibition. Nineteen girls in white, representing the prohibition states, will be the body-guard for the receiving line. The program will be intermittent, with a speech or two and a stirring song of victory every hour.

Governor Carlson has already begun to make addresses in a campaign "to create a public conscience which will demand a strict compliance with the prohibition law." "Citizens do not hesitate to cooperate with the authorities if larceny or even the most minor of misdemeanors comes to their notice," remarked the governor. "They should follow the same course in the enforcement of the prohibition law, which will be more important, as second offenses become felonies."

Executives of Idaho, local and state, are busily engaged in the education of the citizens concerning the provisions of the new prohibition law which becomes effective with the coming in of the new year. Under the new law no saloon man, liquor dealer or private citizen may have a drop of liquor on his business premises or in his home or elsewhere in the state. Wine for sacramental purposes is the only intoxicating liquor which a person may legally have in his possession, and pure alcohol may be possessed only under a restricted permit. Violations of the prohibition laws are punishable by fine and imprisonment. A second offense constitutes a felony.

I saw the Spirit of Love
And He spake: "It is only sorrow
And sin and folly that dies;
Whatever was good in the Old Year
In the soul of the New Year lies.
As you stand on the grave of error,
Look up, for the stars are true!
Let go of the things departed—
Reach out for the things that are new."
—E. W. W.

It is planned to hold jubilee meetings all over the state of Arkansas beginning January 1, or as near that date as practicable. As it falls on Saturday this year, it would be entirely proper to hold a mass meeting the next day. Processions including children in all the regimentals of the Young Campaigners for Prohibition, cap, pennant and button, or wearing L. T. L. sashes and carrying flags, in floats or otherwise, will form part of the jubilee. The best speakers will bring the subject of prohibition before the public and prohibition songs will be sung everywhere. The women and children will be drilled for the occasion and the choirs of the churches will assist. At the next state convention a committee of judges will award a prize to the one writing the best account of a jubilee meeting. The object is two-fold: to thank God for the opportunity which prohibition gives for growth along all lines and to praise His name that the state has shaken off the shackles of the legalized rum traffic; and to serve notice on the would-be violator of the new prohibition law that public sentiment will not tolerate any fraudulent scheme on his part. The unions of the state are indeed a power for law enforcement. At a given signal, all over the state they can call together the best people of the community and thus publicly express their adherence to the cause of prohibition and their interest in keeping and enforcing the law.

The temperance forces of Des Moines and Iowa are planning for a farewell to their arch enemy, John Barleycorn, on New Year's eve, in the way of watch-night services and a parade of a spectacular nature showing the nineteen prohibition states. While the occasion will be one of rejoicing over the victory gained in repealing the "mulct" law, emphasis will be laid on the fact that a constitutional amendment is the only thing that will insure the safety of state-wide prohibition in Iowa.

That the seventeen breweries in Iowa, capitalized at over $4,000,000, will after January 1, 1916, go into profitable and legitimate lines of business is the belief of the Ft. Madison Gem City Daily. According to that paper the two Sioux City breweries will be converted into manufacturing establishments; one at Des Moines will be used for manufacturing telephone accessories; one at Cedar Rapids will be used as a yeast factory; and three at Dubuque and two at Iowa City will probably be converted into creameries.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Congress adjourned December 17, for the Christmas holidays, after the Senate had adopted the joint resolution, which passed the House the day before, extending the emergency revenue law one year, or until December 31, 1916. The Senate adopted the resolution after a lively partisan debate, by a vote of 45 to 29, Democrats supporting it solidly, and Republicans unanimously opposing it. President Wilson signed the measure that same night, thus making it a law.

Both houses will reconvene at noon, Tuesday, January 4, when the administration legislative program, including the plans for national defense, will be undertaken in earnest.

There was an understanding on the day of adjournment that the debate in the Senate would close by five o'clock, but one speech provoked another, and the resolution did not get back to the House until after six o'clock. That body waited impatiently, listening to speeches on miscellaneous subjects. Speaker Clark immediately signed the resolution and it was promptly messaged back to the Senate, where it was signed by Vice-President Marshall and sent off to the White House.

Before adjournment Senator Newlands of Nevada introduced a joint resolution creating a joint congressional commission to investigate the question of the need of remedial railroad legislation. This action was no doubt largely brought about by the traffic congestion existing on all trunk line railroads leading into New York, there being at the present time over 50,000 loaded freight cars sidetracked in freight yards of the many railroads, awaiting an opportunity for shipment on vessels not obtainable. Owing to the situation, many of the leading railroads of the country have been compelled to declare stringent embargoes on virtually all freights for export, coastwise or domestic deliveries, except perishable freight, or food products.

Bill for International Peace-Keeping Tribunal Introduced

A bill has been introduced by Senator Shafroth of Colorado to encourage the establishment of an international peace-keeping tribunal, and pending such establishment, to insure the military preparedness of the United States. In presenting the bill he said, "I will state in reference to the bill I have just introduced that it is one which might properly be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, or by the Committee on Military Affairs. It relates to the appropriation that may be made for preparedness with the limitation that the expenditure, covering a period of eight years, shall cease whenever an agreement of some kind shall be made with the nations as to the ceasing of war."

A favorable report on the administration bill to extend the measure of self-government in the Philippines was voted late December 16 by the Senate Philippine committee at the conclusion of two days' hearings. The committee made several changes in the bill in line with War Department recommendations. The preamble declares the purpose of the United States is to grant independence "when it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands." The provision against polygamy was changed so as to prohibit the contracting hereafter of polygamous or plural marriages. An effort to pass the bill through both houses probably will be made soon after the holidays.

Speakers at the recent meeting held in Washington of the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics, directed attention to the fact that there is no place in the United States where drug addictions are treated. Dr. Earnest S. Bishop of New York City pointed out at the meeting, that the dope fiend was being driven into the underworld by the public at large, and by the

(Continued on Page Eight)

Colorado Fuel and Iron Company Says John Barleycorn Must Go

The men who draw big salaries at the head of the John D. Rockefeller Jr. companies have got to climb on to the water wagon in Colorado January 1, says the Chicago Tribune. The Bulletin, just issued by the Colorado Fuel and Iron company, with the approval of Mr. Rockefeller, carries the startling order. Not only the men at the bottom of the shaft digging coal, but the men who sit in the elaborately furnished offices in Denver, are included. Here are some nuggets from the Bulletin:

"The man who spends his money for booze is not on the road to success, whether he be a coal digger, a steel plant worker, or an officer of the company. The men who break records for getting out coal, and those who draw the highest wages, are not the ones who spend the most time in the saloons.

"Exercising your arm lifting glasses does not give you the kind of strength that puts a punch into your work with the pick."

"Cut It Out," He Urges

John D.'s Bulletin appeals to all employes of the company to climb on the wagon and "cut it out altogether." He also serves notice that the one offense for which they will be discharged without notice will be drunkenness and bootlegging.

Further says the Bulletin:

"After the new law goes into effect some one may start a blind tiger near your camp or plant, or a bootlegger may try to smuggle in bad whisky. These men are not only violating the law but they are trying to continue the liquor traffic in its most harmful form. They deserve nothing except to be denounced to the proper authorities.

Recreation Rooms Planned

"Do not think that the closing of the saloon will deprive you of a place of amusement, or drive you to leave your camp and seek some illegal dive. As soon after January 1 as it can be arranged, there will be buildings or recreation rooms at most of the camps. Employes are urged to make use of them to the fullest extent.

"What's the use of sticking to a useless and harmful habit?"

Colorado's Prohibition Law To Benefit Indians

In the opinion of Chief Special Officer Henry A. Larsen of the United States Indian service, the Southern Utes, the only Indians left in Colorado, will be materially benefited by state-wide prohibition. In an interview with Mr. Larsen, reported in the Denver (Colo.) Times, he says:

"There has been considerable bootlegging among the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, despite the activity of the Ute agent, Mr. West, in trying to prevent it.

"Most of the bootlegging among the Indians has been done by Mexicans, who are hard to reach. State-wide prohibition is going to make things much easier. At least it has done so in other states, and there is no reason to suppose that Colorado's case will differ materially from the others.

"Arizona presents a remarkable example of what prohibition can do for the Indians, when the laws are rightly enforced. Of course Arizona is what might be called an extreme case, for the reason that its Indian population is excessive, there being 27,000 full-bloods there. But from every reservation in the state comes assurance that one year of prohibition has helped the Indian tribes amazingly.

"The superintendent of the Fort Yuma school, in California, which is just across the river from Yuma, Ariz., reports that the change in the Indians is nothing short of wonderful since Arizona's prohibition law went into effect the first of the year.

"During the year not one Yuma Indian has been known to take an intoxicating drink, whereas there have been as high as ten drunken Indians to deal with in a single day before prohibition became operative."

"But after all, the big influence that is working for the benefit of the Indian is purely moral in nature," continued Mr. Larsen. "Right now there is a most active pledge-signing campaign in operation on all the Indian reservations. It is entirely voluntary, but it is surprising to see how the adult Indians as well as the school children are responding."

Bank Deposits in Arizona Take Big Jump

"That the prosperity which began early in 1915 and resulted in increased bank deposits of nearly three millions of dollars up to June 30, is sweeping all previous records in rapidity of movement, appears from the state auditor's last call from state and national banks in Arizona," says George H. Smalley, as reported in the Tucson Citizen.

"The total deposits of state and national banks increased $9,707,872.61 from October 31, 1914, to November 10, 1915. The increase in deposits has been more during the third quarter than it was during the first two quarters of the year, and the advance which has gained such momentum bids fair to return a record for the year that will stand out prominently as an index to the unusual prosperity that has set in throughout Arizona during the year that is now drawing to an end.

"In Tucson the increased bank deposits for the period mentioned above reaches $1,530,740.33 or over half the total increase for the entire state during the first six months. This record certainly means that the movement of prosperity is substantial, and is but an index to the period of constantly improving conditions which are before us."

PANAMA-PACIFIC W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT TO MAKE NATION-WIDE TOUR

Such keen interest was manifested by the public in the World's and National W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition that arrangements have been made for showing it in a number of the larger cities throughout the country. The plan is part of a comprehensive traveling exhibit which will carry to the people the valuable exhibits of various churches and of social service organizations. It will start on its nation-wide tour in January, accompanied by a corps of trained workers, and will show first in Seattle.

Gratifying recognition has been accorded the W. C. T. U. exhibit by the foremost educators. It is included in a survey made for a souvenir book presented to members of the National Education Association and the International Congress of Education at the joint meeting held in Oakland in August—which book is to be used as a textbook in the schools of the United States.

Harvard University has requested that part of the W. C. T. U. exposition collection be placed in its social museum. Mr. John Bovington, assistant curator of the museum, was sent to San Francisco during the summer to investigate the exhibits on social economy and education. Writing to the National W. C. T. U. he congratulates the organization upon the dignity and value of its exhibit, says that it would be a "decided contribution to the work of the museum," and asks in the name of Harvard's department of Social Ethics that part of the collection be placed with that institution as a "substantial addition to the work of social education." The material Mr. Bovington has particularly in mind are the panel pictures showing (1) Prohibition States, (2) Prohibition and Prosperity, (3) Big Business and the Drink Evil, (4) Alcohol and Physical Efficiency, (5) Alcohol and Mental Efficiency, (6) Decreasing Use of Alcohol in Hospitals, (7) Smoker's Heart. In response to this request the National W. C. T. U. is planning to send a reproduction of these special features to the Harvard museum.

TOM MARSHALL'S BEST TEMPERANCE SPEECH

Former Lieutenant Governor R. P. Kennedy, of Ohio, who is an orator of some ability himself, writing a series of articles in the Index-Republican, on "Great Orators I Have Heard," tells of a temperance address made by Tom Marshall of Kentucky, at New Haven, when Governor Kennedy was a student at Yale, which he unhesitatingly says was the greatest oratorical effort it has ever been his privilege to hear.

Marshall's weakness was drink. It was a notable audience that faced him at New Haven — professors, clergymen, public men, students, etc. It was evident as the orator advanced uncertainly to the front of the platform, that he was under the influence of liquor. Before he had said a half dozen sentences, leaning too heavily upon the frail desk in front of him, it toppled over and desk and orator went down in a crash from the platform to the floor below. Pandemonium reigned. Women screamed and men rushed forward, believing that Mr. Marshall had been killed. But he was not seriously injured. Assisted to the platform he sat for a few moments on the little sofa there, and then waving aside the chairman, who was trying to replace the desk, he advanced unsupported to the front of the platform again, saying, "You may think it strange that I come here to lecture on temperance, but if the devil himself should come to lecture on sin, who should know the subject better?"

Colorado white ribboners under the leadership of the state president, Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, will celebrate their emancipation from King Alcohol on New Year's Day.

And then he launched into a description of the evils of drink, that in less than five minutes had caused the vast audience to forget all about the startling and unfortunate opening of the meeting, which would have embarrassed an ordinary speaker so that it would have been impossible for him to proceed.

That great audience, sitting entranced under his wonderful eloquence, was spellbound as he poured forth his burning words of denunciation upon the crime of the century. He closed with an appeal which was as lofty as the stars and as burning as the sun, and sat down amid the tumultuous applause of that great assembly. Every soul in that great audience felt that they had heard the greatest orator the nation had then produced, and though I have since heard many of its greatest talkers and thinkers, not a single one measures up to the sublime standard of Tom Marshall, of Kentucky.—Dayton (O.) News.

A new boat belonging to the Lawrence Canning company of Rockland, Me., was recently christened the "W. C. T. U." The ceremony was brief but impressive. An address was made by Mrs. Edward M. Lawrence, National W. C. T. U. lecturer, who spoke of the great work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, referring to it as the largest and most influential body of women in the world. She paid eloquent tributes to Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens, Anna A. Gordon and other prominent leaders of the past and present. The "W. C. T. U." is a dainty-looking craft painted pure white with the exception of a black front panel which bears the letters "W. C. T. U." decorated with a bow of white ribbon.

FOREIGN MISSIONS' GREAT HANDICAP

That Europeans and Americans are virtually drenching the British West African colonies with liquor is the accusation made by the Laymen's Convention in Boston recently, as the basis of a petition to President Wilson and the United States Congress to stop the traffic in New England rum to West Africa.

In an enlightening article on the destruction being wrought by alcoholic liquors sent from Christian lands, The Christian Advocate gives the following appalling facts:

"Midwives in Nigeria wash newborn babes in gin to give them the superior power of the white man, which they attribute to his favorite beverage. At weddings and all celebrations of a social or domestic character the natives indulge in alcoholic orgies, which sometimes last for weeks. Bottles of gin pass as current coin, and until recently—perhaps to this day—the British colonial government has accepted gin in default of silver, in the payment of court fines. As late as last year parents might pawn their children to gin-millers as security for their liquor bills.

"A Gold Coast missionary who went to the custom house for a case of Bibles was told that he would have to wait until sixteen thousand cases of rum and gin had been unloaded from the ship. Drunken youths have been seen reeling through the streets of Accra singing, 'Onward, Christian Soldiers.' The work of the English mission is nullified by Dutch and English gin and American rum.

"The government returns reveal that the United States of America has the dirty distinction of shipping the largest quantity of rum to West Africa. We ship twice as much as Germany and more than all other Christian nations combined. Holland sends most of the gin, which is the favorite intoxicant. The United Kingdom exports but a small proportion of these essences of misery."

The Advocate calls attention to the fact that nearly one-half of the African continent, from twenty degrees north latitude to twenty-two degrees south, is now under decree of prohibition, so far as the sale or gift of liquor to natives is concerned. "This is the result of the energetic efforts of the British Committee for the Prevention of the Demoralization of the Native Races by the Liquor Traffic and of similar federated agencies in Belgium, France, Germany, Spain, Holland, Italy and Switzerland. Encouraging progress has been achieved. Distillation has been prohibited in the British West African colonies, prohibition ports have been opened and large areas of the hinterland declared dry territory. A silver coinage has been substituted for gin bottles. France has stopped the traffic in absinthe. Belgium has prohibited the liquor traffic in the Belgian Congo. Germany has penalized imported liquors with heavy duties, and has forbidden the traffic in a large part of her possessions."

DES MOINES WELL PREPARED FOR CHRISTMAS

Has a dry Christmas any advantage over a wet one? A writer in the Des Moines (Iowa) Capital believes that it has, and estimates that because the saloons have been compelled to go out of business the city of Des Moines had about $80,000 more than usual to spend this year in assisting Santa Claus to bring Christmas cheer to the little folks and the big folks

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE CONVENTION IN WASHINGTON

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Eastern Sun Comes Slow—How Slowly,—
But Westward, See, The Land is Bright."

These significant words were emblazoned on a scroll held aloft by a graceful feminine figure of heroic size painted on a rich blue drapery hanging across one end of the great National Suffrage Convention assembly room in the New Willard Hotel at Washington, D. C., December 14-19, 1915.

Never, probably, has a convention of suffragists had a more richly beautiful setting. The big ball room was handsome in itself—and the significance of the added convention decorations was as impressive as their beauty. There were rainbow effects, "promises of victory," and evergreens as "symbols of eternity."

The radiant yellow draperies for "light" contrasted finely with the deep blue of "darkness." The stage decorations were especially lovely. They portrayed "the mists of tradition parted, revealing the rainbow colors of promise beyond, illumined by the light of faith;" and above were the seven lamps to represent "the seven golden candlesticks of fulfillment," set in the evergreens of permanence.

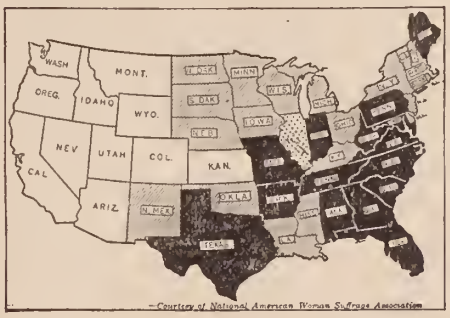
Across the balcony ran the encouraging legend, in rich yellow letters on white, "One million votes for equal suffrage were cast November 2 by Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New York." Banners of all kinds graced the walls. One big yellow banner announced, "For forty-five years the National American Woman Suffrage Association Has Worked for the Susan B. Anthony Amendment;" and nearby hung the white silk Susan B. Anthony banner with its green laurel wreath tied with purple and the great pioneer suffragist's last words of stimulus, "Failure is Impossible."

The 1915 convention was not only the most beautifully set, but also, as Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, pioneer daughter of Lucy Stone, declared at the closing session, one of the most successful in organized suffrage history. It was great in numbers, in enthusiasm, and in activities reviewed and planned, marking with its new general officers, the opening of a new era of progress for the suffrage reform. Large delegations were present, not only from nearby states, New York and Pennsylvania, but also from the South, the Northwest and the Pacific slope. The business sessions were chiefly an interchange of methods among seasoned and prospective campaigners and the general meetings were full of hope and inspiration for renewed efforts in the great cause.

Foremost in interest was the report of legislative work given by the effective leaders, Mrs. Medill McCormick of Chicago, chairman of the Congressional Committee of the National Association, and Mrs. Antoinette Funk. The latter, who has charge of the association's work of converting Congressmen to suffrage, said:

"There is a House committee on the disposal of waste paper, but none for the consideration of woman suffrage. Matters pertaining to suffrage, therefore, go to the Judiciary committee, appropriately known as 'the graveyard of the House.' There is just one thing a Representative cares about, that is his own district. It is essential, therefore, to work with him on the basis of what his own district (and especially the feminine portion of it) wants."

"The full effects of our 'big drive' for the Federal amendment will not be actually known," reported Mrs. Medill McCormick, "until the amendment itself comes to vote again in Congress. The 'drive' itself will not be over until then, and not then unless the amendment is passed. Not a single Senator or Representative has returned to Washington this session without the knowledge that behind him is an organized demand for his favorable vote upon the Susan B. Anthony amendment providing for the national enfranchisement of women upon the same terms as men."



—Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:
ILLINOIS

States Which Vote in 1916:
IOWA (June 5) SOUTH DAKOTA
WEST VIRGINIA

States Which Vote in 1917:
ARKANSAS

Congressional district meetings and farewell parties or luncheons to departing Congressmen have been valuable features of the work, and a great gain for suffrage both in Senate and House is claimed by Mrs. McCormick.

The convention, after considerable debate, decided to concentrate during 1915 on the Susan B. Anthony amendment, at least for the time being. Many states vary in opinion as to this, but deferred debate, leaving it for the National Suffrage Convention or "supreme court" to decide. Some declare that legislators will not as readily ratify the Susan B. Anthony amendment (which directly gives women the vote) as the Shafroth amendment, which merely lets the people vote on the question; and that Congress will not pass the Susan B. Anthony amendment "which takes from the state control over its electorate," as soon as the Shafroth amendment, "which merely fixes the manner of determining who shall constitute the electorate."

Apropos of this Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, national president, pointedly said, on the other hand, that the Shafroth resolution is merely an instrument by which to gain the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment; and that it is a minor thing on the national program. Success for the Susan B. Anthony amendment, it was stated, is based on the suffrage sentiment in the states which must ratify the action of their Senators and Representatives. Consequently the need for the appeal to the individual voters is the same in the case of either the Susan B. Anthony or the Shafroth amendment. To pass a National Constitutional amendment requires both a two-thirds majority in Congress and the ratification of thirty-six state legislatures.

The momentum already gained for the Susan B. Anthony Federal amendment (by the addition of suffrage states and the building up of Congressional district work) has brought the national suffrage movement to a new stage and to a firm position of national strength which, it is earnestly believed, Congress will soon recognize.

There are now more popular votes behind woman suffrage in twenty-one states alone (no less than six and one-half million) than were cast for President Wilson in forty-eight states in 1912.

The much-desired complete co-operation of the Congressional Union (which is conducting an active organization campaign and which held its annual convention and a big Susan B. Anthony pageant just before the national meeting) was not effected, owing to the determined "anti-party" policy of the Union. A joint committee from both organizations, it is hoped, will work out a plan by which each will, at least, not work counter to the other.

The reports of the four 1915 campaign states were full of suggestions, the constructive, quietly effective methods of Pennsylvania winning warm praise. The southern states are making good progress. Arkansas is to be a campaign state in 1917, and Alabama, Georgia, Oklahoma and the Carolinas are specially active. In many states the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the suffrage groups are in active co-operation.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt who was elected to succeed Dr. Shaw as national president, is an Iowan by birth and takes a special interest in the Iowa campaign of 1916 by providing an organizer as well as taking part herself.

Michigan came to the front for a 1918 campaign, holding back in favor of the 1916 prohibition campaign. The active, ever-useful College Equal Suffrage league reported chapters in twenty co-educational and women's colleges as well as leagues in various cities.

There was a cordial reception by President Wilson at the White House, and crowded hearings before the Senate committee and the National Republican Convention committee, with a broadside of eloquent speeches.

An unusual demonstration for the usually quiet and serious suffrage assembly was the well-earned ovation given to Dr. Anna Howard Shaw upon her retirement from the presidency—a shower of roses accompanied by band music and singing by the convention, which in a unanimous vote of thanks attested its appreciation of her self-effacing service. A rising vote of appreciation was also given President Wilson for his helpful action and utterances.

That suffragists do not favor armament (which only incites to war) was shown by the fact that the resolution to commit the convention to the doctrine of military and naval preparedness (eloquently defended by Mrs. Stanley McCormick) was promptly tabled by a vote of 151 to 62. Among the resolutions which passed was one denouncing as slander the current statement that suffragists are not in favor of maintaining the integrity of the home and the sanctity of marriage.

With a big Sabbath afternoon suffrage mass meeting, the forty-seventh convention closed. The National American Woman Suffrage Association entered upon a new year with resources trebled, membership greatly increased, faith glowing, and at the helm the capable and astute suffrage leader, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of world suffrage fame, and with a single-minded endeavor to place in the hands of women the ballot, one of the greatest leverages in work for God, for the nation and for prohibition.

EXPLAINING THE WORLD-WIDE PROHIBITION PHENOMENA

(Excerpts from Address by Rev. A. C. Archibald of Lowell, Mass., Dec. 5)

There is no social movement in our day more amazing than the world-wide rebellion against rum domination. Who would have dreamed that autocratic Russia would so soon become a prohibition nation? Whisky-ridden England has locked up her saloons except for five hours a day with the result that in the first week of shortened hours drunkenness was reduced thirty-five per cent. France, and even Germany, have taken steps to check the liquor traffic. Canada has outlawed the saloon from a number of her provinces. Newfoundland voted dry at an election last month. In our own country eighty per cent of the territory is dry and sixty-five per cent of the people are living in districts where the saloon is no longer tolerated.

What is the basis of this world-wide phenomena? Such world movements were never built on sand foundations. The prime factor is that a few simple facts have slowly seeped into the consciousness of mankind.

First, all reputable medical and scientific authorities have declared alcohol to be a powerful narcotic poison which cannot be taken into the human system with safety even in moderate quantities. There are at least twenty-eight diseases, many of them fatal, which result from even a moderate use of alcohol.

Second, the use of alcohol is responsible for the great majority of the crime, insanity and pauperism which curse the country. Our courts have declared this repeatedly.

Third, the appetite for alcohol is transmitted from one generation to another, and modern science declares that the moderate drinker curses his child with alcoholic tendencies just as fatally as does the hopeless drunkard.

Fourth, mankind has come to realize that expenditures for alcoholic liquor are a waste of the financial resources of our nation; that under our license system our states promote a business which strikes at the very foundation of government and perverts the very purpose for which governments exist.

Fifth, the licensed saloon is in open alliance with the gambling house, the white slave traffic and with every other vicious thing in the community. It is the immoral clearing house in our cities for everything vile.

Sixth, our courts have declared that the three foundations of the state are education, morality and religion. It is a notorious fact that the open saloon robs thousands of our young people of an opportunity for an education. It is a notorious fact that the saloon is the fort of immorality. Any man who does not know that the saloon is the implacable foe of the Christian religion is either dead or in the insane asylum. The licensed saloon, therefore, because it weakens all three of these props to our national government, constitutes one of the greatest dangers to our national life and prosperity.

THE LITTLE OLD WOMAN IN GRAY

FOR MOTHERS' DAY

We turned around suddenly and saw her sitting quietly in the dark corner of the office. We were a little startled to find her there, for we had not seen her come in. She was a little old woman in gray, rather indistinct in the dim light and almost a part of the afternoon shadows.

"Pardon me, madam," we stammered, "you came in so quietly that we didn't notice you. Is there anything you wish?"

"I was wondering," she began in a faint, wavering voice, "if you wouldn't put something in the paper about me. They are so busy, you know, that they haven't much time to remember. I just want to have them reminded."

"What is your name and address, please?" we asked, reaching for a pen.

The little old woman smiled softly.

"I have many names," she said, "and I live everywhere, from the two-room shanty on Telegraph hill up to the mansions on Pacific avenue. I am only that little mother that they have forgotten somehow. I have waited— oh, nobody knows how long—for a letter or a visit or just a little kindness. But they are always so busy. I thought if you'd just put something in the paper—" Her voice trailed off into wistful silence.

"They are very unkind," we said indignantly.

"No, no, no, not unkind," the little old lady defended with eagerness,—"only forgetful. If they only understood how long I've been waiting and how tired I get sometimes—" The words became indistinct.

"We would like to help you, madam," we answered. "But we're afraid it wouldn't do on our page. We don't advertise personalities. Why not try the classified ad. department?"

"They would never read it there," sighed the little old lady.

"They wouldn't be likely to read it on our page either. Busy people only pick out what most interests them, and they wouldn't care to read about you."

"Perhaps you could put it among the fashion notes," she suggested eagerly. "They'd be sure to read it then."

"It would make them angry," we replied.

"I know," sighed the little old lady, glancing at her flattened pocketbook. "Anyway, I suppose they are so busy with their homes and with the babies that they wouldn't have time to see me even if they did read it. But if they would only write a letter! I don't ask for a very long one."

The voice became sadly wistful. Somehow the little cuddled figure became less and less distinct. We thoughtfully fingered the keys of the typewriter in the long silence which followed. When we turned around again we saw only the wavering gray shadows and the outline of an empty chair in the corner of the dingy office.—San Francisco Bulletin.

THE TRUE CURE

When a cure comes for an organic disease, it is not a cure of the old diseased tissue. The cure comes through the growth of the young tissue, which does not contract the disease. The protection of the young growing tissue against the contagion of the organic disease is nature's method of cure. The Nation is a great living organism and a large part of its tissue—looking upon individuals as cells that make up the tissue—is diseased in various stages through the organic disease of the liquor traffic. The true cure is to prevent the youth growing up with the drink habit, to stop the recruiting of the old drinkers as they drop out, rather than expect to change the habits of these men. The National Constitutional Prohibition amendment is drawn to comply with that law of nature. The liquor interests maintain their business by debauching the youth; so the liquor interests must be destroyed.—Ex-Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.

RESULTS REVEALED AT ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF ALCOHOL

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN, Superintendent Medical Temperance for the World's and National W. C. T. U., Forest Hills, Long Island, N. Y.

A very interesting meeting of the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics was held in the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., on December 15-16.

Dr. Lewis D. Mason of Brooklyn presided at the opening session and gave reminiscences of the days when medical men thought alcoholic liquors absolutely essential to recovery from disease. He spoke of the very erroneous practice, once prevalent, of giving large quantities of alcoholic liquors to pneumonia patients, and said in apology for that practice that physicians then did not know anything about the real nature and effects of alcohol. He said, "We deoxygenated the blood of our pneumonia patients when what they most needed was oxygen."

20,000 Cases of Inebriates Studied

Dr. T. D. Crothers, secretary of the society for many years, said that Germany had received more credit for scientific knowledge upon alcohol than was her due; that papers read and published in America years ago, were re-published in Germany as having been written by men in that country. Dr. Crothers told of about 20,000 cases of inebriates which had been carefully studied by himself and others as to the causes of their alcoholic addiction. About fifty per cent of these cases were from the indigent classes; some were feeble-minded. About sixty per cent of these inebriates had moderate drinking parents; some had degenerate ancestors, some an alcoholic history of several generations. He mentioned among the causes leading to alcoholism liquor used by nursing mothers, the use of tea and coffee in childhood; injuries to the head, deficient nutrition, fatigue, etc. Many of the 20,000 inebriates were the children of nursing mothers who drank beer and wine. Tea and coffee, he said, have a bad effect upon the nerves in childhood. Alcohol given as medicine played a considerable part in leading to inebriety, about 20 per cent in these cases. Sixty per cent of the cases studied by Dr. Crothers himself were of superior education and the social use of liquor led to alcoholic craving with many of them. Some began to drink while on trips abroad. Some were from homes of wealth yet had low ideals of right and wrong; they had no desire for anything in life but self-indulgence. Lack of moral sense is much oftener a cause of drink addiction than is commonly supposed.

Students Need Instruction Concerning Dangers of Drugs and Alcohol

A paper by Dr. Waugh, editor of Clinical Medicine, on "The Influence of Spirits and Narcotics on Student Life," told of the suicide of a medical student of the University of Pennsylvania. The coroner of Philadelphia said at the inquest that many of the medical students of that university used drugs including alcohol in order to brace them up to get through their studies. The greatest danger was with youths who work their way through college. Eighteen per cent of the students of a medical school with which Dr. Waugh was once connected admitted using drugs, or beer, or spirits. Professors of therapeutics often make opium and alcohol seem so attractive as sleep-producers that weary, over-worked students are tempted to try them on themselves. Few medical schools teach a knowledge of hygiene and foods. Dr. Waugh said, "Beer in moderation is the most dangerous of all drinks."

"Alcoholic Intoxication in the Parent a Cause of Epilepsy in the Child," was the topic of a valuable paper by Dr. Matthew Woods of Philadelphia, a well-known authority on epileptic troubles. He told of parents who were total abstainers, except on such occasions as their own wedding, who had an epileptic child as a result of the one time of indulgence. "More epileptic children are born of drinking parents than of epileptic parents."

Dr. Oscar M. Leiser, of the New York City Department of Health, told of the anti-alcohol work being done by the department. He said: "No great stride in public health has ever been made without violent opposition on the part of the people, and often by the medical profession. * * * This is the psychological moment for bringing to the public the facts and trying to gain general acceptance of the truth about alcohol." Talks are being given by public education lecturers in schools, clubs, churches, settlements, etc. Posters are being prepared, also new books for use in schools. It was interesting to hear Dr. Leiser say that the best method to fight alcohol is education in the schools. He said that in the great subway construction now going on in New York, one firm of contractors employs only total abstainers. Another firm makes no such ruling. Each firm employs about 10,000 men. Over seventy per cent of the accidents which have taken place in this work have occurred in the case of contractors who allow their employes to drink. He said that the alcoholic insane come largely from those social groups that use liquor freely. He quoted from insurance reports giving as one item that men using even as little as two glasses of beer a day have a mortality rate of eighteen per cent in excess of the standard. Men who use over two glasses of beer a day should not have insurance at regular rates as they are dangerous risks. The department realizes that there is close relationship between patent medicines and alcohol. A board of health ordinance to take effect January 1, 1916, forbids the sale or the gift, of any patent medicine the ingredients of which are not made known to the health department. "We tell people," he said, "that persons addicted to Peruna, or Vinol, or Lydia Pinkham's Compound are consciously or unconsciously drunkards."

> PUBLIC HEALTH AND ALCOHOLIC DEGENERACY
>
> T. Alexander MacNicholl, M. D.
>
> The great burden of drink is not borne by the drinker, but by the drinker's children. The germ cell that is to be evolved into another being is the most highly organized of all the cells of the body. In its protoplasm lie the material and pattern of the perfected organism. Should such poison as alcohol lessen the nutrition of the cell or impair the quality of the protoplasmic material and deface the pattern, these shortcomings would be manifested in the subsequent stages of development. A defective germ cell cannot evolve a normal body. This is the reason that we find a large percentage of functional and organic diseases among the children of drinking parents.

Dr. Quackenbos, formerly professor of psychology in Columbia University, told of his cures of inebriate men and women by suggestion. He says this is the only way to restore moral strength to the drinker. In over 1,200 cases treated by him only twenty per cent failed to respond. Society women who become drunkards or drug users are almost beyond hope of cure. The drink habit is growing among women. Not a few young women are brought to his office intoxicated. The great natural force that is wasting in America today is woman. Alcohol is the greatest single independent cause of insanity. It is the greatest existing menace to American life. The medical profession does not approve of alcohol either as a beverage or a medicine. (He should have said the best of the medical profession, for unfortunately many physicians drink personally and still advise patients to use liquor.) Beer and ale in this country all contain sulphurous acid. Tobacco depresses nerves and in time this depression calls for alcohol to relieve it. The Harrison anti-drug law has left untouched the two most harmful drugs, alcohol and tobacco. Those who use alcohol and tobacco are committing suicide on the installment plan. A cigaret user is as bad an insurance risk as an alcoholic.

Dr. Alfred Gordon, formerly professor of mental and nervous diseases in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, gave results of his personal investigations of the effects of parental alcoholism upon offspring. He showed a picture of a baby monstrosity, born without a brain, the child of an alcoholic father. The children born to this father before he took to drink were normal. The doctor investigated this case thoroughly and could find no cause for the birth of the monstrosity but the father's drunkenness. He said that education against alcohol should include visits to feeble-minded asylums that people might see what alcohol can do.

A study of the effects of recent legislation upon the use of narcotic drugs was presented by Hon. M. I. Wilberts, director of the hygienic laboratory of the United States public health service, Washington, D. C. Mr. Wilberts stated that the importation of cocaine and of morphine had not been lessened by the Harrison law, indeed the importation of morphine had largely increased. He gave the estimate of 200,000 opium addicts in the United States, and approximately 80,000 cocaine addicts. These are those who take large amounts. The Harrison law allows the sale of small amounts of morphine. The apparent results of this law so far are not very satisfactory. He said it is practically impossible to enforce a state anti-narcotic law; strong Federal law is needed. In speaking of small doses of different drugs Mr. Wilberts said: "Any active drug will in time have a deteriorating action."

Miss Cora F. Stoddard of Boston gave "Some Recent Facts on the Alcoholic Question by Foreign Authors." Space forbids a résumé of this excellent paper. The severe storm hindered some of the distinguished men upon the program from being present. Their papers will probably be published in the Journal of Inebriety.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE
CIRCULATION MANAGER, MISS ADDIE A. AUSTIN

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
FOREIGN POSTAGE 52 CENTS ADDITIONAL
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 25c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, December 30, 1915

GOAL FOR 1916—SIXTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Indianapolis, Indiana, December 8-13.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Happy New Year! The words are often spoken carelessly and thoughtlessly, with little realization that for thousands it will not be a happy year. Happy New Year! How can one utter the greeting unless in the heart are the desire and the purpose to make the year a happy one, not alone for the little family circle to which the wisher belongs, or for the select group of loved friends, but also for the community, the state, the nation and the whole world.

If the Christian men and women of America would interpret their "Happy New Year" in terms of enthusiastic, aggressive activity for the eradication of that happiness-destroyer—the liquor traffic—the movement for National Constitutional Prohibition would receive an impetus that would carry it in short order through Congress and the state legislatures.

By all means let us give voice to a "Happy New Year" in speech and song, but let it carry with it a determination to more devotedly consecrate ourselves to bringing nearer the happy years when that maker of misery, John Barleycorn, shall be an outlaw throughout this land.

How about those New Year resolutions? Do not fail to include in them a determination to win at least one new member for your local union, and to secure one or more new subscriptions to the official paper.

An excellent way to observe the New Year week is to hold a mother's meeting on January 3—(the birthday of "Saint Courageous," the mother of Frances Willard) For program, see page 10.

AMERICA A LAND OF PROMISE OR OF DISAPPOINTMENT

Students of social conditions in America are looking forward with concern to the possibility of a large influx of aliens to our shores at the close of the war. The increasing number of foreigners coming to America each year complicates our social problems and has its bearing upon the temperance reform. Many of the new Americans come from countries where the drinking of alcoholic liquors is a custom handed down from time immemorial, and having had no opportunities for instruction on the subject, they become easy victims of the liquor interests. Finding social attractions in the saloons, frequently denied them elsewhere, and being welcomed by the keepers of the drink shops, who are often of their own nationalities, they become regular habitues of these places. This is the picture most often presented, but there is another, of which we must be mindful. Many of these people turn toward America with high hopes that they are coming to a land where they can raise their families free from the temptations to which they were subjected in the old country. In the campaign for prohibition in Alberta, Canada, last fall, the anti-liquor forces received strong support from the Ruthenians of that section, and the feeling they had toward the anti-saloon movement is indicated by an appeal from the leaders published in The Canadian, edited by the Ruthenians. As reported in The Record of Christian Work, the appeal read like this:

"We have come to this country and received it as our fatherland and here we wish our children to live. Shall we allow taxes and burdens to be laid upon us by this alcohol as in the old country? No! a thousand times No! We have learned our lesson in the old country and we shall not go in the same way here. For if we do, then we shall have nowhere to flee to, but shall have this burden to draw until death. If you wish to live in joy and plenty with your children, cast out this enemy from your home and from the whole of Alberta! Now is your chance!"

Thousands of immigrants come to us longing to make their permanent home in a community uncontaminated by the liquor evil. How are we to meet them? Shall the men and women from vodkaless Russia find in America an asylum less safe than that from which they have come? Shall the much vaunted "promised land" which the worthy and liberty-loving strangers are entering prove rather to be a "land of disappointment" because it offers to them and to their children no more and possibly less protection from the tyrant, King Alcohol, than did the land from which they are fleeing?

The immigration problem is a hard and complicated one, and when the war ends, its difficulties and complexities may be increased, but we believe if there could be eliminated from it the diabolical temptations which are the direct result of the legalized liquor traffic, its solution would be made comparatively easy.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(Continued from Page Three)

physician, except for possible temporary relief. These opinions as expressed at the meeting are held quite generally among the medical profession as a whole, and yet the nation's sole effort at remedy has been in the nature of legislation. Police court judges in most of the large cities have obtained evidence of the wide-spread use of drugs since Congress enacted the Harrison law restricting the sale. The difficulties that attend the sale of drugs under the Harrison law have served to bring many of the users out into the open. When the law first went into effect drug users swarmed through the red light districts of the large cities, and most of the hospitals were called upon to furnish them some sort of relief. Remedies applied then, however, were merely temporary, and no attempt has been made either to invoke educational methods for preventing the contracting of the habit, or to bring about permanent cures. Scientific laboratories for the study of the hookworm and other diseases are maintained by the government, but very little is being done toward obtaining permanent results in stamping out the drug habit.

In the same connection, let me mention another recent gathering in Washington, known as "The Mission to Lepers." This meeting was attended by many men and women, most of whom were physicians, who have been making leprosy an especial study for years, and urged upon Congress the great and immediate need of a national leprosarium, where these unfortunate victims could receive care and attention, and perhaps be cured, or be benefited by an amelioration of their terrible malady, instead of being subjected to all sorts of trials, and often indignities in order to segregate them. There are one or more lepers in eighteen states of the Union, making a total of about two hundred in this country, many of whom have been wofully mistreated. The history of these unfortunate persons, as stated by physicians at this gathering, was one to sicken the heart. A bill for the establishment of a national leprosarium passed the House during the last Congress but failed to reach the Senate. A similar bill will be introduced during this session of Congress.

A drastic bill with heavy penalties has been introduced in the House, by Representative Randall, the Prohibition member from Los Angeles, to prohibit the use of the United States mails in promoting and advertising the liquor traffic. The bill was referred to the House Committee on Judiciary, and Mr. Randall expects to push the measure to victory early in the session. Mr. Randall and his wife were recent callers at Washington headquarters, when he expressed his surprise and delight at finding so many men in Congress who believe in the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

We regret that the amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition was not introduced in the House before Congress adjourned for the holidays, but it seemed an impossibility owing to the unavoidable hindrances and delays always occurring at the opening of a new Congress, but the way was cleared for an early introduction, when work with the new Congress will be undertaken with renewed vigor. Please see that the "brief" relative to National Constitutional Prohibition is given wide publicity, that the people may fully understand the question as presented to Congress.

December 24, 1915

IS IT RIGHT?

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT

The financial needs of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were never greater than at the present time. The organization never occupied a larger place in public esteem than it now occupies, nor has it ever been so universally recognized as the great educational factor, which by forty years of persistent activity has lifted public sentiment to its present attitude of impatience with the liquor traffic and rebellion against further toleration of its iniquities. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union leaders outline great campaigns and, with unsurpassed loyalty, women of the rank and file rally to the standard, and the Christian world admires the wisdom, the loyalty and the devotion shown, and when victory comes, gives freely of approbation and applause, but in too many cases fails to give that most necessary equipment without which other equipment is unobtainable—the money for the war chest. An empty war chest wins no battles. There must be equipment and equipment must be paid for. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has demonstrated its ability to do marvelous works with little money, but it has been at the sacrifice of brain and brawn which, had adequate means been furnished, might have had greater and more prolonged usefulness, and might have saved the workers unnecessary toil and deprivation.

Why should the Woman's Christian Temperance Union be expected to make "bricks without straw?" When a white ribbon speaker is given the privilege of delivering the "home protection" message from some pulpit, should it ever be with the stipulation that "no collection can be asked for?" No one is compelled to give; why not allow the people the opportunity to contribute if conscience so dictates? Why should it be considered necessary to protect an able-bodied congregation from the appeal of the speaker for means with which a thoroughly organized but financially embarrassed army of Christian women, may wisely aid in protecting not only every home represented in that congregation but every home in the whole broad land? Why?

Why, when a great mass meeting is held under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with inspiring music, perfectly appointed program, eloquent speeches, unbounded enthusiasm and tumultuous applause, must the collection oftimes fall below the actual expense of the meeting or leave such a pitifully meager margin in the hands of the committee as to cause heart failure at the bare thought of attempting to finance further endeavors? Why?

Is it because the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a "woman's organization" and the thought voiced by the colored brother whose wife asked him for ten cents to buy candy after he had just spent twenty-five cents for tobacco that "women don't know how to spend money nohow; they's jus' lak chillun," still dominates the minds of most of those who hold the purse strings? Is it?

Other organizations no more worthy, no more capable, with a far less brilliant record of achievement, lacking the cohesiveness of organization and the marvelous esprit de corps peculiar to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union readily secure large sums of money for the asking. Why should not we?

It is not because the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is in any sense unworthy; far from it! It is not because there is any lack in detail or perfection of organization, or that its work is in any particular barren of results. Its generalship has been unrivaled, the fighting qualities and deathless devotion of its rank and file unsurpassed. Mankind marvels at its magnificent history, uncovers in admiration before the combined statesmanship and womanliness of its peerless leaders, acknowledges the righteousness of our cause, but withholds financial support, allowing those whom it lauds and of whom it may oft be said "the world is not worthy," to go on as best they may with the heart-breaking task of lifting a nation level with the high ideal of protecting its own homes and children from a flood of drunkenness and vice.

And so, go on they must, minus the cheer and impetus that would so greatly aid, did they but know that the war chest contained sufficient funds to finance the campaign without worry and without eternal "skimping," for which by force of circumstances women have become proverbial.

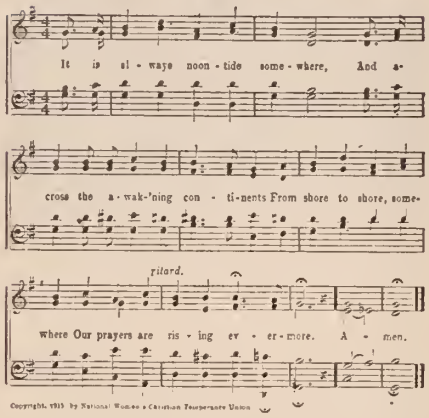
Is it right, fair, just? Should not the Woman's Christian Temperance Union receive from that portion of the public which professes to believe in its principles and approve its labors, a measure of support in some degree commensurate with the great service which it renders the world? Should not only its members but its admirers, and those who care for high altruistic endeavor under whatever standard, place the Woman's Christian Temperance Union well toward the top on the list of their permanent beneficiaries? Why not? Is it not fully deserving?

Some choose to give largely for educational purposes. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is an educational organization, its propaganda nation-wide, world-wide, embracing the fundamentals of civilization. Some open their hands widely for charitable societies. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union seeks to dispense with the need of so much so-called charity, by removing some of the prime causes of poverty. Some confine their benefactions to church lines, the promotion of denominational activities. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a great evangelistic body, its labors and ideals in every sense Christian, combining within its reaches home and foreign missionary work, aiding the "Ladies Aid," its workers often the mainstay of the prayer meeting and the sure dependence of the Sabbath school superintendent?

Why then may not those who give liberally to various other Christian and benevolent institutions, tap the spring a little deeper for the benefit of so broadly useful an organization which gives to society such diversified benefits, or else so proportion their liberality that some little stream may find its way into Woman's Christian Temperance Union fields, relieve the drought, and cause a more abundant harvest of social good in an educated public sentiment demanding total abstinence, purity, an equal standard of morals, a national righteousness that will refuse to poison by wholesale the heathen at home or abroad, and that will give the home and the child proper recognition and the protection due them as the chief asset of national life.

Why should not the Woman's Christian Temperance Union be liberally supported by all who care in the least for high ideals? Is there any reason? And is there any reason why those who hold large possessions, or those of smaller means, in making final disposition of the same, should not remember the Woman's Christian Temperance Union by blessing it with some portion of their wealth? Even though in many cases the sum might seem small, in the aggregate it would mean much of help to our needy treasury. Is there any reason why you should not provide that after you are gone some of your means should help on the work for God and Home and Native Land?

Time of Prayer—Noontide



Copyright, 1915 by National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

"O Father, we do pray,
That ere another New Year's day
Swift-footed shall draw nigh,
This wicked, wanton strife shall cease,
That we may see the dawn of peace
Illumine the Eastern sky."

"A Fighter called Home" is the way the Sunday School Times characterizes the home-going of Mrs. Zillah Foster Stevens, the Temperance secretary of the International Sunday School Association, who entered into heavenly activities on December 3, 1915. "It is better to do one thing well than many things indifferently," reads the appreciation of her work. "A rifle bullet well aimed is more effective than the scattering charge of a shot-gun. Mrs. Stevens has for years poured rifle bullets with deadly effectiveness into the camp of the liquor traffic. Surely she was welcomed on the other side for the enemies she made here."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. LITERATURE BUILDING

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, JAMESTOWN, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

JANUARY 3—Mother's Day (Birthday of Madam Willard)

PROGRAM FOR MOTHER'S DAY—JANUARY 3

Call meeting to order; have a timekeeper and insist upon keeping strictly to time.

Floral decorations of white carnations.

Hymn

Scripture reading: Proverbs 31:10-31

Prayer

Special music

Addresses, five minutes each, by pastors or honorary members on the following topics, "What Mother Means to the Home," "What Mother Means to the Sons," "What Mother Means to the Daughters"

(If a witty, short, pungent, lively speech can be given in three minutes by a lady, "Why not Father Also?" add this.)

Special music

Talks (not papers) three minutes each, on "Mothers of the Bible," as follows:

Sarah, the steadfast, who when she demanded supreme authority in her home became the first advocate of woman's rights: Gen. 16:5-6-9, Gen. 20:9-12, Gal. 4-30.

Rebecca, the far-seeing. She believed in heredity and in home influence. Gen. 26:34-35, Gen. 27:46, Gen. 28:1-2.

Hannah, the evangelist, her mouth full of song, prayer and praise. I Sam. 1:12-18, I Sam. 2:1-10.

Elizabeth, the prophetic mother of John the Baptist. Luke 1:42-43.

Lois and Eunice, the grandmother and mother who believed in child-training. Acts 16:1, II Tim. 1:5.

The Madonna Mother—the Virgin Mary. Luke 1:26-30, 46-55, Luke 2:19.

Talks, three minutes each, "Great Mothers of a Later Day":

Susanna, Mother of John and Charles Wesley.

Mary, Mother of Washington

Catharine Booth, Mother of the Salvation Army

Madam Willard, Mother of "Saint Frances"

One-minute Tributes "To the Best of Mothers—Our Own."

Song, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds"

Benediction

VIRGINIA VITALITIES

Special Correspondence

Virginia Red Letter Day was quite generally observed by the local unions. At Nathalie nineteen pretty girls in white gowns and bright pennant sashes, each bearing the name of a dry state, enlivened the program by singing prohibition songs. Eight members were secured on that occasion and a new legion was organized. Horntown, White Plains and Alexandria report successful meetings, well attended.

Newport News held a splendid teachers' reception not long ago. The chief speaker was Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer. Many of the teachers expressed interest in the cause and promised to forward our plans as far as they are able to do so.

Gate City union visited the convicts' camp. Rev. Crowder addressed the men most sympathetically, after which a band of children sang songs and distributed flowers. A treat of fruit and cake was given the convicts, who, in Virginia, are put at work on the highways in "gangs," breaking rock and making macadam. Always under guard, they live in tents and hastily constructed huts, the little settlement being called a camp. The same W. C. T. U. held a mass meeting on World's Temperance Sunday, entertaining and enthusing a large crowd and securing many pledges. Two prominent school men were on the program.

Alexandria union held a meeting in the almshouse, and Petersburg at an evening social in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. entertained several hundred people. Music, speeches and recitations made up the program and here again the nineteen dry states were represented by young girls who this time served refreshments to the guests.

Henrico county union held its annual "tag day" in Richmond City. On this day the city belongs to the W. C. T. U. and every man, woman and child on the streets who will permit it, is tagged with a white ribbon not so very different from that worn by members. Thirty stations were maintained over the city and over $250 was realized by the union and much literature was distributed.

Henrico county union provided a rest room at the state fair from which literature was distributed. No contributions were solicited although the enterprise cost the union $130.

Roanoke union has been busy since the state convention making both money and converts to the cause. It has held a cake sale, a rummage sale, a public prayer service for National Constitutional Prohibition, a mass meeting, with able speakers, in the interests of the great movement for Peace, has visited another union to encourage it, made a call upon the orphanage with flowers and candy and held a mothers' meeting and an evangelistic meeting.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. L. O. Middleton, National lecturer for the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction and associate superintendent of School Savings and Thrift, closed a month's engagement in North Dakota, November 18, having gone there from the National Convention. The work for the month included twenty-four public addresses, four receptions, two Sunday school addresses, one state and one county teachers' meeting, at which a display of W. C. T. U. charts and books was made and much free literature furnished by the state W. C. T. U. During the month new members were gained and weak unions encouraged and strengthened. Following her work in the summer schools of North Dakota in July, Mrs. Middleton was invited by the chairman of the State Teachers' Association to return in November for an address on temperance hygiene before one of the departments of the State Association, which met at Grand Forks, November 3-5. On the morning of November 5, Mrs. Middleton addressed the model high school of the State University, at Grand Forks; in the afternoon she addressed the primary department of the State Teachers' Association and in the evening gave a public address at the city hall. At noon she was guest of honor at a luncheon given by Miss Katherine Whiteley, chairman of the primary department and principal of one of the largest schools in Grand Forks, at which the newly elected president of the association, Miss Beatrice Johnstone, four county superintendents and other distinguished women educators were guests. Miss Johnstone is a member of the W. C. T. U. High praise was given to North Dakota's prohibitory law and high tribute paid to the state W. C. T. U. for its excellent work, by Professor Taylor, the state superintendent of public instruction, in his talk before the State Teachers' Association.

An enviable medal contest record is that of a county superintendent of Florida, who held forty contests last year and twenty more the last six months of the previous year, making a total of sixty contests for eighteen months.

As inquiries are frequently received at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters concerning the Chicago Woman's Shelter, we desire to inform all interested, that this institution is in no way connected with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. When it was found necessary for the Shelter to incorporate the Cook county (Ill.) W. C. T. U., which had formerly been interested in it, voted unanimously to discontinue it as an affiliated department of its work.

ONE WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE ON A JURY

ENTERTAINS JURORS WITH TEMPERANCE READINGS

MRS. EVA C. WHEELER, National Organizer and Lecturer

It was with a bit of timidity and not-at-homeness that I first entered the court room as juror. Women jurors had always been as much a burlesque as "female masonry." When the clerk, in reading the roll of jurors called out through the great room the name of "Mrs. Eva C. Wheeler" instead of "John Smith" or "John Jones," every one sat up and took notice, for never before in the history of the state of California had a woman's name been called. Just two lone women responded to that roll-call. Many wished to see what a woman who would act as juror looked like, for women are not compelled to serve in this county unless they send in their names.

After I had become somewhat at home in the jury box I realized that this service is not so difficult to perform as might be supposed, for only two things can be considered, the testimony and the instructions of the court. We associate everywhere with our brothers, fathers, husbands, sons and the experience of meeting men in the court or jury room is not very different. No man in the jury room ever forgot that there was a lady present. When a verdict could not be reached for hours, when discussion became too heated, or the judge had retired, and we must wait, I was always invited to read. For the first time in a jury room, I believe, selections from the Medal Contest reciters were heard, for I gladly responded to the invitation with such selections as, "The Fence and the Ambulance," "The Old Woman's Complaint," "Saved," and others. Often when a man was "drawn" he would say, "If I am chosen I hope you will be too, so you can read for us."

I have spent six weeks in the court house as juror. Five times I marched with eleven other jurors and two bailiffs to a cafeteria and ate with them. I sat on nine cases, seven times acting as foreman (signing the verdict for the whole jury) in the superior criminal court of this state. I was never insulted nor did I lose my love for my home, husband, child, church or society. I did not become mannish and I am not afraid to work with men in any field where God or my brothers or sisters need me. No impure story was heard in the jury room and there was no smoking, for those who wished to smoke retired to the lobby while I tatted, and some of those who did not smoke said they wished they had learned to tat! Many a man who has served on the jury at intervals for a number of years remarked on the improved conditions, the absence of tobacco smoke and of rough talk. "I believe in woman jurors," said these men. No man, except the lawyers or defendant, seemed to resent my presence. If compelled to remain over night or when I became too tired to think clearly a private room was at my disposal and there I found a comfortable cot and needed toilet articles.

I came through my jury experience determining for myself and wishing for others that we might early learn the lesson so forcibly impressed upon every juror, that every man is considered innocent until proven guilty. One thing I determined when acting as juror—always to vote, "Not Guilty" on the informal ballot, as it gives the defendant a fairer chance, provokes helpful discussion and brings out suggestive questions.

There are some things I cannot yet understand about the machine of justice: Why should the examining lawyer ask a woman's age and never a man's? Why should a woman be asked what her husband's business is, never what her own is. Why should one woman be excused from sitting as a juror on a certain case because the defendant objects to woman jurors, and another woman be taken on the same case with the same defendant and the same lawyer? Of course, it is not expected that a mere woman would understand such things, but there are some things she can learn: where the laws are weak and where they are strong. By the way, when a woman wishes to be allowed to act on liquor cases, girl delinquent cases, etc., she would better not wear her white ribbon! The defendant will be frightened at the sight of it.

Prize-winning Float of the Florence County (S. C.) W. C. T. U. in a Floral Parade at the Pee Dee Fair in Florence

In strong contrast to the beautiful white float which won the prize at the fair was the black-draped auto entered by the Florence county W. C. T. U. in the parade Sept. 1, which bore the legend, "Mr. Voter, Please Put Me In the White Column." Both the floats were decorated by Mrs. E. E. Howell, president of the Florence county W. C. T. U

UNDER MRS. GIBSON'S MANAGEMENT

DAWLEY PALMER

"You really enjoyed yesterday's affair, my dear?" asked Mr. Watt at the breakfast table, after listening to his wife's recital of Mrs. Gibson's afternoon tea.

"Immensely. Mrs. Gibson was charming, her gown most becoming, her children delightfully well-mannered, and the refreshments and table decorations dainty and novel. I was so glad I went, though I should never have gone if you hadn't urged me."

"That was for business reasons," replied her husband.

"Business?"

"Yes; Charles Gibson has been my best salesman for years. He is paid a salary which ought to be quite sufficient to keep a family like his, but for some unknown reason he has become dreadfully lax of late, overdraws his account, and doesn't seem to make sales. I wanted you to accept Mrs. Gibson's invitation to see how they live."

"Well, Mrs. Gibson impressed me as a practised hand at entertaining. If she does this sort of thing often, it must cost," was Mrs. Watt's comment.

"That's where the money goes, I'll wager," concluded her husband.

Mr. Watt's first task, after reaching his office that morning, was to examine Charles Gibson's reports, and they were far from satisfactory.

"Tell Gibson to come in," he said to the boy who answered his ring.

"He is not down yet," the boy replied.

Nine-thirty and not at work? What could it mean? When Gibson appeared an hour later, it was with the same excuse of extra duties at home, and so earnestly was it offered that it was readily accepted.

"I understand," briefly said his employer, but his mental comment was one of commiseration for the man before him. Such women as Mrs. Gibson were hard drivers.

"Charlie, I'm going to send you into fresh territory," Mr. Watt said. "I have a little trip planned for you. Arrange to go tomorrow morning, and see if you can't put some ginger into your work. Begin your days earlier, and nail a lot of business for us."

Several days later, a trim, auburn-haired woman, stylishly clad in dark blue, waited in Mr. Watt's office. She was glad to find the room empty, for it gave her an opportunity to gain her composure. The task before her was not a pleasant one. As Mr. Watt entered his office the lady rose to meet him.

"Mr. Watt?"

"Yes, Madam."

"I am Mrs. Gibson."

"Very glad to meet you, Mrs. Gibson. Please be seated."

Mr. Watt was, indeed, glad to meet her, for he saw that now was his chance to do something for Charlie Gibson. This woman's extravagance was the barrier to her husband's success, and a few words of earnest counsel might set things right.

"You have come to speak about Charlie?" Mr. Watt ventured.

"Yes, Mr. Watt. That is—I—will you pardon my frankness?" Her gray eyes met his unflinchingly.

"By all means."

"I had to come to you this morning to ask for money. It is very hard for me to do this, but I simply have to. I thought there might be something to my husband's credit."

Watt's frown was ill-concealed, and the woman flushed deeply.

"You have no money, you say?" His tone was not encouraging.

"Not a cent. Charlie went away without providing for his family in any way. It is difficult to get along on nothing, Mr. Watt, with three children like ours."

"Mrs. Gibson, it is my turn to be frank with you. For years your husband has been the best salesman in our house. We have learned to look for big things from him. He has been well paid and treated right, but I regret to say that for months the volume of his business has been falling off greatly. He drew a week's pay in advance before he left us on this trip."

Mrs. Gibson's face whitened. Her errand was growing harder than she anticipated it could be.

"My dear lady," Mr. Watt continued, "wives can be of the greatest assistance to their husbands if they know a little of conditions—the value of hard-earned money, for instance."

"You mean— what, Mr. Watt?" She had risen and taken a step forward.

"Well, good management helps a salary like Charlie's to take care of a wife and three children in a modest suburban home."

"I scarcely understand. You mean—that we live—extravagantly?"

"Why, practically that, since you put it that way."

Mrs. Gibson's head rose higher. "Mr. Watt, if you allude to that little afternoon tea, to which I asked your wife, I may as well confess to you that it was with the idea that she might carry back to you a glimpse of Charlie's home, of his children, and our manner of living—which is modest enough when one considers that I am cook, laundress, nurse, and mother, all in one. You would not understand if I were to tell you how I contrived and worked for weeks to entertain that small handful of friends. I cooked everything, I made the table decorations, and I adorned the rooms with home-grown flowers. I made the gown I wore and the children's dresses, sitting up late to do it. And all this was done to make a little effort at a modest social standing. Mr. Watt, I thought Charlie was doing well. He has been leaving home so early and returning so late that he has not been able to give me any help. I had even hoped you might advance his salary when you noted his good work."

"Impossible!" exclaimed the astonished Mr. Watt.

"But thirty dollars a week isn't a great sum," Mrs. Gibson objected.

"Thirty dollars! Why, we have been giving Charlie Gibson sixty dollars weekly for the past year!"

The woman sank heavily into her chair. Her husband's falsehood, his decrease in business, a squandered salary, of which she had known nothing, her lack of funds,—the weight of all this was like a millstone about her neck. With ashen face and tight-drawn lips she rose to go.

"I wish—to thank you—Mr. Watt," she quavered, "for the time you have given me. These things are a surprise to me, but it is best for me to know them. May I ask you for Charlie's address?"

"You do not even hear from him? Mrs. Gibson, I must beg your pardon. I will frankly own that I thought you were responsible for your husband's failures. I was mistaken. It is clear that he is squandering the money. I will do all in my power to put him right." Turning to his desk he wrote out a cashier's order and handed it to her. "I will recall your husband and send him home," he added. "He is too fine a man to go on in this way. You can do more for him than anybody else can."

Gibson was promptly recalled. As he entered his employer's private office, shabby, dejected, and abject in appearance, he was greeted with the announcement, "Gibson, your services are no longer required."

"You're not firing me, Mr. Watt, are you?" asked Gibson, visibly agitated.

"That's just what I'm doing," was the reply. "We need business-getters, and you seem to prefer other things to work. Charlie Gibson, you're drinking yourself to death. You can't deny it, and as long as you continue on the path you've chosen, you'll be a failure and will drag your splendid little family with you to ruin. I have no more time to give you. Good day."

Gibson left the office thoroughly disheartened. The fact that his own weakness for drink was entirely to blame for his discharge, in no way lessened his depression.

"Pretty rough handling I gave him," thought Mr. Watt often during the days that followed. "But Mrs. Gibson will be able to do something with him, and he will be back soon, ready for work."

Two weeks later, a very humble man quietly entered Mr. Watt's office and stood by the door.

"Mr. Watt, you'll let me go to work, won't you? I promise to do the right thing, and to give you good, honest service," he begged.

"There is a vacancy for just such a man as that to fill," replied his employer, smilingly, extending his hand. "The position is worth thirty dollars a week, to be increased—when the employe makes good."

"That is more than satisfactory," Charlie agreed heartily. "Kate can manage on that amount. Mr. Watt, I've had a grand awakening at home these two weeks. What a wife I have! I don't deserve her. She has the management of a dozen women. I tell you, that cursed liquor habit almost killed my strength, ambition, and even honesty, to say nothing about the family I was dragging down. But, thanks to Kate, drink isn't going to get me!"

"A bargain, then, at thirty dollars a week—if you absolutely let drink alone! Last chance, Charlie," said Watt sternly.

"Never fear; I'll need no other."

"I was sure that he would take you again, Charlie," said the little woman who met him at the door that night. "How splendid you are looking, dear! It's my own boy back; I know it is."

"Yes, thanks to you—and to you only—" was the reply, emphasized with an old-time tender kiss.

AMERICA TO HER CHILDREN

DENIS A. McCARTHY in Youth's Companion

Children of mine, how devoted I see you are!
Children of mine, what a blessing to me you are!
Sending your love to the innermost heart of me,
Thrilling and filling each fibre and part of me!

Fresh are your faces, and clear are the eyes of you,
Great are your dreams although small is the size of you.
Eager your thoughts—may they never bring shame to you!
Blest is the land that to-day can lay claim to you!

Children of mine, will you always be true to me?
Always remember the service that's due to me?
Treason may tempt. Will you turn from the lure of it?
How can I ask, since my heart is full sure of it?

Children, your fathers have suffered in gyves for me;
Yea, they have given their lands and their lives for me.
YOU are not called such devotion to give for me;
This be YOUR part: That you love me, and live for me!

DELLA'S NEW YEAR PRESENT

CECILE L. HOUGHTON, Elkhorn, Wis.

"Happy New Year! Happy New Year, Della!"

A sickly smile and a feeble response was the only reply as the child brushed quickly past her gay friends and pushed open the heavy door of the drug-store.

"Good morning, little girl, and a Happy New Year!" greeted the druggist, with a pleasant smile. "Mother not so well again?" he questioned, reaching for the tightly folded prescription.

"Oh, my mama was just dreadful nervous all last night. I never had my clothes off at all, giving her medicine. Just slept between times on the foot of her bed."

"Why, you poor child! Was it so bad as that? And where was—your—father?" In sudden indignation the druggist found it hard to be respectful. John Bolton's dissipations were getting to be the talk of the town.

"Father had business—away. I think he is not well, either, this morning," Della answered with dignity.

"H'm—probably not—headache most likely. Well, good morning, little girl, and here—it isn't much, but take this box of chocolates and try to enjoy yourself some way."

With the dainty gift clasped tightly in her cold little fingers, life began at last to brighten for the over-burdened child. It brightened again when on opening the kitchen door she was met by the odor of coffee and her surprised gaze fell on her father bending over the stove. He was making toast. Surely the worst of everything was over now. Daddy was going to be her good, affectionate father again. Mother would get better now, too. She always did. "Happy New Year, daddy!" This time Della could say it with a smile.

"O—why—sure enough—Happy New Year! Is this really New Year's Day? Ought to have some sort of celebration, I suppose," said the man.

"Everybody is celebrating but us, I guess," answered Della, regretfully. "I met May and Dora going to their grandpa's in the country. Smith's are all over to their Aunt Jane's, and Jimmy says they are going to have company and turkey 'cause they didn't have it on Thanksgiving."

"And how would it be for us to have roast chicken and some cakes from the bakery? Guess we could manage it some way for once. How'd that be, Della?"

"Splendid, oh, splendid! Can we really, daddy? I'd help. O daddy—and here are some chocolates that the drug-store man gave me. We could have them with our New Year's dinner." She said the last words slowly and impressively, her eyes growing bigger and brighter all the time. She must run to her mother with the good news at once.

"Mother, O mother, daddy's in the kitchen getting us some breakfast, and he is going to get us a real New Year's dinner, chicken and everything. You're going to get better now, aren't you? You do feel better already, don't you?"

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

"Yes, child, I am happier. I shall be stronger soon." She half sighed and half smiled. It could not last long—this happiness. It never did. But for Dell's sake, why not try to be glad for one day. "Now run away, and let me rest."

Drowsily Mrs. Bolton heard the preparations for dinner going on in the other room, heard her husband in a low voice giving suggestions and asking questions, heard Della's chatter and laughter. Then she slept and dreamed of the happy, happy days when Della was a baby and John was almost always good to them. When she awoke there stood John with his old-time smile. "You have slept so long, dinner is all ready, mother," he said. "Do you think, if I help, you can get into this and come out?" He was holding up her red dress, the dark red one he liked to see her wear. She could not refuse.

It was a happy feast! Della and daddy told stories and mother joined in their laughter and Della and daddy ate like hungry bears. By-and-by, mother asked, "Do you remember, John, where you ate dinner twelve years ago?" John remembered. It was out at Della's mother's mother's house, when all the uncles and aunts were at home.

There seemed to be so much to tell about that New Year's day, how it snowed and what horse daddy drove, why he came at all to the party, how the youngest uncle teased him and played tricks and oh, lots of things. It must have been a very particular New Year's, it so interested daddy and mother when they remembered it. Della was interested, too, but not more than in her own little party and the chocolates. She had never owned a whole box before. Then father did a strange thing. He saw that mother was getting tired, and so he picked her right up in his big, strong arms and carried her off as easily as if she had been little like Della. He made her comfortable on the couch with covers and pillows and then he got out his guitar from its dusty box and played and sang.

While daddy sang, Della slipped away to her play-room to sit in her little rocker and nurse her long-neglected dolly. After a while daddy stopped playing and went over to sit by mother. Della heard them talking.

"O John—if New Year's Day could last forever!"

There was a pause. Then he said, "May, I don't like to hurt you at this time, but talking about that party twelve years ago, do you remember what we drank? Do you remember that it was the first time for me? Do you remember laughing at me when I hesitated, and calling me a silly temperance crank? Do you remember?"

"It had always been the custom at our house," was Mrs. Bolton's defense. "My father knew when to stop."

"Perhaps your father did, but your husband doesn't. I know now that the only thing for him to have done was never to have begun. Oh, well, things are as they are. You know how it has been and how it will be again in a few days."

Mrs. Bolton groaned aloud. "Oh, if I could undo that thoughtless act! If I could do something now to help! O, John—they say He will—would God help us start all over again? For Della's sake—she is such a good child—can't we try to make a happier home?"

John replied in low but earnest tones, "Somehow, I believe He will. God helping us, for Della's sake, we'll try."

WHO IS HE?

A jolly little stranger
Is in the town today;
He came last night at stroke o' twelve,
So I hear them say;
And every one is smiling
As merry as you please;
Pleasant words are flying, too,
Like leaflets in a breeze.
People, calling here and there,
Walk and drive about;
Young folks, old folks, boys and girls,
All are mustered out.
No one thinks to give a frown;
Skies and eyes are bright;
E'en the prim old gate-posts,
Having donned their caps of white,
Wear the jaunty, pointed things,
With an air of glee,
You would laugh as well as I
If you chanced to see!
Every face is full of fun,
Every heart is gay;
All small quarrels are forgot—
Forgotten let them stay;
Rub the old score out, my dear,
Begin anew today.

—Selected

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

Five hundred guests assembled at the birthday musical given by the finance committee of the Allegheny county (Pa.) W. C. T. U. in the dining room of the Joseph Horne Co., in Pittsburgh. Mrs. R. B. Robinson, president of the county union, gave the address of welcome. Following a musical program and an address on "Present Day Battles" by Dr. James S. McGaw, of Los Angeles, Calif., general field secretary of the National Reform Association, luncheon was served. Both financially and socially the musical was a success, and a number of new members were received. Mrs. James McGaw, chairman of the Finance committee, presided, assisted by Mrs. H. B. Littell, Mrs. J. F. MacKee, Mrs. John P. Gettman and Miss Grace Trevaskis. The invitations issued for the birthday musical were in verse as follows:

"Does your birthday come in June, in August or November?
Perhaps it is in April, or in the bleak December.
No matter in what month, or how many they have been,
Just put a coin for every one, this little bag within,
And bring it when you come to the birthday party, where
We will celebrate the birthdays of all who may be there.
In friendly social intercourse we'll spend a pleasant time,
And you'll find the entertainment far better than this rhyme."

Lenawee county (Mich.) W. C. T. U. held its thirty-eighth annual meeting with the largest attendance on record, 54 voting delegates. Reports showed a membership of 651, twenty-three departments of work, $1,486.13 raised during the year and three L. T. L.'s organized. The county voted to supply removal cards to all local unions for use when members move, also to install a county literature supply station. Mrs. Mary Rogers, state superintendent of Work among Colored People, gave a most logical and convincing suffrage address, "An Appeal to Reason." The county voted to have a county organizer. The husband of the president, Mrs. Sarah Barber, passed away during the convention. Mrs. Matie E. Kirby was elected president for the new year.

An occasion of unusual interest and success was the Sunday afternoon mass meeting of the Van Wert county (O.) W. C. T. U. (Mrs. Della Fisher, president) held at the Presbyterian church of Van Wert with Rev. Watkins as the principal speaker. A men's chorus of thirty voices rendered excellent music. A telegram was sent to Congress from this meeting, and a second one to the Prohibition congressman, Hon. C. H. Randall of California.

The mass meeting of the Ashland (Kan.) W. C. T. U. on December 12 proved to be the most successful affair ever given under the auspices of the local union. Two of the pastors of Ashland delivered addresses, and members of the union and laymen, including the county attorney and high school principal, participated. The resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition was enthusiastically adopted by the more than three hundred people in attendance.

At a recent Sunday evening meeting of the Fond du Lac (Wis.) W. C. T. U. Mrs. Josie Sizer addressed a large and interested audience. Her arguments, many of them new, caused much favorable comment. A collection of $43 was received for state work and twelve new members were secured.

Judge Nash R. Broyles of the Georgia court of appeals delivered the principal address at the National Constitutional Prohibition meeting in Macon on December 12. Men were largely in the majority in the audience of seven hundred, showing the interest of voters in this subject. Judge Broyles described the process, and the time and effort required to secure an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. During sixteen years he was recorder of the city of Atlanta, said Judge Broyles, he came into daily, almost hourly, contact with the evils resulting from the use and abuse of liquor. Since these evils are nation-wide, said the speaker, the remedy should be nation-wide. Introducing Judge Broyles and presiding over the gathering was Hon. Du Pont Guerry, one of the state's leading lawyers. Others taking part with brief addresses were Rev. E. C. Dargan, Rev. J. T. Wildman, Rev. Martin A. Wood, Mr. H. C. Hodges, president of Mercer University and Georgia Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, and Rev. W. E. Arnold.

Mrs. Mary McArthur Tuttle, daughter of "Mother Thompson," writes that the Crusade Anniversary meeting of the Hillsboro (O.) union was held recently in the Crusade Memorial room, where white ribboners and friends met to do honor to the brave pioneer temperance workers. Mr. Rae Vaughn and Mr. Holcomb, president and vice-president of the Y. P. B. of Ohio, who were present, addressed the meeting. Interesting papers were read by Mrs. Marie T. Rives, also a daughter of "Mother Thompson," Mrs. Shields and Rev. Mr. Slutz. Pictures for the cabinet were also presented.

The Young People's Branch of Onondaga county, N. Y., on Saturday evening, December 4, attended a "Billy Sunday" meeting at the tabernacle in Syracuse. Two hundred strong, they marched in behind the banner, "The Liquor Traffic Must Go." Later, on request, they gave the yell, "Beer is bad, Whisky worse. We drink water, 'Safety First.'" When the invitation was given many of the young people went forward and took a definite stand for Christian service.

The second diamond medal contest of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. was held this year at the state convention with Shelton Bland of Monticello as the winner. Mrs. J. N. Robertson, the enthusiastic superintendent, is making a fine record. The diamond medal winner this year and the winner in the previous diamond medal contest are both residents of Mrs. Robertson's town.

The Georgia W. C. T. U. endeavored to operate the school savings department before the state enacted a prohibition law, but there were insufficient savings banks to warrant it; after eight years of prohibition there are savings banks galore, writes the Georgia correspondent.

In a recent report of Hillsborough county (N. H.) convention a gain of twenty-seven new members made since September should have been credited to the Manchester union instead of East Manchester.

Although the Grangeville (Idaho) union is less than three months old, it is very much alive and is looking hopefully toward the future. Recently the cantata, "A Saloonless Nation," was successfully given, one hundred children from six to sixteen years of age taking part. The departments of work selected for the year are Evangelistic, Mothers' Meetings and Medal Contest. The Evangelistic superintendent plans to hold a union public meeting at least once a quarter, and early in the New Year contest classes will be formed. The union has a membership of nineteen regular and four honorary members.

Three of the churches of Rhinelander, Wis., at the request of the W. C. T. U. held National Constitutional Prohibition meetings at which the prohibition amendment resolution received unanimous support and collections were taken for the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund. Two of the Scandinavian churches are planning for such meetings in the near future.

The six Protestant churches of Glens Falls, N. Y., united in a mass meeting the evening of December 12 under the joint leadership of the two local unions of the city, with the county president presiding. Three pastors each gave a ten-minute address.

MEDAL CONTEST INCIDENT

In a little village of less than one hundred inhabitants two contests were to be held the same evening, one for the silver medal and one for the gold. The state superintendent had been invited and was met at the train and taken to the home of the local superintendent, who, although she was the mother of six children, still found time to plan contests. Upon arriving at the hall where the contests were to be held a woman entered carrying a boy of eleven years who had been helpless from paralysis since he was three years old. The mother of this boy had trained the children who were to take part, the excellence of her training being fully demonstrated a few weeks later when a member of her class, a little girl of eight years, captured a whole chautauqua assembly with her delightful rendering of "One Standard for Both Sexes," by Samantha Allen. These classes were both composed of very young children. The splendid music which was a part of the program was also given by the children.

USE THE

Prohibition Pencil

With its slogan

The Liquor Traffic Must Go

and have your friends use it also.

A Special Price of

$1.50

is made on original packages, containing seventy-two pencils.
In less quantities

35 cents per dozen

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUB. HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILL.

——THE——

LILLIAN M. N. STEVEN BOOK MARK

Printed on white satin ribbon w clear picture and Bible text. appropriate remembrance for W. C. T. U. friend.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.0

National W. C. T. U. Publishing Ho
Evanston, Illinois

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL O-HIBITION MEETINGS

The National Constitutional Hibition rally of the Alliance (Neb.). C. T. U. was a doubly enthusiastic osion owing to the state-wide prohibiticampaign which is well under way the state. Addresses were deliver on "Bible Proofs for Prohibition," lRev. Lewis McIntyre, "The Effect Stawide Prohibition Would Have on theublic Schools," by Superintendent W. Pate of the city schools, "Christian Citiship of the United States as Comparwith Other Countries," by Rev. Dr. J. Barns, "The Attitude of the Travelingublic Toward State-wide Prohibition," Mr. J. W. Thomas, "National and Stwide Prohibition from an Economictandpoint," by Rev. H. J. Young anc address by Rev. R. W. Hodson on connection between the liquor traffic the work for the helpless and frienss in the state. The day of prayer, Imber 2, was also enthusiastically obsed by the Alliance union. In additioo addresses a responsive quiz was cucted by Mrs. Reed.

The Western Avenue W. C. U. of Minneapolis, Minn., held a rous mass meeting in the interests of Natil Prohibition, Sunday evening, Decer 12, at the Calvary M. E. church, choir and pastor assisting. Mrs. Bessi. Scovell, former state president, e the main address of the evening, which the note of personal responsib was eloquently sounded. The child sang, the prohibition resolution was urmously passed, and three new W. C. T members were gained.

The audience which assembler the National Constitutional Prohibi rally of the Jefferson (Tex.) W. C. T. was much too large for the church re the meeting was held, and many weurned away. On the evening of Wor Temperance Sunday, a union meetiof the Sunday schools of Jefferson was l with nearly four hundred present. that time a vote was taken for Natl Constitutional Prohibition, with thdience unanimous in its favor.

The W. C. T. U. of Sharon, Wield its regular quarterly meeting in Methodist church, December 12, wilev. E. C. Potter presiding in place of president, Mrs. Florence Warren, o was prevented by illness from perfong this duty. Following the prayer Rev. W. C. Heidenrich, Rev. J. D. Sizer Milwaukee spoke from the text, "Godde man upright." He specially urged necessity of electing representativto Congress who are committed to Naal Constitutional Prohibition.

An afternoon meeting for yer for National Constitutional Prohion was held by the Springfield (Ill. ion December 2 at the home of Mrancy E. Shekelton.

Nineteen boys from Duncan's Naval Reserves, impersonated the prohibition states at the temperance mass meeting of the Glen Ellyn (Ill.) W. C. T. U., and Rev. Oldt addressed the boys urging the new idea of "putting in" to reforms our best service, instead of the fallacious idea of seeking merely to "take out" for our own benefit. The enthusiasm generated by the meeting expressed itself in the unanimous adoption of two resolutions, one urging the village board and district attorney to act aggressively on charges filed against a local liquor selling club, and the other endorsing National Constitutional Prohibition.

Although storm and prevailing grippe seriously interfered with the mass meeting at Poynette, Wis., the resolution received a goodly vote. Mrs. M. E. B. Thompson, the president of the Poynette union, read Mrs. Stevens' Proclamation. In telling of the illustrious life of this promoted leader, her heroic faith and dauntless courage, Mrs. Thompson inspired to lofty ideals the many young people present. "Prohibition Progress as a Business Man Sees It," by Mr. C. J. Luther; "Consecration and Enthusiasm as Essentials in a Campaign," by Mr. J. F. Love, and helpful words by Rev. C. L. Richards and Rev. D. H. Fleet were other numbers of the program.

At the December 12 mass meeting of the Ashville (N. Y.) W. C. T. U., Prof. Lowe, principal of the school, and an honorary member of the W. C. T. U., had charge of the program. Addresses by Rev. Wagner and Earle Gage, the reading of prize essays on the cigaret habit, and the demonstration of the nineteen prohibition states by children were interesting numbers.

READY

TOPICAL PROGRAM

FOR

1916

Arranged for general use by the local unions, containing programs for two meetings each month with blank for writing in name of hostess and place of meeting.

Price 5c Each, Per Hundred $1.00

A complete package of helps for each meeting together with one copy of the Topical Program will be mailed for

50 CENTS

Kindly ORDER EARLY that you may have the complete year of programs, as the first given is November.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Speeches by business men were an effective part of the program of the mass meeting held by the Loyal (Wis.) W. C. T. U. the evening of December 12. Special music by an orchestra and male quartet, and the demonstration of the nineteen prohibition states added greatly to the interest.

Mr. E. L. Bevington is the new chairman of the Transcontinental Passenger Association, an organization of sixty railroads. He says: "I used to drink a glass of beer, but now I am a dry. I never saw any good come from it. The young man who wants to get anywhere must keep away from drink."

Portland, (Me.) Telegram

The Beginning and the End

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request
Single Copies, 2c each . . . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . . 37c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

OUR GOAL:
TEN THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS IN 1916

A NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

Our goal, "ten-thousand new subscribers in 1916," will be easily reached if every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL will include in her New Year's resolutions the following:

"I will secure at least one NEW subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL."

Do not wait until late in the year to carry out this good resolution, but secure the new subscriber early, so that a friend who has not been a reader of THE UNION SIGNAL may no longer be deprived of the privilege of having a paper filled with reliable and accurate material concerning one of the leading questions of the day.

Any one interested in the temperance question needs THE UNION SIGNAL for the latest news and reports. Any one who is not interested needs it to become acquainted with the facts not hitherto known, for with this knowledge he must of necessity become interested. Thus, it is a paper for everyone.

BIRTHDAY GIFT FROM SON

"My mamma is a white ribbon woman, and I want to give her THE UNION SIGNAL for a birthday present. I told Miss Roberts, the president of the Ridgedale union, what I wanted to do, and she said that was a very nice thing for a little boy to do for his mamma."

VALUABLE FOR THE BUSY WOMAN

"I think the SIGNAL is just the paper a busy W. C. T. U. woman needs. After having taken it three years I could not do without it. The Convention numbers and the weekly letter from Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis are worth the price of the paper." HAMILTON, MISSOURI

A LONG-TIME SUBSCRIBER

"I have taken THE UNION SIGNAL for about thirty years without a break. I miss it, and must have it again. I am in my eighty-second year and have just secured four new subscribers at our local union meeting." MRS. E. C. OLMSTEAD, Spring Arbor, Mich.

A PAPER FOR STUDENTS

"THE UNION SIGNAL assisted the students who competed for the alcohol essay, one of whom won the local and also the county prize. I am informed that this young man's essay is being used in the Texas campaign (his native state) and that he will also be asked to read it before the Mississippi state convention. My SIGNALS are placed in the reading room for the use of the students and have been used at our Sunday afternoon meetings of the Y. W. C. A. and also by the young men. God speed its message everywhere."
MARY E. BECKETT, West Point, Miss.

AUSTRALIA FINDS IT USEFUL

I must add my tribute to the excellence and helpfulness of your paper and wish it could be more largely circulated in Western Australia.
FROM AN AUSTRALIAN FRIEND

EFFECT OF PROHIBITION IN THE MINES

The good effects of prohibition in West Virginia are noted in a communication from the White Oak Coal Company of Macdonald, noting the output of its mines on payday and the Monday immediately following—before and since the state went dry.

The communication from the White Oak Coal Company on the subject is as follows:

"White Oak Coal Company,
"Macdonald, West Virginia,
"October 22, 1915.

"We have made a comparison for three months prior to June 30, 1914, and for three months subsequent thereto, combining the production of these days for all mines and the result is shown in the tabulation below:

Two Saturday Pay Days and Mondays following Saloons		Two Saturday Pay Days and Mondays following No-Saloons
April	10,960.50 tons	July	24,852.65 tons
May	7,902.20 tons	August	16,199.55 tons
June	16,752.70 tons	Sept	26,761.45 tons
	35,615.40 tons		67,813.65 tons
			35,615.40 tons
INCREASE			32,198.25 tons

"It will be noted that the increase is 32,198 tons in favor of 'No Saloons' in the period mentioned. It is safe to assume that the same rate of increase would be carried out on the corresponding four days each month throughout the entire year, and if that be the case, the result would show an increased production per annum, due to the absence of liquor in the field of 128,793 tons.

"The production of our mines has increased considerably since that time. I believe that there are more men in the field than there have been for a number of years, all of which would go to combat the theory that it is impossible to secure and keep miners unless they can be regularly supplied with booze.

"Yours truly,
"W. B. Reed, Chief Accountant."
—The Wheeling (W. Va.) Telegraph

PROTECT SOCIETY BY ABOLISHING LIQUOR

In a nearby state, just now, there are three men serving terms for murder and a fourth for another terrible crime, who are asking for a parole or pardon and in each instance their friends are setting up as an excuse for their crime the fact that they were under the influence of liquor when the deed was committed. We have no reason to doubt or dispute this. It is happening everywhere at too frequent intervals. But how is the pardoning officer to know that this same party will not again allow himself to get into the clutches of intemperance and again commit some foul deed and be a menace to society. It is apparent that there is but one way to safeguard society against the terrors of alcoholism and that is to abolish it forever from our state and nation. Some designate the proposition of taking liquor away from the public as an invasion of their rights or a taking away of their personal liberty, but in the case of these four men, according to their loved ones and friends, their entire liberty—their lives were sacrificed to the demon rum.—Ashtabula (Ohio) Beacon.

L'ARALDO

The only Evangelical Italian paper publishing W. C .T. U. articles and news montbly.

10 Copies to One Address, 10 cents

L'ARALDO
175 Rockaway Ave. Brooklyn, N. Y.

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS

Does it succeed or does it fail? Swear the witnesses and hear what they say: 2,000 Christian ministers, 7,000 school teachers, 700 editors and newspaper men, 166 bankers, the president of the retail dealers' association, the president of the state bankers' association, the president of the state medical association, the president of the commercial clubs, every member of the general assembly—house and senate—the supreme court of the state, four successive Governors—Hoch (Republican), Stubbs (Republican), Hodges (Democrat), Capper (Republican); the Progressive Party in its platform, the Republican Party in its platform, the Democratic Party in its platform, 457,000 voters, with ballots in their hands, all say that "prohibition succeeds."

The rabid liar of the Liquor Dealers' Association says: "Prohibition is a failure—an egregious blunder."—National Engineer.

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

The High Cost of Living

"I wonder what has become of the old-fashioned dime novel?" remarked the old fogy.

"It has gone up to a dollar and a half," replied the grouch.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

For the Anti-Narcotic Dept.

An engineer says that the usual life of a locomotive is thirty years. Perhaps it would be longer if it didn't smoke so much.—Boston Transcript.

A Cruel Blow

"I see you have your arm in a sling," said the inquisitive passenger. "Broken, isn't it?"

"Yes," responded the other passenger.

"Meeting with an accident?"

"No; broke it while trying to pat myself on the back."

"Great Scott! What for?"

"For minding my own business."—Ram's Horn.

A Bad Penny

Among the offenders brought up before a city magistrate was a shabby-looking man who was charged with having no visible means of support.

"What is your occupation?" asked the magistrate sternly.

"Ain't got none, sir," was the calm reply. "At present I'm doing nothing; just circulatin' around, so to speak."

The magistrate turned to his clerk.

"Please make a note," he said, "that this gentleman has been retired from circulation for fourteen days."—The Epworth Herald.

Keep Informed
SUBSCRIBING FOR THE LEAFLET BUDGET
which brings to your desk each month a sample of leaflets, posters, pledge cards, etc., published during the current month.

Subscription
Only Dollar Per Year
NATIONAL W.C.T.U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

DO NOT CIRCULATE

3 1430 02937380 2
a31430029373802b
UNIV. OF MD. COLLEGE PARK